5389. They go down to Laindon?—Yes; someone visits the farm in rotation but the more important business, of course, is done at the guardians' office; there is a regular farm committee which consider it.

5390. Does the superintendent send frequent reports?—Yes, he has to report to the committee every time they meet, and they do not meet at longer intervals than two weeks.

5391. Then every fortnight you have a report from Laindon as to the work done?—Yes.

5392. Can you tell me what is the average cost of maintenance of the men there?—There is a document showing this, but I have not got it here; I will take care it is sent to you.

5393. (Mr. Davy.) As I understand, your main idea of dealing with vagrancy is classification?—Yes.

5394. Identification, and then classification?—Yes.

5395. With any system of identification and classification, should there not be some uniformity of management on the part of the local body who looks after the vagrant?—Yes, I suppose so.

5396. The local boards of guardians now look after the vagrant; they deal with him, and give him a night's lodging?—Yes; but what do they care. They just pass him through, and there is an end of it.

5397. If you are to identify and classify the vagrant, you must do it over a considerable area, must you not?—Yes.

5398. A union is hardly a large enough area in which to attempt anything like a scheme of identification and classification?—No.

5399. Have you considered what should be the local body who are to identify and classify?—No; I would rather extend your present operations from the Local Government Board as regards the inspectors going round to the casual wards. I would rather extend that system than leave the matter entirely to the boards of guardians; I do not think you ought to put that obligation upon them.

5400. Do you think that the vagrant wards fulfil a really necessary purpose?—Yes.

5401. You think we must continue to have them?—Yes.

5402. And do you think they should remain under the boards of guardians?—No, I do not.

5403. There is not much uniformity in London in the treatment of vagrants, is there?—No, and the reason is this: you have one board of guardians boasting, "We do not work our casuals, we give them coke to break;" other boards of guardians say, "We beat you, we do not give them anything." That is all very well, but you do want a uniformity of system. I am not in favour of task-work for the casuals; I do not think it helps you. I disagreed with Poplar at first, but I can see now that on the score of expense, and on the score of testing whether a man is a tramp there is nothing like turning him out at six o'clock in the morning.

5404. You do not believe in detention?—No.

5405. And you do not believe in task?—I do not believe in detention, until you have arrived at the period when you think the man ought to be sent right off to a labour colony.

5406. How do you get over the Orders of the Local Government Board which prescribe certain rules as to detention and task?—We do detain the men if they have been in more than once in a certain time, but you see you have always left us a discretion to allow any men to go out before the prescribed time, if in the opinion of the guardians the men are likely to be so and so. Mr. W. Crooks, M.P.

10 May 1905.

5407. There are 650 boards of guardians in England and Wales, and they have all got a discretion?—They have all got a discretion.

5408. Hence uniformity is not the leading feature of the present system of dealing with the tramps locally?—No, it is a mere makeshift; it is human nature generally that if one has got a little trouble, and can send it on to the man next door, one does it.

5409. Would not anything like uniformity be impossible if the vagrant wards remain in charge of the guardians?—I quite agree; there must be a controlling head, and that controlling head must lay down a uniform system.

5410. In other words we must get if possible at the principle and then enforce it, whether the principle be detention or whether it be no detention?—Yes.

5411. Whether it be task or no task?—Yes, and mind you, I follow that up in quite a different direction. Supposing you lay down certain definite rules for dealing with the vagrants, I am inclined to make the authority for the administration of them the chief constable of the county or some such person; I mean I would keep these fellows as far as I possibly could away from the guardians; I really would, because I think after a little while you would find the guardians would be glad to be relieved of the part of the task that they do not carry out now, except very perfunctorily.

5412. Is it your opinion that the primary thing in dealing with vagrants is not relief, but control?—Yes, I do believe it.

5413. It is desirable to control the whole class, as being a potential danger to the community?—That is so.

5414. The vagrant could get a job if he liked, as a rule?—Yes.

5415. He only came under the Poor Law by accident; he used to apply at a workhouse as a sudden and urgent case and the master would not admit him because he was a non-resident man?—He had not brought his settlement papers with him.

5416. The law of settlement made the class?—Yes.

5417. Another illustration of the want of uniformity in London is the number of refusals of admission at the casual wards for want of room?—Yes.

5418. I have a return here which shows that at the Thavies Inn ward no less than 4,000 persons were refused admission during the year, and some 2,000 were refused both at Poplar and Hackney?—Yes.

5419. While at some unions—as for instance, Chelsea—there are no refusals; they have always got room there?—Yes.

5420. Is not the explanation of these discrepancies the fact that tramps go for certain places?—Yes. They do not like the particular task. Or they may dodge a bath, you know; do you not find there is a greater inclination on the part of the casual to bathe than there was years ago?

5421. It has lost its deterrent value?—Yes, I mean he goes in now for a wash.

5422. What in your opinion is the harm that a casual does in London; why should we want to lock him up at all; why should we want to do anything with him?—You mean you would let him drift?

5423. I do not say what I should do; I want your view. The evidence is that he is not as a rule a criminal; he is too slack for that?—Yes.

5424. That he does not beg very much?—Yes.

5425. That he does apparently nothing except get an odd job now and then?—You see he is not an institution in London; he is only part of the whole national system, if it can be called a system; a casual who wanders about London does not belong to London; he will probably go off to the country; we have not a class of our own.

5426. Do you not think they hang about London for a long time?—Yes, at certain periods of the year; they are leaving now.

Mr. W. 5427. They are going hopping now?—Yes, they will Crooks, M.P. come back to us in the winter again.

10 May 1905. 5428. What harm does such a man do to the State?—
I think he does infinite harm; he goes about the country in the summer, comes back to us in the winter when we have unemployment pretty rife; and when charitable funds are raised to deal with it, he gets the lion's share of them.

5429. He complicates the whole relief system?—He complicates the whole industrial system. Let me go a little further; take the neighbourhoods where employment is casual—I will not say whose fault it is—where they take men on for one day or for two days only at a time; this fellow from the casual wards has no home; he has no associations at all which he wants to keep up and save money for; he comes and makes it difficult for the other man who is keeping a little home over his head, and is paying rates; and he frequently does him out of a day's work. How to help that man who has a home to pay his rent is a very complex question; it leads you up to common lodging-houses; whether common lodging-houses are or are not a source of considerable trouble.

5430. Is not one of the most troublesome things we have to consider the competition with outside independent labour that the Poor Law fosters?—That is one of the things—one of the many things. I want to see useful employment for every man rather than casual labour and cadging and casual wards; there is only one way out and that is work.

5431. In London a good many of the casuals habitually use the casual wards, do they not?—I am told that is so, but I have no figures as to that.

5432. They can use the casual wards and sleep there four nights a week instead of going to the workhouse?
—Yes.

5433. They get an odd day out?—Yes; before you made us build casual wards we used to get these fellows into the workhouse very frequently

5434. The London casual ward I take it, does relieve the workhouse of a certain number of able-bodied men?
—A certain number.

5435. The able-bodied man has the choice to go into the workhouse or to live as a casual?—Yes, but I don't think he hangs about much. Does he not travel from Poplar to Kensington and from Kensington to Poplar?

5436. I am told he does?—Then there would be no difficulty about identification in such cases.

5437. Yesterday I went into some casual wards; in one shelter, where the men were waiting, I said to the superintendent, "Give me those fellows' names"; he knew several of them?—Do you not see what happens in that case? There is a permanent institution, the casual ward; let us suppose there are 4,000 people revolving round that casual ward, and we are here for seven or ten years; we will know every one of the 4,000 people.

5438. Although they may not come very frequently?
—Although they may come once in two years. It is very astonishing when you get into new surroundings or amongst people whom you have not seen for years, how the whole thing comes back to you. I was in Cork not so long ago; the manager of a firm took me round; "That is so and so." "Do not tell me his name; his name is so and so;" and the man said, "I have never seen you before in my life." I said, "Do not make any mistake,
I met you in Liverpool in 1876." Really there is nothing in it, I mean.

5439. Anyway you agree that vagrants are a sufficient social evil to justify a step forward in the treatment of them?—But legislation has already dealt with these people. There is that Act known as the Cleansing of Persons Act; they talk of the interference with the liberty of the subject. Bless my soul, the only liberty-loving person in the world is this particular vagrant who is so idle and so contented.

5440. He is a most contented man?—He is the most contented man on earth. Then the law interferes with him and says, "We are going to take and give you a compulsory scrub; we are going to cleanse you." It might go a little further and do something useful. Has that side of it never occurred to you?

5441. Yes, but the other side also occurs, that efforts in the way of repression to deal with vagrancy have not as a rule been very successful?—No, because the machinery is all wrong.

5442. We have got to consider whether they are sufficiently troublesome to justify a further experiment.
Do you think that they are?—Why of course. Who is the fellow who wants convincing? Is there a magistrate or a judge in the land who would care to go and sit down and have a meal with them side by side? It is all very well for a policeman or an inspector to take this person up and say he is a verminous person; the judge would say: "Stand him over there; I don't see anything the matter with him; I shan't order him to be cleansed."

5443. But are there not some magistrates who reduce the law, so far as repression goes, to a nullity?—Well, they do; I do not know whose fault it is, whether it is the fault of the law or the fault of the administration. I have a great opinion of the faculty of administration being more useful than the law itself.

5444. There is no uniformity in magistrates' sentences?—No.

5445. Do you think that the vagrant wards in London are necessary?—No; personally I think we should not need any if we had labour colonies. You would want some observation wards in which to keep a man for a time.

5446. One of the witnesses told us that he objected to the way-ticket system because it was an interference with the liberty of the subject?—I object to paying bus fares;
but the liberty of the subject is not in any way in danger, and after all there is a time when liberty ends and licence begins.

5447. We have had a good deal of evidence about the bona fide wayfarer, and you agree he is only a very small proportion of the total; you put it down, I think, at 1 per cent. Do you think that in any general scheme we should have to consider him?—I think a saving clause can always be put in to deal with him. I mean if it is necessary in the opinion of the people who have to administer, because you may take it nearly always that the person in authority is not the Bumble of old; he is generally a person of some discretion and a judge of human nature, and although it may have been at one time that people were badly treated because they were a nuisance, now I think men would be properly treated with discretionary powers given to those who have to administer.

5448. But supposing you were to put the administration of the vagrants in the hands of the chief constable, do you think it would be a hardship that the bona fide wayfarer should be brought into contact with the police?
—I do not think it would under ordinary circumstances, not to such an extent as you would imagine.

5449. Trades unions help the people to travel a good deal, do they not?—Yes, but there, of course, the circumstances are entirely different. If a man is on the road, he has his trade union card and he is entitled to claim some benefit at given towns; he could not go from one end of London to the other and claim his 2s.6d., but he could go from London, say, to Luton and claim it; the trade unionist has to earn his money before he gets his allowance.

5450. Quite so; they interfere with the liberty of the subject there?—There the man has his card to prove he is a genuine fellow. Of course, what we shall have to say to whoever the authority is, is this: "You will find lots of people on the road with trade union cards, but please note that, unless that card is backed within a given date from some centre or other, it is a worthless article." We have always that trick played on us; a fellow comes in and assures you that he is a good trade unionist, but that he has just lost his card.

5451. (Dr. Downes.) Is there any identification on these travelling cards?—It is a very wonderful thing in the trade union movement how people do know each other, or know somebody in the town. That is where the tramp often scores; he knows the name of a fellow in the other town; "Jack so-and-so sent me." "How is Jack and his wife?" "Very well." That means he is to get a meal. "Where is your card? Where did you work last?" He generally gets a technical question put to him and that soon discovers whether he is genuine or not.

5452. (Mr. Davy.) Just to go back for a moment to London. We agree that the vagrant is a nuisance and ought not to be encouraged or fostered. Now, should you say that the cheap shelters and the free shelters are an encouragement to the vagrant?—Yes.

5453. Do you think they ought to be more regulated than they are?—Well, under a better system of society I would like to abolish them; that is the long and the short of it; but the difficulty is, as I said to the Chairman, if a man is starving he must be helped on the spot; there is no use preaching morality to him, you have got to do something for him, and a free shelter is—well, a source of trouble to the ordinary honest workman in a given neighbourhood. It does not help to settle the trouble. Let us take one that I know best, down East.

5454. Medland Hall?—Yes. If you and I went down there this afternoon and walked down the whole row of men, there would be scarcely one amongst them that you would take out and give a ld. an hour to. Well, what happens? The poor chaps have become degenerate; they cannot work; they have got quite past work; they can hardly beg; they go in and have a meal, good sound food, stop all night, and come out in the morning. What do they do in the morning? All life is objectless; they have nothing to do; they have simply to loaf away another day without any object in life at all. Well, it is a very serious problem indeed. That has got to be put down.

5455. Should you be of opinion that such an institution takes away the last incentive to labour?—Well, it is very difficult to say whether they have not got past it before they get there.

5456. Take also men who sleep out; there are a good number of them in London?—Yes, too many.

5457. If there were no free meals they could not do that, could they?—Well, does not that rather carry with it the responsibility of finding something else?

5458. There is the poor law?—Yes, I know, but that does not meet the difficulty. There is the poor law; there is the beautiful law of settlement among other things, but my trouble is to get hold of these men, whatever the power may be that has to be created. It is not enough taking these men and describing them as the “unemployable.” What is to be done with them? I would take them right straight away; I would put them into an ambulance, all that crowd; I would take them out into the country and give them infirmary treatment for three months; I would cleanse them, wash them, and feed them. I should think at the end of the three months we could find if there was any work in them; but until you do that they go on, a source of danger to themselves and everybody who comes into contact with them.

5459. Might you not tend to encourage people to become unemployable?—If, in the first place, you deal with the vagrant who is on the road, and you deal with the general organisation of men who are a burden now, you would not have need for shelters at all, but for the moment I would take the whole lot. I assure you, I think there is enough money gathered almost in charity to take the whole lot away and plant them down at some healthy place for three months until you had made men of them.

5460. Do you say that as a pious opinion or as a definite proposal?—Well, if I was the man who made law—a dictator—I would do it to-day.

5461. Well, how would you propose that those people should be put in seclusion?—I do not know that I would take the word “seclusion,” but I will tell you what I would do. Supposing the Salvation Army said, “We will take this lot for you; we will take them right away in the country; we will treat them kindly as patients for three months and then we will see what we can do with them.” I would let the Salvation Army do it.

5462. And give them power to keep them?—You would have no difficulty in keeping them; I do not think you would need a restraining law the moment those fellows found they were fed and had fresh air and were kept clean.

5463. Is it not the complaint of charitable institutions, both in this country and in Germany, that the want of a power of detention robs them of the opportunity for usefulness?—Yes, I know, but that would be for the other class of men we have already spoken of; that is men travelling about. But as regards this unemployable class, we want to do it gently; I think the percentage for whom you would want power of detention would be small compared to the number of people who are now wandering about.

5464. I may take it that below the tramp you think that there is a worse class still?—I should think there is.

5465. The class which uses the shelters and sleeps out?—Yes.

5466. The class which walks about London cadging for free meals at night?—Yes.

5467. That class is beyond treatment, except infirmary treatment?—Except infirmary treatment; that is so.

5468. They are mostly broken in health?—Mostly broken down, yes.

5469. What is your view of the offence of sleeping out?—I think they are more to be pitied than to be found fault with. When I go through London on a Sunday morning—sometimes I am obliged to, coming up from the North—arriving at one of the big termini in the summer time at daybreak, or four or five o'clock in the morning, when I see these people sleeping out, then I think there should be something done. The kindly policeman will tell them, if there is an inspector coming along, to get up a doorway in a side street. We cannot help it; they have sympathy for them.

5470. Have you ever seen them sleeping in the staircases in Spitalfields?—Yes, worse luck; one does not want to see it; it fills one with despair.

5471. But what practical means is there for dealing with these people, except by force of law?—I am afraid there is none, but still do please remember that you have nothing now to offer them. When you have something to offer, then you may talk about compulsory detention: since you have nothing to offer, I think they have the best of the argument.

5472. But if you compulsorily detain them, say, keep them in the workhouse, and feed them and clothe them?—You do not want to keep them in the workhouse. I think it is time for very drastic reforms as regards able-bodied men and women being compelled to stop in the workhouse. Do not think that they are there and there they must be, and that you have done something clever by getting them there, because you have done nothing.

5473. You still have the man?—We still have the man, but he is a burden; he is a piece of machinery without being any use at all.

5474. There is another class of vagrants who are very troublesome; those are the old, infirm people who wander about to their own mischief; what would you do with them?—I would get a magistrate's order for their detention.

5475. Where?—In the infirmary, infirm home, or the workhouse. I would treat them as people suffering from senile decay, senile paralysis.

5476. You would treat them almost as imbeciles?—Yes, I think you are entitled to do so.

5477. You know the sort well?—Oh, very well. They come and cry to me, “Ought I to go into the workhouse? I can do very well out.” “But you cannot keep yourself clean; you have no friends and relations to keep you clean; even if you had a pound a week, I should not alter my mind in the least; I think you must be taken care of.” I am afraid I give more pence than I ought as a man who does not believe in the thing, but with regard to very old men and women, for God's sake let them go and be taken care of as soon as they possibly can.

5478. In a good many countries abroad they never allow inmates of any public poor law institution to discharge themselves except with the consent of the governing body; that is a universal rule. Now, do you think guardians would be fit to be trusted with that power?—I do not think there would be much difficulty in England, because the guardians would be glad to get rid of these people.

*Mr. W.
Crooks, M.P.*
10 May 1905.

Mr. W. Brooks, M.P. 5479. But there would be the difficulty that people would be more unwilling than they are at present to go into the workhouse?—I do not think so. I rejoice to see the old people are still as unwilling as ever they were, although the treatment is better than ever it was, better in every union; it is not confined to London.

5480. It would be a considerable cost to the ratepayer?—Well, yes. On the other hand, stopping outside sometimes is a cost to the ratepayer too. Still I want them to hate it; I do not want to make it any better.

5481. Are the buildings at Laindon good enough in your view?—For the purpose—yes, quite good enough.

5482. And yet if you had to erect buildings for a similar purpose at a workhouse in London, what do you think they would cost?—They would probably cost us from £100 to £150 a bed.

5483. What did your vagrant wards cost you?—A fearful price; something like £15,000 or £16,000. I think the tender was about £11,000.

5484. And the Laindon buildings would cost not one-tenth of that?—Oh, no; then of course my great hope about all that is that these people would pass through, and then you would find better cultivation of the land all over the country, and there would be better openings for men. I think there is something to be said for the farmer who says, "I cannot get men"; we can get men, and we all say in London, "Back to the land"; but what is the good of sending these fellows who hardly know a clod of clay from a mangold wurzel? It is no use talking about that; the fellows want training.

5485. Of course Laindon does not directly concern us, because that is not really intended for vagrants?—No, except that it does show you a way out; that is the only thing it is useful for.

5486. (Mr. Simpson.) The men you sent to Laindon were taken from the workhouse, they were ins and outs?—Yes.

5487. Were they not about as poor and worthless a lot as you could have?—I should think they were. Some, of course, whom I knew years ago had tramped a good deal and only came back in the cold weather.

5488. Then those you managed to put on their legs again and sent off to Canada were the pick of those you sent down?—They were picked from those who went on to the farm, they had done so well. As a matter of fact, we picked the worst out of the workhouse as a sort of punishment, to see what we could do with them.

5489. You look to Laindon as showing what treatment can do for even the most hopeless lot?—Yes, I wish we had had the sense to take a photograph of this crowd when we sent them down and when they came up; nothing except knowing the men would convey anything like a notion to your mind of what we have done.

5490. (Sir William Chance.) Have you been to Merxplas in Belgium?—No, I have not been out of the United Kingdom.

5491. (Dr. Downes.) Assuming that the Salvation Army had provided an infirmary or sorting house, some place to which these wrecks could go, would you be in favour of giving the police power to clear the streets of night loafers?—I am rather inclined to think that I should; I would like to look into it, but my first impression is to say "yes" to that.

5492. With the view to their being sent down on probation to such a place as you have spoken of?—Yes, "probation" is a good word.

5493. (Captain Showers.) I only want to ask you one or two questions regarding your colony at Laindon. Does your superintendent know anything about agriculture?—I think he does, and I will tell you why. Some one in the North wrote me a violent letter, saying I was a fool, and did not know anything about the payment for agricultural labourers, and that if I could send to him the name of a single farmer who wanted a man, he would be willing to withdraw his accusation. I did not trouble about the letter, but it did strike me at that moment that perhaps I was altogether wrong, and I went to our superintendent and it came out that he was brought up to agriculture himself, and his father who is a retired farmer, was good enough to go and make an inquiry in his immediate neighbourhood as to the payment for capable agricultural labourers, and the answer he got was: "Those men who can do good work can find work," and he mentioned two or three farmers who could do with three to five men, and so on. That makes me quite clear that our man knows all about his work.

5494. His is the only supervision you have, I take it, over the men; I mean you would not call the gangers supervisors exactly, because they are men of the same class?—We have got some paid gangers who know all about the land.

5495. Yes, they know about the land, but they have no power of real supervision beyond seeing that the men work?—That is so.

5496. Are you aware that great complaints are made about these men in the neighbourhood of the colony?—I should think that is quite likely; I was not aware of it.

5497. I understand on very good authority—I am the chief constable of Essex, therefore the police part of it comes under me—that there are great complaints as to the conduct of these men in the roads and that they are a source of terror both to females and to men about there?—Indeed.

5498. I have heard also that in the different public-houses they go to they beg beer and tobacco, and very often it is done under threats?—This is all news to me.

5499. In the circumstances, do you not think that there ought to be a greater supervision over those men?—Yes, what you have told me, of course, leads me to say that we apparently have got to have a little more discipline than we have got at this moment; but is not even that a necessary consequence of making a new departure in which we have got to gain experience as we go along? From looking at the men in the colony, I do not think you would have anticipated anything like what you are telling me. The fact of that happening of course is important, and I hope you will send a message to our guardians so that they may take the necessary steps. I am very keen about not giving money to such men, but some person or other has deposited I think about £200 down there to give these men 6d. a week; personally I should have absolutely refused it, because I think you will agree with me that if a man is given 6d., which he spends at a public-house, it is not what he gets for his 6d., but what he will get out of somebody else while he is spending it; these men are adepts at that sort of thing.

5500. If they did not have this sixpence, they would probably beg, borrow or steal in some way or other, so long as there is no supervision when they are not in at a certain time?—I hope you will make a report to us on that; our guardians only wanted these men not to feel the restraint, but if their liberty is to develop into licence to interfere with people, it has got to be stopped.

5501. (Sir William Chance.) Might it not be desirable to prevent these people going to public houses altogether: they get proper food, and so on?—Of course the question of going into public houses is only a question of their being allowed out of boundary for any given time.

5502. (Captain Showers.) These men have a good deal of liberty?—The argument of our committee for that liberty was, they wanted these men to feel they were not shut off from society entirely—that when they were fit to do anything they would associate and get absorbed among their fellows. If it is to develop in the way you tell me, then we must reconsider the question of discipline. I will take good care that the matter is looked into, and stopped too. If our superintendent is not strong enough (he is a strong man, but still 120 men is a lot for a man to have control of) he must have more assistance. Some time ago a deputation of our colonists came to me to plead for a little money. "Not if you stop for twenty years; I will not agree to give you a single halfpenny; I am against it." Then immediately afterwards we got this offer of sixpence from some person.

5503. (Mr. Davy.) You know how they manage the money difficulty at Merxplas; they give money that only passes in the colony. They find that is a very good plan to enable the men to buy, say, herrings and other luxuries at the canteen?—I have a notion in my head what the thing would be like. Still, if a man is on the poor law there should be a distinction; you should not make the poor law the same as private employment. I want private employment to be a different thing altogether, to raise the man up; if you are to make his position while he is with you equal to or better than it is outside, then you do not lift him up, because he looks upon private employment as a little worse than what he is doing.

MR. PETER HARDING ROBERTS, called; and Examined.

5504. (Chairman.) I believe you are the clerk to the Holywell guardians?—I am, sir.

5505. And how long have you been in that position?—Eighteen years.

5506. I believe you are also the honorary secretary of the North Wales poor law conference?—I am, sir.

5507. Has there been an increase of late years in the number of vagrants relieved in North Wales?—A considerable increase.

5508. I mean, apart from the particular increase which we know took place last year?—Oh, there has been a steady increase during the last three years. I thought it might interest the Committee if I obtained information as to the treatment of vagrants in the unions in North Wales, and I sent out a circular letter addressed to the several boards of guardians asking questions on the subject.

5509. There is, I believe, a great lack of uniformity in the treatment of the vagrants in regard to dietary and task, and so forth?—An absolute lack. Perhaps I may be allowed to read from the statement I have prepared.

5510. If you please?—Well, in the twenty unions in the North Wales district there is a population of 493,073, and the rateable value is £2,435,995. The number of paupers relieved during the year 1904 was: outdoor, 18,752; indoor, 2,919. The number of vagrants relieved in the casual wards during the year 1904 in all the unions was: men, 58,005; women, 2,166; children, 745; total, 60,916. In addition there were relieved in common lodging-houses: men, 2,469; women, 82; children, 43; total, 2,594. The totals of these two make: 60,474 men; 2,248 women; 788 children; grand total, 63,510. May I point out that those figures in North Wales show a very large percentage of vagrants to be relieved according to the population of the district. The number of vagrants relieved during the last three years has considerably increased. Then I made enquiries as to the separate cell system. Separate cells for men only are provided in fourteen unions, and for women only in five unions. Associated wards are provided for men in sixteen unions, and for women in fourteen unions. Separate cells for men only, and also associated wards, for men and women, are provided in nine unions. In all cases the children are left with the women. The sleeping accommodation provided is as follows: hammocks and plank beds in four unions; boards only in eight unions; wire mattress in four unions; straw mattress in three unions; iron beds in one union. The covering provided is as follows: blankets in eight unions; rugs in twelve unions. In some instances the women sleep on plank beds with blankets, and in other cases on straw mattresses with blankets. Supper and breakfast is given in each case, and is very varied, the breakfast being generally the same as the supper: bread and gruel is given in eight unions; bread and buttermilk in one union; bread and broth in four unions; bread and porridge in two unions; gruel only in one union; bread and tea in one union; bread and soup in one union; bread and boiling water seasoned with butter, pepper and salt in one union; bread only in one union. The quantity of bread varies from six to eight ounces for the men, and generally six ounces for the women. Children are all provided with bread and milk.

5511. In one union bread only is given?—Yes, that is in the case of adults.

5512. The children there would have milk?—Yes, in all cases the children have bread and milk.

5513. Then as to the task?—I find that the task varies in its quantity and in its nature from stone breaking, sawing timber, and digging to stone breaking only and oakum picking. The tasks given are as follows: stone breaking, sawing timber, digging, eleven unions; stone breaking only, eight unions; oakum picking, one union. The task of breaking stones varies from three to eight cwt. per day. In four unions, red, white, and blue tickets are in use, and in those cases the task varies from three cwt. if detained one night only, to twelve cwt. if detained three days. Blue tickets are given when the vagrant visits the wards twice in the same month, and the task is twelve cwt. in the one day. The labour task of the women is scrubbing and cleaning the wards, etc., and in one case it is oakum picking.

5514. As regards those tickets, are they given to the men on entry?—Yes, the red ticket would be given to a man who was admitted for one night, and was discharged without labour; he would be relieved as a bona fide working man in search of work.

5515. On his journey?—Yes. The white tickets would be given in those cases where the vagrants were detained two nights, and did their task in the intervening day; and the blue tickets would be given to the vagrants who presented themselves at the casual ward more than once during the month; they would be kept in for the period of three nights, and would have the usual task of twelve cwt. per day.

5516. (Sir William Chance.) Have you got any specimens of those tickets?—I have not brought any with me.

5517. What is the writing on the ticket?—"Holywell union, admit so-and-so." The colour is the distinguishing mark on it, and the master will know by the colour of the ticket what is the nature of the task to be imposed.

5518. (Mr. Simpson.) It is a ticket of admission issued by the relieving officer?—Issued by the police.

5519. Are they assistant relieving officers?—Yes, they are assistant relieving officers in some of the unions.

5520. (Chairman.) Do you find that the Orders are observed in North Wales?—The Casual Poor Act and Local Government Board Orders and Circulars do not appear to be strictly enforced in any of the unions. Except in those cases where different coloured tickets are issued, the vagrants appear to be detained for one night only and are discharged the next morning usually on completion of their task, at hours varying from 7.30 to 11 a.m. The masters exercise a discretion in discharging early in the morning those whom they consider to be bona fide men in search of work.

5521. Could you say what inquiry the master makes to inform himself as to whether the man is a bona fide working man or not?—Well, the master certainly would form his opinion from the man himself, he would form a very good opinion of him.

5522. He sees the man and questions him?—He sees the man and questions him, and if he is satisfied that the man's statement is true, and from his experience as master he is able to see this, he allows the man to go as early as possible.

5523. It is on his own personal discretion?—His own discretion he uses in discharging the man whom he considers bona fide. There is one matter, viz., with regard to the vagrants being detained on Sundays, which has concerned our North Wales unions for some time, because they strongly object to vagrants being discharged on Sundays and roaming about the country on those days, and I find that in fourteen out of the twenty unions the vagrants are detained on Sundays.

5524. With regard to searching on admission?—Vagrants are searched on admission in nineteen unions. In sixteen unions this is done by the police, and in three unions by the officer of the vagrant wards. The police issue the tickets in the cases searched by them.

5525. Are they searched in the casual ward?—They are searched in the police station when they make application to the police; all particulars of identity are given so that they can be recognised if they present themselves again within any specified period.

5526. Do the police conduct the man from the police station to the casual ward?—No. The policeman gives him the ticket and he finds his own way there.

5527. (Sir William Chance.) Do the police act as paid assistant relieving officers?—Yes, in the majority of cases. In our union it is so; I speak positively as to that; they receive a salary as paid assistant relieving officers.

5528. Is the police station near the casual ward?—Well, at Holywell it is about six minutes walk, I should say.

Mr. Peter
Harding
Roberts.

10 May 1905.

Mr. Peter
Harding
Roberts.
10 May 1907.

5529. (Dr. Downes.) What is the distance generally?—Oh, I should say the police are nearer in some cases; some wards would be in the town immediately close to the police station.

5530. Generally speaking, the police station is near the casual ward?—Very near.

5531. Who directs the vagrant to the police?—If they pass the workhouse, they may present themselves to the master or the porter; if they have not got a ticket, they will go on to the town and come back.

5532. They would be referred to the police?—Yes.

5533. (Chairman.) Then with regard to bathing?—The bathing is not so general as the searching. Only eleven unions avail themselves of that deterrent.

5534. One question more about the searching; in every case the man is searched at the police station, not at the casual ward?—Yes, at the police station before he goes into the casual ward in those cases where the police act as assistant relieving officers.

5535. If the man is aware that this is the custom, it would be perfectly easy for him to plant his goods and dig them up again?—Quite; I think that is done in some instances; the experienced man will know where to deposit his belongings until he has discharged himself the next morning.

5536. I suppose that has been remarked upon before?—Very probably.

5537. (Sir William Chance.) The women vagrants—are they searched?—No, the women are not searched by the police.

5538. Have they to go to the police too?—They have to go to the police for admission tickets, but they are not searched.

5539. (Chairman.) There is no female searcher?—I do not think in the whole of North Wales there is a female searcher.

5540. Have you any information with regard to offences by vagrants?—Yes. During the year 1904 there were ninety-two prosecutions for offences in the vagrant wards. Magistrates are stated to deal leniently with cases in seven unions, fairly leniently in two unions, and in eleven unions the sentences are considered adequate to the offence. Returns which I have received through the courtesy of the chief constables show the following particulars relating to persons proceeded against under the Vagrancy Acts during the year ended 31st December, 1904:—

In Carnarvon, for begging, 73 were proceeded against and 59 convicted, and for sleeping out there were 44 prosecutions and 35 convictions; in Flint, for begging, 13 were prosecuted and 10 convicted; in Anglesey, for begging, 17 prosecuted and 14 convicted; in Denbigh, for begging, 34 prosecuted and 29 convicted, and for sleeping out, 90 prosecuted and 58 convicted; in Merioneth, for begging, 322 prosecuted and 293 convicted, and for sleeping out 29 prosecuted and 26 convicted; and in Montgomery, for begging, 19 prosecuted and 11 convicted.

I would like to point out to the Committee that that seems a very small proportion of offences and prosecutions, and the proportion of convictions is rather smaller still. 106 were charged with offences and were let off. I take it that no master or officer in a casual ward would charge a man with an offence unless there was a reason for it, and here we have 106 let off. The observation is directed to show that there is a degree of leniency on the part of the magistrates in dealing with these men, and in some instances the experience shows also when they appear before the magistrates, the magistrates will say, "Will you leave the town? if so, we will let you off". Now, that is not a deterrent to a vagrant. If he has committed an offence he ought to be punished for it, and if he can do that in one place he knows it may happen again; he repeats the offence wherever he goes, and makes himself disagreeable in the vagrant wards and makes it hard to work them. Take my own county, Flintshire. There were only 13 proceeded against during the year. 3 of those were discharged and 10 were convicted—I am speaking now of the police prosecutions. In the whole of the county of Anglesey there were only 17 proceeded against, of whom 3 were discharged and 14 convicted; whereas, when you come to Merioneth you find there were 351 proceeded against, of whom only 32 were discharged, and there were 319 convictions. If that rigour and vigilance had been persisted in by the police in every one of the counties, together with strict enforcement in the workhouses of the Act of 1882 and the Orders, I am strongly of opinion that the number of tramps might by now have been decreased.

5541. (Sir William Chance.) Do the police show more energy in the county of Merioneth than in the other counties?—From the figures it would seem so.

5542. Do you know that as a fact, or are you only assuming it from the figures?—I am only assuming it from the figures before me. It is through the courtesy of the chief constables of the various counties that I have had this information. It is perfectly authentic, and I say that if the police desired to be vigilant in the county of Flint, they could find more than 13 cases to proceed against during the year.

5543. (Chairman.) Are there any big main routes for tramps through Merioneth?—It is quite possible that the water works would bring a lot of men into the district at one time, and perhaps they would require greater vigilance.

5544. That is in Radnorshire?—Yes, the Birmingham water works.

5545. (Mr. Davy.) Barmouth is in Merionethshire?—Yes.

5546. (Sir William Chance.) Do you know what proportion the number of prosecutions bears to the number of vagrants relieved, say in Merionethshire?—I had the intention of working that out and classifying the number of vagrants relieved in each county, and then ascertaining the proportion of convictions in each county, but I found it would be impossible, for this reason; you take St. Asaph union, that is partly in the counties of Denbigh and Flint. Take the Bangor union; part of it is in the county of Carnarvon and part of it in the county of Anglesey; and there are several unions in two counties; so I was not in a position to give you that information. I had it in my mind, but that was the reason it was not submitted to the Committee.

5547. (Chairman.) You refer to spread of disease by tramps?—Yes, I ascertained that in four unions disease had been spread by vagrants; the cases being smallpox. Our union was one of the four that suffered.

5548. How many smallpox cases were there?—I could not say how many cases there were. We had two cases in our union.

5549. Do you happen to know whether in those unions where smallpox was introduced by tramps there was any bathing?—Well, I could tell you, sir. In the Conway union they are searched, but not bathed; and it appears that smallpox has been introduced on two occasions by vagrants during the past ten years. Then in the Corwen union they are both searched and bathed, and there were cases of smallpox in 1893, brought in by tramps. In the Holywell union they are searched and bathed, and smallpox was brought in by them. In the Wrexham union they are searched and bathed on admission, and smallpox on two or three occasions has been introduced.

5550. You have some figures as to the nationality of vagrants in Wales?—Yes, sir; I was able to get a return from some of the unions showing the nationality of these vagrants taken over a given period. The object of this was to show how unfair it is that some of our smaller unions in North Wales should be called upon to maintain persons who are not of their own nationality nor of their own chargeability. They do not belong to the unions.

The figures are as follows:—In the Ruthin union during the year 1903 the nationalities of the vagrants relieved were: English, 1,449; Irish, 244; Scotch, 52; Welsh, 299; foreigners, 20. During the year 1904 the figures respectively were: 1,916, 392, 89, 452, 15. In the Festiniog union during the year 1904 the figures were: English, 1,314; Irish, 320; Scotch, 32; Welsh, 392; foreigners, 5. During the months of April and August, 1904, a record was kept in the Holywell union, and the figures were: English, 650; Irish, 281; Welsh, 91. In the Carnarvon union the majority relieved were English, and in the Machynlleth union the majority were Irish.

5551. What have you to say as to the causes of vagrancy?—In answer to my query, the following causes were mentioned: scarcity of work, army pensioners, overcrowding in towns, vagrancy a disease, Employers' Liability Act, charm of vagrant life, recent Boer war, and land monopoly the root cause. The remedies suggested from various unions, inter alia, are as follows: strict enforcement of the present laws and regulations a sufficient remedy; labour colonies for habitual vagrants; discourage the giving of food and money by the public; break the land monopoly by taxation of land values in rural as well as urban areas, and thereby prevent exodus from the country to the towns to swell the ranks of the unemployed; the introduction of a ticket system to distinguish the bona fide searcher for work from the habitual vagrant; vagrants physically fit to be compelled to enter the Army.

5552. With regard to the last suggestion but one, the introduction of a ticket system, are you acquainted with the Gloucestershire system?—I know the Berkshire system; and I am somewhat under the impression that the Berkshire system was tried in some of the Welsh unions before I was connected with the poor law service.

5553. Only in a few unions; manifestly in a small area like that it could not be of any benefit because a man might walk out of a union in a day and would be no longer liable to be asked for his ticket?—Yes.

5554. Have you considered the question of the way-ticket?—Well, so far as this, that I think a ticket should be issued to distinguish the bona fide working man from the vagrant, and with the view of ultimately getting at the regular tramp and dealing with him separately from the bona fide working man. I approve of the issue of such tickets and I think it should be done.

5555. You think it would be a means of identification?—I think so. It should be made as easy as possible for a bona fide working man unable to obtain employment in his own district to pass on from town to town. That is the opinion I have formed. And a man genuinely in search of work would have no objection to obtain from the police some means of identifying him and passing him to the next place if he knew he was protected from any molestation, and it would be a help to him in securing his object of obtaining work. There ought to be some means provided of getting these men to those places where work was obtainable, and they cannot walk unless they have means of sustenance while they are on the road. A bona fide working man out of employment, through no fault of his own, would have no objection to some means of identifying him, and thereby preventing him being classed with the number of regular vagrants who were passing through the country. At present there is no means of doing that.

5556. It would be more or less a certificate of good conduct to him?—Yes.

5557. The next point is as to the vagrant children?—I should like to draw attention to the small number of children that are passing through the vagrant wards in comparison with the number of vagrants who are relieved. Taking the whole of North Wales, 245 is the number of children who were relieved in casual wards during the whole of one year, with 43 in common lodging-houses. Well, that leads me to the belief that where children accompany their vagrant parents—sometimes they are not their parents—they are the means of assisting them in their trade of begging; with them the vagrants can go to the common lodging-houses and get sufficient sympathy from the outside public to pay for the expenses and accommodation in lodging-houses, and they do not trouble the vagrant wards. Now, there ought to be some means of putting a stop to that, and that leads me back again to the suggestion I made a while ago as to the vigilance of the police in the case of begging, because a man going about the country having children with him is certain to gain the sympathy of the town that he passes through; there is this indiscriminate relief given, and if the people can only realise it, they are to a very large extent responsible for a proportion at any rate of the number of vagrants that are passing through the district. If a man is passing through the district or the county taking children with him, and has no visible means of supporting them at all, and cannot show to any officer who would be empowered to ascertain from him, that he has any prospective means of maintaining them at all, I do not see why the children should be left with him.

5558. Would you suggest, as other witnesses have done, that these children should be taken away from the parents or the putative parents who are with them, and put into an industrial school or taken care of by the State?—That is so, for this reason: the children who come to the workhouse are maintained at the public expense, and the children who should do, but do not find their way into the workhouse are also maintained at the public expense, although it is through the form of private charity. In relieving the public and maintaining them in the workhouse there would be no difficulty; the cost of maintenance would still be upon the public. And there is this further point: under the Education Acts every parent is by law required to send his child to school, to bring him up as a good citizen. A child going from place to place has not that opportunity; there is no possibility of that child getting an opportunity of raising himself up from the low level that his relatives may have brought him to. If the children are taken away from the parents, there is some hope for them. Then we can deal with the adult vagrants afterwards.

5559. Have you had any knowledge of children having gone to the bad owing to their being left with their vagrant parents?—No other result can follow from their being brought up in such an atmosphere.

5560. Have you yourself known of such cases?—I was presuming it because those who come through our union have passed on, but I have every reason to form the conclusion that a child who is brought up in a disreputable atmosphere cannot grow up an honourable citizen.

5561. What is your opinion with regard to the effect of short sentences upon vagrants; I mean sentences from three up to seven days. Do you think they have any deterrent effect at all?—Well, three days is practically one day's imprisonment.

5562. One has heard of a good many cases of three days?—In that case he is no harder treated, perhaps not so hardly treated, as in the casual ward. The day he is convicted is counted as one; he is detained one; and he is discharged the next day.

5563. In the same way, the seven day man is really imprisoned only for four or five days?—Yes.

5564. Do you think that that system has any deterrent effect whatever?—I should say not. I see the direction of the question; you were asking as to the leniency of the magistrates. No sentence should ever be for a shorter period than seven days if it is to act as a deterrent upon these men. If it does not serve as a deterrent, it is no advantage sending them to prison.

5565. At the same time it costs a good deal of money?—Yes, if you send a man to prison for three days you incur a good deal of expense. Perhaps a man has the desire to go to the Chester races. He will commit an offence in Holywell just in sufficient time so that he will be taken to Chester by rail and be discharged on the morning of the Chester races; it just suits him.

5566. (Mr. Davy.) Do you think it is worth while sending a man of the vagrant class to gaol for less than fourteen days?—I do not think it is.

5567. You had better not send him at all?—Not at all. It would answer the same purpose, if power were given to detain him for a longer period in the workhouse.

5568. I gather from your evidence that there is absolutely no uniformity at all in the treatment of vagrants in North Wales?—That is so.

5569. What in your mind is the advantage of uniformity in dealing with the tramps?—Well, if you have uniformity of diet, task and treatment, it would certainly prevent the expert vagrant selecting his own vagrant wards; you would be able to pass him through with greater ease than you do at present; he now avoids the workhouse where he knows the task is heavier and the diet poorer.

5570. Have you any opinion that increased stringency decreases the numbers of vagrants applying?—I think it is the general opinion that that is so; when you exercise greater vigilance you have fewer vagrants.

Mr. Peter
Harding
Roberts.

10 May, 1905.

Mr. Peter
Harding
Roberts.

0 May 1905.

5571. Are you of opinion that uniformity is of the first importance both for fair play to the vagrants and as a deterrent?—I am.

5572. Can you conceive that uniformity is possible if the local administration of the relief to vagrants is left to the board of guardians?—Well, there certainly is a difficulty. You see the regulations of the Local Government Board now are practically compulsory, but they have not been put into force; if they have to be put in force, then we shall want, as we have now for education, a Defaulting Act or something like that; there must be some strict means of compelling compliance with the regulations. If any means could be devised of having uniformity, I certainly think it would be a decided advantage.

5573. But uniformity when administration is left in the hands of the guardians would only be possible at the cost of very considerable centralisation?—In that direction I should certainly first of all direct the uniformity by saying that the police in all cases should search and give tickets; in those unions where it is not so, it should be made compulsory that they should do this and then the labour tasks should be uniform.

5574. Is that possible?—I think so; but there is another difficulty which would present itself on that point. If the Local Government Board insisted upon a uniform treatment of vagrants in every workhouse, then the charge would be very heavy upon the smaller unions which are on the highway between important towns. Assuming that the Local Government Board ask them to provide separate cells, they might have to provide separate cells quite out of proportion to the size of the union on account of the number of vagrants passing through being large.

5575. A union may have a very small rateable value?—Yes, the remedy for that would be, I think, to have fewer wards; the present wards are too near to each other.

5576. Quite so?—I am of that opinion. In my county the Hawarden vagrant wards are only two or three miles from Chester. That is unreasonable. Then comes Holywell, which is eight or nine miles off.

5577. How far is Conway from Llanrwst?—Scarcely any distance at all.

5578. You would leave the administration in the local hands?—I think so.

5579. Are the Welsh guardians more responsive to the influence of the Local Government Board than the guardians elsewhere?—I am rather inclined to think they are very sympathetic; too much so, I think. They have not been observing the letter of the law; in fact, in one reply here as to the treatment of vagrancy, it is suggested as a remedy that we should treat vagrants more leniently; to treat them as Christians—would be the best way of getting them off the road! I am afraid they would be there a good long time with that process.

5580. Is the suggestion that the land monopoly is the cause of vagrancy pressed upon you by many unions?—Only one union. I take it that what it means is that the locking up of the land prevents that land coming into the market and the development of towns.

5581. I do not think we need go into that. Has it ever occurred to you that you might get uniformity by an extension of the area of administration?—Not to counties. I disagree wholly with any county suggestion.

5582. Would you disagree with administration by the standing joint committee or any body working through the police?—That is the same as the county.

5583. Why should you disagree with that?—I have thought this over in this way; this is a form of destitution, and the agency at the present time for dealing with destitution is the guardians; if you brought them directly under the county police and wholly under their care, the question is whether you would not be making the treatment too penal. But I am not prepared to give an emphatic opinion on that question.

5584. Anyway you give an emphatic opinion that uniformity is desirable?—Yes.

5585. That the closing of certain wards is desirable?—Yes.

5586. That the building or re-building of certain other wards is desirable?—Yes.

5587. And that precedent to that there ought to be some difference in the present area of chargeability; and you suggest the State?—The State should take up the whole of the charge of vagrancy, I think.

5588. Would you have the State undertake the control of the vagrants?—No, they might do it through the local guardians; I do not see what objection there would be to that; or a committee of the board of guardians plus inspection by the police. I fail to see why that should not be a sufficient means of dealing with it. The reason why I suggest that the State should bear the charge is this. If an ordinary pauper comes to the workhouse, who does not belong to the union, the law provides the remedy for transferring him to his own place of settlement. On the other hand, if a vagrant passes through there is no possibility of ever getting a settlement for that man; and therefore, some places are unduly called upon to pay a larger amount than they should be called upon to pay because they happen to be on the main road from two places, say Chester to Holyhead. I have shown in the figures I have quoted that the nationality is such that it should be a general charge, and until it is so I do not think that vagrancy can be effectively dealt with. It is not fair to leave it in the hands of the local guardians to make all the provision that is necessary at the casual wards, having in view that there has been a large increase recently in the numbers; some of the returns show that they have not been able to carry out the Orders because of the increase; they have had to allow the people to be discharged the first morning after admission, because their accommodation was limited and they could not keep them so long as they had been doing when the numbers were fewer.

5589. Your proposal is that the State should pay and the local guardians should continue to administer?—I think so. And I give another reason why I think the State should pay, because a large proportion of these are Army Reserve men and they are the creation of the Government.

5590. Where do you gather that they are Army Reserve men?—Statistics were kept some time.

5591. By whom?—By one of the officers of our union showing that there was a very large proportion of these men.

5592. In your union?—Yes, I believe so.

5593. Was that officer himself an old soldier?—No, he was not; it was only from the information supplied to him.

5594. By the tramps themselves?—Yes, certainly. Then bearing upon that I also would suggest as a means of decreasing that class of tramps that the Government should be urged to pay whatever pension they give these men not quarterly as at present, but at shorter periods. Experience shows this, that where the men receive their quarterly pension they come on the road and enter the vagrant wards as long as they have no money. When they get the money they go and spree it and return to the casual ward. If the payment were made more frequently, it is quite possible they would be less on the road than they are at present.

5595. You know that in order to draw a pension a man must have his pension papers?—He must have them, unless he has pawned them.

5596. You know that to deal with a pension paper in that way is a penal offence and heavily punished?—Yes.

5597. Have you ever known a workhouse master report that he has searched a vagrant and found upon him such papers?—I have never heard of a case. In our union they are searched by the police. Possibly the intelligent Army reservist on applying for admission to the casual ward knows that he is going to be searched, and he takes care to hide his papers so that he would find them when he comes out of the house again.

5598. Do you suggest that the searching by the police is a farce?—It is possible for the men to hide their papers if they choose to do it.

5599. As regards those sentences for begging in Wales, are any of your justices stipendiaries?—No, not in North Wales.

5600. If the police fail to procure convictions, they would be discouraged in apprehending people for begging?—They certainly would.

5601. And apprehending people, as you pointed out, is the only way of getting at the vagrant children?—Yes, and also as a deterrent to the tramps. We must not forget the effect of these tramps going about the country and calling at wayside houses; the fright that they give to the inmates of those houses when they come and demand alms.

5602. That is a serious offence, is it not?—It should be.

5603. Do you know what is the proportion of bona fide working men to the total number of tramps?—I do not; I could not give you any reliable data on that.

5604. Would you agree that they are very few?—Yes; probably, I should say, three or four per cent. of the whole. I am only venturing an opinion.

5605. (Mr. Simpson.) Then of the rest of the vagrants probably few are people really in want of poor relief under ordinary circumstances. Our evidence has pointed rather to the casual wards being used not so much by destitute people as by people who prefer the vagrant life along the roads?—Yes.

5606. Do you not think there is a quite clear distinction between the case of a man who wanders along the road because he likes the tramp life, and the man who requires poor relief because he is ill or old and cannot work and has no one to support him?—I do not think they tramp because they want relief. I think the tramp who goes from town to town is a tramp who has started as a tramp; when they come to the condition that they are old or unable to do anything they stay in one given place and they become chargeable to that place.

5607. That would be a clear case of ordinary poor relief?—In those particular cases it is because a man has broken down; he cannot go any further; he has wasted all his energy getting about from place to place until at last it comes that he cannot tramp any further.

5608. Is there not a clear distinction between that case and the case of a tramp who wanders about and gets relief from one casual ward after another?—I say that is the ultimate end of that man; but I do not see the distinction in the case at all.

5609. The mode of relief is different, is it not?—It becomes different when a man is chargeable. I will put it in this way: assuming a tramp is taken ill and is unable to go any further, he is removed either to the sick wards or to the infirmary, as the case may be. He is found unable to continue his journey, and he remains a charge in the workhouse, and there is no possible chance of removing him.

5610. It has been suggested to us that the question of dealing with the class of people who frequent the casual wards is rather a question of police than a question of the Poor Law; would you agree with that view?—No, I think I expressed myself a little while ago that it is a form of relief of destitution.

5611. (Mr. Davy.) Is not an ordinary tramp a pretty able-bodied person?—Very many of them.

5612. Who could do work?—Yes.

5613. Does he not make his mid-day meal by begging or stealing or breaking the law in some way?—Yes.

5614. Which do you call him: a destitute pauper or a potential criminal?—Put it in this way, sir. If he remained in his own town, he would be an able-bodied man able to maintain himself.

5615. (Mr. Simpson.) From the point of view of Poor Law relief you look at the persons relieved with sympathy for their misfortune in not being able to support themselves; would you have that feeling of sympathy for the average inmate of the casual ward?—It does not follow that sympathy is the guide or the means of coming to your conclusions even with regard to the regular pauper. Some people are driven into the workhouse and do not require sympathy; they are driven there in consequence of their own conduct outside, and that is the last resource for them. On the other hand, there are cases that the guardians would very largely sympathise with because they know that they are brought down through no cause of their own.

5616. Then you do not think the tramp is a person in whom the police are more interested than the guardians?—I think the police should in every case have the preliminary proceedings for the granting of tickets or the dealing with tramps before they are relieved by any agency that may be decided. At present they are relieved in the casual wards. I think the police should first of all be the agent to grant them the tickets for obtaining whatever relief is granted to them.

5617. In North Wales are most of the casual wards at the workhouses?—Yes, in all cases.

5618. And they are under the supervision of the workhouse master?—Yes, or porter or casual poor officer; in a large union I daresay they have a special officer for this purpose; they would have at Wrexham, for instance.

5619. When you propose that the State should pay for the maintenance of the casual wards, do you mean to say that you would suggest that the State should pay part of the salary of those workhouse masters?—Not of the workhouse masters—no, I should say not.

5620. Then what would the cost be?—The maintenance and provision of the building, and, if necessary, the construction of separate cells.

5621. I suppose the maintenance is quite a small matter; they are only given bread and gruel?—The maintenance could be very materially met by the profit on the labour task they are given. There ought to be a measure of profit on the labour task if they are detained over a day. I think one reason why there has been a lack of uniformity has been the great expense small unions would have to bear if they were required to provide separate cells in each case.

5622. So you propose that the State should pay for the building of separate cells in the casual wards?—Yes, and the maintenance.

5623. (Sir William Chance.) As honorary secretary of the North Wales poor law conference, you have great opportunities of meeting the guardians and clerks from various unions in North Wales?—I meet them every year.

5624. In different parts of the district?—Yes.

5625. And this question of vagrancy has been discussed over and over again in your experience, has it not, in North Wales?—Yes.

5626. It is an eternal subject?—It is.

5627. You have heard various opinions expressed as to the best method of dealing with that problem?—Yes.

5628. Have you not heard it over and over again suggested that it might be well to bring the police more into this question than they are at present?—I think I have already said that.

5629. Is it not your experience that these guardians and other clerks whom you meet feel strongly that the vagrants are a nuisance and that they would be very glad to get rid of them?—Undoubtedly.

5630. Therefore, while you are of opinion that they should not be transferred to the police and made a public charge in that way, there are many others that think that they should be transferred to the police?—Yes, there are. There would be some unions where they would be of the opinion that the police should take them altogether.

5631. Well, then, are you not rather sanguine, in expressing the opinion that the State is going to pay for the maintenance of those vagrants in casual wards and leave bodies like boards of guardians to administer the money?—I am not very sanguine. I have expressed a strong opinion it should be so in justice to the localities, but we cannot be very sanguine that the State will take any fresh burden in these days.

5632. Now will you say what is your opinion as to labour colonies?—I am in favour of the establishment by the State of labour colonies for the treatment of habitual vagrants. The question of vagrancy and the uniform treatment of vagrants in the North Wales unions, and the best means to be adopted to deal with that class of paupers, formed the subject of a conference of representatives of boards of guardians in North Wales, held at Chester on the 19th December last. At that conference the following resolutions were passed:—

“(1) That the hon. secretary be requested to write to the respective boards of guardians in North Wales

*Mr. Peter Harding
Roberts.*

10 May 1905.

Mr. Peter Harding oberts.
10 May 1905. expressing the opinion of the conference that it was highly desirable that there should be uniformity of treatment of vagrants in all the unions of North Wales, and that the Casual Poor Act and the Orders of the Local Government Board should be strictly enforced.

(2) That the boards of guardians should be specially requested to detain vagrants on Sundays.

(3) That this conference is of opinion that some remedy should be found for diminishing the vagrants in the country, and that the Departmental Committee now sitting should devise some means of diminishing vagrancy generally by the establishment of labour colonies or some other device."

A copy of the last resolution was sent to your Committee. I consider that if labour colonies are provided, they should be for large areas. The labour task should be such that whilst teaching the men to become self-supporting in the future, it should not be such as to enter into competition with outside labour, and thereby interfere with or reduce wages.

5633. How many common lodging-houses are there in the North Wales district?—They are not very numerous, but I could not tell you the number. In some of our districts where the town is some distance from the vagrant wards, the policeman will send the tramp to a common lodging-house in the town if he comes in late.

5634. The vagrants who are relieved in common lodging-houses are relieved through the boards of guardians?—Yes.

5635. Then the North Wales guardians in 1904 utilised the casual wards for 60,916 vagrants, and the common lodging-houses for 2,594 vagrants?—Yes.

5636. (Dr. Downes.) The number of vagrants you mentioned was the total number of vagrants who have passed through the wards in the year?—Yes.

5637. The total of each night during the year. That is for 365 nights?—Yes; I do not think it means the number of different men. A man may pass through a number of wards in a given period.

5638. He may be counted over and over again?—That is so.

5639. Taking the number of children, there are 788 altogether; that would only give an average of two to three a night, would it not?—Yes.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Tuesday, 16th May, 1905.

PRESENT.

Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.
Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.

Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Sir SHIRLEY F. MURPHY and Mr. H. A. JURY, called; and Examined.

Sir Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury.
16 May 1905. 5640. (Chairman.) Sir Shirley Murphy, you are medical officer of health of London?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) Yes, of the county of London.

5641. How long have you held that office?—Sixteen years.

5642. And, Mr. Jury, you are the chief inspector of common lodging-houses under the London county council?—(Mr. Jury.) Yes.

5643. How long have you been chief inspector?—Seven years.

5644. You have come here to-day to give us evidence with regard to the common lodging-houses in London?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) That is so.

5645. And especially so far as they concern the vagrant class?—Yes; I have prepared a statement (see Appendix IX), which is in the main of a statistical character and relates to the inmates of common lodging-houses. It is necessary perhaps at the outset that I should say that a very large proportion of those inmates could not in any way be characterised as belonging to the vagrant class. It is difficult to estimate accurately what proportion could be thus described, but probably something approaching 10 per cent. might be assumed to be persons of the vagrant class, using this term to include lodgers who wander from one house to another, sleeping indoors or out of doors, according to their means.

5646. We have all seen your statement; it is a most valuable one and contains much interesting information as to the state of the common lodging-houses in the Metropolis. These common lodging-houses are entirely under the control of the London county council at present, are they not?—Yes, with the exception of three small houses, accommodating a total of 69 lodgers, which are situated in the area of the city of London. The inmates of these houses, however, are included in Table V. of my statement, being elsewhere disregarded.

5647. When did the common lodging-houses come under this control?—In 1894; they were formerly under the control of the Metropolitan police.

5648. How long were they under the control of the police?—I think they were brought under their regulation by the Common Lodging Houses Act of 1851.

5649. That, I think, was the first time that common lodging-houses were recognised by the law; it was the first time that any inspection was established?—That was the first time that they were put under any inspection. There was some inspection of them before, but not of a systematic sort, nor indeed with any power of enforcing regulations or requirements.

5650. That Act, I think, was passed principally through the efforts of the late Lord Shaftesbury?—Yes, that was so.

5651. Then your statement contains information as to the shelters: under whose control are these now?—They are now under the control of the London county council as common lodging-houses. Until the council obtained a decision in the High Court in 1899 they had not been deemed to be within the Common Lodging Houses Acts. and there had been, antecedent to that time, an adverse decision, when an unsuccessful effort was made by the police to bring them under these Acts. The matter then remained in abeyance until the London county council obtained a further decision in the High Court.

5652. Then all the shelters now are under the control of the London county council?—All the shelters are under the control of the London county council except one, I think, in Providence Row, for which a case has been stated which will come before the Court in a few days, and a small one in Baggallay Street, Stepney.

5653. Are those particular shelters in anyway to be distinguished from the others that are under your control?—(Mr. Jury.) There was a special point in regard to Providence Row on a question whether a charge was made. It all turns on the question whether if there is no charge made it comes within the meaning of the law. The keepers made out a case that the inmates were guests, and not lodgers paying for their room, and on that ground an appeal was allowed. (Sir Shirley Murphy.) Yes; it is claimed that that was a different point from that upon which the Lord Chief Justice and other Judges gave a decision in the High Court in the case I previously referred to, and the magistrate has stated a case with regard to Providence Row with a view to this special point being considered.

5654. How many common lodging-houses are there now in London?—451; that was at the end of 1904.

5655. And how many shelters are at present under control?—They are all included with the common lodging-houses; I have not shewn them separately, but I may here state that there are 23 shelters under the control of the London county council, providing accommodation for 3,302 persons, viz., 2,849 males, and 453 females at less than the ordinary rates.

5656. Well now, as to the accommodation that these houses provide, I rather gather from your statement that the tendency has been to go from small establishments to large establishments?—That is so. In some instances houses have been specially built as common lodging-houses, and they contain large numbers of lodgers; in other instances large buildings have been adapted for the purpose of common lodging-houses, and the tendency generally has been for the small house that probably was originally built for one family, and many of which, years ago, were used as common lodging-houses, to diminish in number.

5657. What is the largest common lodging-house at the present time, as regards accommodation?—One in the Borough (St. Olave's Chambers) with 750 lodgers.

5658. The Rowton Houses do not come under your control, I understand?—No.

5659. What is the charge for the accommodation provided at the common lodging-houses?—Referring first to the accommodation for men, there are 921 free beds; there are 838 beds at 2d.—that is to say, the inmate pays 4d., but he has two meals included, which are estimated to be worth 2d.

5660. Is he obliged to buy these two meals?—(Mr. Jury.) He is not compelled to, but as a matter of fact they all do. I am told it is far more difficult for a man to get in with the bare 2d. than it is with his 4d. (Sir Shirley Murphy.) There are 358 beds at 3d., 3,755 at 4d., and 9,921 at 5d., 8,905 at 6d., and about 160 at above that price extending to 1s. Then for single women there are 177 free beds, 276 at 2d., none at 3d. or 4d., 127 at 5d., and 1,230 at 6d., and about 500 at prices above that. For married couples there are 4 beds at 8d., and 16 at 9d., 383 at 1s., and 19 at 10d. It will be seen that women pay more for their beds, as a rule, than men. The greatest number of the women pay 6d., whereas the greatest number of the men pay 5d., and there are no 3d. or 4d. beds for single women.

5661. Is there a marked difference in the accommodation provided corresponding to the difference in cost?—No, I do not think that the women's beds are at all better than the men's.

5662. Women give more trouble, I suppose, do they not?—I think their habits are supposed to lead to more cost to the keeper of the lodging-house—a question of linen and so forth.

5663. Women of that class always have to pay more for everything, have they not?—Yes.

5664. Now we come to the question of shelters: how would you define a shelter as distinguished from a common lodging-house?—I think the difference between the shelter and the common lodging-house is that the common lodging-house keeper professedly carries on his business for the purpose of profit, and the shelter has been provided by people who put to the forefront a philanthropic object. Then again, the use of the house is a different one, because the philanthropic person provides poorer accommodation than the ordinary lodging-house keeper does who has to depend upon the attractions of his house for his success in his business. This is most conspicuous in the bed accommodation that is provided. In the ordinary common lodging-house the bed consists of a small iron bedstead, a straw mattress, palliasses, blankets, sheets and a pillow. In the shelter the accommodation is very often very inferior. It consists of a wooden bunk lying upon the floor; the lodger sleeps on a mattress covered with American cloth and has an American cloth apron to cover him, and sheets and blankets are not provided. I may say that the London county council has not viewed with satisfaction the accommodation that is provided in shelters, but in taking over the shelters a few years ago they felt that it was a wise course to adopt to give time for the re-arrangement of the bedding, and they adopted a resolution which was communicated to the keepers of the shelters fixing a time limit when the bedding in shelters would have to be raised to the standard of that which is the standard of common lodging-houses.

5665. When is the time limit up?—(Mr. Jury.) It is up at the present moment for what we call multiple bunks, that is, bunks one above another. That time limit is now up, and the medical officer is now reporting whether there are any defaulters in this respect. The time limit for other bunks expires in about four years.

5666. The time limit for the multiple bunks has come already?—Yes. There are a few which still remain, but steps will probably be taken to get rid of them.

5667. Those multiple bunks are all in Salvation Army shelters?—Well, there are other free shelters that have bunks which are not included in the common lodging-houses; for instance, Dr. Barnardo's shelter and the Providence Row shelter have bunks. They are bunks raised a few inches from the floor—rather an improvement on the Salvation Army ground bunk.

5668. That time limit was actually suggested to you by the Lord Chief Justice, was it not?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) The Lord Chief Justice expressed a very strong opinion as to what the action of the county council should be in giving effect to his decision. He said he hoped that "those who are charged with the enforcement of the law will do all they can consistently with their duty, and consistently with their effecting the objects of the law, to avoid anything like harshness or unreasonableness in its enforcement," and that has had due weight with the council. These shelters were very much below the standard of common lodging-houses, and it would have been a very serious thing to have suddenly required them to have all the fittings and appurtenances of the common lodging-houses, so that it has taken some time to make the changes which are deemed to be necessary; and the time for getting rid of all the different bunks has not yet come, but it is approaching.

5669. I think it would be convenient if you would tell us what are the objections to these bunks?—I think that the provision of proper air about the inmates of a bed does not exist in the multiple bunks to anything like the same degree as it does in an ordinary bed. It is a question of ventilation. And, then, the bunk has, to my mind, one grave objection: the inmates do not make it their business to take off their clothes—they sleep in their clothes; and I have no doubt that it is a much more healthy arrangement for people to change their clothes for the night than to sleep in those they have worn all day.

5670. Do you think that sleeping in your day clothes is a practice so unhealthy that the State or the municipality is entitled to interfere with it?—I am not going to base it only on health grounds: it relates also to cleanliness. It appears to me that these people ought to be taught, as far as it is practicable to teach them, to adopt habits and methods of life that are, under ordinary conditions, deemed to be proper for human beings.

5671. That is to say, on moral grounds you wish to increase their standard of comfort?—On moral grounds I should certainly wish to increase their standard of comfort.

5672. Now, in these shelters, is there any provision made for the drying of wet clothes?—Yes, in all of them. (Mr. Jury.) All the shelters have better accommodation in that respect than common lodging-houses have—that is to say, there is a chamber where the inmates can disinfect their clothes, and at the same time they can dry them, if they think fit.

Sir Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury.
16 May 1905.

Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury.
May 1905.
5673. That would be a sanitary requirement, would it not?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) Certainly it is a very good requirement, and a useful provision. Of course, one ought to point out that the shelters contain very large numbers of people, and the ability to provide this in a large institution is very much greater than in a small common lodging-house. Some of the common lodging-houses are quite small, and it would be difficult to make that provision.

5674. (Sir William Chance.) What do these people put on while their clothes are being dried: is anything provided for them?—(Mr. Jury.) Nothing in the shelters; the man has to go to his bunk; it is done while he is in bed.

5675. He goes to bed while his clothes are being dried?—Yes; but in the common lodging-houses the man generally washes his shirt and stands by it, for two reasons, first, to watch it getting dry, and secondly, to see that no one removes it for him. In every common lodging-house, you will see in the wash-house where there is a fire, a man standing with his coat on, without any shirt, while the shirt is being washed; the same with his socks and his underclothing, if he has any. They have not usually any pants or anything of that kind; their shirt is their principal article of underclothing, and that they take off and just put their coat on again.

5676. (Chairman.) What would be the effect of your enforcing your regulations on the shelters—I mean, so far as cost is concerned; could they carry out your requirements for 2d. a night?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) I am not prepared to say that they would be able to do it for 2d., because the effect would be of two sorts; there would, first of all, be the cost of the provision, and I think there would be a reduction in the number of lodgers in particular rooms. It is a question of floor space.

5677. It will be a very serious matter for the shelters when you do away with the multiple bunks?—I may say that the London county council when they took over the shelters made a requirement that there should be not less than 300 cubic feet of air space per head in them; but although that has been required, the amount of floor space for the purposes of beds, is, I think, inadequate in some of the rooms. The question of laundry has also to be considered—the cleaning of sheets and blankets. The shelters, I ought to say, are very frequently artificially warmed by hot-water pipes or steam pipes and that compensates, no doubt, so far as the comfort of the lodgers is concerned, in a great degree for the absence of ordinary bed-covering.

5678. But if shelters are obliged to give, in future, more air space, and to undertake the washing of bed linen, the cost will be very much increased?—Yes, I anticipate that 4d. would in all probability be the amount that would be charged.

5679. Is it not possible that some shelters will have to be closed?—No; I do not think that follows at all, because it does not appear to me at all impossible for the inmates to pay the 4d. I do not say all of them, but a considerable proportion of them.

5680. So that, apparently, shelters are giving accommodation to men who can afford to pay more for it?—It is my own belief, from what I know of the circumstances of those people, that many of them would be able to pay more; indeed I think that if a still inferior class of accommodation were provided at a lower cost, people in the existing shelters would avail themselves of it and go down to that lower standard.

5681. Your view, as I take it, is that they ought to be driven to pay more for a higher standard, both on the grounds of health and morals?—I do not say that they ought to be driven to pay; I put it in this way: that I think there ought to be a minimum standard fixed, and in so far as these houses are under regulation that no lower standard than that should be allowed, and it would then remain with the lodger to determine whether or not he would find the money or could find the money to pay for it.

5682. But in dealing with people of this class the tendency is that the worse should kill the better?—I have no doubt about that.

5683. If you had more free shelters you would have more men going down lower still?—(Mr. Jury.) We have a good instance of that, sir; there is a shelter not far from this room that was opened recently. The first night it opened it was full; the next night, or soon after, another shelter for 150 opened, and that was full the first night, and as a result, we got a reduction of inmates in the better class lodging-houses. As a matter of fact, if the Salvation Army or the Church Army or any institution chose to provide sufficient accommodation at 2d. a night, I think they would take most of the population of the lodging-houses in London.

5684. And destroy the common lodging-houses?—Well, sir, the men want something for nothing, or as near nothing as they can get it, and they will come down to it.

5685. But some of the inmates of the common lodging-houses are men in regular work, are they not?—Yes; I do not say that all would use the cheapest accommodation. Take a dock labourer who is earning good money at times; if he sees a chance of getting something for nothing he takes it. We found that in the case of the shelter at Bermondsey; most of them were common lodging-house men who could find 5d. or 6d. a day, but they were not above going there; if they could get the shelter for 2d. or nothing they would go to it. My impression is that the greater number of the lodgers in London, if they had the opportunity of getting their bunk for 2d. in preference to their bed for 4d. or 6d., would take it; I feel quite certain about that.

5686. So you have only to provide enough shelters and the common lodging-houses will cease to exist—at least the tendency will be that way?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) The tendency will be very strong in that direction.

5687. That is to say the tendency will be towards a more degraded style of living?—Certainly.

5688. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you think that a more degraded style of living at night would tend to lower the standard all round, and make a man a worse man during the day?—Yes; I think the conditions under which a man is living have an effect upon his character, and I am sure that it is a very desirable thing that there should be a minimum standard fixed.

5689. (Chairman.) You have given us your opinion as to what would happen if the shelters were very largely extended; now, conversely, supposing the shelters were closed what would happen; would not large numbers of the people who frequent them have to sleep out?—(Mr. Jury.) Not if they could rake up their 4d. which I have not the slightest doubt they could.

5690. You have not the slightest doubt that this class of man could always get the 4d. if they chose?—I think so; that is my impression. There is one point in connection with the effect of using the bunk instead of the bed that I should like to refer to, and that is that in the bed if a man has got vermin on his body he leaves something behind him in the bed which the council's inspector finds; the bed is dealt with and the man is marked, he has to be cleansed or go somewhere else. But if he goes into a bunk he can sleep there week in week out and never undress. A good many of these shelter men sell newspapers; that is the sort of occupation they are employed in and many much need cleansing. It is only when they fall sick and go into the infirmary that they get a proper cleansing.

5691. Why cannot you detect vermin in the bunk?—It is a black bunk; on a white sheet you could see the vermin, but this is a black mattress; they wash it with some disinfectant, for they know there is vermin on it, and they scrub the floors with disinfectant. Of course they do cleanse the place, but at the same time a man goes away with the majority of the parasites on him and he is still a pest and a nuisance to anybody he comes in contact with.

5692. What do you do in London under the Act as to verminous persons?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) An enquiry was made by Dr. Wanklyn, who is an officer of the council's public health department, into what provision had been made in London under the Cleansing of Persons Act, and it was found that in only two or three districts had any special provision been made. The first cleansing station was established in St. Marylebone, and in rather close proximity to the Burne Street shelter, and this station has been very largely used. It was used practically immediately, and as far as I know the numbers have been well maintained since.

5693. (Mr. Simpson.) Those places are provided by the borough councils, not by the county council?—Yes, that is so. I am sure that it is a very desirable thing that this provision should be made throughout London. As a general rule the sanitary authorities, upon whom the duty of making this provision devolves, either did nothing or made some arrangement that the person applying should go to the casual ward to be cleansed there. That has not been found to lead to any satisfactory result so far as the number of persons applying is concerned, and so to a great extent the Act has been a dead letter in London. I would, I confess, wish to go even further than that and not only have the provision made, but have some power existing by which persons who are definitely recognised to be verminous should be required to go and cleanse themselves. There is no power of that sort now so far as I know in English law.

5694. All you can do is to give the opportunity to the man?—Yes.

5695. What do you do with regard to lodging-houses where you find vermin?—The lodging-house keepers, if they are found not to free their beds at once from vermin, are prosecuted. The houses as a rule are kept very clean, but there are prosecutions from time to time where the keeper has not sufficiently cleansed the bed after it has been used by a lodger who is dirty in that way.

5696. Is there any sanitary objection to vermin except as being an indication of a dirty state of things?—I am not at all sure what the effect would be upon a man accustomed to it, but those unaccustomed would not be able to sleep at night or get any rest at all.

5697. As a first principle, why is the State or a municipality justified in interfering with a man because he has vermin?—I think the justification for such interference is this, that a man who is in a verminous condition is a nuisance to other people.

5698. Is a danger to other people?—Yes. He may easily infect them with vermin and that is a disgusting condition that I think the State has a right to prevent.

5699. (Dr. Downes.) Is there not a possibility of disease being conveyed by the vermin themselves?—It is alleged that some diseases, plague for instance, are communicated by vermin.

5700. (Chairman.) May we just put it that the existence of these people is a serious nuisance?—Yes. I put it on the ground simply of the public generally having a right to be protected from disgusting conditions.

5701. And on the ground that you mentioned just now that a verminous person has such a low standard of comfort that he is in process of degradation?—I think so. I believe that if the inmates of common lodging-houses knew of such a law they would desire to be protected by it, because I know it is a frequent practice in common lodging-houses for the regular lodgers to have rooms to themselves away from the casual lodger, and that is I believe very largely for the reason that they wish to escape any vermin.

5702. There are common lodging-houses in London which are absolutely clean, are there not?—(Mr. Jury.) I think they all are. The inmates do not carry bugs about on their clothing or their bodies. These have almost disappeared from common lodging-houses now; there is a method of burning them; it is the lice that we experience difficulty in dealing with at present.

5703. Now you have told us about the common lodging-houses and the shelters; what effect do you think the provision of free beds in casual wards has on the other two institutions; do you think there is a separate class that frequents the casual wards, or does the same class use the shelters, common lodging-houses, and casual wards?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) I have always been under the impression that they are a different class in the casual wards—(Mr. Jury.) I think they are entirely. I think the loafing tramp that goes to the casual ward is not a common lodger in any way. I should like to see the lodger brought to the same standard of cleanliness as the man who goes to the casual ward because he is required to be cleansed there, and that is the bar, otherwise you would get the casual wards full. Men would be attracted by the casual wards quite as much as they are by the Salvation Army shelter, if they were not required to be cleansed.

5704. There are other restrictions, detention and so on?—Sir Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury. That I think is very desirable.

5705. You mean that if we had no deterrent arrangements in casual wards, they would absorb the shelters?—Exactly so.

5706. Just as the shelters would eat up the common lodging-houses if there were enough of them?—Yes. (Sir Shirley Murphy.) They would in effect become free shelters at once.

5707. Do you think it is necessary to have casual wards?—(Mr. Jury.) I do not. I would not have a casual ward, I would have something very much more severe; for a man who had not got his 4d. for a bed, I would have a place where he should earn it.

5708. But he does earn his lodging to a certain extent in the casual ward, does he not, if the regulations are enforced?—Not profitably.

5709. He does something. What would you do with a man who had not a penny in his pocket?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) I am perfectly satisfied in my own mind that a man who is not able to maintain a certain standard of living should become the care of the State.

5710. He had better be segregated?—I think this is necessary as much in his own interest as in that of the public. A class of people in London that undoubtedly requires dealing with is the class that sleeps out at night on staircases and in streets. These people going on to the staircases pollute them, and make conditions which ought not to be tolerated.

5711. But, as a general principle, you think that if a man cannot earn enough to provide himself with a decent bed he ought to go into an institution of some sort?—Undoubtedly.

5712. And be kept there?—Yes.

5713. Now what information can you give as regards sleeping out?—The London county council has made efforts on two occasions to ascertain the number of people sleeping out. These numbers must not be regarded, of course, as having the accuracy of a precise census of all these people, but as providing material for estimates I think they may be accepted.

5714. Perhaps you will describe the method by which you got these figures?—The first count of these people was made by the inspectors of the council in the public health department, who, having some time before ascertained where these people were likely to be found, passed the night in the streets counting all people who presented the appearance of belonging to that class. The movements of these people were practically guided in the main by the food which was being given at three institutions, viz., in Whitechapel, in Wych Street, and at Upper East Smithfield.

5715. Was that this last winter?—No, the previous winter. Our count was on the night of the 29th January, 1904.

5716. How many places in all were giving free meals?—There were those three last winter which gave a mid-night meal. Free food was also given at Medland Hall and at Dr. Barnardo's to those persons who passed the night there.

5717. What I want to get at is approximately the number of persons for whom free food was found who were not sleeping in any institution: I want to see what connection there is between the sleeping out and the free food?—I can give you the total number of people who were found; there were 1,797 and a number of these were counted in proximity to the places where the food was being given. I think in all probability that represented the great bulk of the people who were not going to sleep either in the shelters or common lodging-houses that night and were going to sleep out, and I am fairly well satisfied that an estimate of one in 2,000 of the population is an approximation to the truth which is close enough for practical purposes.

5718. The shelters are full practically every night, are they not?—Yes, they are always full.

5719. Can anyone go into a common lodging-house at any hour of the night to get a bed?—Yes.

5720. Are there night porters?—All the large houses have a night porter.

Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury. May 1905. 5721. So that a man might have his free meal and then afterwards go to a common lodging-house?—Oh, yes. As a matter of fact they do not. We took a census of the common lodging-houses on the same night, and that point was observed.

5722. So that practically all the persons who get food either walk the streets or sleep out?—Yes, that is so; I think you might be quite safe in assuming that.

5723. As to the number of people walking the streets, that was only an estimate?—The figures I gave you were the result of an actual count—1,797.

5724. But if a man is walking the street you might count him twice?—We did everything we could to guard against that, because the inspectors were stationed at spots where the movement towards the places where food was being given was observed, and all the people were counted there, and when they scattered after the meal was over our count ceased. I think it is quite possible there were some individuals who were counted twice, but I think that might be regarded as a reasonable set-off against those we missed.

5725. Anybody who knows this class of person could tell them at sight; you cannot mistake them?—That is so; they are quite different from the working man who has to be out at night, different in their appearance, dress and walk.

5726. Did you ever get an actual return of the people who were being fed?—I think we did not on that first night. On the second occasion when we made an effort to count these people we did get those numbers. That was on the 17th of last February. We then repeated our efforts and had the assistance of several officers from the borough councils. On that night there were 2,481 persons counted in the streets. Of that number 1,983 received food as follows:—161 men and 60 women at the Whitechapel Road shelter; 827 men and 39 women at the Wych Street food-bar, both belonging to the Salvation Army; and 600 men at the Church Army tent in Olare Market. Further, 296 men were given bread at Medland Hall.

5727. About one tenth of the number who were sleeping in the common lodging-houses and shelters?—Yes, roughly speaking, about that.

5728. It is no offence to walk about at night, is it?—I presume not.

5729. Then those who were walking about would not be amenable to any public authority whatever?—No, I presume they would not be.

5730. How do you suppose that those men live?—Well, they live in part upon the food that is given them; and they go into the common lodging-houses in the daytime and cadge from lodgers.

5731. Do you know that as a matter of fact?—(Mr. Jury.) Oh, yes, a great many of those who get the free supper stop out on purpose. The inducement of the free meal in the early hours of the morning will cause them to clear from the common lodging-house about half past twelve or one o'clock; and if they are old lodgers no notice is taken of them.

5732. One in the morning, you mean?—About half past twelve is the usual time for going out; they simply walk out, and go to one of the depôts at Stepney, have some food, come back to Whitechapel in time and have some more, and then they will roam aimlessly about talking to one another or sitting in doorways until they are again entitled to go into the lodging-house, being old lodgers. They will stop out two or three nights and then stop in two or three nights.

5733. But what do they do in the daytime?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) The majority of the common lodging-houses are open. These men get into the kitchens and sit before the fire.

5734. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) They are not allowed to lie down on the floor?—No.

5735. (Chairman.) They pass the time in that way?—(Mr. Jury.) Yes. My own impression is that a very large percentage of those who are induced to stop out by the soup are men who do not belong to the common lodging-houses at all; they simply roam the streets together; they are perhaps hobbledehos who have just got out of the control of their father and mother; they stop out late at night and get back into the house when they choose.

5736. They are not really homeless persons?—I should say a very large percentage of them are not homeless persons. That is my impression all the way through; a very large percentage are young fellows about twenty years of age, really over-grown boys who have simply got into the bad habit of stopping out; they get in company with other young fellows of the same age and decide to go and have some soup.

5737. They are not out in order to get the soup?—It is part of the inducement to stop out that they can get some supper. If they went home they might have to go to bed, and next day they would have to earn some money before they got some food if their mother would not give it to them. They go home to sleep. My impression is that a very large percentage of these men round the soup depôts have homes.

5738. Now, as to the persons sleeping on staircases, that was an actual count of people, I think?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) Yes, that was an actual count.

5739. These women lie on the landings in heaps, three or four of them?—They do.

5740. They do that in certain parts of London?—Yes, particularly in certain parts of the East End.

5741. The staircases of these tenement houses are in a very dirty condition?—Yes.

5742. Do the police ever prosecute for sleeping out in London?—I do not know. I do not recall any case of that being reported in the newspapers; I am not able to speak with any certainty upon that question.

5743. These people who sleep out, do they go for free food too?—Oh, yes. (Mr. Jury.) I think the women undoubtedly are homeless, and have not the money for their bed; I do not think a woman would be likely to sleep out if she had the money to go to a lodging-house.

5744. She does not like sleeping out?—No.

5745. Why do they not go to the casual wards?—For the same reason as the men; they probably would be compelled to wash and do something in return for what they get; there is a certain tie attached to it. They can lie on the staircase and go off in the morning on their usual rounds, picking up their food where they can get it.

5746. What age are these women as a rule?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) It is difficult to tell; I have talked to a number of them and I think they were mostly women between thirty and forty years of age. (Mr. Jury.) There are a good many old women and middle aged women, and here and there a young girl.

5747. (Mr. Simpson.) Not many young girls?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) No, I think these women are the wreckage of life; they have failed somewhere; and at thirty or forty years of age they find themselves in this position.

5748. (Chairman.) Are the shelters used to any great extent by prostitutes?—(Mr. Jury.) I think not, sir.

5749. Some of the common lodging-houses are, are they not?—Yes, very largely. There is only one shelter for women and these are mostly old charwomen and street sellers; here and there a young girl, but the majority of them are old women known to the keepers.

5750. Have you any suggestion as to what should be done with these sleepers out?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) My personal view would be that they should be put among the class that it was the business of the State to take care of.

5751. If they sleep out the existing law would do that, at all events for a short time?—Perhaps; but if they are not able to maintain themselves better than that I should place them in an institution.

5752. As regards the people who walk about at night, would your remedy be to prevent the giving of free food?—I should think that would have an effect, but I do not at once see how it would be possible to prohibit the giving of food.

5753. It would be very difficult to prevent the giving of food?—It would be very difficult to prevent any person giving anything away.

5754. You know that it is occasionally attempted in other countries than ours; people are fined for giving money to beggars?—I do not know to what extent that is carried out.

5755. Is there any restriction on the sale of food in London at night?—(Mr. Jury.) It is my impression that a refreshment place has to be shut up at a certain time; therefore I feel that if the philanthropic people who give food away were governed by the laws which govern tradespeople there would be no harm done.

5756. (Captain Showers.) In Spitalfields, I think, we saw one shop selling food to a lot of people about two o'clock in the morning?—That was a general shop, not a refreshment house.

5757. (Chairman.) Now, are you of opinion that the present condition of things as regards sleeping out and so on is satisfactory in London?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) No, I think it is very unsatisfactory.

5758. Do you think that steps ought to be taken either by better administration or by legislation to improve it?—I do.

5759. And your suggestion is that this lowest class of people who are unable to take care of themselves should be segregated?—I think so. I think if there were a proper administration for dealing with them that class would become much smaller; people would be deterred from sinking to it.

5760. You think it would diminish?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) Mr. Jury has had considerable experience of these people, and he thinks it would absolutely disappear.

5761. Well, at all events new recruits to that hopeless body would be rare?—(Mr. Jury.) Yes, sir.

5762. I suppose you would have to deal with the old ones, would you not?—No sir, I think the old ones would take care of themselves.

5763. Do you think they would take to honest industry?—Yes, they require only very small efforts on their part to enable them to live.

5764. As regards the numbers, you would have, roughly speaking, 2,400 to deal with?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) I think less than that actually, because if you remember in the beginning of this year there was a good deal of advertisement of food being given away, and in all probability people were in some degree attracted to London by it.

5765. You could easily make that number very much larger?—You could easily make it larger.

5766. By advertising charity, or what they call charity?—No doubt.

5767. (Captain Showers.) The food is not given away after a certain date, I think?—(Mr. Jury.) It is going on now, sir.

5768. I understood it was going to stop the night after our visit?—It is going on still; at Wych Street over 1,200 received food on that night.

5769. (Chairman.) And how many at the Commercial Road dépôt?—Less than 300.

5770. That is not a very formidable number in proportion to the total population of London?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) Oh, no, I think the numbers are sufficiently small to make it quite practicable to deal with the question.

5771. You would add the persons who are in the vagrant wards, that is about 1,100 on the 17th February?—Yes; it is not a matter of very great magnitude for a city the size of London.

5772. (Mr. Simpson.) Am I right in understanding that the shelters, the philanthropic lodging-houses, are mostly full at night?—Yes.

5773. And that the common lodging-houses that are run for gain have a good number of vacancies?—Yes.

5774. And many casual wards have vacancies at night, I believe?—Yes.

5775. Is it not the case that the London county council have started a municipal lodging-house?—Yes, they have two; one in Parker Street, Drury Lane, and another which has not yet been registered as a common lodging-house, but which is a place of the Rowton House type, so far as design of building is concerned, at Deptford.

5776. Those are a third type; they are not charitable institutions, nor yet are they run for a profit. What do they charge for the night?—6d. at Parker Street and at Carrington House. Sir Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury.

5777. And do they have vacancies there or are they usually full up?—Parker Street is practically always full. You see it is in a central part of London; it is close to the Strand, where accommodation of that class is a good deal used by the Covent Garden porters and people like that, but Carrington House at Deptford is part of a housing scheme, and was considered in relation to the number of people to be re-housed; that is not filled. 16 May 1905.

5778. That has really accommodation for working men in good employ, has it not?—The price charged is the same—6d. a night, but Carrington House was built later, and in the character of its accommodation is similar to the Rowton Houses.

5779. In Parker Street there are a good number of men who are regular occupants of beds there and who are not casual?—Yes, the majority are what are known as regulars.

5780. And if I remember right, it is a very good sort of accommodation for working men?—Oh, yes, it is very good.

5781. And yet the charge is only 6d. a night, and they supply food at almost cost price, do they not?—The sale of food is entrusted to the superintendent, who charges low rates but makes some profit out of it; he is bound by a tariff approved by the council.

5782. How many beds are there in those two houses?—380 in Parker Street, and about 800 at Deptford. They are both for men.

5783. Do you suppose the occupants are all single men, or are they men with families elsewhere?—(Mr. Jury.) There is no doubt, sir, that many of them are married men who are away from their families for some cause or another.

5784. It appears from your statement that though, of late years, shelters have been included as common lodging-houses, yet on the whole since 1894 there has been a steady decline in the total number of beds. Not only has the number of houses gone down, but also the amount of accommodation they provide?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) Yes; but the figures do not vary very much. There has, no doubt, been a very much larger amount of accommodation actually provided for persons who wished to live in association, such as in Rowton Houses, and who would otherwise have been in common lodging-houses.

5785. (Chairman.) Do you inspect Rowton Houses?—No, we do not. The council took a case before a magistrate about four years ago. The magistrate held that the house was not a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Act.

5786. (Mr. Simpson.) What was the distinction; was it that they do not have a kitchen in common?—No, they have a kitchen in common.

5787. Is it that they have cubicles?—They have cubicles throughout, but cubicles have not been deemed by previous decisions to make a house other than a common lodging-house. I think the main point is that the magistrate thought that the class of lodger occupying it was socially of a different type. (Mr. Jury.) I think a great point to the magistrate was the fact that it was a hotel. He said, what impressed him most—I was in the court—was the fact that a man, although he lodged there, could go in and order his dinner, and could take in a friend to have his dinner with him.

5788. (Dr. Downes.) A man could take a friend into a common lodging-house, could he not?—If he chose; but that was the remark the magistrate made in regard to it.

5789. Was that case taken to the High Court, or was the decision merely magisterial?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) It was magisterial only, but the council decided that they would not proceed further.

5790. (Mr. Simpson.) I suppose if it were held that Rowton Houses were common lodging-houses it is rather hard to see why you should not go on further and further until you would get to the Carlton Hotel?—(Mr. Jury.) As a matter of fact we had a decision afterwards which entirely covers the Rowton Houses; that was in the case of the Victoria Homes.

Sir Shirley E. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury. 5791. (Chairman.) Are the Victoria Homes common lodging-houses?—Yes, sir. The case referred to was that of Logsdon v. Trotter; they built a new house which was entirely in cubicles and the council decided to test it; Mr. Justice Channell, I think it was, decided that it was a common lodging-house.

5792. That case went to appeal?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) Yes.

5793. (Mr. Simpson.) There is no clear and definite line between a common lodging-house and a cheap hotel really?—I think there is: the house is used more in common in a common lodging-house than it is in a hotel; even where cubicles are provided, all the people are practically in one atmosphere, and for the purpose of dealing with infectious disease it is desirable that houses where people live in this way should be under more inspection than persons who live in a hotel need be.

5794. There is more living in common, to put it shortly?—Yes.

5795. (Chairman.) Do you know the total number of inmates of the Rowton Houses?—Yes, I wrote to the secretary of the Rowton Houses and he was good enough to supply me with the figures. The number was 3,589.

5796. How many Rowton Houses are there?—Five. (Mr. Jury.) There is one at Hammersmith, one at Vauxhall, one at Newington, one at King's Cross and one at Fieldgate Street, Whitechapel, and there is a very large one for about 1,200 beds almost completed at Camden Town.

5797. So that the number of lodgers in one of these houses goes as high as 1,200?—That last one is not finished yet.

5798. Which is the smallest Rowton House?—Vauxhall, with about 500 beds.

5799. Anyway, it is a large lodging-house?—Oh, yes.

5800. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you know of any explanation, except the provision of accommodation like that in Rowton Houses, for the fact that the accommodation provided in common lodging-houses has been inclined to go down?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) I think it is in the main the fact that accommodation of that sort has been provided in Rowton Houses; it is the only explanation I can definitely point to. Of course, common lodging-houses are under much stricter supervision than they used to be, and it may be that people hesitate to embark in the business as willingly as they might have done years ago. Again, the keepers have in association with their houses, or rather in the neighbourhood furnished rooms which are usually let at a shilling a night and which, although not common lodging-houses, do accommodate people of much the same class as those who go to common lodging-houses.

5801. (Mr. Davy.) Is there any restriction on these?—They come under the regulations of the borough councils for houses let in lodgings, but for one or other reason these regulations are not enforced in the same way as the regulations with respect to common lodging-houses are enforced, and I know it is Mr. Jury's experience that the number of private rooms kept by the keepers of common lodging-houses has very largely increased. (Mr. Jury.) I know that women go from the common lodging-houses to these rooms, taking a room and sharing it between them.

5802. It is not so expensive to pay 1s. for a room for four of them?—It is much cheaper and they are not kept under observation like they are in common lodging-houses.

5803. (Captain Showers.) With regard to those tenements, have you no power of making the people provide proper sanitary arrangements?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) They are under the supervision of the borough councils who have power under their bye-laws for this purpose.

5804. (Sir William Chance.) You were saying, I think, that there has been a great improvement in lodging-houses since you first became acquainted with them?—Yes, a very considerable improvement.

5805. And you think that in time the requirements of the London county council will be carried out?—I think so; in fact they have been carried out; practically the common lodging-houses are now in very good order. The shelters are going to be brought into line with regard to the bedding accommodation shortly, and after that I do not know that there will be anything special to criticise.

5806. And eventually you will have the entire separation of the sexes?—They are in effect separated now. Very few houses remain in which there are single men or single women with married couples; in fact there are only three houses of that sort now.

5807. And I think I understood you to say that the class which frequents the casual wards is entirely different from the class that frequents the common lodging-houses?—I ought to say that I have no actual knowledge of the people who frequent the casual wards, but from what I have heard they are of a different class.

5808. They are regular customers of the casual wards?—Yes, I gather they are a different class.

5809. We heard from the superintendent visiting officer of the casual wards that they were a well-known class in London?—That would agree with such information as I have.

5810. You would like all the shelters raised up to the standard at least of the common lodging-houses?—Yes. I see no reason for maintaining any lower standard than is provided in a good common lodging-house where the charge is 4d. a bed.

5811. Those people who do not make use of the common lodging-houses would be segregated?—It appears to me that people who are unable to provide themselves with the means of life that will enable them to live in the common lodging-house, for which there is no larger charge than 4d., want looking after.

5812. Is it your idea that the police should take action in the matter?—I have not thought what the machinery should be for dealing with them, but the common lodging-house provides, in my opinion, the lowest standard that ought to be accepted.

5813. (Mr. Simpson.) Is it not a fact that many people living in tenement houses and in their own homes have a very much lower standard than people even in shelters; does not evidence constantly come before the courts that people live in a state of almost indescribable filth?—I think there are people living in tenement houses where the physical conditions are far worse than those of shelters; there is great poverty and great dirt. But one is hoping that as the regulations for houses let in lodgings are more strictly enforced so far as cleanliness and the maintenance of the house in a wholesome condition is concerned, that those places will be very largely improved; in fact they are much better than they were. I can speak now of a great many years' experience of the condition of tenement houses. I was familiar with St. Giles in great detail in the cholera epidemic of 1866, and I have been more or less engaged in this sort of work up to the present time, and I am bound to say that the conditions which exist now are very far superior to those that existed in 1866.

5814. But one hears of cases other than those of houses let in lodgings where the conditions are appalling as regards the low standard not only of comfort but of decency. I suppose you would say that those are exceptional cases in private houses, and that it is quite impossible that they should be under the same control as a common lodging-house?—I think it is quite impossible that they should be as strictly regulated as a common lodging-house. In a common lodging-house, the keeper is responsible for the cleanliness of the house throughout. In a tenement house each tenant is responsible for the cleanliness of his own room, and that alone makes a difference which would render it very difficult to enforce the same standard in the two cases. But of course by frequent inspection of tenement houses many have been raised to a very much better condition than they were.

5815. Only a very small proportion of private houses are really inspected by Government or the municipal authority?—Yes, I have a return from which I could tell you how many houses are under inspection at the present time. The inspection, however, of these houses is a very different one from the inspection of common lodging-houses. Common lodging-houses are inspected once, and many of them twice a week, and the tenement houses are inspected, in some districts only occasionally, so that the conditions are very different in that respect. I think you had in your mind, the question of the separation of the sexes. That of course can be strictly enforced in common lodging-houses, but although it is competent to a sanitary authority to make bye-laws for the separation of the sexes in tenement houses, yet it has not been deemed in any large degree practicable to enforce it. It has been thought that people cannot afford to take the rooms that are required for a family that is growing up, and in which it is desirable to separate the children, the boys from the girls.

5816. What I meant to suggest was that, suppose you raised the standard of living in common lodging-houses, it would not necessarily mean that the standard of living of the London lower class population would be materially improved?—No.

5817. The people living in common lodging-houses in London are only a small proportion: if you raised the standard for them, it would not be raising the standard of living for that class generally?—No, we should only be touching the 25,000 or 30,000 people who happen to be living in common lodging-houses.

5818. (Sir William Chance.) The conclusion that you draw from your two censuses in January, 1904, and February, 1905, is, I suppose, that there was plenty of vacant accommodation in the casual wards, common lodging-houses or shelters for those people who were sleeping in the streets on staircases, if they had chosen to take advantage of it?—Yes, plenty of accommodation.

5819. Both these censuses were taken in the winter; has any similar census been taken in the summer?—No; those are the only occasions on which such a census has been taken.

5820. Is it at all known whether the population in common lodging-houses and shelters is less in the summer than it is in the winter?—Yes, the common lodging-house population is a good deal diminished in the summer, in the fruit season and the hop-picking season.

5821. Do you think the number of people sleeping out in the summer would be larger than in the winter?—I think this would be found to be the case. Of course, there is a temptation to people to sleep out in the open in the summer.

5822. In the warm months?—Yes; and on the other hand there is an opportunity to go and live in the country, to do a little fruit-picking and work of that sort, and that would tend to reduce the number sleeping out in London.

5823. Would it not be useful if the county council were to take a summer census of these people, say in June or July?—Yes, I think it would. (Mr. Jury.) You will find a larger number of people sleeping out in July, and many of the men will sleep out from choice then; they will not mind spending their last penny, and have not the same incentive to reserve sufficient money for a bed as they have in the winter; quite numbers of them will sleep out in their favourite place, a street refuge or anywhere like that.

5824. The importance of this comes in the question of segregation. You would have to deal in the summer with a much larger number of people than you would in the winter?—I think you would cure them of the bad habit of sleeping out, in a very short time; I do not think you would notice it in the summer, after the first trial.

5825. You think it would stop the increased sleeping out in the summer?—I do, indeed.

5826. I suppose you regard it as a very satisfactory thing that there are comparatively so few women sleeping out?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) Yes, it is a small proportion. Of course, the number of people sleeping out probably stands in some relation to the way in which they generally live; men go into a common lodging-house much more than women do.

5827. That is very clear from these statistics?—Two or three women will club together and live in one room to a much greater extent than the men will.

5828. (Dr. Downes.) I suppose the weather makes some difference in the numbers who sleep out on a given night?—The weather would make a difference. We have only on two occasions, however, actually tried to count the people.

5829. Do you know what the weather was, on those occasions?—Yes, it was fine. There was a shower in the early morning on the first occasion, but they were both fine nights substantially, so that the numbers obtained may be looked upon as being maximum numbers for that time of year.

5830. Does a wet night increase the number of people in the shelters and common lodging-houses?—(Mr. Jury.) Yes, sir; it does.

5831. Your statement shows that the tendency has been for the shelters and common lodging-houses to increase in size: have you any views as to the advantage, or otherwise, of this?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) I do not think that we have any experience that would enable one to say that the increased size of common lodging-houses is a disadvantage, as far as the administration is concerned. Of course, if I were going to decide the question myself, I would rather have smaller houses, so as to prevent the aggregation of these people in large numbers.

5832. I do not know whether you have arrived at any view as to what would be the best size for a shelter or a common lodging-house?—The larger common lodging-houses are found to be a more economical way of providing for these people. The reason, I believe, why the Rowton Houses have so increased in size is that they find that the cost of management has to be distributed over 800 beds, or some number of that sort, to make it profitable.

5833. The larger they are, then, the more cheaply they can be run?—Yes.

5834. Against that, they have to consider questions of health?—Of course, when we have had smallpox in the large common lodging-houses we have had a great deal of difficulty. (Mr. Jury.) They are more difficult to manage in that respect; the smaller houses are, I think, much better in every respect. But it costs as much to run a house of about 40 beds, as regards management, cooking and that sort of thing, as it does to run a house of 100 beds. That is the reason why they try to get as many beds as they possibly can.

5835. You draw a distinction between a shelter and a common lodging-house; a shelter, probably, is run on a philanthropic basis and a common lodging-house on a commercial basis?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) The distinction no doubt is due to the fact that the common lodging-house is provided in the ordinary way of business, and the shelters by philanthropic agencies; both, however, are common lodging-houses within the meaning of the Act.

5836. There appears to be some need for a definition in these matters, but I think you have mentioned in the case of Rowton Houses that the definition is not quite settled?—Well, Rowton Houses are not deemed at the present time to be within the common lodging-house law.

5837. It has been suggested that there is a difficulty in drawing the line between those places and hotels; but is it not the fact that in Rowton Houses and other places of the same kind there are facilities provided for the inmates to do their own cooking and their own washing?—Yes.

5838. And many of them do their own cooking and their own washing?—Yes, many of them do.

5839. Whereas in a hotel, in the ordinary sense of the word, that is done for them?—Yes.

5840. Have you any return showing the number of those places which are run on a philanthropic basis pure and simple, as against the purely commercial one?—That would be difficult to state. There are some that are absolutely free, such as the Medland Hall and Providence Row. Then there are the Salvation Army and the Church Army institutions which are philanthropic in their intention. As to what the financial position is, I do not know.

5841. Would it not be better to say subsidised by philanthropic people?—Probably. The only places of the Church Army which are under regulation by the council are those which are now recognised as common lodging-houses.

5842. I only wanted a rough idea of the number of those places with their accommodation, that were really wholly provided by philanthropic people, or are subsidised; that do not pay their own way independently of philanthropy?—We have no knowledge of whether they pay their way or not.

Sir Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury.

16 May 1905.

Sir Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury.
16 May 1905.

5843. (Chairman.) Well, what are the bodies that run these philanthropic institutions?—There is the Salvation Army with their institutions, and there is the Church Army. The Church Army places are 6d. lodging-houses, and the accommodation provided is the same as you would get in an ordinary 6d. common lodging-house. They are generally run together with their ordinary labour homes which are not licensed. There is also Medland Hall and the Victoria Homes, which are run by a committee. At the latter, the charges are 4d. and 6d. (Sir Shirley Murphy.) I should think it would come to about 6,000 beds.

5844. There are only two absolutely free shelters in London?—(Mr. Jury.) There are more than two. Dr. Barnardo has two free shelters for women and children; then there is Medland Hall shelter, and Baggallay Street, a very small place, which a number of West End gentlemen run, and Providence Row with accommodation for 140 men and 180 women: those are absolutely free.

5845. Is Providence Row Miss Berkley's place?—No, it is a memorial to Father Gilbert, an East End Roman Catholic priest.

5846. (Dr. Downes.) Do you have any registration of the numbers of the people night by night in these houses?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) No, only now and again, when we ask for it.

5847. Have you any power to require a register of the numbers sleeping?—The council has power to require the keeper of a common lodging-house to keep a register of persons, but it has never been put in force in that way. Four or five times we have asked the keepers to make a note of the number of lodgers and that has been done. In that way we have got information on particular days. We took the number on the occasion of the Jubilee of the late Queen; that was in 1897. The number was taken also in 1902, and again in 1903, 1904 and 1905.

5848. Are you satisfied with your powers in regard to common lodging-houses in London, or are there any suggestions you have to make?—No, I know of no particular want at the present time.

5849. Are you acquainted with the common lodging-house system outside London?—I have inspected them in several towns that I have been into at different times.

5850. Do you possess more powers in London than they do outside?—No, the powers of regulation are practically the same.

5851. If they have as much power as you have, it would be open to any local authority to improve the lodging-houses in their district?—There is no doubt they can do much under the existing laws, but we do go beyond them in one respect; the London county council has power to license annually common lodging-houses, and I think only one or two towns have got that power.

5852. That is a very important power?—The London county council have found it a very useful one. One of the northern towns has it; and they have it in Scotland.

5853. Is that a power which you think might be desirably extended to other towns besides London?—It gives a larger power of control than can exist with the system of registration.

5854. (Chairman.) No one can keep a common lodging-house, unless you license him?—That is so. And the licence is not only to the house, and its fitness generally, but to the person who gets it.

5855. Now in practice, could you stop Medland Hall?—Medland Hall is subject to the same law as other common lodging-houses, and is licensed by the council.

5856. They could refuse to license?—They could refuse to license any house structurally unfit to be a common lodging-house, and any keeper whose character was not satisfactory.

5857. That is another question; but in case one of these shelters was conducted so as to be an economic mischief, we will say, the council would have power to stop it?—I should think not on that ground alone.

5858. (Dr. Downes.) Have you or Mr. Jury formed an opinion as to where these people are recruited from who frequent the common lodging-houses and shelters?—(Mr. Jury.) I think it is a gradual process of coming down, perhaps losing a situation, or through drink. My own feeling about the matter is that the dosser is almost a stationary quantity in London; I may say that they die off just about as rapidly as they come on.

5859. What is the rate of mortality in those places?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) I presented the mortality rates for the year 1902 to the Physical Deterioration Committee and I can furnish the particulars for the years 1903 and 1904 (see Appendix IX). The mortality is very high; they die very largely of phthisis and lung diseases.

5860. Those later figures we should be glad to have. Well, then, if it is more or less a stationary number, where do the people come from who fill up the places of those who die?—(Mr. Jury.) A man takes to drink, loses one situation and gets one a little bit below it until he comes down to be a dosser; or a man may be lazy and come down to the doss house in that way. We get a great many old soldiers; when they come back from India they cannot find any regular work and they take to the common lodging-houses and finally become regular dossers.

5861. Are they mostly new-comers to London?—No, I do not think so, sir. During the winters that the soup has been given away there is not the slightest doubt we have had a very large influx from the provinces, and I think that they have come here attracted by this sort of thing. I remember in the time when the King's tent, belonging to the Church Army, was in full working order, I asked a question as to whether they were not countrymen. They said no, they were mostly Londoners. I went through them very carefully and asked each man. I found that 30 out of 100 had recently come to London, within say a month or six weeks; and I am sure some of the answers of the others were not given truthfully. I could detect that they were countrymen by their complexion and their brogue, and I believe they thought it was some particular enquiry about themselves that I was making and not a general enquiry.

5862. Is it your experience that on particular occasions such as that, or on particular announcements of charity, people are attracted from the country up to London?—That is my firm opinion. We never seemed to have so many of these night walkers before the soup-giving commenced.

5863. The distribution of soup has increased the trouble?—Yes, and I think the shelters may also have contributed to it.

5864. Do you get many foreigners amongst those people?—Only in particular houses. We have got one or two houses which are patronised by Jews and Germans, and our committee have instructed us to enquire into the low class German restaurants. I had a case the other day at the Thames police court, about a very low-class German restaurant of which the keeper is now compelled to apply for a licence. In the West End there is a lodging-house which is largely used by Swiss waiters.

5865. With regard to the effect of vermin as a danger to the population, is it not a fact that there is a good deal of increasing evidence as to the conveyance of disease by insect life?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) I think there are a good many possibilities in that direction, such as have been largely discussed in connection with plague.

5866. And I think that some years ago there was a good deal of relapsing fever in London. It has been suggested that relapsing fever is conveyed by bugs?—That is so.

5867. So that there are possibilities in that direction?—Certainly.

5868. (Captain Showers.) I do not know whether the Metropolitan Police have powers of taking into custody anybody sleeping out in London?—I am afraid I do not know in any detail what the police powers are in that matter.

5869. If they have that power, do you consider it would be a wise step to take into custody all the people who are found sleeping out?—I should not allow them to continue to live in that way; I should put a stop to that.

5870. It would rather fill up the cells at the police station, I take it?—I think you would find the numbers would diminish very rapidly if measures were taken for dealing with the matter.

5871. (Chairman.) Now with regard to the cost of living in common lodging-houses: what can you tell us as to the food?—The persons live very cheaply. Of course I am speaking now of the poorer lodgers who are 30 per cent. of the total. They buy tea and bread in very small quantities by ha'p'orths; they buy meat, what are called block ornaments, which are sold at about 2½d a pound.

5872. Block ornaments are the outside pieces?—The outside pieces of the meat that the butcher has exposed on his stall and which are cut off when he wants to exhibit a more attractive surface underneath.

5873. Most of this food is sold to them inside the lodging-house, is it not?—Not most of it; only certain lodging-houses sell food inside; most of this food of which I am speaking is sold outside; where there is a common lodging-house there are people who cater for this class.

5874. Whether the food is sold outside or inside the common lodging-house it is sold for profit?—Oh, yes, undoubtedly.

5875. So that the vendors make a profit at this price?—Yes.

5876. Well now, what do you say a man could live on for a day?—I have set out in my statement the cost of different articles of food which were obtained by enquiries by the council's inspector from particular lodgers, so that those are actual facts as to what particular lodgers paid for articles of food. I find that the breakfast very often consists of tea and bread and salt butter or margarine; the tea costs them a halfpenny; the bread a halfpenny or a penny; the margarine perhaps a halfpenny or a farthing.

5877. What weight of bread would they get for the halfpenny?—To test that we sent some lodgers out to buy different quantities of food and made them bring it back to us so that we could weigh it. A twopenny loaf weighed one pound ten and three-quarter ounces, butter was a penny an ounce, margarine a halfpenny for one and one-eighth of an ounce. Tea is very expensive, a halfpenny worth of tea dust weighed only three-eighths of an ounce.

5878. Would that make two cups of tea?—Oh, yes, a pint. It will make more tea than they want to drink.

5879. (Sir William Chance.) In your statement you refer to a dock labourer whose meals are given on four consecutive days: do you know anything about him?—I know nothing about him except that the inspector questioned him and he supplied the information as to what his food had been.

5880. Do you think he was getting free meals on those days when he only spent 3d. or 4d. on food?—One never knows what these people do; they get a great deal of help from each other; there is no question about that.

5881. You notice on the second day he did not have any breakfast?—Well, he may not have had any money to buy it with.

5882. Then he had a good tuck-in apparently during the rest of the day; it cost him 1s. 4d. the second day?—Yes, he evidently had earned some money and bought his food.

5883. Then he went down to 4d. the next day, then up again on the fourth day to 11d; he seemed to starve himself on alternate days?—I think that is probably the case with a considerable number of persons of that class. (Mr. Jury.) They never save anything, they live from hand to mouth; I mean to say, if a man made 2s. in a day very few of them would have a halfpenny at the end of that day.

5884. (Chairman.) The cost of the food seems incredibly small to people who are not alive to the way in which the poor live?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) Yes; that is so.

5885. At the Salvation Army shelters they pay 2d. for their food; what do they get?—(Mr. Jury.) That is a mug of tea, probably between half a pint and a pint, and a thick piece of bread and margarine or marmalade, or a slice of cake.

5836. 1d. is charged for that?—Yes.

5887. It does not cost 1d., does it?—No, sir.

5888. What mainly concerns us is the general question of the cost of living for these people, and your net conclusion is that the cost of food is very small?—(Sir Shirley Murphy.) The cost of their food is very small.

5889. Now what about their clothing?—Their clothing is purchased in the same way at very low prices. In my statement I have given the prices of clothes which were purchased by a lodger, viz.:—coat, 3d., trousers, 1d., he had not any waistcoat; shirt 4d., and I think he had not paid anything for his boots. I have had sent here for your inspection a man's suit and a set of women's clothing which a lodger purchased for me in Middlesex Street, to show you the kind of clothes that can be bought. (Clothes exhibited.) These are the man's clothes: the coat cost 8d., trousers, 9d., shirt, 3d., waistcoat, 2d., socks, 1d., boots, 3d., cap, 2½d. Boots, which are a relatively expensive item, they reckon to cost from 8d. to 9d. a pair, but if odd boots are bought they come down to 4d. or 5d. for a couple. Then there is woman's clothing: chemise cost from 2d. to 4d., drawers 2d. to 4d., corsets, 2d., two petticoats, 6d. to 8d., stockings (new), 2½d. a pair; odd stockings like odd boots are cheaper, they cost 1d. a pair. A skirt costs 6d., bodice, 3d., coat, 6d., hat, 6½d., boots, 8d. per pair, odd boots, 2½d. for two.

5890. Where were these bought?—These were bought in Middlesex Street, formerly known as Petticoat Lane.

5891. Were they made by foreign workers?—No; these are second hand or third hand articles.

5892. The instructive part of this is that a man can live on a very small amount of ready cash?—Very little indeed.

5893. It facilitates his existence in London outside institutions?—Yes.

5894. (Mr. Simpson.) If you buy a pair of trousers for 1d., you do not expect to get much wear out of them?—You see they probably would be trousers that nobody else but a man of this class would wear at that stage; it is 1d., or nothing almost, but still they cover his legs.

5895. (Chairman.) I suppose a single man or woman in London would very seldom be driven into an institution from sheer want of cash?—No, not people of this class except through sickness; a very small sum provides for these people. Of course I am not suggesting that the money they spend on food is a proper amount or that their food supply is a sufficient and adequate one; they are just keeping body and soul together living in this way.

5896. You think that is not enough for a man who is working?—No, from what I know of the way these people live, there is no doubt some of them are living in a state of semi-starvation.

5897. Still, they get great advantages in the way of cheapness; the only institutions which are, to any extent, eleemosynary are the free lodgings?—Yes, I think that is so.

5898. I mean to say all the others are on a commercial basis?—I think so; of course, in these shelters they only pay small sums for food, but I should think they pay quite enough for what they get.

5899. A profit is made on the food in the shelters — I think a profit must be made.

5900. Does not the extreme cheapness seem to work a social mischief?—Yes, I think that the conditions of life are lower than should be found in a civilized community.

5901. In your statement you refer to smallpox in common lodging-houses; have you had many cases where smallpox has been spread by persons of the tramp class?—During the last outbreak of smallpox, that is to say the outbreak which began in 1901 and extended into 1904, the disease was very largely spread by the inmates of common lodging-houses after it once began to get a foothold in London. It came, I think in the main from abroad; there had been smallpox in Paris and it appeared first in the neighbourhood where there were a great many foreign waiters in connection with restaurants and hotels near Tottenham Court Road. One of the earliest cases was a child who was thought to have chicken pox. From this child the disease spread locally; then it got into the common lodging-houses a little later, and was spread gradually across London by inmates of common lodging-houses moving from one house

Sir Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury.

16 May 1905.

Sir Shirley F. Murphy and Mr. H. A. Jury.

16 May 1905.

to another. It found its way at last to the East End of London—Stepney—and there it spread to a considerable extent among the common lodging-house class. But the point that was certainly noticeable during the epidemic was that the inmates of common lodging-houses did not manifest such susceptibility to smallpox as I expected them to have, and I think it was largely due to the fact that so many of them had had smallpox before or had been vaccinated. They had been to the workhouse or some of them had passed through the Army, and they were really very much better protected against smallpox than the average population in tenement houses.

5902. Do you make any suggestion that would minimise the danger of the spread of smallpox through common lodging-houses?—No. Of course the way to make a population immune to smallpox is to secure its re-vaccination, and I do not know how it would be possible to do that except by a general amendment of the vaccination law.

5903. (Dr. Downes.) I think you told us there is a good deal of phthisis in common lodging-houses?—Yes; the people die largely of phthisis, and I think that is probably accounted for in some degree in this way: a man who gets phthisis is less able to work, and thus descends in the social scale until he reaches the common lodging-house.

5904. Should that not lend special importance to the question of ventilation in those places?—Yes, it is an important question.

5905. In some of the places I saw, the fireproof arrangements rather seemed to interfere with ventilation?—Yes, the question of ventilation must no doubt be gone into very carefully. I have that under observation with full knowledge that some of the houses do want amending with respect to ventilation.

5906. (Sir William Chance.) What is the reason for the very large number of homeless persons who were found in the borough of Westminster on the night of the 17th February, 1905?—The reason was that there was a distribution of free food in that district.

5907. What was the number of people who received food?—There were 827 men and 39 women receiving food at the Salvation Army shelter at Wych Street, and 300 men waiting for work and food at the Church Army tent, Clare Market in the Strand.

5908. There was a very large number of homeless persons found at Stepney the same night; what was the reason for that?—That was for the same reason. That number included 161 men and 60 women receiving food at the Salvation Army shelter, Whitechapel.

5909. And then the total number of homeless persons on that night was 2,181?—Yes, 1,869 men and 312 women.

5910. And of those, 1,682 were homeless in Stepney and Westminster alone?—Yes.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Wednesday, 17th May, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.
Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

The Rev. Canon BARNETT called; and Examined.

Rev. Canon Barnett.

17 May 1905.

5911. (Chairman.) Canon Barnett, you have kindly come here to-day to give evidence especially with regard to children?—Yes, primarily. I am come on behalf of the State Children's Association, but I should like to say something about other classes of vagrants as well.

5912. You have been a guardian for some time, have you not?—Yes, for thirty years.

5913. Where?—In Whitechapel.

5914. What is your opinion with regard to the present condition of vagrancy in Whitechapel?—Vagrants accumulate there because of the temptations of the shelters and the common lodging-houses, and a great number of these go into the workhouse; we count it as one of the great difficulties of poor law work in Whitechapel.

5915. When the children go into the workhouse they cease to be vagrants?—But often they do not stay there.

5916. In what way do you think that the present condition of the law with regard to vagrant children is defective?—I think the guardians are often willing to adopt children when the parents are chargeable to them, but they are not disposed to adopt them when they are manifestly wayfaring. I think the Act should be improved as suggested in the Vagrant Children Bill.

5917. You mean Sir John Gorst's Bill?—Yes. That Bill makes it an offence to keep the children outside the Education Act. Merely to charge a parent with being a vagrant did not seem to be sufficient, and the State Children's Association, who drafted the Bill, were advised that if we made it an offence for a parent to keep his children outside the range of the Education Act it would be something definite with which to charge the parent. The first difficulty is to get the parents before a magistrate, and the next is to get the guardians or someone else to take charge of the children. We meet the second difficulty by requiring that the payment should be made a county and not a parish charge.

5918. If you found children in the company of those who were vagrants with apparently no real desire for work, would you detain those children?—Yes.

5919. And educate them, taking them away from their parents or the persons in whose company they were?—I would say apply the adoption Act; let the guardians adopt them, and give the guardians power also, when they have adopted them, to emigrate them.

5920. Would you have these children dealt with by the guardians or by a magisterial order?—By a magisterial order.

5921. To take children away from their parents is a strong measure and probably it would have to be done by magistrates after due enquiry?—Quite so, and that is arranged for in the Bill.

5922. Are there a large number of children who would come under the description of children of vagrant parents?—From enquiries made by the State Children's Association, it is found that a large number of children pass through the country workhouses. The striking thing is that children are to be found in country workhouses who are not to be found in town workhouses; in towns they go to the shelters. Even in Birmingham, where the lodging-houses refuse to receive children, the number admitted to the casual wards was 1,100; so that where the shelters will not take in children, there is a much larger number found in the casual wards; but in London, where the lodging-houses take children, there are very few found in the casual wards.

5923. Would it be the case that where a man goes to the casual ward the children go to the shelters in London, or to the common lodging-houses in the country?—I think that in London parents and children frequent the shelters, but in the country, where there are no shelters, they are all driven to the casual wards.

5924. The number of vagrant children in proportion to the number of adults is very small indeed?—Of course a great many of these people travel without children, as you know.

5925. What is your experience?—According to my experience in London we do not get a large number of children in the casual wards, but we do find a large number about the streets and in the shelters and in the common lodging-houses.

5926. Those are the children that you suggest the State should adopt and train?—Yes. As a guardian, whenever these shelter children came before the board, I used to exercise all the influence I had to get the guardians to adopt them, and in Whitechapel we did adopt a very large number.

5927. That would not be by magisterial order, but by the action of the guardians?—Yes, but we want a magisterial order to bring more within our net.

5928. You think that there should be additional power over and above the Industrial Schools Act?—Oh, yes. I do not want small children to be sent to industrial schools. I would much prefer that they were adopted, boarded out and emigrated. The Industrial Schools Act is too limited.

5929. Have you had experience of industrial schools?—Yes, as a manager and chairman for many years.

5930. Do you not think they answer remarkably well?—No, not remarkably well. I think too many children are taken away from home at much too early an age. The system does not bring out the possibilities of the children, and very often a boy of seven or nine is sent to an industrial school, and he is kept there until he is sixteen at great expense to the public, without ever getting the "mothering," the fondling and that personal moulding of character which makes children grow up into useful men.

5931. I am glad to say that my experience is the other way?—I have seen a great deal of them; I was chairman of one school at Whitechapel for many years and I have seen something of the schools in Bristol also.

5932. Do you know Feltham schools?—No, my school was the East London industrial school.

5933. Do you not think that very often, if there is a failure with regard to the smaller children, it may be because the female head of the school is not efficient?—I do not imagine that one female can divide herself up among a hundred children.

5934. If she is a thoroughly efficient woman who really overlooks all the smaller children, do you not think she is a very great power?—She may be a great power, but I do not consider that the industrial school system is suitably adapted for a large number of the children who are sent to industrial schools. I am not objecting to industrial schools for certain boys, but greater discrimination is wanted. As a principle, I would never send a child of under 12 or 13 years of age to an industrial school.

5935. I think you have something to say on the subject of shelters; they would be Metropolitan shelters, I suppose?—Yes.

5936. In your district there are some shelters, I think; what have you to say as to their effect?—I think the shelters do encourage the class of vagrants at present, but I do not imagine that they can be closed until something efficient is provided for the vagrant. I should like the casual wards to be very much changed; I should like them to be turned practically into receiving wards in which there should be discrimination exercised, so that certain of the casuals might be referred to remedial agencies, where there might be provision for emigration or for sending them to training farms, and there should certainly be a power for restraint to be applied for three or four years. Until we take these vagrants out of the streets, we shall never deal with the unemployed problem. It is they who confuse the public mind and prey on the casual giver; it is they who make things so bad, and it is they who touch the hearts of the labouring workmen and make them indignant. They must be taken off the streets.

5937. You suggest that that class is encouraged by the present action of the shelters?—I have no doubt about it.

5938. Would you propose any additional supervision of the shelters?—I would like to provide something which would so satisfy the public conscience that shelters would be no longer supported at all.

5939. What would that be?—I think the casual ward should be a receiving ward to which all these vagrants could go and know that they would not be put to a certain kind of prison labour, but that they would be dealt with fairly, and that those who really wished to turn over a new leaf and begin to work would be helped to begin to work, by being sent to a training colony or something of that sort; while others who would not work and who resisted all these influences should be shut up for three or four years. In that case the public mind, which is now so charitable, would stop its charity. Kind people refuse to send a man now to a casual ward because they know what is going to happen. The man is made to hate labour, and he comes out more disinclined to work than ever, and a greater enemy of society than he went in.

5940. Do you not think that any honest man would be glad to do some work to pay off what he has cost the State?—Hardly under the conditions of the casual ward. And these men are not very highly developed honest men; the smoking flax of honesty wants a good deal of development in them.

5941. Do you not think it a fair thing that he should do something for what he receives?—That is exactly what I should like to teach him.

5942. Does not the work in the casual ward teach him that?—No, it makes him hate work. To put a man behind a grating and to say to him that he has to break so many stones and throw them through that grating is to make him feel that work is a hateful thing. I should like to put him under such treatment, for instance, as the Salvation Army give at Hadleigh, where they take the same class of man as we get in the casual ward. I have seen these men looking vindictive and full of enmity against society generally and resisting the work given them in the casual ward, and I have seen the same men down at Hadleigh, under the humane treatment of the Salvation Army, really learning to like their work. The Salvation Army system is teaching them to love work. The system of the casual ward makes them hate it.

5943. The Salvation Army have no means of compelling the men to work at Hadleigh, have they?—No.

5944. Then if a man refuses to work, they have no means of making him work?—No. I should like compulsion applied there, so that the man should not be allowed to leave.

5945. What sort of compulsion would you apply?—I would put him there for three or four years.

5946. You would compel men to stay for three or four years; do you think that that would act; is it not contrary to the spirit of the British people?—I know that it will commend itself to the leading working men, who have said as much to me. Lansbury of Poplar and Crooks have said "Why don't you press on with that? Until we get these fellows taken off our case is spoilt."

5947. Where would you commit the men?—To a labour colony.

5948. Do you think they would stay there?—I should not let them out.

5949. But how would you keep them in?—In the same way as we keep them in prison.

5950. Then you would have to build walls round and have warders, and so on?—I should manage it rather as the reformed prisons are managed. But I would not let them out.

5951. Take a man who is thoroughly determined not to work and who is sent to one of these places for three

*Rev. Canon
Burnett.*

17 May 1905.

*Rev. Canon
Barnett.*

17 May 1905.

years ; how do you propose to retain him?—If necessary by building a wall round and keeping him there.

5952. Then, of course, it becomes a prison?—Yes, in a measure.

5953. Then should it not come under the Prison Commissioners?—Well, of course, there are prisons and prisons ; it would become a prison of the reformatory rather than of the penal sort.

5954. But Reformatories are under the supervision of the Home Office?—Yes.

5955. Our difficulty has been to understand how the advocates of detention in labour colonies would compel a man to work?—I would put him under restraint. I would apply all humane means to make him respond, and if he did not respond he would have to be sent off to prison.

5956. (Mr. Davy.) Have you formed any judgment as to the number of children who would be subject to the provisions of this Bill?—We have tried to discover it, but it is impossible to get the accurate number.

5957. Have you formed any opinion as to the number of children who frequent casual wards?—There again, we can only get these returns.

5958. Do you know what is the number of children in the casual wards on one day all through England?—No, I do not.

5959. It is something under 300. In Birmingham you say 1,182 were in the casual wards in 1904 ; that would be during the whole year, would it not?—Yes ; the number during last year.

5960. That would be an average only of about three a night ; the total number for a year tells us little as to the actual number of vagrant children?—That is so.

5961. With regard to London, can you tell us what shelters take in children?—The Salvation Army take in children, and so do Dr. Barnardo's homes.

5962. Is there more than one Salvation Army shelter which takes in children?—I am speaking only for Whitechapel, where there is one, and Dr. Barnardo takes in children. Of course, the common lodging-houses take in children.

5963. On the 21st June, 1897, in all the shelters and common lodging-houses in London, which provide for over 28,000 people, there were 139 children, and on the 23rd June 1897, there were 105 children?—Does that include furnished lodgings?

5964. No ; that is in shelters and common lodging-houses. And on the 29th January, 1904, there were 87 children and on the 19th February, 1905, there were 34 ; there were fewer in winter than in summer. Do you suppose that all these children who went to these common lodging-houses were proper subjects for treatment under this Bill?—Yes, I should consider they were all in need of protection. I see a great many of them—for instance, only last Tuesday night there were 150 of them in one of the Toynbee Hall rooms,—wild, untaught and ill-fed children. That is in [one little neighbourhood, and they were willing to come in just for a play-hour. Most of us who know them felt that they were children who would grow up to nothing but a wild vagrant life.

5965. They were living with their parents, I suppose?—A sort of parents. Many of them come from Dorset Street, which is full of furnished lodgings at 8d. a night. The children go there more than to common lodging-houses.

5966. It is very essential to get an approximate idea of the number of children to be provided for?—The late school board made an investigation into the shelter children to find out how many children in shelters, common lodging-houses and furnished rooms were not attending school.

5967. Have you any experience of day industrial schools?—Not personally.

5968. What do you actually propose by the Bill you refer to?—We propose to get hold of the children by charging the parents with keeping the children from the possibility of attending school. We make that an offence.

5969. The parent, if convicted, would be liable to get three months' imprisonment, would he not?—Yes.

5970. And the child is to be under the control of the guardians?—And the guardians would have power to emigrate or adopt or board it out, and the charge would be paid out of the county rate.

5971. That is in order that the guardians should not be deterred from adopting children on the ground that the expense would fall on their own union?—That is my experience in Whitechapel. The guardians were largely willing to adopt the children, but they said, "Why should we adopt all these children who are not really chargeable to Whitechapel?"

5972. They did not mind adopting the children in the cases where they were chargeable to their own union?—Very few of these vagrants have a settlement.

5973. There would be a tendency to decline to put the Act in force in cases where a child was obviously not chargeable?—That is what I found. A great many children came within our reach, but they have escaped us because the guardians would not apply the Act.

5974. Therefore you would pay 6s. a week out of the county rates in respect of each of these children?—Yes.

5975. When the parent came out of prison, after serving his three months' imprisonment, would the child remain boarded out?—The parent would probably not know where the child was. In many cases I would emigrate them.

5976. You would absolutely take the child away?—Yes.

5977. Would you not allow any room for repentance at all?—They do allow an opportunity under the adoption Act.

5978. By appeal to the magistrate?—Yes.

5979. That would apply here?—I suppose so.

5980. Suppose a child were emigrated, where would the appeal be then?—There could not be an appeal in that case.

5981. It would apparently be beyond appeal?—Yes, but I would do it.

5982. You would have no scruple in the matter?—I would have no scruple in the matter.

5983. You are aware that a good many Bills have been introduced on these lines?—Yes.

5984. So long ago as 1900 there was one?—Yes.

5985. They vary very little in their provisions?—That is so. This Bill has the support of many people, as well as that of the parliamentary committee of the Association of Poor Law Unions. It has been sent to all boards of guardians, many of whom have agreed to it.

5986. The Bill of 1900 suggested the locking up of the parent and the taking of the child?—I think a parent with the beginning of love for his child will not allow it to be adopted ; they fear it more than is commonly known. It would be a great incentive to making people live a better life.

5987. I suppose you have conversed with tramps?—Yes, many times.

5988. When you have asked a woman whether she was willing to give up her child what has she said generally?—No.

5989. Is that almost invariably the case?—Yes.

5990. Is it the case even with regard to young children, who cannot earn money?—I think they will always say "No."

5991. Whether they mean it or not?—Yes.

5992. When a child reaches the age of fourteen it is a source of income?—And even under that age they are a great source of income.

5993. I suppose you are aware that it has been suggested that the Industrial Schools Act meets that difficulty, if properly applied?—Yes. But I do not think it does or ever will. I think it is monstrously expensive in the first place.

5994. In what way is it expensive?—You put a child in at the age of seven or eight years and you have to pay for that child £20 a year until it reaches the age of sixteen. I know the temptation there is in industrial schools for the managers to keep the children in much too long because they become earners.

5995. But if they became earners it would diminish the expense, would it not?—It does not diminish the expense to the public, and it is not at all good for the boy.

5996. The official returns as to what ultimately becomes of boys from industrial schools are satisfactory, I think?—Yes, official returns often are satisfactory.

5997. The boys turned out from large industrial schools are supposed to do very well, are they not?—Yes, but in my experience they do not do so well as people generally think they do. We, who live in among the degraded, see the other end. We know how many of them drift back into our neighbourhood.

5998. Have you any experience of a large English public school?—I know a great many men who come from public schools.

5999. Did you ever contrast the number of successes from Eton or Harrow with the number of successes from a large industrial school?—There is no common standard, I think.

6000. Men of your age and mine would probably know pretty well who are the successful ones?—Yes, but it is a very different thing with men who have come from industrial schools and come to be casual labourers, beggars, lodging-house livers and so on.

6001. Do they come to be common lodging-house livers?—Many of them do.

6002. That is a view not generally accepted?—I know well men who know most about these things in Whitechapel, and they say that in the common lodging-houses they frequently find boys who have been in industrial schools coming back to the same sort of life they led before. A boy of sixteen probably comes back within reach of his parents.

6003. Have you ever followed that out in detail so as to know what industrial school the boy comes from?—Some of the men living in Toynbee Hall have made enquiries and found out what boys come from particular schools.

6004. A great many people interested in this matter do follow the cases out in detail, both with regard to poor law schools and with regard to industrial schools?—Many boys go into the Army—into the band.

6005. From industrial schools?—Yes.

6006. Would you say that a career in the Army is likely to lead to the common lodging-house?—In the casual wards you will see a good many Army men.

6007. Should you think that they were of the class that come from industrial schools?—I could not say.

6008. A boy going into the Army from an industrial school would have to have some knowledge of a trade?—There again I doubt very much whether boys really learn much of a trade at industrial schools. They learn certain handiwork, to cut sticks and fold paper, but in my experience they do not learn much in the way of a trade that is subsequently helpful to them.

6009. Do they not learn tailoring?—Very inefficiently—not enough to be of much use.

6010. Or shoemaking?—That again very inefficiently.

6011. Would they not learn enough to supplement their earnings in the Army?—I do not know about the Army at all. You asked me about when they came out.

6012. But a good many boys go into the Army from industrial schools?—Yes, so I hear.

6013. It would be quite easy to find out what becomes of them by applying to the colonels?—At the age of thirty or forty, that is when they come down to us in the casual ward?

6014. Do you mean to say that the taint of the industrial school runs through a successful Army career and comes out at the end?—What I wish to say is that the industrial school training does not usually so establish a boy's character as to make him generally capable as a wage earner. It very often leaves him deficient in those qualities which are necessary for making a living.

6015. Of what industrial schools have you had actual experience?—Where I live we had one next door to us, which I used to visit—the Commercial Street industrial school, and I was chairman of the East London industrial school and knew it intimately for many years. I got it removed to Lewisham because the neighbourhood of Whitechapel was very bad for the boys. Now it is quite a flourishing industrial school with about 200 boys.

6016. Is that the school by the South-Eastern Railway?—Yes.

6017. It has no land attached to it?—No. It has a little garden, but it has been overrun since we took the property.

6018. Do you think it is the sort of place at which an industrial school should be put?—No, I would put it in the country.

6019. You are in favour of the reform of London casual wards; what is the method in Whitechapel?—In Whitechapel we have an associated ward; in St. George's in the neighbourhood we have a cellular ward. Our ward is an unreformed one, and the Local Government Board are often urging us to reform it, but when we look at the reformed ward in St. George's the guardians do not feel very much inclined to obey the Local Government Board, and they have been resisting them for some years past.

6020. (Sir William Chance.) The St. George's ward was very costly, was it not?—Yes.

6021. (Mr. Davy.) The theory is that you may not lock up a man in his cell?—In St. George's he is locked up, I think.

6022. Are you sure the door is locked?—So I understand, but I have not seen it done.

6023. You are aware that a London police magistrate says it is illegal to lock a man up in that way?—But they keep him alone in his cell.

6024. The result would seem to be that these very expensive cells are really associated wards all the same?—It may be so.

6025. Do you know anything about common lodging-houses?—We have many in our neighbourhood; they have been greatly improved.

6026. They fulfil a useful function, do they not?—Yes.

6027. And it would be a very great hardship to the labouring class if common lodging-houses were abolished?—Yes. A great deal has been done lately in the way of improving them, especially since they came under county council management; they have greatly improved.

6028. A man can get quite a decent lodging for 4d. or 6d. in many of them?—Quite.

6029. What would be the effect on common lodging-houses, do you think, if the more or less eleemosynary shelters increase in number; do you think the tendency would be for men to leave the decent lodging-house and go to the less decent shelter?—I imagine that people will always go to the common lodging-house if they can afford it, because of the freedom.

6030. Is there more freedom in the common lodging-house than in the shelter?—Yes.

6031. Why?—They are not put under any rules in common lodging-houses other than the rules of ordinary places, but in shelters they may be more or less pressed to attend services or to listen to preaching and teaching.

6032. But do you think the pressure to attend a service would counteract the low price?—It all depends. I think sometimes there would be a balance.

6033. Would there not be a tendency to go to the cheapest place?—I am inclined to think that most men would spend the extra twopence and go to the common lodging-house. They dislike restraint very much.

6034. You do not think the competition of shelters would diminish the number attending the common lodging-houses?—No.

6035. As I understand, you propose to abolish labour in a casual ward?—What I would like would be that the casual ward should be a receiving centre.

6036. To which any one could go?—To which any vagrant could go, and where some discrimination would be exercised. Some of the vagrants being old and infirm, and wretched, might be sent off to the infirmary, others being ne'er-do-wells would be taken before the magistrate and committed to a place of restraint; while others might be referred to a training home where they would have a chance of learning to work. I would give them a chance.

*Rev. Canon
Barnett.*

17 May 1905.

6037. Do you think that scheme would increase the number frequenting casual wards?—I do not think so. I think at the same time it would stop indiscriminate charity, and that is one of the things you will have to stop if you are going to stop vagrancy, but you will not stop it until you satisfy the charitable mind that something human and efficient is going to be done for the vagrants.

6038. Do you think that a man giving a penny to a beggar pays much attention to the rights or wrongs of the matter?—In a very short time public opinion would know or would be made aware by the press that these men who beg in the parks could if they would, get honest labour, and labour which would not be degrading.

6039. Do you think that that knowledge would be sufficient to put an end to the mischievous impulse to give a penny to a beggar?—I hope it would do a great deal. People are more conscious now of the wrong of giving a penny to a beggar than they were, and one would hope for a development of that consciousness.

6040. Do you think they are more conscious of it now?—I think they are more conscious of it than they were twenty years ago.

6041. When you came to classify the people for treatment you would commit some of them for a term, would you not?—Yes.

6042. For what offence would you commit them?—For habitual vagrancy, or as rogues and vagabonds.

6043. Would you think it necessary that a man should have committed some specific act?—No; I would commit him as a rogue and vagabond or as an habitual vagrant.

6044. Then you would send him up for a course of life?—For a course of three years.

6045. But I mean you would commit him because of his character?—Yes.

6046. And not because of a specific offence?—No.

6047. Do you not think that that would require some sort of protection to the individual?—It is an extension of what you do now. In the casual ward you keep a man for four days. I would extend that.

6048. You keep a man in order to prevent the casual ward becoming too attractive?—Yes.

6049. But in this case you would segregate a man for a long period for having a certain character?—Yes.

6050. And not for a specific offence?—Unless you call habitual vagrancy an offence. What is a man committed for now, as a rogue and vagabond?

6051. He breaks a window or he does something two or three times habitually?—I should make it an offence to come three or four times to the ward. It would make it "doing something," if you said that he should be committed if he came twice or three times a year to the receiving centre.

6052. Would you have the receiving centre extended all over England or merely in London?—To all England.

6053. That would render necessary a system of identification, would it not?—Yes. But that, of course is carried on in London to a certain extent now.

6054. And you would extend it to all England?—I should like it to be so extended.

6055. That would presuppose a considerable change in the method of dealing with vagrants altogether?—Yes. It is a very big subject; it would have to be dealt with by a general change.

6056. Who would sentence the man?—A magistrate I suppose.

6057. Would you allow a magistrate in petty sessions to sentence a man to a long term because of his character?—I suppose that is the only way you could do it. I was deliberating whether it could be automatic—say that if a man came so many times within a certain period his term should be extended automatically to one, two or three years, according to the number of times he came to the ward.

6058. Have you any experience as regards the uniformity of London police court sentences?—I know they are not at all uniform.

6059. As to whether magistrates go on any settled principle, or follow any well considered line of action?—My own opinion is that they do not.

6060. You do not think a line of action calculated to carry out the policy of the State is laid down and adhered to?—I am afraid not.

6061. But you would allow a magistrate to sentence such a man?—I think so. I think the magistrates are the only body you can trust in the matter. One could expect that more uniform treatment would follow. Then there is the other suggestion—whether there could be an automatic dealing with them. You say that if a man comes to the casual ward within a certain time he shall be kept an extra day; in the same way, if a man came two or three times in the year and two or three times in another year, he should be kept for an extended period.

6062. (Mr. Simpson.) I understand that your opinion that the industrial school system is not sufficient to deal with the children of these vagrants is based on two grounds, first, the expense, and secondly, that the present schools are not suitably managed to look after vagrant children?—I think that the system, which is a very good system for dealing with incorrigible or unruly boys is not the best system for dealing with little vagrant children.

6063. Now when you talk of boys from industrial schools has not your experience been mostly with people who were at industrial schools ten, fifteen or twenty years ago?—Of course, they are the people that come to us now as vagrants.

6064. Exactly; have you any experience of the fact that there has been a considerable change of late years in the spirit in which industrial schools are run?—Yes, I think there is an improvement, but it still seems to me that the system is not calculated to deal with the ordinary vagrant child.

6065. What is wanted is to build up the child's character?—Yes. But by all sorts of sweet and gentle influences, rather than by the drill and discipline of industrial schools.

6066. We at the Home Office hope and believe that there has been a great deal of that spirit introduced into the administration of industrial schools quite recently; the attempt is made to improve the boys' self-respect and to make them as much as possible like boys in public schools outside. Do you not think that as we have got the industrial schools system more might be done in developing that rather than in setting up some new institution?—I would not set up a new institution; I would board out and emigrate the children. I think children want family surroundings which you get in a boarding-out system. They want "mothering," the interest of playing with animals, the opportunities of being corrected by their parents, and the thousand and one things which go to build up the character of a child.

6067. You would have them boarded out by the guardians?—Yes.

6068. And you think that that would bring about a more humane treatment of them?—I am convinced of it from my own experience.

6069. The casual wards are under the guardians, are they not?—Yes.

6070. Your objection to them is that there is not enough of the humane influence in them?—Yes. But you are referring to grown-ups, and I am speaking of children. These children want the gentle, sweet influences of home around them, but a man, I think, wants another sort of influence about him.

6071. Would you rather agree to this—that you cannot expect from officials the same sort of home influences and so on that you would get from people who are actuated by religious motives, like, say, the Salvation Army?—Yes. To deal with the reformation of men and women, it would be better to put them in these training homes where the management would very often be best in the hands of people like the Salvation Army, and where the State would only exercise a controlling influence and pay a capitation grant.

6072. On the other hand, would you not recognise that at an institution like the industrial school there are far more facilities for giving a boy an industrial training than he would get if boarded out in a country village?—I do not think boys want much industrial training; they want the cultivation of their faculties—the hand and the eye—but I do not think you can give a boy anything like industrial training at the age of fourteen. The probability is that if a boy is brought up in a family, and has his intelligence and affections developed by the thousand and one things which go on in the family, he will be a much more intelligent workman than a boy who has been kept at the bench.

6073. But is it not a good thing for a boy to do some carpentry and to be about the workshops, and about the country where people are working on the land; and that he should be connected with people who are working?—I think that all you can do for a boy under the age of fourteen, whether at school or in a family, is to develop his intelligence and his affections. Over and over again we have had employers come and say, "We do not want your trained boy, we want an intelligent boy." You can get more intelligence out of a boy boarded in the country, where he is taught to exercise his intelligence by contact with normal life and in dealing with animals, than in an industrial school.

6074. I have heard it said by people where children are boarded out that the boys when they first come down enjoy the country thoroughly, but that after a very short time they begin to get tired of it. They are left in the cottage—they do not know what to do with themselves; the woman who looks after them is very kind, but during a great part of the day when she is busy they get into mischief, simply from not having enough to do. What is your view about that?—Our experience as a board of guardians, and my experience individually, has been that no one does quite so well as the boarded-out child, considering the class he comes from and the difficulties he starts with. Dr. Barnardo, who speaks with unique experience, says the same. Dr. Barnardo has broken up some of his institutions and now boards the children out, and he has adopted a plan which meets one of the difficulties you have suggested. He keeps a boy in the country until he is thirteen, and then brings him up to the training school for a year or two before sending him out into the world, so that the boy gets the physique of the country and the influences of home life, and then he comes to London and gets the training. Dr. Barnardo, speaking to me the other day, said: "If I were starting again, I would not start an industrial school of any sort."

6075. You do not like casual wards, and you would introduce something like a receiving centre instead: I do not quite understand what distinction you make between the receiving centre and the wards?—When a man enters the casual ward there is only one uniform method of treatment. Whatever he has done, or whatever he is going to do, he is subjected to exactly the same treatment. In the receiving centre a man would be interviewed by someone, who would find out whether there were any possibilities in the man, and if there were he would send him up to another and a more suitable place; if there seemed to be no future possibilities in him he would get him convicted by the magistrate and kept in a place of restraint.

6076. The receiving centre would cover or would be supplied from a larger area, and be a bigger institution than the present casual ward, would it not?—No, I do not mean that it would necessarily be so large. All I mean is that there should be officials or humane people who would distinguish between the applicants and settle which treatment was best for each individual applicant. Of course, if in a casual ward a man could be quite certain that he would be interviewed and receive treatment according to his character or needs, I should be satisfied.

6077. If a man came in, say, at 10 o'clock at night, and professed only to want to come in for the night, would it not be hard on such a man to keep him two or three nights; would it not be rather hard to say what is best for him?—If that was obviously what he needed, that is what he would have. Some people would only want a night's lodging and they would get it, but there are a very few of that sort.

6078. To the people who only want a night's lodging, you would not give work as at present?—If there were such people as that, I would like the casual ward to do what it was originally designed to do, namely, be a place in which a man could stop a night and pass on. All I want is discrimination rather than the wholesale dealing with people who apply to casual wards.

6079. (Sir William Chance.) Your experience is entirely confined to London, is it not?—Yes, except that I know something of Bristol.

6080. And you have in your evidence been dealing with the poor law vagrant class?—Yes.

6081. You have not touched on the unemployed at all?—No, but I have had a great deal to do with them.

6082. You say that you would rather have the vagrants removed from the casual wards and put into receiving centres where they could be dealt with individually?—Yes.

6083. That would relieve London of only a very small class of these people, would it not?—I should hope it would relieve us of a great many.

6084. We have had it in evidence that on the 17th February, 1905, according to a census which was taken of casual wards and shelters, there were 1,139 vagrants of all classes in the casual wards?—But there are a great many who would come in another day who would come under the law as vagrants or as rogues and vagabonds.

6085. We have also had evidence that the London vagrant is quite a different person from the country vagrant?—But the country vagrant we get also in the casual ward.

6086. We have had evidence that 95 per cent. or more of the vagrants who frequent the London casual wards practically spend all their time in casual wards; they go from one to another?—They form almost a separate class of vagrants; they call themselves the clean class, and they object very much when the shelter person comes in, because he makes them dirty.

6087. We have also had evidence that they do not beg?—No; they form an aristocracy of the vagrants; they are professional beggars, the others are amateurs.

6088. There is a great body of opinion in favour of doing something for the children of vagrants?—Yes.

6089. That has been shown very much of late years, has it not?—Yes.

6090. I understand that you admit that the Bill which your Association is proposing, and also another Bill proposed by another committee, would create a new offence?—Yes.

6091. That is to say, if a man is found wandering about so that his children avoid being brought under the Education Acts he is to be punished?—One of the London magistrates advised the State Children's Association that that was the best way to do it.

6092. Therefore the Bill creates a new offence?—Yes.

6093. I believe the State Children's Association are very strongly against barrack schools of any sort, are they not?—Yes.

6094. And you share that prejudice, I understand?—Yes, I have had a lot of experience both in the schools and with their products.

6095. And you do not want to see children sent to these industrial schools?—I do not want children sent to them. I think industrial schools fulfil a great function, and I wish to see them kept up for their particular object—the disciplining and training of certain boys, but not the kind of disciplining and training that now obtains.

6096. You mean that you want to confine the schools to older children?—Yes. I think that if we had a proper court to consider the children's characters and needs, it would be easy to say that this boy is fit for an industrial school, and that that boy had better be sent home to his parents under a probation officer.

6097. (Dr. Downes.) You speak of the advantages of "mothering" the children. Up to what age would you mother the boys?—Dr. Barnardo's experience is in favour of keeping them in the homes until they are thirteen, and then sending them up for training.

6098. You would admit the advantage of discipline coming in at that age?—Yes. That is what Dr. Barnardo finds, and I quite realise that it is a very good thing.

6099. The "mothering" is by proxy, is it not?—It is not their own mother. But you know how much mothering there is to spare in women's hearts.

6100. With regard to Dr. Barnardo's preference for boarding-out over institutional treatment, are you aware that he is extending his accommodation at Ilford to 2,000?—Yes, he is bound to, but I will tell you why. He has got to raise his money, and he is obliged to appeal to people through their eyes.

Rev. Canon Barnett.

17 May 1905.

Mr. DAVID C. LAMB, called ; and Examined.

Mr. David C.
Lamb.

17 May 1905.

6101. (Chairman.) You are one of the chief officials of the Salvation Army, I believe ?—Yes.

6102. How long have you been an active official in the Salvation Army ?—For over twenty years.

6103. You have kindly come here to give us some information with regard to the present condition of vagrancy, derived from your experience as such official ?—Yes.

6104. Now, with regard to London, does your work lie amongst vagrants ?—Personally, not at the moment, but a few years ago it did.

6105. What is your idea of the proportion of London vagrants who are honest men in search of work ?—The proportion is very difficult to get at. The vagrant—what I should call the legal vagrant—who is in the casual ward, and the vagrant who never comes near the casual ward are very much confused, in my judgment, both in the public mind and in the official mind.

6106. It would be difficult for you to fix any actual percentage ; but I suppose you would say that a very large proportion of the vagrants in London are men who are living an idle life, with a thorough determination not to do work if they can help it ?—The number is not so large. Only last Wednesday I had a special census made of practically every man in the casual wards in London, and I have summarised the results of the inquiry.

6107. How many casuals were there altogether ?—There were 846 men, 206 women, and 38 children ; a total of 1,090.

6108. Those were in casual wards ?—Yes.

6109. There are twenty-eight casual wards, are there not ?—Yes, but we did not get the numbers from St. George's in the East. The guardians there refused us permission.

6110. These people were interviewed by officials of the Salvation Army, I suppose ?—Yes.

6111. And I suppose questions were put to them ?—Yes. The first question was that of age, and I have classified the replies. Under twenty years of age there were 9 men ; over twenty and under thirty years of age there were 86 men and 7 women, equal to about 9·57 per cent. of the whole. Over thirty and under forty years of age, there were 213 men and 37 women, or 24 per cent. of the whole. Over forty and under sixty years of age, there were 367 men and 100 women, equal to about 44·44 per cent. Over sixty years of age, there were 151 men and 59 women. Only 12 refused information with regard to their age. The next question was as to place of birth, and I have divided the replies into provincial towns, the country outside London, London and Greater London—Barnet and Ealing, and so forth being Greater London.

6112. That is Metropolitan Police London, I suppose ?—Yes. I have also taken Scotland, Ireland and foreign. The replies disclosed that there were 274 from provincial towns, 176 from the country, 392 were London born, 99 were from Greater London, 29 from Scotland, 43 from Ireland, and 36 were foreign. 10 refused information as to place of birth. Then, as to trade, the replies showed that there were 185 skilled mechanics, 39 traders, 22 clerks, 17 professional men, 465 general labourers, 35 agricultural labourers and 150 skilled labourers. 109 of the 206 women refused information as to their trade, and 18 of the men refused.

6113. Were you able to make out whether the children were with their parents ?—In most cases they were either with their parents or natural guardians. The next question was as to how long they had been out of work, and I have divided the replies under the headings, one month, over one month and under three months, over three months and under twelve months, and over one year. 100 were reported as having been out of work for less than one month, 165 over one month and under three ; over three and under twelve, 409 ; and over a year, 313. Then we divided them into married and single, with widows and widowers classified separately. There were 120 married, 723 single, and 194 widows and widowers.

The next question was as to causes of destitution, classified under the headings drink, bad trade, accidents, gambling, and other causes. In reply to this question 54 refused information ; 175 were put down to drink ; 501 to bad trade ; 38 to accidents ; 4 to gambling, and 280 to other causes. Then the question was asked how long they had been in London, and the replies are divided under the headings, less than six months, over six and under twelve months, and over one year. 190 had been in London less than six months, 56 for over six months and under twelve months, and 767 for over a year. Then the number of habituals from the general answers was 510. We asked what number of them had hopes of returning to civil life ; 637 had such hopes, 277 had no hopes, and 95 were on the borderland, while 43 refused information. We asked them next if they would be willing to enter a labour colony, where they would have labour such as they could perform, and 789 expressed their willingness to enter such a colony.

6114. (Mr. Davy.) Would that be a labour colony with powers of detention ?—We did not raise that question with them.

6115. (Mr. Simpson.) Are these men already at a labour colony ?—No ; these men were in the London casual wards on Wednesday night last. Then we asked the investigators to express their own opinion as to whether they regarded the people as mentally and physically fit. 866 were regarded as mentally fit, and 740 as physically fit. They had a special instruction if the appearance of a man in respect of his physical unfitness was merely due to lack of food and lack of opportunity, to classify him as physically fit. Then we asked the investigators also—the other questions are simply the men's own statements—to say whether they regarded the men as hopeful, hopeless or doubtful, and they returned 667 as hopeful, 119 as hopeless, and 267 as doubtful.

6116. (Chairman.) Did you say that your returns were from all the casual wards with the exception of St. George's in the East ?—Yes.

6117. Did St. George's refuse facilities to your investigator ?—Yes, the guardians refused permission.

6118. In all other cases the guardians consented ?—Yes ; very cordially.

6119. Were your investigators men who had had experience of these classes ?—Yes.

6120. Were they men who are employed in your shelters and so on ?—Some of them were and others were engaged specially for the work. I divided the whole area into six districts and one of our officials went round to see the men start and then came back and supervised the whole.

6121. All these persons of whom you have spoken were in the inner London casual wards ?—Yes ; in one night last week.

6122. What is your opinion as to the number of men of a similar condition who were in the common lodging-houses and shelters or elsewhere ?—I have made a similar analysis of one of the prisons and the lodging-houses and one workhouse. But I regard the casual wards as being absolutely the lowest.

6123. I mean what number would you say were that night sleeping in the shelters and common lodging-houses and so on ?—I reckon that there were about 1,500 in the streets that night also. I did not take an elaborate census, but judging from the London county council census earlier in the season, and from our own midnight work, I should regard about 1,500 of that type, or probably a little superior, as being on the streets that same night in addition to all who were in workhouses and lodging-houses.

6124. You would adopt the numbers of the London county council census, I suppose ?—I think so. I have made enquiries at different times, taking typical hundreds, and I should say that from 80 to 90 per cent. of the men who were in the streets would welcome any opportunity of prolonged labour that would make them fit for civil life.

6125. From your experience, in what way would you treat these vagrants, in the way of attempting to raise their condition and amend their lives?—Assuming that we had powers of compulsory detention, or what?

6126. Yes; assuming powers of detention, assuming an Act of Parliament existed to enable you to bring men before a tribunal which would be able to commit them to institutions and so on?—Assuming that the institutions were ours; of course, other people might do the same work in a different way; but assuming that it was a Salvation Army institution, then we would follow very much the lines of Hadleigh, with this addition, that as far as a man is concerned, when he got tired and got a little sick, as he would do during the first month, he would feel that he could not get away—he would feel that from the beginning—and we would be able to treat him a little more easily and kindly; we would be able to put a little more into him for the first few weeks, knowing that we should have him with us for some time. At present, we do not know whether it is going to be worth while or not; a man may go away while undergoing the process; but if we had him for certain for twelve months or for two years, we would naturally take a little more trouble than we take to begin with now, and we would be able to regulate his movements in a way that we cannot at present.

6127. You think that the best plan of dealing with the London vagrant would be to take him and put him down on a farm colony in the country and keep him to labour there?—Yes.

6128. Do you think he would accept that remedy, or would you have a difficulty in getting him to begin to work when he had not been working for many years?—There is no difficulty in getting them to begin; it is the continuing that is the difficulty.

6129. You mean that men will come and do a certain amount of work, and then get tired?—They will work for two or three days and then go off. But I have no recollection of having met a man who said deliberately that he would not work. It is my experience all over the country that they will start; they will take a pick and shovel, though they may throw it into the ditch within an hour.

6130. I suppose you would hardly take a man at Hadleigh if he said distinctly that he would not work?—No.

6131. You would feel that it was not much use taking him there?—Well, they all say when you begin that it is work that they want, though you may have your own ideas as to whether they will shirk it, but they will not tell you that.

6132. At Hadleigh, at present, the system is voluntary?—Absolutely.

6133. What, from your knowledge of this class of men, would be your opinion with regard to the establishment of compulsory labour colonies: would you establish these apart from the voluntary labour colonies?—Yes; I would have them not exactly alongside, but in close touch the one with the other.

6134. Would it not probably be better to keep them apart, because the class of men who came voluntarily would not like to feel that they were looked upon as a similar class of men to those who were put under compulsory detention?—That is so. On the other hand, I would give certain men the option of entering the compulsory labour colony; that is to say, I would give him the right of voluntarily entering, but subject to compulsory detention.

6135. When a man is committed to a place to be detained there for a certain specified time, he thereby becomes a prisoner of a sort. Do you think any man would gladly go out of a voluntary institution and become such a prisoner?—Yes.

6136. You mean because he would not dare to trust himself?—Precisely. If you take a man before he is dead beat and while he has intelligence enough to see that he is drowning he will say, "What is the way to be saved?" and he will grasp the rope if the conditions are laid before him, and he submits.

6137. It would be the same as used to happen frequently in regard to inebriates' homes when persons, who dared not trust themselves outside, voluntarily allowed themselves to be committed for a certain term?—Yes.

6138. So that if a man who would not work in a voluntary home knew that on being committed to another home he would be made to work and that it would be better for him, he might voluntarily agree to be committed. You can imagine a man doing that?—Oh, yes.

6139. Now as regards Hadleigh, how many men have you there on an average?—At the present moment we have, roughly, 300 men at work. We have had more during the winter, because of the men from the Central Unemployed Committee and the Daily Telegraph fund.

6140. What is your staff there?—It is divided. You see there are the Salvation Army officials who are doing certain work and there are the foremen, and there are gangers who have been at one time, in many instances, themselves colonists. I intended to submit a return as to this.

6141. Perhaps you will be able to send us a detailed return as to the staff at Hadleigh and the nature of their duties?—Yes, I will do so.

6142. We should also like to have a description of the work on which the men are engaged, and the number of hours per day that they are occupied?—Yes.

6143. The work depends very much on a man's physical ability, I suppose?—Yes.

6144. Do you teach the men trades, if they wish to learn?—The work is mostly agriculture and brickmaking.

6145. I suppose there is not much in the way of agricultural implements: is there any plough work?—Yes. We have a blacksmith's shop, and some do tailoring and boot-making.

6146. Do you teach men such work as shoeing horses?—In special cases, we do.

6147. If a man desired it, you mean?—Yes, if a young fellow particularly wanted it, we would.

6148. Have you a good blacksmith to teach that?—Yes, we have always a good country blacksmith capable of doing all-round work.

6149. And capable of teaching a man?—Oh, yes, we usually have two men, one at work and one in training.

6150. Do you teach them any rough carpentry work?—Yes.

6151. If you contemplate a man's emigrating it is of the greatest possible service to him to learn blacksmithing and carpentry?—Yes.

6152. Do you teach them rough shoemaking?—Yes, and tailoring and so on.

6153. Do you do any rough sack making or linen making?—We have usually an old sailor at work on the beds, and he has perhaps one or two men who are a bit feeble, and very often there is a young fellow whom we may want to finish off and give him an opportunity.

6154. Have you found this teaching successful; have you been able to send out men who are really capable of taking up work as the result of your teaching?—Yes. Only to-day I have had an interesting letter from a young fellow whom we taught cooking; he has written to me to say that his first job is finishing and that he wants to go to Canada. He came from St. George's, Hanover Square, in the first instance, and he was too weak to do bird scaring on the colony. It would be interesting for you to see him and hear from him the process that he went through, and how he came to be in St. George's, Hanover Square, and the way in which he was treated. He was taken before the magistrates and was sentenced to three weeks' hard labour and was told that he would have three months if he came back again. On his discharge we said that we would take him again at Hadleigh.

6155. (Mr. Davy.) What was he charged with?—For refusing to maintain himself. We put him on spade work and we put him on bird scaring, but he could not manage it. Why should he—he had been kept in the workhouse for months!

6156. The guardians prosecuted?—Yes, the guardians prosecuted and Mr. Sheil—I think he was the magistrate—gave him three weeks and told him he would have three months if he came back again. At the end of the three weeks the guardians asked if we would take him back, and we said "Certainly." He looked rather askance at us for the first two or three weeks, because he had said some very nasty things about the place down there and about me personally; that I was anything but a Christian, and all that kind of thing, and he thought that we would "pay

Mr. David Lamb.

17 May 1905

Mr. David C.
Lamb.

17 May 1905.

him out" for it. But when he found that he was having just the same treatment as though he had never said anything, the kindly influences thawed him and he got what we call converted; he came to one of the meetings and came out to the penitent form. The next day was bank holiday and we had a half holiday, and this fellow turned out to be the first in the quarter-mile flat race that we had, although previously he could not do bird scaring. We sent him to Victoria House, taught him rough cooking, and he was there for six months. I then lost sight of him and came across him again casually in another of our institutions where he was cooking. He wanted to get married; he had fallen in love with a young "lidy" as he called it, but as he was only getting five or six shillings a week and all found, he said there was not much prospect, and so he wanted to go to Canada. He had not got the money and the guardians did not feel like helping him out. Then the secretary of the central committee, who had undertaken work at the Garden City, asked if I had a cook and I said: "Here is the very man." They gave him 16s. a week all found, and he writes to me on the 16th of May, "I write these few lines to let you know that I finish up here at the end of the month, and if I do not get anything to do in England I shall go to Canada. I am getting on all right, with plenty to do. One of the committee men said that they were pleased with me and that I gave every satisfaction. I am glad of that for I have been told a long time ago that I was lazy, but that I never was. I only wanted a chance; now I have got it I shall keep it. I thank you for all you have done and I thank God for the health and strength He gives me to earn my living. I never look back on the past, but thanking you again for all your kindness."

6157. How long is it since you took over that man first?—Three years.

6158. (Captain Showers.) How old is he?—About twenty-five.

6159. (Chairman.) That man has a good chance, apparently?—Yes.

6160. Will he go to Canada?—Most likely.

6161. You will be able to assist him?—He will probably have money enough.

6162. But when he gets out there I suppose you will be able to assist him; you have your correspondents out there, have you not?—Quite so; there will be no difficulty in placing him there.

6163. An advantage of your great organisation is that you are able to work with people on the other side of the world?—Yes. The 1,000 that we sent out last month were all placed before the boat touched Quebec.

6164. On this question of emigration, how many persons of the vagrant class have you helped out in the year as emigrants; men who have no occupation and not much chance of getting one?—Not a large percentage.

6165. What would be the actual numbers?—Probably 150 out of about 2,000.

6166. Can you tell how the men get on whom you have sent out; have you fairly good accounts of them?—Yes; on the whole. We have had one or two who came back. Others we will perhaps transfer from one place to another. I am not conscious of any who have absolutely failed and come back here.

6167. Would you say that on the whole the men of the vagrant class whom you have been able to help to emigrate have done well?—Absolutely.

6168. Is there anything you want to add with regard to Hadleigh now?—There are certain passages in our book on Hadleigh, "The Story of a great Endeavour," to which I might refer.

6169. If you please?—On page 13—The man must be able. On this hinge swings the open door. But how define "able-bodied" among starved and destitute applicants? The colony construes the term as willingness. "If a man is willing" it says "we will see he does not want opportunity." Then on page 17—The mark of prison does not debar the seeker after a livelihood from the privileges of the colony. "Any able-bodied man" says the Salvation Army "is welcome to bite and sup, rest and protection." I think a great many who are now in prison might, with advantage, be transferred to labour colonies.

6170. Is the Salvation Army at all in touch with the discharged prisoners' aid societies?—Yes, we have cases from them and from the prisons direct.

6171. (Mr. Davy.) Are you not a society yourselves for that purpose?—I do not think we are registered.

6172. But you do take people recommended by the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, do you not; you would give them a helping hand?—We frequently do. Then on page 22 we say that age should not debar a man, and a case is given of a man of over fifty years of age who comes in and does his bit of work.

6173. That man evidently was a vagrant?—Yes. Then page 24 touches on the question of emigration. Then on page 27 we say, "All colony positions are not filled by Salvation Army officers or salvationists, though naturally these are preferred. A colonist may climb to almost any place of trust or skill. The best man for the job is selected. Qualification, not creed, is the test." Then on page 38 it is pointed out that the aim of the whole surroundings of the colony must be to make men think and to keep their thoughts going in the right direction. On the next page we say "The work is light, but he could eat more. It is strange that the meal which fully satisfied him the first day does not do so now. Also he feels stronger and brisker and wishes he could earn a shilling or two. By dint of slogging at himself and now and then growling to the officer he gets heartened up." I have seen men really grow three or four inches in as many weeks simply by keeping steadily at work.

6174. (Sir William Chance.) In height?—Yes.

6175. Of what age are these men?—I mean they straighten out.

6176. (Chairman.) You mean that they make the most of their height?—Yes. Then on page 44, "He has saved 1s. from his tokens . . . at the stores he buys a collar, lounges down to the barber's, has a penny shave, and buys a paper. . . . During the afternoon he mends his clothes." He may have an allotment, and we will find him with manure and seed on the understanding that it is a first charge on the produce, and he works away at that. We will buy the produce from him, he may sell it where he likes, and provide himself with clothes and boots when he leaves. Then there is page 48. We do not follow a man when he leaves, unless he desires to be watched, although we frequently hear from them that they are doing all right. Then page 49 shows what the colony does for the world. "The colony takes in those for whom the world has no place or work." These are the very people who are in casual wards and on the streets.

6177. Do you classify your men at all, or do you put them all on the same level?—Classification is very largely in the hands of the governor. For instance, a man might be in a superior dining-room and in a lower grade dormitory, or it might be the reverse, according to the man's particular circumstances. He may be grouped with others in a dormitory.

6178. You may have men who have been convicted: would they in any way be put apart from the others?—No, not on account of the conviction. For instance, assuming that we had two men, both of whom had been convicted, one a clerk and the other a labourer, we would not put them in the same dormitory; we would say that there was no need to degrade a man further than he had been degraded.

6179. I suppose that if a man had been convicted of certain crimes you would refuse to take him in?—Perhaps, but that would be very exceptional.

6180. You would think that he might do harm?—It would be a very extreme case in which we would not have him; it would depend on his character and the report of the prison authorities upon the man. I would base whether the colony should be compulsory or voluntary very largely on what is set out on page 49. It would be for the criminal, the pauper, the deserving but unfortunate, the reckless and hopeless and the lazy. "It relieves the prisons, the poor law guardians and ratepayers, the Church and the nation at large, of a great and terrible problem and strain. The colony helps the coming generation. Every man re-united to wife and family establishes a home and passes on to his children the lessons he has learned—warnings against drink, extravagance, dissipation, falsehood and sin in all its myriad shapes. The colony is a modern city of refuge or cave of Adullam whither men in distress can flee."

6181. How long has Hadleigh been in existence?—About fourteen years.

6182. Now, I will ask you one or two questions about your London work. How many shelters or refuges have you in London?—I am not prepared with that information at the moment, but I will let you have a statement showing that.

6183. We should like also to know the average number who are relieved in these institutions?—The statement shall show the accommodation and the number at work.

6184. Thank you. A man who goes into your shelters pays so much a night?—Yes, they are graded. It varies from 2d. for bed, and 4d., which includes supper, bed and breakfast, to 6d.

6185. From 2d. to 6d.?—Yes.

6186. Could you give us in the statement you are going to prepare the average number using each shelter?—I will give a full statement on that point.

6187. Now with regard to any alteration of the present law in relation to vagrants, are you in favour of short sentences for vagrancy?—No.

6188. Do you think that in the case of an habitual vagrant a sentence of anything from four to seven days has the slightest effect as a deterrent?—It is useless. Perhaps you did not know that this Bill, promoted to amend the Vagrancy Law, was prepared by us. (Bill handed in—see Appendix XXVII.)

6189. That was last year?—Yes. That Bill was prepared to embody the proposals of the Salvation Army set forth in the pamphlet issued by General Booth, "The Vagrant and the Unemployable." (See Appendix XXIV.) The whole idea of it is to give power of detention. From one to three years could be secured for the men referred to there. We regard that Bill as a minimum to meet the requirements as the result of our experience. It cannot be questioned that the method of dealing with vagrants, as laid down by the Act of 1824, has failed. The Act is obsolete. The population of the country has obviously increased during eighty-one years, and the conditions of labour and social conditions generally have altered fundamentally. The Act of 1824 simply enables idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds and incorrigible folk to be dealt with by short terms of imprisonment, designed to punish not to reclaim. But the improved prison conditions of to-day make imprisonment no deterrent; indeed, in many cases prison is preferred to the casual ward. It is scarcely necessary for me to emphasise the importance of the great change that has come over the country during those eighty-one years. If the men nowadays could get back to the prison conditions that prevailed eighty-one years ago it might have—I do not say it would have—a deterrent effect, but the improved conditions of to-day have fundamentally altered the whole thing.

6190. The short sentence is also a very costly thing for the ratepayer or taxpayer in proportion to any good that can be got out of it; do you not think it would be a good thing if the short sentence was done away with?—Absolutely.

6191. If short sentences were done away with, and a man was convicted, what, in your opinion, would be the best mode of proceeding; would it be that the man should have the conviction registered against him, and then, if he had been convicted two or three times within a certain period, he should be regarded as an habitual vagrant, and as such subjected to a long term of imprisonment, or be sent to a labour colony?—An habitual vagrant—there you come at once to a new definition.

6192. Yes. I suppose you would have to create a new offence?—That Bill does not attempt to make a new definition. But I think there should be not only a new definition, but a Central Authority also should be created if there is to be any alteration in the law. That is suggested in our proposal. As I have already said, that Bill is submitted as the minimum that could possibly effect any amendment at all, and that adopts the present definition and is simply content with that. But what would be much more desirable would be the creation of a Central Authority for the whole country dealing with vagrancy questions, and a new definition of vagrancy.

6193. You do not mean that you would have a Central Authority for the trial of these cases?—No. Mr. David C. Lamb.

6194. It has been suggested to us by more than one witness that a vagrant by repeated convictions should come under the definition of rogue and vagabond, and be sent up to be further dealt with by quarter sessions. Would that be your view?—I do not quite see how you could follow him. The conviction might be for sleeping out—I forget how many thousand convictions there are annually—you might deal with those. But my own idea is that if these men had the option of going for a year into a labour colony they would prefer that to a month's imprisonment or three months' imprisonment or to being sent up for trial.

6195. You could hardly deprive a man of his liberty without going through the form of a trial?—I would give him that. That is how the Inebriates Act works out in several cases. I suppose the magistrates have power to do what they like in that respect. Assuming a man is brought up for committing some offence, it may be for stealing while he was drunk, if he is of respectable birth the magistrate may suggest, or the police court missionary may step in and suggest, that he should be dealt with under the First Offenders' Act, or for some other reason get the case adjourned until next day or even to the afternoon sitting. Meanwhile, the missionary would say to the man: "Why not offer to go into a home." And then, when the man is brought before the magistrate again, instead of being convicted, he enters a retreat voluntarily.

6196. But that would be a case of a first offence; I am speaking of a man who is being repeatedly convicted, and who is obviously determined not to work?—That is an extremely difficult case, as the man would be moving about from one place to another. I have thought that out and have inquired about it, and that sort of case is going to be extremely difficult, but not impossible to be dealt with.

6197. Now, what is your opinion as to a general application of some way-ticket system like that in force in Gloucestershire?—I have considered this question very carefully, and my mature judgment is this, that a modification of the continental plan is possibly desirable. That is the way-ticket plan, but I do not think it is at present to be considered in practical politics for several reasons: first because of the arrears of work. This question of the vagrant and the unemployable has been so long neglected that I should think for the first ten years the machinery, assuming that new machinery is created to deal with it, will be clogged with the hopeless, to whom the ticket system would be absolutely useless. To these men in the casual wards of London for instance, or these men who are in the streets of London night after night, the ticket is no good; they would at once go into the labour colony.

6198. Then if you got them into the labour colony, you would have disposed of them?—Yes, sir.

6199. The ticket does its work?—I say the ticket would be no use to them. These men would practically enter at once; they go the rounds of the Metropolitan casual wards.

6200. If the ticket had the effect of driving a man into the labour colony instead of a man continuing on the street and begging, the ticket undoubtedly does its work?—I submit, sir, that he would go in without the ticket system.

6201. Then he would not want the ticket?—No, sir. That is the ticket which is in vogue in Switzerland. (Ticket exhibited.) Assume that the ticket system was in vogue in this country, and that the police or any authority that you like were authorised to issue these tickets: take 50 per cent. of the men who are in the casual wards in London, or the men who are in the streets, because by their very presence there they are vagrants, the police would have to be reasonably satisfied with the man's story before they issued a ticket. For instance, a man wants to go to Newcastle; "What are you going to do at Newcastle?" They would have to be reasonably satisfied that he wants to get there to work. You look at the man; he is down at heel, his clothes are done, he is no more capable of going on foot to Newcastle than flying. No man in his sober senses would think of issuing that ticket to him. That is what I mean by the arrears. I say at

Mr. David C. Lamb.

17 May 1905.

Mr. David C. Lamb. present the ticket system is not to be thought of, because you have first to deal with the arrears.

17 May 1905. 6202. If you had a ticket system worked by the police it would probably be more effective in the country than in London, and it would give a means of detection and identification which does not exist at present?—Yes, it would. Then I say that State registration is repugnant to English ideas, and I do not think that public opinion would support it at present. I would regard the issuing of a ticket in almost any form as a passport to seek for work, and it would, in itself, by implication, entitle the holder to maintenance while looking for work and in the last resort actually to work itself. Now I do not think we are quite prepared for that, sir.

6203. It would not in any way compel anyone to give work, but if the man could show by the evidence of his ticket that he was honestly in search of work, an employer would naturally prefer to give that man work if he could do so?—That assumes, of course, that there is work enough in the country.

6204. Yes?—Well, I do not think there is, and, as I say, the logical sequence of the whole thing is that if the State undertakes then the State must find work. That is the view I take.

6205. Your idea is that there would be difficulty in working a ticket system?—Yes, sir.

6206. And you think it would not be effective in the way that others quite fully believe it would?—It would be effective enough if we could carry it out.

6207. Now, what would you do with the children if a man was going into a labour colony?—I would take the children from him at once and place them in or near the colony. Assuming that the man was of good character, I would not punish them because of his lack of work; I would try and get him restored. Assuming that the influence of the man was good, I would try to keep the children near the man. I would keep them separate and teach them, let them go to school, and train them up properly and let him see them, and let them see him according to his good behaviour. If a woman came in with children, if her influence was likely to be bad I would take them away from her in exactly the same way. If it was likely to be good and it was misfortune that had overtaken them, I would take the man away and leave the woman with the children, under supervision, of course.

6208. Have you at Hadleigh any special accommodation for children?—No; we have cottages for the married people.

6209. Then what happens now with children who come under your care; what do you do with them?—The course followed is this: suppose we take a man from the workhouse for, say, three months, his wife and children would remain in the workhouse as they were before, chargeable. Say the man was satisfactory for three months, we would take the wife and children down there and pay him a wage, and gradually, assuming that he is strong and fit, we would try to get an outside situation for him, and get him placed in due course. Or if a man comes and his wife and children are outside the workhouse, the wife and children are often better off without the man; he is an extra mouth to fill, assuming he is out of work, and the woman is better off because she has not the man to look after if he stops with us for a few months.

6210. I suppose in London you have cases of specially destitute children; have you any home for them here?—In connection with our women's work, we have; we have of course the maternity hospital and the women who come with children we deal with in a special way, and we have "The Nest" for deserted children and others.

6211. Suppose you find children coming to your shelters absolutely by themselves; what is done with them?—We would send them to private lodgings with some of our own people. We would not put them into the shelters in the ordinary way.

6212. Have you any special children's refuge?—Except "The Nest," no, sir; a woman coming with children or a man or woman coming with children, would be dealt with apart from our institution; they would go into private lodgings.

6213. You would take them to some private place?—We would take the man into one place and the woman into another, and send them with the children or without the children, according to the circumstances.

6214. (Mr. Davy.) Your policy with regard to tramps is based on classification and individual treatment, is it not?—Yes, sir.

6215. That pre-supposes some uniform action on the part of the local authorities in dealing with casuals, does it not?—With regard to the future or with regard to the past?

6216. I mean with regard to the future; I was going to ask you what local authority do you suggest for dealing with tramps?—Well, I am prepared for either the police or the poor law authorities, or the poor law authorities through the police.

6217. You are an experienced guardian?—Well, I know a little.

6218. Do you think it would be possible to secure anything like uniformity if the local treatment of vagrants were left in the hands of 648 boards of guardians?—No, sir.

6219. You would prefer a larger area of administration?—Yes, sir; I say the whole country.

6220. And possibly a larger area of chargeability?—Yes, I think it is a national question.

6221. You consider it important to get rid of superfluous tramps?—Yes.

6222. And to make the treatment in one tramp ward rather like the treatment in another tramp ward?—Yes.

6223. You are a guardian of the Rochford union?—Yes.

6224. Have you separate cell wards there?—No; what accommodation there is there is a disgrace. We are proposing to erect separate cells there, but I hope we will not.

6225. Are the separate cells very expensive there?—They would be very expensive anywhere.

6226. Is it a poor union?—Some of us think it is.

6227. Any way, the cost of separate cells would be serious to a country union?—Well, we are not altogether a country union.

6228. There are some Essex unions that could hardly bear the expense of proper wards?—Yes.

6229. That is an argument, is it not, for an increased area of chargeability for the building of vagrant wards?—Yes, it would be.

6230. Would you retain vagrant wards?—I would gradually eliminate them. What I make out in my own mind is that it would take ten years before you have any appreciable difference.

6231. You are not contemplating sweeping every tramp into a labour colony?—Yes, I would sweep the whole country ultimately.

6232. But at all events for a time you would require vagrant wards for the casual relief of vagrants; in some form or other they would be necessary?—Yes, sir.

6233. Assuming they are necessary and assuming they are under an authority having wider jurisdiction than boards of guardians, then might not the ticket system come in useful?—Mind you, the ticket system would be most useful; I am not against the ticket system as such, but I think public opinion will not stand it. They are prepared to stand a good deal on the vagrant question, but I think they are really not quite prepared for that.

6234. You think public opinion is more ripe for some great change on the vagrant question, than it has been in your recollection?—Yes.

6235. The public are keen about it?—Yes, sir; you see this Bill has been before the country and commended in every quarter.

6236. Supposing a ticket system were so arranged that a man who was carrying out a definite plan of travel got let off a certain amount of his work, and was not subjected to quite such stringent conditions as to detention?—I start here by saying that with the telegraph and the post office and the railway accommodation that there is in this country now, there is no need for people going wandering about the country. I am quite ready to admit the necessity for the mobility of labour and all that, but there is really no need for vagrants.

6237. Until you get your system of colonies into work, you would probably have to keep up some casual local relief, would you not?—Yes, sir.

6238. Otherwise you would have to admit sudden and urgent cases into the workhouse?—Yes.

6239. You would have the same difficulty that produced the official tramp; that was sudden and urgent cases applying to the workhouse for admission. What is a master to do with them?—Send them to the police and let the police have lodging-houses. That is what is done in many instances now; they are sent to lodging-houses.

6240. That would mean the abolition of the tramp wards at once?—Not at once. This is what is running in my mind: assuming that you have a Central Authority as being necessary for many reasons, I would have certain areas proclaimed, so to speak; I would tick them off in sections, either the present division of poor law districts or take other divisions. Start, if you like, down in Devonshire or Cornwall, or come up to Durham. Begin to take certain districts there and all that are moving about in that district or coming to that district turn them back at a certain point. "What are you going for?" "Work." "There is no work down there." Because you know in your labour colony there are 50 to 100 or 200 men: if an employer of labour wants them, let him draw from the labour colony that is there. I assume that it is not work that the habitual vagrant wants.

6241. We all know that?—I am not talking of the unemployed working man; I would give the unemployed working man his ticket the same as the trade union, but I am referring to the man who is wandering about aimlessly, who does only an hour or two's work occasionally. Suppose you tick off one part of the country and cover it with your colonies and gradually absorb your casual wards, while that is going on have a system of exchange between your casual wards. Assume there is a dozen in a district, let them each exchange to catch your man. The great idea is, of course, to catch the men. Very well, if you had twelve casual wards it would be a very simple matter to get these twelve to exchange between themselves, a rough and ready description of each man so that they can identify him and let it be known that if he is three times or any number of times in any of the casual wards of the district he will be regarded as an habitual vagrant; then have him before the magistrate and have him sent to the labour colony.

6242. But meanwhile the casual ward in some form or another in the non-proclaimed districts will be necessary?—I would go on with the present system; I do not see how you can do anything else.

6243. What are you to do with a man in the proclaimed district who turns up and wants relief, and says, "I want relief, I have not a penny"?—Send him back the other way.

6244. What are you to put in his stomach?—Turn him back; tick him off district by district.

6245. That would be an interference with the liberty of the subject probably as great as giving him a ticket, would it not?—The ticket itself is not an interference with the liberty of the subject; it is the implication. First of all there is State registration. That is not altogether an interference with the liberty of the subject. But there is the implication that if the State issues this ticket, in the long run the State must find work.

6246. The State or the local authority is under obligation now to relieve a man who is destitute?—But this is to find him work.

6247. An order for the workhouse is adequate relief?—Yes, sir.

6248. If a man does not like to take it and likes to starve himself that is his look out?—There is nothing to prevent him starving.

6249. Would you recognise the bona fide searcher for work at all?—The number is so small, and workhouse masters generally recognise him and treat him differently. I have enquired at Sheffield, and I have enquired at various parts of the country, and the very highest figure I have ever got of the bona fide working man who comes into the casual ward and who ought to be specially treated is 8 per cent.; some put it at 3 per cent.; some nil.; I think 8 per cent. is the outside figure; I put it down at 5 per cent. If such a man comes up and says, "I have fair prospects of a job," and he looks like it, the master puts him up for the night, and lets him go early the following morning without the task or anything of that kind.

6250. That makes an element of uncertainty, does it not?—You have got to trust somebody.

6251. It produces want of uniformity?—Yes.

6252. You suggest that the habituals should be locked up?—Yes, should be detained; do not say locked up.

6253. Well, should be detained?—Yes.

6254. You also suggest that a certain proportion would submit to voluntary detention?—I am satisfied of that.

6255. As they do in various parts of Belgium, for instance?—Yes, sir.

6256. But a certain number would be sent there by the action of the police?—Yes, or the poor law.

6257. Anyway, by the action of the courts of justice?—Yes.

6258. Now a man whose liberty is taken away from him by a sentence of a judicial court is to a certain extent a prisoner, is he not?—A prisoner is one in a prison. It is a fine distinction. I would not call him a prisoner, and I would not say locked up, but I would detain him.

6259. He is detained against his will. Now, being detained against your will by a sentence of a court would probably bring you into the same category as those prisoners who are kept at the expense of the Treasury and under the jurisdiction of the Home Office?—Yes.

6260. Would you suggest that vagrants who are detained, should be paid for by other persons than the Treasury, say by local authorities?—What I had in my mind was this, that the Treasury might contribute. First of all, it is a national question and I think ought to be paid for out of the Consolidated Fund. That is where I start.

6261. You think that for persons who are deprived of their liberty, and detained under judicial sentence the State ought to pay just as it pays for the ordinary man who is sent to gaol for not paying a fine, for instance?—Yes, I had thought that it might be possible for the Treasury to contribute in the same way as they do for habitual inebriates. While there is a tendency to centralise, there is also a tendency to decentralise, and if it became a county or a district affair, then they might contribute so much, and the Treasury so much, but I am sure that a much more satisfactory way would be to treat it as a national question, because the vagrant belongs to the nation; you cannot get him settled.

6262. The number of men who would be convicted, would probably be pretty considerable?—Yes.

6263. Have you formed any sort of estimate as to the possible numbers?—There may be 30,000. Chambers's encyclopædia gives the total number of vagrants as 60,000.

6264. Would you propose ultimately to take the whole lot of those and detain them?—That must be aimed at.

6265. You contemplate ultimately a complete detention of all that class?—Yes.

6266. Now would that have a deterrent effect on the young ones who are coming on?—Yes, I put the number for practical purposes at 30,000. I reckon that if you take 1,000 a year for the first ten years, that will be as much as you could do satisfactorily. The moment it is known throughout the country that you are going to have labour colonies, the great bulk of the people who are wandering about will cease to wander, because public opinion will now be exerted; you will have the weight of public opinion behind you, in saying there is no need for a man going wandering about in the last strait. "Why do you not go into the labour colony?" You say now "Why do you not go into the workhouse?" He does not, and that is a long story that I need not stop to elaborate here. But you have got a new idea; you have got a labour colony, and my feeling is to take the idea for all it is worth; you have got the weight of public opinion behind you, use it and drive the vagrants into the labour colony. If these fellows know that there is the labour colony they will cease wandering about and at least that will dispose of another 10,000. You have got in your casual wards probably another 10,000 habitual casuals. They are the first that you would, so to speak, scoop up. Then you have got another 10,000 that will gradually be absorbed.

Mr. David C.
Lamb.

17 May 1905.

Mr. David C.
Lamb.

17 May 1905.

6267. A labour colony would be much the same sort of thing as a workhouse, would it not, except that it would be for only one class?—Yes, but you do not work them in workhouses now.

6268. There are practically no able-bodied in workhouses as yet?—The London statistics, of course, show something different.

6269. Well, what do you mean by able-bodied; able-bodied under sixty, or able-bodied so classified by the medical officer?—So classified by the medical officer.

6270. Well, take the ordinary country workhouse, are there any able-bodied there?—Not many.

6271. Do you think there is an able-bodied man in any Kent workhouse, for instance, at this moment?—Probably not.

6272. Do you suppose there are any able-bodied women except a few with illegitimate children?—Probably not.

6273. So that as a matter of fact except in a few localities the able-bodied paupers disappear?—Yes.

6274. In workhouses there is very ample provision made for the old, the infirm, and the sick?—Yes.

6275. In some cases probably too ample and expensive provision?—It is very good.

6276. Still, public opinion does not consider the workhouse the solution of the difficulty. We still have a number of people who object to the workhouse?—Yes.

6277. Both of the recipients and the givers?—Yes.

6278. Might it not be the same with regard to labour colonies?—It might, though I do not think it is likely. As I say, it is a new idea, and public opinion is forming.

6279. We will come back to the 10,000 or so that would be shut up; would you suggest that all those should be detained in colonies which are worked by charitable or religious institutions?—If you could get them to undertake the work, yes; because I think you would get better results.

6280. Do you not think a State colony would be necessary?—I do not think you will have many to punish, although you would find many who are so absolutely hopeless that perhaps it would be well to segregate them.

6281. In a State colony?—Yes, where they would have as much work as they could do.

6282. I suppose you would agree that a State colony would differ from one which was worked by persons who were actuated by some religious or charitable motive?—Yes. The segregation there would mean that the man is hopeless; well I would hope that there would be very few whom you would believe to be hopeless.

6283. For what term do you suggest that a person should be detained?—From one to three years, according to the character, for a first time.

6284. And if he relapsed and came again?—Oh, the same term; I would bring him up again, and let the magistrate settle.

6285. Do you think any considerable proportion of them would have to be detained for life?—Yes.

6286. As being quite hopeless?—Yes.

6287. Those, I suppose, would be properly detained in a State institution?—Yes; you would have to sort them out, but even then as I have already said that ought to be a last resort. In theory, yes, but in practice, no. Do not put a man where it is absolutely hopeless. Even the old men in the workhouse whom no man living would regard as able-bodied, think they are; well, let them live and die in that delusion if you like, rather than put them away where, so to speak, there is no hope.

6288. Well now, would you have much hope of reforming that class by giving them another start?—Speaking quite frankly I have not much hope of the first 10,000 because, as I have said, they are the arrears.

6289. You probably have read the literature as to labour colonies in other countries?—Yes, and I have seen a few of the colonies.

6290. I think I am right in saying that the testimony against reformation is pretty unanimous?—Against the possibility of reform?

6291. Yes; and is it not really "once a colonist always colonist"; I am talking of the colonies in Germany and Holland?—Well, I have just been to Switzerland, for instance. You have seen of course Mr. Preston-Thomas' report. Well, the Witzwyl colony in canton Berne is a colony that is run very well, in fact it is spoken of as being one of the best in Switzerland. The superintendent there for the last two or three years has asked the authorities at Berne to appoint a Salvation Army officer to help him in the work of reform. It was not that there was reformatory work that he was not capable of doing; but to help, which is important, in the distribution of the hopeful cases after their period of detention has expired. In theory he says there is plenty of work in Switzerland, but in practice it is sometimes difficult for a man if discharged from the colony to get it, and our commissioner there who accompanied me when I was over there, completed an arrangement whereby one of our officers is going to take charge of a home on the outskirts of Witzwyl where the man before his time is up will be transferred so as to make the acquaintance of the officer who is living on the outskirts, and then will be gradually helped back into civil life. If there is proper machinery you will be able to pick out the hopeful cases and get them back in that way. The superintendent at Merxplas when I talked to him felt the same difficulty in getting the people back to outside life because he had got no discharging machinery.

6292. The question I was asking is not whether there is no hope, but whether experience has not shown that these institutions do not as a rule reform?—That is so.

6293. Further, it is alleged that the fact that a man has been in a labour colony in Germany or Holland or Belgium is an actual bar to his getting other employment?—Probably.

6294. That is the allegation?—Yes.

6295. Well, now, take your own colony at Hadleigh; as I understand, you do not follow the cases for any prolonged period of time?—No, not as a rule.

6296. You find that impracticable?—Impracticable and undesirable.

6297. Because you interfere with the man's liberty; he has rather an objection to reporting himself, as if he were on ticket-of-leave?—Yes.

6298. So that all your knowledge of what becomes of your colonist is more or less general?—Yes.

6299. You could not, for instance, give the list of all your inmates at Hadleigh and show what had become of them?—No.

6300. How near can you get to it?—I have tried two or three times. I tried once at our prison gate home in London and followed the men down for a year, and was able to trace a very large percentage. But in the early stages we discussed this very question in settling whether it was really worth while. It could be done, but it would be expensive, and we did not think that the value of the thing would justify the expense.

6301. Would it not be the case that the better men would rather resent the fact that they have been colonists?—Yes.

6302. They prefer to forget that they have been at Hadleigh?—They prefer to.

6303. Before the Physical Deterioration Committee you said you thought you could get a return of that description?—Not of that description, I think; it was rather the distribution.

6304. This is what was said then:—"Do the results obtained justify what, I presume, is your idea, that treatment of this sort enables such establishments to restore them in the course of a few months to the community as useful members of it?—Yes." "But have you got any carefully recorded statistics which would enable you to prove that? Do you trace the lives of the people who leave you?—Probably for a year or two years." "You have well attested records of what becomes of them for a year or two years after they leave you?—Of a certain percentage." "Of a certain percentage only?—Yes." "What percentage?—I could not say off-hand." "Half of them, do you think?—More if we eliminated 9 per cent. roughly of the people who are unsatisfactory." "That you can do nothing with?—Yes, whom we regard as failures." "You get rid of them?—Yes, they drift. We have to send them away." "They must sink?—At present, yes. I was preparing the figures the other day for another purpose."

Mr. David C. Lomb,

17 May 1905.

I could furnish the figures." "I think it would be desirable if you would do so?—I will." Now, I suppose there would be a difficulty in providing actual figures for the whole lot?—Yes, it would be an enormous work. I could of course take a consecutive 100 leaving, or a consecutive 100 coming in."

6305. Yes, that would be only 100?—Yes; if it was a consecutive 100 it would not be difficult.

6306. I noticed at Hadleigh the discharge book you keep; it has some very frank comments on some of the men who leave you?—Yes.

6307. Beyond that you do not know?—Systematically, no.

6308. Well, now, for instance, when you emigrate a man to Canada, what do you know about him really?—After he goes there?

6309. Yes?—Well, we would soon know if he is in any more trouble, because he would come back to us. We meet him on his arrival, and send him to work, and if he wants a transfer afterwards we also arrange that.

6310. If they are doing badly in Canada, you say they come back?—Yes, to our people there.

6311. But, generally speaking, you can only surmise what becomes of the men after leaving Hadleigh?—Yes; we hear from a good many, you know, from time to time. I write to them, but, as I say, we have no system. When you come to deal with the women, of course they are on a different principle; women are more easily followed. Mrs. Booth can easily follow her women for three years after they have left, but we decided that the circumstances of the men were so different that it really was not worth the cost involved.

6312. Do you think that you would do better with these men if you had a compulsory term of detention?—With a great many.

6313. Now in what respect would you have a better chance?—Well, I regard detention as necessary in the person's own interest, in that a lengthened period is necessary to eradicate the old habits of shiftlessness, laziness, and mere physical inability; then in the interest of the community, in that it would lessen the opportunity for reproduction and would prevent imposition, or in some cases coercion, resulting in the giving of large sums in the aggregate by which the vagrant classes are encouraged; and it is desirable to check the dissemination of disease.

6314. Do you think that you could teach them anything?—It would afford the opportunity to those dealt with to become of more useful and regular habits, and to acquire knowledge of suitable work, and, in short, would make men and women of them; that is my argument for detention.

6315. How long do you think the detention would need to be before you could teach a man the elements of a trade to enable him to earn his own living?—From one to three years; it is no use less than a year; you must keep a man round the full season.

6316. Teaching a trade would make the business very expensive, would it not?—To begin with, it would be expensive, there is no doubt about that.

6317. It is much cheaper to let the man do the work he has been accustomed to?—Yes.

6318. The disciplinary teaching is expensive and troublesome?—Yes, sir, it is.

6319. Have you ever been inside a convict prison?—Not in this country.

6320. You are aware that the industrial teaching there is most careful?—Yes.

6321. Are you aware that at Merxplas they do not teach the colonists?—They reckon they do.

6322. There is no apprenticeship; they simply work at the trade that they knew before?—Yes, but the director there reckons that he teaches so many.

6323. The trade that they knew before?—Well, yes; and those that do not know a trade he must graft on somewhere.

6324. They go on the farm?—Yes.

6325. Would it not be a temptation in our colony to do the same thing?—No.

6326. I mean to look rather to the segregation than to reformation or the teaching of a trade?—Our method is first, if the man has got no object in his life, to create an object, and you want to find out what is the man's bent, his natural ability, and what prospects he has of earning his own living. Then you want to bend his energy and your energy in that way. What I mean is, that if he has not got the ability that would be necessary for an industry, as distinct from agriculture, or he is not built the way of an industry, why then you want to guide that man and make him efficient in the walk of life in which you think he is most capable.

6327. A man does not keep his head above water by what he knows, but by what he is—his character?—Yes.

6328. It is no use your having a trade unless your character enables you to make use of it. You will agree that it is a pretty hard thing putting character into a man of that class after he is over thirty?—No, I do not.

6329. You are still hopeful?—Oh, yes; of course, a man has learned a great deal at thirty, you see. For instance, I saw at Hadleigh men coming in at all ages. I will give you a case, it is not an isolated case, it is a typical case of that class. For instance, a man of fifty comes in; he has reasonable prospects of living another twenty years; you say he ought to have learned before. Yes, but it takes some people a long time to learn. And then there may have been a great many sentimental friends of his who kept him going without work, or he may have had a sentimental public, which makes the wandering nature possible, but if the man has not learned his lesson, and if he does not turn his learning to account, why he is a hopeless case. For instance, to the man who has perhaps had a term of imprisonment, or the man who has wasted his life, there comes a moment when his eyes are opened, if it is only the mere awakening caused by starvation, through his own stupidity. We are all wise after the event, and there ought to be a place for repentance somewhere in the world.

6330. You think his best chance would be that someone should take an interest in him and look after him?—Yes.

6331. His only chance in fact?—Yes.

6332. There are many elements that go towards making a success. You quoted just now the case of a man from St. George's; is he not the same man that you told the Physical Deterioration Committee about?—I do not think so.

6333. I think it must be the same case; you told that Committee of a man from St. George's whom you tried on digging and bird-scaring, and whom Mr. Sheil sent to prison for three weeks; then he came to you again and did well?—Yes, that is the same fellow.

6334. He is an exceptional sort of type, I take it?—No he is not exceptional, he is typical of hundreds.

6335. He is exceptional in this, that he has been quoted before two Committees?—Well, certainly I quoted him at the Central Poor Law Conference; and I quoted him now to-day because the letter from him was in my basket this morning.

6336. The farm colony idea has been going on for a great many years, has it not?—Yes, we have had that place about fourteen years.

6337. I mean the old spinning houses and the "setting the poor on labour" are all forms of the same idea?—Yes.

6338. The idea has done a great deal of good probably, but has not reformed the world?—The world is better than it was, I take it.

6339. You call Hadleigh a farm colony?—We say land and industrial colony.

6340. It is very important that the colonies should be industrial as well as farming?—Oh, yes.

6341. It is not all men who are suitable for work on the land?—No.

6342. Should you say that Hadleigh was an expensive place to maintain?—Yes.

6343. Do you really know the cost of it?—Oh, yes, absolutely.

Mr. David C. Lamb. 6344. I think you promised us a return on that subject ?
—Yes, I will put in that return.

17 May 1905. 6345. (Sir William Chance.) Can we have that before our next meeting ?—Yes. I am sorry it has been somewhat delayed ; as a matter of fact, the officer who was preparing it was told off to prepare a statement in regard to the colonies in America.

6346. (Mr. Davy.) The capital expenditure would be kept distinct from the current expenses ?—Yes, ours has been from the beginning. Of course, I can explain it in full when the statement is prepared, but we have bought choice bits of land for prospective improvements in the neighbourhood. They really have no bearing on the farm colonies as such, and yet they have added to our capital expenditure.

6347. (Sir William Chance.) You expect to get that capital expenditure back with a profit on the resale ?—Yes.

6348. (Mr. Davy.) The balance sheet will be rather complicated, will it not ?—I hope it will be sufficiently clear to be understood.

6349. The value of it is that it would give us a sort of idea what it would cost the Treasury to run an institution of the same sort ?—Well, of course, Hadleigh is not a vagrant colony.

6350. It is more for the unemployed ?—Yes.

6351. Vagrants would be a worse class than that ?—Worse in some respects, yes.

6352. More hardened in their laziness ?—Yes. Only by the detention you would be able to regulate your work better and you would have other compensations.

6353. (Sir William Chance.) Might they not be more broken down ?—Yes ; I am very hopeless about the first 10,000 whoever takes them in hand.

6354. (Mr. Davy.) But I suppose you would advocate that the Home Office or the Treasury, or whoever is responsible, would make arrangements for sending some of the cases to philanthropic colonies like your own ?—Yes.

6355. It is your idea that the Treasury should license you to receive those people during the term of their detention ?—That is so. Then, of course, that raises at once the question of capital expenditure ; I do not think we would be able to provide that.

6356. You would charge the Treasury, I suppose, so much ?—It could be done that way, or it could be done by the State finding all and employing the Salvation Army or other agencies to manage the work.

6357. That would necessitate inspection, would it not ?—Yes.

6358. And possibly an audit of the accounts ?—If it was a capitation grant, why then it would be sufficient if there was some certificate that the people were there.

6359. Do you think that societies like yours would make themselves responsible for the safe custody of these persons ?—I think there would not be much difficulty about that, because the conditions would be such that the men would be better there in many instances ; they would not want to run away.

6360. You do not think they would try to escape ?—No, I do not think so. You see that is where I start, perhaps with an idea different to anybody else's. I take these people for instance in the casual wards in London ; now they want to get out of the casual wards. A great many think these are people who want to be in the casual wards, but I should think, from my experience, having spoken to them over and over again for the last ten years, they want to get out of the casual wards, they do not want to stay in the casual wards, and if you could get them to a colony where you had powers of detention, they would not want to run away. Would they want to run away to something that is worse ?

6361. At Hadleigh you have comparatively a small number of colonists, but do you have many cases of escape ?—You mean without giving notice ?

6362. Yes ?—No, I do not think so.

6363. In your statement you refer to 12 per cent. as leaving without notice ; would they go away with the Salvation Army clothes on ?—In some instances ; in other instances they have bought their own clothes.

6364. (Mr. Simpson.) The majority of men do not wear clothes supplied by you ?—If a man comes in with very good clothes we would offer to give him working clothes and take away his best. That is at his option. Then that one is not likely to run away without giving notice, because we have got his better clothes. To the man who comes in very badly clothed, we would have to give clothes.

6365. Do you give clothes to most of the men who come in ?—Oh, no.

6366. Most of them are wearing their own ?—Yes. We lend a man clothes. For instance if his trousers are impossible, we would give him trousers, probably an old pair not worth very much.

6367. (Mr. Davy.) Are your buildings at Hadleigh—for instance, the dormitories—suitable for the purpose ?—In the main, yes.

6368. You think they are sufficiently good ?—Oh, yes, very good I should say.

6369. How many men sleep in each block ?—They vary in size.

6370. Forty, is it not ?—Yes ; there are some smaller ones.

6371. There are double wood walls on a brick setting ?—Yes.

6372. What is the flooring ?—Wood.

6373. And what is under the wood ?—Concrete, I think.

6374. Anyway it is dry ?—Yes.

6375. Have you any idea what those buildings cost per head ?—There is a return. I will let you have it.

6376. I should like to see it. Have you been undertaking any new buildings at the Rochford union workhouse lately ?—Yes, we have built a laundry.

6377. That cost a good deal more than your buildings at Hadleigh ?—Yes.

6378. And yet your buildings are sufficiently good ?—Yes.

6379. How do you account for the difference in cost ?—In one case money is no object, and in the other it is built for the purpose.

6380. (Sir William Chance.) Have you got building bye-laws in Rochford ?—Yes.

6381. And therefore you could not put up buildings in Rochford like those at Hadleigh ; they would not be allowed ?—The bye-laws are more strict now ; the buildings which you saw would not be allowed now.

6382. And yet the Hadleigh buildings are quite satisfactory ?—Yes, in fact I put up a building there—an extension—and I had a difficulty with the Rochford district council ; it was a dining room about half the size of this Committee room a quarter of a mile away from the public road. Because it happened to adjoin an existing building, they acted most absurdly and threatened to pull it down, and I do not know what they did not do.

6383. If you were establishing a new labour colony you would prefer to go where there were no building bye-laws ; you would do it more cheaply, would you not ?—Yes sir, that is very necessary ; but if it was under a Central Authority it would not matter as they are usually exempt from the building bye-laws, I think.

6384. (Mr. Davy.) In some cases ?—I have had that in my mind all through, because, for instance, if you did not undertake productive work, but put a certain number of men on an improvement that would be completed in so many years, you would have to put up temporary buildings. Again, if you were to go in for the cultivation of land, you would want a building of a different character, and my idea is that in carrying out an extensive scheme you would have to deal to some extent with local prejudices, and where you have trade unions or any strong local feeling about coming into competition with your product, meet that difficulty, if you like, by some improvement in the neighbourhood. For instance, there are acres of land in the Midlands covered over with unsightly heaps of rubbish from quarries and coal mines, that it would take, perhaps, five or ten years to level and convert into some useful national improvement ; very rough buildings would be satisfactory for that, and it would get over several difficulties.

6385. Have you had any opposition to your local sales of produce at Hadleigh?—A little.

6386. Complaints of undue competition?—Yes, but the circumstances are rather exceptional there; at least we regard them as exceptional because the population of Southend which is our chief market has increased during these last fifteen years from 12,000 to 40,000 or 50,000 residential, and double that number in summer.

6387. So that your comparatively small produce does not matter?—Quite so. In fact there are hundreds of pounds spent every week in buying produce in London. I do not think there is any particular hardship anywhere, because I believe all the small dealers in the neighbourhood have improved in position, and that answers the question that has been raised with regard to the displacement. On the other hand, I say these men have as much right to live as anybody else.

6388. You do not make mats or brooms or things of that sort?—No.

6389. Did you see that industry at Merxplas?—Yes.

6390. Do you know what they do with their brooms and mats?—They send some of them to England; I found that out.

6391. And they are sold?—Yes.

6392. Did you see any mats marked "Welcome"?—Yes.

6393. What market do you think they are intended for?—The English market obviously.

6394. Now where do you get your labourers from; do you draw them from the local labour market?—Yes, in some instances.

6395. Have you had any complaint from the farmers that you are raising the rate of wages?—We have had that, but what has happened on more than one occasion is that a neighbouring farmer has offered a man a couple of shillings a week more than we were paying.

6396. That is good for the man?—Yes. What has happened on more than one occasion is this. We brought a man from Norfolk or Suffolk where the wages are lower than in Essex; he was getting say 12s. or 15s. a week; we perhaps give him 18s. and we find the neighbouring farmers hammering away at him at 19s. and 20s., and we have lost men occasionally. But the price of labour has been forced up by the development of Southend and the proximity to London.

6397. In fact, your task has been made easier, because you are in a rising neighbourhood?—Undoubtedly.

6398. But even so, it requires some tact to avoid complaints of local competition?—Oh, yes. Then, of course there has been a good deal of circulation of money. For instance, we have hired the farmers in the neighbourhood to do carting, and they have realised that we are not exclusive.

Mr. David
C. Lamb.

17 May 1905.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

Thursday, 25th May, 1905.

[AT EDINBURGH.]

PRESENT.

Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B., (in the Chair).

Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.
Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.

Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Mr. R. B. BARCLAY, called; and Examined.

6399. (Chairman.) You are General Superintendent of Poor?—Yes.

6400. And Inspector of workhouses in Scotland?—Yes.

6401. Is that over the whole of Scotland?—Yes.

6402. What do you do with a non-settled man who applies for relief?—No person is admitted into the poor house without an order from the inspector of poor of the parish. The man must apply to an inspector of poor to get an order from him. Of course, if a person came in a dying state, they would take him in, but it is the rule and the law that no person gets in without an order from the inspector of poor and a medical certificate.

6403. To the effect that the pauper is not able-bodied?—Yes.

6404. Now take the case of an able-bodied man who goes to the inspector of poor and says that he is destitute and is starving. What do you do with that man?—According to the law of Scotland he is not entitled to relief if he is able-bodied. If he is footsore or something of that kind he is sent to the medical officer. Very few medical officers will take the responsibility on themselves in saying in cold weather "You are able-bodied; you are not entitled to relief." They find out some ailment and admit him, but it is not always to a poorhouse that he is admitted. In the majority of parishes in Scotland we have houses that we call casual sick houses. Persons are admitted to those places for a night. In other places, in villages or towns, there are common lodging-houses where they are charged fourpence a night, and they are sent with a ticket to these houses.

6405. The inspector of poor gives them a ticket?—Yes.

6406. Were those houses built in consequence of a circular of the Scottish Local Government Board?—They have not been built for that purpose. They are usually cottages that have been acquired. Very often in country parishes they have a two-roomed cottage, and they put a respectable woman into one end of the cottage and allow her to remain rent free on the condition that she keeps the other end tidy and gives accommodation.

6407. It is a comparatively new institution?—No; but it has been increasing lately because the Local Government Board have issued several circulars urging every parish to have accommodation of that kind because it throws a great responsibility on the inspector of poor if someone comes to his door completely broken down and there is no place in which to put him. We are therefore trying to press that as far as possible. It has been practically in existence since the beginning of the poor law system in Scotland.

6408. Is there a poorhouse in every parish in Scotland?—No. We have seventy poorhouses in Scotland.

6409. So you will sometimes have an inspector without a poorhouse?—Sometimes the poorhouse may be twenty or thirty miles away from the parish.

6410. In those cases where the Scottish Local Government Board think it is necessary to have a shelter, would it be somewhere in the neighbourhood of the inspector of

Mr. R. B.
Barclay.

25 May 1905.

*M. R. B.
Barclay.*

25 May 1905.

poor?—Yes, somewhere where he can put up for a night a person who is not able to proceed on his journey. We have a certificate that they can send to the medical officer and he certifies that they are not able to proceed.

6411. Are there many vagrants in the north of Scotland?—There are not many of the vagrant class. Of course, in every part of Scotland there is a class of persons who wander about all over the country. The class I am speaking about never do any work if they can help it. They go from one place to another and get shelter in different farmhouses, and they sleep out during the greater part of the warm weather.

6412. Do the police take any cognisance of them?—I cannot give any information in regard to the police. I believe you will have that otherwise.

6413. So far as the Poor Law is concerned, you have nothing to do with them; they are able-bodied men?—Yes, and women too. A great many of them are women. In the south-western district, which I know best of all, I could give you the names of twenty or thirty women who just go from one parish to another and have done so for the last eight, ten, and fifteen years.

6414. Is Glasgow in your district?—Yes.

6415. And Edinburgh?—No.

6416. In a town like Glasgow the number of tramps or vagrants will be very large?—Yes.

6417. Does the Poor Law take cognisance of them?—If they apply for relief, then they are examined to see whether they are able-bodied or not. They get nothing but the poorhouse, of course. While you are speaking of Glasgow I might give this little bit of information with regard to a parish that is within seven miles of Glasgow, which I visited lately. It is seven miles distant from Glasgow and about sixteen miles from Kilmarnock. I refer to the parish of Mearns. Between Mearns and Kilmarnock there is no shelter of any kind. It is a moorland road. There are a great number of tramps making their way from Kilmarnock into Glasgow. There is only one parish between, a large parish of moorland called Fenwick. The inspector of that parish lives within three miles of Kilmarnock, so that when they are coming from Kilmarnock they are not sufficiently broken down to apply to him, but when they walk these sixteen miles to Mearns they are completely broken down and not able to go on to Glasgow. There is a lodging-house there into which the inspector puts them for the night, and then they leave in the morning. During the year ended 15th May, 1905, he tells me that there were 342 persons who applied to him for relief. Of these, 314 were tramps, so that there were only 28 people resident in the parish or neighbourhood who applied for relief. 95 are noted as coming from Kilmarnock or other Ayrshire towns into Glasgow, while 39 are noted as going in the reverse direction. These 39 had walked the seven miles from Glasgow and had felt that they were not able to tackle the sixteen miles on to Kilmarnock. Many of them are women with children, who state that they are deserted and are searching for their husbands who are employed at railway or other works as navvies. Others are women with illegitimate children. It is principally women who apply for relief.

6418. There are a certain number of men, I suppose, who would not apply to the inspector at all?—Yes, a great many cases. In many of those districts the farmers allow the men to sleep in their lofts for a night. They know these places perfectly well, and they tell one another about them.

6419. Is this system satisfactory in your opinion?—As far as our system of poor law is concerned, I think that with a little improvement it is good enough, but with regard to the tramp class who are constantly going about, women with children who have no education whatsoever, I think it is horrible, because they go from one parish to another, and no person has any interest in them at all. They go on year after year. There should be some law to the effect that they could be taken possession of, and put into labour colonies and made to work.

6420. Do you have any considerable number of poor law offences, that is cases of paupers and inmates of poor houses charged with offences, and brought before the magistrates?—No, very few. Our law is different in that respect from the law in England. With us the governor can punish for himself. The criminal authorities will only take an inmate of the poorhouse if he has committed a criminal offence, and even then it is sometimes difficult to get the police to take them. They say, "You have cells of your own, and you can punish them yourselves." Very few inmates of poor houses are taken before the police.

6421. You do not prosecute people for refusing to work?—We cannot.

6422. Do you know our system of punishment in England?—Yes.

6423. What do you do, as a matter of fact, in the way of punishment?—Deprivation of some kind of food, or shutting them up in a cell for ten hours or so. Every poorhouse is provided with a cell or two, but they are very seldom used.

6424. There is a tendency to use them less and less?—Yes, very much so. I know many poorhouses where they have not been used for over twenty years. The governor just uses moral suasion, and very often when an inmate is found to have broken the rules he discharges himself. They are glad to get quit of him.

6425. One of our difficulties is that the people who commit the offences belong practically to the same class as the tramps, and we get both the police and the poor law in such cases. You avoid that in Scotland?—Yes. If one inmate commits an assault on another inmate, then he is sometimes handed over to the police, but it is very rare.

6426. (Captain Showers.) What diet do you have in your workhouses?—There are different classes. I can give you the whole rules as to dietary if you like.

6427. Can you say roughly what is given for breakfast, dinner, and supper?—The working inmates have porridge and milk for breakfast; for dinner they have soup or broth, 8 ozs. of bread and 4 ozs. of meat; and for supper they have either tea and bread and butter, or porridge and milk again. The infirm do not necessarily have meat; they are not entitled to that, but very often there is more meat than is required, and they get a little bit in their broth. They have only porridge once a day, and tea and bread and butter or margarine at night. Then the sick have a special diet according to the orders of the medical officer.

6428. You have no fixed dietary for the able-bodied casuals, as we call them?—We are supposed to have no able-bodied inmates, but I am sorry to say that we have a great number. That is to say, they are men who are physically able-bodied, but they are not able to provide for themselves outside.

6429. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) They are passed by the doctor?—Yes. They may have an infirmity of some kind, but they are not fit mentally to earn a livelihood for themselves outside, although they are physically able-bodied.

6430. (Dr. Downes.) Can any doctor give a certificate that a man is not able-bodied, or must it be obtained from the parish doctor?—It is the parish doctor who gives the certificate. Of course, any other medical certificate would be received, but in every parish we have a medical officer. He is paid for it, and accordingly you go to the man who is paid for doing the work. If he was away, however, the certificate of any other medical man would be received.

6431. Is what you call the casual sick-house provided by the parish authority?—Yes. In some cases they have built it themselves, but in most cases there is just perhaps one room in a cottage.

6432. And the woman in the cottage looks after the case?—Yes, she keeps the room clean, and ready for anyone who may come in.

6433. Would the parish doctor attend a tramp there?—They would be away next morning. It is very seldom that they are there for more than two nights. If they were to be there for more than two nights the inspector would take steps to have them removed to the poorhouse.

6434. What do you do with a tramp woman taken in labour; how would such a case be dealt with?—It is very difficult to say. We have not had many cases of that kind, but unfortunately there have been some very awkward cases when they could not get them in anywhere at all.

6435. There is some difficulty in those cases?—Yes, there is great difficulty, but they are very rare. They generally make for some particular place where they can get in.

6436. Is there anything known of the number of tramps in Scotland?—Yes, there is a half-yearly census taken by the police. The figures vary from 7,000 in June to 9,000 in December. On 15th May, 1903, there were 102 vagrants with 36 dependants relieved by inspectors of poor in the whole of Scotland (see Appendix XVI.)

6437. (Mr. Simpson.) In Scotland you have parishes combined for poorhouse purposes?—Yes.

6438. Something like the unions in England?—Barely, because they are only combined for poorhouse purposes.

6439. Not for outdoor relief at all?—No.

6440. Is the poorhouse managed by a joint committee from the different parishes?—Yes. Of course, some parishes have poorhouses of their own.

6441. Glasgow, of course, is quite big enough for that?—Yes, some towns considerably smaller than that have a poorhouse of their own. Lanark, with a population of 8,000, has a poorhouse of its own, as have also Paisley, Inverness, Falkirk, Forfar, Dumfries, and some other places.

6442. (Chairman.) Have you a uniform dietary all over Scotland?—No.

6443. (Mr. Simpson.) Is it in the legal power of the Local Government Board to fix a uniform dietary for all poorhouses?—No, I am afraid not. We are trying to do it, but we cannot enforce it. The house committee select the dietary, and all that we can do is to see that it is sufficient. In some cases they go beyond what is sufficient. The tramps that we are talking about know these houses quite well, and they will wander a long way to get into a house where there is a better dietary.

6444. (Captain Showers.) What kind of labour do you have in the poorhouse?—Stick breaking is the principal thing. In some of the poorhouses we have stone breaking as a test.

6445. I suppose it is chiefly granite?—No, it is principally whinstone, but it really does not amount to much. It is on paper more than anything else. If a man is set to stone breaking he will rather take his discharge because he says that if he can break that quantity of stones he can work for himself outside, so that the quantity of stones broken in Scotland in all the poorhouses in the course of a year would not be more than a few cart-loads.

6446. Do they break that stone by hammer?—Yes, by hammer. That is the test.

Mr. JAMES RUSSELL MOTION, called; and Examined.

6447. (Chairman) You have been engaged for a great many years in the administration of the Poor Law in Glasgow?—Yes.

6448. I think you are clerk and inspector of poor there?—Yes.

6449. We have had evidence to the effect that the able-bodied man is not recognised in Scotland?—That is so.

6450. Is that by Statute?—Yes, or rather a decision of the House of Lords in the "sixties" interpreting the Statute of 1845.

6451. That would exclude able-bodied men from the operation of the Poor Law?—Yes.

6452. Have you in Glasgow practically nothing to do with the able-bodied labourer?—That may be qualified.

6453. Will you tell us exactly what you do in Glasgow?—We have applications from men that are only partially able-bodied in so far as they are certified by the medical officer as being unfit for work from a variety of diseases, venereal, cardiac, chronic debility, dyspepsia, and so on.

6454. And then what happens to them?—They are sent to the poorhouse.

6455. Are they sent direct by the order of the inspector of poor?—Yes.

6456. What about the others who do not establish that they are disabled?—If one of them applies to us and is certified as able-bodied, we give a line of refusal and direct him to go to the sheriff.

6457. Do you write the refusal?—Yes. He is refused relief on the ground that he is certified by the medical officer as able-bodied.

6458. What does that man do if he has no means of getting lodging or food for the night?—There are a number of lodging-houses, and then there is the Night Asylum for the Houseless for bona fide out of work men, but the great majority of the class to whom you refer can pick for themselves, or, as we say in Scotland, can pick their lone. They can find their way about.

6459. Nothing more is heard of them?—No.

6460. Do some of them make application to the police?—Now and again.

6461. There are cells attached to the police stations in Glasgow?—Yes, there are turnkey rooms and such like, where I know that large numbers are sheltered. The chief constable has prepared a statement showing the number of persons afforded accommodation in the various police offices throughout the city during the week ended 31st December, 1904, and the corresponding weeks in 1903 and 1902, and also for the month of December in 1904, 1903, and 1902. From that it appears that there were 1,007 men and 65 women for the week ended 31st December, 1904. In the corresponding week in 1903 there were 102 men and 13 women, a total of 115 as against the total I have mentioned. In the same week in 1902 there was a total of 45. In the month of December, 1904, there were 4,558 men and 228 women, making a total of 4,786, while in the same month in 1903, there were 502, and in 1902 there were 240.

6462. That shows that there is a very large amount of shelter relief given by the police in Glasgow?—Yes, during the scare about the unemployed and the creation of soup kitchens. I hold that the advertisement of that sort of thing abroad brought hundreds, indeed thousands, into the city.

6463. Would these persons be residents?—I am sure they were not.

6464. Where did they come from?—All over the country, particularly the west of Scotland.

6465. In order to get the soup?—Yes.

6466. And such a case has to be sheltered by the police in the last resort because he is able-bodied?—Yes.

6467. And because the free shelters are full?—There is only one free shelter, the Night Asylum, and it was crammed.

6468. Is it usually full?—Yes.

6469. Under ordinary conditions?—Yes. I have complained about that place frequently, and I have declared more than once that it should be burned to the ground because it creates a class. One of the members of the parish council who was recently appointed a director of this institution submitted the following report to his fellow directors: "I understand the object for which this institution was intended was to assist men and women who from some temporary cause were out of work or were looking for work. This no doubt at the time of its initiation was most desirable, but I am of opinion that the necessity is not now so clamant, on account of the many private and corporation model lodgings now in existence, and that a larger proportion of those admitted could find means of getting a night's lodging if left to their own resources, so that by giving them assistance we are only helping to pauperise and conduce to laziness. Able-bodied men or women are quite able to keep themselves if they are sober, honest, and willing, and if they would just deny themselves a little and save a portion of their earnings for a time of need. I would therefore suggest to the directors the advisability of not admitting any single men or women who are apparently able-

Mr. R. E. Barclay.

25 May 1905.

Mr. James Russell Motion.

25 May 1905.

Mr. James
Russell
Motion.

25 May 1905.

bodied, of sound mind, and not over forty-five years of age. This I estimate would do away with about one half of the applicants, and would give the officiating director more time to consider the remainder of the cases, and to find out if they were suitable objects of relief."

6470. And the result?—It is only within the last month that that opinion has been expressed.

6471. You are aware of the English system of dealing with tramps?—In an ordinary way.

6472. It is something like this; the guardians of the poor provide shelters which are free, subject to the fact that the vagrants are supposed to be detained two nights, and in the intermediate day to do a certain amount of work. If you had such shelters in Glasgow, do you suppose it would have made any difference in the number applying for relief at the police stations?—It would have increased the numbers.

6473. As giving one more facility for living in the town?—Yes.

6474. So on the whole you prefer to be without the English tramp system?—Yes, but still I want the remedy.

6475. Do you know under what authority the police relieve these people?—No authority.

6476. There is no legal authority for it at all?—No. Simply a man or woman comes into the office and says that they have no means, or something of that kind, and no shelter, and asks to be allowed to remain. I know that the magistrates gave instructions to the chief constable to afford facilities in such cases.

6477. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you suppose that any food that is given to them at night comes from private funds?—I am not aware of their getting any food.

6478. It is simply the shelter?—Yes, purely the shelter.

6479. (Chairman.) The point as to the legality of that relief has often been mentioned before Committees?—I think so.

6480. At any rate, it is well known in Scotland?—It is known in Glasgow, but I do not know to what extent it has spread in other parts of the country.

6481. Do you think that in other towns, such as Edinburgh, there is anything like the amount of shelter that is given in Glasgow?—It is not so extensive in Edinburgh as in Glasgow, but the same complaints have been voiced as to the soup kitchens and other things creating tramps.

6482. Including the shelter given at the police station?—Quite so.

6483. I think you some years ago made an analysis of what became of a certain number of tramps who applied for relief at Glasgow. Have you anything of that sort up to date, as it would be exceedingly useful?—Here is a statement of houseless and homeless applicants from 16th November, 1900, to 15th May, 1901, giving an analysis of where they have come from and all that sort of thing (see Appendix XVI.). Following on that, I have also a list of tramp applicants, giving their names and ages, the number of days they had resided in Glasgow, where they came from, where they were sent to, and so on.

6484. The return I have in my mind was a sort of summary of these, so many remitted to the police and so many sent to the poorhouse?—That is another aspect of it and I will give that likewise. I have here a comparative statement of vagrancy and begging from 22nd November, 1900, to 15th May, 1905 (see Appendix XVI.). I find that there were 154 cases in one half-year, 60 of whom were not known to the parish and 94 were known. Of these latter there were 23 previously convicted. Of these 154 there were 69 sent to prison, 38 were admonished, and so on. This is brought up to date.

6485. What does "reported by the police" mean?—That means that some years ago, owing to the increase in these cases, we complained to the magistrates that they were not doing their duty, to put it in a rough and ready way. In the first place, the police were not apprehending these vagrants and tramps, and when they were apprehended, they were simply admonished by the police and let go.

6486. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) What were they apprehended for?—Begging and vagrancy.

6487. Is that a crime in Glasgow?—Yes.

6488. (Chairman.) Vagrancy would mean begging, would it not?—Yes.

6489. The mere fact of not having visible means of subsistence would not be a criminal act?—No, it must be the act of begging. We had a meeting with the magistrates and made a representation. We got the original clause of the Act of 1866 amended in 1895 to what we thought was our way of looking at the subject. These are referred to in the second paragraph of my précis. Ultimately it was arranged that one of my officers should attend the police court every morning, upon information supplied by the police authorities that there were tramps or vagrants apprehended by the police. My officer searched our own records for the history of the different persons. He appeared at the court and advised the magistrate as to their history, and the magistrate sometimes committed the prisoner to the poorhouse as a place of safety for seven days.

6490. Under what authority?—Under the Act of 1895.

6491. Was that a local Act?—Yes; he was sent up as an ordinary inmate. He would be so committed by one magistrate, and at the end of seven days he would be brought down before another magistrate, with the result that the second magistrate knew nothing of the original statements put before the court, and probably the man would be admonished and discharged, and would probably turn up at another court the same week, or something like that. The result of that is the paper you have before you.

6492. "Reported by police, 154, of whom 94 were known to parish and 23 of these had been previously convicted." 69 of these were sent to prison, and 38 were admonished. Does that mean admonished and discharged?—Yes.

6493. (Mr. Simpson.) It is 69 out of the total of 154?—Yes.

6494. (Chairman.) 43 were remitted to the poorhouse?—Yes.

6495. Were these remitted to the poorhouse for any definite period?—No, but they got the hint that if they were seen begging again they would be sent to prison.

6496. Now if they were sent to prison, what term would they get?—In the case of John Dunlop, for instance, he was before the Central police court on 26th December, 1900, and he got ten days. In May, 1901, he got seven days, in August fourteen days, in September thirty days under an alias, 15th April, 1902, thirty days, and October, 1902, thirty days. That man became chargeable to the parish in 1888 at the age of forty-three, and since then has been frequently in the poorhouse for short periods, sometimes only for three days. The last we heard of him was on 8th May of this year, when he left the poorhouse. The others are just in the same way. There is one twenty-one days (see Appendix XVI.).

6497. That would be for begging?—Yes.

6498. Might it be for sleeping out?—It might.

6499. Do you have a considerable number of people sleeping on staircases and such places in Glasgow?—Yes. In the Glasgow Corporation and Police Act of 1895, section 34, in addition to the powers conferred upon the magistrates by sections 144 and 145 of the Glasgow Police Act of 1868, the following provision has effect:—"The magistrate may, if he thinks fit, direct that any person brought before him under these sections, who, in his opinion is a beggar or vagrant, shall be sent to the inspector of poor that his claim may be investigated" and so on. Clause 144 states that every person who in any turn-pike road, street, court, or common stair, either asks alms or exposes wounds or deformities, or places himself or acts so as to induce or for the purpose of inducing the giving of alms shall be deemed a beggar. Any person who within the city is found wandering abroad or lodging in any barn or outhouse, or in any unoccupied building, or in the open air, or under a tent, or in any court, etc., shall be deemed a vagrant, unless he proves to the satisfaction of the magistrate that he has a fixed place of residence and some means of gaining a livelihood within the city.

6500. What is the penalty?—It is from 10 days to 60 days.

6501. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Is there a minimum of 10 days?—I think so.

6502. (Mr. Simpson.) The section to which you have just referred would not include sleeping on a common stair?—I think it would. A person simply found on a stair would not be apprehended. He would be told to go away.

6503. And if he tried to sleep outside he could be apprehended?—Yes.

6504. (Chairman.) Are you sure that there is a minimum sentence?—I would not be dogmatic on that. Probably there may not be a minimum, because I have known drunks to have 3 days simply to get a wash, and I complained about it frequently.

6505. What are the powers with regard to the detention in the poorhouse?—That is given under the rules of the Local Government Board. The maximum is 72 hours.

6506. But the magistrates have nothing to do with that?—They give 7 days or till such time as the inspector of poor can make inquiry as to the history of the prisoner.

6507. The magistrates have the power of compulsory detention for that time?—Yes.

6508. For the purpose of making inquiries?—Yes. "Shall be sent to the inspector of poor of the parish within which such person shall have been found in order that the claim of such person may be investigated, and the magistrate may direct any such person to be detained in custody."

6509. What section is that?—Section 34 of the Act of 1895.

6510. Do you find that that is a useful provision?—Yes.

6511. Do you find any inconvenience in making the master responsible for the custody of the prisoner?—No.

6512. I suppose that the persons sent under that section are mostly broken down folk?—No, what we would call the average able-bodied tramp.

6513. Have the magistrates in Scotland any power in the way of ordering relief to anybody?—No, that lies entirely with the parish council. This is running practically pari passu with the parish authorities.

6514. Only to that extent has the magistrate power to order relief to anyone?—Yes.

6515. You give us here a number of these cases. In each, the man seems to have had repeated sentences of imprisonment for a short time?—Yes.

6516. I see that one man has been sentenced 11 times in 2 years, and on four occasions he has got 30 days?—That is so.

6517. Do you find any cases where the prisoner says that he prefers the prison to the poorhouse?—I have not heard that from any of these cases, but I have heard it elsewhere. It is simply a stock expression.

6518. You do not believe it?—No.

6519. (Captain Showers.) Do they get better food in the prison than they get in the poorhouse?—I have heard it said, and Dr. Dunlop has stated, that they are better fed, but that must be taken with an explanation, because every prisoner, or nearly every prisoner, is made to work in the prison, while the great bulk of our people do not work.

6520. (Chairman.) Are you acquainted with the discipline in the prisons in Scotland?—Yes, I have been through two prisons quite recently.

6521. Do you know what the short-time prisoners do?—Not specially, but I know that they all work.

6522. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Is there no work in the poorhouses in Scotland?—There is only a kind of work. Now, in Barlinnie Prison in Glasgow the men are employed upon the land, trenching, lining, preparing for potatoes, and such like. On my visit there were a number busy breaking stones.

6523. (Mr. Simpson.) There is a considerable amount of land round that prison?—Yes. A number were employed in washing clothes and book-binding, and all these varied trades.

6524. (Chairman.) Do you think that the sentences given by magistrates are really a deterrent?—No, they are not.

6525. What is your opinion of short sentences?—They do more harm than good.

6526. What is the shortest time you would send a man to gaol for?—On his third conviction I would send him for the full period.

6527. What is that?—Sixty days.

6528. Would you ever send a man to gaol for less than a fortnight?—No.

6529. Would a month be better?—I believe it would. Personally, I believe in rigorous treatment for that class of people.

6530. Then what is your opinion of the short sentence?—That it is of no earthly use. It only cleans their skin and purifies their clothing, and enables them to come out again to revert to their old process.

6531. They come out very thirsty?—They do.

6532. Is there any indication in Scotland of vagrants committing offences in order to be sent to prison?—I do not think so. Personally, I have not heard of any, except two of our celebrated cases. These happened to be women, and they broke a window occasionally just for the fun of the thing. One of them has been before Parliament already in Sir Charles Cameron's Report—Jane McPolland. She is as lively as ever.

6533. I think the police take a half-yearly census of vagrants or homeless persons?—They take a census in June and in December. It is a census of the vagrants, beggars, and migratory poor on tramp within the counties, cities, and police burghs of Scotland. The last return is for 1904, and it is just newly published.

6534. Does not that give a total of about 9,000?—There were 8,252 in June.

6535. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Is that males and females?—Yes, including children.

6536. There is no authorised legal provision for these people in Scotland?—No.

6537. There is the unauthorised provision which is made by the police in the large towns?—Yes.

6538. Otherwise there is nothing?—I know of nothing. There are certain country parishes where they have a sort of parochial lodging-house.

6539. Shelter places?—Yes. These are more for persons who might become ill, or something of that kind.

6540. Do you think it is desirable that provision should be made for these people?—No.

6541. You would prefer that they should be dealt with under the criminal law, and, if habituals, sent for long periods of detention?—I would much rather see these people confined for periods in a reformatory or labour colony. If you refer to pages 30 and 31 of the pamphlet which I have put into your hands you will find what I suggest.

6542. You give a description of a little labour colony near Glasgow?—Yes, down Dumfries way. What I suggest, roughly speaking, is some joint board of the town council and the parish council, and that the police should lay hands upon all vagrants, beggars, and such people who ought to come under the surveillance of the poor law authorities, and all bona fide unemployed workmen and such like should be put on to a labour colony for the purpose of their becoming self-supporting.

6543. Would you do that all at once?—It would require to be gradual.

6544. Otherwise you would be swamped with the numbers?—I do not think so. If such a thing had been started in August last we would have been swamped with the numbers; but if it is well advertised that the tramps will get their deserts, that the idle loafer, the man who goes about propagating disease and setting fire to barns, will be locked up, but that the decent, well-doing, self-respecting man will be taken charge of and put on his feet again, I do not think the numbers would be overwhelming.

6545. In Scotland the law of settlement is very strictly enforced?—It was altered under the Act of 1898 when it was reduced from five years to three.

6546. What I mean is that each parish takes full advantage of the law of settlement?—Yes.

6547. You do not relieve anyone who does not belong

Mr. James Russell Motion.

25 May 1905.

Mr. James
Russell
Motion.

25 May 1905.

to you?—That is so; but I would qualify that by stating that the parish must relieve whoever is ill, and they have recourse against the parish of settlement.

6548. They take care that they do have recourse?—Yes.

6549. You do not give away much?—That is so.

6550. That would make a difficulty in dealing with persons like tramps; there would be continual disputes as to the parish the tramp belonged to?—I do not think so. The whole tramp or unemployed question relates round the large towns to a certain population, and if these were dealt with in the way I have indicated you would reduce the vagrant population to nothing.

6551. If you locked them up?—Yes, but there would be no trouble about settlement at all.

6552. Why not?—Why should there be any trouble? Those people who are bona fide poor law cases have their settlement already, because they are known to the poor law authorities.

6553. But the man who walks from place to place?—Whatever parish he may be settled in under this arrangement would find recourse under the existing laws.

6554. Who do you suggest should manage the labour colony?—A joint committee of town councils and parish councils.

6555. Not the police?—No. Able-bodied persons able to work would be sent to the labour colonies as the new board might determine.

6556. Who would send them?—The new board created under this scheme of mine.

6557. Would the board send them or would they be sent through the magistrates?—The board would send them.

6558. As a poor law matter?—Yes.

6559. Do you propose to confer on that board powers of detention?—Practically so.

6560. So a man would be detained by a board of elected persons. Would you have a formal trial of the man?—Yes.

6561. Before this administrative board?—“That all other persons who are not able to work, who have no visible means of subsistence, who may be dependent upon charity, all vagrants, beggars, inebriates, &c., as defined in existing statutes, all beggars, whether singing or selling, be taken before a magistrate and committed to a poor-house for fixed periods. That all such persons may be conveyed to a poor-house for not more than one week till the board decide as to their disposal.”

6562. The new board?—Yes.

6563. And the joint board would decide without further reference to the magistrates?—They would decide whether this case should go to the magistrates or should go direct to a labour colony.

6564. Supposing a man went to a labour colony, how long would you keep him there?—That would be in the discretion of the board managing the labour colony.

6565. The man would have to stay?—That is a condition; he would be required to sign an obligation that he would stay for a minimum period.

6566. (Mr. Simpson.) You would give your new board power to send a case to a labour colony for an indefinite period?—Yes, and to poorhouses that are not fully occupied. At the present moment in Scotland we have accommodation for 16,000 indoor poor. Probably there are only 9,000 of these beds occupied at the present moment. I say that there is no use in connection with inebriates and colonies and so on spending more money on stone and lime. The Local Government Board should order the removal of two or three cases in a poorhouse, and then utilise the empty poorhouse for this purpose. There are poorhouses in the north of Scotland with two or three patients and a staff large enough to look after thirty patients.

6567. It would not be worth while sending a man to the north of Scotland unless you could keep him a considerable time?—I am mentioning the north of Scotland as an extreme case, but there are plenty of cases round the neighbourhood where we could transfer from one poorhouse to another.

6568. (Captain Showers.) You mean to take the inmates all out of one poorhouse and turn that poorhouse into a colony?—Yes. Fill it up.

6569. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you know of any institution that is being run at present on the lines on which you would wish your labour colony to be run?—The only one is Locharbriggs.

6570. Is that in Dumfries?—Yes, in the parish of Ruthwell. It is run by a philanthropic society in Glasgow.

6571. What sort of people go there?—I will submit the cases later on. I can give the history of six or eight people that were taken as a trial and were sent to Locharbriggs. I went and saw them, and I will be able to tell you about them afterwards. Roughly speaking, they were not a success and they should have been kept there.

6572. At Glasgow?—No, Locharbriggs, or some other place. My point is that they were safer there than at Glasgow.

6573. There is no power of detaining at the colony?—No.

6574. Did they leave?—No, we took them away.

6575. I suppose Glasgow parish paid something for their maintenance?—We paid 6s. or 7s. a week for their maintenance. I took the chairman of my board and the convener of the committee down to see the place. We interviewed each man and we found that we were simply throwing away money. They would have been as comfortable and well kept in our poorhouse. The trial did not succeed; they did not rise to the occasion themselves.

6576. The labour colony that you would propose would really be a complete novelty in Scotland?—Yes.

6577. Do you not think that any such colony would necessarily have to be experimental, supposing every parish council started one?—My proposal is limited to burghs and parishes with a population of, say 50,000 to 150,000. It would not be required in every parish. I am for more elasticity in administration. There is far too little of that just now. Each point is left to its own parish, as it were. It may be a parish with a population of 300, or 3,000 or 300,000. That is what I have been girding against. The Local Government Board cannot scratch a pen and say “This shall be.” All that ought to be done under the agency of the Local Government Board. They ought to be able to shift this man to some other place, and so on. They should have larger areas of administration. At the present time we are simply playing with the thing.

6578. As you have a combination of parishes for the purposes of a poorhouse, you might have a combination for a labour colony?—Yes.

6579. (Chairman.) Would not your proposed labour colonies be like an ordinary rural poorhouse?—No, I have never looked at them in that light. The colony I have in view is for a decent working man who has fallen out of employment.

6580. For what class would you use your unused accommodation in the poorhouses?—For the class of people that are persistently bothering us in the police courts and tramping through the country—the 8,252.

6581. Do you not think that the presence of that class in a country poorhouse would be a mischief to the usual inmates?—They are the same class; they come from the same class.

6582. (Captain Showers.) What would you do with the children?—There are very few of them here.

6583. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) For how long would you commit a man to this place; for two years?—I prefer the sheriff to a local magistrate. He would have the whole circumstances of the case before him, and he would judge whether it was a case for two years or not. At the end of the two years the man should come up again before the sheriff with a report from the master of the poor-house.

6584. Would there be any difficulty as regards the compulsory detention of these men?—The whole difficulty we have to contend with is this fetish of the liberty of the subject. That is the curse of the whole country.

6585. There would be no difficulty?—No.

6586. I suppose it means building a wall?—No, I would not build a wall at all. If a man goes away he is liable to be apprehended and punished.

6587. So you think there would be no difficulty?—That is so.

6588. (Mr. Simpson.) It would be rather hard to distinguish between a poorhouse used for that purpose and a prison. It would really be a prison under the management of the poor law authorities instead of a prison under the Prison Commissioners?—It would be a prison without the cast-iron administration of the prison.

6589. There would be the same necessity for safe custody?—It is simply the turning of a key on a man for his own safety and for the safety of the public outside.

6590. But you have to turn the key on him just as you would turn it on him if he were sent to prison?—I admit that, but not to the same rigorous extent. I would not build walls as in a prison, nor would I enforce silence and all that sort of thing.

6591. If a man escaped it would not matter so much as in the case of a man escaping from prison?—No, I would not care though they all escaped, so long as they did not go on the roads and beg.

6592. If they did that you would catch them and send them back?—Certainly. The Chairman referred to the number of vagrants being about 9,000. My interpretation of these figures is that they are rather higher. There are 8,252 in June, and 6,987 in December, making a total of about 15,000. I have all along gone on the assumption that you must put the two figures together, and I say that there is a floating population of vagrants of somewhere about 13,000. On the other hand, some say that in that way they are counted twice, but my experience of that class is that the man and woman found on tramp in June are not found on tramp in December; they are in our poorhouses. Those that are on tramp in June are a different class from those on tramp in December.

6593. (Captain Showers.) What would you do with the children on tramp; would you get power to take them away and educate them?—Yes, I would board out every child.

6594. So that it could become a decent member of society?—Yes. I would have applied to Scotland the provisions of the English Act of 1889 where power was given to take charge of children up to eighteen years of age. We feel that the worst period of a boy's or girl's life is between fourteen and eighteen.

6595. Have you any inspectors under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act in Scotland?—Yes. We have a society in Glasgow with branches all over the country, even in such a small town as Kirkcaldy.

6596. Do they follow up tramp children at all?—They are taking a wider interest in connection with them now. Dr. William Mitchell of the Glasgow school board has been the pioneer in efforts to secure these children—the children of tinkers, and such like. Efforts have been made to get the assistance of Parliament towards that end.

6597. Do you not think that it would be a good thing if we could institute an identification of tramps, such as by finger-prints, so that you could prove whether a man has been up two or three times before a magistrate, and then give him a serious sentence?—Yes, any means whereby you can reform that man, or prevent others from following in his footsteps.

6598. (Dr. Downes.) Have you had any trouble in the spread of disease by tramps?—I have read of that.

6599. But in your own experience in Glasgow?—No, but from what I have seen of these tramps I say that they are bound to spread disease. At the time of the smallpox epidemic I placed an officer at the entrance to the relieving department to examine as far as he could every applicant who entered the building, and to see whether he showed any appearance of smallpox. If there was any doubt the applicant was taken before a medical officer. Concurrent with that, we had an officer—sometimes a man, sometimes a woman—with water and a towel and a sponge to take the dirt off the arm to see whether the person had ever been vaccinated. I am convinced that a great deal of disease, such as smallpox, is carried by these people; indeed, I suppose, that that is an accepted fact. There are also the ravages of syphilis.

6600. Who regulates the common lodging-houses in Glasgow?—The sanitary inspector.

6601. Are there any municipal lodging-houses in Glasgow?—Yes, there are probably half a dozen.

6602. Are they doing anything to improve the common lodging-houses generally?—They have improved them. In the sanitary inspector's report which has just been published he indicates that four or five lodging-houses have been taken off the register, and one has been put on, and at present there are over 9,600 beds in these different lodging-houses.

6603. Are these under some special Act?—The Public Health Act.

6604. A general Act?—Yes, and the Glasgow Police Act as well.

6605. You have one free shelter in Glasgow; by whom is that provided?—The Night Asylum has been in existence since 1833. It was designed originally for the accommodation of workmen and their wives and families who were going from place to place to find work.

6606. Out of what funds was it provided?—By public subscription.

6607. And it has now come to be used for tramps?—Very much so.

6608. Have you any other free shelters besides that?—Within the last winter a free shelter has been opened by the Church Army, and also one by the Established Church of Scotland.

6609. Is there any free distribution of food?—Yes.

6610. Who gives that?—The Corporation.

6611. How long have they done that?—From 13th January to 25th February.

6612. What legalises that action?—The funds for the employment of the unemployed, which ran up to probably £14,000, were taken out of what is called the "Common Good." That is a fund peculiar to Royal Burghs in Scotland. It is composed of what we in Scotland call mortifications, estates that have fallen into a Royal Burgh, as for instance the Island of Shuna which was left for the general benefit of the University and Corporation of Glasgow. That goes into the common good. They have estates in Fifeshire and other places, and then so much comes from the tramway profits. Out of that common good they, in the first place, paid all the wages and outlays in connection with the unemployed and the soup kitchen tickets, and then it is divided between the statute labour for paving the streets, and so on. There is no statutory authority for this. I should like to mention that in connection with the soup kitchens I saw the men who partook of the soup; they are just the ordinary ins and outs, the tramp class, and not working men at all. We found one man backing another's line for a soup ticket. Some would not even go after they got the ticket.

6613. (Chairman.) You say that the people who are on the tramp in December are not the same as those who are on the tramp in June. Would not those on tramp in December be also on tramp in June?—No, I think they are a different class of people.

6614. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) What becomes of them in June?—The men who are on tramp in December are working in June. Take for instance the west of Scotland from Irvine down to Ballantrae; there would be thousands of these tramps lifting potatoes and that is the only time they work.

6615. (Chairman.) You mean that the hardy tramp who works in June will be tramping in December?—Yes.

6616. You take the total vagrant population in Scotland at much more than the one night count?—Yes, the one night count does not disclose the exact state of affairs.

6617. Do you get many English tramps up here?—Yes, a good many. The worst are the Irish tramps, or the Scottish tramps who are the offspring of the Irish immigrant of fifty years ago.

6618. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you get any foreigners?—Very few.

Mr. James Russell Motion.

25 May 1905.

MR. DAVID DEWAR, called ; and Examined.

Mr. David
Dewar.
25 May 1905.

6619. (Chairman.) You have been chief constable of Dundee for many years?—Yes. I have been chief constable for twenty-eight years.

6620. Dundee is a large town of 160,000 inhabitants?—Yes.

6621. Have you any local Acts with regard to vagrancy in Dundee?—We have a local Police Act containing provisions in regard to begging and vagrancy, and then we have the public general Statutes.

6622. What public general Statutes are there in Scotland which relate to begging?—There is the Burgh Police Act of 1892 which applies to all burghs except the five largest.

6623. Who have their own special Acts?—Yes. Then there is the Prevention of Crimes Act which incorporates section 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824.

6624. That is applicable to all Scotland?—Yes, it is the old English Statute made applicable to Scotland. Then there is the Trespass (Scotland) Act of 1865.

6625. That is an Act practically for putting down camping-out on land?—And occupying premises without the permission of the owner, dwelling-houses and out-houses either in town or country.

6626. (Dr. Downes.) Would sleeping on a staircase come under that?—Yes. Then there are the Industrial Schools Act and the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act which have some clauses with regard to begging.

6627. (Chairman.) The administration of the law is very diverse all over Scotland?—Yes. The provisions of the Burgh Police Act do not apply to the counties. The counties have no statutory provision enabling them to deal with the offence of begging, unless it is masterful begging or exposing wounds and deformities as is provided for by the Act of 1824 which I have quoted.

6628. So that begging other than masterful begging is not dealt with as an offence?—No.

6629. In Dundee do you as a rule apprehend for begging?—Yes.

6630. And sleeping out?—We do, for contraventions of the Trespass Act—occupying premises without authority.

6631. Would that include sleeping on a staircase?—Yes. We have cases of that kind every now and again. I have here a statement of the cases we had last year of begging and vagrancy, showing how each case was disposed of.

6632. Who are the police authority in Dundee?—The town council.

6633. Are the magistrates appointed from members of the town council?—The magistrates are all members of the town council and are appointed by the town council. We have the Lord Provost and six magistrates. These six magistrates preside in the police court week about by turn. They have an arrangement among themselves.

6634. The town council are the police authority?—They are.

6635. Do they work through a watch committee?—There is a police committee, but they do not have the same powers as the watch committee in England.

6636. Have you any recourse to paid magistrates?—We have none except the sheriff of the county, who is also sheriff of the city and has jurisdiction both civil and criminal.

6637. Does he exercise any powers in regard to what we call petty sessions?—He does for the county, but not for the burgh. Under the Burgh Police Act, the magistrates are bound to remit cases of theft to the sheriff where the accused person has been twice previously convicted, and also cases of housebreaking, murder or other crimes of a serious or aggravated nature. These must go to the sheriff; they are detailed in section 459 of the Burgh Police Act. It is only aggravated cases that are sent to the sheriff.

6638. Take an offence like begging, what sort of sentence do your magistrates give?—They vary very much according to the circumstances. We had forty-three prosecutions for begging in 1904, and about one half of that number were admonished (see Appendix XVI.).

6639. And let off?—Yes.

6640. The biggest sentence I can see is six weeks, and admonished afterwards?—That is continued for six weeks.

6641. Sentence delayed for six weeks?—Yes, they delayed pronouncing sentence for six weeks. At the end of the six weeks the individual is expected to come up, and in the meantime the police and the Salvation Army officer or the Prisoners' Aid Society officer report on how he has been behaving during these six weeks. If the reports are favourable, he is admonished, but if the reports are not favourable he is treated as if there had been no continuation.

6642. (Mr. Simpson.) Has he to find pledges during these six weeks?—No. A pledge is only used when there is a deposit of money or some article of value, but we can take bonds of caution.

6643. (Chairman.) In this list there are only two sentences over thirty days. It seems that most of the cases were dismissed and admonished. Do your magistrates have any common understanding as to what sentences they give for this class of case?—No, but they have alongside of them on the bench either the town clerk or one of his deputies as assessor to keep them right on points of law, and it is quite usual for them to consult with the legal assessor before pronouncing judgment. That is the only way in which we can have the sentences uniform.

6644. Suppose a man is sentenced to five or seven days, what gaol does he go to?—The prison of Dundee, which is next door to the court; it is just through the wall from the police cells.

6645. Does the day of conviction count as a day, and also the day of discharge?—The day of conviction counts as a day, but not the day of discharge.

6646. So five days really means five days?—Yes. As a rule, prisoners sentenced to five days are detained in prison till the morning of the sixth day.

6647. And seven days means seven days?—Yes.

6648. Here is a man who has had fifty-two convictions for drunkenness and theft—a worthless creature; he is not able-bodied and he is admonished?—The probability is the Prisoners' Aid Society undertook to get him taken to the poorhouse.

6649. Have you any means in the way of compulsion as to keeping a person in the poorhouse?—No.

6650. Would that be desirable?—Yes, very desirable.

6651. So that he should not be allowed to wander to his own hurt?—That is so. Some such power is very much required. There is a class of persons who go between the prison and the poorhouse.

6652. In your list there is the case of a man thirty-nine years old with twenty-four convictions for theft and assault—a lazy character; he is charged with begging and he gets ten days. What would you do with a man of that sort?—The police have no powers to deal with him until he commits a new offence.

6653. You can only deal with him when appearing for a particular crime?—Yes.

6654. You cannot deal with him as an individual in want of treatment?—No.

6655. You have handed in another list (see Appendix XVI.) which shows sixty-two convictions for vagrancy and contraventions of the Trespass Act?—Yes. One third were admonished. The great majority of these were old offenders.

6656. Loafers?—Yes.

6657. You are of opinion that these people should be compulsorily detained for some time?—Yes.

6658. The present way of dealing with them being thoroughly unsatisfactory?—Yes.

6659. A good many of them I see were fined 7s. 6d. or three days imprisonment. Do they pay the fine?—Scarcely ever.

6660. I see one woman, "67th appearance, prostitution," was fined 7s. 6d. or three days?—We have been taking more drastic measures with drunken women of late under the new Licensing Act.

6661. You are of opinion generally that some further legislation is required for dealing with that class of case?—Yes.

6662. (Dr. Downes.) Are these mostly Dundee people?—A considerable number of them are strangers.

6663. (Mr. Simpson.) They are almost all Scotch?—Yes. A good many Irish names appear among them, but these are only the names of persons of Irish parentage. There was a great Irish immigration to Dundee some fifty years ago.

6664. (Chairman.) In your statement you refer to a night refuge for homeless persons. That was intended for persons travelling through Dundee?—Yes.

6665. A considerable number are said to be bona fide searchers for work?—Yes.

6666. That night refuge works with the Prisoners' Aid Society?—Yes, in fact the superintendent of the night refuge is also agent for the Prisoners' Aid Society.

6667. There is apparently no qualification for admission except that you must not be drunk?—And you must be destitute.

6668. Are the persons searched?—I don't think so.

6669. The numbers relieved are quite considerable?—Yes, although the number per night is not very large; it is only about twenty-five.

6670. Is that place ever quite full?—Yes, it has been full of late. There are some new water works being made at Arbroath, about sixteen miles from Dundee, and there are also new tramway lines about to be made between Dundee and Monifieth.

6671. Other than that night refuge, are there any means of dealing with the homeless wayfarers?—No, the only places to which they can go are the common lodging-houses, and they must be able to pay their way there.

6672. What is the charge at the common lodging-houses?—4d. per night.

6673. Are those houses inspected?—Yes, by the sanitary officers.

6674. Have the police anything to do with them?—No, but the police have the power of entry.

6675. Do you ever get applicants at the police station for a night's lodging?—Very seldom now, but before that institution was opened, they all came to us, and they were supplied with tickets to give them a night's lodging at these common lodging-houses.

6676. That is twenty years ago?—Yes.

6677. Do you know if a considerable number of tickets of that sort were given?—Yes, a very considerable number.

6678. More than the numbers now in the night refuge?—I should say about the same number.

6679. Do you think that is sufficient provision in the town for homeless vagrants or wanderers?—I think it is sufficient. The accommodation is not of a very attractive kind. They have to sleep on the bare board with a rug to cover them. If they were made more comfortable I am afraid that the numbers would increase very considerably.

6680. If it was a municipal institution do you think the numbers would increase?—I scarcely think so.

6681. That is the usual tendency?—The common lodging-houses in Dundee are all run by private individuals. We have no corporation lodging-houses. This night refuge is a purely charitable institution.

6682. Would you be in favour of having municipal lodging-houses?—I have an idea that municipal lodging-houses would be preferable to private lodging-houses, because the object of the keeper of a private lodging-house is to make money off his customers, whereas if it was a corporation lodging-house, it would be partly the duty of the superintendent to try and find work for the customers and to get young persons and others restored to friends and benefactors; in fact to elevate them to a higher plane than being inmates of such lodging-houses, and thus lessen the number.

6683. In dealing with this class of homeless wanderers do you find that the police come in contact with the parish authorities in any way?—We have frequent communication with the parish authorities, but it is of the most cordial kind.

6684. In what sort of case?—Cases of the infirm. Of course able-bodied persons are not entitled to parish relief in Scotland. We come into contact with the parish authorities in connection with aged or young persons, or persons who are not able-bodied, and we have found them always ready to co-operate with us.

6685. There would be the case of a person who was begging and who was not able-bodied?—Yes, and not a fit subject for prison.

6686. In such a case you communicate with the inspector of poor?—Yes.

6687. And he gives them admission to the poorhouse?—Yes. They won't go to the poorhouse if they can keep out at all, and there is no power to keep them there against their will.

6688. Some people think that there should be power of detaining them?—Yes, I think there ought to be some such power.

6689. Power to detain a certain sort of case?—Yes, these people who are in the habit of going between the prison and the poorhouse, and going about begging. As a rule they are dissipated.

6690. In your opinion, a further step should be taken in making special provision for this class in the shape of colonies?—Yes, but not specially for this class; it would be for habitual offenders. I have a list of 148 individuals who have been upwards of twenty times before the police magistrate.

6691. For small offences?—All sorts of offences, but not real criminals—begging, importuning, etc.

6692. Vagrancy and cognate offences?—Yes. I had the particulars in regard to each individual, whether able-bodied or not, and I asked my superintendents, who had a personal knowledge of these individuals, to indicate to me what would be the proper way to deal with these persons in their view, having indicated my own view that the able-bodied should be sent to work on farm colonies, that the habitual drunkards should be sent to inebriate reformatories, that the abandoned women should be sent to Magdalene institutions, and the aged or infirm to the poorhouses.

6693. With compulsory confinement in each case?—On indeterminate sentences.

6694. What do you mean by that?—They would be sent, say, to a colony and liberated when the directors of that colony consider that they had improved morally and physically, sufficiently to enable them to go at large to earn an honest livelihood, and be likely to continue to do so.

6695. The procedure in the first instance would be that they would be sent to one of these institutions by the judicial authority?—Yes.

6696. And having been sent there they would not be entitled to discharge themselves unless the administrative authority consented?—Yes. And they would not consent unless they were of opinion that the inmate could earn his own living. But in addition to the farm colony something is required. I may mention that in Scotland we have persons committed during His Majesty's pleasure for very serious crimes when it is found that they are insane and not responsible for their actions. A good many of these people improve while in prison; they improve to such an extent that the prison authority licenses such persons for liberty on getting a guarantee from two responsible persons that they will look after them and report if there is a lapse or any appearance of anything of that kind. Now something of that sort would be required with a farm colony. It would be quite a mistake to send people to a farm colony or any of these institutions that I have indicated for a specified period if they are just to be allowed out and to do for themselves, because however firm their resolutions may be in the farm colony, they will on obtaining their liberty gravitate towards their

Mr. David Dewar.

25 May 1905.

Mr. David Dewar.

25 May 1905.

former haunts and associates if left to themselves and their own resources, and will be almost certain to fall again.

6697. You are not very hopeful?—No, not if they get back to their old haunts, to the slums. It is impossible that they can keep right there.

6698. When you say "farm colony" you mean farm or labour colony?—Yes, quite so.

6699. It would be rather a costly matter to detain these persons?—I do not think so, because these people are able-bodied and able to work. Of course, I am not competent to go into all these matters.

6700. But it would necessitate some expense, and a good deal of trouble?—But the prison would be rid of all these persons.

6701. Do you think that the evil is so great as to justify the local authorities or the State undertaking the expense of these institutions?—Yes. I think our present system is absolutely wrong. The people are having harm done to them by being sent to prison for two or three days.

6702. And it costs something?—Yes. In 1903, the average cost per prisoner in local prisons in Scotland was £20 10s. 10d., in Perth general lunatic department and State inebriate reformatory, £29 1s. 4d., and in Peterhead general convict prison, £44 10s. 5d.

6703. In Dundee you are fortunate in the fact that your prison is next door to the court?—Yes. The £20 10s. 10d. is the average cost in all the prisons in Scotland except the prisons at Perth and Peterhead I mentioned.

6704. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you know whether that £20 10s. 10d. includes the cost of taking the prisoner to the prison?—It includes that.

6705. The police do not pay the cost of taking the prisoner to the prison?—No, the prison authorities recoup the police for doing it.

6706. (Chairman.) Do you think that short sentences are a deterrent?—Not to any extent.

6707. Does a man mind going to prison?—Not an habitual offender. Of course, a person who is going to prison for the first time does not like it, and it may have some effect on him for the first time.

6708. Do persons deliberately commit offences to get into prison?—Very seldom. I have known of a starving man breaking a window for the purpose of getting into prison.

6709. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) You have heard of people saying that they prefer the prison?—Yes.

6710. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you have any able-bodied vagrants applying at your police stations for shelter in Dundee?—Very seldom, because it has become so well known that there is a night refuge, and we do not keep such persons over-night at our police offices. We hold that the police cells are for prisoners, and not for the accommodation of destitute persons. In fact we have not got the accommodation; it is restricted enough for prisoners.

6711. Did you give them orders for admission to common lodging-houses?—Yes.

6712. Who paid for that?—The town council.

6713. Out of police funds?—Yes.

6714. Do you do that now?—No, there is no necessity for it with this institution.

6715. So really the police were an agency for distributing what we might call charity?—Yes, the police authority, whether they had that power or not, took that course.

6716. Because the Poor Law did not recognise these persons as subjects for relief?—No, it did not recognise the able-bodied.

6717. Every year you send to the inspector of constabulary a return of vagrants which is published in his annual report?—Yes.

6718. How is the count taken: where do you go to take the count?—We go to the night asylum, to the prison, to the lodging-houses, and to the public parks. We go all over the place.

6719. In the prisons do you take the opinion of the governor as to whether a certain man is a vagrant or not?—Yes.

6720. He estimates what proportion belongs to the vagrant class?—Yes.

6721. In lodging-houses how do you get at the proportion of those to be called vagrants?—It is left very much to the discretion of the officers. We have people living in the lodging-houses for a very considerable period and we do not look on these as vagrants. We consider as vagrants those people who go about from town to town.

6722. At the lodging-house does the keeper ask a man where he comes from?—Yes, if he does not know the individual.

6723. And does he enter the information in a book?—No, I do not think so. Of course you cannot call this return absolutely accurate.

6724. Do you suppose that it varies in different parts of the country?—I think that the same system is adopted throughout the country.

6725. It is not only inmates of a particular institution that you count, but you go wherever you think you may find a vagrant?—Yes.

6726. (Dr. Downes.) Would it include men sleeping in farmers' lofts and such like places?—Yes, if they are found.

6727. (Chairman.) Do you think that the number in June or December represents the number of vagrants in Scotland, or do you think that the two numbers should be added together?—I think there are a great many in June who are not here in December, but then there are some that will be counted twice over.

6728. It has been suggested that a good many people who tramp in winter are working in summer?—That is so.

6729. So the numbers would be greater than they appear in this return?—Yes. I suppose you are aware of the inquiry made by the Scottish Committee in 1895.

6730. Yes, I have the Report with your evidence contained in it?—The information in that Report applies no doubt very much at the present time.

6731. (Mr. Simpson.) There has been no particular change in circumstances since 1895?—This matter of farm colonies has come more under notice. I hand in a return which I got from the Superintendent of Judicial Statistics as to offences against the Vagrancy and Trespass Acts (see Appendix XVI.). It is rather a valuable return.

6732. There is one thing which is perhaps rather remotely connected with the subject about which we are inquiring. You are procurator-fiscal for Dundee?—Yes.

6733. You decide who is to be prosecuted, and you conduct the prosecutions?—Yes.

6734. Is that usual?—It is usual in the smaller burghs. It was usual in the larger burghs up till twenty years ago, but the system has been changed in the larger cities.

6735. They have separate procurators-fiscal now?—Yes.

6736. Where there is a separate procurator-fiscal and the police arrest a man for begging, they have to go to the fiscal to bring him before the magistrate?—They are required to supply the fiscal with information to enable him to make out his charge.

6737. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) The police cannot make a charge direct?—It must be through the fiscal. The "burgh prosecutor" is the name in burghs. Of course where parties are apprehended, the subordinate officers prepare the complaint, and everything is cut and dried when I come into my office in the morning. Half an hour before the court meets is enough to enable me to see how the cases stand. In regard to offences where the individual is not apprehended, there is written information laid before me in every case, and there is not an individual cited to appear before the magistrate until I mark on that information whether or not the case is to be brought up. Of course the complaint requires to be signed by me; but I give my instructions and everything is done to see that the case is relevant. In regard to juvenile delinquency, I use very considerable discretion in the way of not bringing children before the court, and, being chief of the police and prosecutor, I am enabled to use a discretion which I could not use as chief of the police alone. We get the parents and the children, and we give them a private warning instead of bringing them before the magistrate.

6738. In your statement of evidence you draw attention to farm colonies that have been started, one at Locharrow and another by the Church of Scotland?—Yes.

6739. Both of these are purely philanthropic?—Yes.

6740. They do not deal with the vagrant—who is the nuisance—so much as the bona fide unemployed man?—They do not.

6741. So they would not be altogether models for a labour colony to which the criminal tramp would be sent?—I do not think so.

6742. The discipline would require to be stricter and the supervision more rigid?—Yes.

6743. (Captain Showers.) Do your police act as relieving officers?—No.

6744. Then they would have nothing to do with regard to the searching of tramps?—No; but of course if these persons are apprehended on any charge they are searched.

6745. They do not have anything to do with the tramps?—Not unless they commit some crime or offence.

6746. Do you think it would be a good thing if you had some means of identification of tramps, such as by finger-prints?—I scarcely think that it would be necessary.

6747. You do not have a sufficient number of tramps in Scotland to justify taking that trouble?—I do not think so.

6748. (Dr. Downes.) I see that you state that the number of convictions under the Vagrancy and Trespass Acts has increased of late years?—Yes.

6749. Can you account for that in any way?—The increase takes place chiefly in dull times. We have had a period of dull trade for the last year at all events.

6750. Is it commensurate with the increase of vagrancy?—I do not think the increase is very marked, except when there is dull trade.

6751. The return indicates that convictions of late years have become more numerous?—Yes, they are tending upwards.

6752. That is in Scotland?—Yes.

6753. Is food ever given by the police to destitute cases that are lodged by them?—The police do not lodge such cases.

6754. But if a man commits an offence, would he then be fed by the police?—Yes. They get rolls and milk, and sometimes coffee if there is a woman and a child.

6755. Out of what fund does that come?—The police fund.

6756. Have you any returns of deaths from starvation in Scotland?—We seldom hear of such cases, but they do occur sometimes.

6757. What would be the procedure in the event of a death occurring from starvation; what inquiry would you make?—The procurator-fiscal for the sheriff's court makes investigation into all cases of sudden death. I can scarcely conceive of anyone dying of starvation in Scotland if he has made his wants known, but there are extreme cases where a person may die of starvation in consequence of his not having made his poverty known.

6758. There is machinery for inquiry into such cases?—Yes.

6759. (Chairman.) The persons who die of starvation are mostly cases of outdoor relief?—I never heard of such a case.

6760. (Dr. Downes.) Who, in your opinion, should manage the farm colonies?—My idea is that the farm colonies ought to be provided by the State. My reason for saying so is this: in 1877 the prisons in Scotland were taken over by the Government and the local authorities were relieved of that expense; but in the Act it was provided that in the event of any local authority not having sufficient accommodation for the prisoners that they had at that time, they were bound to pay £120 in respect of each prisoner belonging to the Prison Authority for whom cell accommodation was not provided when the Act came into operation. In the county of Forfar, in which Dundee is situated, the local authorities had to pay over to the Government £3,750 in respect of deficient accommodation. The total amount so paid by local authorities in Scotland was £34,139 16s. 0d. Now if farm colonies are established they will accommodate the persons who are now being sent to prison. It is the same class of individuals. I therefore think it would be just that the Government should undertake the cost.

6761. And they should administer?—I think so.

6762. (Chairman.) The class of case you are talking about would probably be extremely troublesome in prison, just as it is out of prison?—I do not think that such cases would prove very troublesome.

6763. The removal of such cases to farm colonies would make the prison administration easier?—Yes, in fact the prison would be left chiefly to the hardened criminals, men and women who have made up their minds to earn their livelihood by a course of crime.

Captain HARDY McHARDY, R.N., called; and Examined.

6764. (Chairman.) You are chief constable of Ayrshire?—Yes.

6765. Ayrshire is a county where there is a special organisation for dealing with vagrants?—We did establish an organisation in 1885, and have carried it on since, but it has lapsed into being very little used, as the return I hand in will show (see Appendix XVI.). It is still useful, however. It consumes nothing; it costs nothing to keep up, and those who find it useful get the benefit of it.

6766. It was a system of giving tickets for shelter and food to vagrants?—Yes.

6767. The tickets were bought from a charitable society by subscribers?—They were bought by any of the public.

6768. The theory was that you should give them to vagrants instead of giving alms?—Yes. If anybody was applied to by a wayfarer who he thought should be relieved, then he would give the relief by the system of this society—that is to say, by giving a lodging ticket in the case of shelter being required, such ticket only being negotiable through the police.

6769. What do you mean by “through the police”?—The vagrant would have to present that lodging ticket at the police office, to be exchanged there for an order on a lodging-house.

6770. Were those lodging tickets popular?—Yes; they are a great convenience. The difficulty that has been found in working the system is that such a limited number provide themselves with tickets, and it gets passed round among the wayfarers where they can get the tickets, with the result that an inconvenient number apply to the same house. That disturbs the servants and the whole arrangement of the house, and it is given up because of the nuisance.

6771. Is that the reason why the system is not so extensive as it was?—I think that has a great deal to do with it. At first when it was started the police called upon householders, giving them an opportunity of providing themselves with the tickets of the society, but after the existence of the system had become generally known I did not think it was justifiable for the police to continue this, as they might be thought to be too importuning in troubling the public to provide themselves with these tickets. I may say that I have tickets in my pocket just now. For the last twenty years I have carried the tickets, and yet I do not give any appreciable number away. I see that the counter-foil of the first ticket shows that it was given away on 8th November last, and only three tickets have been given away since, the last of them being on the 12th of this month.

Mr. David Dewar.

25 May 1905.

Captain Hardy McHardy.

25 May 1905.

*Captain
Hardy
McHardy.*

25 May 1905.

6772. Those are all the people who have begged from you?—No, it is only those of the people who have begged from me that I have not liked to refuse to assist.

6773. I suppose vagrants are much keener to get tickets for lodging-houses than tickets for food?—Yes, with the tickets for food the most they can get is twopence worth of bread. They can get a pennyworth with each ticket, but they cannot negotiate more than two tickets with the baker. The lodging-house ticket may be as good as fivepence or sixpence.

6774. Anybody can get a lodging if he has money in his pocket?—It is in their discretion whether they present to the police for exchange the lodging ticket given by the public.

6775. Would the police search a man who came asking for an order?—Not unless the circumstances justified it. There have been cases in which money amounting to upwards of a pound has been found on a man, and there have been instances of people coming to the police station who have been seen putting something down outside, and it has been found that it was money.

6776. Of course you must have occasional cases of abuse of any such system as this?—That is so; but the negotiation of the ticket at the police office is a check, and the constabulary record the reasons for refusing a ticket, and the public are informed with regard to the tickets that they distribute that they can learn at any time at the police office how many tickets have been presented and with what result. The number that have been refused and the occasion for refusing them is always recorded.

6777. I think you had two forms of tickets?—There was a strong feeling among some after getting up from a good square meal themselves that they did not like to give away to a destitute wayfarer only tickets for twopence worth of bread, and for that reason we started, experimentally for negotiation in Ayr only, a ticket that would give food to the value of 2½d. at the coffee house or the baker's shop. It was arranged that with it the wayfarer should get bread and cheese, or bread and soup, or tea and bread and butter. That has been continued in Ayr, but it is found that it destroys the objects of the society, as even a little more generous relief like that attracts the wayfarer to the district.

6778. Your experience is that a very small amount given for nothing is sufficient to attract tramps from a distance round?—Yes, it is astonishing what a very little will attract them. We, perhaps more than other districts, challenge the tramps in Ayrshire. From 20,000 to over 30,000 are challenged by the constabulary in the twelve months, and certain particulars taken regarding them are rendered weekly. A large increase in the number of tramps was noticed in one constable's beat, which it was found was merely due to the opening of a soup kitchen by a charitable lady there.

6779. What do you mean by "challenge"?—I issued the following order to the Ayrshire constabulary in July, 1886:—"Strict attention must be given by the constables to keeping a record of all vagrants who pass through each constabulary area, and the utmost care must be taken in noting the descriptive details required in the weekly vagrant returns, especially recording any particulars that may subsequently assist in tracing and identifying them. Enquiries addressed to such people must be made civilly, and in such a manner as to give no cause for any feeling of annoyance, and it cannot be too clearly and generally understood by those interrogated that the supervision thus exercised may prove very useful to themselves, as it tends to guard the well-conducted and law-abiding of this class from unfounded and unjust charges or suspicion. The constabulary should endeavour to obtain the fullest information regarding those who have the appearance of habitual vagrants or tramps; and whilst they are to carefully guard against undue interference with or any oppression of these people, the constables should make them clearly understand that their movements are under police supervision; and the constabulary must deal very stringently with any oppressive behaviour or misconduct on the part of such people."

6780. That is what you call "challenge"?—Yes, it is the Government Inspector's term in regard to those that the police have stopped and interviewed and taken particulars of.

6781. To go back to that question of free shelter: I see one case where the police refused to give an order to a street musician who was the worse for drink and had 1s. 6d. in his possession?—Yes.

6782. Another man had good clothes on, and it was found that he was wanted in Wigtonshire. Is that a sort of illustration of what happens?—Yes. There are not a great many. I think there are about 20 cases altogether in the twenty years that the society has existed in which the police have recognised a man, when he has appeared at the police office with a lodging ticket for exchange as a man wanted by the police.

6783. Here is another man recognised as wanted for a crime committed in 1871. When the police challenge, do they ever apprehend a man for begging?—It is not an offence to beg in the rural districts in Scotland. It is an offence under the Burgh Police Act, but in Scotland there is no legally provided relief for able-bodied men or their dependants. It has been suggested by the Departmental Committee, presided over by Sir Charles Cameron, that the clause in the Burgh Police Act which makes simple begging an offence should be extended to apply throughout Scotland.

6784. There is the Crimes Prevention Act of 1871?—That has very valuable provisions for dealing with certain aggravations of begging. Exposing wounds or deformities is one of its provisions, but it does not deal with simple begging.

6785. "Masterful begging" is a phrase that is used?—Yes.

6786. It means using threats?—Unfortunately we cannot touch a man begging who when refused assistance uses abusive language, but whose conduct may not justify a charge of breach of the peace.

6787. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Is there a legal definition of masterful begging?—No, it is an old Scottish term.

6788. (Chairman.) It was used by several witnesses before Sir Charles Cameron's Committee?—It refers to a professional vagrant, a fellow who is abusive when he does not get what he wants.

6789. Would it apply to a man who, having been refused alms, then and there began to curse the refuser?—Here is an instance in which the law in Scotland did not touch the offender. The accused was brought before the sheriff court on a charge of a breach of the peace, but as he pleaded "Not guilty" the trial was adjourned till the next day, when the case went to proof. The evidence showed that the accused called at the house of a Mrs. H—Alloway, Ayr, and having been refused assistance, cursed and swore at her, and used very filthy and indecent expressions towards her, and conducted himself in a very disorderly manner for about ten minutes. No person was present except Mrs. H. and a farm servant, but a man who was working at a considerable distance from the house spoke to hearing the disturbance. The sheriff—the late sheriff William Orr Paterson—characterised the accused's conduct as disgraceful, but found the charge not proven, stating from the bench in giving his decision that—"After consulting authorities no charge of the breach of the peace can be established where a crowd has not been collected nor a person alarmed; without the use of threats or menaces the mere use of insulting or abusive language not constituting a breach of the peace."

6790. Had the sheriff the Prevention of Crimes Act in his mind at that time?—Yes. We put that very much in use in Ayrshire, and have done so ever since it was passed in 1871.

6791. Then what as to sleeping out?—The Trespass (Scotland) Act enables you to deal with any offenders who are sleeping out without permission.

6792. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) On the public road?—No, not on the public road.

6793. (Chairman.) Do you, as a matter of fact, make use of that power?—Yes, very greatly.

6794. Are exposure and sleeping out the two ways in which the police are brought into contact with the begging class?—Yes, it is entirely that in the rural districts, the Prevention of Crimes Act (the section that extended the English vagrancy clause to Scotland) and the Trespass (Scotland) Act. Last year we dealt with 271 persons under the Trespass Act for sleeping out without permission, in barns and such places.

6795. Do you in any case give shelter or food relief to vagrants?—Never, except through the system I have described, but a good many of the constabulary buy tickets to deal with them.

6796. Do you mean that the constables buy tickets to give to vagrants?—Yes, the constables themselves.

6797. Supposing a man were to come to the police station and say "I am destitute; I want shelter," but he had not a ticket, what would you do?—We have no authority to use the police station for shelter. It is prohibited in Ayrshire.

6798. It is the practice in some places in Scotland to give shelter at the police station?—I am aware of that.

6799. But in Ayrshire you do not do it?—No, it is not authorised to use a police station for that purpose.

6800. Are there any other modes of relief in Ayrshire?—No.

6801. Do you consider that a number of these people are bona fide searchers for work?—A large number of them are really in search of work; they are an undesirable class of workmen, but there is no doubt they are searching for work.

6802. They work for a certain number of months in the year?—They don't work regularly. They hate the discipline of being obliged to turn to every day, and as soon as they have got a shilling or two to spend they move on, and when that is gone they again seek employment.

6803. Have you anything to do with the parochial authorities with regard to relief?—No, except that some of the inspectors of poor find it useful to use our mendicity society's system, when they want to give shelter or relief to a wayfarer who is not able-bodied. A certain number of them provide themselves with the society's tickets for dealing with those cases, but they do not assist the able-bodied. It is exceptional for them to deal with the casual tramp.

6804. Do you think that the number of vagrants is diminishing in Ayrshire?—It is very varying. It has increased since the war was over, but it decreased during the years of the war. It increases when there is a dulness or stagnancy in trade. It is increasing just now as there is a considerable difficulty in getting work in Ayrshire, but until last year there has for some years been abundance of work for all who are really employable and willing to work.

6805. Have you many English tramps in your county?—Rather less than half are English and Irish, and most of these are Irish. Of 220 found within Ayrshire on the night in 1904 that a census of vagrants, tramps, etc., was taken, 116 were Scottish, 75 were Irish, 28 were English, and 1 was a foreigner.

6806. When they are going north, where are they going to, or where do they say they are going to?—To large railway works, drainage works, or water schemes, which employ a number of navvies. These will bring a number through to the district. We have had a great deal of that sort of work going on in Ayrshire under the new Public Health Act, in introducing water and drainage, and making new railways and other works.

6807. We are told that that class do not do the work, but hang on to the navvies that do the work?—There is a certain amount of that; but of the men who do the work, it is exceptional for a man to stay on for any length of time.

6808. Are you in favour of any public provision being made for the relief of vagrants, such as the vagrant wards that we have in England?—I would not like to see the same system in Scotland as you have in England. I understand that in England any man who is destitute may claim relief and claim to be assisted, no matter how much he is to blame. There are some sad cases in Scotland of men not being able to get work, and being in great need, and therefore obliged to beg. I do not think that it would be reasonable to make simple begging an offence in Scotland without some provision for assisting an able-bodied man or his dependants if he was in real need and deserving of assistance.

6809. Having that provision in Scotland you would probably be of opinion that the man who insisted on wandering might fairly be treated with some severity?—Most certainly.

6810. In your view it makes a great difference whether an able-bodied man is to get relief under any circumstances or not; it makes a great difference in the way you treat the habitual vagrant?—Yes.

6811. (Mr. Simpson.) You make returns twice a year of the number of vagrants in the county?—Yes.

6812. How do you take that count: where do you go to find your vagrants?—I think in Ayrshire we take the count more completely than in most districts, and the consequence is that it appears that Ayrshire has a large number of vagrants.

6813. I gather that you go into lodging-houses to find how many vagrants there are there?—I really think that we get every vagrant there is in the county. Before the census is taken the constabulary distribute a supplementary form among those in the habit of giving accommodation to vagrants, and if the constables cannot visit that place themselves on that night they ask these people if they will be good enough to obtain the required information from those that they give shelter to. I think that in consequence Ayrshire shows a considerably larger number than would be shown in other districts in which there might be as many or more.

6814. I see in the return for the 26th June, 1904, there are eleven entered, and of these five are noted as probably being professional vagrants, and the other six as being either bona fide in search of work or reduced to vagrancy for a time. Is that a fair sample of the whole number?—If you look at the next return you will see that the whole of the men are given as in search of work. That return happens to be the weekly vagrant return by a constable in whose district there is navvy work going on.

6815. Do you think there is a very substantial proportion of bona fide working men tramping through Ayrshire?—Yes, but a great many of them are a very undesirable class of working men. I mean to say, that they are unsteady workers, and have probably lost the employment that they had through their own misconduct.

6816. And probably another month or two on the road would make them still worse?—Yes.

6817. Very many of them have nearly reached the stage of professional vagrancy?—Yes.

6818. (Captain Showers.) Do your police act as relieving officers in any way?—No.

6819. We heard this morning that able-bodied men are given no relief whatever. What becomes of them supposing they arrive at a country place at night; do they sleep out?—Yes.

6820. Do you have any bother with such men?—The 271 that we dealt with last year under the Trespass Act were all sleeping out without permission.

6821. (Mr. Simpson.) Under the Trespass (Scotland) Act of 1865?—Yes.

6822. (Captain Showers.) Do you give pedlars' certificates?—Yes.

6823. Do you find them often used as a means of begging?—A certificate ought not to be given to every applicant; there ought to be some discrimination shown. You were able to do that when the pedlar's certificate was only available in the police district in which it was granted, or for which it had been endorsed; but some years ago, at the instance, I believe, of Mr. Chamberlain, the certificates granted were made available for the whole kingdom, and so if there is a slack district in the issue of these certificates they can go to that district to get their certificate and then use it in a district where either "grant," or under the old system, "indorsation," would have been refused.

6824. As a rule you do not grant a certificate to a pedlar unless something is known about him?—The Act requires that the person shall have been one month resident and have a certificate of good conduct. I refused one yesterday to a woman, although trustworthy people had certified her character and her residence for one month. Her husband was an often-convicted thief. I hesitated to grant a certificate to the woman on account of her con-

Captain
Hardy
McHardy.

25 May 1905.

Captain
Hardy
McHardy.

25 May 1905.

nection with her husband, and then I found she was not a woman who should receive a certificate. That person may obtain a certificate in another district, and ply her calling in Ayrshire.

6825. On the pedlars' certificates there is a description of the person to whom you issue the certificate?—Yes.

6826. There is information about his hair and eyes and so on?—Yes.

6827. That would be a means of identification of the person?—Yes.

6828. Do you think it would be a good thing if there was some means of identifying tramps who have been prosecuted a number of times; they are taken up, say, in Edinburgh, and then they travel to you in Ayrshire, and you do not know of their previous conviction?—That is so.

6829. Would it not be a good thing to have some means of identification such as by finger-prints?—It would be invaluable, and I am hoping that the finger-print system may enable something like that to be worked.

6830. As regards the children of tramps, is any action taken in your county by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children?—The Society is very thoroughly worked in the county of Ayr, and notice is at once taken of any case of children of tramps who happen to be in circumstances coming within the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act.

6831. Would you suggest that the children should be taken away from these regular tramps and properly brought up?—I am afraid there would be a tremendous number to be taken charge of, and that not a few of the parents would be glad to be relieved of their children.

6832. But it would be very much better for the children?—No doubt.

6833. And it would also decrease vagrancy in the end by taking from those children the chance of going on to the road?—I do not know that the able-bodied vagrants that one meets with have been generated in that way. I think they are more often broken-down workmen.

6834. (Dr. Downes.) I believe the Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1899 gave power to county councils to make bye-laws for the prevention of vagrancy?—Yes.

6835. Bye-laws on the subject have been framed in certain counties?—There has been a difficulty with regard to the bye-laws that were first made in Midlothian. They were declared on appeal to be ultra vires. I am not aware of any bye-laws being made since then.

6836. The information I have is that bye-laws were framed in twenty counties but not in eleven. They were enforced and were found of service, but, unfortunately, in consequence of a decision in Midlothian, they have been left in abeyance and no further bye-laws have been framed?—We have made bye-laws dealing with betting on the streets which have been very effective. These are for putting down betting, but they do not extend to anything else.

6837. What was the general nature of the other bye-laws?—The bye-laws that were declared to be ultra vires dealt with indecent advertisements. The county of Midlothian tried by its bye-law to prohibit objectionable advertisements bordering on the indecent being put up in certain public places.

6838. Were there any other bye-laws which have been held to be ultra vires?—That is the only one I know of.

6839. Are there any bye-laws in force in your county?—None but that relating to betting.

6840. In the Report of Sir Charles Cameron's Committee there is a recommendation that the police authorities should be empowered to grant temporary relief to the extent of a night's lodging, and that they should also have power to exact, if they thought fit, a labour equivalent from those able to work. I should like to have your opinion on that?—I take it that that was thought necessary because of the recommendation they made that the vagrancy clauses of the Burgh Police Act should be extended to counties. I thought that accounted for the desire to make some provision for the able-bodied vagrant getting relief otherwise than by begging from the public.

6841. You mean, to meet cases of hardship?—Yes.

6842. Do you think that provision would be liable to abuse?—Personally, I do not like the responsibility being put on the police. Some people may find fault with the police for being too hard in refusing relief, and there are sure to be others taking the view that they are too free in giving relief.

6843. Your own view would not be entirely in favour of vagrants being handed over to the police?—No.

6844. Have you considered the way-ticket system which is in vogue in certain parts of England?—When I established this society in Ayrshire, I made inquiry as to the system in Gloucestershire. It seemed to me that our system, which is really the Dorsetshire system, was the most suitable. In fact I cannot see any harm that is done by this system; it gives only twopence worth of bread in the same place, and there are sixty-five places in Ayrshire where they can present the bread tickets and get the bread. That provides that they can get the bread about every five miles. They cannot get a second supply of bread in the same place within a week unless their ticket is endorsed by the constabulary. The object of providing for this endorsement is that a man with a legitimate reason for staying on in the place—such as, that on a Friday he is promised a job on the Monday following—would not be restricted to the negotiation of only two tickets; but of the tickets that he might have obtained from the public, the police would endorse the number required for his sustenance until he was in funds. Without endorsement of his tickets by the police, the man with forty tickets could only negotiate two tickets in the same place, but on his journey through Ayrshire he could negotiate two tickets at about each five miles travelled.

6845. Has any attempt been made to introduce anything of the nature of way-tickets in any part of Scotland?—No.

6846. (Chairman.) Do you think that your system is an encouragement to the vagrant in any way; should it not be supplemented with some form of repression?—I think the having to exchange the ticket at the police-office in the case of the lodging ticket which brings the man into contact with the police is effective, as the police have the discretionary power to refuse to exchange the ticket for an order on a lodging-house.

6847. Well, here is a case of a man getting food and possibly a night's shelter: do you not think that in that case begging should be made an offence?—Yes, that would be quite proper.

6848. Provided your society goes on?—Yes.

6849. Where do the men eat the food that is given to them; do they take it with them?—They may take it to the lodging-house or elsewhere.

6850. Do you find that they actually consume it themselves; we have a good deal of evidence that the men throw the food over the hedge?—That is what this system is intended to avoid. I once attended a meeting in Largs with a view to getting the public to use this system. The provost was in the chair. I had said that it was a very common practice for the vagrant to sell his food that he had got at different places, or to throw it away, and the provost, who was a butcher, said, "I had that very experience this morning. A woman came with a cloak on. She threw her cloak aside and asked if I kept a pony—would I have this food that she had gathered and give her fourpence for it."

6851. That is not very encouraging, is it?—No.

6852. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Was that food obtained on tickets?—No.

6853. (Chairman.) You have paid a great deal of attention to tramps; you have considered them from the police point of view and from the relief point of view, and I suppose you have known about tramps all your life. Do you consider the evil so great that the State would be justified in undertaking the expense of fresh institutions such as labour colonies in order to deal with it?—I am quite sure it wants dealing with.

6854. Does it want dealing with because it is a nuisance or danger to the public or a police evil, or because the present system has no relation to the actual needs of the tramp himself; are you looking at it from the tramp's point of view or from the point of view of the common welfare?—It is the poorer class that are most taxed by these worthless and professional vagrants. It is there they make the greatest harvest.

6855. You think that the evil is so great that the State should take further steps if possible to repress it and to deal with the tramp in some other way?—Yes.

6856. Dealing with the tramp in any of the suggested ways would mean considerable trouble and expense; do you think that the evil is so great as to justify that trouble and expense?—No; I would rather favour some system that would penalise these professional vagrants. A question was asked about the application of the system of finger-prints for the identification of those convicted of vagrancy. I am hopeful that this worked out might enable, after a number of convictions, the incorrigible of this class to be effectively dealt with.

6857. When you get your accumulation of convictions you think that you would be justified then in detaining a man for a long time?—I think something should be done to deter him from resuming his old practice, but I am not prepared to say exactly whether it should be by a long term of imprisonment or not.

6858. In your opinion there is a considerable evil however, and you think it is so considerable that it ought to be dealt with?—Yes.

Captain H. J. DESPARD, called; and Examined.

6859. (Chairman.) You are chief constable of Lanarkshire?—Yes, I have been chief constable of Lanarkshire for nine years. I was also a chief constable in England.

6860. Where?—In Dewsbury, Yorkshire.

6861. Lanarkshire is an industrial county?—Almost entirely. The middle and lower wards are industrial while the upper ward is agricultural.

6862. It is all under the same police administration?—Not quite. Leaving out Glasgow, which is a county itself, Hamilton, Partick, Coatbridge, Airdrie, Kinning Park, and Govan are all under separate police administration.

6863. What is the difference between the burgh and the county with regard to dealing with vagrancy?—We have a bye-law in Lanarkshire which puts us almost on the same footing as the burgh. It is under the Local Government Act of 1889, but personally I think it is of no value.

6864. It is under the same Act as the bye-law of Midlothian which was declared to be ultra vires?—Yes.

6865. The bye-law is "No person shall lodge in a stackyard, hay shed, or out-building of any farm, public work, or dwelling house, without permission from the proprietor or legal occupier thereof." That is exactly what you have in the Trespass Act?—Yes, it is almost entirely the same.

6866. The next clause is, "No person shall beg or expose wounds or deformities, or cause or permit the exposure of children of tender age to the inclemency of the weather, or cause children to sing in any road, street, court, or other public place, or otherwise act so as to induce, or for the purpose of inducing, the giving of alms"?—I have always held that that bye-law is valueless.

6867. It is surplusage?—Yes, I think so.

6868. Simple begging is not an offence in the country part of your districts?—No.

6869. Do you have any means of relief of vagrants?—Practically none. There are a few cases in which an attempt was made. At Carluke, for instance, which is a small town with 4,000 or 5,000 inhabitants, we have a shelter with ten beds. In the village of Douglas, we have another shelter with two beds: the people who are allowed to occupy these beds can get breakfast in the morning. In the burgh of Airdrie there is an arrangement where in special circumstances the chief constable gives shelter in a model lodging-house. He gives a line and the vagrant goes to the lodging-house and gets his night's lodging only.

6870. These would not be able-bodied vagrants?—No, they would be more the aged poor and sick. In Coatbridge there are two houses, one for men and one for women. In Motherwell we have the Charity Organisation Society who give free shelter to those who are bona fide seeking employment.

6871. Are those institutions useful or harmful?—I think they are useful.

6872. Are they sufficient?—No, but of course it depends on the view you take of the thing. If you want to suppress vagrancy, then they are more harm than good, but if you want to help the vagrant, they are good.

6873. It has been put to us that it would not be fair to make simple begging an offence, so long as you do not give such assistance to vagrants?—I do not think you can make it an offence where there is no place for the tramping poor to go to.

6874. Then comes the question, which is the greater evil, the relief or the casual ward?—The Scotchman puts the relief of the poor on the charitable. They do their duty to the poor by leaving people in our position of life to maintain the poor. Take my house, for instance; constantly I have people begging from us. There is not a constable in the county that does not give relief out of his own pocket at some time or another—generally in the form of food.

6875. We are told that in Ayrshire the constables buy tickets themselves to give to persons for lodging and food?—I know that our own constables are out of pocket every year by giving assistance to tramps who come and say that they have nothing, and nowhere to go to.

6876. Do you give any systematic shelter or relief at your police station?—No.

6877. We are told that in Glasgow and in some other towns, the number relieved at the police stations is quite considerable?—We do not give any shelter there.

6878. So practically there are no means of giving shelter to a tramp at all, except in these small shelters that you have mentioned?—There is only casual help by the charitable.

6879. Is there any means of giving food to the tramps?—Not in the county.

6880. Do you enforce the Trespass Act?—Yes, I do when I have complaints. I have here a statement as to persons dealt with under the Trespass Act (see Appendix XVI.). Owing to the want of casual wards, farmers and people who own pits, brick fields and that kind of thing, are very apt to give shelter free to tramps, especially the farmers in the agricultural districts. Every now and again these tramps become a perfect curse and complaints are made to me. During the last month I have raided one pit head about six times, and I have averaged, I suppose, 18 vagrants at a haul, beginning with 35 and coming down to 10. Those people were dealt with under the Trespass Act, but they have been lodging in the same place for years.

6881. What sentence do they get?—They are admonished the first time, and fined or imprisoned the second time. They seldom pay the fine.

6882. Are these persons tramps?—They are residential vagrants.

6883. What is done if they come up a third time?—They are fined again.

6884. They are not sent to gaol?—Not without the option of a fine.

6885. In your county do the sentences that are given vary very much?—No, I think they are pretty much the same. I think the sentence is, admonished the first time, 5s. the second time, and 10s. any subsequent time.

6886. Apparently a man would not get a month for it?—I do not think so.

6887. We have evidence that they get that in some districts?—I think there is a feeling in Lanarkshire that as there are no casual wards these men must be allowed to sleep somewhere.

Captain
Hardy
McHardy.

25 May 1905.

Captain
H. J.
Despard.

25 May 1905.

Captain
H. J.
Despard.
25 May 1905.

6888. Have you any cases where a vagrant commits an offence—breaking a window, for instance—in order to get into gaol?—No.

6889. You have heard of such cases?—Yes; I have come across them in England.

6890. But not here?—No, I have never come across such a case in Scotland.

6891. Is there anything in the way in which the prisons are conducted here that makes a difference?—I do not think so.

6892. Have you any knowledge of the prisons?—No, except that I have been over some.

6893. Have you any suggestion to make as to what should be done?—No, I do not think I have. Of course, I believe in casual wards. I believe in the system in Gloucestershire where they use a passport, but I understand that is quite contrary to all the proper ideas that an Englishman ought to have. It is supposed to be very bad for the citizen. I have been told that it is a continental notion.

6894. There is a suggestion that it is an interference with the liberty of the subject?—Yes.

6895. The Gloucestershire system puts the whole vagrant class right in the hands of the police?—Yes, practically. A man gets his food at, say, Gloucester, and says that he is going to work in Sheffield. He marches the shortest way to Sheffield and gets his card back at each stopping-place.

6896. Their system is defective because it deals with too small an area?—Yes.

6897. Suppose the Gloucestershire system were extended over a number of counties, would you see any objection to putting the wards under control of the police as well?—No. Of course, I see the police objection to it—it is giving us too much work.

6898. But, for the moment, consider only the public welfare?—I must say I am rather opposed to the police coming into these things. I think that too much police government is a very bad thing. In Dewsbury any man who wanted to get into the casual ward came to my office and had to get a line from me. I do not think that is a proper thing.

6899. It has the advantage of bringing all this class, who are on the border-line of crime, in touch with the police?—Yes; I admit that. During the inspection of casual wards at night by the police, we got a number of criminals, but I noticed that the effect in Yorkshire was this: that a criminal instead of going into a casual ward will sleep out in a brick field or a barn and perhaps set fire to the place, because if he wants to go to the casual ward he has to go to the police to get an admission line. Any criminal who is trying to escape justice would not do this.

6900. He would not set fire on purpose?—No, but they smoke and create a danger.

6901. Lying out, you think, is a serious offence?—Yes, from the point of view of the farmer.

6902. How long were you at Dewsbury?—About three years.

6903. (Mr. Simpson.) You take a census twice a year for the Constabulary Inspector?—Yes, a night census.

6904. You send your men to all sorts of places where vagrants are likely to be sleeping?—Yes, everywhere.

6905. In some of the figures I have seen from Scotland there is quite a considerable proportion of women and children as compared with men. That struck me as differing rather considerably from England?—My report for 1904 shows that in December there were 158 adult males and 10 females and 4 children under fourteen. And it is much the same thing in 1903. In the summer you get more children.

6906. Well, that does not point to the number of vagrant children being a very serious question?—No, I do not think it is.

6907. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Do you attribute much of the crime in the country to persons of the vagrant class?—No, except petty crimes.

6908. And arson, which is sometimes accidental?—Yes.

6909. They are not a criminal class taking them all round?—No, I do not think they are. They are simply lazy loafers.

6910. The tramps subsist principally on charity. Suppose they go to your house and you give them something: how can they use their money; can they get lodgings by paying for them?—In my opinion they go straight down to the common lodging-house.

6911. But where there is no common lodging-house, the charity will be of no use to them?—That is so.

6912. (Captain Showers.) Do you think it would be an advantage to have some better identification of tramps?—Do you mean by finger-prints?

6913. Yes?—I do not see how it would work. A man is brought up here in Edinburgh charged with vagrancy. Do you mean that you would remand him in prison until you had time to trace his antecedents?

6914. Yes?—That would mean a good deal of expense.

6915. But would it not put down vagrancy; it might cause some expense to start with?—I do not look at vagrancy as being any great cost to this country.

6916. I understand that you grant pedlars' certificates?—Yes.

6917. Do you find that that gives them a chance of begging?—I do not think so. I have never had any reason to suppose that in Lanarkshire.

6918. What is your opinion about penal labour colonies?—I have not formed any opinion on that.

6919. Suppose a man who is a thorough vagabond is sentenced for two or three years to a penal colony and made to work, would that not have a very good effect?—I think you would have to convict him of some offence first, either cruelty to children or something like that.

6920. Take a man who was really able to work but subsisted absolutely on begging, going from place to place; if he was sentenced by the justices to two or three years in a labour colony and made to work, it would be an expense, I grant you, but would it not have a deterrent effect as well as a good effect?—I think it would be an excellent thing to force these people to work if it could be managed. I fancy that most of the beggars I see are quite capable of working.

6921. But would it not have a deterrent effect on them?—The point of view from which I am looking at it is rather a parochial point of view; it is the cost of that sort of thing. It is like the finger-printing. You take up a vagrant under the Trespass Act and fine him 5s. If he pays, well and good, but if he does not pay, then he goes to prison and you can finger-print him. If the one who pays and goes away is to be finger-printed then he has to be remanded for three days in prison. It costs me now 8s. 9d. to take a man to prison in the Upper Ward. Then there is the cost for keeping him for these three days, and then 8s. 9d. to take him back to the Upper Ward to be tried. If he is dealt with there and sentenced to be imprisoned or to be sent to a labour colony, then there is another 8s. 9d. It costs about £2 before you find out anything about him. It seems a great deal of money to spend.

6922. Do you not think that that would be only for a certain time; these men would not continue in this life if they knew that this was to be done?—It might be effective.

6923. I grant that it would be more expensive at the starting, but most good things are expensive at the starting until you get them into regular working trim?—It might be effective, but I have not really thought the thing out.

6924. (Dr. Downes.) Do you find that the tramps in your county follow definite lines of road?—Yes, they follow the main roads.

6925. Where are they making for?—For Glasgow or Edinburgh.

6926. Do they go in circuits?—I could not say. Of course we have our county vagrants who are about the same district year after year.

6927. Looking at the return of the Inspector of Constabulary for 26th June and 25th December, 1904, I find that the numbers for Lanarkshire, including Airdrie, Coatbridge, and the other places, are not nearly equal to the numbers in Glasgow. Does that indicate that there is a residential vagrancy in Glasgow, or that the country vagrants are not so easy to detect by the police?—I think we can detect most of them.

6928. There are 1,065 in Glasgow, but taking the whole of the rest of the county there are only 341?—That is for December. In winter they naturally drift into the town.

6929. Take the summer count; the tramps in Glasgow are 866, while those in the county are 406?—They have gone into the country for the fruit-picking.

6930. In each case the number was very much less than the number in Glasgow?—Yes, but of course the population is very much smaller. Our population is only one-third of the population of Glasgow.

6931. It rather seems to point to there being a residential vagrant population in Glasgow?—I think there is no doubt about that.

6932. (Chairman.) Probably it is due to the exclusion of the able-bodied from the workhouses?—Yes, I think that is one reason. But as the census is taken at night many vagrants who live in the country by day are counted in Glasgow where they sleep.

6933. (Captain Showers.) Suppose you had casual wards, do you think it would be a good thing to put them under the police?—I am not quite sure. They should certainly be under the inspection of the police, but the point is whether the admission should be absolutely through the police or not.

6934. There would be certain difficulties in getting men to do the work because they would have to join the police force on the condition that they would be liable for such a thing. It would make a policeman more or less a workhouse master?—I think that would be a great pity. Every class of work is now put on the police.

6935. (Chairman.) Do you think that the evil that the tramps do to the country is sufficiently great to justify the State in taking more active measures?—I think they are a curse to the country.

6936. Are they such a curse as would justify the country in spending such an amount of money as would be necessary to lock up a number of them?—Yes. I have a very strong opinion about the tramps. We have in Lanarkshire a number of public works going on in the way of laying water pipes, new railways, and works of that sort.

6937. And you have coal-mining?—Yes, but apart from that we bring in a tremendous number of good class navvies for these public works and they are followed by a regular horde of tramps who live on them. They are an absolute curse to the whole country. They come in and take away the character of these good class labourers. People come and say "We want extra policemen. We have navvies, and they are playing the mischief with the whole countryside." I say that the navvy is a poor harmless person who gets drunk every Saturday like other people. It is these people who follow him who are the nuisance.

6938. (Dr. Downes.) A population like that going about the country might be a danger in times of trouble?—I do not think they have the pluck. I think that two or three hundred of them could be overawed by a couple of policemen.

6939. (Chairman.) But they do a lot of harm in the way of petty crime?—Yes, and robbing orchards and potato fields, burning fences, sleeping in hay stacks, and setting fire to them.

6940. (Mr. Simpson.) And occasionally frightening women and children?—There is a good deal of exposure of person before decent people, but there is very little assault.

6941. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Do they not go into cottages when the man of the house is away and beg by threats?—Yes.

MR. RODERICK ROSS called; and Examined.

6942. (Chairman.) You are chief constable of Edinburgh?—Yes, I have been chief constable for the last five years.

6943. Have you in Edinburgh any means of relieving the vagrant class at the police station?—No.

6944. You know the system in Glasgow?—Yes. We do a little of that here. We put up 130—67 males, 56 females, and 7 children. That was after every other place was filled up.

6945. They were cases of absolute necessity?—Yes.

6946. (Captain Showers.) Where did you put them up?—In one of the cells. The Government are against this kind of thing. We simply do it in very stormy weather.

6947. (Dr. Downes.) Have these persons committed any offence?—No. We have no power to put them in the cells.

6948. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Do you feed them?—Yes, we give them bread and milk. Every prisoner is allowed a certain amount of food, and if he is drunk he does not want anything, so that there is always a certain amount of food lying about.

6949. (Chairman.) Do you prosecute people for begging in Edinburgh?—Yes. There have been 152 dealt with this year, 112 of whom have been admonished, 21 fined, 13 imprisoned, and 6 sent to the parish authorities. (See Appendix XVI.)

6950. You send them to the parish authorities in Edinburgh?—Yes, sometimes a man will plead that he will go to the poorhouse, but very often it is found that when he gets outside he does not desire to go.

6951. Do you proceed under any special local Act?—Yes, section 273 of the 1879 Act.

6952. Do you have much sleeping-out here?—Last winter we had more than usual, there being such an amount of charity which was advertised so much that people came in from all round. Some of them got three or four meals in about an hour and a half, and then they went down to Portobello and slept at the brickworks there.

6953. Is that within the burgh?—Yes. The owner of the brickworks objected to it latterly, and we had to clear them out.

6954. Did you get convictions in those cases?—16 were admonished and 59 were fined, that meant that they went to prison.

6955. They did not pay their fines?—No. They have no money to pay their fines with. We have had several hundreds there in one night as the result of this philanthropic craze.

6956. Do you have any free shelters in Edinburgh?—There is a night refuge at Queensberry House and then there is the Asylum for the Friendless and Homeless: that is where these tramps go.

6957. These places being full the surplus would sleep out?—It is very rare that they are full. These people whom we put into cells are people who have come late.

6958. But I mean the night refuges?—It is very rare that they are filled up. It is only this winter that we have had experience of their being filled up.

6959. Have they any sort of test: do they search the persons who come in?—No.

6960. Do they give them food?—Yes, porridge and milk for supper, and the same, I think, for breakfast.

6961. And yet these places are not full?—No.

6962. Can you tell me what is the accommodation of the free shelters in Edinburgh?—No.

6963. Who has the supervision of the common lodging-houses?—There is an inspector specially appointed. It is not under the police.

6964. It is under the sanitary authorities?—Yes.

6965. Have you any relations with the poor law authorities?—No. Of course, when we have anything to do with them, we work together in a very friendly manner.

*Captain
H. J.
Despard.*

25 May 1905.

*Mr. Roderick
Ross.*

25 May 1905.

Mr. Roderick
Ross.
25 May 1905.

6966. You occasionally send them a man who is broken down?—Yes; the police may have knowledge of a man who is destitute and they will report the facts to the inspector of poor.

6967. How many poor houses are there in Edinburgh?—Two: Craigleith and Craiglockhart.

6968. Are they large poor houses?—Very large.

6969. Have they accommodation for 1,000 people?—Yes, I believe they have.

6970. Do you get any refractory paupers charged from there?—I do not remember one case in my time. There is a lot of trouble in England which we do not have here.

6971. The workhouses here are for the old and infirm?—Yes.

6972. Have you any English experience?—Yes, I spent most of my time in England before coming here.

6973. Where were you?—I was chief constable of Bradford before I came here.

6974. Then you will know all about the casual wards in England?—Yes. I acted as assistant relieving officer at Ramsgate where I was chief constable.

6975. Do you see any advantage in having casual wards?—Yes, I think it is an advantage. The task keeps these people away. I found that where there was a task very few came near it.

6976. Then they go to another union?—Yes, but it shows that the tramp will not work if he can possibly help it.

6977. Do you think there is any risk of a man dying from want of food in Scotland, or from want of shelter, through there being no casual wards?—I do not think that can possibly happen. There are sufficient philanthropic institutions to prevent that. I have never heard of a case of starvation like that.

6978. Have the Salvation Army a lodging-house here?—Yes.

6979. Does not the existence of these very cheap lodging-houses rather tend to draw tramps to Edinburgh?—I have no doubt it does to some extent, but they do not get any free food there that I am aware of.

6980. They do get free food in the casual wards?—Yes, but they have to perform a task in the morning which is usually a pretty stiff one. They have no task at the shelters here.

6981. Do you think that on the whole the conditions in Scotland are easier for the vagrants than in England?—There is no doubt about that.

6982. Especially when there is a free distribution of food by the municipality?—It is not so much by the municipality here; it is from private philanthropy. The municipality found these unemployed work. These tramps came in because we were advertising so much; they came in such numbers that we were inundated. We know that a good many of them got three or four meals in an hour and a half. I think these fellows should be dealt with by isolating them.

6983. You think they should be locked up?—I think that all habitual vagrants should be isolated. They are pests to society.

6984. That is a pretty wide sentiment?—Yes, but I think the country is getting educated to it.

NINETEENTH DAY.

Tuesday, 30th May, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.
Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Mr. DAVID G. LAMB, re-called; and further Examined.

Mr. David G.
Lamb.
30 May 1905.

6985. (Mr. Simpson.) Supposing the Salvation Army scheme were carried into effect by means of legislation, would you be prepared to enter into an arrangement with the county authorities to take tramps at once on commitment by magistrates?—Yes, sir, we would to a limited extent in order to get the Act into working and to show just what could be done.

6986. Have you any idea how many more men you would have room for at Hadleigh?—That would be limited entirely by the provision for capital expenditure.

6987. But I suppose you could take a few more at once?—What we probably would do would be to license that farm of 100 acres that we have at Leigh Park, which stands apart from the main colony, in the same way as we have done Victoria House for the inebriates. It lends itself peculiarly to anything of that kind, because it could be fenced in quite easily without appearing to be fenced in; it adjoins the high road, and the fencing could be of such a character that a man could not get through, and he would have to come out by the gate, where of course he could be detained.

6988. In that way the man sent there compulsorily would be kept separate from the men you have at present?—Yes, to begin with.

6989. Of course, if the scheme were carried out it would be necessary to have much more accommodation than there is at present at Hadleigh?—Yes, quite so.

6990. Do you suppose you would be able to get another site equally suitable?—Well, there are plenty of sites, but I do not know that we would be prepared to find another £100,000 for a site; I do not think we ought to be expected to do that. But I suggest that provision should be made in the same way as financial provision is made for the light railways in the country either by capital sums, free of interest, or by way of a grant or loan at low interest. An estate could then be purchased and fitted up, and with the capitation grant it could be run by anyone, so to speak.

6991. You have at present a certain number of men who are practically compulsorily detained; for instance, you have got one or two men conditionally discharged from Broadmoor who are still practically criminal lunatics?—I think we have three at the moment; we never care to have more in one establishment.

6992. Just as an example, how much do you get for them per week?—Well, at one time we got nothing; I do not know that we are getting anything now.

6993. I think for the Broadmoor men you get something?—If so, it is what the man himself has earned.

6994. I think you get 8s.?—Well, I was told at one time it was impossible to get anything.

6995. You are thinking of the men from prisons. Now, you have a good many men from workhouses who are sent by the guardians?—Yes.

6996. How much do the guardians pay you for the keep of these men?—It varies from 10s. 6d. to 5s.; it is 10s. 6d. with some boards for the first three months, going down to 7s. 6d. and 5s. and to the vanishing point altogether; with others it starts at 7s. 6d.

6997. I see from the statement you have supplied there were fifty-one of these cases received in 1902-3, and ninety-one in 1903-4?—Yes.

6998. I suppose for all these men you are receiving payment from the guardians?—Yes, sir, a grant varying from 10s. 6d. to 5s.; or in some cases, of course, they may have reached the vanishing point, and they would still appear on the list where a man was earning all he was costing.

6999. In some cases they earn enough?—And we relieve the guardians at once; we notify them, but naturally that is a slow process.

7000. I suppose if you had men committed by magistrates you would probably have to keep them under some stricter supervision than the men you have at present at Hadleigh?—Yes, sir; of course at Leigh Park the man would be under close supervision until we found out what his intentions were and what prospects there were of making something of him, and then we might license him out to ourselves in the main colony.

7001. Would it be your view that you could not say exactly what should be done with these men till you had seen what sort of men they were?—Precisely.

7002. But at the same time you would agree that the incorrigible rogue, say, sent by quarter sessions for three years to a labour colony after a number of convictions would probably be about as hopeless and unpromising material to work on as you possibly could get?—I would not like to say that at all, because it all depends upon the influences.

7003. But would not a man who has been an offender for a very long time be likely to have lost his self-respect more than the man who has simply gone suddenly to the bad through drink?—Well, all my experiences show that much turns upon what in the first instance sent the man wrong. For instance, if he is suffering from a sense of injustice, perhaps when he has asked what was to him a fair thing it has been denied him and perhaps he has got a kick instead of a kind word, and he has wandered about as a kind of Ishmaelite; if, so to speak, counter influences are brought to bear upon him, we have seen marvellous changes take place in the man; a man whose hand was against everybody's before he came to us has been completely changed.

7004. The Salvation Army has been successful in dealing with some men of about as unpromising a type as could be found?—Yes, that is true.

7005. And would it be your view that you could not tell beforehand which men you would be able to influence and which men you would not?—That is so.

7006. Therefore, it is worth trying all?—It must be.

7007. Even the most hopeless men?—Yes.

7008. Would you be able to establish workshops or industries at Hadleigh, besides the brick-making?—We have tried chair-making, but we gave that up; it is a long time ago now; there were two or three factors against it: we could not get an easy market, and after all, industries are peculiar to certain districts, and it meant importing a good deal of skilled labour in order to carry the unskilled; and then there were certain disadvantages at Hadleigh in the way of distance from the station and so forth. An industry must be determined to a very large extent by the district in which a colony might be established.

7009. Do you think the difficulties you experience in establishing an industry would be lessened by the inmates of the colony being sent there for a term of years?—Yes, absolutely, you would be able to regulate it then.

7010. You would at all events endeavour to train these men to the industry?—Yes. You see, what happens is this: you have a depression of trade affecting specially, say, the basket-making industry and you have a great many applications by people who have worked in a basket factory; you may be tempted, therefore, to utilise that skill; you seek out a market for your produce; get an order; you may secure a good market, but the fact of your securing a good market probably shows at once that the basket-making industry is reviving, and at the very time that you want the labour to complete your order, so do others, who probably can offer better conditions than you can, and you are left with an order without any men to execute it.

7011. At the same time you have done your work in setting that man on his legs again?—Oh, yes.

7012. And the inmate then can earn a living?—Yes.

7013. And if the object of the labour colony is not to compete but to make men, that object would be achieved when you had produced a man fit to earn his living outside?—Yes, absolutely.

7014. Would you agree that supposing Leigh Park was set aside for men sent by a court of magistrates, it would have to be subject to Government inspection?—Oh, yes; in the same way as the inebriate home is.

7015. What medical attendance have you now at Hadleigh?—We have our own hospital with half a dozen beds in it. It is sufficient for all the requirements, and we have a medical man there to attend; we pay him a standing fee. Then we usually have one or two doctors as inmates in the colony; I have seen five there at one time.

7016. Are they much good as doctors?—I had two or three very clever fellows there.

7017. What religious services have you?—We have our own religious services daily, at which the attendance is voluntary. We insist upon every man attending a public place of worship once on a Sunday.

7018. And that is all that is compulsory?—Yes, he can go either to the Church of England or the Church of Scotland or the Church of Rome.

7019. There are several places of worship near Hadleigh belonging to the different religions, are there not?—Yes, and Southend is within very easy distance; it is a very pleasant walk over to Southend.

7020. Is there a Roman Catholic chapel at Southend?—Yes.

7021. And if a man walked over to Southend on the Sunday and attended mass there, he would comply with your requirements?—Oh, yes; he would perhaps be a little late for dinner, but that would be understood; this occurs frequently in practice.

7022. Do some of the inmates who belong to special religions attend your services?—Yes, the rule is this, that they must all go somewhere, and those who go nowhere else, must come to our services.

7023. But you have a service every day, do you not?—Every evening; that is voluntary.

7024. Now as regards your city colonies, are those training homes in the town?—They are the workshops.

7025. Hanbury Street, Whitechapel, is one of these?—Yes.

7026. And where is your other one?—Spa Road, Bermondsey.

7027. That is where they do the paper sorting?—Yes; we call that a city colony.

7028. You do not call the night shelter a city colony?—No, although it is managed by the city colony, but we regard a city colony more as a place where work is done than the sheltering.

7029. In the colony you are trying to do a man good, and put him on his legs again?—Yes, and the shelter is a mere expedient.

7030. It is really indiscriminate charity, is it not?—It is not charity.

7031. You have one free shelter, have you not?—No, all the shelters pay their way.

7032. They pay their way?—Absolutely all out-goings.

7033. But they stand outside the "Darkest England" scheme?—No, sir.

7034. Do you get many men coming from the shelters to the colonies?—Oh, yes, shelters are used for that purpose; a man, for instance, will secure admission to the shelter on payment of 2d.; then if that is his last

Mr. David C.
Lamb.

30 May 1905.

Mr. David C. Lamb 2d. and he has got no prospect of work, probably his next step would be into the workshop.

May 1905. 7035. But the class of men who go to a 2d. shelter are not usually the class of men who want to get work; would they not be mostly loafers?—That is not our experience.

7036. Do you get a good number of men coming from the shelters to the colony?—The shelters are for casual workers; the man who is a professional loafer would not come to our shelters.

7037. Why not?—Well, the atmosphere of the place would make him feel uncomfortable; that is the design of the whole thing; if he is a professional loafer he will fight shy of the place.

7038. That may be the design of the thing; but, as a matter of practice, in a night shelter even a loafer can get a bunk for 2d., while in another place he might have to pay 4d.; how would he be made to feel uncomfortable?—The bunk is comfortable enough, only the professional loafer would never stick at 2d.; he would get hold of some kind soft-hearted lady or gentleman with this 2d. and tell him he wants 4d. and he is stuck for his last copper.

7039. Still, if you save 2d. on your bunk you have got 2d. more for drink?—Yes, sir, that is so; I do not say that we do not get these men, but they are the exception.

7040. Your intention is not to cater for these men if possible?—Quite so.

7041. Do you send men from the city colonies to Hadleigh?—Yes.

7042. Do you send any men from Hadleigh to the city colonies?—Occasionally.

7043. According to their capacity?—Well, a man may not be suitable for outdoor work, or it may be only temporary help that he wants.

7044. (Sir William Chance.) You have not had very much to do with the vagrant at Hadleigh; I mean the vagrant who is known to the casual ward?—Well, I regard those that pass from us without staying a month as being of the vagrant and shiftless class.

7045. My question relates to London particularly; we have had evidence that there is a regular class of people who frequent the casual wards?—Yes.

7046. Have you much to do with that class?—No, sir, not much, I should say.

7047. Have you ever taken any vagrant out of the casual ward?—That has been done occasionally.

7048. Only occasionally?—Yes.

7049. How far do you co-operate with boards of guardians in regard to other classes of paupers?—Well, I think at the moment we have agreements with between twenty and thirty boards of guardians. Last winter we had more applications than we could entertain from boards of guardians to take men; we do not care to have too many men of the pauper class down at Hadleigh; we can conveniently absorb only a certain percentage into the life of the colony.

7050. Do most of the boards in London send cases to you?—Yes, a great many.

7051. Can you say how many boards?—I could not say at the moment.

7052. But most of them?—At one time or another.

7053. Have any boards of guardians given up sending men to you?—Yes, sir.

7054. What boards are those?—Camberwell, I think was amongst the first.

7055. Did they give any reason for that?—I think it was just a change in the constitution of the committee.

7056. Of the guardians' committee?—Yes, and a falling off in the number of men for whom they thought the colony treatment would be useful.

7057. It was not because the men came back to them again and did not stay long in the colony?—The returns may have had some effect. Of course some of the committees were very slow to prosecute, so slow that when I was at Hadleigh I always made it a condition that unless they agreed to prosecute we would not take the man, because it was bad for the guardians and bad for us.

7058. (Mr. Davy.) Prosecute for what?—Failing to maintain himself; if a man discharged himself and came back to the union, they should prosecute him unless he had a good reason.

7059. (Sir William Chance.) That was before the decision on the Poplar case, was it?—Yes, sir.

7060. Now, of course, they would not think of prosecuting in such cases?—One board since has notified that unless we are prepared to modify our conditions they would not send the men; I do not blame them.

7061. Have you had any returns of the numbers of men who have been sent by any particular union between certain dates?—Yes, I have taken them out from time to time; I have not got any at hand.

7062. There was a very detailed return, I think, prepared by Woolwich, of men who had been sent to Hadleigh from that union; you have seen it probably?—Yes.

7063. The return (see Appendix XXV.) was for the period between March, 1902, and March, 1904; of twenty men sent nine left the colony without notice: of whom three went back to the workhouse, one died, and five are unaccounted for?—Yes.

7064. That is to say you could not tell where the five have gone to?—Yes.

7065. Then five of the twenty men left for situations?—Yes.

7066. Of these, two are in the workhouse, and one is in prison for absconding; do you remember that last case?—Yes: I think he went off with some property.

7067. The property of the Salvation Army?—Or one of the other colonists.

7068. Do you know what happened to the other two who went to situations?—No.

7069. Do you know anything about the man who was emigrated?—No, but I know that we have had no return from the party who went out where he did.

7070. Sent back to infirmary—one; refused to do his work—one; dismissed for drinking—one?—Yes.

7071. There are none of these twenty, as far as I can make out, that you know anything about, except those who are in the workhouse or the infirmary or in some institution?—That is the ordinary course.

7072. You have not been successful with these cases for some reason or other; perhaps they did not stay very long?—I do not know what you would regard as successful, it depends on the standard by which you can measure it.

7073. Well, there is not one man out of the whole twenty of whom you could say definitely that he has been made a man of again?—Well, there is the man who went to Canada.

7074. Probably there is one case then?—Yes; here is a man who went over to Tottenham and got work; if he kept his work we would not bring him back for the sake of bringing him back.

7075. But you do not know anything about him now?—No, sir, in the same way as I explained. Then take the man who went to a situation in Southend; I happen to be living at Southend: he is all right.

7076. You know that man at Hadleigh now?—No; you see I have only the initials and that is two years ago: as I have said the type that we get from workhouses is the poorest.

7077. The Hadleigh colony is for able-bodied men willing to work?—Yes, sir.

7078. How do you find out that willingness to work; a man comes to your door; how do you decide as to whether he is willing to work or not?—Well, by measuring his general appearance and in the same way as any employer of labour would judge as to whether a man was suitable for the work that he had going; that is to say, if you or I were to present ourselves and offer any builder to do the hod-carrying for him he might think that we were decent people, but he might say "You are no use for us," because he would look at it with a trained eye; in the same way a man who came to us perhaps broken in spirit and half starved and so forth, we would soon judge in the first instance as to whether he was likely to prove able-bodied if he had food. Then we would take him gently for the first few days. There again we have men who are specially trained to take a man kindly, and yet protect themselves from a loafer, and if they suspected a man of loafing, they would give him a specific amount of work to do, and if he showed willingness that would very often be taken as being ability to begin with.

7079. You have a kind of probation colony, have you not?—Yes.

7080. If a man came to you would you not put him into that probation colony, if he expressed himself willing to work?—Yes.

7081. As a rule you would not send him away?—Assuming that everything else was equal and we had room, although we have to send them away very often.

7082. On account of want of room?—Yes, sir.

7083. Now, if you had room in your probation colony, would you accept every man and give him a trial as to whether he was willing to work?—If we were satisfied that he was a likely man we would.

7084. You cannot satisfy yourselves in a very short time?—Oh, yes, we can satisfy ourselves in two or three days as to whether it is worth while continuing to keep a man.

7085. From your experience of men of the class who resort to the casual wards, do you think there are many of them who would derive benefit from being sent to your colony?—Yes, undoubtedly, especially if they could be detained for a period. Our design is to draw them from the city colony rather than take them off the roads, because if it were known throughout the country that a man had only to walk down to Hadleigh to be taken in they might prove very objectionable; therefore, while in practice we do take men off the roads, in theory we do not.

7086. And is that really because you have not got room for them?—No, it is partly because our design is rather to take them from the cities back on to the land, than to take the men from the road.

7087. Then your city colony would deal with these men before they go on to Hadleigh?—Yes, sir.

7088. You said the other day that a considerable number of people out of work would go voluntarily to a labour colony, if there was one?—I quite believe that eighty or ninety per cent. of the men who are on the streets of London and in the casual wards of London, would.

7089. Do the vagrants who apply to your colony include many of the casual ward class?—No.

7090. This class do not apply?—A few, but really we would not take them now; of course, the man who is in the casual ward habitually is a shade lower than the man we would take; we would take him before he becomes an habitual.

7091. Then, as I understand it, you do try to get hold of rather a better class of people; you do not take the very lowest class?—We make the selection; that is to say, if the choice lay between two persons both equally deserving, we would naturally choose the man who was likely to be relieved rather than the man who apparently is hopeless, and it is because of that that we are to-day promoting this Bill, because all our experience goes to show that the lowest class wants a period of detention in order to relieve him efficiently.

7092. They want treating in rather a different manner than you can treat them in Hadleigh; that is your opinion?—Yes, sir.

7093. (Chairman.) Does a man go into your city colony, knowing that he has necessarily to do some task of work?—Oh, yes, absolutely.

7094. May that not be the reason why the ordinary vagrant avoids your city colony?—It is fairly well known, of course, that we do exact work. With the professional loafer, we are not popular.

7095. Because he knows he has got to do something?—Exactly.

7096. (Sir William Chance.) You have a preference for colonies under voluntary management rather than under the State?—Yes.

7097. That is under officials?—Yes.

7098. Could you just shortly say why you have that preference?—Well, one reason is because the men themselves, the men that you hope to benefit, fight shy of officials. At Hadleigh, I have seen the men who come down regard us in exactly the same way as other officials as though we were paid for the work, but when they realised that we were not paid for the work, then their prejudices vanished and we secured this influence over them that was helpful.

7099. Do you consider that in the philanthropic colony the people who manage it are more interested in the work than in the case of a colony under State management?—I do not put it like that, because I do think it is possible to get as consecrated service in the highest positions in the State as you would get in another position. That is one thing, but persuading the man that you want to benefit him is quite another. The Salvation Army is peculiar in this respect that it has raised its workers from the ranks and whatever we may be in the future we are not too far removed now from the people we seek to benefit; in fact, we are nearer to them than any institution is at present.

7100. I suppose you know many officials—the work-house officials for instance—who take a great deal of interest in the people who come to the workhouses and the casual wards?—Yes.

7101. Therefore, it is quite possible that the officials of a colony under official management would take a personal interest in the people who come to them?—Yes, sir, but they might have more difficulty in persuading the people of this than we would have.

7102. Because they are looked upon as an official class?—Yes, sir.

7103. I see in a book you have sent us this morning it is stated, "We must make allowance for the failures who appear so far to be about 45 per cent. of the whole"; does that mean that you claim 55 per cent. of successes?—That book is by Sir Walter Besant.

7104. What percentage would you claim?—Well, it is necessary, before you can measure, that we agree as to what the standard is. I have submitted a return of 880 men that were discharged during two years. (See Appendix XXIV.) In that return I regard 18 per cent. as being unsatisfactory, that is 6 per cent. dismissed for misconduct, laziness, repeated drunkenness and insubordination, and 12 per cent. left without notice, general conduct bad, indifferent, shiftless character. Then I put down 5 per cent. as unfortunate, that is men who continued incapable and were transferred to other institutions, etc. Then we come to the satisfactory cases; I have set it out carefully, so that you can see exactly how the result is arrived at. Emigrated, joined H.M. Army or Navy, 4 per cent.; we do not emigrate any that we have got any doubt about at all.

7105. Then there is no doubt about that 4 per cent.?—I have no doubt at all. Then 6 per cent. were restored to friends; we regard that as highly satisfactory; they are probably people who have been estranged a long time from their friends, and who have gone back.

7106. Do you make any inquiries as to these; do you merely account them as satisfactory because they have been restored to their friends?—Well, a man would not have been restored to his friends without inquiry having been made beforehand and the way being prepared for him. If you would care to know how it was done, each case has been dealt with on its merits; if a man has been away from his wife, our local people will perhaps go to the wife and make representations to her to prepare the way for the man going back; or we may go to an old employer, and we may open negotiations with him direct, and prepare the way for the man going back, so by the time he goes back perhaps he has been with us eight months, during which period he has behaved himself in an exemplary way, and probably professed conversion, and he goes back to join his church and we would not follow him any more after hearing he had arrived safely. We may hear from him from time to time, but we would tick him off as satisfactory, and close the record so far as he was concerned. Then 10 per cent. went to situations found for them before leaving the colony; the same process would be followed there, the man going back

Mr. David C. Lamb.

30 May 1905.

Mr. David C.
Lamb.
30 May 1905.

perhaps to some old employer or something like that, but the work would be found for him by us. Eighteen per cent. left to look for work with fair prospects after satisfactory conduct and giving notice. That means that no man is supposed to leave the colony without giving twenty-four hours' notice. Then perhaps he would write to some friends and they would say, "Yes, there is work going on in this neighbourhood." And we would perhaps give him a few shillings, enough to pay his railway fare to a certain place. If he has letters from his friends of a recent date to show that if he could get to a certain place there would be work for him, and he has worked with us, and his conduct has been satisfactory, we would encourage him to go, but otherwise we would not; we would regard that as satisfactory, that we had accomplished what we set out to do in that case.

7107. That would make 38 per cent. as satisfactory?—Yes, sir. Then 30 per cent left without notice after a prolonged stay and uniform good conduct. That is to say a man simply goes off on a Monday morning, he has signed the agreement to give notice, but he does not know what he has signed; he has read it, it is true, and probably if it had said he was willing to be hanged and quartered the next day he would have signed it just the same. There is nothing against him, he has simply gone away. If you ask him why he did not give notice he replies, "I did not know I had to give notice." Or, perhaps, he gave notice to the foreman immediately over him that he was intending to go.

7108. Does that mean that you consider 77 per cent. of those classes under the heading of satisfactory?—Yes.

7109. I suppose you will admit that you really only know those first two classes, i.e., 10 per cent., to be satisfactory; with regard to the rest of the 77 per cent. you merely hope they are satisfactory?—No; I take those who have emigrated and joined the Navy as being very satisfactory.

7110. That is 10 per cent.?—Yes; and the 10 per cent. for whom we found situations. You cannot do more for a man than find him a situation, and see that he starts there; that is all we set out to do.

7111. With regard to the remainder, you think they have been successful after leaving the colony on account of their conduct in the colony; perhaps they are converted?—They may not be converted.

7112. You say their life has changed, but you do not know as a matter of fact that they do not relapse?—No, sir.

7113. Now in another return you give the total number of colonists received during the year 1902-3 as 239?—Yes, sir.

7114. And in the year 1903-4, as 284?—Yes, sir.

7115. That is 523 altogether?—Yes.

7116. There are 89 in those two years who go to situations found by themselves and 54 to situations found by the colony; that makes 143 altogether?—Yes, sir, that is so.

7117. And the total number received was 523?—Yes; but you should take the number going out, not the number coming in.

7118. I am taking the total number received during the year?—If you take the total number discharged that will give you the true figure for the percentage.

7119. Well, what is the total number discharged?—231 in 1903, 253 in 1904, that is 484 as against 523 received.

7120. Well, it comes to very much the same, that is about 25 per cent.?—Of course these are the two years following on the two years that I have just given you, and I have not compared the percentages.

7121. I am not trying to make out any case against the Salvation Army; one knows the difficulties of the men you have to deal with, but one does want to find out what chance of success a man has after he has been in your colony for some time?—Yes, but it strikes me that the percentages of this recent return are very much like those we have just considered.

7122. Well, 55 per cent. of success was claimed?—As far as I understand it we have got three statements; you start with the statement made by Sir Walter Besant six years ago; I have submitted a statement dealing with four years ago, and this further return is for the last two years. Every year varies according to the character of the people coming in. The 55 per cent. was right enough at the time, but I have not got the figures that are behind that.

7123. This pamphlet is going about everywhere and being read, claiming 55 per cent. as successes, and it is not pointed out that the figures have changed?—But probably the Vagrancy Report will be going about presently, and these figures will be up to date. It is a matter of working out the percentage.

7124. Could you let us have these percentages up to date?—Yes, I will do so. (See Appendix XXIV.)

7125. I think you said you were not very much in favour of the way-ticket system for England?—No, sir.

7126. At any rate not for ten years at least?—Yes.

7127. That we were not ready for it?—That is my opinion.

7128. Is not that opinion rather formed on your experience of the London vagrant?—No, sir; I have made inquiries; I know England fairly well and I have conferred with people in Newcastle and Liverpool, and the East and the West.

7129. I rather understood from an answer you gave that your opinion related more to the London vagrant than to the country vagrant?—No, my recollection of what I said is that the ticket would be of no use to them because a great many of them are inefficient and they are habituals.

7130. And you extend to the whole of the country your objection to the way-ticket system?—As far as the casual wards are concerned.

7131. Would you object to the way-ticket if it were worked on a different system?—No, sir.

7132. You object to it on account of the casual ward?—If it was to be worked in conjunction with the casual ward, I do object to it.

7133. Supposing there were no casual wards, have you considered how this system would be worked; would you adopt the Swiss system?—Well, you have got to discriminate between what appears to be a bona fide working man and an habitual vagrant. You must settle that at the starting point; that is my contention. Now I say for the men who go to the casual ward the ticket system is not at all what they want.

7134. A man would have to get his ticket before he starts on his journey?—Yes, and he would keep it so long as it suited him.

7135. Do you not think that if a man had not got his ticket it would be a case for suspicion that he was not a bona fide wayfarer?—But he could easily go and get another ticket. The man is going to keep a ticket as long as it suits him; when it does not suit him he is going to throw it in the ditch or on the fire.

7136. You think that a way-ticket worked on the Poor Law system is not very valuable?—I do not see that it can be worked or that it is any use for this reason; where you have the ticket system on the Continent the man must have his identity papers; that is his basis; you have got no such basis in England.

7137. Would you like to see identity papers introduced in England?—No, sir.

7138. Not even in ten years' time?—No, sir, because it would have to apply all round.

7139. Do you think the way-ticket system worked through the police would be open to the same objections as if worked through the guardians?—There again it depends upon the classes; a decent working man would not object to go to the police.

7140. You think it would be an advantage, if the way-ticket system were applied in England, to work it through the police?—If you issued the ticket to the best man he would have to be a householder but it is not for him, it is for the casuals. Then my contention is that you have got such an excellent service of railway trains that it is far cheaper to put the man on the rail.

7141. I am not talking of the man who belongs to a trade or benefit society of any kind, or who has friends who help him on his way if he is in any need; I am talking of the man who has no means at all and wants to go to Newcastle say from London; is it an advantage to him that he should go to the police who would make the necessary inquiries and give him a ticket to pass him on to relief stations or casual wards?—My way of working it would be that if I had a man in London who had a prospect of getting work in Newcastle, I would put him on a Newcastle boat.

7142. You would pay his expenses?—I would, and I would ask the nation to do the same.

7143. You want some starting point?—Let him go to the police.

7144. You have no objection to the man getting his way-ticket from the police?—None, but I would make it a boat ticket.

7145. You would send him the shortest way whether by railway or boat?—Yes, sir; if the man is bona fide I would not bother; one can get from one end of England to the other so cheaply and quickly.

7146. (Dr. Downes.) You would not be averse to passing a man on by some process?—No, sir, the quickest possible process, the pneumatic tube.

7147. (Sir William Chance.) I understand you want to have the Vagrancy Act of 1824 extended?—Yes, sir.

7148. And you have given in your statement a rather full list of people whom you think should be included under that Act?—Yes, I take it of course there would be an attempt to make a new definition. The amendment that we put forward does not make any provision for a new definition.

7149. It leaves the old definition as it is?—Yes, sir.

7150. You want to have the definition extended?—Yes.

7151. I will go through the different classes mentioned in your memorandum to which you want to extend the definition?—Yes.

7152. You retain all the old definitions, that is the idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues?—Yes.

7153. Then you want to extend the definition to work-house ins and outs?—Yes.

7154. You are not going to call all those people vagrants or incorrigible rogues?—No, sir. I would call them unemployable. That is a matter for the lawyers really.

7155. That is a matter of the title of the Act; you could hardly call it a Vagrant Act?—Well, amendment of the Vagrancy Act.

7156. Then you would include women with illegitimate children?—Yes.

7157. And able-bodied paupers, unemployables and feeble-minded?—Yes.

7158. Deserted vagrant children?—Yes.

7159. And voluntary entries; that is a man entering the colony voluntarily?—Yes.

7160. Then you have a certain class of offenders; these are prisoners I suppose who have been convicted?—Yes sir, or who may be charged with some petty offence and who may have been up repeatedly; give them seven days hard labour for the offence and a year in a labour colony with a view to reforming them.

7161. Supposing all these people were dealt with in a labour colony, you would relieve the boards of guardians of every undesirable that they have at the present moment?—Yes, sir.

7162. And you will leave the workhouse practically an old age house or hospital?—Yes.

7163. That is to say you want an entire reform of our workhouse system?—No; you would draw out from it certain classes who ought not to be there. If it results in reforming, why that is a result, not a reason.

7164. I think boards of guardians would be very pleased?—Many of them of course would, for the ins and outs are very numerous.

7165. Have you any free shelters at all in London?—No, the workshops are free of course, but there are no free shelters.

7166. I daresay you know that there is a great prejudice among employers in the countries which have labour colonies against taking men who have been in a labour colony?—Yes, in some parts.

7167. I daresay you have read that in reports on Germany and Switzerland?—Yes, sir.

7168. It is extremely difficult to get employers to take men from a labour colony?—In Switzerland, I understand, they have not that difficulty, but that is because the country generally is prosperous.

7169. You have seen Mr. Preston-Thomas' report upon the Swiss colonies?—Yes, sir.

7170. I think they have found that difficulty in the case of some of the Swiss colonies. Did you say the other day that you wanted some other institution outside the labour colony so as to get rid of the taint of the colony before a man was sent to employment?—Yes, sir, and to help in his discharge generally.

7171. That rather shows that there is an idea in your mind that there will be difficulty in disposing of these men directly from the colony; you want some kind of—I think you used the phrase—"discharge machinery"?—Yes.

7172. What would that "discharge machinery" be?—Well, sir, for instance take Merxplas; if, instead of keeping the man there until his period of detention is complete, they had some institution in Antwerp or Brussels, wherever it was most convenient, a small home with accommodation varying according to the size of the colony connected with it, say for twenty, then instead of a man being discharged from the colony with £5 or £10 in his pocket which all goes in ten days or a fortnight, when he comes back again, let him leave when he has £3 or £4, and go into the town under supervision and stay in the home; let him report himself there at night, and sleep there, and if he has prospects of work pay his way to any part of the city where he is likely to get work. If he does not find work in a month or any fixed period, let him go back to the colony again. The officer, whoever he was, in charge of the home, would become a labour bureau, he could be on the look-out, and would know beforehand who was coming, and make arrangements for them. That is what we have done frequently as far as the men at Hædleigh are concerned. We availed ourselves of the labour bureau in Whitechapel. I would send a man into London with a list of a dozen men ready for discharge, the man himself also looking out for himself, and he would go the rounds of employers of labour and succeed probably in fixing up two or three people and himself. After he had fixed himself up, I would send another one on the same errand with another dozen names and he would go the rounds. I would make that so to speak a prominent institution.

7173. Then you do want an intermediate institution between a labour colony and free life?—Yes, sir.

7174. That, of course, is very important as bearing on the expense of establishing a labour colony; the intermediate institution would be an additional expense?—Yes, but I would make the man pay that; I would not let him come into the city until he had money to keep himself there.

7175. You think that the institution would be self-supporting?—Yes, sir, because you would not let the man go unless he was a fit man. One proof of his fitness would be that he had earned money and he had money to his credit in the colony, and you therefore help him to spend it. If he does not spend it wisely he will spend it foolishly, therefore I would help him to spend it wisely. I would not give him the right to draw that £5 and do as he liked with it.

7176. (Dr. Downes.) I understand that the Salvation Army has no free shelters of its own?—That is so.

7177. There are some free shelters in the East End of London?—Yes, sir.

7178. Does the Salvation Army give any free food?—In cases of extreme urgency and destitution they would.

7179. There are agencies that give free food on a considerable scale, I think?—In special circumstances; for instance the children, and during the past winter to meet special distress, but our practice is nothing for nothing.

7180. The intention of your shelters, I understand, is to act as an inducement to get the loafer off the streets so

Mr. David C. Lamb.

30 May 1905.

Mr. David C.
Lamb.

30 May 1905.

as to get hold of him ?—Well, they were created in the first instance because the people were on the streets ; they were opened to meet a pressing need.

7181. In the first instance, how was the money provided ?—Out of the Darkest England Fund.

7182. Then it was from charitable funds ?—Yes.

7183. It was free to the recipient ?—He paid for it.

7184. Have they always paid ?—Yes, sir, the workshops of course are free ; a man's destitution is the test.

7185. Assuming that the intention was to provide the man with cheap food, we will say, is it not a fact that the cheaper the food and the cheaper the shelter, the more loafing is rendered an easy business ?—Yes, sir, I agree it may be.

7186. And loafing is not a desirable business either for the community or for the man who loafs ?—I agree. As I have already explained, the shelters must pay their way, including the food and all legitimate charges.

7187. If there is evidence to show that cheap food and cheap shelters, or free food and free shelters, lead to an increase of loafers, would you not consider that it is time to consider the position of the free shelters and the distribution of free food ?—Yes, sir.

7188. If there were evidence that loafing was increasing ?—Yes, if by reason of those agencies.

7189. You would admit that it was necessary to deal with them ?—Yes. Of course I would have to be satisfied that it was these agencies that were causing that. I think there would be great difference of opinion ; some great authorities urge that some other steps, viz., taxing food instead of taxing the shelter, would prevent a great deal of distress from lack of employment.

7190. Supposing that society says, we will not have people loafing about the streets all night habitually, and that the police were empowered to deal with the habitual loafer, could not your shelters become a sort of receiving houses for such cases ?—Yes, I think so. Of course that is done now to a certain extent.

7191. Yes, but the man can come and go ; assuming a condition of things where he is brought to you and he cannot come and go ; that is to say perhaps being brought to you pending remission to some colony or whatever it may be ?—Oh, yes, sir, we would co-operate with anything like that, because that is the object with which we have undertaken all this work, the permanent helping of the man.

7192. I think you find the earlier you can get hold of a man on the down grade the easier he is to deal with ?—As a rule.

7193. That is to say the old workhouse hand or the old casual ward hand is a more difficult person to regenerate and re-establish than a fresh comer ?—Yes ; but he gets very sick of the workhouse and he is glad of the change.

7194. Do you find at Hadleigh that it is more difficult to provide work as time goes on ; I understand for example in starting a new colony there is land to be reclaimed, roads and fences to be made, and houses to be built ?—Yes, sir.

7195. But after a time you have done all that ; do you not find there is a limitation in the work as time goes on ?—There will be a natural limitation, but we have not arrived at that point yet at Hadleigh.

7196. So that the original accommodation of a colony would not necessarily be its ultimate accommodation ?—No ; but if you have a definite design before it started you could regulate the number to suit your convenience. What I mean is, if you had 200 acres, or 2,000 acres, any given quantity, you would say after this is under cultivation, and laid out in a certain way, it will carry so many ; you could regulate your capital expenditure, and your improvements in such a way that you could start with that number and finish with that number.

7197. You could look ahead ?—Yes, sir.

7198. It would be desirable therefore not to embark on costly permanent buildings, if you were not sure of your ultimate accommodation ?—That is so.

7199. A contractor who is making a railway does not put up costly buildings ?—He would probably put up even cheaper buildings than we have at Hadleigh.

7200. That is one reason for inexpensive buildings at such a place ?—Yes, because you are bound to vary your plan as time goes on, even with the most careful foresight.

7201. When development work becomes more scarce have you other outlets for the work of your colonists ; take for example, Hadleigh ; you have not so many roads to make, you have not so much land to reclaim, your sea walls are in good order ?—That is not our position yet unfortunately ; that is to say, we could plant a great many more fruit trees.

7202. You have not come to the end of the development ?—No, sir.

7203. Have you had in your mind any possibilities of the kind I am indicating after development has ceased ?—Yes, of course it is not for me to say, but we would probably sell part of the estate and let it off for building ; it has grown into a valuable estate for building purposes, and perhaps we would buy another colony elsewhere ; that is quite within the range of possibility.

7204. Assuming again for the moment that there are colonies to which people can go voluntarily, and colonies to which people are sent compulsorily, would you run those together under the same administration, or would you entirely separate them ?—I would have them under one administration, closely situated ; I would have them separated and yet in close proximity.

7205. In touch, so that you could work one in with the other ?—Yes, sir.

7206. What staff of permanent officers do you find necessary at Hadleigh ; that is to say, what is the percentage to the number of colonists ?—It is difficult to give a percentage because of the varying conditions. For instance, this past winter we have had men in connection with the Central Unemployed Committee down on special work ; we had men from the Daily Telegraph fund being trained for emigration, and previously we have had men from the Mansion House fund, so that this has materially altered the standing percentage. I have submitted a return showing the number of officers. (See Appendix XXIV.)

7207. On the present staff ?—Yes, and its disposition.

7208. Some of the inmates are promoted to semi-official positions, are they not ?—Yes, sir. The present position with what we regard as the average conditions at Hadleigh is about 250 colonists and 50 employés.

7209. Are those 50 the promoted colonists ?—No ; 15 of them are ex-colonists appointed because of special ability, 30 are from outside having special qualifications to meet the requirements of the colonists' work. Then we take the women and the children by the hour for work in connection with the vegetables and the fruit-picking season.

7210. Do the promoted colonists help to maintain discipline ?—Some have special ability in that direction, as well as special aptitude in industry.

7211. I take it you regard it as an important element in your administration that these men exercise special influence on others which permanent officers could not ?—Yes. We keep them and transfer them ; perhaps we might take a man from the City.

7212. Now as to the food ; you have, I believe, a minimum which a man may earn ?—Yes, sir.

7213. Have you any return of the actual amount of food which is consumed in the colony ; that is to say the amount of bread, flour, meat, etc., consumed in a given six months or other period ?—I have not such a return.

7214. Would your books show ?—Yes.

7215. And the average number of inmates in the same period ?—Yes, sir.

7216. Could you favour me with that information ?—Yes.

7217. I want to know the average number of inmates and the gross quantities of food consumed ?—Yes ; it is all worked to scale ; there will be no trouble in getting out the figures. (See Appendix XXIV.)

7218. I understand that, starting with this minimum, you have a food store at which a man may purchase from his earnings any additions ?—Yes.

7219. You have, I think, a system of tokens ?—Yes.

7220. Do you prefer tokens to money?—Yes.

7221. There is a difference of opinion I believe in some places about that, but your experience is in favour of tokens?—Yes.

7222. Have you tried money?—Not entirely; we have tried it; now it is part money and part tokens; that is to say a man may buy food or clothing with tokens or money; he may buy anything with money, but he may not buy food at the stores with tokens; he must go to the dining-rooms to buy food and to the stores to buy a handkerchief.

7223. The possession of a little money may be a useful test of the man's stability?—That is the idea. We give him sixpence first; if he spends that wisely it may be increased; if he spends that foolishly it will be stopped for a month.

7224. What do you do with the man who will not work: who will not earn his minimum of food?—Well, he discharges himself.

7225. What is the inducement that makes him go?—Reduction in the ability to purchase food. He would be given piecework, a certain amount of work to do; if he does not do it, his tickets are gradually reduced.

7226. He may reduce himself to a state when he is really almost starving if he is obstinate enough; do you ever get a case like that?—No.

7227. They do not go to that point?—Oh, about a day is enough.

7228. Have you any system of medical examination of a man as to his fitness for work: supposing a man says "I am not fit to do this spade work"?—Then he would see the doctor at once.

7229. Does the doctor attend daily?—He comes to the village daily and we telephone when we want him. We have very little sickness.

7230. Have you any work for what I may call a partially disabled case, say, a man who is ruptured?—Yes.

7231. What do you do with him?—He is put on the poultry farm or time-keeping.

7232. Or the bird-scaring business?—Yes.

7233. You have, I think, a receiving farm and a main farm at Hadleigh?—Yes; but for these two years the receiving farm has been very largely in a state of suspense because of these men coming from the Mansion House fund.

7234. Formerly the worst men did not get beyond the receiving farm, I take it?—That is so.

7235. But in your return they are all included?—Yes.

7236. Of the admissions, I see a certain proportion, about 17 per cent. had been previously admitted?—Yes, sir.

7237. Do you know if any of those who make up that 17 per cent. had gone away to situations and had failed to get or keep them?—I could not say; I could find out with regard to them definitely.

7238. If you could follow out these previous admissions, as to whether any of them were persons who had been set on their legs by you but had not been able to stand, it would be useful?—Yes, I will obtain this information (see Appendix XXIV).

7239. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) You say that in your colony if a man will not work he discharges himself practically?—Yes, sir.

7240. How would you make that apply in a compulsory colony; he would not be able to discharge himself?—No, sir, but I do not anticipate any difficulty.

7241. Would you work by punishment or persuasion?—Persuasion.

7242. And you think you could manage it?—Yes; it is no good punishing a man; I would punish him by denying him the luxury of work; "Well, you must not work; we will keep you without work." He would fret and pine away.

7243. Would you shut him up by himself under those conditions?—Probably.

7244. You stated that if colonies were started under the Vagrancy Bill, 80 per cent of the men in the vagrant wards would voluntarily go to them?—Well, I spoke of Mr. David C. Lamb. London and the vicinity.

7245. Why should they; what would be the attraction?—Because they are sick of the casual ward; they do not want to be there. 30 May 1905.

7246. The pleasure of their life is its freedom of living, is it not?—They are past that, sir; the man who has that luxury does not go to the casual ward as a rule.

7247. In the country we know they go round and round; they have regular beats; they go from casual ward to casual ward simply for the pleasure of being on the road; would they be ready to go to a colony voluntarily?—Yes, the casual ward habituals.

7248. The same men come time after time to these casual wards?—Yes.

7249. They are in considerable number, are they not?—Yes.

7250. Do you think they would go to a labour colony and give up their present life?—Yes.

7251. You think they would come and commit themselves for a year?—Yes; especially if you open about October or November. It would be rather more difficult this weather.

7252. At the end of the year do you think you would have had such an effect upon them that they would take to ordinary work, or would they revert to the road, or come back to the colony for another year?—Are you speaking of the 80 per cent.?

7253. I am speaking of this 80 per cent. that you think would desert the casual wards?—I would not let them go; I would re-commit them.

7254. Re-commit them compulsorily?—Yes.

7255. You think that first of all they would go there voluntarily for their year?—Yes.

7256. Then you would keep them compulsorily?—Because I assume that they would be to a large extent hopeless from the point of view of ever being able to undertake active service in civil life.

7257. At your receiving home at Leigh Farm, what number can you provide for?—For between twenty and thirty.

7258. Between twenty and thirty men only?—We have had thirty in it.

7259. It is a very small drop in the ocean, is it not?—It is, but then again we do not want too many there. For instance, when we have more workhouse men than 25 to 30 per cent. they become troublesome. We can absorb that number and carry them, and the same with people from prison; it would be the same with these vagrants.

7260. With regard to the religious services, the questions asked you by Mr. Simpson referred to the present colony, of course?—Yes.

7261. How would you work that with people detained compulsorily: they would not be allowed to go out of this ring fence to attend service by themselves?—No, I do not know; it would depend upon the man to some extent.

7262. Otherwise, the only service held in that compulsory part of the colony would be your own service, I believe?—Yes; I think it would meet most difficulties. What I mean to point out is that at present in prisons and institutions of that sort it is made rather a strong point that a man should attend a service of his own particular religious persuasion.

7263. Would you allow ministers to have access to the people of the particular persuasions?—Yes.

7264. And hold services, if there were enough colonists of that particular religion?—Yes.

7265. (Captain Showers.) You said just now that if a man belongs to a particular persuasion—if he is a Roman Catholic we will say—you let him go to Southend; how are you sure that he goes to church and does not only take a walk?—Well, if he comes back not smelling of beer, we would take no steps unless we suspected him; we would trust him.

7266. What sort of work is done by the better class of the colonists; for instance, doctors and solicitors?—They work in the market garden; and this is a curious

Mr. David C.
Lamb.

30 May 1905.

thing I found out in that connection, that if I grouped them in what was called the "Gentlemen's Brigade," they would do more work after a time than any same number of men on the colony. They worked with intelligence and their work was well done. Two or three fellows would do two or three times the work of ordinary agricultural labourers after they had got into it.

7267. What is the full number that your colony could hold at present?—400 colonists and ten or a dozen families. That is apart from employes of course.

7268. I have heard it stated that the colony undersells some of the small shops in sugar and currants, and so on; that at certain times you get overstocked and you let articles go at a lower price?—It is not so; the man who has charge of the stores cannot alter the prices without the consent of the management.

7269. But might not the management give him orders to get rid of the old stock at a lower price?—No; what it would do would be to work it off on the colonists. There has been a little jealousy and really the boot has been on the other foot; the shopkeeper in the village has undersold us. It is not necessary for us to do that at all; we have advantages that he has not. We have always insisted that the goods we sell should fetch the price in the village, and we sell at the same rate. We could afford to sell more cheaply because we buy better than they do, but we do not. As a matter of fact, Hadleigh has been rather overdone with shops.

7270. Have you had any other complaints as regards goods sold at the colony?—No; we have had complaints with regard to the produce of the colony which is another thing, of course.

7271. The produce of the colony you dispose of at Southend and places of that sort?—Yes.

7272. And you are able to sell it probably at a lower price than the market gardeners could?—No, I do not think so; in fact our experience has rather been the other way; we have been able to obtain better prices; we aim at producing a good thing; you get a better price for a superior article and it may still be cheaper.

7273. But you do not get lower prices?—I do not think so. There is bound to be a little competition and the market must be affected by the supply and the demand; in fact we have to buy in London to meet the needs of Southend.

7274. Do you contract with Southend to do it?—We have our own market in Southend; we have our own store and we distribute the goods there, which enables us to regulate the market; we are not bound to sell at any price.

7275. If you regulate the market you can bring the others down?—The regulation of the market was rather the other way: to prevent the shopkeepers bringing us down. They rather forced us to do that; we made a rule for our own guidance that we would not bring any stuff back.

7276. You get rid of it there?—To protect ourselves we had to have a store.

7277. Your colonists at Hadleigh earn gratuities ranging from 6d. to 3s. a week?—6s. to 7s., some of them.

7278. Do any of these men bank the sums with you?—Yes.

7279. Now is there any interest given on their deposit?—The same as the post office; a great many of them do bank with the post office.

7280. Is it not a fact that discharged colonists sometimes hang about the village for days?—Occasionally, yes.

7281. Do you not sometimes, rather than have them hanging about the place in that way, actually pay their railway fares to get them away to where they want to go?—No; the rule that governs matters of that kind is that if we have succeeded with a man he passes off to where he is likely to continue; if he fails, we must take steps to get him back to where he started.

7282. You send him back to the place whence he came?—Yes; we cannot compel him.

7283. But you do that rather than that he should hang about and perhaps contaminate the rest of the colonists?—Yes, it is not only if he has failed that we must send him back. Even if a man has earned money I have refused to give it to him and he has threatened all manner of things. I have told him "I fear God and honour the King, but I am not going to give you this money. If you go to a magistrate and get an order compelling me I will pay it, but not till then." "But" he says, "I have earned it." I say "All right." And he has threatened various things, but I have waited. Otherwise, he would go and spend the money in the public house and be a nuisance not only to himself and the people in the village, but probably to our other men.

7284. Do you not rather discourage the police in uniform visiting the colony?—Yes, sir.

7285. I suppose you think it would have a bad effect upon your colonists?—It might have a bad effect on the police, too. There are two views; it would have a bad effect on the men, and there is no need for the police being there.

7286. You would call them in if they were wanted?—Oh, yes; then when they have had to effect an arrest, which is very often the case, I have preferred that that should be done at the head office.

7287. You bring the man to the head office and then if it is necessary to arrest him, he is arrested there?—Yes, we give every facility in that way.

7288. I understand that formerly you had in your colony many men who had fallen from good positions mainly through drink?—Yes.

7289. In most cases, I suppose, they were paid for by friends or relatives or subscribers?—No, many of them came after they had absolutely drained their friends. That is the unfortunate position we are in: that you will get friends to give them very often £1 a week to keep them out of the way and then when we take them we cannot get even a shilling.

7290. How much a week do the friends of the people generally pay you for this sort of people?—Oh, sometimes from 5s. to 15s. Of course they pay as much as 30s. in the inebriate home.

7291. That is in Victoria House?—Yes.

7292. Do you take many of the colonists at a certain payment?—Yes, we take them for nothing up to 15s. We have a man now for instance who is a time-keeper, he is an employé; when he came first to us he was one of the "Gentlemen's Brigade," he had a small income of his own, and paid us 15s. a week for the privilege of working; he could work and did work.

7293. Did you oblige him to work at the same time?—Oh, yes, he had to turn out in the mornings; I have seen him on the dunghill at 6.30 a.m. He is an employé with us now and we are paying him about 30s. a week.

7294. You got him out of his drunken habits?—Yes, he has thoroughly recovered.

7295. Now he is a decent member of society and you are paying him instead of his paying you?—Yes.

7296. Is it not the fact now that the majority of your men come from the workhouse?—No, sir; the percentage that came from the workhouse last year was 32; that is high, the year before it was 20 per cent.; it varies from 35 to 20 per cent.

7297. And you get from 7s. to 10s. a week for their keep?—Yes, sir; the total amount received last year from poor law guardians and the friends of the colonists was £419.

7298. What proportion of the colonists are men for whom you receive no payment?—70 per cent., I should say; it is the exception rather than the rule for us to get payment.

7299. During the winter of 1903 I think you had 150 men sent down from the Mansion House?—Yes, sir.

7300. For those you were paid about 10s. a week each?—Yes, sir.

7301. How did you find that these men worked?—Fairly; that is to say we would not have employed them as an employer of labour would have employed them.

7302. Quite so; but could you make them work?—Oh, yes; but as I say we would not have employed them. They did what they could, but they knew they were being paid for. Now this year for instance, we had men also from the Daily Telegraph fund, but they knew that their emigration to Canada depended upon their work and their behaviour, and there was as much difference between the central committee's men and the Daily Telegraph fund men as there was between the ordinary colonists and the central committee's men.

7303. Because they were really working for an object ?—Yes.

7304. I heard that the Mansion House men did not do much work because they knew you were paid 10s. a week for having them ?—Yes, we have the same difficulty with workhouse men.

7305. I also heard that these men frequented public houses a great deal in the evenings and on Sundays ?—A few did. I would not like to say a great deal. Some did, and the winter before last was worse than this last winter. We sent a whole lot back on one occasion; twelve of them came and at once went straight to the public house, and we put them on the train and sent them back.

7306. (Mr. Davy.) Were those "unemployed" ?—Yes.

7307. Not workhouse men ?—No.

7308. (Captain Showers.) Are you aware that many of the men that were sent down by the Mansion House fund actually terrorised their wives and got from them some of the money which the Mansion House committee were giving the wives to keep themselves and their families ?—I do not know how it was done but many did get money.

7309. Is it possible for the colonists to rise to a better position in the colony ?—Oh, yes. A man may enter on the very lowest grade and rise to practically the highest.

7310. He gets taken on as a ganger at so much a week ?—Yes, sir.

7311. So that he is really earning wages ?—Absolutely.

7312. If they wish, can they have permanent work there ?—Not if they wish; if we wish.

7313. That means to say that if they were capable men you would give them permanent berths ?—Yes, if they were worth it. We have fifteen just now that we regard as on our permanent staff.

7314. And they are men who have risen from the lower ranks up to what they now are ?—Yes; in one case I think it is a workhouse man.

7315. Did the men that you received from the Mansion House fund make any difference to the old colonists: did you have to get rid of some of the old ones to make room for the new paying men ?—We did not get rid of any; we rather regulated our incomers at the early part of the season.

7316. But you had to make room for the incomers to a certain extent ?—We were approached early in the fall with regard to what provision we could make in the event of the central committee or the Mansion House fund being in a position to send men down, and we restricted our admissions over a certain period in order to meet the emergency. We did not discharge any.

7317. I understood that at the time you took that 150 from the Mansion House fund you had to turn off a certain number of men to make room for them, and that as these men remained hanging about the place you sent them back whence they came and paid their railway fares ?—There were other reasons for the men leaving then.

7318. Did the Mansion House scheme make any difference to the old colonists ?—No, sir; except that these fellows came down with somewhat superior airs and did not do as good work as some of the old colonists, and we had to separate them entirely in the work.

7319. You had to separate them ?—Yes; and from the point of view of the main principles of the colony it was to some extent demoralising. It changed the character of the whole; instead of being a reforming elevating influence, it turned it into a makeshift for an emergency.

7320. It had a very bad effect upon those men who were obliged to work ?—Yes.

7321. You kept some of the new comers apart so that they should not demoralise the old colonists ?—Yes; the moral effect upon the colony was not good; they were not so subservient to discipline.

7322. Are you in favour of taking men of this sort, for whom you are paid, when their influence is likely to demoralise the rest of your colony ?—Taken by itself, no, sir. But when you consider the larger questions bearing on the unemployed, we could not well object. We had the facilities for an effective demonstration of what could be done, and the representations made to us were of such a character that we could not very well, even with all the disadvantages, say no.

7323. I suppose the 10s. received in these cases more than covered the cost of the board and lodging ?—As a matter of fact, the Mansion House people suggested that they might have credit for the value of the work, to which we said "All right, we do not mind at all, we would divide it if you would take a share of the other risks and the trouble." The fact of the matter is that a colonist who had been there for six months and paying nothing was worth more than a man for whom we were receiving 10s.

7324. What did you do with the families of those who came to you ?—Well, we did not touch them. The committee that sent them to us dealt with the wives and the children; we only took the men and kept them there.

7325. None of the families came to you ?—No.

7326. But you do have colonists with families at Hadleigh ?—Yes, sir.

7327. And do you find that works well ?—Well, of course what follows usually with a married man is that he will come to us first, being probably sent by his friends who are glad to get rid of him. His wife is better off without him. If he works satisfactorily we hold out the inducement to the wife that she may ultimately come down and settle; they will then be together for a little while and then they go back to their friends.

7328. Do you fix them up in a house there ?—In a cottage; the furniture is usually supplied partly by ourselves and partly by the men in the colony. We make a special collection; they will all subscribe to help a fellow to get his wife and his children down.

7329. The colonists themselves ?—Oh, yes; we would take up a collection and invite gifts of chairs, and food and anything from the houses in the neighbourhood. I have raised on a Saturday night without any difficulty as much as £6 and £7 to furnish a home to get a man and his wife reconciled.

7330. You mean in the village of Hadleigh, as well ?—Yes, but a certain proportion of it from amongst the men. If a man had been there for six months and was getting on well, he would mention it to the set that he was moving amongst; some of them would take it up a month in anticipation perhaps; they would put their heads together put down £1 or £2 from a gang they were working with; others would give 6d. or less.

7331. Do you find the wife and the family hit it off with the other colonists; does the wife mix with the other colonists at all ?—Yes; she may live in the village of Hadleigh, they may take a house there.

7332. Do you provide a house there for him ?—Yes, or give him a cottage on our estate. We pay him a fixed salary, or put him on piece work, and then the wife lives as if she was not connected with the colony at all.

7333. Does that work out very satisfactorily ?—Very satisfactorily, not only in the individual cases, but in the wholesome influence that it has among the others.

7334. How long do the families usually stop with you ?—We reckon fifteen to eighteen months before you get a man and his wife in and out; that is to say, six months the man must be there to prove himself, six months the man and wife together, then three to six months before you get them moved on.

7335. When you say "moved on," do you mean to some place where there is work ?—Yes, or they may find work for themselves. I have cases in my mind now where they have gone back to work in the town, or they have gone back to their friends, or they have emigrated.

Mr. David C. Lamb.

30 May 1905.

Mr. David C.
Lamb.
30 May 1905.

7336. How many married colonists with families can you take at Hadleigh?—From ten to a dozen we can take; the last three years I was there I think we had usually about ten in the year.

7337. (Chairman.) When you were here last time you were good enough to say you would provide us with some particulars, which you have done. But there are one or two matters which I asked for that I do not find here, and I daresay you may be able to tell us off hand. In the first place, what is the composition of the actual staff at Hadleigh?—The head office staff consists of seven.

7338. Then would you kindly tell me what that seven includes?—There is the secretary for the industries, that is the brickfields, and there is the financial secretary, the accountant, the cashier, a shorthand and another clerk, and an inquiry officer.

7339. Then you yourself, I suppose, are the head and chief?—I am not now, sir; I was for five years.

7340. Is there a resident governor?—Not at the moment.

7341. Who is the acting governor at the present time?—One of the secretaries.

7342. One of the resident secretaries?—Yes.

7343. Then who is the chief supervisor?—There is a council in London, of which Mr. Bramwell Booth is the chairman, and they meet weekly either on the spot or at the head quarters in London.

7344. Then at the present time there is not any actual governor of Hadleigh?—No, sir.

7345. (Sir William Chance.) Are you on that council?—No, sir. Our system is one of moving on; my term is over.

7346. (Chairman.) In your return you give the value of the agricultural produce as £9,354; I take it that includes the market garden produce?—Yes.

7347. As regards your inebriate home, are the inhabitants of that home kept separate from the rest of the colony?—Yes, sir. The home stands on 15 acres of its own ground quite apart from the colony. Some of the inmates work on the colony, but that is a matter of arrangement.

7348. Men who exhibit self-restraint and so on, you would allow to work on some part of the land?—Yes.

7349. Has the inebriate home been successful?—We regard it as so.

7350. Does the Home Office Inspector of Inebriate Homes inspect your home?—Yes, sir.

7351. Now what do you put down as the average value of a man's labour in the colony per day?—That is a very difficult question; I have tried to answer it in a statement.

7352. Are they worth 1s. a day, take them all round?—Not to begin with, sir; they would cost 1s. a day.

7353. Of course, a man who is a fairly good hand with a spade will earn a good deal more than 1s. a day?—Yes, sir; on the other hand, I have now in my mind a case of a man from Manchester who came to us; he did his best, and was paid the minimum irrespective of his work. Then he got a bit independent, and he thought he was not having enough. I told the market garden superintendent to give him piece-work. Now that man's earning for the first day of piece work valued at the same rate as any outsider would be paid, was 3d. and he came round to me in a great cry "Can a Christian man live on that?" showing me the 3d. token that he had. Well, as I pointed out to him, that was the actual value of his work.

7354. What was he doing?—Hoeing in the market garden. Now, he was a well-behaved man and was doing well. I just gave instructions at the office to let him have the minimum because of his good behaviour; I could not tell the market garden superintendent to give him more because that was his own choice. That man turned out all right; he emigrated to New Zealand two years ago; I heard from him last month with a remittance of £5 repaying a loan that was made to him. He and his wife are in a position in New Zealand on a sheep farm at £80 a year and all found. I had to put a matter of £10 to help him to emigrate, in addition to what his friends gave; and he has repaid me half of that.

7355. Well, there is proof that he is getting on well?—Yes, we do not keep any record of that. When the man went to New Zealand his case was closed; he emigrated, and that is the end of it so far as the records of the colony are concerned, but in the emigration office, for which I am responsible now, he appears in the loan account.

7356. (Mr. Davy.) When you close a man's case like that, you close it for good or for evil. If you hear harm of a man, it does not appear at all in your returns?—That is more likely to appear than the good, because of his coming back.

7357. Now, according to the return you have submitted, the total number of colonists received at Hadleigh during the 12 months from 30th September, 1902, to 30th September, 1903, was 239; and from 30th September to 30th September, 1904, 284; can you tell us what is the average number of inhabitants?—About 250.

7358. You say the total number received during the year 1902-3 was 239?—Yes, sir.

7359. The average number of inhabitants must have been very much less than that?—I have added a note to the return:—"The actual number of colonists received during these periods is considerably smaller than that usually dealt with in a year's work at Hadleigh, by reason of special arrangements made for the reception during the winter of men not regarded as colonists from the Mansion House fund and other public bodies." Therefore the two years there are abnormally small because these Mansion House men were not regarded as colonists in any way.

7360. And, therefore, these numbers have nothing to do with the Mansion House people at all?—No, sir; they do not appear there at all.

7361. From this table it appears that about 25 per cent. go to situations found by themselves, or to situations found by the colony, 15 per cent. are dismissed for bad behaviour, and there are 60 per cent. of which there is no record?—Yes, sir.

7362. Now, on the question of accounts, who makes your valuation of stock. I see on the credit side there is certain stock as per valuation?—Professional valuers. For many years Mr. Bird, one of the Inspectors of the Board of Agriculture, did the valuation; recently it has been Messrs. Kemsleys of Bishopsgate Street and Romford.

7363. At what time of year do they make the valuation?—In September. For the market garden that is a different valuation again; we have two gentlemen belonging to the Market Gardeners' Association who come down and do that.

7364. Anyway it is an independent valuation?—Absolutely.

7365. Taking the item, "Purchases, Wages and Expenses, etc.," how do you allocate the wages and expenses of the five different sections?—The requisition for wages comes in weekly; it is checked and paid; the same with regard to the tokens and food supplied to the men.

7366. Each keeps his own separate account?—Yes.

7367. How do you divide the amount paid for the central staff supervision?—That is a separate charge.

7368. Does it appear on this account or on any account?—It is on the next page after the inebriate home; it appears as administration and management expenses.

7369. Does not that include the inebriate home too?—No, sir; the inebriate home is an item by itself, viz., maintenance and expenses, £1,563 0s. 11d. Then there comes "administration and management expenses," that is of the farm colony—printing, stationery, postage, salaries, etc.

7370. Then these items under "administration and management expenses" all belong to the farm colony account?—Yes.

7371. Not the inebriate home?—Well, we regard it as part of the farm colony account.

7372. Those expenses include the expenses of the administration of the inebriate home?—Yes. Take the inebriate home out; it does not make any difference to the income and expenditure—it just pays its way.

7373. So that in calculating the total loss on the working account of the farm colony the sums amounting in the aggregate to £4,228 odd are included?—Yes, sir.

7374. Now I see your total loss on the working account for that year is £1,373, excluding administration expenses?—Yes, sir. That is after allowing for the value of the work done.

7375. That is allowing for the work done?—Yes.

7376. And the administration expenses were £4,228?—Yes. That includes management, tithe and preliminary expenses; you may go a step further and charge the depreciation.

7377. I do not see depreciation?—No, that is written off in the balance sheet.

7378. Then there would be an appreciation in the increased value of the land; that you do not bring into account?—No, sir.

7379. If we have to calculate the probable cost of an institution of this sort, your figures would show that the probable loss would be about £5,600 on the 250 men?—I have made a private memorandum on the question of cost, dealing with this (see Appendix XXIV).

7380. Yes, in that memorandum you allow six acres a head for each of the people?—I take the fact.

7381. I do not suppose anybody starting an institution of this sort would allow six acres a head. It would be an extraordinary price you would have to pay for housing and land to accommodate 250 colonists; it would require a capital charge of £150,000?—It all depends what we are going to do with the land.

7382. I am approaching the question from a different point of view. The loss on your 250 men amounts to £5,600?—Yes, sir.

7383. What money do you get from the guardians?—The total income from that source last year was £419, a mere trifle.

7384. That is included in the £5,600, which would amount to £22 a year per man, would it not?—Yes.

7385. That is rather what I wanted to get at?—I think it costs more than that really.

7386. Yes, it would. In this account you do not put anything to capital charges; this is merely a working account for the year; you must take into account the original cost of the land and the buildings?—Yes, that is done in the balance sheet.

7387. Are salaries included in the account?—Salaries, yes; all charges absolutely.

7388. Allocated amongst the various sections?—Yes, each section bearing its own, and that which is not sectional being charged in the balance sheet.

7389. Now what was the original cost of the land?—Twenty pounds an acre, the first cost; then we have bought a good deal since and we have given as much as £200 an acre for some; very roughly, taking the buildings and everything else, it works out at about £40 an acre.

7390. For the 3,000 acres?—For the 2,000 acres of land; 1,000 acres are foreshore.

7391. 2,000 acres at £40 an acre?—Yes.

7392. That is £80,000. In the balance sheet the cost of the land is given at £83,000?—Yes, sir; that is with buildings.

7393. And the cost of the wharf, tramway and railways, £12,750?—Yes, sir.

7394. And the cost of the brickworks at £18,286: that makes a total of £114,000; does that include the cost of the buildings?—Yes.

7395. Then for farm implements, machinery, wagons and tools, £10,874?—Yes.

7396. Furniture and fittings £907?—Yes, then there is the stock.

7397. Did not that appear before?—Not in the balance sheet.

7398. It appears in the working account, we will omit that; but there is a grand total of about £ 26,000 for land, brick works, machinery and so on. Now that land has probably very much increased in value?—Yes, sir.

7399. I mean by the labour of the colonists?—Yes, and the natural development of the district.

7400. But still you would not get any solid return for the improved value except by selling, which you do not propose to do?—Not yet.

7401. I mean to say the increased value is no immediate benefit to you?—No, sir.

7402. Can you tell me what the assessment of your land is; what is the rateable value?—I do not remember at the moment.

7403. The charge for the interest and repayment on this capital item of £126,000 would amount to over £6,000 and that added to the £5,600, the cost of working, would make the annual cost per man nearly £50?—Yes.

7404. Now as regards the accounts of the shelters, each shelter pays its own working expenses, does it not?—I would not say each does, but they do as a whole.

7405. The idea is that they should?—Yes.

7406. And how do you apportion the rent?—Each carries its own.

7407. Is the rent arbitrarily fixed, or is it actually paid?—Actually paid.

7408. Does the property belong to the Salvation Army in any case?—In some instances, yes.

7409. How do you fix the rent of that?—Interest on borrowed money.

7410. And that is covered by the 2d. or 4d. a night that you charge?—Yes.

7411. At least that is the theory; now you say that in those shelters the total accommodation is 2,417?—Yes.

7412. Can you tell me the total number of nights' lodgings that are given in the year?—We are practically full all the time.

7413. So if I multiply that 2,417 by 365 I should get something like the approximate number of nights' lodgings?—I would take it at 300.

7414. That would make a total of 725,000 nights' lodgings: and out of those there came into the colony in the year 1902-3 twenty persons?—Yes.

7415. And in the year 1903-4, 117 persons?—It does not follow that they come from the shelters; they may have come direct from the city colony workshops: the shelters in this case would include workshops.

7416. It seems to me that it is not worth while to keep up these shelters simply as feeders to the colony?—I agree.

7417. Supposing the shelters were in other ways objectionable?—As feeders to the colony they are not necessary.

7418. It is an advantage that you get a certain number of colonists from the shelters?—Yes, sir.

7419. But it is no very considerable advantage by the numbers?—No, sir.

7420. Now can you tell me what is your objection to free shelters?—We have no objection to free shelters.

7421. Is not the maxim of the Salvation Army nothing for nothing?—Yes, sir.

7422. Well, that maxim would be fatal to a provision of free shelters, would it not?—No, sir; but if a man has nothing, then our contention is that provision ought to be made for him, and we have made that provision as far as possible by providing him work in the workshops.

7423. But the people who come to your free shelters do not all get work do they?—We have no free shelters.

7424. Well then, what is the objection to free shelters?—I have no objection to free shelters.

7425. Is it clear that the Salvation Army have no objection to free shelters; anyway, they do not start any?—They do not, except that their workshops are free shelters.

7426. But there the man is supposed to pay by his labour?—The admission is for a man who is absolutely destitute.

7427. Yes, but a certain amount of work is exacted from him, is it not?—It would be, but he may have received benefit before the work is exacted. He may be in such a condition as to be incapable of rendering any service, as I have seen them frequently.

Mr. David C.
Lamb.

30 May 1905.

Mr. David C. Lamb. 7428. And at your paying shelters you occasionally give a man a shelter for nothing ?—Yes, sir.

30 May 1905. 7429. (Sir William Chance.) The food and the shelters show an actual profit ?—Yes, I believe that is so.

7430. (Mr. Davy.) The food and shelter section show a profit even including the rent ?—Yes.

7431. What I want to know from the Army point of view is what is the objection to free shelters ?—Well, the objection to free shelters is that given under certain circumstances they may be very demoralising ; under other circumstances their lack may be a very great hardship and a very great danger.

7432. You mean that they would be demoralising at certain times in enabling a man to spend his last penny in drink instead of spending it in a proper way ?—Yes, sir.

7433. Now how would the lack of them be a danger ?—In the case of men temporarily destitute, having no resort at all to go to, who perhaps do not know of the casual ward or do not care to go there, because if they went they would be detained and denied the opportunity of looking for work.

7434. The theory of the English Poor Law is that every destitute person can be relieved, is it not ?—Yes.

7435. And you think destitute persons might not know of this provision of the law ?—I know that they do not ; and not only that, but if they did know what they were entitled to it would be very awkward for the guardians sometimes ; if the poor people did know what they could claim they could simply paralyse the Poor Law administration.

7436. Can you give me an illustration ?—Yes, sir ; fill the casual wards and when they were full demand the right to be received somewhere else ; that would be a very awkward thing ; or again, close all the Salvation Army shelters and the Church Army homes and put the inmates on the guardians.

7437. Do you think that the amount of shelter accommodation in London is sufficient for the needs of the case ?—No, London is growing.

7438. And the shelters are full, are they not ?—Yes, sir, and the conditions that brought about these are still the same ; until you get down to the root cause of the difficulty you will have a continuation of the evil.

7439. Do you think there is an immediate want for shelters in London ?—I do not know that there is an immediate need ; there is an immediate need for something, either provisional shelter or work.

7440. Or we shall have people wandering about destitute ?—Exactly.

7441. Who provides the free meals in London ?—Oh, many institutions do.

7442. Do the Salvation Army provide any free meals ?—Not as a rule ; in special circumstances.

7443. Are you not providing free meals in the Commercial Road ?—During the winter, yes.

7444. You are aware that a man could live free of cost on the meals given away ; he might use the free shelter in Medland Hall, for instance ?—I believe he could, yes.

7445. Or he might sleep out on the staircases ?—Yes.

7446. You are aware there is a good deal of sleeping out by a certain class in London ?—Yes.

7447. Does not the provision of easy shelters—I will not say free shelters—and free meals, make it possible for that class to continue their existence ?—Yes.

7448. Do you think that existence is a profitable one or a useful one, or that it is good for them, or for the State ?—No, sir, but it is better than it would be if people were left absolutely alone.

7449. What do you think would happen if they were left alone ?—You would have a little more smallpox than you have had.

7450. Smallpox only occurs in epidemics ?—Yes, sir, still it has been costly ; you would have a little more than that ; you would have a great deal more vermin in your public places than you have got ; you would have all the evils that are characteristic of that class aggravated.

7451. You think the shelters, even the free shelters, and the cheap food lessen the evils of that class ?—Yes, sir.

7452. Might they not tend to increase the numbers of the class ?—I do not think so. I have tried to see the matter from all standpoints ; I have been in the thick of it for the last fifteen years, and that is my deliberate conclusion. You must get the people back to the land, either in this country or elsewhere.

7453. Now when you discharge a man from Hadleigh, do you always pay his fare to a place ?—That is the rule. You may find in some cases, for some reason or other, we have not, but that is the rule.

7454. In the case of Merxplas, you suggest there should be a discharge home to which the colonists could go ?—Yes.

7455. The men should be gradually trained to spend their money ?—Yes.

7456. One of the colonists in Merxplas told me that when he was discharged he was to have £4, and that he would use the first pound of that in taking ship to England, because he had heard that English workhouses were very comfortable. Would you let him have his £4, speaking as an administrator and not as a patriot ?—If I were a Belgian, I think I would let him go to England.

7457. Take this point : a man having earned his money, how far would you control his expenditure of it ?—I would control it absolutely ; I would make him go my way. Since I have been there I have had an application from a man with £8, and he wants to go to Canada ; perhaps it is the same man who has earned a little more money.

7458. In your statement you say that financial provision and procedure in dealing with the vagrant question should be on the lines of the Light Railways Act ; what exactly do you mean ?—Well, sir, from our point of view the first chief difficulty would be the provision of capital not the maintenance grant. Then I ask how are you going to get the capital and what machinery do you suggest for the control of it, and after conferring with two or three people who know something of procedure they suggest the Light Railways Act as being the line along which legislation might be the most easily promoted. We suggested something else in the Vagrancy Bill.

7459. Grants from the county council ?—Or that the Land Improvement Company might have their rules modified if necessary to acquire land for that purpose, but that was simply to have existing machinery utilised ; but now we hope there may be a fundamental change in the Vagrancy Act, in which case it would be a comparatively easy matter to come up with a scheme for finance, and we think the Light Railways Act would be the best plan to follow, because if I remember rightly that Act set aside a certain sum of money, and put £1,000,000 or £1,250,000 at the disposal of the Board of Trade for the Light Railway Commissioners, three to be appointed : on the motion of a local authority or a private company an inquiry is held as you know, and then these commissioners recommend either a grant out and out, a loan free of interest, or a loan at nominal interest, or no action. It seems to me that vagrancy must be a national question ; you must have uniformity of treatment, and you must proceed by stages, and it seemed to us that that procedure was the best.

7460. That is to say, when a local authority wanted to start a compulsory farm colony, the State should contribute so much ?—Yes, sir, or if there were special circumstances you would have your inquiry and you would hear objections ; and in the same way if the Church Army or the Salvation Army wanted an inquiry.

7461. And the State would advance to the Salvation Army or the Church Army sufficient money to run a new colony ?—Yes, if they make out a case and there was need for it ; the local authorities might be asked to contribute, then you would prevent overlapping. If the Salvation Army were covering the ground they would say there was no necessity for a colony there ; if the Church Army had a home there, there would be no need there.

7462. The State finding the capital ?—Yes, sir.

7463. Would the Salvation Army guarantee the repayment of the interest on the capital ?—Yes, or whatever authority was undertaking the work.

7464. Or the Church Army ?—Yes, sir. You would not start a colony unless there was a fair prospect of its being required. Then the State would become contributors to the maintenance and out of that you would, so to speak, guarantee your own payment.

7465. In the event of the colony being a financial loss who would pay the deficit?—I do not think it can be a loss. Well, you could work it in two ways; you could either work it by a capitation grant by which the holder of the property would guarantee; you would have to be satisfied that he was capable of meeting his engagements; or if it was not a capitation grant and was entirely controlled by the State, why then you would have sufficient to guarantee payment.

7466. You contemplate the possibility of the State running entirely the whole business?—Yes, sir.

7467. In that case who would appoint the officers; who would conduct the administration—the Salvation Army?—I should say these Commissioners.

7468. Who might employ the Salvation Army?—Yes, or anybody else. As I have suggested, if the voluntary bodies did not act and there was a need, the State would have to initiate the policy themselves.

7469. To go to another point, the decision of the High Court in the case of the Poplar Guardians v. Martin related to the man who refused to work at Hadleigh, because he had to go to church?—Yes.

7470. And going to church was held to be an improper condition?—No, sir, I have the Times report here; the Lord Chief Justice held that the conditions ought to be conditions that affected the work rather than the man's conduct. I do suggest, in view of that case and the difficulties that will arise in such connection, that you should consider the possibility of some simple amendment and make provision for dealing with this class; conviction should be possible if the proceedings are instituted by the guardians when men are offered work at colonies, the bye-laws of which have been approved by the Secretary of State.

7471. As long as the colony enforces those bye-laws a man would be bound to conform to them as a condition of maintenance?—Yes, sir.

7472. You prosecute a man for neglecting to maintain himself: well, does he maintain himself at Hadleigh?—He does ultimately.

7473. Is that a difficulty in the way of letting him mix with others?—No, sir, I do not think so.

7474. You have never heard that point raised?—No, sir, because we would give such a man work that he could do, put him on to a job where he would be absolutely sure to earn enough to maintain himself.

7475. Are you in favour of indeterminate sentences?—Yes, sir.

7476. That is to say, a man is kept while he behaves himself?—Yes; make his discharge conditional upon his good behaviour.

7477. Would you fix any term?—Two or three years, and let him go up again before the magistrates; let him satisfy the magistrate.

7478. At Hadleigh how many hours do the men work?—The usual work hours are 6 to 6.

7479. 8 or 10 hours a day?—It varies a little from the agricultural to the industrial: we get in about 55 hours in the week.

7480. Do you get this number in winter and summer?—No, sir, it is less in winter.

7481. Have you the same number of men in winter as you have in the summer?—Not quite so many last winter, because of the special circumstances then.

7482. But ordinarily you have more in winter than summer?—Yes.

7483. So just the time when presumably work is most wanted you have the least work to offer them?—Yes, sir, that is one of the difficulties.

7484. That is one of the inherent disadvantages of a farm colony?—Yes, if you were laying out your estate in any way where you could save your capital expenditure, you could make your roads and drainage in the winter. We have been able to hold the balance fairly even at Hadleigh in that way, so far.

7485. The winter days are short and you cannot work in heavy wet or a frost?—That is so, but the days that a man cannot work at all are few, sir. I have known men who have been there three months in the winter and have not lost a single hour. Mr. David C. Lamb, 7486. (Sir William Chance.) You speak of conditions bringing about the present state of things; what conditions do you refer to?—Competitive conditions and the industrial conditions of England, changing from the agricultural to the industrial and the general attractions of towns. I think that the people of the country might be much more evenly distributed, either in this country or in the colonies, and either one is the same to me.

7487. Are you one of the people who attribute the condition of things to our present land laws?—Partly; I think they might be improved. At present the quickest way out is for men to go to the north-west of Canada. I would like to see access to the land made more easy for the working men in this country.

7488. You consider that shelters and free meals must continue under existing conditions?—Yes.

7489. (Dr. Downes.) I see you estimate the cost of erecting dormitory accommodation at £7 to £11 per head according to the class of building; is that based on your experience at Hadleigh?—Yes, sir.

7490. And you estimate the cost of food for say 200 men at 4s. 6d. per head for raw material?—Yes, sir.

7491. And 2s. 6d. per head for lighting, cooking, etc.; that would be per week I take it?—Yes.

7492. You have undertaken to give me the gross figures?—Yes.

7493. You say that you are in favour of a man earning his food?—Yes.

7494. You think that in the labour colony provision should be made whereby the man should have the choice of food; let the value be fixed, but let the man have a choice?—Yes.

7495. That would be the stimulus to exertion?—Yes; he may not feel for instance like having a heavy breakfast—very well, let him have the benefit of that: either have the money in his pocket or have an extra bit at dinner-time.

7496. I think you said that there should be for each man in a colony a certain minimum of food by which he could keep body and soul together and keep himself in a physically fit condition?—Yes; he should have the food whether he likes it or not. We would know better what was good for a man than he would, and I would insist on him having that food.

7497. But your minimum would be a wholesome fare of the plainest description?—Yes.

7498. You give a daily sample bill of fare at Hadleigh which perhaps you would hardly call of the plainest description. I see there is meat three times a day. You would not regard that as your minimum I take it?—No, sir, that would be meat twice a week.

7499. If he wanted this diet he would have to work for it?—Yes.

7500. And he would have to buy it by the tokens?—Yes.

7501. And if he became an advanced physiologist he would not want all this meat, and possibly be all the better for it?—Yes, and take brown bread instead of white.

7502. Anyway, he would learn to live in a wholesome temperate way, and if he lived cheaply he would save so much more?—Yes. There are one or two points that I should like just to touch upon; they are rather important. In our pamphlet, "The Vagrant and the Unemployable" on page 10, there is a passage which bears directly on the present Bill for the unemployed. This was written two or three years ago. I do not want to pose as a prophet, but my attention has been called to it in several quarters. "An uneasy feeling prevails that in the treatment of our poor things are far from what they ought to be, and fears are expressed that some ill-thought out scheme for their improvement may be launched. If the vagrant and able-bodied classes are dealt with by means of labour colonies, that increased care and kindly attention which all parties agree should be extended to the aged poor and to children will be rendered possible." Then on page 12,

Mr. David C. Lamb,

30 May 1905.

Mr. David C. Lamb.
30 May 1905. "If a number of colonies were established throughout the country, the inefficient would be absorbed and the way cleared for closing in on the 'won't works.' The casual wards could be made the high roads to some labour colony, and the police could probably then, more effectually than any other agency, manage this side of our national life. I am of course only speaking of the 'unemployables' and 'won't works' and the workhouse 'ins and outs.' What can be done for the willing and able-bodied unemployed must be determined when the extent of that evil has been ascertained by the elimination of the classes named above." That is the "won't works" and "unemployables," and until that is done my feeling is that you cannot with safety deal with the unemployed question.

7503. (Mr. Davy.) Which you think is an additional reason for dealing with the vagrancy question?—Yes, sir.

7504. You think the necessity for dealing with the vagrancy question is a matter of urgency?—Much more urgent in my judgment because the consideration of the unemployed question is confused by these "unemployables." In that pamphlet I say "I have an idea this problem will become very simple when the permanent element has been removed, and probably can be fully met by municipal and other effort for relieving periodical and special distress. The course hereafter proposed must precede any effort to bring the unemployed question within measurable distance of solution." I feel that as strongly to-day as ever I did.

7505. We are extremely obliged to you for the trouble you have taken in giving us your evidence.

TWENTIETH DAY.

Wednesday, 31st May, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. J. S. Davy, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.
Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Captain FULLARTON JAMES, Chief Constable of Northumberland, called; and Examined.

Captain Fullarton James.
31 May 1905. 7506. (Chairman.) You are the chief constable of Northumberland?—I am.

7507. In the discharge of the duties of your office you have, no doubt, made inquiry into the condition of vagrancy in the county?—Yes, I have.

7508. Now, to what extent do your police deal with vagrants?—Well, outside what I imagine are the dealings of all county police with vagrants, the only special thing we do is to act as assistant relieving officers in five out of the nine unions.

7509. And do you find that that is successful?—I think it is.

7510. And you would be in favour, I suppose, of recommending that that system should become general from the experience you have had of it?—Yes, I should.

7511. You know it is the case in many other counties that the police act as assistant relieving officers?—Yes; but I do not know that the feeling is in favour of it; I understand rather that the feeling is against it; I do not know to what extent the system is general.

7512. It may interfere with the duties of the police in other ways?—It acts as a tie on the police at the hours at which perhaps they are most wanted; in winter time between half past five and half past seven perhaps.

7513. It may necessitate some small addition to the police force?—Yes, or a little waste of efficiency from a police point of view.

7514. A little re-arrangement and possibly some addition?—Yes; there is a difficulty.

7515. Do your police habitually inspect the casual wards?—No.

7516. They have, of course, a right to go there whenever they want to?—And do; and to common lodging-houses; we have not the right, but we go.

7517. And there is no difficulty about their admission?—No; I went myself only three days ago to a common lodging-house to see in what condition it was, and I was received with open arms.

7518. As far as you know, no difficulty is placed in the way of the police going to the common lodging-houses?—None whatever; I think they are very glad to have us there.

7519. You have taken a census, I believe, of the vagrants in your county?—Yes, I have.

7520. A complete census as far as you could?—As far as we could.

7521. In what way did you proceed to get that census: was it taken by your police?—Yes, entirely.

7522. They went to the casual wards?—No, sir, it was done at points on the road. Seventeen points were taken on the more important roads, which it was supposed would tap almost all the vagrants.

7523. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Would not the same man be counted twice over?—Well, I do not think so; the same man has been enumerated more than once, but I put him out by going through the papers very carefully myself.

7524. (Chairman.) The census was taken on the roads, and not at casual wards?—Not at casual wards at all. After I got the returns for the several divisions I went very carefully myself through every tramp, about 315 in that day, mentioned in those lists, and I cast out all the men who were enumerated twice, and it is extraordinary to see how very accurate was the account given on that particular day by the tramp of himself. Whether it was a correct account or not, it is impossible to say, but he gave the same name, age and birth-place; the name was always the same; therefore, it seems to me, there is very little difficulty about the casting out. I put the number at seventy-one who had been twice enumerated; seventy-one were enumerated by two officers at two points; then I went through at Morpeth the casual ward admission book, and in every instance of the twenty, thirty, or forty men in the Morpeth district, the account the man gave the night before when he got his ticket of admission, and when he did not know that there were any police statistics being collected, was exactly the same.

7525. That is satisfactory as showing that the man can be fairly depended upon to give his right name?—I think so, to a considerable extent.

7526. Your Northumberland tramps are truthful in regard to their names?—I think they are. I think that is shown.

7527. Those men enumerated, as far as you could tell from the account of your officers, were men actually on their way from one place to another?—Yes.

7528. They were not simply loitering about?—Well, they were only going at the rate of two and one-third miles an hour; that was their average rate of walking; some of them take twenty minutes to go about one-third of a mile. That was a goodish loiter, of course; undoubtedly they were loitering, but they were moving towards another point.

7529. They would be on their way towards a shelter of some sort?—They were moving, no doubt, to the next casual ward or common lodging-house.

7530. What was the total number that night?—The total number, when I had cast out those who had been twice enumerated, was 244.

7531. That is, persons enumerated on the roads by your officers?—At those seventeen stations; only eleven were women, and there was not a single child.

7532. That is rather remarkable?—Well, the children are almost non-existent on the road, as far as I know.

7533. What becomes of the children?—That is what I have been trying to find out; I cannot find out what happens to them, but they certainly do not exist on the roads now, compared with five years ago.

7534. And from your inquiries you have not been able to find out what becomes of them?—No, I cannot; I have travelled myself within the last few months on the roads on the borders in a van, so that I should be entirely on the roads and never off them; I have slept on the road and in that time out of probably 150 vagrants that I saw I did not see 6 children.

7535. Your figures seem to indicate that the men who do live that wandering life, are as a rule, single men; the number of women is so small?—There are very few women.

7536. It is very much like this in the rest of England: the number of women is very small as compared with men, and the number of children is still smaller in proportion?—Yes.

7537. If your plan were followed out there would be very little difficulty, I apprehend, in getting a fairly complete census for the whole of England?—I do not think there would.

7538. There must have been a certain number of vagrants you would not get hold of who were already in casual wards or in common lodging-houses?—Well, if you took the census on two consecutive days you would get them.

7539. But then you would get more double entries?—Yes, you would; of course, you would have to go more carefully into it; no doubt we did not catch them all.

7540. Between what hours was the census taken?—Between the hours of seven in the morning and seven at night on the 17th of March of this year.

7541. Would not any person, then, who had entered the casual ward overnight be out of the census?—Oh, no, because he would be discharged next day at seven in the morning; in our case the two nights are hardly ever exacted.

7542. Is not a man kept in for two nights to do a task of work?—Yes, but very seldom; the greater part of our unions have got no apparatus or conveniences whatever for task work being done by the number of people who go there.

7543. What is the work done, as far as you know?—As far as I can see, it is wood chopping and stone breaking.

7544. Have you any stone crushing as they have in some places in the south of England?—No, I do not think so; there is a good deal of wood chopping.

7545. But I gather from what you say that is only enforced in cases where a man is detained more than one day?—Yes, I think the man who says he will stay; that is what it comes to.

7546. From what you have learned yourself, what do you gather to be the number of vagrants at present in this country?—I have made a calculation on the basis of our figures, and taking the population of our police county, giving the same proportion to other police counties and districts in England, I would make England and Wales anything between 36,000 and 40,000.

7547. That is men, women and children?—Yes, and then Scotland would be between 8,000 and 10,000 more.

7548. (Mr. Davy.) Would you just explain how you get that ratio?—Assuming that this census in Northumberland is fairly correct, I do not think we have enumerated any excess people; we certainly have missed some people; we have got 244 on the 17th March. Suppose we missed 50 or 60 that makes it up to something like 300. The population of the Northumberland police district being about 300,000, that would be 1 per 1,000 of the population; taking that for England and Wales, as the population of England and Wales is about 36,000,000 you would get about 36,000.

7549. (Chairman.) You are arguing upon the Northumberland figures?—Yes, I do not want to say that is the number; that is the only calculation I can make. Most of the county of Northumberland, with the exception of a comparatively small area in the south-east, is purely agricultural and thinly populated.

7550. The only town of any size towards the north till you get to Berwick is Alnwick?—That has only 7,000 inhabitants.

7551. So it is a very thinly populated county, and I do not know that it is fair to take it as a specimen county?—Yes; but I find that the census will show that the greater number of tramps are found in the agricultural parts; in the mining and manufacturing parts you find very few tramps at all; the places where we have most tramps are Hexham and Haltwhistle on the main road between Newcastle and Carlisle, which is entirely agricultural, and at Belford, between Alnwick and Berwick.

7552. Those are two great main trunk roads?—Yes.

7553. The latter is the main road to Scotland, and the other is the main road to Carlisle and to the West?—Yes.

7554. Have you during the last four years experienced a considerable increase in vagrancy?—Yes.

7555. To what do you attribute this increase: some witnesses consider that the termination of the war caused an increase in the number of the tramps?—I think for a short time it would have had that effect; the war certainly relieved the roads of a great number of tramps. I noticed that in Radnorshire, where I then was, the Militia and the other regiments that were embodied took a great number of men who were ordinary road men. I made an enumeration showing the number who in our recent census described themselves as having been in the Regular Army and in the Militia; there were 36 altogether; that, of course, is a large number out of 244, if it is correct.

7556. Beyond the war, can you suggest any particular cause?—I suppose trade is slack with us. I should say that was the principal contributing cause.

7557. There has not been so much of that in the north?—Yes, we are pretty slack; collieries are working very badly.

7558. They are not working less, but wages are lower?—Wages are very low; men are turning to other things; I get recruits now, would-be recruits, for the police, who would not have dreamed of the police five years ago; they come in and ask to be taken on; they used to make £5 a week, five years ago.

7559. Now, as regards crime by vagrants, do you look upon the vagrant class as a criminal class?—Well, yes, to the extent of small offences; undoubtedly they do commit a great number of the small offences.

7560. But not crimes of violence?—No, there is very little of the crimes of violence with us; I think if you take the pure gipsy, you would probably find that in his case the crimes of violence perhaps were higher than among other vagrants.

7561. You have, of course, in one corner of your county a great number of the old gipsy blood?—Yes, we have a great number mixed; there are very few of the really pure gipsy class.

7562. We have been told of many cases of intimidation: tramps going to the house when the man was out and forcing the wife to give money and food and so on; have you many cases of that sort in Northumberland?—Very few now; I think the bicycle policeman and the dog have kept away a great deal—most of these houses keep a dog.

7563. Have you telephonic communication in Northumberland?—Yes, we have in almost every police station.

7564. Do you not find that very useful?—Enormously so.

Captain
Fullarton
James.

31 May 1905.

*Captain
Fullarton
James.*

31 May 1905.

7565. In the case of a tramp who had intimidated a woman, there the telephone would be very useful, because you would be able to telephone up the road to the next police station, and catch the man?—I think the telephone, the bicycle, and the dog have kept down that class of offence.

7566. That class of offence is not very frequent?—Not in Northumberland now.

7567. Now, no doubt you are in favour of uniformity in the treatment of vagrants?—Yes, certainly.

7568. You are aware that there is a considerable lack of uniformity in some parts of England?—Yes, I know there is.

7569. In what way would you suggest that more uniformity could be secured?—Well, I think to start with, if the casual ward is to be continued, there should certainly be uniformity in the casual ward; there is not anything approaching to it at present.

7570. There should be uniformity of treatment and task?—Yes, as far as one can get the task; and uniformity in carrying out the regulations originally fixed by the Local Government Board, but now never carried out as far as I can make out. I do not know whether I am wrong in that, but my own observation goes to show they are not carried out.

7571. In many parts of England no doubt that is so; you find probably five unions together in which they are carried out, and then in several unions together they are not carried out?—Yes, and I find workhouses—I do not want to make any insinuations against masters of workhouses who are not old policemen—where there is a man who has been an old policeman or who has had the control and discipline of men, and the increase in the number of persons who attend these casual wards during the last three years, is nothing; there is the same number now as there was three years ago; but take a workhouse kept by a slack man, a man who has been unsuccessful in business, and you will find in that workhouse that there has been an increase of perhaps 100 per cent.

7572. It is a popular casual ward?—Yes, they go where it is easy for them.

7573. I think you have something to tell us about pedlars. Now, do you think that that calling assists the vagrant; does it give him an excuse for vagrancy?—I think it may do; but I do not know that it does to an enormous extent; I think there are weak points in the Pedlars Act; I think there could be an improvement from the police point of view; I am referring to the comparative ease with which a man gets the certificate, and the great difficulty the person who has to renew that certificate has in arriving at the fact as to whether or not the man has been convicted. I think if a man who holds a pedlar's certificate is convicted of any offence of dishonesty, it should be endorsed upon his certificate, and that fact should be notified to the police authority who issued the certificate, and perhaps the last place of abode, if he has a place of abode. At present in the case of a certificate, issued, perhaps, by my own superintendent or a Durham superintendent, we do not know whether the man has been six months in Durham gaol. On the face of it the man is all right, and the certificate is renewed.

7574. The pedlar's certificate gives the man a certain amount of status?—Yes.

7575. It is a passport to him?—Oh, yes, they can go to the back door.

7576. You would have more care taken in regard both to the granting and the renewal of certificates?—As regards the renewal. I think the granting is fairly well done, as far as I can see. According to the terms of the Act, a form has to be filled up and inquiry is made in regard to the character of the man. I think that should be increased to three months, and the man should be required to get the certificate of two house-holders like the hawkers. I would put the pedlar on the same terms as the hawker. Before the hawker can get a certificate he has to get two house-holders and a clergyman.

7577. (Mr. Simpson.) By that you mean a man who goes about with beasts?—The £2 man.

7578. He has to pay the £2 if he has something drawn by a horse or a donkey?—Yes.

7579. (Chairman.) I should like to ask your opinion with regard to the prison sentences for vagrancy offences; do you think the short sentence of seven days or under has any effect whatever in repressing vagrancy?—No, I do not think it has.

7580. Looking at it from a police point of view it is objectionable, as you have a man taken away from his work in many cases for a whole day, going with the vagrant to the gaol; and your opinion is that it has no effect on the vagrant?—I think it is no use at all. In going to the gaol it would take a constable away for ten hours that day, and he would have a great deal of his time taken up the previous day.

7581. What is your view as regards the proper length of sentence for offences like sleeping out, begging, and so on?—Well, the magistrates can give fourteen days or a month at petty sessions, but it is never given; we never get anything but seven days; seven days is our average, and a great number are dismissed.

7582. Now, what would be your view as to this suppose a man is convicted, we will say of begging, and instead of receiving a short sentence the conviction is recorded against him, and he is told that if he comes up again he will have fourteen or twenty-eight days; there would be the conviction, the warning, and then the long sentence afterwards; do you think that would be a better system than the present?—Yes, if it were carried out.

7583. It would lead more to the repression of vagrancy, and at the same time probably would result in fewer admissions to the prisons?—Yes, it would.

7584. At present, as you are aware, the enormous majority of people in the prisons are there for short sentences?—Yes, I know they are.

7585. As in the case of habitual drunkards, so with vagrants, the short sentence is absolutely useless?—I agree.

7586. What do you consider to be the proportion of men honestly in search of work to the number of idle men who have every intention of not working at all?—I think it is a very small proportion.

7587. We have had various percentages given us?—Well, I should say the largest number is the incorrigible "work-shy" and they are mostly able-bodied; and then secondly, there is a very large number of travelling labourers, navvies, masons, bricklayers, tailors, carpenters, who work for two or three days, and then drink every farthing they have got. They spend a week or perhaps a fortnight on the roads before they get another job; there is a very large proportion of those. When I went over the common lodging-house at Morpeth a few days ago, I found a painter who had been there three months; he was on the point of moving; but he, of course, was far longer there than you would expect.

7588. He had been doing occasional work?—He had been doing regular work at Morpeth for three months. That man, no doubt, is given to drink; that is his trouble; perhaps he will get his wages and get drunk; then leave the town and walk perhaps for a month or two. So a proportion of our 244 were men of that class; men who do work and can work perfectly well; but drink is the trouble with them. Then I should put as the third class the large number of pedlars, who, I think, are more or less inoffensive people; I do not think they do much harm.

7589. Do you think the pedlar comes under the designation of [vagrant]?—He ought not to come, but in an enumeration you cannot avoid men shabbily dressed; you find him on the road and until you know he is a pedlar, you do not know he is respectable; one would not suggest to do much to him. Then, it is a very small proportion of working men who would come.

7590. Would the navvy come under the description of a working man in search of work; he goes off to wherever he hears there is a job, and stays there probably as long as the job lasts?—No, not as a rule as long as the job lasts; probably only a week; at those water-works in Northumberland during the last three or four or five years, hundreds of men stay only a week or less and then get their wages and go.

7591. Those men are a sort of subsidiary to the regular navy who goes there for the job?—Yes.

7592. The larger proportion are men who go to work for a few days?—Yes. A man was telling me that the old-fashioned "velvet-back," as they call him, with the velvet back to his waistcoat, is now almost extinct.

7593. As regards the question of a way-ticket, have you seen the form used in Gloucestershire?—No, I have not.

7594. The system in force there, briefly, is this: when a man leaves the casual ward he has a ticket given to him with his name and description upon it, the place from which he comes, and the place to which he says he is going; the ticket contains a list of the casual wards on his route through the county where he can obtain shelter, and in between there are stations—a sort of half-way house—where he can get a mid-day meal of bread. The provision of this meal does away with the necessity for begging, and the ticket affords a means of identification which you are now without?—Yes.

7595. Now, do you think that some such system as that if made general, would have a good effect on vagrancy?—Yes, I think, if you combined it with shutting up the casual wards. The ticket is, I take it, for the man honestly in search of work.

7596. No. It is given to the man who leaves the casual ward in the morning, and if he continues in the course that is described on the ticket it is considered to be a good ticket, and entitles him to leave the casual ward the following morning. If he goes some other route than that described on the ticket, it becomes a bad ticket, and is evidence to that extent against him?—I see.

7597. If that system was made general all over the country, would that not be a means of identification of the honest man as against the idle man?—Yes, but I do not think many of these men care much about a meal of bread in the middle of the day.

7598. You think they want something more?—They do want something more; if you gave them a glass of beer it would be different.

7599. At the same time, if it is generally known that these men can get food in the middle of the day, it might prevent almsgiving?—Yes; of course, I have no experience of the working of this system except theoretically, but I understood that in Ayrshire, where they have had a system for a number of years similar to this, it was not a success. I do not see anything against trying it, but personally, I should not be very sanguine of any great success.

7600. But you have not gone fully into the question?—I have thought over the question; but I should not say, from my own idea, that the plan was a very sound one and likely to do much good.

7601. Have you considered whether it would be feasible at the casual wards to have information with regard to labour in the district; if, for instance, there is some job going, waterworks or anything of that sort?—Yes, I think it would be.

7602. It would be a good plan to have some system of communicating to the casual wards information as to any work within reasonable reach of the casual ward?—I think it would be an excellent thing. I have a book published by the chief constables of Scotland a good number of years ago—I do not think it is in print now—containing for each county information with regard to the permanent works in each district, showing also temporary waterworks and things of that sort, so that every officer of police could know where there were paper works, jute works, boot and shoe manufactories, and manure works, which were farm centres, and where they employed occasional labourers in the harvest season.

7603. (Sir William Chance.) What date is that book?—1881.

7604. To be of any value that would have to be kept up?—It was kept up; I do not know why it has been discontinued.

7605. It has been discontinued?—Yes, it was not published with the intention of assisting the tramp; but I think it would work in that way.

7606. (Chairman.) If it could be shown what works there were, waterworks, railway works, and so on, within reasonable reach of the casual wards, or the police station, it would be a great advantage; I am not sure that the police station would not be the better place of information than the casual ward?—Yes, I think it would be a very good plan; but I imagine that most tramps know pretty well themselves where these works are.

7607. There is a pretty good freemasonry amongst them?—There is.

7608. (Mr. Davy.) As regards Ayrshire, the case is hardly in point because there are no casual wards in Scotland?—There are not.

7609. The Ayrshire way-ticket is worked by a mendicancy society?—It is.

7610. The whole object of that is, if possible, to prevent people or check people giving casual alms?—Yes.

7611. And to relieve the tramp?—Yes.

7612. In England, where there are casual wards, the way-ticket system might do something more, might it not; it might not only ensure the man a mid-day meal, but it would, if his ticket was a good one, let him off the work and enable him to discharge himself earlier from the casual ward; that would be an assistance?—Oh, certainly.

7613. It is claimed for it that it would bring the police in closer touch with the vagrants?—Yes.

7614. They would know about those tickets?—Yes, I think that part of it is an advantage.

7615. Now how long does it take your constables to act as assistant relieving officers?—I think it is a couple of hours every night.

7616. So that it might necessitate another man in some instances?—That is the trouble. If it were done at a station where there was only one man it ties that man for those hours, and that is known in the district. But as a matter of fact, I do not think in any case in Northumberland there are less than two or three men in these stations.

7617. Have you ever seen cases where there is friction between the constable and the workhouse officials?—No, I cannot say that I have.

7618. Do you find cases where the police, instead of apprehending a man for begging, give him a ticket of admission to the workhouse?—Not in my experience.

7619. You are aware that the system has been tried in many counties, and has been given up?—Yes, I know it has.

7620. But with you it has succeeded?—I think so. We have given up in one union, Haltwhistle, since I have been in Northumberland—five years; that may have been due to the friction between the two heads, between the inspector and the workhouse master; I forget what was the cause.

7621. That is a very small union?—Yes; we say we do not care whether we do it or not.

7622. Do you have any systematic visitation of the vagrant wards by the police?—No.

7623. They just go when they think they might?—Yes. I do not think, as a rule, they go much to the casual wards; in fact, I do not think we can claim to go there.

7624. (Chairman.) I asked, I think, whether it was the custom to visit every night?—No.

7625. It is only when the police think fit?—Yes, and so far as I know we are never refused.

7626. (Mr. Davy.) You know what the regulations of the Local Government Board are in regard to bathing, searching, etc. in casual wards?—Yes.

7627. Do you know whether these requirements are carried out in most of the Northumberland unions?—Well, I know that in some of them they are not.

7628. Some of the unions are very small, are they not?—They are.

7629. For instance here is Belford, with a population of 5,000; well, the workhouse would be very small, I suppose?—It is small, and very old-fashioned.

7630. Can you give us any idea how many people there are in the Belford workhouse?—I have the figures for all the unions in Northumberland of casual paupers admitted.

*Captain
Fullarton
James.*

During November, Belford admitted in 1901, 139 persons; in 1902, 155; and in 1903, 135.

31 May 1905. 7631. I do not suppose there are 50 people in the Belford workhouse?—I should think not.

7632. Then there is the Bellingham union with a population of 6,000; and Glendale 8,000; Haltwhistle, 8,000, and Rothbury, 6,000. Now in these very small unions there would be a difficulty in providing casual wards up to date; I mean to say casual wards in which you could detain two nights?—Well, I have no doubt every difficulty could be met.

7633. The point is this, you can hardly expect uniformity of treatment in unions so very much varying in population as, say, Rothbury, with 6,000 inhabitants, and Newcastle-on-Tyne, with a population of 233,000?—No.

7634. And what makes it still more unequal is, for instance, Rothbury has an area of 167,000 acres, whereas Newcastle-on-Tyne has only 7,000 acres?—I can imagine there would be a difficulty in those places where there was an enormous influx to public works in the district. Rothbury, a year ago, went up from 129 in the month of November, 1901, to 281; no doubt the difficulty there would be enormous to cope with the excess.

7635. There would be the case of a very poor union having to carry out regulations which involve very considerable expense?—Yes.

7636. And which, possibly, might be considered not altogether for the benefit of the union which pays the cost?—Yes.

7637. Supposing uniformity is desirable, would not that be an argument for extending the area of chargeability?—Certainly.

7638. Have you any vagrant wards in Northumberland which are, in your opinion, unnecessary; which might very well be closed without doing any harm to anybody?—Well, I think I could find one or two that might be suppressed. I think you could reasonably expect a man to walk fifteen or twenty miles, and we have them closer than that. There is one, Ponteland, which I think might be suppressed, because it is only six miles from Newcastle.

7639. What union is that?—I think it is Castle Ward.

7640. Without some extension of the area of chargeability you could hardly close any vagrant ward in the county?—No.

7641. If you are to get uniformity you probably must have some county administration and some county area of chargeability?—Yes, and I should say it would be of great importance from the police point of view.

7642. Now what county administration would you suggest; would you think it an advantage that the police should have some considerable say in the administration of the vagrant ward?—Well, I think the work would be better done; when I say better done, I am not, for a moment, casting reflection on the way the work is done now.

7643. It would be done more uniformly?—I think it would be done by people who are accustomed to do that sort of work. I do not think you should expect a man who was not brought up to handle men, to handle casuals in a tumble down ward.

7644. The work of governing the casuals and the work of administering what is practically an old age alms-house, which the country workhouses are, are not of the same character?—Absolutely different.

7645. You require different qualifications?—Entirely.

7646. Now do you find that these vagrants express a preference for prison, occasionally, to the casual ward?—I do not think they do so much with us in Northumberland. I do not think they have such extra comforts in the Newcastle prison.

7647. You use the Newcastle prison?—We do almost entirely. We can go to Carlisle, but most of our people go to Newcastle.

7648. What do you suppose is the cost of taking a man to Newcastle from one of your remote unions in the North, say from Berwick?—In railway fares and the police, it would cost about 17s.

7649. To take a man from Berwick to Newcastle?—For a seven days' sentence.

7650. (Mr. Simpson.) It would cost much more, would it not, if you took him from some place off the railway; Berwick to Newcastle is a direct line?—Well, he would have to walk; we would not drive him.

7651. (Captain Showers.) Supposing he refused to walk?—If he refused to walk we would have to drive him, but they do not with us.

7652. (Mr. Davy.) Take a man from Rothbury; supposing he were coming down, say, to Epsom, it would help him considerably on his way?—Yes.

7653. It would be an advantage to him?—No doubt.

7654. And possibly even a saving of time; he would take perhaps five days to get there?—Yes; he goes fourteen miles a day on the average.

7655. If he were detained two nights at the tramp ward it would take him more than that?—Quite true; it is his quickest way of travelling.

7656. But pretty expensive to the State?—It is.

7657. Are you of opinion that it would be better to discharge that man with a warning than send him to gaol for seven days in a case like that?—No, I do not think so.

7658. You think seven days is a deterrent for the tramp?—I think it is an absurdity to arrest a man and take him before two magistrates and probably then discharge him.

7659. Do you not think it is an absurdity to send a man to prison for seven days under those circumstances?—I think it is, but I think he ought to go for more than seven days.

7660. The remedy is then longer sentences?—Certainly.

7661. Would you see any objection to having a minimum sentence for this class of case?—I think it would be most desirable.

7662. What minimum would you suggest?—Well, I should say fourteen days.

7663. You would not go so far as a month?—I think if you have a minimum, fourteen days would be fair.

7664. You have told us that there is not much crime amongst vagrants?—Might I just say about the crime that although I do not think there is a great deal of serious crime, I think the figures that I have furnished to the Committee (see Appendix XII.) show that there is an enormous proportion of crime, looking to the probable population. If you look at the figures you will see we have 297 persons in 1904 apprehended mostly for the smaller offences, out of a daily population of probably not more than 300; that is to say, on an average every vagrant in Northumberland is committed to prison once a year. Well, with the ordinary population our figure in Northumberland is only 25 a thousand.

7665. (Sir William Chance.) To what area do your statistics refer?—To the police county; that excludes Newcastle-on-Tyne, North Shields, and Berwick. The population according to the last return is 291,321.

7666. (Mr. Davy.) So although the offences by vagrants are not very serious ones, still they cause a great deal of trouble?—The proportion of crime is forty times more than in the case of the ordinary population.

7667. Are you of opinion that sleeping out is a serious offence?—Well, I am not sure that it is; I think it is an undesirable offence; but I do not know that it is so very serious. There is danger of fire, but I do not think there is a great deal of that; I do not think with us there has been intentional criminal fire-raising, as they call it in Scotland, to any extent at all, and I do not think accidental very much.

7668. Have you heard that in one of the Border counties the Scottish Insurance Company raised their rates owing to the frequency of such fires?—I saw it stated in 1903; I do not know whether it was a fact.

7669. There is more sleeping out in Scotland than in England?—Yes, because they have no casual wards. At a farm beyond Hawick, on the main Carlisle and Edinburgh road, in 1897, 549 tramps were taken into a farm outhouse and allowed to lie down for the night.

7670. (Mr. Simpson.) Who did not pay for their night's lodging?—I understand they paid nothing, and they became so troublesome that it has been discontinued. It was practically a casual ward for that purpose.

7671. (Mr. Davy.) Did they take them in from charity?—I suppose a certain amount of charity and a certain amount of fear; the nearest police station was eight miles away.

7672. On the general question, do you think tramps are a sufficiently serious nuisance to justify the State in taking further steps for their repression?—Yes, I do.

7673. Even if those steps be expensive?—I should try and combine the steps, that is to say to do it cheaper than the present cost to the community. I think it could be done.

7674. By locking them up for long periods?—Yes, in labour colonies.

7675. Now how many of those tramps that you challenged on that night, do you suppose were habitual tramps, men who would not do work if they could get it?—Well, I will give the opinion of my officers, but I am bound to say I think they are far too sanguine in the view that they take as to the probability of the men working. The police think of 244 that were challenged on the 17th March, 171 would work. Personally, I think that is far too sanguine a view; I should say if half worked it would be more than I should expect; I mean work and stick to it.

7676. And the remnant who will not work at all had better, you think, be locked up for considerable periods?—Certainly.

7677. And that would be perhaps one fifth of the whole?—Far more.

7678. One fifth according to the constables?—Yes, but I should say it would probably be nearer one half.

7679. How many of the vagrants you challenged slept in the vagrant wards?—About 60 per cent.

7680. (Mr. Simpson.) Your statistics of crimes committed by vagrants are not very unfavourable to that class. For instance, in 1902 there were only nine larcenies by vagrants; in 1903, only thirty; and in 1904, twelve. That is not a very considerable number?—No.

7681. Of course there is a large number of offences reported to the police for which no one is arrested?—Well, a number; I would not say a large number.

7682. As regards pedlars, it used to be the case, I think, that a pedlar's certificate could only apply to the police district in which it was given?—Yes, that was under the Act of 1871.

7683. Then it was made to apply all over the country?—Yes, that was done by an Act of 1882.

7684. That, of course, removed any possibility of constant supervision by the force that granted the certificate?—Yes.

7685. And do you take it that the certificate granted by one authority can be renewed by any other police authority?—Yes, I think so.

7686. I have heard it suggested that under the Act the police authority who should renew the certificate should be the police authority who granted it, but you have not taken that view?—Certainly we do not in Northumberland; we renew a great number which have not been originally granted by us.

7687. When it is renewed is the month's residence first required?—No, that is only for a new one.

7688. So you really have no means of judging the character of the pedlar?—Not a great deal.

7689. That is to say you would feel almost bound, under the present law, to renew the certificate unless you knew something against him?—Yes, one does in practice do that.

7690. Therefore, if it was given in the first instance to a man of very indifferent character by a slack police force who had not made proper enquiries, you would really be almost bound under the present law to renew it, unless you knew something to the contrary?—I think so.

7691. So the present system may very well work out as licensing people to obtain facilities for committing crimes?—I think it might.

7692. Because the pedlar's business is a very useful cloak for, say, larceny from a dwelling house, or house-breaking, or something like that?—That is so.

7693. A fee of 5s. is demanded for the certificate?—31 May 1905.
Yes.

7694. That goes to the police pension fund?—It does.

7695. In the case of a small police force it might be an inducement to grant certificates rather freely?—I do not think so. The policeman knows he must get his pension, whether it comes out of the pedlar's money or not; he does not care where it comes from, it has got to be found by his authority.

7696. You do not think it would have any effect?—Certainly I do not think so.

7697. Have you come across clear instances of certificates having been granted too freely by police authorities?—No, but I have a case to the contrary, I think. It is an instance mentioned by one of my superintendents, to me this very last week: a man applied for a pedlar's certificate in the south of Northumberland, and in making enquiries the officer, who was not the superintendent, told him that it was no use his applying, because he would not get it. It was refused, therefore he did not go any further. He was discovered pedlaring without a certificate. The case was dismissed, and it was afterwards discovered that subsequent to that the man had been refused a certificate in a neighbouring borough. That rather goes to show, I think, that we are very particular in the north, both in the borough and the county forces. I have not got an instance of the other.

7698. I have heard it stated in one county, for instance, that men were found with pedlars' certificates who could not even speak English. Have you come across cases like that?—No, I have not.

7699. As to renewal of certificate, I understand you to suggest that it would be a good thing if convictions were endorsed on the certificate?—Yes.

7700. Would you suggest that all convictions should be endorsed?—Anything implying dishonesty, certainly.

7701. And drunkenness and assault; surely it should be more difficult for a man to get his certificate renewed if he had been frequently drunk and disorderly; do you not think there would be an advantage in endorsing that?—Yes, I do, but I do not want to suggest too much; I think it would be a great advantage to have even that endorsed, and to prevent a man holding a license who was given to drunkenness or to assault.

7702. You and your force, for instance, would not think of refusing to renew a certificate because a man had been convicted once or twice of drunkenness?—No, I do not think so.

7703. But it would be a sort of indication; it would help you to form an opinion whether the certificate should be renewed or not?—Yes.

7704. Do hawkers, that is to say men who have to take out an Excise licence, take out a police certificate too?—No.

7705. They simply pay the Excise licence of £2?—Yes.

7706. Do gipsies going about with basket work have to take out a pedlar's or a hawker's licence?—They usually have a horse. They would have a hawker's licence.

7707. Supposing it were agreed that the casual wards should be handed over, say, to the control of the standing joint committee, do you think your force could undertake the supervision of them, so as to see that the regulations were carried out uniformly in the different wards?—I think we could certainly undertake it.

7708. You would be able to superintend them and your superintendents would be able to look in fairly frequently at the casual wards?—Oh, yes, because the casual wards would be, I take it, in towns where there is necessarily a superintendent.

7709. That is to say, supposing an ex-police constable were made superintendent of the casual ward, there would be no difficulty in the members of the force looking to see if the regulations were being carried out uniformly?—I do not think so.

7710. (Sir William Chance.) Is it your opinion that the system of having the police acting as assistant relieving officers has a tendency to reduce vagrancy?—Well,

*Captain
Fullarton
James.*

Captain Fullarton James.

31 May 1905.

I should not like to say to reduce vagrancy ; it tends to keep the vagrant in order.

7711. It brings him into association with the police ?—

Yes.

7712. Do you get many complaints as to begging by vagrants ?—Not a great number.

7713. Do you think there is a decrease in the number of complaints about begging in Northumberland ?—I would not like to say there has been any change in the number of complaints ; the figures I put in (see Appendix XII.) show the number of persons charged with begging in the three years, but that, of course, is entirely a different thing.

7714. There has been an increase of vagrancy since the war, I understood you to say ?—Yes.

7715. I also understood you to say that that increase had been accompanied by a decrease of child vagrancy ?—I think child vagrancy is falling off.

7716. Although there has been an increase in vagrancy generally ?—Yes.

7717. Is any special action taken in your neighbourhood to protect child vagrants ?—No.

7718. Have you any branches of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children in your district ?—Yes, we have them all over the county, but they do not act particularly with regard to vagrancy.

7719. I notice that in your criminal statistics of vagrants there are very few convictions for offences against the Poor Law compared with the whole number ?—Very few.

7720. There has not been very much complaint by the vagrants in regard to their treatment in the work-house ?—Well, they are not brought before the magistrate.

7721. In 1902 there were only 9 poor law offences out of a total of 250 ?—Yes.

7722. And in 1903 only 26 out of 324 ?—Yes.

7723. And in 1904 only 12 out of 297 ?—Yes.

7724. So you are not very much troubled by the poor law vagrant ?—No.

7725. (Dr. Downes.) Did you include the gipsies or caravan folk in your census ?—I should say not.

7726. Have you many of them ?—Well, so far as I can make out, we have about twenty families. I have got the names of thirteen families, who have as a rule three generations. There is generally the father, son or sons, and grandchildren travelling together.

7727. Do you think it desirable that any control should be instituted over those people ?—No, I think they are provided for sufficiently by the Inclosure Act of 1899 ; that is abolishing the gipsies, I think.

7728. What is the greatest distance between any two casual wards in your county that men would have to walk ?—It is twenty-four miles from Rothbury to Bellingham ; that is the greatest distance.

7729. That is exceptional ?—Yes, and it was done by one man in the census that I took, at almost the quickest pace of all the men who were walking ; he did twenty-four miles, at two and one-third miles an hour ; he was a man of nearly sixty-eight.

7730. What is the Inclosure Act to which you refer ?—Well, it is the Act of 1899, under which, I think, a district council can apply to the Board of Agriculture to make bye-laws for the regulation of commons ; I have got a bye-law here relating to a common which used to be a very troublesome one.

7731. (Mr. Simpson.) The gipsies are now being cleared off the commons by bye-laws made under that Act ?—They are now being cleared off the commons in that way in Northumberland.

7732. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) You accepted a suggestion by Mr. Davy that a tramp would commit himself at Berwick in order to get to Newcastle ?—I agreed that it was the shortest way to get there.

7733. Do you think a tramp has an objective always ?—No.

7734. What would his object be ?—I understood Mr. Davy to suggest that he was going to Epsom.

7735. (Captain Showers.) Is it not your opinion that you should have greater power to inspect common lodging-houses ?—I certainly think that it is most desirable. We have no powers at present.

7736. And also that all assistant relieving officers for vagrants should be police officers ?—I think so.

7737. In your opinion would it be a good thing if the finger-print system were introduced with a view to the better identification of tramps and a record of sentences against them ?—Yes, I am entirely in favour of that.

7738. If a man who had been used to police work—an ex-policeman—were put in charge of the casual wards, do you not think it would work very much better and more uniformly ?—I do.

7739. Would you suggest that policemen who are not pensioned should have charge of casual wards ?—Well, it would be rather a tie on the serving police.

7740. Under the present regulations, do you think you could force a policeman to act as superintendent of the casual wards ?—No, I do not think so, but there would not be the least difficulty in getting a pensioner. Out of the nine in Northumberland now two are ex-police constables.

7741. If an ex-policeman were in charge of a casual ward, he might be under the control of the chief constable ?—Certainly.

7742. In that case, would you be in favour of the wards in the county being regulated by a committee consisting half of guardians and half of members of the standing joint committee ?—Yes.

7743. If a policeman is in charge of each ward you must have some authority over all ?—Yes ; and you must introduce the guardians, I suppose.

7744. Well, if the cost comes from the rates ?—Yes.

7745. Otherwise, it would be very much better without bringing in the guardians ?—I should say so.

7746. (Chairman.) I see the number of convictions for drunkenness is very considerable ?—Yes.

7747. Do you think the absence of search leads to that offence ; for instance if those men had been examined and money had been found in their pockets, then they probably would have been sent on to a common lodging-house ?—I think by far the greater number of cases of drunkenness are men in the second class ; vagrants who work for a week and drink for a week ; they go to the common lodging-houses.

Mr. ROBERT PEACOCK, called ; and Examined.

Mr. Robert Peacock.

31 May 1905.

7748. (Chairman.) Mr. Peacock, you are the chief constable of Manchester ?—Yes, sir.

7749. And you have been in that position, I think, for seven years ?—Yes.

7750. And before that ?—I was chief constable of Oldham for six years, and four years chief constable of Canterbury.

7751. And you have had altogether twenty-six years' police experience ?—Yes.

7752. Now, in Manchester, how are the vagrants dealt with ?—As far as the police go, we do not deal with them unless they commit some offence ; they do not come into the hands of the police unless they are sleeping out, or begging, or committing some other offence under the Vagrancy Act.

7753. What class of people are those who are apprehended for sleeping out ?—Well, they are mostly tramps. Of course, the superintendents have instructions, if the men look like workmen and there is reason to believe that they are honestly sleeping out and want to get work, to allow them to go.

7754. Would the police apprehend a man who was found sleeping on public seats ?—No, we have a number sleeping out practically every night in one of the main streets, called Piccadilly.

7755. No doubt, in many cases the people use public seats?—Yes; and we even go so far as to put two constables there to patrol, so that they shall not interfere with passers-by.

7756. It is only when men are sleeping, I suppose, in places where there may be possibility of damage that you apprehend?—Oh, anywhere where they are found sleeping out we interfere, if they are not in a public place.

7757. If they took advantage of any building?—If they go inside a building or sleep in any outhouse or anything of that sort, of course the police arrest.

7758. And in cases of begging?—Yes.

7759. Now, take the case of a man who is an habitual vagrant and has a considerable number of convictions, do you think he should be dealt with under the Vagrancy Act?—I think the law is strong enough at present—if the magistrates will exercise their powers—where a man has been convicted a number of times.

7760. You think he should be treated as an incorrigible rogue and sent up to sessions to be further dealt with?—Certainly, but that is very seldom resorted to by magistrates.

7761. But you think in cases of repeated conviction it would be well to resort to that?—Certainly, and I think they ought to do it.

7762. What is the amount of the accommodation for vagrants at the present time in Manchester?—Well, there is excellent accommodation in Manchester for vagrants. There are three boards of guardians in Manchester, and the casual ward is worked jointly by them; it is a ward to which any tramps who come to Manchester can go.

7763. Is it in a central position in Manchester?—In a very central position.

7764. (Sir William Chance.) What are the three unions?—Manchester, Prestwich, and Chorlton.

7765. (Chairman.) All the vagrants in Manchester go to these joint wards?—Yes; I might explain that the building was previously an old factory; it was fitted up by the guardians, and there was accommodation then for about 500. Well, the attendance has never been known to average more than, say, 180, take any month or any year. Then the guardians pulled down the old factory and they have built new premises, and now on a pinch they can accommodate 1,000 vagrants, but easily 700 or 800 in this new building.

7766. And what is the average number, as far as you know?—I can give you the numbers for December, 1904, and May, 1905; in the four weeks in December, 1904, the totals were 1,508, 1,501, 1,441, and 1,694, and in the four weeks in May last the totals were 1,256, 1,037, 964, and 1,060.

7767. That shows a considerable decrease in 1905 over 1904?—Well, you must bear in mind, sir, one is the winter month, and the other is practically a summer month; that will account for the difference, I think.

7768. You do not think there is a drop in vagrancy really?—Oh, there is no drop at all; we find the same thing; there are more sleeping in the open air in the winter than there are in the summer in Manchester; there is no doubt these men go into the country more in the summer than they do in the winter; that is how I account for the fact that we have considerably more sleeping out in the winter than we have in the summer.

7769. (Sir William Chance.) You attribute the decrease in May to the fact that they go into the country?—I do, sir.

7770. (Chairman.) Can you tell us what sort of men these vagrants are; are they men who have been at work, or are they men who from the first have been determined to be idle men?—I should think most of them are thoroughly idle men; I give a return of the number that have been arrested (see Appendix XXXII). Well, fully 50 per cent. of those arrested are known by the Manchester police to have been previously convicted, and I think on a fair estimate 25 to 30 per cent. of the others have been convicted.

7771. What would you say would be the percentage in Manchester of what we may call honest men, that is, men who would take work if they could get it?—I should not think there are many of these men that want work; I went through the tramp ward on Monday at Tame Street, and the superintendent gave a very bad report about these men. I should not think there is 20 per cent. of them who would work if they had the chance.

7772. That is a very large percentage compared with what we have been told?—I am trying to be as charitable towards them as I can.

7773. Have you any suggestions as to what could be done with these men to make them more useful members of society than they are?—We have gone largely into this question in Manchester these last few years; but there would be no good done with these tramps unless you have power to send them away to some colony and make them work for, say, periods of twelve months or two years; that is the only practical solution of the difficulty; it is no good registering tramps unless you have some power to make them work.

7774. What is your idea of a colony to which you would send these men?—I would have it a place where the man was under detention for a certain time. If a man showed any indication that he wanted to go out into society and lead a respectable life, you could always judge whether he was a suitable man to be allowed to go.

7775. Would you have more than one labour colony; that is, one for men of bad character, and one or more for other classes?—Yes, certainly. The worst cases, I think, you ought to separate.

7776. You would make that part more of a penal settlement than the other?—Certainly; only you want power.

7777. Would you do what is done at Hadleigh; that is, take a man who has perhaps four or five convictions against him and put him amongst men who have not been previously convicted at all?—Certainly not; you would only contaminate the other men if you did that.

7778. It would not be fair to the others?—Oh, certainly not.

7779. What you would suggest would be to have a different treatment for the different classes of men whom you committed to the labour colony?—Yes, I should.

7780. In one case it would be more in the nature of a prison, and in the other rather in the nature of an industrial home where you would teach them a trade?—Yes.

7781. And enable them to become really working men?—Certainly.

7782. What is the practice of the magistrates in Manchester with regard to the length of sentence they give to vagrants?—Well, they are very lenient, I am sorry to say; I would not be sorry if it did any good; I do not want to punish men simply for the sake of punishing them; but I think it is mistaken leniency to let these vagrants off in the way they do.

7783. What is the usual length of sentence in Manchester?—Take last year, for instance, there were 785 arrested for begging; well, 281 were let off altogether.

7784. When they are let off, are their names taken and their description registered?—Oh, yes; we always take, in all these cases, the name and description of every man who is in our charge.

7785. Is the man let off completely?—He is let off in many cases, which I say is mistaken leniency; it is done more in small places probably than in large towns; they simply say, "Now, if you will promise to leave the town we will let you off."

7786. Does he leave the town?—Well, there is no proof that he leaves the town, but that is what they do.

7787. Where the man is sentenced what is the ordinary length of sentence?—Take last year; 16 got three months and over two; 5 got two months and over one; 144 got one month and over fourteen days; 315 got fourteen days and under; 4 were sent to reformatory schools; and 28 got fined.

7788. Are there a great number of seven-day sentences?—Yes, I should say so; they are included in the fourteen days and under.

7789. From your experience, do you think the seven-day sentence has any effect at all upon the vagrant in the way of persuading him not to lead a vagrant life?—Well,

Mr. Robert Peacock.

31 May 1905.

Mr. Robert
Peacock.

31 May 1905.

we can only say this, we find a great many of them come again.

7790. That is the strongest evidence, I suppose, that it does no good ?—I should think so.

7791. What do you think is the best sentence for a vagrant for sleeping out, and begging and so on ?—Well, I should think, of course, any man who has been previously convicted ought to go for a month's imprisonment.

7792. After previous conviction ?—After previous conviction, of course ; I would not send him to that for the first time.

7793. And you think that that would have a deterrent effect ?—Certainly I do.

7794. We have had a good deal of evidence with regard to the way-ticket ; do you think a way-ticket in a great city like Manchester would be effective ?—I do not think it would ; I do not see how it would work at all in a large centre.

7795. If a man on discharge from the casual ward were obliged to take with him a ticket showing his description and destination ?—I do not see how it would affect large towns at all ; they could not deal with every vagrant with a ticket.

7796. If you found a man going in a contrary direction to that stated on his ticket, you could identify him as one who had given a false description ?—Certainly. It would be very beneficial if you had power to punish that man if he did not go on to the town he said he was going to.

7797. To that extent it is evidence against him ?—The ticket would be a very beneficial thing if you had power to punish the man if he did not do what he undertook to do.

7798. There would be evidence against him that he was not an honest man in that way ?—What would happen in Manchester would be that if he did not choose to go on he would be wandering about the streets, and sleeping on the forms.

7799. Then he would be apprehended with that ticket in his pocket which he had obtained on the strength of his going somewhere else ?—He would not be apprehended.

7800. He would be apprehended if he were found sleeping out ?—Certainly.

7801. Would not the ticket be, at any rate, a means of identification of the man ?—I do not think so. I think you will find in these tramp wards, as you find probably in the police very often, that a man scarcely ever goes twice in the same way. He does not go to the tramp ward ; of course, people go to the tramp ward who have never left Manchester, and say they come from Bolton, Bury, and other places.

7802. In that way there would be means of identification ?—The man would not be likely to keep a ticket on him if it was going to convict him in any way.

7803. Would it not be very easy to convict a man as having obtained a ticket ?—Oh, yes.

7804. If the ticket system were made general all over England, then, of course, Manchester would come in ?—Oh, yes, certainly.

7805. And in that way you would have the means of identifying vagrants from elsewhere that you would not have otherwise ?—Certainly.

7806. What do you think of the suggestion that information should be given at the casual wards or the police stations as to where there was work to be obtained ?—We do all we can in Manchester ; we have got a labour registry which is worked by the corporation ; we have also got homes and we send out officers to find work ; they are mostly casuals who go to the homes.

7807. That is available now for the vagrants ?—Yes.

7808. Where is the information exhibited : are there notices at the casual ward ?—We put posters all over the town, and we renew them every few weeks, that there is this labour registry, where men can register free ; a man has not to pay anything to be registered in any shape or form.

7809. No, but where can they get the information as to work which is available ?—Of course, we advertise as much as we can ; we cannot do more than that.

7810. Where are the men directed to go ?—They are directed to go to the central office ; but we have got four centres where they can register.

7811. You have four different places in Manchester where a man can go and obtain information where there is work ?—Certainly ; and we give him all the information we have when he comes.

7812. Is there anything posted up at the casual wards ?—No. We put all the notices on our own posting stations.

7813. Do you think it would be useful to post them up in the casual ward ?—I am not sure.

7814. It might be to some small percentage ?—Yes.

7815. Is that information obtainable at your police stations ?—Oh, yes, the notices are always on the boards outside every police station ; and in Manchester alone we have got twenty-six police stations.

7816. Every one of those has a board ?—Every one of those has a board outside on which are displayed large posters ; and in addition to that at 100 places more.

7817. Then, as far as we have heard, you do in Manchester carry out the idea of the labour bureau more completely than most places ?—Yes.

7818. Have you any knowledge of what the work given to the men in the casual wards is ?—It is principally stone breaking. There was great agitation in the city that these men could not possibly get out in the morning to find work. Well, at my suggestion the guardians passed the following resolution so that no man would be able to say that he did not get a chance to get out of the casual ward : " That any able-bodied male casual pauper who desires to perform the whole or a portion of his task of work on the day of his admission be allowed the opportunity of doing so where practicable, and that, where such casual pauper has performed his prescribed task of work to the best of his ability, he be allowed to discharge himself at six o'clock in the morning on the day following the day of his admission."

7819. I suppose he would have his breakfast before he left ?—Oh, yes.

7820. Do you think that was successful ; did many of the men obtain work in that way ?—Oh, very few. Very few availed themselves of the chance of leaving early ; but I may say that it stopped the agitation against the guardians.

7821. Have your police free access to the casual wards ?—No, but they are never refused.

7822. They do not visit the wards as part of their regular round ?—No.

7823. Have any of your police been appointed as assistant relieving officers ?—No.

7824. Do you think there is any alteration required in your police system that would be beneficial with regard to vagrancy ?—Of course, the present system is sufficient if we had larger powers ; then, of course, the police could deal more effectively with them.

7825. (Mr. Davy.) You have an exceptional amount of sleeping out in Manchester ?—Yes.

7826. Do you look upon that as a serious offence ?—I do not look upon it as a serious offence, but you must bear in mind that most of the men who sleep out do not intend to work.

7827. You mean they are a dangerous class ?—Certainly, a very dangerous class.

7828. The provision of free shelters and free food makes the life of the man who sleeps out easier, does it not ?—Yes.

7829. And tends to attract that class to the city ?—Yes.

7830. Do you think that the police or the city authorities ought to have power to license free shelters ?—Well, I think they ought to have power of inspection ; I think the medical officer should inspect.

7831. They have that power at present, have they not ?—Well, in a sense they have power of inspection, but there is no licence the same as there is in an ordinary lodging-house. The corporation have lodging-houses and they have to license their own lodging-houses, but the shelters are not licensed.

7832. So you have no power to close a shelter, except for sanitary reasons ?—That is so.

Mr. Robert Peacock.

31 May 1905.

7833. My point is this : a shelter by attracting these people may be a danger to the public ?—Certainly.

7834. Do you think that it would be a good thing to place the power of closing the shelters on general public grounds in the hands either of the police or the city authorities ?—I do.

7835. So that a person could not injure his neighbours by starting one of these shelters which would attract the vagrant class ?—Well, I would not look upon it as injuring a neighbour. Of course, any business might injure a neighbour.

7836. You might have so many vagrants drawn into the town as to be a public danger, might you not ?—Oh, certainly.

7837. How many police have you got in Manchester now ?—1,175.

7838. It is conceivable that a great increase of this class might render necessary an increase of the police ?—Yes.

7839. Now, judging from your figures, you have a permanent class living in Manchester who form a nucleus of the vagrant class ?—Yes.

7840. Men who are not travelling vagrants ?—Well, 50 per cent. of them we know have been convicted. I do not say they have stopped in Manchester all the time, but they are known when they come up again.

7841. They hang round Manchester and its neighbourhood ?—Yes.

7842. Would these, do you think, be habituals ; I mean, have they done this for a great number of years ?—Yes.

7843. And do you think those habituals should be detained in a labour colony or elsewhere for a certain time ?—I do ; I think that is the only solution of it.

7844. You do not think there is any hope of their reform under present conditions ?—No, not the slightest.

7845. And do you think they are a sufficiently grave mischief to justify the State undertaking the expense and trouble of locking them up ?—I think they are a very grave mischief, and a terror to some people, too.

7846. You mean on account of their begging and small crimes ?—Yes.

7847. What sort of crimes do they commit ?—All sorts : petty larcenies ; most of the robberies from the backs of houses are done by vagrants.

7848. These men are practically known to your police ?—Yes.

7849. Have you any idea how many there are of these habituals ?—Well, I could not tell you that ; I have not looked out the number of convictions ; all I know is that 50 per cent of them have been convicted, chiefly in Manchester.

7850. There would probably be some hundreds loafing about Manchester who are known to the police ?—Oh, more than that.

7851. Who never did a day's work in their lives ?—I would not like to say they had not done a day's work, but they have done very few.

7852. With regard to sentences on vagrants, do those cases go before the stipendiary or the borough justices ?—They go before the justices.

7853. Who apparently have no uniformity whatever in their sentences ?—No ; sometimes in the case of men found sleeping out they discharge them in a body.

7854. Now, would you agree that unless a man earns enough to keep himself decently he ought to be dealt with by police measures ?—Well, of course, it is a very difficult question to answer ; you must give that man a chance to earn, and you must prove that he has had a chance to earn a living.

7855. Suppose you could prove that he is an habitual loafer or vagrant ?—I should say a man like that ought to be sent away to some colony where he would be compelled to work.

7856. And you think the discipline in that colony should be penal ?—Yes.

7857. That is to say, that it should be very much like a prison ?—Yes.

7858. What difference would there be between that and a prison ?—Well, these men could work in the open ; they would be under certain supervision, but I should not think a man would be able to run away when he liked, or go away when he liked. If a man did run away and he was found, I would, of course, punish him more severely.

7859. You think it should be a prison under some modified conditions ?—Certainly I do.

7860. Have you considered the cost at all ?—No, I have not gone into the question of cost.

7861. You think as a matter of principle these men should be sent to a colony ?—That is so.

7862. Do you find that in Manchester men say they wish to be sent to prison ?—Yes, a good many, rather than stop in the casual ward. When they are found sleeping out, and they are asked why they do not go to the tramp ward, they say they would rather go to prison than stay there.

7863. Do you think that they mean it ?—Well, I do not know ; that is what they say. I do not see any objection to the tramp ward ; it is very clean, and almost as perfect as they can make it.

7864. Now, at the casual wards in Manchester a meal consisting of one pint of porridge and six ounces of bread is given night and morning, and a mid-day meal consisting of eight ounces of bread and one and a half ounces of cheese. How is the man going to get his dinner on the other days when he is not in the tramp ward ?—Of course, I am now talking about the tramp ward ; that is supposed to be his food for the time being while he is in the tramp ward.

7865. He goes into the tramp ward on Monday, gets his food on Tuesday, and is dismissed from the tramp ward on Wednesday morning ; how is he going to get his mid-day meal on Wednesday ?—I cannot say how he is to get it unless he works for it.

7866. He may beg or steal ?—Yes, that may be.

7867. Does he get it somehow ?—Certainly.

7868. If he goes to prison he is certain to get it ?—Yes, and he is certain to get it as long as he stays in the tramp ward.

7869. But then there is the odd day out ; that is the trouble ?—Yes.

7870. Do you think men dislike going to prison as much as they used to ?—I do not ; I think things are made too comfortable for them now, both in prison and in other places.

7871. Do you know any other tramp wards besides Manchester ?—No, only one ; I was in Canterbury ; I was assistant relieving officer in Canterbury ; while I was there all tramps had to apply to me for admission to the tramp ward.

7872. Do you think it would be a good thing if the wards were more uniform all over the country in their treatment of vagrants ?—I think there ought to be a more uniform system in dealing with the tramps, and also by the magistrates, if it were possible to get a uniform system.

7873. Do you think it is possible to get a uniform system with regard to magistrates ?—It is almost impossible to do that, but I do not think a circular sent out to the magistrates would be amiss.

7874. What do you think is the shortest time for which a man may profitably be sent to prison ; it is no use sending him for seven days ?—Well, I said a month after previous conviction. I think that is little enough.

7875. And for a first conviction ?—Well, I do not know that I would send a man to prison for a first conviction.

7876. Quite so, but after a previous conviction, a month ?—Certainly.

7877. Do you see any objection to having a minimum sentence, so that you could not send a man to prison for less than a month, or whatever it may be ?—Personally I should like to see something of that sort, but I do not think it would be likely to be adopted.

7878. Why not ?—I do not think Parliament would adopt it.

Mr. Robert
Peacock.
31 May 1905.

7879. Might a magistrate not say, "Well, I will not send you to gaol, but I will convict you," and his conviction would be recorded against him: finally you would find a magistrate who would say, "You have been convicted a good many times," and send him to quarter sessions for sentence?—Yes; but where there is no previous conviction, let him go.

7880. (Chairman.) You treat him as a first offender?—Yes.

7881. You register that, and on his next offence it counts against him as a conviction?—They can do that now by giving a man a day and letting him go; that would be a conviction recorded.

7882. (Mr. Davy.) I think you have certain objections to labour bureaux which have not been brought out in your evidence: would you say what those objections are?—The working man has a mistaken notion about our labour bureau. We have the largest; I do not think there is any town in England that has so large a one as we have, and it is worked by a proper staff and carried out to the best advantage. But a labour bureau is no good unless you have got work to send the men to. If it becomes simply a registry office it serves no purpose. For instance, we have had 7,000 men entered upon our books in less than six months; we have only found permanent work for, I think, about 200 or 300 men. Now, the corporation at Manchester found work for 833 men on the labour register; they had to create work for 833 men. Now, my point is that you cannot deal with the genuine unemployed unless you have got work for them to do; so if you cannot deal with the genuine unemployed, what use would it be registering tramps unless you create some work for them to go to in the way of colonies?

7883. You mean that merely registering a man's name at a labour bureau, if there is no work for him to do, becomes a useless form?—In Manchester we have not had any trouble, but it has almost been verging upon that several times during the winter. You get, for instance, 6,000 or 7,000 men on the register; it means that every morning you have about 2,000 men assembling at one centre; you get the men together; the least spark would set those men rioting; whereas if there was no labour registry the men would be scattered about; most of them would be at their own homes; whereas they are all brought together, and as you know when men are brought together, it at many times leads to bother.

7884. It all tends to keep them in the town too?—Yes.

7885. And so you think that on the whole the labour bureau is not a success?—Well, I am not going to say that. I say, if you are going to have a labour bureau successful, and to deal with the genuine unemployed, you will have to find some more work for them; there will have to be more work.

7886. Then the municipality will have to find work for them, if they do not find them employers?—Well, someone will have to find it.

7887. Or the man will have to be referred to the poor law authorities?—Yes; I should just like to say that during the winter on several occasions these men marched in a body to the poor law authorities and demanded relief on the spot, and they were bound to give them tea and coffee.

7888. They might have given them an order for the workhouse?—There were about 2,000 men outside the offices.

7889. I have seen that sort of thing often enough?—Yes, but still it wants a very strong will to tell them they will not give any food.

7890. When you get your man in the labour colony how are you going to make him work; what object will he have in working?—Oh, I should think if he did not work he would be punished; for instance, they work now; they break so many stones even in the tramp ward; before they are allowed out they have to do it.

7891. How would you punish a man; would you punish him by cells or something of that sort, or by deprivation of food, or would you pay the man when he worked?—I should punish him in both ways; he should certainly lose his food if he did not work.

7892. (Mr. Simpson.) You said there are very few incorrigible rogues sent up to quarter sessions in Manchester?—Yes.

7893. For what sort of offences are they usually sent up: begging?—There have been only three incorrigible rogues dealt with in seven years in Manchester.

7894. What do you think is the reason—there must be plenty of people in Manchester who beg constantly: is it that the magistrates think that the powers of the police court are quite sufficient?—I think you will find it general throughout the country that there are very few incorrigible rogues dealt with.

7895. It is not the difficulty of proving the previous convictions, I suppose?—Oh, no.

7896. I suppose what the magistrates feel is, if a man has done nothing more than beg they do not want him to get as much as twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour?—The magistrate would think that for begging, no matter how many times a man had been up, a few days was quite ample punishment.

7897. Suppose quarter sessions, instead of giving imprisonment, were able to send that man to a labour colony for one to three years, do you think then that your magistrates would take advantage of that power?—I do.

7898. They would feel then that it was worth while sending him up in order that he might be treated in that way?—The reason I say that is this: the Inebriates Act was passed enabling magistrates to do that two or three years ago. Well, magistrates now are availing themselves of the power to send inebriates to certain institutions for one year, two years and three years. I think they would do it in the case of habitual vagrants.

7899. That is to say, taking a parallel case, the magistrates would not send people for drunkenness to quarter sessions if they were going to get twelve months' imprisonment for mere drunkenness; but they are willing to send them if they are going to get a term in an inebriate reformatory?—Yes, to an inebriate reformatory.

7900. Do you issue many certificates for pedlars in Manchester?—Yes, a great many.

7901. I suppose you make inquiries before issuing them?—We make inquiries, of course.

7902. Unless the man is of good character, would you agree that a pedlar's licence offers excellent facilities for such offences as larceny in a dwelling house or house-breaking?—There is no doubt that a pedlar's licence does offer facilities; you must be very careful in granting it; we never grant one to anyone who has been previously convicted.

7903. You would have to have some knowledge of his antecedents?—If he comes from some other town we write to the police of that other town.

7904. (Chairman.) When a man comes to you and asks for a renewal of the certificate you write to the police of some town?—If we have not previously granted him a certificate we write to the town he says he has come from, and he has to give references before we grant his certificate.

7905. (Mr. Simpson.) It has to be renewed every year?—Yes.

7906. Would you only know if he had been convicted at Manchester?—If he were convicted elsewhere and we found that out, he would have to forfeit his certificate.

7907. Is a pedlar's certificate forfeited?—Oh, yes; it is forfeited for a conviction.

7908. But only after conviction under the Pedlars' Act?—It frequently happens when a man is convicted that the certificate is sent on to the police who issued the certificate.

7909. Suppose a pedlar committed a theft, and was convicted of that, would the magistrate be able to forfeit his licence?—I cannot straight off say whether he has power to do it; I can only tell you what the practice is; the certificate is frequently sent on to the police who have granted the certificate; in effect, that certificate is forfeited; whether it is done legally or not I do not know, but it frequently happens that it is sent on.

7910. The man does not keep it?—Certainly not.

7911. So if, after he has served his term, he goes out peddling again, he has nothing to protect him, and must apply again for a licence?—Under the Pedlars' Act a man cannot have a licence if he has been previously convicted.

7912. He has to be of good character?—It says he cannot be granted one after conviction.

7913. But, as a matter of fact, is it not granted to a man who has been convicted; it would be rather hard on a man who has been convicted, but intended to turn over a new leaf to be for ever after debarred from holding a pedlar's licence?—It may look very hard, but as the law stands at the present time that is the position. I will tell you what we do to get over that, so far as Manchester is concerned. We never grant what we call a pedlar's certificate, but if we think a man is likely to lead an honest life we give him a free certificate to hawk, as far as Manchester is concerned. A pedlar's certificate would enable a man to hawk anywhere in the United Kingdom, but if a man has been convicted, and we think he wants to lead an honest life, we give him a certificate to hawk in Manchester only; I simply take the responsibility so far as Manchester is concerned.

7914. That is to say, you will not prosecute him?—I do not give him a pedlar's certificate quite free, so that it cannot be said that he has been granted his certificate contrary to the Act of Parliament.

7915. Do you ever come across instances of pedlars holding certificates which have been granted in other districts without much enquiry as to their character?—Well, I have strong reason to believe that some districts do not take the precaution to enquire about their characters. I would not like to say that the 5s. is tempting, but I do not think in some instances they do make enquiries.

7916. Probably to a very economical watch committee it might be a certain amount of inducement?—Yes.

7917. Do you think that is possible?—Well, I do not think they would take the money into consideration in a large centre, but they might do so in small districts.

7918. Do you think it would be a good thing that where the certificate is not forfeited the minor convictions should be endorsed on it by the police, so that the certificate should be, more or less, a record of the man's career since it was granted?—I do not think that is necessary; I think you will find that is provided against. I do not think it is likely that a certificate would be granted where a man has been convicted.

7919. You do not mean where a man is convicted of drunkenness?—Oh, that is nothing.

7920. Suppose a pedlar was constantly drunk and disorderly, do you not think it would be a good thing to endorse that on his certificate?—I do not think that drunken cases ought to be endorsed on the back of a pedlar's certificate.

7921. Supposing a man were constantly getting drunk, do you not think that would be a sufficient disqualification?—No, I do not think so. A man might get drunk two or three times a week, and yet be a good pedlar, if he was an honest man.

7922. You think it is only a question of honesty?—Certainly, I think the object of the Act of Parliament was to stop pilfering.

7923. A good character in other respects is not essential?—I think if the man is thoroughly honest that is all you require for a pedlar; you see, many men are pedlars who could not earn a living in other walks of life; I mean they are deformed in some way, and it is an assistance to any man in earning a living for him to have a pedlar's licence.

7924. (Sir William Chance.) You have held the post of chief constable in three different towns for seventeen years?—Yes.

7925. And you have remarked in your statement on the small number of vagrant children; did you find that so in Oldham?—Yes.

7926. And in Canterbury where you were before?—Yes, whilst at Canterbury.

7927. During the time you have been in Manchester have you noticed any increase or decrease in the number of vagrant children?—Well, in Manchester of course when I went there there was a very large number of children in the streets selling matches who were practically begging; they were sent out by their parents. We have introduced now the Street Trading Act, and that has practically driven all children from the streets of Manchester.

7928. I am talking rather of the children on tramp?—I do not see much of these.

7929. They are very few?—I do not see much of these; they go direct to the workhouse; they do not come to the police.

7930. That particular class do not beg in the streets at all?—No.

7931. Have you got a branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children in Manchester?—Yes.

7932. Are they at all active in the matter of vagrant children?—Yes, they are very active, but there are not many vagrant children.

7933. And in carrying out that Street Trading Act, do they help you at all?—No; we have got special men; there are police officers who do that work.

7934. What is your opinion as to the question of the authority who should control vagrants; do you consider it is satisfactory that the control should be in the hands of the guardians as at present, or do you think that it should be transferred to the police?—As far as I can see, of course, the guardians do all that is expected of them, but it is not successful. The proof that it is not successful is that there are more persons sleeping out in Manchester than are housed by the guardians, and it shows the provision made by the guardians is not at all looked upon as satisfactory by the vagrants themselves.

7935. Do you think that if the police were made the vagrant authority they would be more successful in dealing with vagrants?—Yes; if they had more power to deal with vagrants than they have at present.

7936. What further powers would you want?—If a man was found to be an habitual vagrant, they should have power to send him away.

7937. Would it not be an advantage in connection with the police work that they might have that power?—Yes.

7938. In Manchester the tramp wards are entirely separated from the workhouse, are they not?—Yes.

7939. There would be no difficulty whatever in transferring that tramp ward from the poor law guardians to the police?—No; the tramp ward is practically central.

7940. As regards the number of people sleeping out, it appears from your evidence that at the time that your census was taken the monthly average was about 200?—Well, that was 1903; we do not average them now.

7941. Is it not a fact that the available accommodation at the casual wards was considerably more than that; that is to say, the wards were not filled?—At the time we made enquiries and found there were 200 a month sleeping out, 189 would be the highest number we had in the tramp wards during that winter although there was accommodation for 500.

7942. That leaves a balance of 300 for which there was accommodation?—They had accommodation for 311 more than they got in.

7943. There was available accommodation in the common lodging-houses in addition?—Yes.

7944. What do you think then was the cause of these people preferring to sleep out, and not taking advantage of the casual wards?—As I say, the tramp ward is unpopular; that is the only way I can put it.

7945. Do you think it is the enforcement of the bath that makes the vagrants object to the casual wards?—I know they do not like the bath, but whether that is the reason I cannot possibly tell.

7946. They also have to be searched; that might be a further objection?—Yes.

7947. You may give that as the answer why they do not go to the tramp wards, but it is no good answer why they do not go to the common lodging-house: can you tell me why they do not go there?—They sleep out principally in the sheds adjacent to brick kilns and boiler houses; of course if they can sleep there without paying, they keep the money in their pockets.

Mr. Robert Peacock.

31 May 1905.

Mr. Robert
Peacock.

31 May 1905.

7948. And at the time these people are sleeping out do any philanthropic people establish free shelters for them and free meals?—Yes; there was a shelter opened in Wood Street, to which they allowed them to come; there was accommodation for 300, and they gave them food as well. Well, of course they turned hundreds away every night from there. Now it is found that when that shelter was opened the people came from the common lodging-houses—men who had previously paid for their lodging.

7949. Then the effect of establishing those philanthropic shelters is to take the people out of the common lodging-houses?—Certainly, that was proved beyond a doubt when the shelter was opened.

7950. What would be your opinion as to that?—I do not want you to take that view of all the shelters in Manchester.

7951. I am talking of the public shelter?—My view at that time was that I advised them to close it; it was not fair to be getting subscriptions and allowing men to come there free who had previously paid for their lodging elsewhere.

7952. Was it closed?—Yes.

7953. What was the result of that?—They went back to the lodging-houses.

7954. Then as to the other shelters you mention, do people pay anything for going there?—The other shelters of course have never turned anybody away, but the men have to earn their shelter before they leave the building by wood chopping.

7955. Is that a Church Army place?—Yes; the largest shelter is what they call the Manchester and Salford Mission; they have got beds there for 330 nightly.

7956. And the men have to work there in return for their board and lodging?—Yes.

7957. You do not think that these particular shelters attract people from the common lodging-houses?—I do not, because, you see, they have to work there.

7958. In the common lodging-houses I suppose they do not enforce washing?—Oh, no.

7959. With your experience of common lodging-houses and tramp wards in Manchester, do you consider the tramp ward the better?—Yes.

7960. It is better managed than the common lodging-house?—Yes, much better; the tramp ward is almost as perfect as you can make it, and certainly sweeter in every respect. As you will see by my statement I do not think common lodging-houses show the slightest stringency such as is exercised when you get into the tramp ward.

7961. You have no objection to the management of the tramp ward in Manchester?—No, I think it is as well managed as it possibly can be, and I think the men are well fed for what they do.

7962. You say the largest proportion of these tramps belong to the unskilled labouring classes?—Yes.

7963. That is your experience?—Yes.

7964. Is that why you recommend that labour colonies should be tried?—Yes.

7965. Now what kind of labour colony had you in your mind for the treatment of these tramps?—Principally, farm colonies.

7966. Have you visited any colony of the kind?—I have visited two, including the Salvation Army colony at Hadleigh.

7967. Do you consider the Salvation Army colony at Hadleigh a suitable place for these men?—I do not.

7968. Would you just say shortly why you do not consider it a proper place for the reception of vagrants?—There is no power of detention; a man can leave when he likes, and it is not on a sufficiently large scale to deal with this question.

7969. It is not proposed, I think, that there should be one huge labour colony to take all these vagrants?—No, but you would have to have something very substantial if you are going to deal with the vagrant class.

7970. You say that Hadleigh is not a suitable place for the reception of vagrants?—No.

7971. Now what is the other colony that you visited?—That was on a much smaller scale; it was a colony that the Poplar guardians have established at Laindon, in Essex.

7972. That is purely for able-bodied inmates of the workhouse?—There were only about fifty there.

7973. These are the only two labour colonies you have seen?—Yes.

7974. What is your idea of a labour colony which would be suitable for vagrants?—A colony like the Salvation Army colony, if there was power of detention, certainly would reclaim and make the men work. For instance, take the labour colony at Hadleigh: men work at brick making and different things; it is not all farm work at the Salvation Army colony, it is different kinds of work.

7975. (Dr. Downes.) With regard to the philanthropic shelter that you spoke of, I believe it not only brought the tramps out of lodging-houses but it caused them to flock from other towns to Manchester; and when it was closed they ceased to flock into Manchester?—Yes.

7976. Have you any doubt that the free shelter was the cause of tramps coming to Manchester?—Well, we made enquiries at the time and we proved that beyond a doubt.

7977. I believe Manchester decided not to have any fund for the unemployed for fear it should render Manchester a dumping ground?—That is so.

7978. Manchester did not want to have other people's loafers?—Well, they do not want to encourage them.

7979. Child vagrancy, I think you said, is almost non-existent with you?—Yes, that is so.

7980. You have spoken of the people who sleep out in Piccadilly, and you regard them as a danger; do you think it desirable that the police should have further powers with regard to what I might call the night loafer?—Well, we could move those on if we wanted, but we do not feel it is well; I admit it is not a very nice sight to see them sleeping in the centre of the city on forms.

7981. One of the difficulties in dealing with them now would be that you do not quite see what is to be done with them?—That is so.

7982. Assuming that there was machinery by which a man, for we will say a first conviction, might be discharged under the First Offenders' Act, but after further convictions might be put away to a labour colony or a reformatory for an indefinite sentence of one, two or three years, would that remove your difficulty?—Yes.

7983. (Mr. Davy.) What are the conditions of registration at your labour bureau; is it long residence in Lancashire?—Twelve months' residence.

7984. Therefore it does not apply to tramps at all?—No.

7985. (Captain Showers.) I suppose as chief constable of Manchester you have some control over vagrants?—No, we have no control over the vagrants at all.

7986. Are your junior officers assistant relieving officers?—No.

7987. You are an inspector of the common lodging-houses, I suppose?—Yes.

7988. And you have power to enter them and see that everything is all right, I believe?—Yes.

7989. Do you not think it would be very much better if you had more control over the casual wards?—Of course it would be more beneficial if we could go in, and we might, of course, arrest many a criminal if we could only go in.

7990. What is your opinion of the police taking charge of, and managing the casual wards?—I have not given much consideration to the question.

7991. It would give you greater responsibility?—It would give us greater responsibility of course, but I dare say the result would justify it.

7992. Would you consider that a police pensioner would be better than having one of the active force in charge of the casual ward?—Yes. You see in Manchester the vagrants now keep away from the casual wards; the difficulty is not to keep them away, but it is that they do not go to the tramp ward. It is proved that there are 600 vagrants in Manchester every night and there are less than 200 in the tramp ward. The question with the Corporation is how to get the vagrants to use that tramp ward, not how to keep them away.

7993. Do you follow up any of the vagrant children when they leave Manchester?—Oh, yes, we hand all cases of cruelty to children over to the inspector of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

7994. You think that all these children should be sent to industrial schools?—Yes.

7995. Supposing the casual wards were in charge of an ex-policeman, what would be your view as to their being under the control of a joint committee of the watch committee and board of guardians?—I think it would be a very good idea if they were.

7996. Do you think it would have a much more desirable effect than the present system?—I am quite sure it would.

7997. You would get more uniformity?—That is so; of course, it would have to be all through the country.

7998. (Sir William Chance.) Do you have many prosecutions by boards of guardians of vagrants for refusing to do their work?—Very few.

7999. (Mr. Simpson.) You do not think it is the rigour of the discipline and the hardness of the work that makes the wards unpopular with the vagrant class?—No.

8000. (Sir William Chance.) Do the guardians exercise their full power of detention: that is, do they detain a tramp for two nights?—They never detain a man in Manchester if he can give any evidence at all that he is likely to get work.

8001. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) What sort of evidence could he give, except his word?—That is what I mean.

8002. He simply says so?—There are ways when a man tells you to know whether he is speaking the truth or not.

8003. (Sir William Chance.) Do the guardians enforce the task of work at Manchester?—No; they enforce it unless they have any statement that the man has work to go to. That was the reason this rule was relaxed. We found that any man whether he had got work to go to or not could do his task in the afternoon instead of the morning, and get out the next morning.

8004. (Chairman.) Manchester seems very popular amongst this class of men; do you think it is in consequence of a pretty general mistaken kindness in the way of relieving the beggar by giving?—There is no doubt that there is too much giving in a lot of these institutions; I do not see they are very beneficial.

8005. You mean the free shelters and the free food places?—Yes.

8006. Do you know whether the Manchester people, being well-to-do people as a rule, give pretty freely to the man in the street?—It is a popular cry for anyone who wants to get into the council or anywhere else that they are friends of the unemployed, and in the winter time there are soup kitchens opened all over the place.

8007. That will account, no doubt, for it being a popular place for the tramp to go to?—The Lord Mayor last winter gave away over £10,000 in food and things.

Mr. Robert Peacock.

31 May 1905.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

Wednesday, June 21st, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bært.
Mr J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.
Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Rev. W. CARLILE, called; and Examined.

8008. (Chairman.) Mr. Carlile, you are, I believe, the founder and the honorary chief secretary of the Church Army?—Yes, sir.

8009. You have been practically the head of that body from the very first?—Yes.

8010. When was the Church Army founded?—In 1881.

8011. Then it has been twenty-four years in existence?—Yes, but not the social side which affects vagrancy.

8012. Quite so; it had small beginnings, like many good things, I suppose?—Yes.

8013. Now, I suppose, the Church Army deals with a very large number of vagrants?—Yes, that is so, sir.

8014. Can you say what number in the year you have to deal with?—I have submitted a paper with some statistics upon it. It varies very materially every year; for instance, last winter we were taking 2,000 a night off the streets and making them work three hours. Well, that went on for five months and we had to find beds for them. Everyone cost us 4d.

8015. Was that in London alone?—Yes.

8016. You deal with many large towns besides London?—Yes, with every large town in England, and very much in the same way.

8017. Last winter there was an extra pressure upon the Church Army?—Yes, it was most tremendous.

8018. Was that the case all over England?—Yes, many men became vagrants in less than a month.

8019. They were wandering without means of support?—Yes.

8020. Now, take the London vagrants; what is your view as to the proportion of men who would work if they could get it?—It is a very difficult question for me to answer exactly, because all who come to us know they have to labour; the word "labour" bars the loafer.

8021. Then, in fact, you have not very much knowledge on the point, I suppose; you do not examine the men in the casual wards?—Yes, we search every casual ward every week to find out men who will work; we have a man doing nothing else all day long throughout the whole year. He spends his life entirely trying to find men in the casual wards whom we think we can restore to society.

8022. Men who will come to your homes and work?—Yes, we get a very hopeful number out of the casual wards. It is a very good field, not quite so good as prison, but it is next to the prison.

8023. How many days do you get them to work on an average?—We make them sign a contract to stay with us for two months; we pay full pay for two months; the third month, half pay; the fourth month we guarantee no pay, so that by the fourth month the man is desperately anxious to get out into employment.

8024. Now, do you in the meantime try to provide the man with some employment outside?—Oh, we are always at it; after he has been with us a few weeks we

Rev. W. Carlile.

21 June 1905.

Rev. W.
Cartile.

21 June 1905.

set to work to try and see in what part of England we can make an outlet for that man, and, if we cannot place him locally, as trade is reviving in Lancashire we would see if we could send him down to Manchester, or get him through to Bolton or Preston or some other place.

8025. I suppose you ascertain what work he is most fitted for; what he has done before, and so on?—The very first day we should do that.

8026. And then, I suppose, you try and send him where you think he will get that work which is most suitable for him?—Yes.

8027. And you say that you get a considerable number of men out of the casual wards?—A very considerable number of excellent cases.

8028. Can you say whether in the end they get permanent employment?—I can say that after the average stay of thirteen weeks with us last year 52 per cent. of the total cases found employment and got off our hands, and a large proportion retained their work, and probably a large proportion also lost it. It is a very depressing business at times.

8029. Your method of work is through labour homes and receiving homes?—Yes, chiefly labour homes; they have lodging homes adjoining. In the whole of England, Scotland and Ireland there are 120 homes and agencies.

8030. Would you kindly describe to us the labour home and the receiving home?—You have got a type of the receiving home at the Morning Post embankment home, and another type of it in the East End of London at the Banner Street homeless poor asylum; they are worked by the Church Army. The difference between a receiving home and a labour home is that at the receiving home the man undertakes to work, but he does not bind himself down for two months. When he comes in he cannot get any relief without work, but he may go out the next morning after he has done his work; we expect him to stay three days so as to give us time to know something about him, in order to be able to pass him on to one of the various labour homes in the country.

8031. I suppose if you could get him work immediately you would send him to it without his going to any home?—In a number of cases we get him work immediately; certain men come up to London and think they are going to get a berth, and when they do not they pawn everything; and perhaps before they get right down they hear of us, or the police send them to us. You see, our homes are not like those of our excellent friends the Salvation Army; we have great admiration for them, but ours is the opposite style; we would rather permanently deal with the few individuals than try and benefit a large lot; that is our aim. They may benefit more people numerically, but our aim is to make a better job of the one man we get.

8032. Then I understand that you work cordially with the police?—Oh, yes, and with the Charity Organisation Society.

8033. And the police send you, I suppose, the majority of those whom you assist?—The majority of cases come from the police, Scotland Yard and the casual ward. From our point of view the prisoner is more hopeful to us than the tramp.

8034. When the police send you a man whom they know to be a criminal, do they let you know that he is a criminal?—Oh, yes; that is no bar to him with us.

8035. Do you make any difference between the men who have been convicted, and the men who, as far as you know, have no stain upon them?—We should separate them in different homes. That is where the receiving home helps us; it gives us a three days' chance to find out whether the man is suitable for this home or that.

8036. We were told the other day by Mr. Lamb on behalf of the Salvation Army, that they made practically no difference between an old convict and the man who had never been convicted?—That is the difference; we do not attempt such great numbers as the Salvation Army; they do their very best, but I do not see how they could make such a distinction.

8037. As far as you can, you keep the convicted men and others separate?—Oh, yes; the regular convicts are generally put together; we do not publicly say in which home, because it would be a stigma on that home, and we should not get the poor fellows out to work; we do not call the place a prisoners' home, but more or less it is so.

8038. When you get a man work, is anything said to his employers with regard to his previous character?—Oh, yes, we appeal to them to take him because of his previous character; we say to them for instance, he has done fifteen years; he is a murder case, but we have every reason to believe he is a decent fellow and you can trust him.

8039. You have a good character of him in prison?—We have a good character of him; we have got his photograph and all particulars of his prison reports; we are in the closest touch with the prison authorities.

8040. What sort of work would that man get?—Some builder, perhaps, would give him a job.

8041. (Mr. Davy.) You are talking now of an unskilled man?—Yes, an unskilled man. Of course we should try to get a skilled man into his trade; the trades unions are not very fond of him.

8042. (Chairman.) Have you in London any free shelters?—No. In all our shelters a man or a woman must work.

8043. So it is not free?—No. We are free to lose money by their work.

8044. What is your ordinary task of work to compensate for the night's rest?—For a night's rest it is merely chopping sticks.

8045. That is light work?—No, sometimes if we think he is a lazy man we put him on to saw an enormous lump of very heavy wood to see whether he can get to the bottom of it.

8046. Supposing he refuses to do it after he has got his night's rest?—We do not receive after four o'clock in the afternoon, so that he does his work first.

8047. Between that and his supper time he does his work?—Yes, what we call the special relief work in the winter. If we have very heavy pressure, as we have had this last winter and as we have had in former winters, the man comes in and we say "Will you work?" He says "I will; I will work three hours." We give him three ounces of bread and a basin of good soup and then he goes to work. He works three hours; he begins any time of the day and night; that goes on all night as well as all day, and at the end of the three hours if a man does not work we should chuck him out. If he works properly he gets another three ounces of bread and another basin of soup, which is another meal, and he gets a bed with sheets.

8048. If a man comes in as late as midnight?—He begins to work at twelve. If he is too late for the twelve o'clock shift he begins at three o'clock in the morning.

8049. Whom have you in charge of this work?—Our own evangelists; we call them brothers. They hope to pick up certain men whom they can pass through that temporary work to the labour homes.

8050. Well, as a rule, does a man's work about compensate for the cost of his food and his bed?—I am sorry to say it does not.

8051. The three hours' work is not very heavy I suppose?—It is heavy, especially in the middle of the night; the poor chaps will go off to sleep while they are chopping sticks with their chopper in their hands. In the daytime their work is, I should think, worth one third part or one fourth part of the cost.

8052. Well, the loaf of bread and the soup would be worth about 2d. would they not?—Yes, and the lodging 4d., that is 6d.; they earn about $\frac{1}{2}$ d. or 1d.

8053. I thought in the three hours a man would do 6d. worth of work?—He should do it; a good expert would.

8054. It no doubt depends very much upon the man?—Yes.

8055. A man who honestly does three hours' work would probably pay for his keep?—Yes.

8056. Have you any distribution of free food?—No. To us that system is immoral; we think it is against the Bible, and likely to attract from the provinces. If men get word that there is free food, however small the amount is, it brings people up.

8057. You would probably get hold of the worst class of idle men and women if you had free food?—Yes, and we maintain that the free breakfasts and the free dinners and free teas, and even the free meals in the middle of the night given by our excellent well meaning friends in the Salvation Army are a mistake; we have tried to bring pressure upon them not to do it, but I think they feel the trouble of providing labour in the middle of the night is so very difficult.

8058. Can you kindly tell us what is your diet in a labour home?—It is plain, but very excellent.

8059. How many meals do you give?—This is the usual dietary:—Sunday, breakfast—cold boiled bacon; dinner—cold boiled beef, fruit tart; tea—bread and butter, dripping, cake; supper—pea soup. Monday, breakfast—corned beef; dinner—Irish stew, bread pudding; tea—bread and butter, jam; supper—bread and cheese, coffee. Tuesday, breakfast—haddock; dinner—potato hash, suet pudding; tea—bread and butter, jam; supper—bread and cheese, coffee. Wednesday, breakfast—porridge; dinner—roast or boiled mutton, rice pudding; tea—bread and butter, marmalade; supper—lentil soup. Thursday, breakfast—boiled bacon; dinner—meat pudding, boiled rice, jam; tea—bread and butter, jam; supper—bread and cheese, coffee. Friday, breakfast—bloaters; dinner—fish, currant pudding; tea—bread and butter, jam; supper—bread and cheese, coffee. Saturday—breakfast—porridge; dinner—stewed beef, sago pudding; tea—bread and butter, jam; supper—bread and cheese, coffee.

8060. They get good food at four different times?—Yes; we say we must feed them well so as to make them work well.

8061. Now do you make any difference in the food for the man who works well, and for the man who shirks his work as much as he can?—The latter class works himself out of the home in the course of a few days; he has got to earn the 6s. a week.

8062. In respect of his board and lodging?—Yes. We debit him with 6s., and if he does not earn the 6s. he must go. The object is to make that man, when he goes into the open market, keep his situation. We have to make a man work hard enough to keep his berth when he is out in work.

8063. What is the work in the labour homes?—The chief work is what we call jobbing. We know the man who is with us, he is one of our sons, he is a son of the family; we are only twenty-five or thirty in the home, so we get to know him and trust him, and we send him out to clean windows, to do bill distributing, and all sorts of jobbing. The whole district sends into our place to find an odd man, when they want a man for an hour or two. He will not steal, we believe we can trust him, or we should not send him out.

8064. Has that been successful from the point of view that the men have turned out well; I mean have you had complaints against them?—It is quite an exception to have a complaint of robbery or laziness.

8065. Or of things being missed after the man has been at a place?—Yes; he lives with us; where is he to put anything if he has stolen it?

8066. Do men who have been with you, and have obtained work, come back to you again if they lose their work?—Yes, but we do not take them back under twelve months. We should give them another chance at the close of twelve months, and exceptionally we have to wink at it because it might not be the man's fault that he lost his situation. They do come back on Sunday afternoons to tea. We have then large parties of our reclaimed characters who have got up again.

8067. Of what ages are the men whom you take?—Generally from seventeen to forty, and forty-five with a trade.

8068. Do they come generally through the medium of the police?—Well, they come from the police, casual wards, prisons, and a large number from private recommendations.

8069. You take them from the prisons on their discharge?—We offer every prisoner in England four months' work if he will accept it.

8070. Do you work with the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society?—We are in the closest touch with them. We have been the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society for all the convict prisons in England for years, but we do not want to be a local discharged prisoners' aid society.

8071. But you are in touch with the local discharged prisoners' aid societies?—Yes, we are in touch with them, but the Prison Commission allow us to go into the prisons and hold missions, that is to say, family prayers in the morning and sometimes in the evening, and at other times. We are allowed to try and get the men into a good humour with us and with religious societies, so that when they come out they will come to us. We go to the cell and we try to make the acquaintance of the man inside. We say to him, "What is your trade? Where could you get work, where is your best chance?" And we arrange to take that man straight away from the prison to the place where he says—perhaps Southampton. Now things are getting better in the North; we shall be sending more men up North now. It is a scientific treatment of the subject.

8072. Have you an agent on the spot, say at Derby or at Durham, who sees each prisoner when he comes out?—We are in touch with every prisoner. We have not a man in the town of Durham, because Durham is not an outlet for labour. We send over from Newcastle to Durham or from Leeds. We should send up to Durham and take the man straight away.

8073. You agree that the most important thing of all is to protect the man immediately he comes out of prison?—Oh, yes, the chaplain is practically our agent in the prison, and he makes all those arrangements beforehand.

8074. But the chaplain might not always be able to go down to the prison gate with that man?—No; he writes to say, "Smith is coming out at ten o'clock next Monday morning, please have him met; I cannot send anybody with him." Very often the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society will be there to take him down, say, to Leeds.

8075. (Mr. Davy.) To pass him on to you?—Yes. The Prison Commission do what they can to help us, because the prisoners are not only assisted by us, but offered four months' employment; that is the point. At the 120th day the man is turned out, so that he has to get work during those four months.

8076. (Chairman.) You have considered the question of labour bureaux; I think you are in favour of having bureaux of national work?—Very strongly.

8077. Could you kindly tell us what your view is in regard to it?—Every institution is with us a labour bureau; we try to get all the information we can for our own sakes.

8078. Some witnesses considered it would be a good plan to have information at police stations or casual wards showing where work is obtainable within a reasonable distance?—That is most important; you cannot carry out the principle of a penal colony without it.

8079. You would be in favour of establishing that system?—I consider it absolutely essential. It is part of the principle of the way-ticket.

8080. I understand you suggest the abolition of casual wards; what would you put in their place; where would a man who was honestly in search of work lodge for the night?—He would lodge at a local home where work would be provided. The labour lodging home with the way-ticket system could be cheaply installed. We tried this system ten years ago. We tried it on the road from London to Southampton, and we used certain of the best lodging-houses we could find. We got the lodging-house master to provide labour; we then started the way-ticket and the man went from London to Guildford; he worked at Guildford and then went to Winchester; he worked there and then went to Southampton; we had Petersfield and one or two other places in as well. After the man did his work he got his night's lodging and his plain supper and breakfast; then he passed on to the next place. We failed in it because we could not make sure that the labour was really performed.

8081. Who looked after the labour?—Well, we failed because they were not our own men.

8082. The lodging-house keeper would probably not always be a fit person to look after the labour of the men?—Quite so; the thing failed on that account. We went

Rev. W. Carile.

21 June 1905.

Rev. W.
Carlike.

21 June 1905.

on for four years and very unwillingly we were driven to give it up.

8083. If that were the substitute for the casual ward it would not be altogether a satisfactory substitute?—It would be a satisfactory substitute if the labour was genuinely enforced by the State.

8084. In what would the labour lodging-house differ from the casual ward?—It would be more humane.

8085. In the casual ward the inmate is under the control of the master who is an expert in dealing with these cases?—Yes.

8086. He sees that the ward is clean and properly kept and that the man does his task?—The great majority of the vagrants are not really seeking work at all.

8087. I should say the majority of them are escaping from work?—Certainly. I think the number of vagrants would be reduced to a mere nothing, if the police had greater power to arrest, and if persons giving alms to beggars were fined. There was an old Act of Parliament whereby the donor who gave to an able-bodied pauper was fined 1s. for every 1d. given. It would be a very good thing to get it in again.

8088. While you were working your way-ticket system, did you find that it affected the number of vagrants?—Where we had our own men, and where we insisted on the labour, vagrants used to avoid the towns like poison.

8089. Then the effect of the way-ticket was quite satisfactory in that way?—Quite satisfactory.

8090. It was a deterrent in one way?—Yes, a deterrent.

8091. Did you do anything in the way of giving food in the middle of the day, as is done under the Gloucestershire system?—Well, it was generally managed in some sort of informal way.

8092. Do you not think that is an advantage that a man should have with his ticket an assurance that at any rate he will not starve?—Yes.

8093. At present, if a man on leaving the casual ward begs on the road he commits an offence for which he may be sent to prison. If he does not beg, he may be very short of food?—Yes; we used to arrange that the man had a little something to take with him. Of course, if you are going to compel the police to arrest, you are met with the difficulty of carrying out the present law. Public opinion, as I submit, does not endorse the action of the police. The man is known to be a vagrant; he means to live and die a vagrant; well, that man is making a very comfortable living and doing well.

8094. Well, if he is not making a comfortable living he is living a healthy life?—He has got a splendid life; he can sleep out; he can get plenty of clothes from anybody, with a copy of the Morning Post for a shirt, he is well off, he can lie out; he does not need to go to the casual ward.

8095. That proves, I think, the success of the open air system; but these men do not look over-fed as a rule?—Well, they are over-drunk if they are not over-fed; they generally can get a glass of beer, and on the whole they are fairly healthy.

8096. Would it be your view that if there is to be a general way-ticket system it should be worked through the medium of the police?—Yes, certainly; but it will not be effective unless you arrest the sturdy beggar. He should be locked up for one or two years.

8097. You have studied the labour colony question, I believe?—Yes, sir, I have.

8098. You suggest that there should be three sorts of labour colonies; the penal labour colony, which should in fact be a prison?—Yes; only much cheaper than a prison.

8099. It would be more or less an out-door prison?—Yes; the work would be reclaiming the land or afforestation.

8100. Then you would have another colony rather less stringent?—Yes; a compulsory one, but of a restorative nature, to act as a sort of stepping stone.

8101. I suppose you would classify the inmates according to their previous character?—Yes, as far as possible. I would classify and subdivide into small numbers.

8102. Your third kind of colony would be the voluntary one?—Yes.

8103. In the voluntary colony I suppose you would put a man on his parole, and not place any restraint upon him?—No, there would be a sort of judgment deferred upon him in some cases.

8104. You would put him on his parole, and tell him that if he ran away and was apprehended, he would be treated as a man who had absconded?—Yes, he would then go to the penal colony.

8105. Have the Church Army established any labour colony?—We have only one land colony, which is used by us chiefly as a test for emigration, but all our labour homes throughout the country—there are a hundred of these institutions—are practically voluntary colonies. If the Government start the penal colonies, either one or more of the two sorts which we suggest, then we should at once prepare half a dozen voluntary colonies to receive cases from the Government.

8106. Have you seen the various colonies in this country or in Belgium?—No; I have not visited any of them; but I have come across individuals who have been greatly benefited by their stay at Hadleigh and Lingfield. I have visited several German colonies.

8107. Now would you have your proposed colonies under the State?—I should suggest that it would be better done not by the State, but by the State paying grants of half the cost.

8108. Would you not have the penal colony under the direction of the Government, because it would be a prison?—Yes; but not the voluntary one. It is far better and cheaper for the State to give a small grant to some society than to manage the voluntary colony themselves.

8109. Or to throw the whole cost on the unfortunate ratepayers?—I should say it would be to a very small amount on the ratepayers. I believe the Salvation Army and the Lingfield people take grants from the guardians for some of their cases from 5s. up to 10s. per week. Under our system we have declined to take grants from the guardians at all; we have said, "No, we want to make this man work; we do not want him to say he is a boarder paid for by the State. It is a great loss to us and has crippled us perhaps in the extent of work, but it has enabled us to make the man so work that when he gets work outside he keeps it. Now we should propose that the voluntary colonies should never have more than half or two-thirds the cost of the man.

8110. You think that he should work out the rest?—Yes; the man must be made to work out the rest from the Church Army, or the Salvation Army; we must stand to lose money so as to put pressure to make the man work.

8111. What length of detention in the colony would you suggest?—For the land colony, I should say six months at least, with the option to us of saying twelve months.

8112. To get a man into working habits, good health, and so forth, you would say six months at least was necessary?—Yes. I should work the second colony on the principle of Elmira, where the prisoners can shorten their term by their own action, by good work and good behaviour. The man who is a sturdy beggar and who will not work should be imprisoned for a longer period to acquire a habit of work.

8113. He should be detained for a long time in a compulsory colony?—Yes. We should very strongly wish the colony to be broken up into families so far as possible; for instance, if you have got 500 men, these 500 men should be divided up into separate families with a man responsible for a certain number: they should live apart; they should not all feed together, or sleep together; one lot should not associate with another lot; each lot would have their own separate sitting room. We have an object lesson, for instance, at Shepherd's Bush in one of our women's homes. There are thirty-nine women; those thirty-nine women are divided up into three sets of thirteen, and there is a mother and a sister for each thirteen. They invite themselves to tea; they are quite separate; they are under the same roof but they never associate; their work is different. Herein lies the success of the reclamation part of the penal treatment.

8114. You have alluded to the women; do you have any children under your care?—No, the Waifs and Strays Society and Dr. Barnardo deal with them; besides the children are hopeful cases; ours are what the world calls hopeless.

8115. What sort of buildings would you have at the colony?—I think the present system of very expensive buildings for workhouses is not desirable. From our point of view we should say that at the penal colony for the restoration of waste land the buildings should be of a very inexpensive character, the sort of building that the London county council would not allow, that is an iron building with a wooden lining.

8116. Have you had plans or estimates of such buildings?—We have erected such buildings ourselves; we bought the corrugated iron, and the wood, and made the men erect the buildings.

8117. The cost of the buildings would be a very important item in the case of labour colonies?—We submit that you should make the colonists erect the buildings. It might be slightly more costly, but it would give labour it would help to make the men useful. I think in Belgium and in Holland the buildings have been nearly all erected by the prisoners themselves.

8118. Could you at all indicate the cost per man of the sort of buildings you suggest?—Iron buildings cost about £10 per man against bricks at £40. The London county council practically clock us as regards that sort of building now.

8119. That is as regards London?—Yes. They do not allow us to sleep in the buildings we erect. We have put up iron buildings and have had to pull them down, because they would not allow us to sleep in them.

8120. (Mr. Davy.) Have you formed any idea as to the size of each family in the penal colony; how many men should be put together?—I should say not exceeding twenty-five or thirty to each family.

8121. Your view is, I suppose, that the only chance of reclaiming a man is by personal influence?—Yes, the family should be under a father and mother. That is most important.

8122. According to your idea the cases sent on to a colony worked by a voluntary association like yours would be the more hopeful cases?—Probably, yes; we should especially ask for the privilege of being allowed to go into the compulsory colonies—both of them—to make the acquaintance of the individuals before they came out, the same as we are now allowed by the prison authorities to go into the cells.

8123. Supposing the colony is broken up into families, do you think it would very much matter how large the colony was?—Well, I would not have the colony for more than 500 inmates.

8124. If you are going to have several colonies, the question of the cost of the buildings would be of the first importance; you must have cheap buildings?—You must have cheap buildings, because very likely when you have restored that land in twenty years' time you would not want the buildings; you would move to another place.

8125. When did the county council shut up your buildings as being a breach of their byelaws or of the Metropolitan Building Act?—I really cannot say when it was; two or three times, I think, we have been shut up; we have had to turn the buildings into work-shops or pull them down.

8126. Were these places classed as common lodging-houses, or were they labour homes?—They were labour homes.

8127. Some of your institutions are under the inspection of the London county council, I think?—Yes, we do not at all mind being under their inspection.

8128. As regards the receiving home at Banner Street, do you take people out of the streets every winter, or was it only last winter?—In a smaller degree every winter, if we find it necessary. Under the old administration in Banner Street, homeless persons were given free bed and free food. It was absorbed by the Church Army some years ago.

8129. You take men in only up to three o'clock in the afternoon in order that they may do some work to pay for their dinner?—Up to four; we have to make exceptions some times.

8130. Where people are evidently in immediate want of something?—Yes, and where you can see the man is a genuine and hopeful case.

8131. The fact that you do not take them in late has the effect that you do not relieve the vagrant wards; I mean to say that if a man has been refused at the vagrant wards it would be too late to come to you?—It is too late except with regard to the relief work in the winter time. In the winter time we have work going on all night.

8132. Usually speaking, a man who is refused at the vagrant ward could not then come to you; it would be too late?—Yes.

8133. A good many people sleep out in London, do they not?—A great number sleep on the wooden staircases in tenement houses; you cannot get at them; they are too sharp.

8134. Do you find that in other towns numbers of people sleep out at night?—Yes, in Manchester you see them in hundreds at the brick crofts.

8135. You are aware that the chief constable of Manchester makes raids on the brick crofts occasionally and arrests these sleepers-out?—Yes, but he only catches those who are not wily enough.

8136. Do you know any town where the police enforce the law against sleeping out?—No; because public opinion is not strong in favour of enforcing it.

8137. You mean the magistrates will not convict?—The public will not send a man to the casual ward.

8138. You do not know any town where the police steadily repress sleeping out?—There are certain towns; Glasgow and Liverpool are more stringent than London.

8139. Is London one of the slackest?—I should say London was about the slackest of all; but it is not the fault of the police; it is the fault of public opinion behind the police. In Glasgow and Liverpool there is stronger public opinion behind the police than there is in London.

8140. Are you suggesting that the magistrates are amenable to public opinion?—I think that the magistrates are affected greatly by public opinion; the account of their proceedings comes in the paper the next morning and they get it at breakfast. Public opinion comes down upon them very likely before they get out of their house.

8141. You have told us that about 50 per cent. of the people in your homes find situations?—Of those who remain on the average thirteen weeks.

8142. What do the other 50 per cent. do?—They go to the dogs or leave us to seek work.

8143. Does that mean that they become vagrants?—Yes, some; or criminals.

8144. Or people who hang about at free shelters?—Yes, sir, a proportion of them.

8145. You do not hear of them again?—They have got a knack of trying to turn up at another home and swindle us.

8146. That you will not have?—Well, we photograph them and pass the photographs round as far as we are able; but we are often swindled.

8147. Then if they become destitute, they must fall back on the Poor Law?—Well, you see, a great number that we have to do with never cost the Poor Law a farthing; they go to prison; they are never in a casual ward and they are very rarely in the workhouse, except it is the workhouse infirmary if they are ill.

8148. The frequenters of the casual wards are rather the élite of the submerged tenth, are they not?—Yes.

8149. The ones who like to be clean?—Yes, they are; a great number never go into a casual ward.

8150. Casual ward frequenters are rather a distinct class in London?—Yes, they are looked upon by a number of the others as a sort of bloated aristocrats.

8151. Do you find that discharged prisoners often become vagrants?—Oh, yes, some do, but they are more hopeful cases; we would rather have a discharged prisoner than any other form of outcast.

Rev. W. Carlile.

21 June 1905.

Rev. W.
Carlike.

21 June 1905.

8152. He is probably a man with some sort of go and energy?—Yes, they are more hopeful; that is why half our energies are spent on the prison cases; we like them best.

8153. A man absolutely without character is the most hopeless person, I suppose?—Yes, he is.

8154. You are against the man who lives on free food?—Yes, strongly.

8155. Your whole association is based on “nothing for nothing”; you require work for food?—Yes.

8156. What you say against free food would also apply to free shelter?—Quite so.

8157. Do you think that free food and free shelters are a mischief to the State, and to the community?—Oh, I think so. They manufacture the article that we try to cure.

8158. Do you think that the evil is sufficiently grave to justify a power of veto being given to the sanitary authority as to free shelters, or to the police as to free food?—May I ask what you mean by the veto?

8159. Well, take a free shelter in London; it is registered as a common lodging-house; if it offends the conditions of the London county council, it may be closed as being insanitary or something of that sort?—Yes.

8160. But the county council have no power to say “Now that free shelter is a nuisance to the locality: it must be closed?”—I would like to insist that work must be done to the value of the accommodation provided.

8161. Would you give the municipal authority power to shut up these places on general grounds as being mischievous economically?—No. I should give them power to do it, if work is not provided in the shelter.

8162. But if they fail to comply with the conditions which experience shows are necessary, so that the public would be injured, then you would give the authority power to close the shelter?—If they do not comply with the condition which requires work.

8163. Do you think it is essential that the lodging and bedding should be up to a certain standard of comfort?—Yes, we think that sheets should be provided for all beds.

8164. I notice that in your lodging-houses and homes you have good beds?—Yes, we think that helps to restore a man's self-respect; he says, “Well now, that is worth living up to,” and he will make a struggle to do it, whereas if he is lying in a bunk, with a bit of cloth over him heated up to 60°, it does not improve the standard of living.

8165. You think that a very low standard of lodging tends to degrade a man?—Well, we think so; still I would rather say we do not think it helps to raise him; I would rather not express any opinion, because it would appear to be unkind to several other agencies. We do not think it helps to raise the man; but I take it that a philanthropic lodging-house, though it is worked for a profit, must help to raise men.

8166. Your lodgings cost 5d. a night, or three shillings a week?—It varies according to the town—4d, 5d. and 6d. In London it is mostly 5d. and 6d.

8167. That is as much as people pay at the ordinary lodging-houses?—Yes, quite as much; we admit we try to make the lodging homes pay, but not the labour homes.

8168. Do you think you cut into the business of the ordinary lodging-house keepers?—We may; we think we cause them to keep their standard up higher, and therefore in that way we do cut into their business, but as we show a profit on the invested capital, we feel we are perfectly justified in doing it.

8169. You are fair competitors?—Yes, of course. Our lodging homes are, further, handmaidens to the labour homes. You see a man, after he has gained his work in the voluntary colony, the labour home, still remains in our hands in the lodging home; he pays us 5d. upon which there is a profit of about a halfpenny; he is already a philanthropist trying to help his other brother in the labour home next door, and we have got our arms round him in the lodging home, so that the system of a penal colony, the compulsory colony, and the voluntary colony, almost need, from our point of view, a lodging home to carry on the line of reclamation.

8170. (Sir William Chance.) Do the lodgers know that they are philanthropists?—Yes, we encourage that very strongly. It is very important; we say “We are making a halfpenny out of you to-night; now that halfpenny is to help that poor chap in the labour home next door.” The lodging home is always next door to the labour home.

8171. (Mr. Davy.) How many homes and lodging-houses have you in London?—About twenty men's homes. Altogether we have about sixty regular labour homes and twelve receiving homes.

8172. You have women's homes as well?—Oh, yes; the vagrancy question hardly applies much to women, there is a very small percentage of women.

8173. You have expressed yourself in favour of labour bureaux; would you have these municipal or under the State?—I should have thought they would have to be partly both.

8174. Would you agree that it should be the duty of the local authority to run these bureaux?—I should have thought they ought to be both State and municipal.

8175. It has been suggested to us that if there are State labour bureaux, the State would take the responsibility for finding work, supposing that the man could not find it for himself?—I do not see that.

8176. Do you mean that you would pass a man on from labour bureau to labour bureau, and if ultimately he found nothing, he would have to come to you?—There may be great demands for labour in certain places, while there are no demands in others; if the labour bureau is only municipal, a man does not see beyond the length of his nose. For instance, there was a great boom at Southampton about three years ago; an outlet for an enormous quantity of labour.

8177. But do you not suppose the labourers knew that without the bureaux?—Yes, they knew it from the halfpenny paper a good deal; still we got a lot of people down there. If we had got them up here we should have been a long time before we got rid of them.

8178. If you tell the man where labour is to be found, the next step is to take him there?—The way-ticket system would get him there.

8179. According to your plan, a man would get a night's lodging and food for a small amount of labour?—Yes, and if there is no casual ward, I should propose a very much cheaper arrangement of labour lodging homes.

8180. Your experiment was taken straight from the German Herberge?—Not quite; two or three of us went and studied the system in Germany, and we were very much smitten by it; but, for instance, you cannot insist on an Englishman having his clothes baked, not only in sulphur, but baked with steam at 212°; an Englishman will not stand it.

8181. But the idea came from Germany?—Oh, yes.

8182. Now, who in Germany judges of the quality of the labour done?—The house-father.

8183. Why do they not come to grief on the same point that you did?—They have a red tape sort of way; they almost count the sticks a fellow chops; that is the sort of mind they have, and you cannot get Englishmen to do that.

8184. Therefore you must allow in copying foreign systems for what would be called in the individual the personal equation, the difference in the character of the cases?—Oh, yes, very materially.

8185. You have not seen the farm colonies in England?—No, I have not, except our own; but I have studied every detail of the system.

8186. Now, do you think agriculture is good work to put a man on?—I think it is the best curative agent for a drunkard, and you must remember large numbers of these vagrants are inebriates.

8187. Why should it be so particularly good for a drunkard?—Because he is out in the fresh air, which is the first thing to cure him; quack remedies are all very well for making money, but what he wants is oxygen, labour, fresh air; and the turning up of the soil seems to have an exhilarating effect on him.

8188. You believe in ameliorating the condition of the man by the earth and the earth by the man?—I do, sir; it is God's way.

8189. Well, but unfortunately there is the obstacle of climate, is there not; what are you going to do at your agricultural colony when there is a frost?—Well, it is very difficult; that is why we are obliged to find some sort of industry like making sacks at our little farm colony at Newdigate; we are obliged to have that indoor work.

8190. You must have a subsidiary industry?—Yes, it is well to have it.

8191. You do not believe that any compulsory labour of that sort can be made to pay its expenses, do you?—No.

8192. There must be a loss?—There must be a loss.

8193. Do you not think that a great deal of mischief is caused by people who say that if you have a labour colony or a farm colony it can be made to pay its way?—It is the most mischievous thing; it is perfectly untrue. I do not think any expert would have told you that. They try hard to make it pay but they cannot.

8194. Do you think there would be a better chance of the State making it pay?—No.

8195. Or a municipality?—No; of course you have a little better chance of making it pay if it is compulsory.

8196. You have the man for a longer time?—It is compulsory; you could withhold food from him if he does not work; that is the only way you can make him work.

8197. (Chairman.) That seems to be the general opinion, I think?—It is a very shameful thing that a man who is loafing outside here at the corner should be better fed, living on plenty of food and plenty of drink, and not doing a stroke of work, while thousands of excellent hard working people are to-day, here in London, out of work, and their wives and children are badly fed, and the children are not having a fair start; it is a very wrong state of affairs.

8198. (Mr. Davy.) When the State assumes the responsibility for a man's whole life they must feed him adequately, I think?—Yes; but if he does not work he should not get any food, or only just enough to keep him alive. In Italy the system is to pay for work on a farm according to the number of square feet that a man digs.

8199. (Mr. Simpson.) In England and Wales you have about sixty labour homes and twelve receiving homes?—Yes.

8200. At the receiving homes you only keep persons for a short time?—Yes.

8201. Do you receive persons direct into the labour homes?—In the provinces we do.

8202. But not in London?—No, not in London.

8203. The Banner Street receiving home belongs to the Homeless Poor Association?—Yes.

8204. Do the other homes belong to you or do you hire them?—They are leaseholds in most cases, but a good many of them are our freehold property. As to the Banner Street institution, that is worked by the same committee as the Church Army, so it is practically ours.

8205. The Church Army has really absorbed the Homeless Poor Association?—Yes.

8206. That is a very old association, is it not?—Yes; they gave free food. The moment we got hold of the home we said, "No, you must have work," and the committee practically resigned.

8207. Was Banner Street the only place they had?—Yes; with the same amount of money that it cost them, we administer three other homes because of the profit on the labour.

8208. At any of your homes have you anything like a farm?—We have only one farm home, and that is chiefly for testing for emigration.

8209. Where is that home?—At Newdigate in Surrey; it is a very important place for us, because every emigrant from the southern part of England is tested there.

8210. And at the other homes the industries you have are quite of a simple kind, are they not?—Yes; mostly jobbing, waste paper collecting, and wood chopping.

8211. I suppose you get a great many orders from people who give you work from philanthropic motives?—Yes. Instead of cutting a trade to sell our goods, we appeal to the charitable instinct of church people. We take men of any denomination; we do not restrict to the Church of England; a Roman Catholic can go to his Mass, and a Baptist can go to his Chapel.

8212. But you are largely or mainly supported by Church of England people?—We are, but we do not restrict the benefits.

8213. That removes a great deal of the difficulty about getting rid of the products of your industry; take wood chopping, for instance, and wood cutting; suppose you were run on a commercial basis, the first requisite would be that you should be able to give your customers a regular supply?—Yes.

8214. And probably there would be a considerable difficulty about that, because there would be times when you would get a large number of inmates, and those might be exactly the times when you would not have many orders, or you might have a number of orders, and your number of inmates might fall off very much, and you would be unable to fulfil your contracts?—Yes, that is why we use wood chopping; our inmates fall off in the summer time and our wood chopping falls off in the summer time.

8215. I suppose you accumulate a large stock of bundles of wood in order to give a regular supply?—We do not contract to supply fire-wood even, because we want to get private orders; from private individuals we get 3s. 6d. per 100 bundles instead of perhaps 2s. 9d.; that is how we exist.

8216. In any of your labour homes would you be prepared to receive persons committed compulsorily by magistrates, supposing the law allowed magistrates to commit them to you to be kept at so much a year?—We have a large number with us with judgment deferred. That is the nearest thing to it.

8217. (Mr. Davy.) Are they sent by the London police?—Some from the London police and some from the country. They will have to come up again if they do not behave themselves while they are with us.

8218. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you often find that you have to bring them before the magistrates to have judgment passed?—No, they are generally the best of the cases.

8219. The object of your organisation would be to deal with the more hopeful cases so far as the vagrant class is concerned?—Yes; we cannot help the others at present because public opinion does not support the police.

8220. If magistrates had power to commit for, say, one to three years vagrants who had been convicted frequently, would your organisation be suited to receive such cases?—Those who are convicted over and over again, we submit, must go to a compulsory State colony.

8221. Supposing a Bill were passed allowing any voluntary association to be licensed by the State, say by the Home Office, for the compulsory detention of vagrants for a considerable time, would you come forward and ask for any of your labour homes to be licensed?—I think, if such a Bill were passed we should come forward; but we are not very keen that there should be such a Bill.

8222. It has been urged on us a good deal that the best way of dealing with vagrants would be that they should be committed for a long period to a place of detention—a penal colony—something which is not quite a prison?—The best of such cases we would take then into our existing homes and colonies.

8223. And the worst of them would be committed straight away?—It is only wasting your time sending them to us; we might be willing to take them; but with the sturdy beggar who is determined never to work, it is only wasting time and money to tackle him in a voluntary colony.

8224. Suppose you were able to turn your home into a compulsory colony, would you undertake that work; if the State said, "We wish these sturdy beggars to be committed to a place of detention for a considerable period, and we think that voluntary enterprise will probably run a place of that kind more cheaply"?—There would be the

Rev. W.
Carlile.

21 June 1905.

Rev. W.
Carlike.

21 June 1905.

expenses of warders ; you must have warders for such a place, for you practically become a prison. At the present moment we have got an object lesson at our colony at Newdigate. That was started at Dr. Branthwaite's request.

8225. As an inebriate colony ?—Yes. Here is the object lesson before you. The difficulty was that the people sent to us were not the sturdy beggar class, only they were sturdy inebriates. The law does not allow us even to call in a policeman if they are knocking us about.

8226. You found you could not control them ?—At the present moment the law will not support us ; if a man should knock us down within our own labour colony, we cannot call in a policeman to take him up.

8227. But assuming that the law was altered so that your home was licensed practically as a prison, with compulsory powers of detention of sturdy rogues there for a prolonged period, and that the State instead of starting an institution themselves, licensed you to do it and paid you part of the cost of maintenance ?—The expenses of warders would be so great.

8228. But the State would pay part of the maintenance ?—The inmates of the prison at the present moment cost per head about 18s. per week. The labour colony in Belgium works out at 5s., but we could not do it for that amount. It would cost a private society more than the State, if the State will only work it on reasonable lines, and not build magnificent prisons.

8229. Suppose the State gave you, say, three-fourths of the cost, would you feel inclined then to undertake the work ?—Yes, I think we would on those terms.

8230. A great many consider that private enterprise could run a penal colony for sturdy rogues and beggars on the whole cheaper than the State would be likely to do it ?—We propose that there should be a strong penal colony ; and then a compulsory colony on moderate lines ; that is the one you propose should be under voluntary management. But looking to our experience of inebriate cases there would be certain cases which would not be fit for us.

8231. You mean to say that judging by the analogy of the inebriate homes you must have some place under State control, to which the worst cases can be removed ?—Yes.

8232. Just as you have Warwick prison for the worst inebriates ?—We propose, instead of the ordinary prison system, to put them on the land. Most of what you would call the hopeful cases would be better on the land than they would be penned up in prison.

8233. But in the case of vagrants do you not think that the worst cases are really hopeless, whether in prison or on the land ; you are not likely to make men of them ?—They are more likely to be made men of on the land than they are in a town labour colony, even the worst cases if you are prepared to starve them if they will not work.

8234. But they would have to be dealt with on the assumption that you are not likely to make much of them, or reform them ; vagrants who are over forty years old, and have been all their lives on the road, are not likely to be made men of by any institutional treatment ?—No, these men would come into the penal colonies again as soon as they were out ; they would be nearly always in one of them ; you might want to have power to keep them always. But they could work out their own social salvation at 4s. or 5s. on the land, while they would cost in the prisons 18s.

8235. You would have to look at that agricultural colony as a place of refuge for the refuse of the prison ?—Yes, for certain cases.

8236. (Sir William Chance.) I think you said you looked on your prison cases as the most hopeful cases ?—Yes.

8237. Does that quite agree with the figures you have given in your statement ?—Well, in London, of the prison cases, 30 per cent. were good, 62 per cent. doubtful, 8 per cent. bad ; of the poor law cases, 23 per cent. were good, 57 per cent. doubtful, 20 per cent. bad. Of the other cases, 60 per cent. were good, 24 per cent. doubtful, 16 per cent. bad ; that includes a large number of private recommended cases.

8238. You do not count them as ordinary cases ?—No. For instance, you might be interested in someone that you want us to pull together, who has worried his family and that sort of thing, and you have sent him to us ; we very often get those cases through successfully.

8239. You would call those extraordinary cases ?—They are.

8240. As regards your provincial homes, I see that of the prison cases 30 per cent. and of the poor law cases 35 per cent. were good ; that is rather in favour of the poor law cases ?—Well, 22 per cent. of the provincial cases had been in prison, and 32 per cent. had never been in prison or workhouse.

8241. There is not very much to choose between the prison cases and the poor law cases ?—No ; only our home-father always preferred to have a prison case to a poor law case.

8242. Have you ever visited any casual ward in London ?—Yes.

8243. Have you done so recently ?—Yes, but not carefully inspected, except some fifteen or eighteen years ago.

8244. You are aware that there has been a great change in the condition and management of casual wards during the last fifteen years ?—Yes, I believe they are improved.

8245. I wanted to ask you how far the general management of a good London casual ward compared with your receiving home ?—I cannot answer the question. At the receiving home the system is altogether different : the man has got to have a bath ; but he gets a separate bath with us ; he gets his own clothes in most cases.

8246. That is so in the casual ward ; the man gets his separate bath, and gets his own clothes when he leaves ?—He does not always get a separate bath.

8247. He would if the casual ward is managed in accordance with the Orders of the Local Government Board ?—Yes. Sometimes, if the man is clean we do not always insist on the bath.

8248. What I wanted to find out was, what is the actual difference in regard to the treatment of a man in the London casual ward, and in one of your receiving homes ?—With us he does not do his work in a cell ; he works along with the other men ; they can talk together in the workshop.

8249. There may be a difference, too, in regard to the greater personal interest which is taken in him in the receiving home than in the casual ward ?—It may be so. Usually of course, we are always on the look-out to find one or two men whom we can get on their feet out of that group coming into the receiving home.

8250. But would you say there is very much difference ?—I hear continually what the inmates say ; they feel in one case they are going to prison ; and in the other they are going with the chance of getting upward in the social scale ; that is the point.

8251. You advocate the abolition of the present casual wards altogether ?—The present system of them, yes.

8252. Because, as I understand it, you say they do nothing whatever to help the men ?—They do nothing whatever.

8253. A man leaves the casual ward, according to you, in the same state in which he entered it ?—Yes.

8254. That is your reason for wishing for its abolition ?—That it helps nobody, unless it really helps some to carry on a vagrant life ; a certain class of man who gets used to it can go on ; but that is not the ideal life.

8255. In your statement you say " Abolish the existing casual ward system altogether ; the buildings and staff might be partly utilised for the purpose of the way-ticket system." Therefore you contemplate using the existing casual wards under your new system ?—A modified form of labour lodging home.

8256. Does that mean that you want them put under entirely different control ?—Not necessarily different control, but worked with a view to raise men rather than simply to accommodate them for a night and then send them on.

8257. You are rather condemning the present system, you see, of the casual wards ?—We do, most undoubtedly.

Rev. W.
Carlike.

21 June 1905

8258. And you therefore want to put something in their place?—Yes.

8259. And you suggest that the existing wards may still be used?—Under modified treatment.

8260. Do you think they should be under the guardians?—I suppose they must be under the guardians.

8261. But you propose to abolish them. I want to understand clearly what you mean by that?—We feel that the casual ward to-day never helps a man; not one in a thousand. The workhouse is bad enough; but the casual ward we feel helps nobody off the rates.

8262. Does it not come to this, that if the casual wards are to be kept, it must be under some different system than at present?—If you give the police power to arrest; if you have got your penal colony for the vagrant, then you are in a position to manipulate the casual ward in a very different way.

8263. You still want some kind of relief station under the way-ticket system?—Yes, but the demand would be very much smaller, because the casual wards are largely filled with people whose business it is to live upon the system.

8264. Then you think that the casual ward might be used as a relief station?—Yes, sir, it might be adapted to it.

8265. But it would have to be under different control; it would have to be in connection with the general system of the way-ticket?—It would be a part of the way-ticket system.

8266. You made an experiment in 1898 of establishing some kind of relief stations in connection with a way-ticket?—We spent £2,000 or £2,000 on it.

8267. I understand you found that it was the work required in those homes and not the way-ticket which was the deterrent, and prevented the vagrant from coming to you?—Yes. The men took the way-ticket, and when they came to Winchester, which was our own place, they were frightened of it because work was enforced there. They liked Petersfield and Guildford, because the work was managed by a lodging-house keeper, who failed to give a sufficient test, and the thing broke down.

8268. What you want to stop by your system is indiscriminate charity?—Most certainly; we should like to see a man fined 1s. for every penny he gave to able-bodied paupers, restoring the law as it stood in the reign of Henry VII.

8269. What in your opinion is the effect of giving this charity indiscriminately to vagrants?—Why, it manufactures vagrants.

8270. (Dr. Downes.) Have you formed any estimate of the probable numbers that would have to be dealt with under the system of colonies you have sketched in your statement?—No, I have formed no idea of the numbers; there is a very large number; of course you would go by degrees. If it was reclamation of land or afforestation, of course the buildings would be inexpensive, and could be moved.

8271. You would proceed very much as would a contractor on a big piece of work, I take it?—Yes, like putting navvies on a railway; the buildings would not be very much better.

8272. Now, in the case of the penal colony, would you have it fenced in?—I think that would be hardly possible.

8273. You might have a class of man who might be a nuisance or a danger to the neighbourhood?—There would have to be increased expenditure in respect of warders.

8274. It may possibly be necessary to fence a certain portion?—It might be for extreme cases. If they were treated as second and third class, and if they felt they could get themselves out of that class by every day's work they did, the fenced class would gradually become less.

8275. (Chairman.) Thank you very much for the assistance you have given us.—May I add that it seems to me that it would be fatal if any scheme for dealing with vagrants were to be for London only. The way-ticket for London only would be fatal.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

Thursday 22nd June, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.
Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.

Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary)

Mr. H. PRESTON-THOMAS, Local Government Board Inspector, re-called; and further Examined.

8276. (Mr. Davy.) You have lately reported on the labour colonies of Switzerland?—I was in Italy last year, and I asked the Local Government Board whether they would like a report on the Swiss system of dealing with vagrancy, which I had heard was a particularly good one, and which I happened to know had enormously reduced the amount of begging along the roads. They acquiesced: I devoted a fortnight to the enquiry on my way home; and this is my report on the subject (see Appendix XVII). It has been made a Parliamentary paper.

8277. What is the poor law area in Switzerland?—Each individual canton and each Gemeinde or commune.

8278. The area of settlement is the commune?—Yes.

8279. How many cantons are there in Switzerland?—Twenty-two.

8280. All the cantons are subject to the Federal law with reference to vagrancy, are they not?—Yes, but in practice the dealing with this matter is left to each individual canton.

8281. Is there not a general Federal law as to begging dating from 1850?—That merely provides that beggars and tramps are to be treated in accordance with the law of each canton.

8282. Then the law in each canton varies considerably?—Yes.

8283. Is there not an inter-cantonal institution for dealing with vagrancy and mendicancy?—Yes, there is the Inter-cantonal Union for the relief of poor travellers, which was established some dozen years ago, and which now extends to fourteen out of the twenty-two cantons of Switzerland. It is a voluntary society, but certain contributions are made to it by both the Federal Government and the governments of the particular cantons.

8284. That is a system rather like the German system of Herbergen and relief stations?—Yes, to a certain extent.

8285. That is to say, it enables a traveller—what we should call in this country a bona fide traveller—to travel

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 1905.

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 1905.

over Switzerland without having recourse to the poor law or the police?—Quite so, except that the police are very much mixed up with it; some of the Herbergen in Switzerland are at police stations, but it is a voluntary society intended to prevent, as you say, people having recourse to the poor law, and to help them on their way.

8286. The existence of that society would probably make it easier to enforce the law strictly in the case of real beggars or vagrants?—I believe that is so; I was informed so, but it is one of those things of which you cannot furnish proof. It has very considerably lessened the willingness of people to give alms, because if a man cannot get work, everybody knows he will get a dinner and a bed, and be helped on his way. Perhaps I ought to say that in the eight cantons to which the society does not extend the men are dealt with by the police, who do something after the same fashion.

8287. Can you tell us roughly, what the system of passes is?—The system of passes varies. Under the society's system a man must furnish proof that he has worked for an employer within the three preceding months, and that at least five days have elapsed since his employment ceased; that is to show that when he has received his wages he has not spent them at once on a big drink or anything of that sort.

8288. A man has to show that he has worked?—He has to show that he has worked for an employer within the three preceding months. Then on his showing that, and on his convincing the society that he is a working man and not a loafer, they deliver to him a book which authorises him to obtain food and lodging at any one of the Herbergen or relief stations. There they help him to a certain extent to get work, but if he can be shown to have refused work that is reasonably suitable, his book is confiscated at once, and he is then either handed over to the police or left to shift for himself; he has refused work, and therefore they suppose that they were mistaken in taking him originally as a worker, and they will have nothing more to say to him. There is a great deal of employment in all parts of Switzerland at most times of the year, and a man can almost always get work if he really wants it.

8289. Is any route indicated in the book?—No, none at all.

8290. He can go where he likes?—Exactly; where he likes. The way-ticket system in England says that a man if he goes a certain route shall have certain privileges; he shall be exempt from detention to a certain extent. Surely those privileges ought to be given not because he has shrewdness enough to indicate a particular route, but because he is really a working man and in search of work. Why should you cripple him by saying he should continue to go north or south, when half-way he may hear of work to the west or to the east? Why should he be tied down to a particular route? I think that is one drawback of the way-ticket system. I would not cripple him at all in his search for work, and that is what the Swiss say; they let him go exactly where he likes, but, if they find that he is refusing work that he ought to take, they withdraw his book, and he is put on the level of ordinary people.

8291. Would they withdraw his book if he begged?—Yes.

8292. Is there any limit to the time he can search for work?—I am not sure as to that; I think it is a long time. It does not matter very much as they run the thing, because a man will get off the road by taking work, or he will refuse work and have his book confiscated; one of the two. If he refuses work he forfeits his book; if he takes work well and good; he may go on if he takes work at the proper time.

8293. If he takes work he still retains his book?—If he takes work he still retains his book.

8294. So that apparently he might always keep the book by him as an emergency?—Well, he must furnish proof that he has worked for an employer within the three preceding months.

8295. That would be to get his book originally?—Yes.

8296. But having once got his book?—Well, then it is stamped at every station that he goes to, as to where he has been and what he has been, and if his book does not show either that he had worked or been trying to get work, it would be forfeited.

8297. And you say in your report that "furnished with this book the workman may wander over most of Switzerland if in genuine search of work, and will be sufficiently fed (with three meals daily) and suitably lodged on application at any of the stations which the union has established"?—That is so.

8298. Supposing we had a system like that in England, I suppose the relief stations would be at the casual wards?—I should think so.

8299. Or the police stations, or both?—Yes.

8300. Have you anything more to say as to this voluntary society?—No; I think that I have sufficiently stated the facts as they are set out in the report. It is gradually growing, I believe, and it will probably extend over the whole of Switzerland in due time. Everyone I spoke to about it said it was going very well indeed. I may say that I sent this report to Herr von Schumacher, who is a distinguished publicist and political economist, a man who was on the Congo Commission, and is well known outside Switzerland. I made friends with him in the course of my inquiry, and I sent my report to him, to ask him kindly to point out any errors in it, of which I was afraid there might be a good many, and he said there were no errors to point out; he had carefully read it, and he thought it properly represented the facts.

8301. Are you of opinion that the Swiss themselves look upon this as a successful society?—There is no doubt about that.

8302. In Switzerland have they any what we should call indoor relief—relief in workhouses?—Yes, but that is quite apart.

8303. I imagined so, but it was necessary to ask you the question, because it comes in later?—It is quite apart from the treatment of vagrants.

8304. But they have indoor institutions?—They have indoor institutions; in fact in a great many Gemeinden, they have three things quite separate; they have the workhouse (Arbeitshaus), the sick-house (Krankenhaus), and the orphanage (Waisenhaus). They have outdoor relief, too.

8305. Have the police powers of sending beggars for compulsory detention in these labour colonies?—Not without taking them before the magistrates. It is done in two ways, the choice between which seems to me to be rather a matter of chance. If a man is caught begging by the police he will probably be warned for the first time, but if he is known, or it is a pretty clear case, the police may do either of two things; they may take him before the magistrates, who may commit him to a forced labour colony, or they may send him back to his own Gemeinde. Then the council sits on him and decides whether he is a man who has begged in consequence of temporary circumstances, or whether he is an habitually lazy man who will not work, and if they decide that he is work-shy, they may commit him for a year, or for two or three years.

8306. Is that term of detention the same in all the cantons?—No, each canton has its own law on the subject; roughly speaking you may say that it varies from six months to three years; there are not very many of the six months.

8307. (Mr. Simpson.) Six months is the maximum in those cases?—I should say the maximum varied from six months in a very few cantons to three years in others.

8308. What is the minimum?—I do not think there is any statutory minimum, but in practice they never, or scarcely ever, send a man for less than three months, and very seldom for less than six months. I think you may take six months as practically the minimum.

8309. (Mr. Davy.) The council of the canton is elected?—Yes.

8310. They have the power of detaining a man for three years?—Not only the council of the canton but the council of the district.

8311. Now if a man is taken before the magistrates by the police and sent on to a labour farm, who pays for him there?—The Gemeinde makes a small contribution—sometimes it is a very small contribution—100 francs a year in some cases.

8312. Whether the man is sent by the police or by the administrative body?—I think so. Certainly when he is sent by the Gemeinde, and as a rule, in other cases also. I was looking through the books of one forced labour institution, and they were shewing me the different agreements they had with Gemeinden to receive so-and-so at such and such a rate, and I found an entry that "A.B. after six months is a very good workman, his work has produced so much, and we do not think we ought to have any payment made for him," and accordingly they wrote to the Gemeinde and told them that A.B. being a good workman they would not charge for him any more.

8313. In the administrative council of the Gemeinde is there any Government representative, or what we should in this country call an ex officio member of the council?—Not necessarily; it is all done by free election, and there is not necessarily any Government representative.

8314. Did you hear of any objection to a body elected in that way having the power to commit for a certain time to what is in effect a prison?—No; it is like a bench of magistrates practically.

8315. Now will you tell us about the Witzwyl colony; who administers that?—The council of the canton.

8316. By a committee?—Yes. It is in the division of the police.

8317. How many forced labour farms or labour colonies are there in Switzerland?—I have not got the exact number; about a dozen I think. I may say generally that nearly every canton has either a forced labour farm, or has an agreement with some other canton to send its people to their farm.

8318. So that the forced labour colony system covers the whole of Switzerland?—It would cover almost the whole of Switzerland.

8319. And for these forced labour colonies the cantonal council appoints the officers, I suppose?—Yes.

8320. Is there any local visiting committee?—Yes, there is a committee that comes at intervals, and scrutinises things very carefully.

8321. Does the Federal Government take any share in the management or in the inspection?—No.

8322. It is left entirely to the canton?—Entirely to the canton; and the more one sees of Switzerland the more one notices how each canton is to all intents and purposes a separate country for most things. Witzwyl, I may say, is really an extraordinary instance of good management and success.

8323. That is the forced labour farm of the canton of Berne?—Yes.

8324. What is the size of that institution?—It is 2,000 acres, and the number of men is about 150 to 200.

8325. In what sort of buildings are they housed?—Not expensive buildings.

8326. Are they wooden?—No, I think they are all stone; there is plenty of stone about there; the place is at the foot of the Jura and between the lakes of Neuchâtel and Bienne.

8327. They would not cost as much as an English workhouse?—Oh, good gracious, no.

8328. (Chairman.) Are they one storey or two storey buildings?—Two storey mostly. The original buildings consisted of some farmhouses, which were added to, but they have practically all been built by the colonists; they have never employed any outside work.

8329. (Mr. Davy.) Is the accommodation in dormitories or in cells?—Mostly in cells in this colony.

8330. Now as to the staff?—The staff numbers forty-five, and it was rather curious to see them working; the staff did not act as warders, and it was a great contrast to anything we have here. The whole place is a prison; one has to remember that, but the staff were not so much warders, to prevent the men running away, as foremen; they were working with the men; and the manager there, who is an exceedingly acute person, laid tremendous stress on that; he said that he took infinite pains to get good foremen, who were industrious, and who would not spare themselves; he dwelt on the effect of their example, and described how men came there at first thinking that they would not work, but somehow they got into the swing of it and fell into line with the rest. And the way they work there is very different from the way in which work is done in our prisons; in our prisons, for one thing, the hours of work are not very long, but in Switzerland they have to work from dawn till dusk, hard at it; it is a matter of eleven hours in the winter and twelve in summer. Of course in the winter during some of that time it is dark, but for that they do not care a bit; the men are made to work at various industries indoors.

8331. (Chairman.) Did you see the men working yourself?—Yes, at the reclamation of the land and at various things. They have so many things that men who are not very strong can do; the councils and courts as a rule only send them fairly able-bodied men, but the weaker ones are placed on work of an easier type. For example, they make a large number of straw cases for wine bottles. There is an enormous demand for them; the price in England is something under three shillings a gross, that is, threepence a dozen. It struck me as a very excellent industry for an institution, and is done by the aid of a small machine of a very simple kind. This seemed to me to be good work for not very strong people, and work that we might do in England very well, because instead of importing all our straw cases we might make them in our workhouses and prisons without displacing any English trade.

8332. (Mr. Davy.) You say in your report that work begins at 5.30 in the summer and at 6 in the winter, with intervals of twenty minutes at 9 o'clock and 4 o'clock?—Yes.

8333. "Dinner is at half-past eleven, and each man takes his ration from the kitchen to his cell where he remains till 12.30. Men working at a distance from the main building have their dinners sent to them. At 7 p.m. in summer and at dusk in winter they come back, have their supper, prepare vegetables, and do some housework for the following day, and then go to bed." That means about eleven hours' work, does it not?—Yes.

8334. That is far longer than in English prisons?—Yes, far longer; I think it is only four or five hours sometimes in England during which they are actually occupied.

8335. (Chairman.) In the colony I suppose there are different classes; are there any of the criminal class?—Yes, and they keep them separated to a certain extent. They have two sets of people at Witzwyl; a few who are guilty of not very flagitious offences, but who have been committed by criminal courts, as well as what they call the "administratives," who have been committed by councils of Gemeinden.

8336. I suppose these would not be for every class of criminal?—Oh, no.

8337. Those who had been convicted of more gross offences would be kept in prisons?—Yes, these colonies are only for persons convicted of light offences, such as begging, neglecting their wives and families, and "work-shyness," and a few who have committed small criminal offences, but there are no criminals of at all deep dye, I think.

8338. (Mr. Davy.) To a certain extent these labour colonies must relieve the prisons?—Oh, yes, certainly.

8339. They take a certain number of persons who, if labour colonies were not in existence, would have to go to prison?—Quite so; it is good for the men and for the land. They grow beetroot for making sugar, and they supply Neuchâtel with farm produce, milk and vegetables; they have reclaimed this land, and have turned what was useless marsh into good cultivated land by draining it, and now it is a valuable estate.

8340. Were you impressed with the way in which the men worked?—I was impressed with the extraordinary absence of formalism, compared with what one sees in casual wards and in prisons.

8341. They really seemed to work?—They really did work hard, and you saw the results of their work all about.

8342. Now in reference to land reclamation, this colony has only been established a few years; it was started in 1895?—Yes.

8343. When will they come to the end of their land reclamation?—I think in about five or six years more.

8344. And will they then have sufficient work for the men?—They say they will. They will have to regulate

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.
22 June 1905.

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 1905.

their crops differently; they will have sufficient work to employ at any rate 150 or 200 men, because they grow crops that want considerable treatment; and then they have their industries.

8345. (Chairman.) They will have ten acres per man, taking 200 men?—Yes.

8346. With cultivation they will have plenty of work for 200 men?—Yes; they say there will be ample work. When I put to them that question they said, "Yes, we shall have heaps of employment there in the future, when we have done our reclamation."

8347. And they have workshops of all sorts?—Yes.

8348. Are people taught in those workshops?—They are taught to some extent, but as a rule not unless they have done some work of the kind before, they do not, so to speak, take apprentices.

8349. (Mr. Davy.) What is the diet?—Breakfast consists of bread, coffee, and potatoes, dinner of bread and soup (meat twice a week), and for supper there is soup, with now and then fruit. The daily ration of bread is from a pound and a quarter to a pound and a half. The quantity of soup, vegetables, and so on, is unlimited. Men engaged in hard work have extra bread at 11 a.m. and 4 p.m., with either coffee or lemonade in the afternoon.

8350. The diet is good?—The diet is good, except that there is not much meat; it is largely vegetarian.

8351. (Dr. Downes.) Is the soup a vegetable soup?—Yes.

8352. Can you say what quantity of meat is given per week?—I have no note of the exact quantity, and I cannot find it stated in the reports; but I believe it to be small.

8353. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you suppose that in Switzerland the ordinary diet is more vegetarian than in England?—Much more.

8354. (Mr. Davy.) You say that a remission of one-third of the term of detention may be obtained: who gives that?—The canton; the council at Berne.

8355. And is there any system of payment, so that the man goes out with some money?—They give him a small bonus.

8356. And what is done with the man when he is discharged—is he sent to the place of his settlement?—There are two or three methods; one is to send him to a voluntary farm colony at Tannenhof, close by.

8357. And there the man has a chance given him?—The man has a chance at that free colony of going through a period of quarantine as it were. People do not care to take him straight from prison, but they do not mind from a free colony. Then there is a society for the aid of discharged prisoners, which assists in getting places for the men. Also, when the officials at Witzwyl find a man whom they can trust, after he has been with them a sufficient time to make them know whether he is trustworthy or not, they very often employ him on the farm as a hired labourer.

8358. What is done with the wives and children of these men?—They are maintained by the Gemeinde—a sort of outdoor relief.

8359. (Chairman.) In your report you say that the original price paid for the land by the canton was £29,710?—Yes, £15 an acre, roughly speaking.

8360. That would be rather a good price for neglected and uncultivated marsh?—Yes, but any land capable of being done anything with is enormously costly in Switzerland.

8361. (Mr. Davy.) The financial result has been that the land has doubled in value, and is now worth £60,000 instead of £30,000?—Yes.

8362. And the value of the buildings, stock, implements, and so on, has risen from £200 to £17,000?—Well, as a matter of fact, there was scarcely anything worth speaking of there when they started, and they have put on what is estimated, as I understand, by an independent valuer, to be worth £17,000.

8363. But this increased wealth would only become practically useful in case the canton wanted to sell?—Only in case the canton wanted to sell, naturally.

8364. But the farm being more valuable they get a larger return?—Yes.

8365. (Chairman.) The £17,000 is only for buildings and stock?—Yes.

8366. Is there much in the way of live stock?—Yes, about 500 cattle, 50 horses (including brood-mares) and 200 pigs. They sell a large quantity of milk in Neuchâtel, and that all comes from their own cows.

8367. (Mr. Davy.) Will you tell us about the discipline of that colony: how do they punish?—By confinement and half rations; in fact, it is all a question of food really.

8368. The punishment is by deprivation of food?—That is so.

8369. Do they have many escapes?—Very few; about three or four abscond annually, but are almost always brought back by the police.

8370. Switzerland being a small country, they can easily be traced, I suppose?—They can easily be traced, and of course one thing is, everybody in Switzerland must carry papers, and is liable to be asked for his papers if he sleeps a couple of nights in one place.

8371. (Chairman.) Is there any distinctive dress for these men?—Yes: they have a distinctive dress which would assist in their recapture in case of escape.

8372. (Mr. Davy.) As regards the results of the Swiss system, I believe general vagrancy and begging have been very much diminished?—Yes.

8373. Is that attributed to this forced labour system?—To the two things; to the forced labour for the inveterates, and to the help that is given by the Inter-cantonal Union to the people who are really in search of work.

8374. You think that makes persons more careful as to giving alms?—There is no doubt about that.

8375. Now as to the result of the colony on the man himself; what do you say as to that?—The officials can only judge by the fact that there are not very many who come there again and again. They say that a good many men get remission of part of their sentence, because the colony authorities are satisfied that they will work for themselves and will not come there again, and that a large number of these people are apparently reformed; but it can only be a matter of speculation as to what the reform is and how far it has gone. There is no doubt that the fact of having worked hard for a year or eighteen months makes a man apt to get into the habit of working, and this is believed to be the actual result.

8376. (Chairman.) Do they obtain any record of the men afterwards?—No, they find a great deal of difficulty in doing that; they can only say that the men do not come there again.

8377. (Mr. Davy.) But the people in charge of the colony think it does have a certain reformatory influence?—That is so.

8378. You are aware that that is a claim which is hardly made for any colony in any other country?—I know, and a great many in Switzerland make no such claim. In one of the voluntary colonies there it was frankly said: "Oh, no, we do not reform them here; it is only a little more employment made available; we give them a chance of working, but we do not pretend to reform them."

8379. They take them off the roads?—Just so.

8380. (Chairman.) What restriction have they at the colony; is there a wall or a fence round the place?—None at all.

8381. (Mr. Davy.) But the conditions as to the possibility of escape in Switzerland widely differ, do they not, from what they are here?—Very much.

8382. (Chairman.) Is there any railway near this place?—Yes; the nearest station I should think is about four miles away.

8383. (Mr. Simpson.) I suppose none of the inmates would have any money except by stealing it, so that if they ran away they would be forced to beg?—That is so.

8384. (Dr. Downes.) Are there any complaints from the neighbourhood?—I was not made aware of any, and I should think it unlikely, because the neighbourhood

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 19. 5

largely depends on the farm, and the place is kept in such exceedingly good order, that the men would not be allowed to be a trouble to anybody.

8385. (Mr. Davy.) I suppose the main cause of the people being obliged to be sent to these institutions in Switzerland, as it is here, is drink?—Generally; and they told me, at all those places, when I asked about reform: "Well, if a man comes here over forty years of age, and he has been a loafer for any time and given to drinking habits, there is not the least chance of reforming him; nothing that anybody can do for him will cure him; but if we get him here under thirty or thirty-five, then he may shake off his drinking habits after being kept compulsorily away from drink for eighteen months or whatever it is."

8386. He may reform?—Then he may reform.

8387. But you do not find the experienced people very hopeful?—They are only hopeful as to the younger men.

8388. Do you yourself think that any institution such as this is worth while maintaining even if the sole result is to take these tramps off the road?—I think so, because the effect is to discourage tramping as a business, and some tramps, at any rate, may get the habit of working.

8389. (Chairman.) I take it these are the habitual tramps, not men going on the road for the first time?—Yes. The men must be more or less habitual loafers; many of them are fairly young men.

8390. They may have been tramps from very early days?—Quite so.

8391. (Mr. Davy.) The administrative body in Switzerland who can sentence a man might conceivably be a better judge of whether a man was an habitual vagrant than a magistrate?—A good deal better, because they know more about him.

8392. (Mr. Simpson.) They are not bound, as a magistrate would be, to act on the evidence before them, but can act a good deal on their own knowledge?—This happens very often: a man is taken by the police, having been found begging; the police can choose whether they will send him to a magistrate or to his own place of origin to be tried by his own district council; in the latter case the district council treat him in a kind of fatherly way (in Switzerland, of course, all these men are burghers, and have certain recognised burgher rights); they know all about him, and they give him the fatherly correction, if they think it necessary, of sending him to work for a couple of years or so, as the case may be.

8393. (Mr. Davy.) Do they in Switzerland ever send a man to a labour colony from their Arbeitshaus?—Yes; now and then, if they think he can work and will not work, or if he gives trouble there, and they consider the other is the better place for him. Such cases are rare, but they do occur.

8394. I suppose that in English workhouses there are a good many cases that would be better in a penal establishment with compulsory detention?—Undoubtedly; some men give an enormous lot of trouble, and you cannot get any work out of them in the workhouse.

8395. Incurable ins and outs?—Yes, and there is the point to be remembered that in these colonies they manage to utilise an enormous lot of labour that would otherwise be wasted—by making these fellows do paying work.

8396. Did you go to the forced labour farm at St. Johannsen?—I did.

8397. Have you anything special to say about that?—That did not impress me quite so favourably as the other, but I was unable to get very many particulars about it. It is an institution of the same kind, only they get the older men there, while to Witzwyl they generally send the more thoroughly able-bodied, the picked men.

8398. Are both labour farms for the same canton?—Yes.

8399. At St. Johannsen I think they have less farm labour?—Yes. They have a great many cows—over 200—at St. Johannsen, although it is not a very big place; it is only about 400 acres.

8400. What is the population there?—They have actually 120, but they can take 180. There they have many more of the old, worn-out people, who are not much good, and therefore they work under disadvantages.

8401. In your report you say: "Some are fairly industrious, and show that if they had sufficient resolution to resist drink they could easily earn their living outside. But many are incurably lazy and only do the minimum amount of work necessary to escape punishment (usually confinement in a cell on bread and water for twenty-four hours)"?—Yes, that is so.

8402. Did you go to the labour farm at Gmünden?—Yes.

8403. That is in another canton?—Yes, in Appenzell, up in the north of Switzerland; it is worked very economically. That is the one that actually just pays its own expenses; they have made a net profit of £140. In 1903, the contributions paid by the district councils for the people who are there amounted to £140, and they made just £140 net profit by their sales; so that they actually ran the whole thing for nothing.

8404. (Chairman.) But there would be no interest upon their investment of £12,000?—No.

8405. It just pays its way out of pocket?—Yes, it just pays its way.

8406. (Mr. Simpson.) That consists of 100 acres?—Yes.

8407. For which they paid about £50 an acre?—Yes. Then they do a sort of nurserymen's work; as the forests are cut down they plant them afresh; they supply young pines which are grown at this place.

8408. As far as you could judge, do the men employed in these places really learn to stick to work so as to be useful afterwards?—I think some of them do.

8409. Of course, some more than others?—Yes.

8410. Did you hear whether those men who got employment outside obtained fairly good wages?—I was told a good many of them had done very well, but I could only get vague statements—that a great many had obtained work, that they had not come there again at any rate, and that some of them were known to be earning good wages.

8411. There is no actual record kept; those were only general statements?—Only general statements.

8412. But your idea was that there was a certain number who did learn agricultural work to some extent, and consequently were able to earn a decent livelihood after?—I think there is no doubt of that.

8413. (Mr. Davy.) From what you saw are you of opinion that the small colonies are better than the large?—I cannot say. The one at Witzwyl, owing no doubt to the personal influence of the manager, who struck me as being quite an exceptional man, seemed to me to be the best managed, and to produce the best results. Of course there are no very large ones in Switzerland.

8414. What are the hours of work at Gmünden?—Eleven in winter, and twelve or more in summer.

8415. And what is the average term of detention?—About a year in the case of those sent by the administrative body. In the case of those sent by the magistrate it is comparatively short—only about two months.

8416. Is it usually the case in Switzerland that the sentences by magistrates are shorter than the sentences by district councils?—I think so, and I think most of the men are sent, not by the magistrates, but by the district councils.

8417. Do they escape from Gmünden?—Very few indeed. I saw one man very heavily ironed, but he was a man who had a reputation for making his way out of everywhere, and he had made three attempts to escape; (he was not one of the "administratives," but one of the men convicted by a court) and he had been brought back three times.

8418. Do you know what he was convicted for?—No, I do not. I rather think it was some crime of violence. He was a very violent man, and had been convicted several times.

8419. And probably ought to have been sent to a prison?—Yes.

8420. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Do they send men to the forced labour colonies for crimes of violence?—Not

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 1905.

generally, but the practice varies in the different cantons. This is rather a small canton, and I think they mix them rather more.

8421. (Mr. Davy.) Then we come to the colony for Basel?—That has got comparatively little land—only about twenty-five acres, and there are about seventy people in it, about half of them being “administratives” and the other half short-term offenders convicted by the courts. The two classes are kept separate, but the convicted persons wear dresses different from the others. The “administratives” can have their term shortened by good conduct, and receive a bonus for good work.

8422. The cost of that institution seems considerable?—It is much more costly than the others.

8423. £1,000 a year, or £14 10s. a head?—Yes. That is considerably more than in most of the others, but it is in Liesthal, which is a very flourishing district, and altogether they do things on a rather expensive and ambitious scale. Of course, Basel is a rich canton.

8424. (Chairman.) Is the same sort of work done there as at the other colonies?—They have more industrial work, because they have only about twenty-five acres of land.

8425. What is their work principally?—Basket-making, shoe-making, the manufacture of straw cases for bottles, and a little weaving.

8426. Do some of the men learn a trade there?—Sometimes they will put a new man to a trade if he wants it or shows any aptitude for it, but as a rule unless a man comes there knowing a trade they put him to agricultural work, or something which can be learnt at once.

8427. They do not profess to teach trades?—No, they do not profess to teach trades.

8428. (Mr. Davy.) I see you mention in your report the poorhouse for the city of Berne: is that properly a labour colony?—Well, it is really a workhouse, but they have 250 acres of land. It is a workhouse with the power of enforcement of compulsory detention, and it impressed me very unfavourably in many respects. There was extraordinary mixing of the sexes for one thing, such as in my opinion was certain to lead to irregularities, and as a matter of fact had done so. There were men and women workers in the fields, imbeciles were mixed up with sane people; old and young were together; in fact the classification was that of an English workhouse of thirty years ago perhaps, but certainly not of a good English workhouse of to-day.

8429. The compulsory detention is for a certain period?—In some cases they can discharge themselves, but in others it is absolute detention till they are allowed to go by their Gemeinde who send them there.

8430. Besides the colonies that you have mentioned in the report, there is another one, I think, which you have visited?—Yes; this year I was in Italy, and I took occasion in coming back to go to the Lucerne forced labour colony. It is just on the outskirts of Lucerne. There are two farms, one for men and one for women. As regards the farm for women, there is very little land there, but the women do some work on that. The farm for men has about 220 acres, and it belongs to the canton. There were about sixty men there. All were “administratives” sent by the district councils; there were no criminals, the men were sent there for work-shyness, drunkenness, neglect of families, and so on. A good many men, the officials said, came there repeatedly, thus shewing that they were not permanently reformed, but on the other hand they told me, as at the other places, that in a good many cases people only came once, and never came there again, and that in the course of their year, or whatever might be their term, they had seemed to get into the habit of working. All expenses included, the cost is about £14 a head. The sentences are mostly from six months to two years, but very few are under a year. They have an excellent market close at hand where there is a great demand for all sorts of things. They have a number of cows and they sell milk in Lucerne. Punishment is by half rations and confinement to cells. The men I noticed seemed to look very well. As to the work there, they do a good deal of stone crushing for mason’s work, and building; they bring the stones from the river Emme that runs near by. One-third of the whole number had been there before; the other two-thirds were there for the first time. Many of them do come more than once, a very few even seven or eight times, but the majority were there for the first time. There were various industries for the winter, including the manufacture of straw cases for bottles, and of paper bags—a great deal of the latter, because that is an absolutely unskilled industry, and seems to do very well. Then I got some notes of the operation of the Inter-cantonal Union as working in the canton of Lucerne. In that canton they have twenty-five stations. The wayfarers get for dinner, soup and bread; for breakfast and supper, coffee and bread or soup and bread. Relief is given only to those who (1) have proper papers; (2) can prove that they have worked somewhere within the last three months. Relief is refused to those who (a) are drunkards; (b) have refused suitable work offered to them; (c) have been in work within six days; (d) have been relieved at the same station within six months; and (e) are without the book issued by the union. Any station may in a particular case require performance of a task in return for the food and lodging given, but it is very rarely that this is exacted; sometimes if they have any doubt as to a man being really in search of employment they require him to work, but very seldom.

8431. How do they lodge these men?—Pretty roughly; it varies a good deal. Sometimes it is an old building; they do not build for the purpose much, and the lodging is rough.

8432. Now speaking generally as to these forced labour colonies, do you think that the intelligent Swiss are in favour of them?—I think there is no doubt as to that.

8433. Did you hear any complaint of competition with independent merchants?—No; I asked that nearly everywhere, and they said there was plenty of market for everything, and they took care to sell only at current rates.

8434. The forced colonies are supplemented by voluntary colonies?—By voluntary colonies, of which at the time I made this report there were only two instances. Now, I believe a third has been started. The one that I visited was at Herdern, right up in North Switzerland, close by the Lake of Constance. It was an old monastery, a most picturesque place with vineyards and that sort of thing. I had a long talk with Herr Blumer-Egloff, president of the society, which established and now maintains the colony, and he was very frank. I said, “Well, do you make them any better—do you get them off the road finally?” “Oh, no,” he said, “we cannot make any attempt to reform them; we create some more employment for men who say they cannot get any, but that is all; we do not profess to do them any good. But we try to preach to them a little, and exercise a good influence over them.” You see the expenses are very considerable indeed; the number ranges from fifty to seventy-five, averaging, let us say, about sixty, and the expenses for the year 1902 amounted to over £3,000—that is £50 a head; and deducting from that between £4 and £5 a head for allowances to colonists, allowances on leaving, and so on, it is clear that the place is only maintained at considerable expense; although the colony gets all their work for nothing, it costs £50 a head to keep them.

8435. As much as it does in the labour colonies in England?—I suppose so.

8436. To what do you attribute the diminution in mendicity in Switzerland?—Well, I have summarised it here by saying “First, to the very stringent measures adopted by the police for repressing it; secondly, to the steps taken against the work-shy; and, thirdly, to the special facilities afforded to those travelling in genuine search of employment.” Then, as a rule, labour is very much in demand in Switzerland during most of the year, and that fact tends in the same direction. Then the connection of the Swiss with his own district is much closer and more intimate than that of the English labourer; he has burgher rights and privileges, and the council look after him during all his career, and regard him as a person for whom they are responsible; as they undertake to provide for him in his old age, so they adopt means to prevent his being a burden to them owing to laziness or misconduct. If he is an habitual drinker or work-shy, they send him for a lengthened term to an institution where he is cut off from drink and compelled to work. They know all about him, and therefore there is less chance of injustice being done. Then the difficulty of identification, which is so prominent in England, does not exist under a system which in Switzerland, as elsewhere on the Continent, requires both papers of origin and certificates of discharge from employment; and then another thing is, he may become a free citizen again if he can give proof of reform by doing good work.

8437. So that there are a good many differences between Switzerland and England?—Considerable differences.

8438. And those differences would probably make the establishment of colonies a great deal easier in Switzerland than here?—Yes, I suppose so.

8439. And the small size of the country would be another factor operating in the same direction?—Yes. Everything in England is done at such enormous expense. Things are done here on such a lavish scale; whether it is spending money subscribed by the charitable, or money raised from the rates or raised from the taxes, there are so many people whose great object seems to be to spend as much as possible, and to do the work in as costly a way as possible. In Switzerland they are a thrifty nation, and I think they are thrifty in spending public money just as much as they are in spending their own money.

8440. You have visited, as I understand, a colony in England run somewhat on the lines of the voluntary Swiss colonies?—Yes, I visited the German colony at Munden in Hertfordshire, which has been established by some rich Germans. The aim is to give to poor German-speaking men out of place, irrespective of religion and position, provided they are willing and able to work, lodging, board and clothing in return for work under Christian influence, until the individual has either found a place elsewhere, or has done enough work to pay for his journey home. Those are the words in which they state the object of their colony. It was opened in 1900, mainly by the liberality of Baron von Schröder, who has, I think, given altogether something like £40,000 to it, and it has been subscribed to also by many other rich Germans in London. Now they are forming a large fund to which Germans are contributing with the utmost liberality, and they hope to get an endowment for it. They say in their report:—"Through this colony every excuse that a man cannot find work is taken away from him." It is entirely for German-speaking people, and any German-speaking person practically is admitted. The mission of the colony is not to give alms or money, but to help by affording opportunity to work. The colony consists of 300 acres of suitable land, freehold, which they have got in Hertfordshire. Part of this is occupied by buildings, poultry runs, and duck ponds, willow beds, gravel pit, fruit and vegetable gardens, and wood. There are thirty acres of meadow, and the remainder is sown or planted with wheat, rye, barley, oats, potatoes, beans and swedes. A basket weaving shop on a large scale has been erected, with a carpenter's shop and smithy, and there are large well-ventilated stables, cow-sheds and piggeries, also small shops for tailoring and shoemaking, a bakehouse, laundry and dairy. In all these departments, and in cleaning the house, work is found, but the great majority of the men are employed out of doors, the stronger men in digging gravel, breaking flints, and making roads, the weaker in the garden or looking after the poultry. There are sixteen cart horses and about the same number of milch cows, and useful experience has been gained by intending emigrants in looking after them. Beds were at first provided for 80 men, 64 of them in one large dormitory divided into sixteen cubicles. More recently they have provided for about 20 more, and I think some further extension is contemplated. There is at present accommodation for about 100 men, and at the end of 1904 there were 80 men there. They keep very full particulars as to the previous careers of the men whom they receive, even down to what they landed with in England. For instance, there were 601 men received in 1904, the average stay being about seven weeks; of that total number, 91 came to England entirely without means, 185 with less than 20s., 213 with less than £5—between 20s. and £5—93 with between £5 and £25, 14 with between £25 and £50, and 5 with over £50. That I only mention as showing the thoroughness with which they go into the previous careers of the men, as far as they can ascertain them.

8441. (Chairman.) I take it for granted the men are quite destitute when they are taken in?—Yes, quite destitute. Then as to the financial position, the colony is not by any means self-supporting, or anything approaching self-supporting. It is rather costly. For ten weeks' work a man receives not only board and lodging, but, if necessary, clothing, and a sovereign is spent on his return journey to Germany, or, as the case may be, to Austria or Switzerland, because they take German-speaking men, not only Germans; and he is given tokens to the value of 1½d. a night during his stay—nothing in money, but tokens equal to 1½d. which he may exchange for tobacco and little luxuries of various sorts—not drinks; or he may save them up, and have their equivalent in money on discharge. The colony does not promise an individual anything beyond board and lodging in return for his work, and he signs an undertaking that he is willing to work on these terms, to obey orders, and to abstain from intoxicating drinks. It is agreed, however, with the German and Austrian Consuls that the cost of repatriation will be borne by the colony itself—by the funds of this institution. Short services of prayer and song are held every morning and evening, with Bible classes. Various sects are received—very few Jews, mostly either Protestants or Catholics—but no religious difficulty has occurred; and all seem to get on very well together. Men who have absconded are not refused readmittance, but railway fare is not paid for them more than once. Registers of clothing and other particulars are kept, and the whole establishment seems to be very well organised. I have had the advantage of receiving some notes on the colony which were made by a brother Inspector, Mr. Court; he was very well impressed with it, as I was myself. There is, however, no attempt to run it on exceptionally economical lines. There is good management, but they have very ample funds, and the one thing is to take away the excuse from any German-speaking person who comes to London that he cannot get work if he wants work. If he cannot get work, he may go there.

8442. But every man when he enters is supposed, at any rate, to be a destitute man?—He must be destitute, and they make very minute inquiries as to him and his career. They apparently are doing a very useful work for this limited number of people.

8443. Do you know whether they are careful about the admission of convicts there?—Some of the men have been in prison; it does not debar their admission.

8444. It is not an absolute bar?—Not an absolute bar, but I think that, as a rule, there are scarcely any of this class there.

8445. Probably they would have been only slight offences?—Yes. A large number of German waiters were out of work last year; at one time they had great pressure; it was said that 1,200 German waiters were out of work in London, and some of these (of course, only a very small proportion) came to the colony. Somehow or other, whether because people had not so much money as usual to spend, or for whatever reason it was, the restaurant trade was in a bad way, and waiter after waiter was turned away.

8446. (Mr. Davy.) I see they admitted 60 waiters in 1904?—Yes.

8447. This is rather interesting; the labourers without a settled calling were 40 in 1904; the house servants were 33; pedlars, or people who sold things, were 127; and waiters 60; and there were 25 sailors?—Those are practically all the main trades.

8448. (Chairman.) Of course, hardly any labourers, so-called, cross over from Germany?—No.

8449. (Mr. Simpson.) Just one or two questions about the Swiss Inter-cantonal Union; it is a completely unofficial society, is it not?—Completely.

8450. It is not in any way recognised in the statutes dealing with vagrancy; it has not been given any special character?—It is recognised to this extent, that it is given one or two privileges by the Government. For instance, it has a privilege, I think, of free postage, and one or two other privileges of that kind, but it is, you may say, a voluntary society with certain privileges from the Federal and Cantonal Governments.

8451. If you took that society that runs the way-ticket system in Gloucestershire, and developed it so as to cover the whole country, would it not correspond very much to the Inter-cantonal Union?—Well, the

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 1905.

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 1905.

Gloucestershire society, I take it, is a blend of casual ward relief and a mid-day meal.

8452. The mid-day meal is practically all it provides ? —Yes. The plan that I ventured to suggest to the Committee as deserving consideration—that of tickets which would enable a man to escape detention, and would let him have only three or four hours at the workhouse if he could prove that he had worked and was certified by the police—that plan is not a plan of way-tickets at all, it is not to control a man's way in the least. As I understand, a man comes to your Gloucestershire society and says, "I want to go by such and such a way; give me a way-ticket, and give me a mid-day meal of bread on condition that I go such and such a way." Well, I do not see the raison d'être of that at all. Why should a man be tied down to a certain route, and why should any tramp who is not a worker at all be allowed a ticket with special privileges ? These people in Switzerland first satisfy themselves by the most stringent inquiries that a man really is a worker, and then they allow him to go wherever he likes; they do not tie him down to go from A to B, and from B to C; he may go from A to Z if he likes.

8453. That is exactly what I was coming to. As I take it, that system of insisting on a particular route is really intended as a means—exceedingly insufficient very likely—but still a means of testing a man's bona fides. The idea of it is that if he tells you the truth about this, the possibility is he is telling you the truth about other matters. Now what I was coming to was this: the necessity for every Swiss having about him his papers was started long before the Inter-cantonal Union ?—Yes, every man has had to have proper credentials.

8454. So far as you know, it has not been affected by the system for suppressing mendicity or vagrancy ?—No.

8455. Does every single person have to have papers ?—Every single person must have papers of origin; I think it is the case that if he sleeps two nights in a place he will have the police coming down on him to say, "Let us have a look at your papers, and see if you are all right."

8456. Well now, suppose a man who starts with independent means, by drink and so on gets rid of all he has by the time he is about thirty; he never has worked before: the only papers, I suppose in that case would be his certificate of origin ?—Yes.

8457. Then again, suppose there is a man, a clerk, we will say, out of a job; do you suppose he would have any certificate of his having worked ?—I think a man only gets such a certificate when he needs it; he would get a certificate for this purpose. I rather think also that every man has a sort of dossier which he carries about with him, and he might have a note made on his papers of having been employed as a clerk.

8458. Then I suppose the local committees of the Inter-cantonal Union as a general rule would not go behind those certificates; they would look at them, and if they seemed in order they would accept them as evidence of the man having worked ?—Yes; but they would take care, if they saw the least hint of a man refusing work that was reasonably suitable for him, that his book should be forfeited, and he would have to look out for himself as best he could.

8459. Do those local committees of the union themselves offer work ?—Not they themselves, but they take care to be in relation with employers of labour, and through the police they get a general knowledge of what is going on. At Locarno, for instance they told me if a man came there they might know of some building works which were going on somewhere near, and they would tell him, "You can go there." If the man refused that work, he would give his explanation as to why he refused it—that it did not suit him or whatever the reason was; then they would say, "Well, there is some work in that vineyard up there"; and then if he refused that, they would look a little more askance at him, and when they had given him one or two chances of this sort they would pack him off to his Gemeinde, whose council would sit upon him to ascertain whether he was work-shy, and then they would or would not send him off to a labour colony.

8460. That is to say, the local committee of the union would confiscate his book and leave him to the tender mercies of the police; they have no powers of dealing with him themselves ?—None at all.

8461. And I suppose it is the local committee that confiscates the book ?—Yes, the local committee.

8462. The local committees are supported entirely by voluntary subscriptions, are they not ?—Subject to what I have said as to getting something from the Federal and Cantonal Governments.

8463. As regards Switzerland this is a very admirable system, no doubt, but one wonders how, if it was started in England or developed from existing material, the local committee would get a sufficient knowledge of a man, when he came to them saying that he had worked in a different part of the country ?—Well, of course you might do it in this way, by saying that a man shall not start with a ticket unless he can shew that he has worked. If a real working man applied (they are very few indeed who want to go on tramp, because there are such lots of ways in which they can get money; but there is a certain proportion in times of special distress), I would let that man go to the police with, if possible, a discharge note from his employer, or, if his employer would not give him a discharge note, the police should take his statement, investigate the accuracy of it, see whether he had worked two or three months, or whatever it was, at such and such a place, and the fact of his having worked should be a start for him to the first of those stations that he wanted to go to.

8464. You do not think there would be any objection to the police going into it in that way ?—I do not know what difficulties it would cause the police. I imagine that the numbers would be very small indeed, and that if a man went to the police station and said: "Here is my discharge note," or "Here is a statement; I want to go in search of work with exemption from detention," it would not be at all difficult for a superintendent of police to make the necessary inquiries and verify his statement.

8465. (Mr. Davy.) And if he did give a wrong story ?—He would be found out at once.

8466. (Mr. Simpson.) You are of opinion, are you not, that uniformity of treatment in the different casual wards is of great importance in dealing with this question ?—I think it is essential, and that in as far as it is possible it should be obtained. Boards of guardians everywhere, even if they do not know what uniformity means, and how far it can be carried out, are all crying out for uniformity.

8467. Do you think there is any real, practical prospect of getting uniformity under the present system at the casual wards, under the different boards of guardians ?—Of course, as a counsel of perfection, the bigger you get your area the better for dealing with vagrancy. The vagrant does not necessarily belong to the union in which he asks for relief, or even to the county in which he asks for relief, and therefore it is a matter for the country at large; such powers and such matters are delegated either to the county authority or to the union authority; I should very much prefer to see it with the county authority.

8468. The present system does not work fairly ?—It is unfair to lots of these unions; you get a little union with a small rateable value between two big towns; I do not think it is necessary for me really to go into that, as you have no doubt had it before you repeatedly. It is very unfair, and it is obvious that the real reason why you have not more outcry about that is because the present system, although bad, is cheap. It would be an enormous advantage if you could get it done by a county authority—by the police. That was put to me in my previous evidence, and I said that I regretted that I had not seen any scheme under which that would be practicable. One or two considerations have since been suggested which seem to me to lessen the difficulties.

8469. Do you think any combination of unions in one county would be practicable, so that you could hand over the casual wards to a combination of unions ?—I do not much believe in a combination of unions. You have already the county council, which is an admirable body; it gets all the best representative men, and is much better than the boards of guardians.

8470. I suppose the standing joint committee, which is a county authority, would equally meet your views?—Yes; and I may add that I should view with great apprehension any attempt to form any more combinations. In the first place a combination means more spending of money, and I do not want to raise the rates; that is a thing I am very much afraid of.

8471. That objection would not apply to the employment of the existing standing joint committee; they would only have to form a new committee for the purpose?—Quite so.

8472. The standing joint committee have under them, as you are no doubt aware, officers who for some purposes are under the county councils. For instance, under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts, and under the Weights and Measures Act?—Quite so.

8473. There are a good number of matters throughout the country under two authorities. Do you think it would be possible to have a system by which the casual wards should be transferred to the standing joint committee, and that where the superintendent of the casual ward is master of the workhouse, he should, for the purpose of casual wards, be under the standing joint committee and for the workhouse under the guardians?—If you could get any scheme of the sort it would be admirable—if you could work it out in detail. There are one or two difficulties that occur to me.

8474. Those are what I want to hear from you?—One is this: there are a great number of unions now in which the casual wards are being very little used; they are not cells, and they are not such as probably any other authority would take over or would regard as reasonably fit for the purpose. If you handed these casual wards over to the county council, they would not be satisfied with them, and they would build tramp wards.

8475. Switzerland is in many ways a country that cannot possibly be imitated by us, because the conditions are so entirely different, but there, as I gather, the relief stations of the Inter-cantonal Union are ordinary houses, and not places built for the purpose?—That is so.

8476. Then again, in their labour colonies, apparently they have not spent money in erecting elaborate buildings. Do you not think our local authorities might be induced to take the view that it is not necessary to start the system on a first-rate basis, but to do it gradually?—I wish people would take that view.

8477. (Mr. Davy.) That view, of course, would have to be urged from Whitehall?—I was looking at some casual wards in London a day or two ago, and it did not seem to me as if thrift was the first object. It was really a gorgeous place, having cost £300 or £400 a bed; and I do not think that economy could have been the first object there. I do not know whether you can encourage people to appreciate the necessity for economy; if you can, well and good; there is nothing I should like better than to see the administration of casual wards transferred to the police, but if you do that, unless we make up our minds, both in Whitehall and in the country, that economy is to take a much higher place than it has done hitherto, I do not believe we shall do any good.

8478. When you gave evidence before, had it occurred to you that it would be possible to rent the wards from the guardians?—No, and that is a consideration that seems to me to be a very important one; that would be a sort of sop to them for one thing.

8479. And also a considerable economy?—No doubt.

8480. Did it also occur to you that conceivably in cases where the number of tramps was very small the workhouse master might be appointed by the standing joint committee ad hoc as constable in charge of the ward?—No, I had not seen any scheme of the sort; I apprehended difficulties in the way of what I consider in itself to be a most desirable thing.

8481. Now with regard to expense; the old magistrates were a singularly economical race of mankind?—Yes, I believe they were; I do not think the rage for bricks and mortar came in until late years.

8482. Do you think the county councils are extravagant in building in the same way as certain East End boards of guardians are?—Some appear to be so; for instance, there are some rather costly buildings in Surrey.

8483. You have in your mind the Surrey lunatic asylums?—Yes, for one thing; but I cannot say whether their costliness has been due to local initiative, or to the requirements of the Lunacy Commissioners.

8484. Are you aware that the standing joint committee are half of them magistrates, and, therefore, probably considerable ratepayers?—Yes.

8485. Do you think that body would be likely to fall into wild extravagance (such as in Hackney, for instance) in raising loans for building new wards?—Oh, they would not do the things the Hackney people do, because in the first place they would be spending their own money, which the Hackney people are not.

8486. Hackney are spending London's money?—Yes, that is a delightful thing for the spenders.

8487. Do you not think there should be some greater check from the Central Authority?—I do not know the policy of the Central Authority, but perhaps their view has been "Our duty is to urge you to do this thing thoroughly well; you have got to pay the cost; it is for you to fight for economy; it is for us to fight for the thing being done properly;" and possibly, the principle of the thing being done properly has sometimes been confused with that of its being done lavishly, and has at any rate prevailed over the principle of economy.

8488. Do you not think that if these vagrants are brought under some uniform system of management, there will be a very large decrease in the numbers?—I suppose so.

8489. A good many would be removed to labour colonies?—Yes. I meant apart from labour colonies.

8490. I am putting to you a system of way-tickets for food, police for general administration?—Not way-tickets, according to me.

8491. Well, food tickets, police supervision, minimum sentences, and cumulative punishment in the case of habituals?—Yes, I think that might have a very great effect indeed.

8492. Do you know any casual wards which might very well be closed now, because they are so little frequented?—Not in my district. I have noticed that in one of the manufacturing districts you have got them all round a centre; there might have been a ring fence, so to speak, including a collection of something like six or eight, all within a short day's march of each other.

8493. So that probably the new buildings might be even less than would appear necessary with the present number of tramps?—Yes, but, of course, your expenses would mainly come in districts where very few tramps are now received, and where you would have, I imagine, to appoint a special man; at present you have a man who is porter, or is doing the workhouse work, who supervises their labour; but if you had to put a special policeman to each to see that they did their labour, then that would be a cost of so much to each place.

8494. It would be better to close such wards, if possible?—Yes, but you cannot do that very well if you get casuals coming, and there are no other wards near.

8495. (Dr. Downes.) Would the expense of housing the casuals under such a system as we have been discussing, be diminished if the labour task were diminished or modified—if it were a mere question of board and lodging to help the man on his way, as under the Swiss system?—I should not like to have a system of mere'y helping a man on his way, irrespective of what sort of man he is; I would only be in favour of helping a man on his way in the case of the very small class who are real workers. Now nine-tenths are not real workers; they are mendicants and loafers.

8496. I am assuming that the applicant for the board and lodging would bring with him some sort of paper?—That I only contemplate as applying to one-tenth of your total number of tramps.

8497. I am assuming the application of the Swiss system?—Yes.

8498. As rendering more easy the question of accommodation?—Yes. If you do not give them a task,

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 1905.

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 1905.

accommodation is rendered rather easier if the numbers do not (as I think they would) hugely increase.

8499. With regard to the Swiss stations, I am not quite sure whether you described the kind of accommodation given, and how it is managed. I am speaking of the Inter-cantonal Union stations?—We'll, it is accommodation that is hired; in some cases it is a very large room with beds all down it, but it is rough accommodation.

8500. Is it managed by a paid officer, or do they pay so much a head to somebody who happens to have a house?—Generally, they pay so much a head to somebody to take the men in.

8501. What distance apart are these stations, as a rule?—Well, it varies very much owing to the lie of the country and so on. There are twenty-five in the whole canton of Lucerne; they are dotted about all over the canton, at distances of, roughly speaking, twelve or fifteen miles.

8502. That is to say, they would be within a fair day's march of each other?—Oh, yes, easily.

8503. With regard to the grant from the Government, are there any conditions attached to it?—No, I think not. I do not understand that there are any conditions at all; it is rather that they make a plea, "We want money; we are doing a good work," and the Government gives them a grant.

8504. Does the Government inspect?—No.

8505. Then with regard to the question of food at the forced labour colonies; I gather that the hours of work are long, and the work is hard?—The work is decidedly hard.

8506. Did the appearance of the people satisfy you as to the sufficiency of their food?—Yes; in fact, having been brought up in the faith as to the necessity of a meat diet, I was rather surprised to find they were able to do so much work on what was mainly a vegetable diet.

8507. I do not know whether you are aware of the recent experiments in that direction in America, which really rather confirm the accuracy of your impression?—No; but these men certainly looked uncommonly well.

8508. Now with regard to the stimulus to work in these places, I see there is a possibility of the remission of the term of detention, and the possibility of a bonus on discharge?—Yes.

8509. There would also be, I take it, the fear of punishment, if they misbehave themselves?—Yes.

8510. Is there any stimulus in the shape of being able to earn any tobacco, or anything of that kind?—No, I think not.

8511. No canteen system?—I think not; I did not observe it.

8512. Is the work done by piecework?—No, they have to work hard under the foremen, but I do not think there is any specified amount which they have to do.

8513. I take it that one stimulus to work is that as the men have to work in gangs each man is rather urged on by his fellows?—Yes.

8514. And he sees the product of his labour; it is not useless labour; that also would have a good influence?—Yes.

8515. Now in a labour colony would you be in favour of a system whereby a man should, as regards food, be put on what may be called the barest diet necessary to maintain him in health, and should be able to earn certain little additions to it as the result of his labour and good conduct: I suggest that that would be a stimulus to work and to good behaviour?—I think it might be so. You want very much to give some inducement to a man to work. I am speaking of a forced labour colony.

8516. When a man is under detention, and you wish to bring out his capacity for work?—You want very much to give him some stimulus to work, and what you suggest might be a means of doing that.

8517. I notice that in the Hertfordshire colony they do have something of that sort; the man has tokens given to him in return for his work?—Yes.

8518. Do you know what staff they have at that colony?—I have no note as to that particular point; and the reports do not seem to give the information.

8519. (Captain Showers.) If a way-ticket or book is forfeited in a particular canton, are all the branches informed of the case, so that a man may not go and get a ticket from another branch?—I should think that would take place, but I am bound to say I did not hear the point raised. Of course if a man had been to a branch at any time, he would have had to produce proof of the place where he had worked.

8520. But a man might, after losing his ticket, go to another place and stop there a certain time and work, and get another ticket?—No, because the Inter-cantonal Union will not give him work; they act as a bureau, and help him to get work, but they do not themselves supply work. If the man did work he would be entitled to get another ticket I imagine.

8521. If you had to verify a man's statement that he had worked at a certain place, it would take a little time?—I suppose so.

8522. What would become of the man during that time?—Well, I suppose he would have to stay the day or two in the casual ward.

8523. Do you not think that the Local Government Board could enforce their regulations as to casual wards in order to secure uniformity?—Well, they could make fresh regulations no doubt. The present regulations allow the authorities to make exceptions on every possible point, and therefore are fatal to uniformity; also there are various alternatives given as to diet, and as long as those exist, and as long as those exceptions are in the Order, you cannot get uniformity. If you have got regulations as to how much stone a man should break—well, in that you cannot get uniformity, because there are stones of all sorts, and you may break them to any size; but it would be possible, as I put it in my evidence before, to establish, not alternative diets, but one diet everywhere, detention for everybody without one of these certificates that I speak of, and as regards work, not so much work, but so many hours' work. In that way you would get the nearest approach to uniformity that I can imagine, apart from the question of the possible transfer to the police.

8524. Would you be in favour of ex-policemen being made workhouse masters?—I have known one or two cases of excellent workhouse masters who have formerly been in the police force. There is an ex-sergeant of police who is one of the best masters I know; but I do not think you could ever control local authorities as to the men whom they should select for that purpose, because of course there are a great many duties which a workhouse master has to perform apart from those of dealing with tramps; and then you want a workhouse master with the right sort of wife.

8525. But he would be a more competent man in dealing with vagrants on account of his experience while in the police force?—Speaking generally, I should say that an ex-policeman makes very often an excellent workhouse master, but the guardians have a free choice in this matter and I do not think you could say to them, "You must appoint nobody but ex-policemen as workhouse masters."

8526. But if, as has been suggested, the casual wards came under the standing joint committee, his appointment might be a saving to the country as regards his pension?—Yes, but I rather fancy there would be an outcry if you made a strict rule that no man was to be appointed unless he had been in the police force. There are a great many other things to be considered; your ex-policeman might not always be the best man for the post, although, ceteris paribus, he would be, no doubt.

8527. Of course the main duty of the police is the prevention and detection of crime, but they have had all sorts of other extraneous duties cast on them: do you not think the addition of the casual wards may be the last straw on the camel's back which may break down the whole system?—I think the camel can bear another straw.

8528. It is the general idea, I think, if a thing has

Mr. H.
Preston-
Thomas.

22 June 1905.

tailed in every other way, to let the police do it?—That is a great compliment to the efficiency of the police.

8529. If you put too much on to the shoulders of the police, the work for which they are really responsible may suffer?—Surely if there are more duties put on, you have a good claim to have more people to fulfil those duties.

8530. Is a workhouse master entitled to a pension?—Yes, after ten years' service, if he is incapacitated owing to ill-health or accident. The ordinary time for service is up to the age of sixty or sixty-five, but if a man has served ten years, and then owing to illness has to leave, he will get a pension.

8531. (Mr. Simpson.) At what time can he claim a pension not on medical grounds?—Not before sixty-five, unless he has already served forty years.

8532. (Chairman.) I should like to know what your view is about the mixing of criminals with other men in labour colonies: would it not be fairer to the non-criminals to put them in a separate labour colony of their own?—No doubt that classification would be better, only that with small numbers to deal with you would be obliged to mix people and get what classification you could.

8533. Do you not think it would be fairer to the men working in the labour colonies to establish two sorts of labour colonies, one for convicts and another for non-convicts?—Certainly, and the Swiss recognise that to some extent; in some of their forced labour colonies they keep the convicted and non-convicted men apart.

8534. The labour colony for convicts might be under the control of the Home Office, and the labour colony for the ordinary habitual tramp might be under local control?—Yes; the latter could be under the county or police authority.

8535. Now with regard to the existing colonies, say the Salvation Army colony, do you think that in the interest of the colonies and of the men there should be inspection by some Government official?—If you inspect, do you not assume a certain responsibility for the management of the colony, and is it not best that these people should be responsible for the colonies maintained by funds which they raise, and managed after their special fashion? I mean, in the Salvation Army, of course, their particular kind of religion enters largely into the question.

8536. But, at any rate, in the case of a colony where a man is detained against his will, there ought to be Government inspection?—Certainly; that makes all the difference. My own view is that detention against a man's will is a matter which should only be carried out by the Central Government, or by the county council or the local authority at any rate, but certainly not by any voluntary society.

8537. In the inebriate homes a man was detained against his will, although it was by his own voluntary act that he originally went there?—Yes, but then he was not exactly compos mentis.

8538. He was supposed to be compos mentis, because unless he had been compos mentis he could not have committed that voluntary act of subjecting himself to detention?—Quite so; at any rate he must have a lucid interval enabling him to sign away his liberty for fear of again losing his senses from drink.

8539. (Mr. Davy.) If a man is compulsorily detained, against his will, for any offence or for habitual vagrancy, your opinion is that the charge should fall upon the State and not upon the rates?—It is a matter of police. I would put the vagrant, if committed for a term, in the same category with other prisoners.

8540. (Mr. Simpson.) You would rather put the forced labour colony in the same category as a prison than in the same category as an inebriate home, a reformatory, or an industrial school?—That is the opinion which I put before the Committee when I had the honour of giving evidence on a previous occasion. May I just mention one other matter which I think may be of interest to you?

8541. (Chairman.) Certainly?—There is one question we have heard a great deal about, and that is with reference to the large number of militiamen who resort to the casual wards on their way to and from the militia training. The guardians have complained very much of this, and a curious case happened the other day at Exeter. Colonel Palk, who commands the 4th Battalion of the Devonshire regiment, wrote to the Exeter guardians to the effect that two men belonging to the battalion were received into the casual ward of the city workhouse on the 20th and 21st May respectively. They showed the master their notice papers, which ordered their appearance at the barracks on 22nd May. Having no place to go to for the nights of the 20th and 21st, they went to the workhouse. On asking the master to be allowed out in order to comply with their notice papers, the master replied that he did not care a— for the notice, militia, or anything else, and that they were to be detained until the legal period. They were accordingly not discharged until the 23rd May, and were consequently late for the assembly of the regiment, and lost their pay. Colonel Palk added that it seemed to him that the master had somewhat overstepped his authority, and he asked if an inquiry could be made into the circumstances. On inquiry by the guardians, the master disclaimed the language attributed to him, and said that one of the men was a regular inmate of the workhouse, having been in and out regularly during the last five years, and finally the guardians said that they saw no reason why an exception should be made if these people came using the workhouse as a halfway house to their training. There have been a very large number of complaints that year after year militiamen do come to the workhouses. Whether the master was judicious in this particular case in not making an exception I do not know; however, he did not and the guardians justified him. That instance shows the difficulty of securing universal detention.

8542. (Mr. Davy.) Or it might show the necessity of a ticket system?—It might show the necessity of a ticket system.

8543. Were the men in uniform?—No. That is a typical case, and I thought it worth while mentioning.

8544. (Chairman.) Supposing the men were honest men, it would be hard on them?—Yes, only I think they got some journey money; in all probability they had spent that in drink before going to the workhouse.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

Tuesday, July 4th, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Mr. C. S. LOCH, D.C.L., called ; and Examined.

Mr. C. S. Loch. 8545. (Chairman.) You are the secretary of the Charity Organisation Society ?—Yes.

4 July 1905. 8546. You have held that office for a long time, I think ?—Since about 1874.

8547. In that time the Society has grown very largely, has it not ?—Oh, yes, it has grown very much.

8548. Now, what is the area of the operations of your Society ?—London is our area, though there are some districts outside that we take in, because they are populous. We also have corresponding societies in many places in England.

8549. Generally speaking, it is the Metropolitan area ?—Yes.

8550. You have something to tell us with regard to the number of vagrants ?—I start with the general proposition that the day count probably in England, all told, is not unlike that in Scotland. I have tried on several occasions to try and work out the statistics of vagrancy with more accuracy ; but I confess it has been rather a question of a careful proportional sum than an actual count. I took the Scottish figures and worked by them as far as I could, and eventually I came to the conclusion that probably it would not be too much to say it is two per 1,000.

8551. (Mr. Davy.) What would two per 1,000 mean ?—It would mean 67,000.

8552. (Chairman.) That is in England and Wales ?—That is in England and Wales ; I have taken it for granted that one way and another, the Scottish figures would hold if we counted all the vagrants that were in prison, and in other places.

8553. Have you gone into the figures for Scotland at all ?—I was interested myself in Scotland, and I made out a chart some time ago, which shows the Scottish and the English figures for begging—the figures of such offences determined summarily. The object of the chart first of all was to show that the figures for vagrancy in Scotland and England marched closely together ; and secondly that the “offences” always followed closely upon the increase of begging ; but the desire to commit for these offences seems to sleep when vagrancy goes down. Later, in England, in the last decade or so, it is quite clear, I think, that vagrancy has far exceeded the increase in the number of these offences determined summarily. It has risen : they, contrary to previous experience, have not risen in its wake, but fallen.

8554. What period does the chart cover ?—It runs from 1858 to 1904. You will see that in the last decade the mean number of vagrant's has gone up very much, but these offences have gone down, and there seems no relation between the two. My own impression very strongly is that since 1893 the law has been much more feebly enforced than it was before, and there is not the same relation now between these offences and actual vagrancy as there used to be.

8555. Perhaps it would be more true, instead of saying offences, to say cases dealt with ?—I mean offences determined summarily.

8556. Did not the cessation of the war have some effect ?—The cessation of the war would no doubt cause an increase of vagrancy.

8557. It has been suggested to us in evidence as one of the principal causes of a great rise of vagrancy at that time ?—Yes, no doubt there was great economic amelioration, so to speak, during the war ; everybody was in work, and just as happened after the old Anglo-French war, then came the great subsidence of demand, so to speak, and the people were out of work.

8558. That would arise, I suppose, more from the fact that people had been employed in work owing to the war, than from the return of soldiers who could not get work at first ?—Oh, no doubt, the unskilled labour of the country would be immensely employed during the war.

8559. You would agree that the increase in vagrancy was caused, not so much by returned soldiers, who could not find work, as by men being thrown out of employment, owing to the lapse of work necessitated by the war ?—Yes, I think so.

8560. It is interesting to have that opinion from you, because some people had an idea that it was the returning soldiers that caused the rise in vagrancy. Now, is it not your experience that considerable provision was made for these men ?—Oh, a great deal ; and of those who eventually took to the road and came into the common lodging-houses and shelters most were really a low class of unskilled labourers, who were disposed to vagrancy and simply reverted to the position they had before.

8561. (Mr. Davy.) As to your chart, do not the Scottish figures include persons in lodging-houses, and so on, while we do not include such cases in our statistics ?—Quite true.

8562. So that reduces the comparative value of the table ?—Yes ; but you must take it that the Scottish return is more complete. The movement of the lines, you will see, goes together, and that shews, I think, that economic causes account for it in the main. One can hardly suppose that by any legislative method, one can prevent an economic cause having a very wide effect.

8563. (Chairman.) Now, with regard to begging and sleeping out, you have the figures for the last ten years ?—Yes, I have worked out these figures, but you may have had similar evidence. The interest of these figures is that you see a great rise about 1895 and 1896, and then again in 1902 and 1903 after the war ; but the figures show a very great disparity of treatment in different counties and places. Take Reading, which is a high road place ; in 1893 you have 20 cases of sleeping out, and 117 begging cases ; they fall until you get to 1895, when you have 103 sleeping out cases and 24 begging cases. And then, contrary to what happens in most other cases, the numbers up to 1903 tail off to 31, which seems only to be accountable either from the fact that the enforcement of the law has prevented people begging there as much as they used to, or from the fact that there is laxity in the administration.

8564. (Mr. Davy.) What were the figures in 1903 ?—In 1903, for Reading, 10 sleeping out and 21 begging. If you take Chester county, for instance, you find at the beginning of that decade 231 sleeping out and 258 begging. If you take the end of the period—1903—it has 281 sleeping out and 911 begging, which is very marked ; and when you take 1896, the figures are 270 and 573, shewing a distinct advance, but nothing like the advance later on in 1902 and 1903.

8565. (Chairman.) Have you any reason to believe that there was an alteration in the manner of dealing with these cases by the magistrates?—No, these figures do not give one any clue, except that one finds sequences which are clearly due to pressure, one would be inclined to think, of vagrancy; but at the same time the treatment of vagrancy, if these figures are at all correct, differs very materially at different places. Dorsetshire, for instance, has had a bread ticket system. Well, I wanted to see what the figures shewed there: they began in the first of these years with 38 sleeping out, and 73 begging; then at the end of the decade, it is 30 sleeping out and 35 begging, and that, it may be, is the effect of the system.

8566. The Dorsetshire system is the giving of tickets by which a man can get a meal of bread at given places?—Yes, that is it, I think; but the places are on the main road, so as to keep the men as far as possible together.

8567. (Mr. Davy.) In effect, they could get the meal at any police station?—Any police station.

8568. Which, of course, keeps the men to certain roads?—Yes.

8569. (Chairman.) Is not this system worked by a mendicancy society; and every subscriber has so many tickets supplied to him?—Yes, these figures seem on the whole to shew that there has been no enormous rise in the latter part of the period, as there has been in some counties.

8570. Do you think the Dorset system has at all stopped begging?—I can only say that there are notices all over the county about it, warning people against giving to beggars; it is thought that it has made a difference. The system has lasted some time. It is not like some other methods, which have only a temporary existence, as a rule.

8571. I meant that kind-hearted people, knowing that these tickets were in existence, might feel less inclined to relieve the beggar than if they thought he had no chance of getting food?—Yes, I am inclined to think that would be so.

8572. You do not know actually it is so?—No, I can only judge by this result, as shown here. The result seems on the whole satisfactory, provided the law is fully enforced.

8573. (Sir William Chance.) When was that system introduced into Dorsetshire?—In the seventies.

8574. Your first figures are twenty years later?—Yes; of course in a sense it is a better check of a system if it has gone on some time, and will produce good results. Shall I take one or two of those other towns?

8575. (Chairman.) Perhaps you would give us the figures for one or two other places?—I will take Derby next; you start the decade at 1893 with 168 begging, and 63 sleeping out, and you end the decade with—or rather you find in the eleventh year, i.e., 1903—269 begging and 178 sleeping out; that shews a considerable increase in the begging and also in the sleeping out. If you take the middle of the period, which is another way of looking at it, the figures for begging in 1897 are 362, and for sleeping out 73; those middle years were in many places marked by a greater strenuousness in the suppression of these offences.

8576. The next is Durham?—Durham county starts in 1893 with 169 begging, and 316 sleeping out; at the end of the decade, begging is 177 instead of 169, while sleeping out is 503 instead of 316. I lay stress myself greatly on the sleeping out; I believe it is one of the most important tests of the careful treatment of vagrancy, and I propose to refer to it again in regard to London. The figures for 1897 are 342 sleeping out and 186 begging. Then taking Gloucestershire, in 1893 the figures are 404 begging and 150 sleeping out. In 1896 they are 429 begging and 187 sleeping out; but in 1903 they are 592 begging and 305 sleeping out, shewing, either that the law is very much better enforced, or that the system of way-tickets which is in force in the county has not worked.

8577. Is not 1903 a year which is rather abnormal with regard to vagrancy?—If we take the years in sequence we find begging is 525 in 1898, 389 in 1899, 396 in 1900, 440 in 1901, 559 in 1902, 592 in 1903.

8578. (Mr. Davy.) Can you give us the figures for sleeping out?—268 in 1898, 229 in 1899, 227 in 1900, 206 in 1901, 276 in 1902, and 305 in 1903. Then after Gloucester I take Huntingdon. I do not know Huntingdonshire myself, but the figures seem to prove either that the law has been so enforced that nobody begs or sleeps out, or that nobody enforces the law, because their figures are 4 begging and 3 sleeping out in 1893, and 3 begging and 3 sleeping out in 1903.

8579. (Sir William Chance.) There is no large town in Huntingdonshire or in its neighbourhood?—No, but even so, it seemed to me that the figures are extremely small.

8580. (Chairman.) I think the North road, the London, York and Edinburgh road, runs through the middle of Huntingdonshire?—It runs through the middle, but the vagrant would not naturally stop in the county.

8581. A number of the vagrants who go along the Great North road are men who would not go to the casual ward, and you would not catch them as beggars or sleepers-out; that may account for the low figures?—That may account for it. The next is Lincolnshire; in 1893 the figures are 1,988 begging and 140 sleeping out. In 1896, the begging is 1,421, a reduction, and the sleeping out is more, 154, but if you go to the end of the period—1903—as in the other cases, the begging is 2,307, and the sleeping out is 242. Well, the same question arises, whether the law is being better enforced. The total number of apprehensions is very large compared with other counties, unless you take quite large and populous ones, like Lancashire.

8582. (Sir William Chance.) Is the law strictly enforced in Lincolnshire?—It has the reputation of being very strict. How high these Lincolnshire figures stand will be noted by comparing them with Lancashire. In 1903 in Lancashire the begging was 2,819, and the sleeping out 2,628; the begging runs nearer to the Lincolnshire figures, but the sleeping out in Lincolnshire is naturally much less. Again, if you take Northumberland, where one would think there would be a great many opportunities for sleeping out, the begging is 297, and the sleeping out 328, in the same year, 1903; these figures tell their own tale. Then with regard to the Metropolitan Police District, I have taken the same decade; in 1893 we find 1,937 begging, 496 sleeping out. Taking 1898 as a middle period, we have 2,491 begging, and 744 sleeping out; then in 1903 we have 3,430 begging, and 485 sleeping out. I draw particular attention to the sleeping out figures, because there is a great fall in them after 1898, and I think myself that here, judging also from what one has seen, the law as to sleeping out has not been properly enforced.

8583. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) This is for London?—Yes. There is a very interesting police return which gives one the figures for these summary offences, and I have worked those out in averages of four years; the average for begging for the four years from 1891 to 1894 inclusive, is 2,211 for the metropolis. From 1895 to 1898, inclusive, the average is 2,156, and from 1899 to 1902, inclusive, it is 2,521. That seems to me to be extremely small.

8584. (Chairman.) You have knowledge of the decisions of the metropolitan magistrates with regard to these cases: now is there anything like uniformity in their action?—I should have said none.

8585. Do they seem to have any settled plan or system with regard to punishment for sleeping out or begging?—I think not. In some cases it seems as if the magistrate took the part almost of the beggar, and let him off; and certainly in the country it often strikes one that that is the case.

8586. In London you would possibly expect to find more uniformity amongst stipendiaries than you would amongst magistrates in the country?—Yes; I have never reduced the question to a statement; I have never made a collection of cases, and so been able to judge. These particular cases are comparatively seldom reported, unless there is something in them that strikes a reporter.

8587. (Mr. Davy.) Is it not within your knowledge that two magistrates sitting in the same court give widely differing sentences?—Yes.

8588. Habitually?—I should have said so.

Mr. C. S.
Loch.

4 July 1905.

Mr. C. S.
Loch.

4 July 1905.

8589. Do you not know cases where one magistrate would give three weeks, and another would give three days?—I think that would be so.

8590. (Chairman.) Speaking generally, there appears to be a considerable variety in the method of dealing with both begging and sleeping out in the metropolitan courts?—Yes.

8591. Now have you any suggestions arising out of these figures?—First of all, it seems to me there is a great deal of importance to be attached to these figures, and that they might be utilised very much more completely in the matter of judicial statistics by an annual report. The inequality of the returns might be the subject of special investigation, as a matter of official routine. Another point is with regard to gipsies. I live in the county of Surrey, where there are a great many commons, and the number of gipsies on these commons is extremely great. I find that the gipsies get a hawkers' license, and they camp on the commons and the children beg. I made inquiries and asked the police what they could do, and they said that if the lord of the manor did not actually give them instructions to stop it, nothing could be done. The gipsies simply stay where they are for three, four and five days, and longer. They take the tops off their carts, and even in the most inclement weather they and their children will stay there. They often push the top of the cart among furze bushes, and use it as other people might use a house boat on the Thames. From all points of view, the sanitary as well as others, it is a most undesirable practice, but, apart from the difficulty I have mentioned, we have no police force sufficient for the purpose of putting an end to it. The gipsies are numerous, and the men and the women alike are difficult to tackle. They say their horses have strayed when they are asked to take their carts away.

8592. (Sir William Chance.) Are you referring specially to Surrey now?—I was referring specially to one part of Surrey that I know.

8593. (Chairman.) As long as they do not beg and the lord of the manor does not object to their being there, there is, I suppose, no means of dealing with them?—That is so. I think they use the commons as a sort of neutral territory contrary to the public good, the neutral territory being a manor in which no special action is taken, and I think it is so serious a question that it would be quite within the limits of good administration to notify the lords of the manor in those cases that they are harbouring a people who otherwise would come under the Vagrancy Act, as having no proper home or abode and sleeping out at nights.

8594. Well, as the law now stands, a policeman has no right to apprehend any of these people, if they do not beg or poach?—Only to remove them for trespass if the lord of the manor wishes them to move. Our chief constable wrote to me: "The matter is entirely one for the lord of the manor, who alone can remove the gipsies from the common. The police, if requested, may be present to prevent a breach of the peace, but they cannot take any active part in the removal of the gipsies."

8595. The policemen are not failing in their duty in not attempting to remove those people, because such action on their part would be ultra vires?—That is what I wanted really to submit to the Committee, that practically by a combination of circumstances the common is used for a new purpose in harbouring hundreds of people who are potential beggars, and are practically the same type as the vagrant to a very large extent.

8596. (Sir William Chance.) The lord of the manor perhaps tolerates their presence because they might do injury to his property and burn his stacks if he moved them?—I think that is quite possible.

8597. If the lord of the manor did not feel himself under that danger, he might be ready to move them on?—I think it is quite likely, but I do not think it affects the particular part that I am speaking of.

8598. (Mr. Davy.) Under the Trespass Act in Scotland the police are enabled to deal with camping out and sleeping in a public place?—What I wanted to suggest was that this is really an important matter from the point of view of vagrancy. I cannot help thinking that the Vagrancy Act, as worded, was intended to cover that kind of case; but in any event I think we want some alteration of the law to sweep these people off what I may call the borders, where they stay, into the common movement of vagrants to be dealt with in the ordinary way.

8599. Without an alteration of the law there would be no power to remove these people?—No.

8600. The lords of the manor would, probably, welcome such an alteration of the law?—I think they would.

8601. (Chairman.) As regards relief of these people, do any of the voluntary societies that you know assist them?—I do not think they give them relief at all. I think that one way or another they are rather well-to-do. I have talked to some of them in former years, and found that the older people came into the town for the winter, or for a comparatively long period, but the others did not; and I think when they came into the town they formed part of the poor of the district, and got whatever was going.

8602. Have you any idea of the numbers of gipsies, taking Surrey alone?—I cannot tell you. I have seen, I should say, twenty families on a single common, and that not a large one.

8603. (Dr. Downes.) What attracts them to that particular common?—The common itself is an attraction; all Surrey is an attraction from this point of view; there is so much space; the women make little basket things and they go round to the better or second-rate houses and try to dispose of them.

8604. That is to say, they have got a market in Surrey; there is plenty of space in other counties?—They have practically a market. They dress up for this, and are all tidy just for this particular task, and the children are all nice, whereas on other days they are dirty.

8605. (Chairman.) Have you any other suggestion at this point?—I want to submit to you what I think is very important—that there ought to be a more stringent Home Office supervision of the apprehension and summary conviction of vagrants; and I would suggest an annual report specially dealing with the question of vagrancy, an official document coming out every year giving all the figures, comparing, if necessary what is done in England with what is done abroad, and giving a full statement of the case in such a way that anybody could read it in half an hour or so.

8606. What Office would you suggest that should come from?—I think that should come from the Home Office as part of the police work.

8607. You do not think the Local Government Board should prepare it?—I looked at it purely from the point of view of the police for the moment, but to me that is an immaterial question; but that there should be a statement like this, setting forth the whole of the issues year after year, I think is very necessary. Then there is one other point I want to refer to, and that is that the figures I have shown you in regard to London prove clearly that the shelter system has not been productive of good as regards the prevention of begging or sleeping out; at any rate, the numbers have gone up in spite of all the shelters.

8608. What is your opinion as regards the shelter system; to begin with, do you think it prevents, or in any way fosters crime?—Well, if it fosters vagrancy, it fosters crime, because the vagrant is in part criminal.

8609. Has your experience of shelters been that criminals meet together there?—I think I can show you in these cases how men leave prisons and use one form of institution and another. I have notes of a large number of cases taken from the centre of London, and I propose to put before you a few of them, from which you will see how these men go in and out of one place and another, so that there is the closest relation between the prison, the shelter, and the casual ward. Here is one case which comes from Reading; the man goes to the City of London infirmary and then to a common lodging-house. Take another case; this man applies to St. Marylebone in the autumn of 1893, he gives the address of a coffee tavern; he has been in the workhouse, he then gets work; he comes to St. James's in 1904, he then is in a common lodging-house; he has been in the Rowton Houses five years, and in the municipal common lodging-house, and elsewhere.

8610. How much has that man worked in the meantime, as far as you can judge?—Well, while he was in the Rowton Houses, he probably had to work enough to pay his way, 6d. a day and so on, but probably he did that without very much trouble.

8611. Now that is a metropolitan vagrant, I suppose?—Yes.

8612. Have you any idea whether that man goes out in fruit-picking time?—It is quite on the cards he would.

8613. Hop-picking or fruit-picking?—Yes, but the chances are he would not do anything very energetic. And here is a case where the man was born in the provinces. He gave addresses, Rowton House, Salvation Army, the Church Army shelter, casual wards; he is an Irishman. Then here is another who played a cornet in the street, and he did very well. His addresses are common lodging-houses, Medland Hall, casual wards, prison twice; and he applied to us in 1901 and 1904.

8614. (Mr. Davy.) Why did he apply to you?—He was referred to us probably from a refuge, or very possibly he came to us of his own accord. We do not always distinguish. Well, here is another man; he was born in Hampshire, and went to Australia where he had a farm, and brought up a family; he had been living in Salvation Army shelters, municipal common lodging-houses, etc.; he had been begging in the streets; he had been in the workhouse and in the infirmary.

8615. What brought that man down to that state?—Drink probably. Then here is another man, a native of India; he is eighteen, been selling papers, sleeping two nights in the streets, has been in the common lodging-houses, and has been sent with a letter to the Church Army. Here is another case; "A young man turned out of a respectable home in the country for drunkenness. He was helped to return (tramped), and got a good situation, but soon lost it through drink and left his home again: was in a Salvation Army workshop for two months, and Rowton House, King's Cross, for several weeks." It shows that these people really know the places. They just go into one and use it, and into another and use it. It is quite clear that they know all about the opportunities afforded them in London; they know about the Church Army, the Salvation Army, Rowton House, and all the rest; they know if they come to London they have five chances for one elsewhere.

8616. Is it not the case that among the vagrant class there is an extraordinary knowledge of locality, and of what is done in the different places to assist them?—Certainly, it is a part of their living.

8617. I mean there is a very widespread knowledge amongst them, not only in the metropolis, but throughout England?—Throughout England. It is extraordinary. There come to us also cases of people who are deficient, and they are most hopeless; they go just in the same way. Here is a man "mentally and morally deficient; common lodging-house; workhouse; Lingfield; prison for stealing clothes." There are women of the same type, who seem to go about as they may. "A woman made constant applications from 1882 to 1901. She gave thirteen addresses for seventeen weeks before applying—generally left in debt. Was in house of charity, infirmary, workhouse, and convalescent home (erratic and unhelpable)." And I have also evidence that sometimes charities appeal to their constituents on the distinct understanding that they are helping non-Londoners. Here is an appeal from a charity in Southwark. "The principals of the numerous firms around us have to support the many organisations in the districts in which they reside, consequently in many cases we only receive small help from them. We are compelled to place our appeals outside London, because we have so many men, women, and children coming from all parts of the country, and we have to help them to a very considerable extent. If we only helped those who were known to us, the misery would be intensified. Poor people coming from the country are helped in preference to Londoners—they may be 'utterly unknown' to us, yet we help them. I feel that we have a certain claim upon the well-to-do classes of all parts of the country."

8618. You say these people have an extraordinary knowledge of what is going on in each district; do you not find that the very slightest benefit serves to turn the whole lot in one direction?—Certainly, the slightest change will make the difference, as I think I can show, of using the casual ward or the shelter.

8619. A slight change in diet, for instance?—Yes. A very slight change in the diet at Oxford is known to have made a very great difference in the vagrancy there.

8620. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Was that at the casual ward?—Yes. I particularly want to draw the Committee's attention to these cases, in relation to the question of ins and outs. I think I showed in the cases mentioned a great many had been in and out of the workhouse or infirmary, and at whatever point one attacks this problem one always comes across the same kind of people. We have made inquiries again and again. In the soup kitchen we often find the same class as we have in the casual ward: sometimes the man is in a refuge, sometimes in a casual ward, and in either case he may be at a soup kitchen.

8621. (Chairman.) What do you mean when you say he is at a soup kitchen?—He has gone there at set hours to get the soup which is given away.

8622. Where would he sleep?—No doubt sometimes at a common lodging-house, or at the workhouse, but very often at a shelter or refuge. I wish to speak as strongly as I can, against the utter futility of the system of indiscriminate shelter. The indiscriminate shelter plays into the hands of the indiscriminate soup kitchen, and the two help to create the pauper: he begins by being in trouble, being vicious or something, and they help him to live just as he is. I feel very strongly that there should be some kind of official control over all these institutions.

8623. Does not the present system very largely contribute to the mixture of criminals and non-criminals, with the natural result that non-criminals may get infected by the others?—Oh, undoubtedly; there is absolutely no classification.

8624. Now, if you had an official inspection of some sort, you might be able by that means to keep the criminals separate from the non-criminals?—Of course you are dealing with a rather difficult thing; but I cannot see myself why, in the public good, all persons who go to these refuges should not be identified by the best possible system, just as you might identify them if they went to a casual ward. I do not think the shelters can plea for any kind of privilege as against the common lodging-houses or the casual wards, on the other side.

8625. How would you identify these men?—I think that everybody going in should be admitted on conditions and might be identifiable by his name and address being taken, and if you like by finger-prints.

8626. I suppose it is very seldom a man goes into one of those places and gives his real name?—No; but I do not think that matters very much; it is the name he is passing by probably; we often find in begging letter-writing at least that a series of names is assumed, but it has a historical interest and serves for verification.

8627. You think there ought to be considerably more supervision of these places than there is?—Yes, personally I should require from each of these institutions an annual report and a financial statement, and I should be inclined to use that information for the annual report, which I should hope would be made by the Home Office. I think that these institutions should not be started without the question—whether they should or should not be started, being submitted to some authority; there ought to be a power of veto, and they ought to be associated with the official system in some way.

8628. That would be through the Metropolitan police, I take it?—Well the question really touches the position of these charities. As you know, we have no Acts dealing with charities, except the Charitable Trusts Acts; and they at present are chiefly useful for providing new schemes for endowed charities, whose purposes are obsolete, and for carrying out some other very important objects; but the voluntary charities stand outside those Acts. I look upon these voluntary institutions as either helpful, or as harmful to the community. If they are to be helpful, they should systematise their work, put it on lines consistent with the public good, co-operate, and report; if they do not do

Mr. C. S. Loch.

4 July 1905.

Mr. C. S. that they are harmful. We ought to alter their status ;
 Lock. I think it is quite fair to take the line that they exist to 4 July 1905. fulfil a public duty, and therefore they ought to submit to some kind of registration and supervision, as I think personally all charities should do.

8629. And inspection ?—And inspection ; for instance, in the matter of mere accounts, we have some trusts, the accounts of which the Charity Commissioners inspect, and it is a very good thing that they should do so ; and so, from this point of view, I think that an inspector, whether it be on the part of the London county council, or some other authority, should in the interests of the community be able to go to all these institutions ; and there should be some annual report from every one of them as parts of one co-operative administration, because, whether they act well or ill, they are dealing with part of the same problem. I think myself the best plan would be to have all these charities registered, to give them a distinct status, and to require them to do their duty.

8630. And have an annual audit ?—Yes, as to the annual accounts.

8631. (Sir William Chance.) You mean all the charities dealing with that particular class ?—I would have the charities classed ; and my idea is that the Charity Commissioners might inquire into them, and that the charitable side of all this public endeavour should be brought within their scope ; that they should make a report with a proper index referring to every charity in every county, and that this report should always be available ; once it was set on foot it would not cost much.

8632. (Mr. Davy.) Why do you want to identify the person who is using the shelter, or the casual ward ?—Because I think the whole of this problem turns on something like an attempt to deal adequately with the cases. If you can identify the man as having had certain assistance, suppose you admit him to a labour colony or any such institution, you know his career, and possibly also his sources of help.

8633. But would you identify a man at a common lodging-house ?—I should not do more as to common lodging-houses than apply the same powers of identification for the night he is in the common lodging-house.

8634. Why would you identify everybody who comes to a common lodging-house ; what is there against these places ?—I think the common lodging-house is probably the most desirable of all the institutions, in this sense ; that they supply the natural form of hotel for people who move about, and for people who have no home it is clearly the best arrangement ; as long as they fulfil the sanitary requirements they do the least harm of all the institutions that deal with this business.

8635. You think it is different with regard to shelters ?—Certainly, because they tend to attract a particular class which do not want them.

8636. And because they give facilities for living without work ?—Yes. It must be remembered that the common lodging-houses exist on a demand ; if there is a business demand for more common lodging-houses, the number will increase ; that may be proved by statistics ; on the other hand in regard to them you are really dealing with a supply that will not expand much beyond the normal economic demand ; whereas, in the case of a shelter you simply create a demand ; there is no kind of economic reciprocity between the two parties—those who supply and those who demand.

8637. (Chairman.) What is your opinion as to the common lodging-houses in London from a sanitary point of view ?—I think they have immensely improved. I have known them at intervals ; I have not visited them lately ; but I have talked to Sir Shirley Murphy about them several times ; and I would suggest that the powers that the London county council now have for annual licensing under their Act of 1902 should be acquired by local authorities in the provinces, and that the same kind of supervision that there is in London should be exercised elsewhere.

8638. So far as your knowledge goes, the London common lodging-houses are fairly decent in the matter of sanitation ?—Yes. I think that the effect of inspection has been enormously for good.

8639. It was suggested to us that in the country the casual ward, as a rule, is a more cleanly place than the common lodging-house ?—Yes.

8640. In the common lodging-house, there is greater warmth, but as a rule it is not unaccompanied by vermin and uncleanness ?—I think that is our own fault ; I think we ought to have treated the common lodging-houses in the country more and more as respectable places, and required of them a higher standard of provision. I think they would make such a provision by degrees for the benefit of their customers.

8641. I think your Society has instituted certain inquiries on the subject of vagrancy ?—Yes. In 1873, we had a very important committee on the subject, of which Mr. Andrew Johnston was chairman, and then a uniform system was urged, and it was said that it was essential the public should be convinced that sufficient provision was made for furnishing the necessities of life to destitute wayfarers. It was thought that the most suitable authorities for administering such a system would be the magistrates acting in agreement with the boards of guardians and the police in every county. This failed no doubt owing to changes in the law, but still, in my opinion, it remains a county business as our committee recommended it to be. They also made a suggestion that for vagrants who had been committed on more than two occasions, there should be founded an industrial home, with some of the restraints of a gaol, but where vagrants could be gradually made to work ; that is what one means by a labour colony, mutatis mutandis.

8642. What committee was that ?—It was a committee of the Charity Organisation Society. That was in 1873. Lord Aberdare was then at the Home Office, and the question was submitted to him by deputation. Nothing very much came of it. Lord Aberdare, then Mr. Bruce, said “he thought that the most practical thing he could do, was to address to the magistrates, where the law had not been carried out, a circular calling attention to what had been done elsewhere, and urging them to adopt an effective system.” Then we have also made some inquiries as to the casual wards. In Wandsworth in October, 1885, our committee were allowed by the guardians to make a systematic visitation of the casual wards with the object of seeing if any of the inmates could be permanently assisted. 1,319 tramps were visited, and only 11 seemed worthy of inquiry ; only one out of these 11 waited for the result of the inquiry. And Mr. Allen, who was afterwards the chairman of the St. Pancras board, and was very interested in trying to help these men, wrote in November, 1885 : “I have been in the habit of inquiring into the circumstances of casuals at the St. Pancras ward with a view of seeing if any were suitable for charitable assistance. Most of the men were single, and frankly confessed that their present position was due to drink or dishonesty—they were content to pass the remainder of their lives in casual wards.” He further states that he has questioned many old casuals as to their reasons for preferring the casual ward to the more comfortable quarters of the workhouse, and has invariably received the answer that liberty, and the chance of something turning up, were infinitely preferable to the confinement of the workhouse. Then in 1887, we made a special investigation at the time when Trafalgar Square was used almost as a shelter. It was arranged to undertake an investigation at the St. Giles casual wards with a view of ascertaining what cases could be effectually assisted, testing the system and making recommendations as to the best method of dealing with London cases. The crowd was too large to admit of adequate investigation ; 42 applicants were selected who appeared most likely to benefit by charitable help, and these were provided for pending inquiry. 65 out of the remainder were asked for references. Out of the 42, only 11 were found to be in any sense helpable. It became clear from the first that the ticket system could not be utilised for dealing with the selected cases ; the men drifted away to distant common lodging-houses, and would not return. The truth was that a large number were too much accustomed to a wandering life to have any desire for other than temporary help. The crowd was artificially created by the tickets ; all who applied for tickets might well have been referred to casual wards. The shelters and refuges were then, and I think one may say, still often are, generally inferior to the casual wards in baths and drying and disinfecting arrangements. Then, in passing, I might mention that in 1889, Mr. William Booth presented a memorial to the Home Secretary petitioning for a subsidy to enable him to provide shelter and food for homeless persons below the market price. The petition was declined. In St. George's, Hanover Square, in 1891, the board of guardians passed the following resolution: "That the casual wards in London have failed to be of assistance to the honest wayfarer, and have tended to perpetuate vagrancy, and they venture to hope that separate homes for casuals would be discontinued at an early date." That has been one view of this question, that there should be a separate arrangement for casuals apart from the Poor Law. Then in 1894, there was a great controversy about the Whitechapel shelters, and our local people took the line that Whitechapel was supplied with paupers, owing to its numberless shelters. The Committee will remember that that statement was challenged again in the present year, and the clerk to the guardians pointed out that, as a matter of fact, not only had the admissions been greatly increased, but that they had actually been obliged to increase their workhouse accommodation because of the number of tramps and paupers who were brought into the district from elsewhere.

8643. Do you know whether there is any task imposed at Whitechapel?—There used to be, I think.

8644. They have no detention, I think?—They may have no detention now, but I think that the difficulty of detention is not an uncommon one; I mean the numbers have increased so much.

8645. If there is an influx to one particular casual ward, it is very often owing to some improvement in food, or less work?—At the time I refer to, the casual ward was very carefully managed. Mr. Vallance was there, and he took a great deal of interest in this work.

8646. So that would not be the cause of it?—No. I have a note on the subject. In 1895 the Whitechapel charity organisation committee conferred with the guardians. The opinion of the guardians was expressed in the following resolution:—"That apart from the injurious results to the district of large incursions of casual poor attracted from all parts of the country by advertised provision of cheap or free shelters, the moral and physical results to the poor themselves are in the opinion of the guardians still more disastrous. No organisation can carry out a work of restoration in perpetually moving crowds of squalid poor, whilst the shelters themselves make more easy an idle, vagrant life, and offer no solution of the problem of labour and relief. The guardians sympathise with any endeavour to inform public opinion in regard to the influence of the system."

8647. (Mr. Davy.) In Whitechapel in 1904 there were 2,000 refusals of admission to the casual wards, which shows that the wards were continually full?—Yes.

8648. At Wandsworth during the year no one was refused admission, and at St. Pancras, Greenwich, and at the Guildford Street wards there was no refusal; these are the wards where they carry out the regulations. It looks as if they do not carry out the regulations as to detention or work at all in Whitechapel?—No. I have the whole correspondence connected with this Whitechapel business which I could let you have, and all the data if it were desired; but the view taken was that these people came upon them like locusts in consequence of what was done by the shelters.

8649. (Chairman.) I think you have something to say as to the King's tent?—Yes, the Church Army established the labour tent in Clare Market, called the King's tent, and from a good source I learnt that three hour's light work there secured a meal and a bed. Parker Street is a municipal common lodging-house, and many of the regular lodgers went to the tent, instead of going to Parker Street; many of them would have been quite able to pay for their beds.

8650. What was the charge at the King's tent?—It was free for work; you do your task, and you get your meal and your bed.

8651. You pay for the bed by the work?—Three hours' task.

8652. What class of work is given?—Wood chopping,

I think. Since these tents were started, I have been informed there has been a considerable reduction in applications from the unemployed homeless classes for assistance from St. Giles's; so that the charity acted like a sponge, and drew the people from other areas.

8653. Now if you had a uniform system in London as regards, say, food, detention and task, you would very largely prevent the excessive influx at certain places and would render the applications generally more regular?—Yes, it would be a great advantage if anything could be done to bring about uniformity in the system, and to bring it under one control. Here is what a friend of mine writes about St. George's, Hanover Square. "The numbers of admissions to St. George's union workhouse from November 1st to the 30th April, 1905, from Salvation Army shelters, Church Army and Newport Market refuge were 128. If one was to include common lodging-houses in St. Margaret's and St. John's, Westminster, you might add an extra 500 or more. In St. George's union workhouse, we have a large number of men who have been in the Army, but men who have been in the Royal Navy number not half-a-dozen. There are many men in the house who are in receipt of Army pensions, the usual pension of 7s. or 8s. 4d. a week. Then again there are some Army Reserve men. There are, however, a good number of men in the house, who are in receipt of Army pensions, but the guardians are unable to fix them. These men come into the house from common lodging-houses, where they pass under an assumed name. They leave their papers at public houses, and just before quarter-day take their discharge—and return again as a rule within the next two or three weeks. The guardians have tried many plans in order to catch these men supposed to be pensioners, but have failed. Last year the guardians engaged some half-dozen detectives to follow these men from the workhouse to post offices where they cashed their orders; even then the men were far too clever, and the guardians only succeeded in getting three men brought before the magistrate—and two were convicted as becoming chargeable to the parish, when they had a sufficiency to maintain themselves. This last experiment was an expensive one, and the guardians did not consider it good enough to try it again. There are many guardians who are of the opinion that if pensioners and Army Reserve men were paid weekly that the workhouses would get rid of these cases." There is a vast amount of other evidence, if you wish to see it, on the way in which these people use the various institutions without any kind of care.

8654. (Sir William Chance.) The guardians were not obliged to admit these men to the workhouse unless they had some settlement?—No, I suppose they were not.

8655. They might have admitted them as casuals?—Yes.

8656. And then probably they would not have come again?—Possibly; I think, however, that, owing to similar reasons, this is a state of things that occurs elsewhere.

8657. (Mr. Davy.) It is an illustration that the too great facilities for lodging are mischievous from the Poor Law point of view?—Quite so.

8658. You would not put the common lodging-houses, where a man pays 5d. or 6d. for a night's lodging, with free shelters?—Oh, no; I thought I made it quite clear that I put the common lodging-houses in quite a different category; but part of our public accommodation is utilised by men who are probably quite of the same class as those that would go to shelters. They would go to common lodging-houses, of course, if they could pay.

8659. I suppose you would say free shelters were always mischievous?—There is only one way in which you can get rid of the misuse of the shelter, and that is by having a thoroughly trained expert in charge, and by causing every case to be thoroughly investigated, and an endeavour made to help the man afterwards. They tried at St. James's in the old days to do this, and we used to say that they might succeed in 5 to 7 per cent. of the cases, and that is very good. I do not believe myself that you could get better results. It is rather a bold statement to make, but taking the gross number of cases I do not believe myself that better results will follow from the elaborate plans which are now sometimes adopted in the way of their going to labour colonies and shelters

Mr. C. S.
Loch.

4 July 1905.

Mr. C. S.
Loch.

4 July 1905.

and all the rest of it; that is to say, you will find, if you will only watch the cases long enough, that they will as a rule subside into their old condition.

8660. Would you agree that a man who habitually uses free shelters becomes hopelessly demoralised?—Yes.

8661. And is as great a mischief as any vagrant?—Yes.

8662. Although he may not commit any offence against the law?—Yes. It is a question whether vagrancy should not be defined as a state of life rather than determined by the fact that some offence has been committed against the law.

8663. You would draw a great distinction between the habitual vagrant and the other?—Yes.

8664. Could not vagrancy be defined as the fact that a man has not attempted to get work within a certain time; that is, that being in a good state of health he has not attempted to get work to occupy himself, and consequently has been living on the public for a certain time?—Yes; I like the German law upon that point, which I think is very effective. They say that anyone may be punished by imprisonment who goes about as a vagrant; that is their first condition; the second category is he who gives way to play, drink or idleness, and so reduces himself to a state in which he has to apply to the authorities for means for the maintenance of himself and those dependent upon him; the third is he who receives public poor relief, but from unwillingness to labour refuses to do work which the authorities have provided, and for which he has sufficient strength; the fourth is he who after the loss of his place, within a period fixed by the authorities, has not found another situation and cannot show that he has used any diligence to find one; and the fifth is the man who cannot maintain those for whose support he is responsible.

8665. (Chairman.) That is a definition of a vagrant?—These are all definitions which come under the vagrancy clauses of the Strafgesetzbuch.

8666. (Mr. Davy.) Do you think that if a man cannot earn a shilling a day he had better be in an institution?—I do not think that one can say that for this reason: it is very difficult to say what these men can earn unless we solve the question quite arbitrarily. When the Casual Poor Act of 1882 was passed, by which the two days' detention came in, there was a great reduction in the number of applicants in the casual wards, and I was told by a very good officer at that time in St. Marylebone that he noticed that it forced the men who were in the common lodging-houses and were in the habit of going to the casual wards, back upon themselves, and that men would do a job or strive to make a living in the streets, who would never do so before. I think that it is only the lowest grades of labour which these men paying their way in the common lodging-house can fairly take; but I think as long as they labour they are entitled to as much respect as those in any other class. This is the ground of my rooted objection to all these charities, that they tempt the man who can do only the lowest grade of labour to give up the only labour by which he can support himself, whereas if you had none of these institutions, but applied to these men the simple rule of destitution in connection with poor law relief, you would find, I think, that they would be doing hundreds of small duties for which there is a market amongst the very poor.

8667. (Chairman.) Your view would be, then, that the shelter system shows the man how to live without doing any work?—Yes. Sir Shirley Murphy's evidence proves that a man can live in London on five shillings a week, on less than a shilling a day.

8668. (Mr. Davy.) But if he cannot earn that amount he must live in a very degraded way?—If he does not earn that five shillings a week at the present moment he becomes a shelter bird, and a soup kitchen bird; but if there were no alternative but the Poor Law and some kind of restrictive administration, I believe he would turn round, and make himself competent for something in a small way, which he does not do now.

8669. A certain proportion would?—Yes.

8670. (Chairman.) What percentage of those people do you consider are honest men who would take work if they could get it; we have had varying estimates from witnesses; Mr. Crooks put the figure at 1 per cent.?—If you look at it from the point of view of taking work and keeping to it, I believe the 1 per cent. would be near the mark. There might be many who would eventually take work, and you might get 3, 4, or even 5 per cent., but it would involve a great expenditure of energy to get the men to go straight and keep to the work. It might be more hopeful with younger men. For general purposes, if it is a question of accepting a clear offer of work, I think the 1 per cent. is the right figure.

8671. Your suggestion is that there should be a somewhat more effective control of institutions for dealing with these persons?—Yes. I think it should include such places as Rowton Houses, because the Rowton Houses are treated by these people just as any other place. The fact that they are a public company, should not, I think, exclude them from being considered and brought in as part of the general organisation for the treatment of these classes.

8672. Do not the Rowton Houses make a rather higher charge?—They charge 6d. a night for lodging; they are of rather a higher class and give very good accommodation indeed.

8673. Then you would have some method of dealing with charities which provide for this class of men?—Yes; I certainly should bring them into some uniformity of method, and I think there might be a system of inspection and of notification for the Church Army, the Salvation Army, and all the other institutions, under certain limiting bye-laws which would prevent injustice. Until you have some mutual arrangements, I do not see how you are to check the constant admission and re-admission of the same cases without any good being done to anyone.

8674. I gathered that at Hadleigh the Salvation Army do not make any difference on admission between a man who was known to be a convicted criminal and a man who perhaps had never broken the law?—I think that is a very bad system. All progress in these matters depends upon discrimination. There is no reason why they should turn a man away because he has been in prison; but discrimination is none the less necessary. The chances are they would have to deal with him in a different way because he had been in prison.

8675. So that if you took men into a home or a colony you would as far as possible separate the convicts from innocent men?—Certainly I should.

8676. Now is that course adopted, do you know, with any of these charitable associations?—I think some take a great deal of trouble to get a good type of men, believing that the others should go to the casual ward or be otherwise provided for. But in the Salvation Army the rule which you have referred to holds. In the Church Army there is a simple task to be done; the men pay their way by the task and there is an end of it. In those cases I do not think you do get the kind of discrimination that is wanted. These institutions, if they exist, ought to be able to carry out a definite part of the treatment of the vagrant, which the official authorities cannot do so well, and unless they do that systematically they must do more harm than good.

8677. Have you considered the question of the establishment of labour colonies?—Yes, I have; I have visited colonies in Germany, and a friend of mine, Mr. Willink, whose evidence, I think, you are going to have, went to Holland on our behalf; and some other friends have been to Belgium.

8678. As far as you know, has the establishment of labour colonies abroad resulted in getting men into working habits?—I do not think so to any very large extent. It seems to me that they approximate to an open-air work-house. In the German colonies there is a large increase in the early winter, and the people leave with the spring. Here is a note now of one of the most recent, March, 1904, and it is the opinion of a man who is connected with the colony of Schaferhof in Holstein, and he says people come four or five times and oftener with a claim for three or four months' stay. Then in the spring they fly back to their old nests like the swallows, and naturally the authorities in the colony cannot be so hard hearted as to keep them away from their old acquaintances.

8679. Those are voluntary cases?—Yes.

8680. Men who enter the colony to get a home for a certain period?—Yes; they are now accepting these men after two applications with a contract for twelve months up to two years, in order to keep them and make something of them, and the speaker says he finds a great advantage in that; that, as long as they stay, at any rate, they work and are clean, but he says on the old system 90 per cent. of the colonists do not improve. They go on as they were before.

8681. Do you know how many of these cases there are?—No; apparently he is rather successful in getting them to come in on these terms, but there are no figures that I have seen of the number who refused. Out of 97 applicants, 47 applied twice and were kept by agreement for two years. As I understand it, if they did refuse they could go elsewhere to another colony. To a considerable extent I presume the clientèle of a colony is comparatively local.

8682. As far as you know, does this kind of colony approximate at all to paying its way?—Oh, no, I think that they support the people in the colony very possibly to a certain extent, but I do not think they are ever paying institutions in the normal acceptance of the words.

8683. Do you know any one colony in Europe that does pay its way?—I think it would be hard to say that absolutely. Perhaps one or two do cover expenses of maintenance, but it is difficult to tell from the accounts. You do not know whether capital expenditure is brought in in any shape or form. There is a short summary of the finances of the various colonies given in the official paper, Der Wanderer.

8684. In these days when there is so large an amount of public opinion in favour of colonies, it would be very satisfactory to know if any colonies approximated to paying their way?—The speaker I have quoted says the amount of heath land that they are able to put into order makes the very greatest difference in the supply of work which they are able to do. I have no doubt that his work is growing to be the work of a large farm, and I think in that sense, with those limitations, it might be said that it pays.

8685. One great advantage of a labour colony is that you would be able to employ a number of men in healthy employment who otherwise would be living an idle life at a heavier cost to the country probably than they cost in the colony?—Yes, that is a justification of the colony. But of course it must be remembered that besides the colonies in Germany there are three different sets of indoor institutions. There are the poorhouses and the workhouses, and there are the correction houses, and in these institutions there are men very like our own workhouse people, very like ins and outs, and people who having once got in there stay for very long periods. So that apart from these colonies there is a system of institutional relief, and it acts very much in the same way, viz., that people remain for long periods.

8686. If you had colonies established in England, say by the State, do you think it would be necessary to have separate divisions or colonies for criminals and for unconvicted men?—There is no doubt that a convicted prisoner who will not keep from crime outside may get along all right in a colony. That is a question more or less for the reorganisation of the present system. When, however, we come to those who are non-convicted, it is difficult to know how we are to get hold of them until at any rate they have had a first sentence, until they have been taken before a magistrate. I do not know whether public opinion would permit an arrangement by which a man sentenced once for begging or sleeping out, or whatever it might be, should be sent to a colony; but unless the sentences are for a comparatively long period it would be perfectly useless. I am inclined to think that all the clauses of the Vagrancy Act as regards vagabondage, the three periods, the short sentence, the six months and the year, should be entirely re-modelled in view of modern needs. I think, too, that in dealing with these cases much would turn on what is known of a man beforehand, if we have a system of identification and the police report on his character. What I say refers to a general labour colony. It would of course be a different matter if, on his first offence, a man was committed to a particular form of labour colony such as a penal colony.

8687. You would be in favour of having as one kind of labour colony one which should be a penal colony?—Yes.

8688. A sort of prison, with a very large amount of outdoor work?—Yes.

8689. You would probably agree that a colony of that sort should be in the hands of the Prison Commissioners, and the Home Office?—Yes.

8690. In the case of other colonies, where men might be committed by order of the magistrates or quarter sessions you would also agree that there should be some supervision and visitation on behalf of the Home Office?—Yes. I should be inclined to require parallel conditions to those now required in the case of an industrial school, that is to say, it might be to all intents and purposes a charitable venture, but really an institution available for the administrative work of the country.

8691. Is not the failure of the present colony system very largely owing to the fact that there is little or no supervision?—It is due partly to that; but also in my opinion there is little or no selection. To my mind a colony is a particular form of assistance in reference to a particular form of difficulty, and strictly, the question should be fully considered whether the man is the right man to send to a colony. In the case of philanthropic colonies, there have been successes in picked cases—comparatively young men, who have been under good supervision; but, when these two things are lacking, again and again it seems to me that the whole business is a mere trifling with the problem.

8692. I take it, on the whole, you are in favour of the experiment of colonies?—Yes, I am in favour of the experiment for criminals; and outside that I am in favour of the experiment on very definite lines with selection. I am not generally in favour of colonies; that is to say, taking them as they are here or anywhere, I think the results have not been sufficient to prove that they ought to be adopted; therefore the parallel of the industrial school really more closely carries out what I think a colony for adults might be.

8393. You would have supervision in that case?—I would have very strict supervision, and I would have very good inspection, and I would require the authority or the school to report on every case.

8694. I should like to have your opinion on one other matter, viz. the length of sentences; do you think that the short sentence of a few days is of the slightest practical use to a vagrant either as a deterrent or a cure?—It is quite impossible that it should be.

8695. What length of sentence would you suggest as the minimum?—Well, the question is from what point of view you consider the offence, and what are the circumstances of the case. If it is a case of habitual vagabondage, and it is really desired to stop it, the sentence must be long; I should say nothing under a year probably would be of any service at all.

8696. That would be in the case of those whom you described as habitual vagrants?—Yes.

8697. But take a man who is convicted of begging or sleeping out; instead of sentencing him to seven days imprisonment his conviction might be recorded, and after, say, three convictions he might be sentenced to a considerably longer term; would you agree to that?—There is that plan of a shorter sentence, we will say a month, followed by a much longer sentence on a recurring offence; but from the point of view of the possibility of doing good, the chances are that most good would be done on the first occasion, and therefore, theoretically at any rate, the man is most likely to benefit if committed for a month, and if he can be kept for longer should he be going on well. The question really is one of enabling him to acquire a new habit, and in a manner no period is sufficiently long that does not enable him to do that, if it is within the bounds of possibility. I think your suggestion would be a great improvement on our present state of affairs; but I should be very much afraid lest the first offence should not come to the knowledge of the magistrate on the second occasion. Theoretically at any rate, I should be rather inclined to commit for a

Mr. C. S.
Loch.

4 July 1905.

Mr. C. S.
Loch.

4 July 1905.

month, and with a possibility of prolonging the period, conditionally on the report.

8698. Then, I take it, in your opinion, a month should be the minimum?—A month should be the minimum certainly; there is no good in any case, I think, with less than a month.

8699. If that could be made universal, do you think it would have good results?—Yes, certainly; I have hoped for a revision of the Vagrancy Act from that point of view. There is another point to consider, that these men often are of a very low type, and unable to look after themselves; they are defective people. I think if that fact comes to light it should be considered in the sentence; I mean it would be quite fair in those cases to treat the man partly as invalided, and partly as criminal, and lengthen out the sentence, if need be, for his own good.

8700. There would have to be strict police supervision and some system of identification?—Yes, certainly; I think that a very great change would have to be made in the matter of registration. We have no registration now of vagrants; and we cannot deal with these people, unless we have the previous information as a matter of course.

8701. There are thousands of those men who are really habitual vagrants?—I think so.

8702. If those men knew that steps were being taken to identify and register them, that might contribute to some extent to their becoming working men, instead of idle men?—Yes. In 1891 the report of a special committee of the Charity Organisation Society was published. It is interesting in one or two ways. (1) About that time it seemed likely there would be a great reduction of vagrancy in London, but since then many shelters and night refuges have been established, and in my opinion they have largely done away with the possibility of any reduction. (2) The committee were anxious to have a differentiation of functions in the various refuges; they thought there might be co-operation to that end, and they thought there might be something like a supervision of the whole system in London. They found, as has been found since, that the accommodation available was larger than would be required, even at the time when there was the greatest agitation for an increase in the number of refuges, and they recommended that some of the existing accommodation should be used for the purpose of small homes for the careful treatment, from a religious and moral point of view, of individuals who, it was thought, might be reclaimed. (3) They also recommended that there should be investigation, as soon as possible, into the condition and antecedents of each applicant for admission to a refuge, with the object of ascertaining whether he could be helped, and what form of assistance was most appropriate to his case. And they also wished, pending investigation, that the applicant should either be received provisionally into the refuge, or be sent on to the casual ward or workhouse. (4) They thought it unwise to fix any period for the ordinary duration of stay at the refuges; the period should rather be adapted to the circumstances of the individual case. A good deal of stress was laid on that point; and they thought that the casual ward system should be amended, that greatly increased powers of detention, in regard to habitual or recurrent cases, should be given, that the casual wards should be retained for the first reception of casual paupers, and that where increased powers of detention were exercised the pauper should be sent on to the workhouse to complete his period of detention. That system might fit in very well with a labour colony system. (5) In the opinion of the committee, no real improvement in the condition of the homeless could be effected, except by co-operation between the poor law and charity, and between the various charitable institutions inter se. And they suggested that there should be a council established in London to (a) arrange with guardians for a systematic visitation of the various casual wards, with the object of picking out helpable cases and referring them to appropriate charitable institutions; (b) secure the proper investigation and treatment of homeless cases; (c) arrange for the inspection of refuges on the lines of the existing inspection of casual wards, for the purpose of detecting ineligible persons, and so preventing them from resorting successively to the various refuges, and to employ one or more inspectors for a similar purpose. An endeavour was made at the time to carry out this scheme on voluntary lines, but some of the societies were not willing to share in the necessary expenses of the proposed organisation, and so the proposal fell through; but the main lines of these suggestions are, I believe, quite applicable at the present moment. They pre-suppose, what I have been submitting to the committee, that there should be some method by which all the refuges should be brought into co-operation, to play their part in a proper treatment of this question.

8703. (Mr. Davy.) Well now, what should you say as regards the casual wards in the country?—Well, to take one instance, I have seen a small casual ward very nicely fitted up and all as it should be, quite insufficient, and there I have found a large number sent on to a common lodging-house, paid for as they passed through. That and other evidence led me to think that there ought to be a single supervising body in each county, and that the supervising body should endeavour to make arrangements sufficient for the purpose along the main roads, and should make some arrangement with the refuges and common lodging-houses, and so on, if these were to be of any service in this common work of dealing with the vagrant.

8704. Do you think uniformity of administration is desirable?—Not absolute uniformity of administration. I think in the main it is, but you may have to make quite different arrangements in a very rural district to what you would make in a crowded district. In that sense, I think there should not be uniformity, but in all the main lines of administration there should be uniformity.

8705. Do you think that uniformity is possible when vagrant wards are administered by 638 boards of guardians?—It is impossible.

8706. Do you think that vagrant wards would be necessary if the police carried out the laws against mendicancy and sleeping out rigidly in each county?—I think if the police carried out the law rigidly, the number of vagrants would go down.

8707. But in any case, you think some sort of refuges would be necessary?—I think so.

8708. And that they should be public refuges maintained by the rates?—Yes; in America they have large charitable refuges, with wood chopping and that kind of thing going on; and these are used systematically. I do not think it matters very much if, for instance, a charitable refuge which could be brought into good lines in a particular place were used, but the refuge must be admitted on certain conditions, and under regular rule and discipline.

8709. And what authority would you suggest?—I should suggest a county authority certainly for the management of vagrancy.

8710. Nothing less than a county authority?—No, I think not.

8711. Well, then, what would you suggest with reference to sentences for vagrancy?—With regard to that my general view is that there should be a sentence on report, that is to say, suppose it were a month it might be continued on report for two or three months, or even more, with a view to the prevention of crime.

8712. You mean in an ordinary prison?—No, I am thinking of a labour colony.

8713. But you would not send a man to a labour colony for a first offence, would you?—No. I am taking for granted that on the first offence, the man would be merely cautioned; if he were committed, it would be for a short period, whatever was considered possible according to the law of the day. Certainly it ought not to be less than a fortnight; as I have said, a month would be a good time for a first offence; and, if the system of registration and identification is good enough, it seems to me that what I have suggested would come in on the second offence.

8714. And after a certain number of offences, the labour colony?—Yes.

8715. On an indefinite sentence?—I think, if the labour colony is to be effective, it must come in rather early, otherwise the man will get worse after each sentence :

the truth is, if the labour colony is to be in any sense remedial, the sooner he gets into it for something like an indefinite sentence, the better it is for him.

8716. Have you any information with regard to any remedial labour colony—any labour colony which is successful in reforming vagrants?—No.

8717. Is not the whole of your information against the possibility?—Yes. On the other hand, I think, judging from what I have seen of individual cases, if the man is young and cared for properly, he has a good chance, but that is not saying that the colony system worked in this way would, in itself, be largely remedial. I think in particular cases it should be comparatively easy to get boys off all right.

8718. It would probably be a deterrent?—It would be certainly a deterrent for the rest.

8719. You said there was a class of vagrant who is weak-minded; that is probably a numerous class?—I think that is so.

8720. What should you do with old vagrants who travel to their own injury?—I think that is one of the standing difficulties in dealing with this question, as has been proved in France, and it raises the very troublesome problem of the relation of this kind of vagrancy to poor relief. It almost comes to it, that if these people are vagrants, they must be dealt with somehow in that capacity; and in that case again it seems that you are driven to have a variety of colonies instead of a common prison or penal colony for the whole class; or else these old vagrants should be dealt with in some other manner altogether.

8721. Would you approve of compulsory detention in workhouses for those cases?—In long standing cases I should approve of compulsory detention, but whether this should be in workhouses as they are now, or elsewhere, is another question.

8722. Take the common case of an old woman who is walking about footsore; it is common enough, is it not?—Yes.

8723. What would you do with her?—For a first offence, I should be inclined to sentence for a month, and that would be really only a sentence giving a certain amount of hardish labour, and enabling the people to find out who she was and all about her, and if she came again there ought to be a good dossier to show what her conditions were.

8724. But it is no use making enquiries unless you can do something at the end of it, is it?—No.

8725. Some form of segregation would be necessary?—Absolutely.

8726. Are you of opinion that individual tramps should be segregated?—In this sense, I should not let the habitual tramp and the young fellow mix.

8727. Now, relief to tramps is not at present very costly?—No.

8728. They are a class that do not commit violent crime, or beg or steal much?—I do not know to what extent.

8729. Are they such an evil that it is necessary for the State to interfere and lock them up?—I think there are points on which we can improve our system; but I do not believe myself in any attempt whatever to lock up the whole number, and try as it were to scavenge them out of the population; I think such an undertaking is not reasonable.

8730. You think that no tramps should be locked up, except under a judicial sentence?—Yes.

8731. That judicial sentence should be for a definite offence?—Yes.

8732. Which might be habitual vagrancy?—Which might be habitual vagrancy; that is what I was going to say.

8733. Which might be made an offence?—Yes.

8734. In that way you would segregate a certain number of them?—Yes.

8735. And that might be a deterrent to the rest?—That is it.

8736. You do not approve of sweeping the streets into labour colonies?—No, not at all.

8737. You think that would be impracticable?—That is impracticable.

8738. Do you realise that any establishment of this sort of quasi prison would be expensive?—Very, I should think.

8739. I think that Pastor Bodelschwingh estimated that every man in a labour colony in Germany costs about £9 a year?—I think so.

8740. The cost in England would not be less, would it?—No.

8741. The German buildings are very cheap and homely?—Absolutely.

8742. You have referred to the French system; have you anything more to say about that?—With regard to the French system, I do not know how far the Committee have had the matter before them; but in the French law, the wrong done by vagrancy is a délit—an infraction of the law punishable by correction—and the penalty is committal to a house of correction, to be there employed on one of the kinds of work there furnished according to the delinquent's choice; the time is fourteen days at least, six years at most. The produce of the work is divided into three parts—one for the expenses of the house, one to give the delinquent some comforts (adoucissements) if he desires them—one as a reserve fund for him when he goes out. In certain circumstances the tribunal may deprive the delinquent of civil and family rights, e.g., the right of voting, the eligibility for election, or for holding any public office or employment, of bearing arms, of vote “in the deliberations of the family,” of being guardian except in the case of his own children and on the decision of his family only, etc. There are special penalties for recidivists. Vagabondage is a délit. Vagabonds or gens sans aveu (i.e., literally lordless men, men in vassalage to no one, l'homme qui n'a ni feu ni lieu—the man who has neither hearth nor home) are those who have no certain abode or means of subsistence, and who do not habitually exercise any trade or calling. Persons legally pronounced to be vagabonds are ipso facto punishable by three to six months' imprisonment. But if they are under sixteen years of age they are placed under police supervision till twenty, unless before that age they join the army or navy. So as to mendicity: every person who has been found begging in a place in which there is a public institution organised for the prevention of mendicity is punishable by three to six months' imprisonment, and thereafter will be taken to the dépôt de mendicité. Where there are no such institutions authorised, beggars are punishable by imprisonment of from one to three months. If they are arrested outside the canton of their residence, they are so punishable for from six months to two years. The history of the matter is this, that those who begged were so often in a crippled and invalided condition that when they were convicted and brought into the dépôts, they crowded out the vagrants proper. The dépôts, therefore, became, instead of dépôts de mendicité properly speaking, dépôts of miscellaneous poor, not unlike those of our normal workhouse. Consequently in recent years circulars have been issued with a view to finding out whether the local authorities were inclined to continue the dépôts. In many places in which they had this system of dépôts the opinion was expressed that it was as well to continue it. But the opinion was clearly expressed that the connection between relief and the supply of work, the right to relief, and the co-relative right to employment was quite unreal. The real question was said to be not that; but whether there was destitution and public means for meeting it. Thus professional mendicancy could be dealt with on its demerits, apart from any question of relief. This I think is rather important. The subject is now being discussed very much from the point of view of a problem of providing employment. I believe that view is wrong. Really in most, or at least very many instances, the question is one of defective or criminal instinct on the part of those who are offenders, and it will not be met by merely providing employment, in a colony, or in any other way. The people in these dépôts are divided now into two parts; some are reclus and have been committed; and of 1,237 of these (31 Dec. 1886) 361 or 29 per cent. were récidivistes, who come back again: the other part consisted of the hospitalisés. Of the 4,152 hospitalisés 1,523

Mr. C. S.
Lock.

4 July 1905.

Mr. C. S.
Loch.
4 July 1905.

came from the departments which had dépôts, and 866 from associated departments, which had made arrangement for their reception. I have particulars as to the work and the money paid, and so on. After three months in industrial work, a man, a reclus, may earn fcs. 36-69, a woman fcs. 8-28; as hospitalisé a man may earn fcs. 10-71, and a woman fcs. 5-37. There are other standards of payment, if they are doing agricultural work. Their stay depends on the decision of the administration. By an old arrangement they should be detained until they are made competent to earn their subsistence by their labour, and at the least for a year. As a rule now, according to the decree of the prefect, the stay is fifteen days, a month, two months, and this cannot be otherwise "avec le mélange des reclus et des hospitalisés." The latter remain for years and absorb the resources which would have permitted reclus to stay at least a year—to become capable of earning their livelihood. So the system has broken down; the work is light, the organisation defective, the occupation most elementary appearing not to go much beyond the picking of oakum, the sorting of rags, and so on.

8743. Is that what is called the "La Chalmelle" system?—No, that is not the "La Chalmelle" system, that is the old dépôt de mendicité. M. Monod, the head of the French administration says of the method as it now works:—"Un individu qui sort du dépôt est rejeté dans la société aussi pauvre et souvent moins bien qu'il y était entré." It is interesting to find that at first the scheme was one for continuous, and, if possible, remedial treatment. Allowed to become a relief system for any who begged, old as well as young, infirm as well as able-bodied, it broke down. And the truth is that, unless the able-bodied vagrant is dealt with specially and separately, directly you get to this length of sentence, the machinery breaks down with the extreme pressure of the work put upon it.

8744. But would not that be so with the case of indefinite sentences?—I think that is the great difficulty with indefinite sentences.

8745. Because, if you keep a man until he is fit for work, you may keep him for ever?—Absolutely, that is so with the indefinite sentence in the free unlimited manner in which it is often spoken of; that is hardly feasible, at least in my view. What you can do is to have a man convicted for a month under probation and report from month to month, and you can say it is no use keeping you after this month, it is good that you should go, at least from this institution or colony.

8746. Are you aware that in Belgium there is a considerable desire expressed that the sentence should be longer, that seven years is not long enough?—Yes, I heard that; it seems to me many of those sentences logically would be lifers.

8747. Would it not come to that in the case of a segregated tramp who is irreclaimable?—It would.

8748. It is the logical outcome?—It is the logical outcome of it, unless you adopt the plan of saying, "I will go so far and see what will happen." Then it is a matter of observation month by month, and it is determinable from quite a different standpoint, the man not rallying to the treatment of the colony to which he has been sent.

8749. In Germany, is there not a desire that these voluntary colonies should have a compulsory power of detention in certain cases?—That has been discussed several times, I understand. Pastor Bodelschwingh's view is that they should be quite free to do as they wish, and he would be against it; but I do not know how far that is an exceptional view or not.

8750. (Mr. Simpson.) Are you clear that the counties where they do not prosecute for sleeping out and begging ought to be brought up to the level of the counties where they do that more frequently?—Yes, I think that they ought to be brought up; I think that the law against sleeping out ought to be strictly enforced.

8751. But you are aware that there is a great difference of opinion among magistrates on that point?—It is that difference, I think, that spoils our administration.

8752. If the magistrates in any district discharge the vagrants brought before them, on condition that they promise to get out of that particular district, you cannot expect the police to go on prosecuting?—No, but I think the circumstances of such cases should be reported to the Home Office.

8753. But at the Home Office we could not send these cases to prison?—No, but suppose you simply used them as statistics, you could then on that ground found a very strong report, showing the great inconvenience of handling the problem in different ways in different places.

8754. Is it not practically admitted that the variety of opinion between individual magistrates is so great that the variety of practice can scarcely be exaggerated; the real problem is, how are you to get them of the same opinion?—The first question is the nature of the provisions of the Act. I am not at all sure that an Act might not be better drawn than the Vagrancy Act for all these purposes. The second question is as to the application of the Act as it might be redrawn, and in regard to that a circular from the Home Office, handling the subject afresh might have great influence.

8755. And urging that offences of vagrancy should really be dealt with on uniform lines?—Yes, and suggesting how it might be done by reference to cases.

8756. Do you not think the difficulty is that magistrates feel it does no good sending a beggar to prison?—I think if the Act were altered the term of sentence could be altered too; and it would be a very important factor if it were a sentence of a month under particular supervision; I believe everybody is out of heart with the present system.

8757. I am afraid there are a good number of magistrates who are not yet out of heart with it?—Then the new Act would be the better.

8758. In the way of fixing a minimum?—Yes.

8759. Suppose the Act also gave power to send vagrants for a prolonged period to a labour colony, do you think that would help the magistrates in coming to a uniform administration of the law?—I think so, if the dossier of the vagrant could be sufficiently perfect. Where I fear the difficulty would lie would be in the information as to past sentences not being forthcoming, and it requires a very elaborate system of identification, accepted and adopted throughout the country, to get the results we want.

8760. Have you seen anything of the finger-print system?—Only as a matter of curiosity; I have taken for granted that that system would be applied.

8761. Under it there would be very little difficulty in making the dossier of the vagrant?—That certainly should be done.

8762. At present it is only done for criminals?—But I do not see why it should not be done for vagrants and, indeed, in certain instances, in the case of inmates of refuges.

8763. In the case of people who make habitual use of casual wards is there any reason why they should not have their finger-prints registered?—No; that is what I mean.

8764. Now, if there were power to send vagrants to a labour colony for detention, would you be in favour of the justices in petty sessions sending them to the colony, or would you have the case remitted to quarter sessions to be dealt with?—I should be inclined to say justices in petty sessions. It depends really on the extent to which the scheme is carried out; but the people who know the case would very likely be the best people to deal with it.

8765. But do you not think that the vagrant would often be a man who would not be known in that particular district where he is arrested?—Yes.

8766. Do you not think there would be more knowledge at the county headquarters than there would be at the petty sessions?—I was taking it for granted that whatever information there was would be available at either place, and I think that quick treatment, not a long delay before sentence, is very desirable.

8767. Do you think if, under the present incorrigible rogue system, quarter sessions had power to substitute a term of detention in the labour colony for imprisonment, that would be a good thing?—Yes, I think it would, and I think it is quite possible that in particular cases imprisonment and labour colony together might be a good thing.

8768. From the time the man is committed by petty sessions till the quarter sessions he is under hard labour, so in many cases the quarter sessions might feel he had had enough prison, and it would be well to try the labour colony?—Yes.

8769. And that interval would afford an opportunity of getting up the man's dossier?—Yes, it would. My general feeling about these men is that it is not the many sentences that should make the difference. If you could catch a man comparatively early, you would give him his best chance by sentencing him for a year; we say, "incorrigible" for a year; but I am rather inclined to say, "corrigible" for a year.

8770. There is a good deal to be said in favour of the detention of the incorrigible, simply from the point of view that it keeps him from being a nuisance to the public?—Yes, from that point of view; but, as far as I understand it from the history of cases, where character and incorrigibility have been bad they will continue bad; and that is the reason why men of this type at last come to having to be kept for ever; so I think it is very much more important to consider the first sentence or two, and to arrange others with a view to the life of the man thereafter, than to wait until the man has become habitual.

8771. When he is an habitual you feel that anything you do will make no difference to him?—Yes.

8772. (Mr. Davy.) "Corrigible" for a year, incorrigible for life?—That seems to me to be logically correct.

8773. (Mr. Simpson.) But you would have to be very careful with the corrigible people; the year should not mainly be punitive?—I think the main point all through would be whether the man can acquire a good habit.

8774. (Mr. Davy.) With regard to such cases, the colonies of the voluntary societies might be useful?—Yes.

8775. Combined with individual treatment?—If the conditions are such as are investigated and meet with approval; if, for instance, there is proper classification. A system by which a very large number, as was given in evidence by Mr. Lamb to a committee of our Society, simply go through the colony and come out of it, is very bad, whatever happens; it ought to be a colony which is really dealing with a colonial population, a resident population, more or less; it must not be a colony which is taking, so to speak, all who come from shelters and other places.

8776. (Sir William Chance.) From what you have said I gather that you are not very much in favour of what is known as the Berkshire way-ticket system, which is now in force in Gloucestershire and Wiltshire?—No, not by itself.

8777. Will you give your reasons for that?—The Berkshire system, if I remember right, was a police system. The question is whether or not the attempt to have a route marked by the tickets, and for the police to distribute them is, or is not, useful. I think it is useful in this sense that if properly carried out, it should keep the vagrants on the main roads; but it is quite easy with our present arrangements for the men to break away from the main roads and go to the farm-houses, and other places where they are particularly unpleasant. I hold myself that a system like that, or indeed any system, can be worked into the general administration of the country only if other changes are made. For instance, if there is a county system for dealing with vagrants, it seems to me you might, if you liked, use the Gloucestershire system in co-ordination with it; but what we do not want is to offer too great facilities for the vagrants or vagabonds to use the country for their travelling purposes. The English policy, as I take it, has always been permissive with limitations; we have tried to give the vagrant his task, but we have always let him have food; and even if our policy has been, as people say, deterrent and not remedial, I think that, on the whole, it has been rather good; it has been alleviative, and in part preventive, but if we are to have the remedial system at all, then we must have something like the labour colony system, or something like a reformed prison system for these people.

8778. Do you think it would be possible to introduce anything like the German pass system into England under the present conditions?—The German pass system depends on the man's papers, and I am afraid we could not require those in England, therefore we could not have their pass system.

8779. If it was possible to have a system of papers, would you approve of the introduction of the German system of refugees at reasonable distances to work in with the pass system?—The only way would be to require every man who is a vagrant to produce his papers to the police; in Germany the system is based on service in the Army and so on. Here the police do not know where we are living, as they do in Germany; therefore, again, it would be quite impossible to use the German system; and all the methods of the way-ticket depend ultimately upon that, the use of some system like that. Except for the convenience of those who would give in the streets, I do not think the way-ticket system is of much value; on the other hand, if, as I believe the police in some places say, it tends to keep the vagrants on the main road, I would use it just simply for that single reason.

8780. It has been suggested to us that the way-ticket system, as in force in Gloucestershire, might be applied to the whole country?—I think myself I should not enforce its application in any case; I think if it is at all to be applied, I should first let it be applied in individual counties, and then gather together the experience gained about it; then the Home Office or some one would note it and report and suggest alterations. I do not believe in its immediate application in England. I do not think people would go to the police for the ticket.

8781. For the reason that they would have to be entered on a register and carry papers?—I think so.

8782. Do you see any objection to the Dorset system of giving food tickets?—Oh, no, not at all.

8783. It has been alleged that these food tickets sometimes get sold, as they have a certain value?—Well, it is purely a matter of calculation, which the local people alone can answer. The answer is—let the people have these tickets, and they will not give pence or food; if so, it seems to me that it is a comparatively harmless system—better than the giving of food and pence.

8784. You said that when the King's tent was established by the Church Army some of the occupants of the common lodging-houses resorted there?—Yes.

8785. In return for the food and shelter, they had to do a certain amount of work?—Three hours' work.

8786. Why should a man be attracted to the King's tent?—The light work for three hours was an easy bargain and he kept his money, for he had nothing to pay; he got a day's shelter and food, and for that he had to give three hours' light work.

8787. And that he considered better than paying 4d. in the common lodging-house?—You see, he would keep his 4d.; what he would pay to the common lodging-house he keeps; the economic question with him would be, whether for what he would have to pay to the common lodging-house for his night's lodging, it was worth while to do three hours' easy work. He saw it in that way; he kept his money and did the task. I think the charge is 6d. for the Parker Street lodging-house.

8788. I suppose you would wish, in the case of voluntary labour colonies, such as those under the Christian Social Service Union and the Salvation Army, that they should work under fixed regulations?—I would apply the same arguments to them as I would use in regard to shelters, that is, I would not have them started without public consideration; and when they do start, let them be under conditions of health, and not established on soil, for instance, that is unsuitable, and so on; and I do not think they ought to receive public subsidies.

8789. By that do you mean subsidies from the State?—Grants from the county and other authorities; but if they start I would include them in the annual report which I have suggested, and have them all inspected. Institutions which are to be worked on conditions that experience has shown to be harmful to the community ought not to be allowed to start.

8790. Any philanthropic body that wanted to establish a voluntary colony ought to apply to some Government Department before they did so, and ought to be called upon to comply with certain conditions before they were allowed to start it?—I should have thought they ought to go in the first instance to the county authority.

Mr. C. S. Loch.

4 July 1905.

Mr. C. S.
Loch.
4 July 1905.

8791. What authority would that be?—Some authority of the county, perhaps the police committee.

8792. You have said one of the great evils of our present system is the want of uniformity; do you think it would be advisable, with a view to getting more uniformity, to bring the police in?—This is, of course, an old question. The difficulty is, that on the one side you are dealing with relief, and on the other with public morals and police, and you have to satisfy the public that the individual will be relieved if destitute. I presume that is generally accepted. Then the issue is, whether that relief should be a police relief. I think it is quite possible to carry on a good system with police relief, but you have to consider whether the public would think that too hard. Then again the issue would be whether the Poor Law is the better system, which the public again may think too hard. The question is indeed one of pure administration, and I for my part would be inclined to think there might be a joint committee representing the two bodies, that is to say, the relief administration and the police administration in the county; and I should be very well satisfied if such a committee consulted the people in the county, and utilised the whole of the available resources in it on some uniform method. But undoubtedly the question must be settled, whether you will go on with the poor law relief or whether you will not, and I confess it is very hard to decide. There is no doubt you must have uniformity, and it is easier to use the casual wards which are at hand already attached to the workhouses.

8793. Do you think there is such public sympathy with the vagrants that the public would mind very much whether they were under the police or under the guardians, provided the necessary refuge or shelter was provided?—Well, I do not know; if you take London and what is said and written about the homeless cases here, I dare say it would be difficult. In the country at large I think it would be quite natural that they should go to the police, though I think it would be easier to make the change if the new administration were on conjoint lines. I think that if you could keep the double element—the representation of poor law relief with the police—the probability is you would get uniformity better under that than under any other system.

8794. You are aware that a great many guardians would like to see the vagrants wholly transferred to the police?—True.

8795. And the guardians represent public opinion, at any rate, in their district, to a large extent?—Of course, directly it got into the hands of the police it would cease to be a relief question in part.

8796. Now do you think a labour colony should be limited in size?—I do not think limitation in size is so important as the classification in houses or conditions.

8797. Would you put the different classes in separate colonies, or would you grade them in one large colony?—The question is, whether the area to be chosen is an area, normally speaking, for four, five, or six counties. It would be comparatively easy to use the judicial statistics and work out from them and the pauperism of the counties what provision should be made for each group; but my impression is that a colony for a considerable group ought to suffice in counties, and certainly I think every care should be taken as to the selection of locality. I do not think it would be a question of one colony for the whole of England, I should think we would want three or four. They need not be large ones. My hope is that they would be rather more deterrent than penal.

8798. At Merxplas there are about five thousand inmates?—That would be too large.

8799. Would a thousand be too small?—I should think that is a maximum from my point of view. I do not believe in great numbers. I believe management comes down with the numbers.

8800. You would not like them to exceed one thousand?—I should keep them comparatively small. I think it would be a very bad thing to have very large colonies rather lightly handled.

8801. Is it not a fact that men who have been in colonies abroad find great difficulty in getting employment when they leave?—Yes. The figures show that emphatically.

8802. Now you referred to a report on the unemployed, which was published in 1904 by the Charity Organisation Society?—Yes.

8803. How far does that bear on the vagrancy question?—I referred to that report mainly in regard to the Salvation Army. It would appear in the course of the year about 700 to 900 people come to their colony, and about 300 to 400, rather less than half, leave within the month. So far, therefore, as at least 43 per cent. of the applicants are concerned, the colony fails at the start. For these it is little more than a shelter or a casual ward. The report states as follows:—"Next, with regard to the 90 per cent. 'invariably good,' all of whom stayed the first month, the evidence is very insufficient. Of these men, according to their own statements, 22 per cent. have been reduced to distress because of drink, and another 20 per cent. owing to various miscellaneous causes, including misfortune, loss of tools, the weather, crime, etc. No attempt is made to follow the men up after they leave, and no records are kept. But it is not at all likely that 90 per cent. of the men thus described are to any lasting degree rehabilitated, and return to self-support in industrial life—the meaning naturally attributed to such a phrase as 'invariably good.'" Reference is made to boards of guardians who have made use of their system, and whose experience supports that conclusion.

8804. Does not that report divide these unemployed into certain classes?—The report for the purpose of administration suggests the division into three classes—(1) thrifty and careful men; (2) men of different grades of respectability, with a decent home; and (3) the idle loafing class, or those brought low by drink or vice. And that class gets near the vagrant line.

8805. It is very difficult to distinguish them from the ordinary vagrant?—Yes, my view strongly is that a great many of these and the vagrant class are ins and outs; and, for my part, if I had to do the work, I should guard the exit of the workhouses, and if a man came in twice or thrice under conditions which might be thought to indicate that he was an habitual in and out, I should be inclined to have him taken before the magistrate, and to raise the question of sentence.

8806. (Mr. Davy.) Sentence to what?—Sentence for a month probably, on the lines we have been discussing. The important thing in my mind is this, that we should do our best to utilise the existing institutions, and to hold the ingress to and egress from these institutions, and that we should not launch out into new institutions except on a definite relation between them and the existing ones; the prison question and the workhouse question are all questions to be primarily considered in regard to the common vagrancy arrangements, and if you could separate the ins and outs, you would be stopping right through the country a whole file of possible vagrants.

8807. (Sir William Chance.) How would you deal with the ins and outs; would you class them with the vagrant and the unemployed?—Well, I do not think it would be a bad thing in London if the ins and outs were taken up, and then returned, not to the ordinary workhouse, but to some place we might say outside London, which would be for them a workhouse with detention for such and such a period. That is a different thing from committing them, but that is the only alternative that I can see to a system of commitment, and the institution would be really a work house to all intents and purposes for the common service of the Metropolis. The wives would in that case have to be provided for, and the children would have to go to school. The old idea of a labour workhouse, I think we may say, has failed. That kind of workhouse has become a workhouse which provides for this class nothing but detention for limited periods between admission and the giving and expiry of the notice to leave.

8808. If that class could be dealt with very much in the same way as vagrants might be dealt with, the unemployed question would not be made so much of as it is at the present time?—I believe that if the ins and outs were dealt with, and this class too, so far as they came before the public, the lower section of the unemployed, which figure first as vagrants and then as unemployed, would be dealt with. I think that is clear, partly because, as I think I showed from the figures at St Giles's at the time of the Trafalgar Square troubles, we are dealing practically with the same class whether as 'unemployed' in Class (3) or as vagrants, in many instances at any rate.

8809. How would you deal with the children of men committed to a colony; do you think that the State should send them to an industrial school?—Yes.

8310. And keep them?—Certainly. Of course it is a very difficult thing to do; but there would be no question about it I should imagine, unless the wife is strong and capable, which as a rule she is not; in such cases the whole family may go down together; the children would suffer very badly, and I do not see why we should not take the whole family.

8811. Is it not a fact in many cases that when the men are taken away the women and children manage to support themselves?—It may be that they could do that, but we know very little about the ins and outs from that point of view, because we have not had that system at all at work. What I was thinking of was that if the case were that of the vagrant constantly on the move, there is no doubt that the children would be underfed and little cared for. They may support themselves outside, that is to say they may not come to the Poor Law, but I should think they would be on the down grade.

8812. Of course you have noticed in the statistics, the extremely small number of women and children vagrants as compared with the male vagrants?—Oh, very few.

8813. That shows, I presume, that the female sex is not addicted to wandering?—It shows this, that the men, when they wander, prefer to go alone, because they are all widowers and bachelors when they are abroad. It means also that they may have a family, but they have deserted it; at least that is my interpretation.

8814. And the family as a rule becomes self-supporting directly that man is gone?—I think the women get low pay, and pull through; I think it is out of those that we get our worst population. I think men of this type marry according to their type.

8815. In this question of the unemployed, we hear nothing of the women at all; it is only the men?—Because the women are to a large extent keeping the men, so that they can be unemployed.

8816. (Dr. Downes.) I think you gave a rough estimate of two per 1,000 as the proportion of vagrancy in England at the present time?—Yes, I think the figures are not given up to date, but it is a calculation I made.

8817. Your charts show considerable fluctuations from time to time?—The figures I gave were the Scottish figures for the night count there; the English figures are the day count figures, of which we have a longer series. They are in excess of the English night count figures.

8818. Those are vagrants relieved in casual wards, I take it?—Yes, in casual wards.

8819. At any rate, taking this as an index of vagrancy, it shows from time to time very large fluctuations?—Certainly.

8820. What becomes of the vagrants on the fall from the highest total?—I think they come on to the unskilled labour market, the worst section of which is thrown into vagrancy, and then supported as work becomes plentiful; they are the first to be discharged, and then they only get work when practically everyone above them is employed.

8821. Then I take it a portion of this vagrancy is re-absorbed into the labour market?—Yes; it is an economic question.

8822. Periodically, owing to the condition of trade, so much is thrown out, and then it takes to the road?—Yes.

8823. The point would be to diminish the attraction of the road at such times?—I think the process is largely self-healing. You are dealing with a very low class of labour to begin with, but that kind of labour is on one point the same as that in any other class, and when the better time comes it emerges and goes on with its work.

8824. Have you any opinion as to the proportion of what I may call settled vagrancy in the country?—No, I do not think I have. The truth is with this vagrancy that it is of a very low type, even though it takes to some kind of unskilled work in the plentiful period; so that it is very hard to disentangle the vagrancy that will settle, and the vagrancy that will not settle, so it seems to me.

8825. In that 2 per cent, did you include the gipsy class?—I should include everything that they noted in Scotland; that was the line I took; simply making a proportion sum; that included everybody in prison or outhouse, or any place that the police included in their report on that night.

8826. (Mr. Davy.) They make it 9,000, I think?—Yes, in the June count.

8827. (Dr. Downes.) Does that include men in the lodging-houses?—Yes, it includes those; in Gloucestershire when they have a census they sort out the vagrant from the common lodging-house resident.

8828. As regards labour colonies, you spoke of a system of selection as being important?—Yes.

8829. Would your selection be of the corrigible or of the incorrigible?—My selection would be of the corrigible, that is to say, those to whom the system would be of most use.

8830. Do I gather from your evidence that, with reference to this particular class, the sooner you can get them to the colony the better?—Yes, once they have become offenders, the sooner the better; once they have got into the swing of the road, the sooner you take them out the better.

8831. With regard to that class, what good would commitment to an ordinary prison for any time, even a month, do?—Unless it deters, it can do no good.

8832. And has it been found to deter?—I do not think so.

8833. And might it not do harm?—I think it might; it might act both ways, it might put the man into the mood in which he would try to do well; it is just possible it might do that.

8834. There are possibilities both ways?—There is just a possibility. Personally, I should be inclined to consider the matter week by week almost, if one was dealing with an individual—as to whether he should stay longer in a prison, or go earlier to the colony, which would be in itself of course a prison colony where there would be rigorous control and all that.

8835. Might it not be better in such cases to commit such a person to one of the voluntary colonies where he would be under regulation, and those in charge would be actuated by religious influence?—I should utilise those colonies in the other system to which I have referred; I do not see why men who have proved themselves successful in doing prison work as they do abroad, should not come in and do mission work as the ordinary employes of the Government. I think one of the difficulties we have to face in this colony movement is that, on the one side you have painted in very bright colours the, often the assumed, results of voluntary effort moved by religious thought; and on the other side you have painted the official system which is pre-supposed to have no bowels of compassion, and to lose that kind of discretion which such compassion suggests. I cannot see myself why the man should not go to a recognised colony worked under official supervision where he would be in every way as well treated as in an unrecognised and unsupervised voluntary colony.

8836. Well, if the man is to be reformed, I suppose the sooner he gets to the reformatory the better, and my point was, what good would detention in an ordinary prison do in such a case?—If you want to use the voluntary colony, it might be quite well to use it as a kind of partial test at a particular period of your treatment. I think that the colony should come under very close supervision.

8837. And definite regulations?—Definite regulations and inspection.

8838. (Mr. Simpson.) As you said just now the man who is out of work ought not to be allowed to get into the swing of the road; if there is a period in which he is necessarily out of work, and he is on the road during that time, at the end he will be much less likely to be employable than he was at the beginning?—Yes.

8839. If he does not go on the road, the only other alternative perhaps is to go into the workhouse; would

Mr. C. S. Loch.

4 July 1905.

Mr. C. S.
Loch.

105.

you think that after a similar period in the workhouse the man would be as employable as when he went in ?—As we stand in regard to our workhouses, it is obviously a choice of evils, and it is quite on the cards that the best thing is for the man to go on the road and make his effort and do the best he can ; that is the bravest thing to do. On the other hand, it seems to me possible that the workhouse adapted to another need, might be in touch with whatever kind of farm or colony you may think desirable, and that the man in receipt of indoor relief should be sent there.

8840. It is proposed to have a census of vagrants on Friday next ; do you consider that hop-pickers and fruit-pickers should be classed as vagrants, because they sleep in casual wards, although they are going to do definite work ?—I should consider them vagrants, probably, if they were in casual wards on the night of the census.

8841. Or in houses ?—Quite so. I think there should be a systematic night census on very careful lines, and that the system would be improved as we went along through scrutiny each year as to whether it was sufficient or not ; I think it an excellent thing.

8842. You mean that there should be an annual census of this class ?—Yes.

8843. What the Scotch call a "challenge" ?—Yes, one much as they do ; I think their form might be improved, though it is a good one as far as it goes ; there should be a winter and a summer census.

8844. It was suggested to us in Scotland that you get no fair idea of the number of tramps if you take the mean between the summer and the winter count, because the summer tramp is quite a different person to the winter tramp ?—I am aware of that argument, at the same time I would have the two censuses, and I personally should have thought that from the point of view of the mean it would have held numerically.

8845. Do you not think that a census will be important more from a police point of view than from a Poor Law point of view ?—I think it would ; it is made in Scotland from the police point of view.

8846. In such a census I suppose everyone sleeping in the casual ward should be put down as a vagrant practically ?—Yes, but whether with more experience one would find any possibility of making a separate division in that class, I do not know ; but I should begin in that way.

8847. And then in the common lodging-houses a considerable proportion of the men most certainly are not vagrants ; a good number of them are in work ?—I should get that through the deputy.

8848. The deputy would have to estimate, as to the men who had come in that night, whether they were vagrants or not ?—It would be in the nature of an estimate.

8849. Then everyone in shelters you would probably put down as vagrants that night ; but then there are the people who are not in any casual ward, common lodging-house, or night shelter, but who are about the streets ?—Well, you would have to organise arrangements for making the count in the particular streets, and then do your best to spot those who are lying on the stairs.

8850. In view of the difficulty of making the census do you consider the result would be of sufficient accuracy to be of much value ?—I think the result as to several of the main sources, the institutions, the common lodging-houses, the shelters, the casual wards would be right ; that of itself is a very great advance. Then comes the fringe of the outsiders, the people who are lying in the open air. Well, that is a separate entry, and it would be found to differ very much according to the season, whether wet or cold ; but still I do think that that might be fairly dealt with by taking the area in which these people are most likely to be found. That is the way I would do it in London myself ; I should divide the place into special areas.

8851. (Sir William Chance.) You think the result is worth the special expense which might be incurred ?—Oh, I think so. I think the question of vagrancy is a question of alarm to a large extent, and I believe that the actual figures always will be more trustworthy and assuring than the figures which we aspire to in moments of alarm.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

Wednesday, July 5th, 1905.

PRESENT,

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Mr. H. G. WILLINK, called ; and Examined.

Mr. H. G.
Willink.

5 July 1905.

8852. (Chairman.) I believe you are a barrister and a justice of the peace for the county of Berkshire, and also a member of the county council ?—That is so.

8853. You have been chairman of the Bradfield board of guardians since 1892 ?—Yes, I am still.

8854. Previously you were a member of the Paddington board of guardians ?—Yes.

8855. And you were a member of the special committee of the Charity Organisation Society on distress from want of employment ?—I was, in London.

8856. You have some knowledge of the foreign labour colonies ?—I have visited the Dutch colonies and I have visited the Belgian colonies twice, some time ago.

8857. You visited Frederiksoord I think ?—Yes.

8858. And Ommerschans ?—Yes.

8859. In what capacity did you visit these places ?—I went there with a view to reporting to the Charity Organisation Society, and I made a report to them in the form which was published in their review afterwards, and I afterwards expanded that. I read up the subject a good deal more, and corresponded with the director, and friends and relations I have in Holland, and made a more corrected and revised statement which I have published in a separate pamphlet.

8860. May we first take the Dutch labour colonies ; could you give us a short statement as to what your view was with regard to them, and whether they were satisfactory ?—Well, I should like to say in the first place that my visit was in 1888, so that it is not very recent. They had, however, been going on then for a long time, in fact since 1816. During that time they had been visited and reported upon by other people very much better qualified to express opinions—from Sir John McNeill downwards.

8861. Were those colonies for persons of the vagrant class ?—From 1850 there had been two classes of colony. They were each started originally as a charitable institution, the free colonies and the beggar colony ; and both were independent more or less of the State. The free colonies really have nothing to do with vagrants at all, they are only intended to afford the opportunity to people who had come down in the world to make, I will not say a new start, but to fit themselves to make a new start, and as time went on they really got into a position of keeping people there who went there; they did not go out again. A certain amount of land was bought by public subscription, and these people, sometimes families, sometimes single men, were settled upon the land subject to well-considered regulations, with a certain amount of assistance from the society. It was a private society, and the people practically stayed there. About the time of my visit, I found they took about seven fresh families per annum.

8862. What number were there at Frederiksoord?—I should think about 1,800.

8863. Would they have had to be supported by public funds had they not been there?—I should think very likely.

8864. As far as you know they were without any means of subsistence?—Yes. The arrangements were worked by the different communes. Money used to be collected by private subscription in different areas, and when a certain amount was got together that would be sufficient to support one man or, if a larger amount, one family, the subscribers in that commune were able to nominate one man or one family to go there. As a matter of fact, the persons sent were not of the class of tramps or beggars.

8865. You would not call them tramps, but they were destitute people?—They were people more or less destitute; people in distress who had failed. They went in with their wives, and children soon grew up and, no doubt, were planted out, and got out into the world. As I said, something like seven families were received in a year; it was infinitesimal for coping with anything of the same sort of thing in England.

8866. So far as you could judge, the work was done satisfactorily?—Oh, very well, indeed. That was what was called the free colony.

8867. Do you recollect how many there were altogether in the free colonies?—In 1827 the population was 2,179; and in 1873 there were about 2,007 colonists; in 1887, just before my visit, there were 1,796.

8868. The numbers had decreased?—The numbers had decreased.

8869. How many of the free colonies are there?—They were founded at different times, and were always called the free colonies, but they are practically one colony—Frederiksoord, Willemsoord and Wilhelminasoord.

8870. It really was one establishment?—One establishment.

8871. The other class of colony you spoke of was the beggar colony?—Yes; that was more for the vagrant class.

8872. Was there any difference in the treatment in that colony?—Yes, the inmates were more restricted; I mean, they were not allowed to go about so freely; they did not have their own separate houses to live in, but lived more in barrack life, and they were a different class of men, much more the kind of tramp which you are thinking of. The idea was that the man would be able to earn enough in the institution to support himself, and to learn something which would be useful to him when he went out. The idea was at first that it should be principally agriculture, but by degrees they found that it was more and more necessary to introduce other things besides agriculture; and it was found also that the ends did not meet, and they got more and more in debt to the State which advanced them money, and then they manufactured articles for the State, uniforms for the Army, and sacking, and all sorts of things, and finally they got into a very unsound financial condition, and the State took them over stock, lock, and barrel.

8873. Did the State have entire control of it?—Entire control of it.

8874. Is it now worked as a State institution?—It is now worked as a State institution. It used to be at two places; in my time there was this Ommerschans which we did visit, and there was also a place called Veenhuizen which we did not visit, and since then, I believe, the beggar colony has become almost entirely concentrated at Veenhuizen, which I have never seen. I am not sure that Ommerschans is still in existence; it was an old fort.

8875. Is it only males who are received?—It was only males then; I do not know what it is now.

8876. Of course, separate buildings would have been necessary if females had been admitted?—Yes; women and children were admitted, I believe, at Veenhuizen.

8877. So far as you know, was the colony self-supporting?—It was not self-supporting; I think the State still had to help it.

8878. It was in the beginning that it was supported by voluntary subscription?—That was the idea.

8879. Is there still voluntary subscription?—No, the State has taken it all over.

8880. Are there any voluntary institutions in Holland?—I am not aware of any which deal with tramps.

8881. As far as you know, all the tramp institutions are paid for by public money?—Yes.

8882. How long are the men detained in the tramp colony?—At the time I was there, from six months to three years.

8883. Are they committed to the colony?—Yes, by the magistrates.

8884. Not by a voluntary act on their part?—Under a Penal Law of March, 1881, Art. 432, public begging is punished by imprisonment of twelve days at the utmost; and Art. 434 provides that if at the time of the committing of one of the offences named in the two preceding Articles, one of them being public begging, a year has not elapsed since the delinquent was sentenced for one of these offences, the punishment can be increased by one-third, and the delinquent, if capable of work, can be committed to be placed in a Government working house for at the most three years. The working house I believe to be the same as the beggar colony, so they get their three years then. Public drunkenness was punishable on a third offence with a maximum term of one year at a beggar colony.

8885. Were the wives and children of the men who were sent to those colonies taken charge of by somebody?—I do not know what was done, but probably they would go to some poor law institution.

8886. Can you at all say how the men in the beggar colony were made to work?—Well, they used to be locked up if they misbehaved. The offences for which they were punished were chiefly such as breaking the rules, bad language, insubordination, which I imagine would include not working, bringing in strong drink, stealing or damaging clothes, or other Government property, and attempting to escape. There was no corporal punishment, and the man under punishment used to be fed the same as the others, except that he got water instead of coffee, and he got his dinner later than the others.

8887. As part of the persuasion to work did they give him less food?—They give him so very little to start with that there is not much margin there.

8888. Do you know whether there were better meals for those who worked well?—I think a man under punishment is fed in the same way as the others, except that he has water instead of coffee, and gets his dinner later. I see that at Veenhuizen, which is not the place I visited, bread and water is given instead of the usual food, so that something of that sort apparently was done. I have got a list of the different punishments used. One of the punishments I see is "deprivation of work." I do not know how that would answer, here.

8889. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Is that used now?—Yes.

8890. (Chairman.) The power to make idle men work is rather the crux of the situation when you come to the question of labour colonies?—Yes. I remember the doctor at the Dutch beggar colony told me the men have no dread of the place, they rather like it; it is too comfortable; their dinner is always ready. There is some reason for what he says; the work exacted is not hard, and they get some little payment; there are considerable indulgences; smoking is allowed out of work hours, draught boards were hanging in their big living

Mr. H. G.
Willink.

5 July 1905.

Mr. H. G.
Willink.

5 July 1905.

rooms, there is little or no restriction upon social intercourse, the food is sufficient and satisfactory to a Continental taste, and the clothing is warm and comfortable. There seemed no reason why they should dread the place, and in fact they come back again and again.

8891. Then as far as you know of the system in Holland those who work well have no better food than the others?—Yes. I should like to guard myself against expressing an opinion of what is done now, but I have not heard of the system being changed.

8892. Now as to the Belgian colonies: some of my colleagues have been good enough to visit Merxplas, but we should like to hear from you what your experience of the place was. I think you visited it twice?—I visited it in 1890, when I went over to a congress in Antwerp with Mr. G. E. Lloyd Baker, and I visited it last autumn with Sir William Chance. I was particularly interested to see how it had altered, and what the lines of development had been.

8893. At Merxplas, what system is adopted to induce men to work?—Well, there they get a little pay which they can spend at the canteen on some little indulgences.

8894. Tobacco and such things?—Tobacco and bacon and cheese.

8895. Are those allowances given in proportion to their work, or is it the same all round?—There is a sort of sliding scale; half of their earnings is credited to them as a masse de sortie, so that they have something to go out with.

8896. Like the mark money of a prisoner?—Yes.

8897. Do you think that inducement succeeds with those men?—Well, I was very much struck with the way in which the men did work there. There did not seem to be unwillingness to work, taking it as a whole, and in many parts of the establishment the work was positively cheerful and full of energy.

8898. Were they taught trades there as well as agricultural work?—No, I did not gather that they were taught trades. I asked the director there what they do as regards trades. They ask a man when he first comes in what his trade is, and if he has a definite trade that is the trade they put him to; if he has not a definite trade he has a choice, and they put him to the sort of thing he wishes to do, if he seems at all capable of doing it, otherwise they put him on the land. We were very much struck with this; when once a man had made a choice of a trade he could not change it. Of course, there was not much business of learning there.

8899. So far as you know, there was not any definite number of trades to be taught there, as in English industrial schools, for instance?—No, I do not think they tried to teach them at all, except so far as a man learns by practice and under a foreman. The work so far as I could judge really seemed to be very well done on the whole; the buildings were good, the bricks were good, the tiles were good, the woodwork was good.

8900. Did they make their own bricks there?—Yes; they make everything they want.

8901. At all events a man would learn good brick-laying work?—Yes.

8902. If he had a slight knowledge of it, it would improve there?—Yes; they do iron work, tile making, sacking, etc.

8903. Then in all these different occupations you have mentioned, a man at any rate could improve himself?—Yes, prima facie it would seem that he would be quite able to get back into society when he was discharged; but probably he never did, the evidence all shows that he never did; and the same is true of the best workmen who naturally were good workmen when they went in; the same cause which brought them in brought them back again when they went out. We were told it was always drink that was the bane of that class of man.

8904. At Merxplas you were satisfied with the amount of work done?—Yes, I was surprised to see how much they did.

8905. Was it better than the work done at the Dutch colonies?—I should say so, certainly, from my recollection.

8906. Have you any knowledge of the English labour colonies?—I have none at first hand; I have only read of them.

8907. Judging from what you saw abroad, do you think that the establishment of labour colonies is desirable in England?—I think it is a very different class of man and a very different public you have to deal with in this country.

8908. Do you mean the men would be more difficult to handle in the way of getting them to work?—Well, I should think so. At Merxplas they had 5,000 more or less able-bodied men in one establishment, and they seemed to have no trouble about discipline whatever. Of course there is a great deal I suppose in the feeding; people are kept low, but I should think that 5,000 English tramps might give a good deal of trouble.

8909. Did the men at Merxplas look as if they were healthy; if they worked well, one would imagine they would be well fed?—They certainly worked well, but they all looked rather subdued. I am speaking of the result of their work and the willingness with which they did it. They were not working with strength many of them.

8910. I suppose there was a resident doctor there?—Yes, there was a resident doctor; and they have an infirmary.

8911. Did you hear what was the proportion of sick men to the whole number?—There were sixty-five in the hospital in September, 1903.

8912. Knowing what you do of the English vagrant class, what is your view with regard to labour colonies for them: do you think on the whole it is worth trying the experiment?—I do not think you will turn a man out much better than he went in, if you mean that.

8913. From the point of view of cost, might it not be cheaper to keep the man in a labour colony. At present he costs the country a good deal from living in casual wards and from being frequently sent to prison; in the labour colony you would get a certain amount of work out of him?—Yes; there is a large set-off in that, and you are preventing him from multiplying, which is I think a very great point.

8914. Well, looking at these various considerations, would you be in favour of the experiment of trying labour colonies?—I have always felt the chief argument against it is that it would be almost impossible to drop it. You may call it an experiment, but an experiment one looks upon as something one could discontinue; you could not discontinue this. It is a thing I would like very well to see tried by private initiative before the State had anything to do with it.

8915. Rather in the way in which reformatory schools were started?—Yes.

8916. Now what is your view with regard to short sentences; do you think that a sentence of a few days is any use whatever?—No, I do not think it is any use whatever.

8917. You are cumbering the gaols and doing no good; is that your opinion?—Yes, entirely. I would like to say also, if I may, that the Belgian experience seems to point in the same direction, because they have had to lengthen the terms of detention which they gave to these men. When I went there first, I think it was in 1890, the term was comparatively short; they have now lengthened it. Before 1891, it was from one to seven days imprisonment for vagrancy or mendicancy, and from fifteen days to six months' stay, subject to Government disposal; that meant practically they could do what they liked about these men.

8918. What is the term now?—After 1891 it was altered to this; vagrants or mendicants may be sentenced to not less than two years or more than seven years. The cause of that was that they found the people were only coming back over and over again, and it was no use.

8919. It is rather a jump from seven days to two years?—It is; that is very striking.

8920. It is pretty obvious that they were convinced of the uselessness of very short sentences?—And the Belgian experiment of course dates from a long time ago. It was in existence in 1832; so it took them a long time to come to this, but still there they are now.

Mr. H. G.
Willink.

5 July 1905.

8921. In the case of the English vagrant, you think that the present seven day sentence is useless as well as costly ?—I do not think it is of any use at all.

8922. That it is not reformatory or deterrent ?—No.

8923. The present clean, well-warmed cell does not offer any terror to the mind of the vagrant ?—No ; compared with the casual ward I believe sometimes it is considered to be attractive, really.

8924. What would you as a magistrate suggest as a minimum sentence for a vagrant ?—Do you mean for a first conviction ?

8925. Well, I will not say for the first conviction, because you might bind the man over and register him for a first conviction, like under the First Offenders' Act ; but I meant if you did sentence him to be imprisoned for any length of time, what would you say should be the minimum sentence ; a month ?—I think that is too high ; I do not think you would do any good with a month.

8926. Well you would not have it shorter than a month ?—No, I do not think it would be any use ; assuming you caught your thoroughly habitual vagrant, I do not think it is any use shutting him up for a month.

8927. Take a man who has been convicted a third time within a limited period ; he has been let off, say, twice on the ground of being a first offender, and he comes up the third time for punishment ?—Well, if I had got to sentence him, I suppose I should give him a month, but he would not come out any better than he went in. I would be almost inclined to let the convictions pile up against him until you could treat him as an habitual vagrant, if you could identify him.

8928. At any rate, you are thoroughly convinced of the uselessness of the short sentence ?—Yes, I do not see that it does any good at all.

8929. Of course you know one has to deal with public opinion in England ; would you not be of opinion that any suggestion for a lengthy term of imprisonment might meet with considerable opposition ?—I am afraid it might ; I think that is one of the things we have to reckon with.

8930. In making suggestions on this point one has to consider public opinion to some extent ?—That is one of the things I have in my mind. But I would make sure that the man was a confirmed vagrant, and would then deal with him seriously on small offences.

8931. Now as regards the question of the way-ticket ; do you think that some system of that kind might be successful in the way of identifying the vagrant ?—Very likely.

8932. Do you think it would be desirable ?—Very desirable to identify the habitual vagrant.

8933. With some system of way-ticket you would be the more likely to identify him than you are at present ?—It would give you one more chance. You are setting yourself a tremendous task identifying those fellows ; but it has always seemed to me that, if you could get the way-ticket system established throughout the country, it would very likely break down more than it does when you get it in smaller areas, for this reason, that a tramp would only have to know his way about sufficiently well to be able to ring the changes and get passed on with his meal and one night's detention and no work, and have a continuous walking tour all over the place, with very little chance of being pulled up for not being a genuine wanderer in search of work.

8934. Supposing a man with a way-ticket fails to reach the place marked on it, he would have to shew why he did not get there, either that physical incapacity prevented him, or that he had heard that there was work elsewhere ?—I doubt if that would work satisfactorily.

8935. But under the Gloucestershire system there would be some means of finding out if the man was really in search of work ?—Of course if you can trace the man on a week's tour, there is a record against him no doubt.

8936. If there was a general way-ticket system throughout England worked through the medium of the police with the object of the identification of habitual vagrants, do you not think it would result in good ?—The difficulty would be to see whether the man had made any effort to find work ; he would say he had made an effort, and he would say " Now I shall go on to X. ; I hope I shall find work there."

8937. That he would do now ; you would not lose anything by the system ?—No, but he would gain by the new system ; he would have his dinner, and would not have to work for it, and he would also get his free lodging. I do not want to take up a strong position against the way-ticket ; it might be more easily effected on a large scale, because the possibilities of identification would increase as you widen the area.

8938. (Mr. Davy.) Labour colonies are not new things ?—No, there have been plenty of them.

8939. You are acquainted with the history of Sir Benjamin Thompson ?—I have heard of him.

8940. He writes that he arrested with his own hand the first beggar dealt with in Bavaria in 1790 ?—Yes.

8941. Then he started a colony, which was an enormous success, and the whole country was cleared of beggars ?—At first.

8942. And then there is an end of the story ?—Yes.

8943. Do you know what became of his system ?—Well, it broke down, I think, during the great war.

8944. I believe it was swept away in the Napoleonic wars ; any way, nothing more came of it ?—I suppose any system would have broken down in the Napoleonic wars.

8945. Still, there was no reformation as regards begging ?—No.

8946. Then General van den Bosch started the Dutch colonies ?—Yes, he began in 1816, just after the big wars.

8947. Probably he inherited the idea from Sir Benjamin Thompson ?—I do not know whether it was a new idea. He had had experience in the Dutch over-sea colonies, and he thought he could introduce a similar thing.

8948. Is there not some evidence that the scheme of colonies attracted notice in England about 1820 to 1830 ?—Yes.

8949. You have seen a book dated 1828, which gives a full account of the colonies in Holland and is very enthusiastically in favour of them ?—Yes, indeed ; it showed that everything was going to be reformed. I have another book here with which no doubt many of you are familiar ; it is a statement of the condition of the poor and the labouring classes in a considerable portion of America and Europe by Nassau Senior, and is the preface which he wrote to the foreign communications contained in the appendix to the Poor Law Report. It is dated 1835. In it he touches upon reports in respect of America and Europe, including the poor colonies of Holland and Belgium, which had been visited by Count D'Arrivabene and M. de Pethou and Captain Brandreth and other people, and apparently himself, and also some similar institutions in France.

8950. It goes to show that the whole thing has been in the air for some time, and that it was undertaken with great hopes at first which have not been fulfilled ?—Yes.

8951. And about the thirties it attracted a great deal of attention ?—It attracted a great deal of attention.

8952. Then we come to Sir John McNeill's report which is quite a standard work ?—Yes, I read it over and over again when I studied the subject ; it is a most extraordinarily good report.

8953. It is adverse to the colonies ?—Yes.

8954. On account of the work being forced work it was difficult to make them pay, and the reformation was extremely unlikely, looking to the character of the persons who were shut up in these colonies ?—My grandfather, Sir George Nicholls, visited the Belgian colonies, and I do not think he had a very favourable impression of them either.

8955. So that this colony idea is more or less an old one, and so far has not proved a panacea ?—No, certainly not.

8956. In the Board of Trade Report of 1893 on labour colonies this sentence occurs : " The Belgian institution seems to me to be simply punitive. The men remain there for a term of years under strict discipline, and in a position in which they are as nearly as possible

Mr. H. G.
Willink.

5 July 1905

prevented from doing any harm to themselves or society; but when they emerge their record precludes their being employed in ordinary industry, and they again fall into the hands of the police to be sent back to the colony to harder work and a longer term of imprisonment than before." Do you agree with that?—Yes, I think I do. I am not so sure about their record preventing them keeping employment; that may be so or not. I have some reason to believe it is; on the other hand we were told by the director at Merxplas that he had taken a great deal of pains to get men into employment; he got places for them that they could have had and could have kept if they liked, but the men themselves failed; it was always drink. It is possible to get places, but the men do not keep them; they are not reformed.

8957. Then I want to quote from your own report on the Dutch colonies. You say: "Inefficient work, safe board and lodging, free intercourse night and day with hundreds of others of the same almost hopeless class, nothing to gain by improvement, nothing to lose by stagnation. What is there to raise a man? . . . The best that can be said for such an institution is that it keeps decently out of sight, and in a condition of animal well-being, a class of men who, if not in its keeping, or under some other kind of restraint, would, as in England, be a public disgrace and shame, and would also be raising up children to succeed them" ?—Yes, I remember writing that.

8958. Does that give, in your judgment, a fair view?—I remember feeling that, and I still feel it.

8959. But you would not undervalue the benefit of an institution which does keep those men off the roads?—No, on the contrary, I should value it very highly, and, if for no other reason, for the sake of the many poor people who are almost forced to give by the sturdy beggar in the out-of-the-way cottages and places in the country. The tramp goes round to these places when the man is away at work and he makes the woman give.

8960. Whether the system be reformatory or not, the man is at all events kept off the road?—I think that is a very good point.

8961. And do you not think that the fact that habituels would be under detention for a long time would act as a deterrent on some of the persons who are starting the life of a tramp?—Yes, I think it might.

8962. With regard to the procedure before segregation, do you not think that it should always be by judicial sentence?—Yes, I do not see what other way.

8963. You do not think the tramp should be sent to a colony by any local authority, as for instance a board of guardians?—Oh, certainly not.

8964. The tramp would have to be charged before a magistrate?—That would be much better; I should not like to leave it to boards of guardians.

8965. On some offence; do you think we can safely make habitual vagrancy a specific offence?—Do you mean safely in the sense that public opinion would not be likely to undo very soon what you have done, or that there would be a difficulty in getting the magistrates to act on it?

8966. Well, both. We will put it this way; you would have to adopt very careful means of identification of the tramps, and keep their record?—Yes.

8967. Probably by finger-printing?—That seems to be full of difficulties, but still I have no doubt that it could be done.

8968. There ought to be ample proof that a man was an habitual before you segregated him?—The difficulty which has occurred to me about that is that it must take some time when you are dealing with large numbers of men like this to trace out and identify the particular thumb print, and there is the question, what are you to do with the particular man in the meantime; but I suppose that is only a matter of machinery. Then you were asking me whether I thought it was safe. I do not feel quite competent to say; it is a very difficult thing. It would be quite a new idea to English public opinion to lock a man up and take away a man's liberty for long periods merely for vagrancy; on the one hand one does not know whether that law should be altered; and then there is the difficulty of getting magistrates to act upon it unless it were made compulsory.

8969. Suppose you had a system like this. A man is charged with some specific vagrancy offence; if the magistrate likes to send him up for a month he can, but if he does not send him up for a month he would convict him and discharge him on licence?—Yes.

8970. The conviction would be recorded; after a certain number of convictions of that kind, say five, six, or seven, you might safely assume the man was an habitual?—Yes.

8971. No help to himself and a danger to others?—Yes.

8972. Now, under safeguards, might he not be segregated for a certain number of years?—Yes, I think he might, but whether you will always be backed up by public opinion in doing it, I do not know.

8973. Do you think yourself it would be worth doing?—Yes, I think it would.

8974. It would be very expensive?—Yes.

8975. Well, do you think the evil of habitual vagrancy is sufficiently great to justify the State in spending money and taking trouble in order to do this?—It would have to be done in something in the nature of a prison; I do not know what you would call it, but it would be in the nature of imprisonment.

8976. Call it a colony if you like?—Yes, if you get the real "habitual" man, I think it would be worth while, but you will not reform him; I do not feel any confidence in reforming him; I only think of the advantage of putting him away and preventing him begging.

8977. The result at Merxplas and Veenhuizen is exactly in accordance with Sir John McNeill's forecast?—Yes.

8978. He came to the conclusion that reformation was out of the question?—Yes.

8979. (Mr. Simpson.) Was your impression of Merxplas when you went there in 1904 any different from what it was in 1890?—I think I was more struck with it in 1904 than I was in 1890. I thought it was extended. It seemed to me to be better managed and to be carried on in a more efficient way.

8980. When we visited Merxplas the impression I derived was that the majority of the work done in the workshops was either for the establishment, or else for Government; and that only a comparatively small proportion was done for the outside market?—Yes, I think that is so; but there was a substantial amount done for outside.

8981. We saw some mats being made there with the word "welcome" on them: did you notice any of those?—Yes.

8982. That was obviously for the outside market?—Also some jewellery I remember noticing, and numbers of travelling trunks.

8983. (Sir William Chance.) For the Argentina?—Yes. And then there was this, if I may state it; outside manufacturers are allowed to make articles in the colony by the help of colonist workmen. I wrote to M. Dupuy afterwards to make it quite clear, and I have here his answer, which makes it clear. The gist of it is this, that there are certain merchants and manufacturers who, in consideration of a fixed sum per head and per day, can hire the labour of the colonists, and a place for them to execute fixed work. Some definite jobs they may do in the colonies with colonists' labour, and it is the business of those outside merchants to furnish and to pay for the material, and the overseers who are necessary; they supply the material and the foremen, and the products which are made are their entire property, which they sell just as they like.

8984. (Mr. Davy.) Where does the colony come in then?—The merchants pay the colony a fixed sum and get the colonists' labour. The fact that colonists are hired out in Belgium is an illustration of the differences between the two countries; we could not let out colonists in England.

8985. (Mr. Simpson.) If instead of allowing inmates of such an institution to work for people outside, you let a contractor send in foremen to get them to do the work, do you think there would be any objection to that in England?—I should think that the outside market would not like it very much, because if you make A do the work in the colony, B, who otherwise would do it outside, would not get it, and the colonist is being supported by State money all the time more or less.

8986. Were you struck with the great variety of work that was required to be done for the colony, brass work fittings for the chapel, and all sorts of utensils?—Very much.

8987. Probably that was due to a certain extent to the fact that the place had been gradually developed?—Yes.

8988. And there would be a great deal of difficulty in finding work when the place had reached its maximum size; fewer things would be needed?—Probably.

8989. There was very clear evidence of there being exceedingly good workmen there?—Yes.

8990. There was one man, I remember, a marble cutter, who was very good?—Yes, I remember him too.

8991. Well, if men of that class do not get work when they go outside, it looks as though it were due to their own moral defects rather than to what might be called the "Merxplas taint," does it not?—Quite so. I thought I had tried to say the same thing just now.

8992. Yes; I just wanted to make that clear. Really, the fault seems to be rather that it is not successful in reforming, than that it makes them any worse?—I see what you mean, yes; I do not know how far the constant association of all the inmates jumbled up together is not likely to bring them all down; there seems to be very little restraint upon their mixing; they sat about and talked, and mixed very much as they liked.

8993. There is a comité de patronage, a visiting committee there, I think?—I believe so.

8994. Did you hear much of it?—Next to nothing.

8995. Nor did we. Merxplas is a long way from any town; it is difficult to get at?—Very difficult to get at.

8996. If it were desired to bring in outside religious influence to bear on it, it would be very difficult to manage it, on account of the distance?—I cannot imagine voluntary workers going by that tram backwards and forwards very often.

8997. Do you not think that if there was a similar institution in England, we should be able to have a good deal of outside influence like that of the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, for instance?—I should think it would be quite easy, if it were properly organised; it might do a great deal of good, and it might do a certain amount of harm. The officials have it now very much their own way at Merxplas.

8998. Entirely—it seemed to us?—Yes, and the interference might do good, and it might do harm; I do not know whether any prison would welcome people coming in very much.

8999. The prisons have the Church Army coming in a good deal at present; and if that could be done in prison without harm, it could clearly equally well be done at a tramp colony, do you not think?—I always think that the only way of really reforming any of those men is by some personal influence, if you could get it.

9000. Therefore there might be some hope, without being too sanguine, of possibly a little more reformation in an English institution of the same kind than there is at present at Merxplas?—Possibly.

9001. You noticed moral maxims put up on the walls everywhere at Merxplas?—Yes.

9002. And that appeared to be the beginning and end of anything that was really done to bring moral influence to bear on the inmates?—That was my opinion.

9003. It is a very different thing from, say, an English prison, where the chaplain at all events visits the men, and tries to do his best with them?—Yes.

9004. Are you acquainted with the working of the industrial and reformatory school system?—No, I am not.

9005. Speaking roughly, they are institutions which are run by private agency; they are started by voluntary endeavour, and supported by the State to a certain extent; that is a system which clearly gives scope for the charitable and religious influences being brought to bear more than a purely State institution?—Yes, I suppose so.

9006. Do you think that a system of that sort where the institution was run by a private society and assisted out of public moneys would be more hopeful in England than the Merxplas plan?—With compulsory detention under judicial sentences.

9007. Yes, with compulsory detention; that is the system of the reformatory and industrial schools, and the inebriate reformatories?—It might be; I should not like to express a strong opinion about it.

9008. You are not familiar with the working of the system in England?—No.

9009. (Sir William Chance.) As I understand, in your opinion, a general system of way-tickets could not be effectively carried out on the Gloucestershire lines?—I should have thought the tramp would have learned the geography, and been able to apply it to his own ends.

9010. Assuming that it might be possible to make the police the authority for dealing with vagrants, do you think that would give greater facilities for carrying out a way-ticket system?—Certainly, I think it can be better worked through the police than through the poor law authorities.

9011. Identification, for instance, would be much facilitated?—Certainly.

9012. Supposing for instance a man going from A to B applied to get work, he would apply to the police at A; the police then would communicate with B. If this person was going to B, they would know pretty well what time he would arrive there, supposing he kept to the route which had been marked out on his ticket. If he did not arrive at B, the fact of the vagrant being under the police would make his identification, if he went out of his way, much more easy?—Much more easy.

9013. Now, what is the feeling of guardians as regards vagrants; would they be glad to get rid of them and put them under some other control?—I should judge they would be very glad to get rid of them.

9014. That would be the general feeling on the part of guardians?—I should think so.

9015. As to Merxplas, was it your opinion that the labour colony was on much too large a scale?—I should certainly think in England we should have to work the colonies on a smaller scale.

9016. I suppose you would consider that it would be quite impossible with a large number of inmates to bring anything like religious influence to bear on them; there is that difficulty at Merxplas on account of its size?—Yes.

9017. Then, Mr. Davy made a remark that labour colonies had not proved a panacea for the evils of vagrancy; history, I think has shown that?—Yes.

9018. In Belgium, I think, it is considered that labour colonies have reduced considerably the number of beggars in that country?—Yes, they did tell us that.

9019. But more in towns than in country districts?—Yes. The number of beggars in towns has been much reduced; not so much though in the country. The proportion of countrymen to townsmen in the colony is therefore small, if compared on the footing of the total Belgian population. Pretty nearly half the colonies are agricultural, that is of course because of the size.

9020. In the country districts there are not so many police and there is more opportunity for the beggar getting away; there would probably be the same result in England if labour colonies were established?—Yes.

9021. Perhaps also the magistrates are not so inclined to convict in the country districts as in the towns?—Yes.

9022. Have the labour colonies in Holland tended to reduce the number of beggars?—Yes, I am told the number has been very much reduced.

9023. (Dr. Downes.) I gather you have not very much hope of the reforming influence of such colonies as are proposed?—No, I have not.

9024. Do you refer more particularly to the habitual vagrant?—Yes, certainly.

9025. Would you modify your opinion if the man who was going on to the road could be caught at an earlier stage?—There certainly would be a better chance for a man the earlier you get him.

Mr. H. G. Willink.

5 July 1905.

Mr. H. G.
Willink.
5 July 1905.

9026. And I gathered also from what you said that you do not see any use in sending such a man to prison for a month?—No.

9027. You possibly expose him to deteriorating influences?—Yes.

9028. Now, do you think that the maintenance of discipline in a labour colony would be facilitated if the colonist were allowed to earn certain marks or tokens in return for work and conduct, which could be withheld from him if his conduct were bad, or his work were unsatisfactory?—I think any system by which he gets an advantage out of better conduct would be useful as a matter of discipline, so that punishment might be by the withholding of a privilege, and not only by the infliction of some penalty.

9029. It would be patent to the public that the man had had a chance under such a system?—That would be a help too.

9030. Such a system would have to be safeguarded, so that it would not be abused by the privileges being too great?—Yes.

9031. Would you favour the system, as in force at Merxplas, of a canteen, where certain small additions to the dietary, such as tobacco or coffee, could be purchased with those tokens or marks?—Yes, I see no reason why something of that sort should not be allowed.

9032. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) You agree that the only real benefit to be got from a colony is the keeping the men off the road?—Yes.

9033. Have you made any estimate as to the numbers of men who would gravitate into an establishment of that sort in England?—I made some rough estimate that it would be about 25,000.

9034. The cost of that would be enormous, would it not?—It would be large.

9035. Have you made any estimate as to the cost per head?—No, I am afraid I have not.

9036. But the cost of a labour colony in England would be very much larger than in Belgium, would it not?—The cost of the site and of building would be, no doubt, much greater. The cost of supervision probably would be more, and the salaries, and the actual diet and upkeep of the place would almost certainly have to be on a more expensive scale.

9037. It would be an enormous expense altogether?—Yes.

9038. But you think it would be worth while attempting the experiment?—I should like to see it tried in some form or another; whether it ought to be tried by the State first, or by some private institution, is to me the only difficulty; but I should like to see it tried on the habitual vagrant somehow.

9039. (Mr. Davy.) It is being tried now by private individuals?—Yes, but we do not quite know yet how it is working out.

9040. (Chairman.) I think you have a task of stone crushing at your casual wards at Bradfield?—Yes.

9041. Do you find the system is successful financially as well as otherwise?—There is not much money in it, but we have lots of gravel close to us; it is cheap and can easily be got.

9042. What use is made of the crushed stuff?—It is used in place of sand in mortar when ground fine enough; mixed with tar it is a very good stuff for workhouse paths and yards.

9043. Do you sell it to people who want it for garden purposes?—I cannot say that we sell it; we have so very few tramps; if we have five tramps in a week that is more than usual.

9044. (Mr. Davy.) It is rather deterrent work for tramps?—Oh, very, I think, and any man can do it; there is no danger to the eyes.

9045. (Chairman.) And there is no skill about it?—There is no skill about it.

9046. Any ordinary healthy man can be set to work on this; whereas, if you set an absolutely unskilled man on stone breaking with the hammer he will have considerable difficulty for the first few days?—Yes.

9047. On the whole you find the stone crushing a good system?—Yes, we do.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. B. ISAACSON, called; and Examined.

Lieut.-Col.
H. B.
Isaacson.
5 July 1905.

9048. (Chairman.) You are the governor of Manchester prison, I believe?—Yes.

9049. And you have kindly come to us to-day to give us some information with regard to the labour and the treatment of prisoners of the vagrant class?—Yes.

9050. Now what is the labour generally done by these prisoners?—We start them always with picking oakum.

9051. Not stone breaking or wood cutting?—No.

9052. What is the amount of oakum generally done?—That varies according to the toughness of the junk; if the junk is good, always three lbs.

9053. Now what time, taking a man of ordinary physical capacity, would be occupied in teasing that amount of oakum?—He has the whole day. His working hours are from nine to ten hours, and in that time he has to pick that amount of junk.

9054. He has his exercise?—That is independent of exercise and chapel.

9055. And schooling, whatever it may be?—Yes.

9056. And it really does occupy his time during the day?—An expert will not take all day to do it.

9057. Do you vary the tasks in accordance with the physical condition of the men?—Partly so; but more especially I vary it according to quality of junk; what we get from the Admiralty is generally exceedingly good; what we get from private firms is sometimes like wire; it would be very hard work to tease it. Then we reduce the allowance to two lbs., sometimes to less.

9058. But, generally speaking, you say the time taken by a prisoner in doing that task of teasing oakum is something between nine and ten hours?—These are his working hours; he has that time in which to do it; some men work quickly, some slowly, but that is the time he has to do it in.

9059. Now as regards the diet; I suppose it depends in the first place upon the length of the sentence?—Entirely upon the length of the sentence.

9060. What is the average length of sentence given to those men?—Seven and fourteen days as a rule.

9061. Are there more of seven and under, than of seven and over?—I have not noted that particularly; they are all practically seven or fourteen; there are more of seven perhaps.

9062. There are few over fourteen?—Few over fourteen; the mass are seven and fourteen.

9063. Then the seven-day prisoners get the A diet?—Yes.

9064. And over seven and under fourteen?—They go to the B diet at the termination of the A. There are comparatively few over fourteen days.

9065. We have been told by a considerable number of witnesses that the vagrant has a preference for prison treatment and prison diet, over that of the casual ward?—That is a very long standing story. It must be quite twenty years ago when I had my eyes first opened to this that they did not like the casual ward.

9066. No doubt there has been a very considerable improvement in the comfort of the prison of late years?—Yes; but the poor who come under my hands have always hated the workhouse.

9067. When you say the workhouse, do you mean the casual ward?—I mean both; the casual ward they look upon as a sort of prison almost, but even the workhouse generally the poor do not like. My attention was first prominently called to it by the case of a man I recognised when going round the prison. "Why, I know you; you have been here before." "Yes, sir, I have." "You have been here several times." "Well, sir, I have been here five times now, but neither I nor my family have ever been in the workhouse: "great pride there was in this."

9068. Did you ascertain what was the cause of that feeling on his part?—No; it was a very long time ago. I was young in the prison service then. He seemed to think it was a disgrace to his family altogether to go to the workhouse, but did not seem to think it was a disgrace to go to prison. Of course that was not a casual ward; I am speaking generally. But latterly I came to find them hate the casual ward.

9069. Now have you anything to say with regard to classing prisoners convicted of vagrancy with men convicted of crimes?—A vast number of the vagrants I think ought not to be in prison; I do not think the prison is the place for the man who happens not to have a penny in his pocket and therefore lies down under a hedge. The policeman comes by and says, "You come here, I will put you in prison." It seems very hard that he should be classed or associated with a lot of criminals.

9070. There is no question of offence against the person in his case, and consequently you think he ought not to be imprisoned in association with those who commit offences of that sort?—Many of them ought not to be; of course there are vagrants and vagrants; the other day I had an extraordinary number brought to me—137 men one afternoon, who came under the headings of begging, sleeping out, and workhouse offences.

9071. Offenders under the Vagrancy Act that would be?—Yes. It was, of course, a very unusual number, so I thought I would go into their records, and see what they had got to say for themselves. I found out of that 137, 84 were unknown, nobody knew anything about them; we were bound almost to look upon them as being the first time in prison.

9072. They were not identified in any way?—84 of them were not.

9073. Could you say anything about their ages?—I could not; some of them appeared to be old soldiers, some youths, and some of them honest working men who had got no means whatever.

9074. Did they give any account to you of themselves?—Some of them to whom I spoke said they had no work to do, and so they were sleeping out.

9075. Were most of them sleeping out cases as far as you recollect?—Lodging out there were 132, that happened to be a special raid, but 84 of them were unknown; 43 of them gave addresses of next-of-kin.

9076. These would be all from the area of the city of Manchester?—Yes, within a few hundred yards of my prison; some were more or less on the tramp; they were all apprehended in the city. Most of these men were not criminals; you could see from their looks, they had no marks of drink about them, they had not the hang-dog look of a vagrant or a beggar; they were of the working class.

9077. Probably you would say that if there had been a labour colony it would have been better to send those men there than to put them into the cell in the prison?—No doubt, certainly.

9078. Have you at all considered, with your knowledge of prison work, the question of the establishment of a labour colony for certain classes of offenders?—I think it would be a grand thing, but of course there would have to be very careful classification, so that you did not mix the youths with the habitual regular vagrant who had been spending his life on tramp.

9079. I meant a colony for men who have offended against the vagrancy laws and are habitual vagrants; but who are not guilty of offences against the person, or anything of that sort. I understand that you think it would be better to keep men of that class apart from the criminal?—Certainly.

9080. Then for that purpose would you be in favour of the establishment of a labour colony?—Certainly; it should not be made too much of a prison.

9081. It would not be a question of walls and warders, it would be more letting the men know that if they left they would be treated as absconders?—Certainly, and then sent off to the punitive prison.

9032. To be treated more severely if they absconded and were re-apprehended?—I think that would be an admirable thing.

9083. You think it would be worth while trying an experiment of that sort?—Certainly.

9084. You know there are colonies now?—Yes, there are those of the Salvation Army.

9085. Have you not been to one of the colonies?—No.

9086. If there was to be a colony established, would you favour one under voluntary agency or under State agency?—Under State agency.

9087. And the cost in that case would have to be borne by the State?—Yes.

9088. That is a financial question which does not interest you so much?—No.

9089. Now supposing a man to be sent to a labour colony was thoroughly idle and determined not to work, how would you make that man work in the colony?—By some little earnings, but if he did not work after a considerable time and experience, he would have to go to prison; he must not be there an idle example to the others.

9090. Your alternative would be that he would have to go to the cell?—Yes.

9091. Have you considered whether you could make some inducement in the matter of food; for instance, if the man worked well he should be fed better than the man who refused to do it?—I think I would feed them all exactly alike.

9092. You do not think you could influence them by their food?—No. I should feed them all exactly alike. If they persisted in being idle, they must leave the colony.

9093. You think something might be done in the way of giving a little mark money?—Yes, something of that kind; by allowing them to earn money.

9094. In some of the foreign colonies, men are given some little inducement in the way of money for tobacco, and luxuries of that sort; would you favour that system?—Yes, they would be all credited on a scale; after they had been there so many months they might become entitled to a little tobacco, and so gradually work up and up, and be taught to be self-reliant.

9095. (Mr. Davy.) What accommodation is there in your prison?—We can accommodate when quite full, with associate rooms and everything, 835 men and 382 women.

9096. Are you usually full on the men's side?—Practically always full; there is not room enough for the district.

9097. You tell us the task for men is 3 lbs. of junk?—Three lbs. of junk.

9098. Do you allow the men a "finger"?—No, certainly not.

9099. Do you allow a "fiddle"?—Only sometimes, if a man is decrepit or not strong; the medical officer would say, "That man is not quite fit for his full task; take him off the hard labour and put him on to industrial labour." In that case he would be allowed a string around his leg.

9100. That is known as a "fiddle"?—Yes.

9101. Are there hot water pipes in the cells?—No, the cell is heated with hot air passing diagonally through it.

9102. So that he has to deal with three lbs. of junk, fair and square?—Fair and square.

9103. What is the smallest amount of time the man can do it in?—Everything depends on what kind of junk it is; it varies so much.

9104. So that the task that you give varies, too?—Yes.

9105. It is a question what the task will be next week?—It is an accident what the junk will be next week. When we get our junk all from the Admiralty it is a pretty level lot.

9106. What time do you start work in the morning?—We get in an hour before breakfast. The hours are from 6.30 to 7.30.

*Lieut.-Col.
H. B.
Isaacson.*

5 July 1905.

Lieut.-Col. H. B. Isaacson. 9107. Then how long after breakfast?—They work from 9.20 to 12, from 1.30 to 5.45, and 6.15 to 8; those are the working hours.

5 July 1905. 9108. For the short time prisoner?—Everybody.

9109. But if he does his task of junk before that, he has nothing to do?—No.

9110. Is a large proportion of the prisoners exempted from work by a medical certificate?—A good many are.

9111. Would it be half of the short time prisoners?—It is rather difficult to say exactly, because so many little things often intervene; a man may come in very drunk; the first three days he will be more or less unfit for work.

9112. He would escape labour?—He might until he was fit. Then there are others who have got fingers injured, or a wound; and some are very old men; there are so many things to consider.

9113. Supposing a man had slight hernia?—That would not interfere with his picking oakum. Certainly not.

9114. Supposing a short time prisoner refuses to do this work; he is only in for five days; what would you do with him?—He would be put on report, brought before me, and I should punish him.

9115. How would you punish him?—Find out what sort of a man he was, whether he had been several times in prison, or whether this was his first time; I should take that certainly into consideration. If he were an old hand, always coming to prison, I should give him three days' bread and water—the regulation No. 1 punishment diet.

9116. That extraordinary number of sleepers out you told us of were probably the result of a special raid by the police?—Yes, but those raids are going on perpetually; this happened to be an out-of-the-way one.

9117. Those raids would be on complaint, probably, would they not?—Yes.

9118. On complaint of the man who has a brickfield, the police would be bound to make a raid?—I suppose so.

9119. What should you do with those people except send them to prison?—Send them to some place of detention of some sort or other; something must be done for them.

9120. You want a new place, not a prison?—A house of detention would be a very useful thing.

9121. Would that enable you to classify your short time prisoners better?—Yes.

9122. You are not suggesting that sleepers out should be let off altogether?—No. For instance, there is sleeping out with the object of committing a felony, and there is sleeping out, just lying down on the road when you are on tramp; but the number to which I referred just now, was an extraordinary number. But take the numbers for the year; my male population for last year was 12,610; those are the commitments.

9123. (Mr. Simpson.) Number of males received?—Number of males received. Out of that, 2,044, practically one in six, came under one of those three offences.

9124. Vagrancy offences?—Came under either begging, sleeping out, or workhouse offences; practically one in six came under one of those three.

9125. (Mr. Davy.) Were the bulk of them sleeping out? No, the bulk of them were begging; 1,201 for begging, 692 for sleeping out, and 151 for workhouse offences.

9126. (Mr. Simpson.) In the case of begging, some men would be counted several times in the year, would they not?—Yes.

9127. It is the number of commitments, not persons?—Yes, commitments.

9128. (Mr. Davy.) What would be the life for such cases in prison: the first day, there would be filling up forms and being examined by the medical officer?—All might come at three o'clock in the afternoon; practically between two and four. Then they are described, bathed, dressed, seen by medical officer and classed, and they begin work the next morning.

9129. What is the temperature of the water that you give them for their bath?—Very hot; as hot as they can bear it at the moment; there is a laid-down definite temperature prescribed.

9130. It is a real hot bath?—It is a real hot bath; there is no doubt about it.

9131. And they have a fairly large cell according to the prison regulations?—Yes, a very nice cell.

9132. Do they sleep on a hard board for the first seven days?—If they are sentenced to hard labour; they have a mattress if the medical officer orders it.

9133. And they do this oakum picking work, unless they are exempted by the medical officer?—Subject to the medical officer.

9134. Supposing the medical officer certifies them as being unfit for hard work, what work do they do?—He would put them to industrial labour; we might give them oakum.

9135. What is industrial labour?—Industrial labour would be picking cotton, for instance.

9136. Is that a task work?—Picking some wool, and what they call cotton rope; it is much lighter work. If a man has done it before, he will pick 6 lbs. of this cotton.

9137. It is a task?—Yes, it is a task.

9138. Your recollection of prisons dates back to the time when there were tread-mills?—Yes.

9139. And shot drill?—I have never seen the shot drill; the tread-mill I have always had.

9140. The crank and capstan?—The crank.

9141. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) The capstan?—No, not the capstan.

9142. (Mr. Davy.) You had a tread-mill and a crank?—The tread-mill almost everywhere; in one place I had a crank, I remember.

9143. Have you had stone breaking?—Yes, I have done stone breaking.

9144. None of the hard labour tasks that I have enumerated are in existence now?—No.

9145. And oakum picking has been substituted for them?—Yes, it is a greater punishment for a man to pick 3 lbs. of oakum, than it is to go on the tread-mill. I have seen a powerful looking young man of say twenty or twenty-three, go on the tread-mill and tear himself to bits, the perspiration all running down him simply because he was a novice, and knew nothing at all about it. Now if you take an old hand who had been on the tread-mill over and over again, I have seen that man not turn a hair, and not do one scrap of work of any sort, just straighten his arms and let the wheel come to his feet and do nothing. That was why I was so glad to see that tread-wheel done away with; it was too violent a punishment to a fellow who had never done it, and absolutely no punishment to the old hand.

9146. Is not oakum picking rather skilled?—They get into it, and there is an allowance made to a man who has never been in, and never seen it. We give him an allowance the first day, and show him if we see him to be inexperienced at it.

9147. The Departmental Committee on Prisons of 1895 considered that oakum picking should be abolished as much as possible, except for penal purposes. I suppose this would be considered a penal purpose?—Certainly, it is a penal purpose, the first fourteen days; that is the hard labour. It is being absolutely locked up in the cell that the old hand hates.

9148. Being locked up in a cell for a short time would not be much of a deterrent; the weariness of being locked up in a cell would increase in an increasing ratio with the number of days?—Of course the longer the time, the greater the punishment.

9149. I put it to you, to a prisoner coming in after a drinking bout, with a headache, and feeling generally miserable, a prison cell for two or three days might be a positive relief to him?—I do not think so; you would not like to be confined in a little cell with walls all round you; you would want air when you are in that unhappy condition, I should think.

9150. That is the condition of a good many prisoners?—With a good many drink is at the bottom of their trouble; but you want air; it would be torture to be confined.

9151. You want rest and quiet?—Yes, but you want air whatever you do, I should think. There is nothing more horrible than to be locked up in a box in the state of feelings you are describing.

9152. In your opinion, have the prison conditions for short time prisoners been considerably ameliorated in recent years; take labour first?—To a certain extent, but they are made to do their work.

9153. But not the same sort of work as was formerly given?—As I said just now, I think to be locked up in a cell for fourteen days to pick oakum is a heavier punishment than going on the tread-mill for fourteen days.

9154. Now, with regard to food, has there been an improvement?—Yes, there has been a slight improvement in the food.

9155. Has there been any improvement in the bedding?—No, I do not think there has; of course they get the mattress at the end of fourteen days.

9156. The cells are the same?—The cells are all practically the same.

9157. Do you think, for a man committed for fourteen days, that prison is punitive?—Certainly, there is no doubt about that.

9158. (Mr. Simpson.) Have you formed any opinion as to the proportion of tramps and vagrants among criminals, say among men who come in to you for stealing?—Speaking roughly, I should think that very few of the tramps that come in are old thieves.

9159. I was putting it rather the other way; do you think many of the tramps steal?—Take the numbers before quoted; I should be very sorry to say that I thought any proportion of that 84 were thieves.

9160. Those were the beggars?—Yes, beggars or tramps; I should be very sorry to say any one of them was a thief.

9161. But take on the other hand all the thieves you had on that day—all the men committed for larceny?—There were about forty of other sorts received that day.

9162. Of the people received for larcenies or other felonies, or obtaining by false pretences, for instance, what proportion would you suppose to be tramps or vagrants?—I have never considered that particular point; I should rather like to look at my records before giving an opinion.

9163. Now do you consider that the vagrant question is a serious one because the tramp population adds greatly to the crime of the country?—A proportion of the tramps doubtless are thieves, but the tramp population has increased so enormously of late years; men are thrown out of work, and they go on tramp hoping to get work; "I came here because I thought there was some work in this neighbourhood"; that is what they tell me.

9164. As regards persons who commit larceny from the person, or common larceny, do you suppose the majority have a settled place of abode?—No; they have a settled neighbourhood perhaps, but they have no address that they could give you. They will give an address, but we know it is only where they happen to be, their lodging in the district; they seem to hang about in a particular district.

9165. You gave no opinion as to whether the tramp question is serious from that point of view?—Not from that point of view, but I do think this, that an enormous proportion of the tramps are not thieves.

9166. (Mr. Davy.) I suppose they are a great nuisance to you and fill up your prison?—Of course, short timers are in and out, but that is all in the day's work.

9167. (Sir William Chance.) If vagrants prefer the prison to the casual ward, as is quite possible, I suppose they would have no objection to being put under the control of the police generally, instead of under the guardians?—I suppose not.

9168. Is the Manchester casual ward particularly well managed?—Well, I thought the casual ward looked uncommonly clean and well; that was the one at Prestwich; I saw that last week. There was only the task-master there, and he said "Would you like to see where they do their work?" I said "Yes, I should like to see everything." "Those up here you will find breaking stones," and he opened half a dozen cell places, but there were no stones; "I see they are cleared away." So that the work there was apparently over at 12 o'clock and cleared away, and done, I take it, by other paupers. I think that is one thing that the vagrant population hate the casual ward for, viz., that they may be dominated over and ordered about by fellow paupers; I think there is a good deal in that; that is one of their dislikes to the casual wards.

9169. I gather that you are not in favour of extra food being given as an inducement to good conduct in a labour colony?—I should like to see them all fed alike; I would just give a little reward, a bit of tobacco, and they should earn that by some system of marks or something.

9170. You mean that their treatment should be very similar to what it is in prisons?—In prisons we have the A. B. and C. diet; at the labour colony I should suggest they should all begin on an honest good diet that it would be unnecessary to increase.

9171. Would you decrease it for bad conduct?—No, I do not think I should; a man who would not behave himself in the colony would go back to the prison; a colony should not be a prison.

9172. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) You said in answer to Mr. Davy, speaking of forms of labour in prison, that wood chopping and stone breaking had been done away with; you were referring to Manchester prison only?—Manchester prison only.

9173. They do these kinds of work in other prisons?—They are to begin wood cutting in Manchester; I was speaking of my own prison.

9174. This preference for the prison instead of the casual ward is quite an old story?—Quite old, in my opinion.

9175. It was as prominent twenty years ago as it is now?—It was twenty years ago that I first noticed it.

*Lieut.-Col
H. B.
Isaacs.*

5 July 1905.

Mr. JOHN HENRY PARKER WILSON, F.R.C.S., called; and Examined.

9176. (Chairman.) You are the medical officer of Pentonville prison, I believe?—Yes, sir.

9177. You have kindly come to give some evidence with regard to the labour actually done in local prisons by persons convicted of vagrancy or poor law offences, and the test of their fitness for labour?—Yes, sir.

9178. Could you tell us in the first place what is the average condition of such persons coming into Pentonville prison?—They are a very inferior class altogether. I have got a list of 100 men received last year, taken indiscriminately, and perfectly regardless of what the result would be, and I find that out of these 100 men 80 of them were 12 lbs. below the average weight. That is the first important item; then as to the question of labour, I find that 38 of them were unfit for labour in the sense that we mean labour.

9179. Were they short time men?—Oh, yes, sir. I think the longest sentences were six months, but that was exceptional. Those are the men and all about them. (List handed in.) I think the majority were about fourteen days, sir.

9180. The large majority of them were what you call short time prisoners?—Yes.

9181. You say that 38 of them were unfit for labour?—Yes, you will see the reasons there. I have put them all down—crippled, mentally deficient, blind of one eye, spinal curvature, hernia, etc.

9182. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) All the 38 were unfit for some such reason?—Yes, I confined myself purely to casual ward people; I thought that was the most important point.

9183. (Chairman.) Those 100 men were selected out of how many?—Well, the absolute receptions in the prison last year were 18,375; out of those there were 2,041

*Mr. J. H.
Parker
Wilson,
F.R.C.S.*

5 July 1905.

Mr. J. H.
Parker
Wilson,
F.R.C.S.

5 July 1905.

coming under the headings of refractory paupers, begging, and sleeping out.

9184. So the 100 names were taken from that 2,041?—Yes, sir.

9185. (Dr. Downes.) Were they taken haphazard?—Yes, I did not know the result; I had no conception how they would turn out when I had the list drawn up; they begin with April and they finish up with March in this last year. I can give you the details of the 2,041: misbehaviour by paupers 546, begging 1,398, sleeping out 97; that is an increase last year of nearly 500 over the previous year.

9186. (Chairman.) Let us see now, what area does your prison serve?—All the north of London, we go from Grays to Barnet; it is an enormous area.

9187. Have you anything to say with regard to the diet given to these men in prison; for seven days and under would be diet A.?—Diet A., sir.

9188. The diet would vary according to the length of the imprisonment?—Yes.

9189. Are you satisfied that that is a suitable diet for vagrant cases?—Yes. We have to keep the men together, and they have to go out in a fit condition; better if possible than when they came in.

9190. You have told us that a certain number of those people are in rather a low condition?—Yes.

9191. Is the diet in your opinion a sufficient one for the men in these cases?—Yes.

9192. We have been told that there are many cases of vagrants who prefer the prison cell to the casual ward?—Yes.

9193. Have such cases come to your notice?—I do not believe in it, sir; I believe that is purely a newspaper invention. If you will look there, that still more confirms me in what I want to urge; out of these 100 men, 80 have never before been in prison. Well, that is an enormous percentage, if you take the lot; there may be a certain class who know they get a certain amount of glory by making these statements in the courts, and they get taken up and put in the papers, and it looks very well; but my opinion is that the majority of men who come to prison are not in a position to judge one way or another. There is one man there who has had twenty-two convictions. The probability is that that is just the sort of man who lives between the workhouse and the prison all his life. He goes up before a magistrate, makes these very gross statements, and they get taken up by the papers.

9194. Are those twenty-two convictions under the Vagrancy Act?—I do not know; the probability is that they are.

9195. They are probably light convictions?—The way we deal with these cases in London, is that in all probability the man gets to sessions ultimately, and then he gets twelve months. This is done a great deal more in London than in the country, from the returns so far as I can make it out. I went into that question the other day, and I found in 1903 the number of incorrigible rogues dealt with at quarter sessions in London was 170. Well, those 170 would probably all get twelve months; the total number for the whole country was 240, and 170 of them were in London. In the country, either they deal with such cases at petty sessions, or they do not send them up to quarter sessions.

9196. Have you any idea why these men were treated as incorrigible rogues; what was their offence?—Probably begging, or sleeping out.

9197. The incorrigible rogue is generally a man who has committed a good deal worse offence than that; he is first dealt with by petty sessions, then he is sent on to quarter sessions to be treated as an incorrigible rogue. However, all you know is that there are a certain number of people who are committed as incorrigible rogues?—Yes; they are the class which really come under the begging, sleeping out, and pauper cases. These are the class of men I mean.

9198. They must have been committing some worse offence than that to be treated as incorrigible rogues?—Look at the majority of these men; they have some time or other been under me, either for begging or sleeping out.

9199. That may be, but they must have got to some worse offence?—Yes; but those are the class I mean.

9200. I should like to know whether you have at all considered the question of the establishment of a labour colony?—Well sir, it is too big a question for me to give a decided opinion about. I do not know whether these labour colonies could be worked in connection with the pauper establishments in each county.

9201. Do you mean something like a farm attached to each workhouse?—Yes.

9202. Where the men should be able to work and live an open air life?—That is the idea I have, but of course there are so many ways of looking at the thing.

9203. You have not considered it from the penal point of view as a sort of substitute for prison?—It is too big a question, I think, sir.

9204. It does not fall within your province?—No, sir.

9205. (Mr. Davy.) You say that some of these prisoners were below the average weight: do you refer to the average weight of prisoners or of the general population?—Population, sir; weight for height.

9206. Prisoners generally are below the average weight, are they not?—I suppose they are: I have not gone into more of them; it all depends on what class of life they have had and where they come from; this is the average that I go on. (Card exhibited.)

9207. Is that a well understood table?—Yes, that is the authentic table used by everybody.

9208. In the heading "Neglecting to perform their allotted task at the workhouse" do you mean at the workhouse or at the casual ward?—I cannot tell you, sir.

9209. How do you get the heading "workhouse" there?—From the commitment.

9210. Is it simply the "workhouse" stated on the commitment?—No; it simply states "casual paupers refusing to work" or "paupers refusing to work." I have not brought a commitment with me.

9211. It does state "casual pauper refusing to work"?—Some say "casual"; I do not know whether they all do.

9212. That is the ground for this heading "Neglecting to perform their allotted task at the workhouse"?—Yes, sir.

9213. You do not know how many refused to do their allotted task in the casual ward?—I did not know that there is a difference; I have not been round the workhouses.

9214. You do not know the difference between a casual ward and a workhouse?—I do not know.

9215. You do not know that the casual ward is apart from the workhouse altogether and under separate management?—I do not know, sir.

9216. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Are many sent from the workhouse?—I had one case in this morning. It is very curious; he had got six weeks, and I asked him, "What for?" "Refusing to work." I asked him what his work was. They gave him four lbs. of oakum to do and he only did two, and because he did not do his task he was sent to prison. I am only giving you the man's statement.

9217. (Mr. Davy.) Was that offence committed in the workhouse or the casual ward?—I asked him that particularly; he said he was in the workhouse.

9218. It is very improbable that he had a task of oakum to pick in the workhouse?—I can only go by what I have been told, and he said he lived in the workhouse.

9219. You cannot tell us how many of these cases were workhouse inmates and how many inmates of the casual wards?—I did not know there was any difference; I only took the convictions of the men who were sent to us as casuals refusing to work.

9220. What is the hard labour in Pentonville prison?—Oakum picking and sack making.

9221. What is the task of oakum picking?—Three lbs. That and sack making constitute hard labour for the first fourteen days.

9222. What kind of oakum do you give—plain junk ?
—Yes, sir.

9223. Under what conditions is it picked ?—Teased: it is already in the junk.

9224. Do you allow the prisoner any mechanical aids ?—No, sir.

9225. He cannot use a fiddle ?—He cannot use a fiddle ; not in prison life.

9226. You are sure he cannot use a fiddle ?—Positive.

9227. Would he be punished if he did ?—I know he is not allowed to use one ; he used to be in my younger days.

9228. Is it against the rules ?—Yes, sir, in prisons.

9229. What is sack making ?—They are making at the present time coal sacks for the Admiralty.

9230. Is that piece-work ?—Yes, sir.

9231. How many sacks have they got to sew ?—I think it is a sack and a half.

9232. Does it require any skill to sew coal sacks ?—No, not particularly ; they must be done evenly.

9233. Would every prisoner be put on that ?—If there was no oakum ; it is a question of accommodation.

9234. If a man had never sewn a sack before he could be put on to sew sacks ?—Oh, yes.

9235. Is that what you call hard labour ?—It is the only hard labour they can get.

9236. Does it involve physical labour ?—There is no such thing as hard labour ; hard labour is a term used in the present day, but the thing itself is absolutely obsolete.

9237. You mean hard labour is a technical term which bears no relation to the actual facts ?—Yes, sir, there is no such thing.

9238. There is no hard labour which involves physical exertion ?—No, sir.

9239. What are the hours of labour ?—I am not quite sure.

9240. Can you tell me what the dinner interval is ?—Yes, sir, an hour and a half.

9241. These 100 men were taken entirely haphazard out of the 2,041 ?—Yes, sir.

9242. Are they the first 100 ?—Oh, no ; they begin with April and you see they go through the whole year.

9243. Was there any method in taking them ?—Absolutely none ; I went into the governor's office and asked the clerk to give me 100 men ; I did not know what the result would be.

9244. According to your list, of these 100 men only 21 were previously convicted, that is to say 80 of these prisoners have never been in prison before ?—I think that is so.

9245. If you took the 2,041 would you get the same proportion do you think ?—Yes, certainly.

9246. The vast majority—80 per cent. of those short time prisoners are there for the first time ?—Yes, sir, I am not sure it would not be more.

9247. Of those committed for vagrancy offences ?—Yes.

9248. Well, take 80 per cent. ; so the short sentence given to a prisoner of that character cures him ; he does not come back again to prison ?—I do not know about curing him, he does not come back to us.

9249. That is good as far as it goes ?—Yes.

9250. The sentences were ten days to a month ?—There is one there six months, I think.

9251. Now you say that out of that 2041, 1,398 were for begging, 97 for sleeping out, and 546 for misbehaviour ; can you tell me what you mean by "misbehaviour" ?—No, I cannot tell you ; the commitment says "misbehaviour in the workhouse."

9252. Or "casual ward," I suppose ?—Yes.

9253. Would that be included in the refusals to work ?—No, sir ; all those headings are absolutely separate ; they do not mix up one with another at all ; I mean a prisoner comes to us with a commitment ; the commitment states the offence ; if a man is sent to prison for misbehaviour as a pauper, the commitment does not say, "and begging and sleeping out."

9254. Can you tell me how the commitment would run in the case of a man who refused to do his work ?—Yes, it would be "refusing work."

9255. Would that say "in the workhouse" or "in the casual ward" ?—Yes.

9256. It is rather important to know ?—It is a difficult thing to explain. I have had the same difficulty in giving evidence in other cases about these commitments ; the commitments are very peculiar : they specify only the leading offence.

9257. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) They sometimes leave out the name of the culprit and have the witness's name put in as the culprit, and they sometimes leave out the offence ?—I can give you an instance : a man may be had up in the street for being drunk and disorderly or drunk and assaulting the police ; if they put him down as being drunk and assaulting the police, the magistrate will give him a much heavier sentence than if they had put him down as being drunk and disorderly. They always put down on the commitment what may be called the major offence.

9258. (Mr. Davy.) Were there 2,041 cases in the previous year ?—In 1903-4 the number was 1,760.

9259. Can you tell us whether the numbers for 1903-4 showed an increase over 1902-3 ?—No, I have not brought the figures.

9260. From your general knowledge can you say whether there is a general increase ?—There has been a tremendous increase during the last four or five years.

9261. When was the new dietary introduced into prisons ?—About 1900. The Committee was in 1898.

9262. It has been suggested that the increase in these short time prisoners was coincident with the change of the diet ?—I do not think so, sir ; I do not think it could be substantiated.

9263. As a matter of fact, it was co-incident, but I do not say the diet was the cause of the increase ?—No, sir, there are so many other causes coincident about the same time which must have accounted for our enormous increase of numbers ; it would not be in casuals alone. From the time our numbers began to increase in Pentonville alone, they have increased something like 6,000.

9264. Since when ?—1900, I think it is.

9265. That is the number of your receptions ?—Yes.

9266. Now in the same time, in those four or five years that we are now discussing, has there been any other change in the discipline of the prison ?—No, sir.

9267. Is the work the same as it was four or five years ago ?—Except that the wheel has been abolished.

9268. That is a very material change, is it not ?—Yes.

9269. Do you think that the wheel had more deterrence than oakum picking ?—No.

9270. Do you think that the wheel had more deterrence than sack making ?—No, sir ; from my experience of prisoners I do not think anything is deterrent ; whatever you do I do not think you will stop them.

9271. You do not think that severity in the form of task tends to lower the admissions ?—No.

9272. What is the object of giving a task at all ?—I do not know, except from a disciplinary point of view.

9273. To keep them occupied ?—To keep them occupied.

9274. Now with regard to these incorrigible rogues, one must have been convicted several times before being an incorrigible rogue ; possibly the reason why there are more convictions in London for being incorrigible rogues is that the identification there is better ?—Well, I think a good deal of it is due to the fact that there is more pressure put on these people than there used to be in the old days. For instance, when I first went to Pentonville the tramping season used to commence at a certain time, and then we used to lose them all, and we could always tell pretty well where they were going, and then about October they all came back again.

9275. You mean the casual offenders ?—Well, the

Mr. J. H. Parker Wilson, F.R.C.S.

5 July 1905.

Mr. J. H. tramps. There has been a good deal more pressure put on these people in the country.

Parker 9276. Since when?—During the last four or five years.

Wilson 9277. In what way?—By the police, I fancy. I do not think men get the opportunity of tramping about the country with the facility they used to have; I think there is more pressure put upon them by the police, and by everybody in the different counties.

5 July 1905. 9278. Have you any evidence as to that, or is it merely surmise?—No, I have no evidence.

9279. And you think it likely there would be more pressure put upon them by the poor law people?—Yes, that is my impression.

9280. It is only an impression?—It is only an impression; it is an impression which I have derived from the men I mix with.

9281. Now with regard to the height and weight of the average prisoner, the Report of the Prisons Committee of 1895 says:—"The average prisoner in height, weight, strength, and mental condition is markedly below the average of the outside population"?—Yes, I have no doubt he is. He is the lowest type; there is no doubt about that.

9282. And do you think that the tramp prisoners are a lower type than the average prisoners?—They are the lowest thing; there is nothing lower.

9283. You think he has a lower standard of comfort than the ordinary prisoner?—He has no idea of comfort.

9284. What would be hardship to the ordinary prisoner would be no hardship to the ordinary tramp?—No, you cannot get at him; you cannot appeal to him.

9285. Do you think it would relieve the prison administration very much if that class of prisoner were removed to some other institution?—That is what is wanted, undoubtedly.

9286. You think you would be able to deal with the other prisoners in a more satisfactory way?—Yes, if it were something of the labour colony type.

9287. (Mr. Simpson.) Do I understand you to say that you think severity of punishment has no deterrent effect at all?—Not the least in the world; it may have some slight effect, but I do not think in the long run it would be deterrent; it all depends on what you are taking; if you are taking these classes of men I do not think it has any at all.

9288. In the case of persons of the vagrancy class?—Not a bit.

9289. You would not say, I suppose, that it makes no difference whether you give five years or a forty shilling fine for burglary?—No; but then a burglar does not think he is going to be convicted; a man who does an ordinary crime is not a man who thinks he is going to be convicted; he does not take into consideration the conviction.

9290. Surely he would take into consideration severity of sentence?—Not when he is committing the crime.

9291. Suppose the law said the maximum sentence for burglary should be a forty-shilling fine, do you not consider the number of burglaries would go up?—Yes.

9292. Then he would take into consideration severity of punishment?—Up to a point.

9293. If you were convicted of exceeding the speed on a motor car, it would make a difference to your speed afterwards whether you were fined five shillings or five pounds?—Yes, it might.

9294. Therefore, would you not say that, to a certain extent, the severity of punishment does have a deterrent effect?—On criminals; not on these classes of men.

9295. Not on vagrants?—No.

9296. I understand you mean that a pauper in the casual ward, if he knew he would be sent to prison for six months for refusing work, would refuse his work just the same?—Just the same.

9297. Whether the sentence was seven days or six months, he would refuse his work just the same?—Just the same, not a bit of difference.

9298. And in the same way as regards begging, you think a man would beg just the same whether he was sent to gaol for seven days or six months?—Just the same.

9299. You think it is a matter of indifference to him whether he is in the casual ward or in prison?—I think so.

9300. You do not think he prefers prison to the other?—I do not think so. You see you are talking of the casual ward; I take it a man would not be in the casual ward six months. It is well to bear in mind that the difference between a casual ward and a prison is that in the casual ward he is in for the night.

9301. Or two or four nights?—If he is six months the inmate of a workhouse or the inmate of a prison, put it one way or the other, it does not make much difference to him which he is in.

9302. According to your figures about 80 per cent. of those 100 men had not been previously convicted?—Yes.

9303. Most of these men were in for short terms—fourteen days?—Yes.

9304. I do not suppose when a man is in for fourteen days they would always know it in prison?—Our system is pretty severe in being able to trace people.

9305. Do you take much trouble to trace a man who is in for seven or fourteen days?—Oh, yes, everybody has to go through the same routine.

9306. Take the case of a man who has not had a previous conviction at the same police court; do you send up to Scotland Yard to know whether he has been previously convicted?—We may do.

9307. You would not usually with a fourteen days man?—Well, I do not suppose so, unless we were called upon specially to do it; but there are other means of tracing besides Scotland Yard; the probability is Scotland Yard get their information from us, not we from Scotland Yard.

9308. The only way of being at all sure is to trace his finger-prints; he may have been convicted 100 times and gone to other prisons; you would not know of that at the prison except by going to Scotland Yard?—Well, we need not go to Scotland Yard; we have plenty of other means that we employ for finding out.

9309. What sort of means?—We have got previous records and previous histories of the men.

9310. Suppose a man, John Smith, who has been in half the prisons in England, comes to London, and calls himself John Jones, he is run in by the police, and is lodged at your prison without any notice of a previous conviction; you would not take the trouble to find out whether he had a previous conviction?—Oh, yes, if it were necessary.

9311. It would not be necessary in the fourteen days, so why should you take the trouble?—I can only give you the office return there.

9312. I am anxious that there shall be no misconception, because our idea certainly is that the proportion of prisoners who come to prison, who have been previously convicted, is more than 20 per cent.; do not your figures mean only that out of those 100 people only 21 were known at Pentonville prison to have been previously convicted?—Yes, sir.

9313. You say that hard labour now does not involve any physical exercise at all?—That is so.

9314. But that is not the case at other prisons; they have stone breaking at some prisons, have they not?—I suppose stone breaking will crop up. It is a question of accommodation, if you consider stone breaking physical exercise.

9315. Do you not think it is?—It is only a pound hammer.

9316. You have to bend, and at all events you have to use your arms, whereas at oakum picking you only use your fingers?—Yes, sir.

9317. Wood chopping they have at some prisons?—Yes.

9318. That is distinct physical exercise surely?—Yes.

9319. Have you ever been at a prison where they have stone breaking and wood chopping?—No, sir.

9320. When you certify a man as unfit for hard labour, do you mean that he is unfit for the hardest form of hard labour, or do you mean unfit for that special form of hard labour which is practised at your prison?—Oh, I should take it as being unfit for any form of hard labour. That is a form we use. When you have to deal with large numbers of men like we have, you do not know when they might get shifted from one spot to another under different officers or different arrangements, therefore it is no good having half-and-half measures; whatever you order must be definite.

9321. Still, now, take for instance a man with a rupture, he would clearly not be fit for stone breaking?—No, certainly not.

9322. But there is nothing to prevent him picking oakum?—I agree.

9323. Well, at Pentonville would you certify him unfit for hard labour?—I should.

9324. At Pentonville he would get off picking oakum, because he is unfit for breaking stones?—Yes, sir, but then he would be put to other labour which would be tasked just the same, but it would not include the question of hard labour.

9325. Hard labour is purely a technical term?—Purely a technical term, but as I say, when we are dealing with vast numbers like I have to do, it is no good having different arrangements; the thing must be definite. Suppose I say a man is unfit for hard labour, it does not take him off task and other labour; the other labour may be equally hard, but he would not have to do any physical work which would aggravate his rupture.

9326. Well, take the case of a ruptured man, if you knew that hard labour meant nothing more than coal sack making or oakum picking, you could certify him fit for hard labour?—I could do so.

9327. But you do not know, once you certify him fit for hard labour, whether he might not be transferred to another prison and put to stone breaking?—He might be transferred to another floor or another officer.

9328. He might be put into a different lot and told to carry very heavy weights?—Yes, to carry the dinner tins or coal or something of that sort which would be detrimental to his hernia.

9329. (Dr. Downes.) As regards the 38 out of this 100 you certified as unfit for labour, were they certified as unfit in the sense that you have just now been telling us?—Yes.

9330. (Mr. Simpson.) Therefore some of them might be perfectly fit for coal sack making?—Oh, yes.

9331. Industrial labour is a purely technical term?—A purely technical term.

9332. Coal sack making is classed as hard labour?—Yes, sir.

9333. But it is quite as much industrial as making mailbags, is it not?—Absolutely.

9334. Would it be right to say industrial labour is purely productive; unlike oakum picking it is all for some good?—Well, we cannot always say that, sir. I mean to say, the great difficulty in all our prisons at the present day is labour as compared with what it used to be in the old days. In the old days prisons were self-supporting; now of course the difficulty is to get labour of any kind; we do not know which way to turn to get it; in fact, if it were not for Government contracts, I do not know what we should do.

9335. I suppose at Pentonville almost all the work is done either for the prisons or for Government?—Yes.

9336. You do a good deal for the prisons?—Yes, and for the Post Office; we do the Post Office bags and repair them. As I tell you, we are doing coal bags for the Admiralty and all that sort of labour, but that is the only thing we can get. Well, then, there is clothes making, of course, and repairing prison clothes. We make a large number of prison kits.

9337. (Sir William Chance.) A very large proportion of your prison population are of a very low grade of intelligence, are they not?—Yes.

9338. Could you tell me what proportion of them would be those whom you would consider as verging on imbecility, who, in fact, might be regarded as feeble-minded, perhaps?—I could not give you anything accurate, sir. I believe that class of prisoner works out at the present time at about 3 per cent. It is difficult to give evidence when you have not got figures before you. I gave evidence before the Feeble-Minded Commission and worked a good deal at those figures, which came out to about 3 per cent.

9339. That is rather lower than I thought?—Well, it is such a difficult question to decide what the definition is; you see you have got your imbeciles and weak-minded and feeble-minded.

9340. As regards these particular classes of prisoners who come from the workhouse, do you think a larger proportion of them would be of a lower grade of intelligence than the ordinary prisoner?—I do; I think we get the majority from that class.

9341. Do you think they form the majority of these persons in your return?—I should think so; I cannot tell for certain; I have not gone into that question; I did not know I should be taken on the mental side.

9342. But generally a larger proportion would be of a lower grade of intelligence than taking the whole prison population?—Yes, sir.

9343. And as to their physical condition, would the same thing apply to that?—Yes, more so, I should think, because, you see, a lot of them live from hand to mouth; sometimes they do not get food at all.

9344. (Dr. Downes.) Is that an impression, or have you any actual statistics to support that view?—I have no statistics.

9345. It is just an impression?—Well, it is an impression which I get from cases. There is a man here, Robert Lynn, a pauper, who refused to work, who was convicted at Bow Street on June 23rd, 1905, and given twenty-one days' hard labour. Well, I took this case up as an example, and I asked him about it, and he said that he was aged forty, and that he went to the workhouse as he had not had food for two days.

9346. That is only a single case?—Yes, that is all I can tell you. I did not know the exact extent that this was wanted, otherwise I could have got out all the particulars.

9347. (Sir William Chance.) Is it partly for that reason that you would like to see them treated rather differently in a labour colony than in the prison?—Yes, sir.

9348. You think that they cannot be suitably treated in prison?—No, sir. I think you want the labour colony for this class of man more particularly, whatever you like to call it; it ought to be penal, I think.

9349. But principally on account of their physical and mental condition?—On account of their physical and mental condition.

9350. (Dr. Downes.) I see these 100 men are prisoners committed to prison for neglecting to perform their allotted task in the workhouse; do you know officially what the allotted task was?—No, sir, I do not know officially; I know they have told me they have to pick 3 lbs. of oakum and break 1 cwt. of stones; I do not know if it is true.

9351. That is not evidence?—No.

9352. You are not aware that there are other tasks also in casual wards?—No.

9353. For example, such things as cutting and bundling wood?—No.

9354. You are not aware that there is a regulation that a person shall not be required to perform the whole or any part of such task of work, if it shall appear that the same is not suited to his age, strength or capacity; and you have no official knowledge as to whether they were required to perform the whole of a given task, or whether it was only a portion of a given task?—No, I have not.

9355. So that this history is to a certain extent incomplete if you do not know what the task was they were asked to perform?—Not after they come to us.

9356. It is incomplete as to the history before they come to you?—That I have nothing to do with.

9357. I think you said that the present A diet was introduced in 1900?—I cannot say for certain.

9358. Well, we have it in evidence that the A and the B diets were introduced in 1899; Major Clayton told us that for the first two years after their introduction the number of convictions of paupers for misbehaviour, and so on, went down?—Yes, sir.

*Mr. J. H. Parker
Wilson.
F.R.C.S.*

5 July 1905.

Mr. J. H. Parker Wilson, F.R.C.S.
5 July 1905.

9359. You have no reason to doubt that ?—Not at all, sir.

9360. You give your certificate of unfitness for hard labour generally because the men may be transferred to other groups of officers ?—Yes.

9361. You would not say a man of forty-five was incapacitated from doing any work by reason of age ?—He is not incapacitated from doing any work. Those men are excused hard labour. All these men are sentenced to hard labour, and those are the reasons why they are not fit for hard labour.

9362. In the wide sense which you have described ?—Yes, sir.

9363. But you do not mean that they are not fit for any kind of labour ?—We classify our labour.

9364. You have told us that you do not know what the class of task is in the casual ward : so it does not follow that because you certify them as unfit for the prison hard labour, that they were unfit to do the labour in the casual ward ?—No, I cannot say that.

9365. (Mr. Davy.) You have a knowledge of the task of oakum picking ?—Yes, sir.

9366. Would you rather pick 3 lbs. of oakum under prison conditions, or 4 lbs. of oakum if you are allowed a finger and a fiddle, and a hot water pipe, to warm the oakum, as in workhouses ?—I would rather pick the 4 lbs. ; in the old days they used to allow a fiddle in prisons.

9367. (Dr. Downes.) You have a long experience of prison dietary ?—Thirty-five years.

9368. Do you now have to put men on extra bread ?—Never, sir.

9369. Not since the new dietary has been introduced ?—No, sir.

9370. Had you previously ?—Yes, constantly.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

Tuesday, July 18th, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.
Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Mr. THOMAS COLE, Superintendent of the Holborn Division of the Metropolitan Police, called ; and Examined.

Mr. Thomas Cole.
18 July 1905.

9371. (Chairman.) Superintendent Cole, you are one of the superintendents of the Metropolitan Police ?—Yes, of the " E " Division at Bow Street, sir.

9372. And what part of the Metropolis does that comprise ?—It takes from the River Thames across to the Euston Road.

9373. North and south, that would be ?—That would be north and south. Then I take from Northumberland Avenue, through St. Martin's Lane, across New Oxford Street, by the British Museum, straight across Gordon Square to the Euston Road, then down Gray's Inn Road, Mount Pleasant, and Farringdon Street, by Charterhouse Street to Holborn Bars, and back to the Thames.

9374. What is the area of that district ?—About one square mile, sir.

9375. Now, during the twelve months ended 30th June of this year, how many people were apprehended by the police in your district for vagrancy offences ?—For begging, 472 ; and for sleeping out, 40.

9376. Then begging appears to be a prevalent offence amongst the London vagrants ?—Well, of course we can only apportion a very small part of it, because these beggars are very careful ; they will not beg in the presence of a constable, if they know it ; sometimes a plain clothes officer comes across them.

9377. And the kindly hearted people are rather difficult to get evidence from ?—It is very seldom you will get a private individual to give anyone into custody.

9378. Now with regard to sleeping out, can you tell us where that takes place generally ?—Well, the people get into sheds, and areas, and a lot of them sleep on the seats on the Thames Embankment.

9379. If a man is found sleeping on the Embankment seats, do you apprehend him ?—Unfortunately, sir, we cannot ; a policeman will perhaps wake him up and tell him to move on, but there is a difficulty about it.

9380. The sleeping out by itself is not an offence ?—No, sir. First of all we must prove that the man has no means of subsistence, and that is a very difficult thing, because the magistrates have ruled that if he only has a penny in his pocket he has means, and therefore he does not come within the Act ; so it is very difficult for us to deal with those persons. That would probably account for the very small number apprehended.

9381. Of course, in those cases there is not the same danger as in the case of a man sleeping inside a dwelling or on a staircase ; in the latter case there is undoubted risk of fire if the man has matches ?—That is so.

9382. From a man sleeping in the open street on the Embankment there is very little danger ?—Yes. It is dangerous when they get into out-buildings.

9383. I suppose these forty are mostly men who have got into some buildings, outhouses, or something of that sort ?—Quite so. The first thing a policeman thinks is that they might be there for some unlawful purpose. If we find that they have simply gone in there to sleep, then they are charged with that offence.

9384. I should like to have your opinion as to what percentage of the vagrants you come across are men who would work if they could get it ?—A very small percentage, sir.

9385. I may tell you one witness put the number at 1 per cent ?—Well, I would hardly like to go as low as that, sir, but there is certainly a very small percentage of them. I have had an opportunity of seeing them principally this last winter at the Salvation Army place, Wych Street ; night after night you will see the same persons there ; evidently by their dress and appearance they are men who never do any work.

9386. In that Salvation Army shelter do they have to pay something ?—No, they were only given food ; they were not lodged there.

9387. But there are Salvation Army shelters where these men sleep ?—There is one now where they are lodged, and they are charged 2d. a night.

9388. Well, the man would have to get that somehow ?—He gets that by begging. We have been very much pestered with them in the Strand, and all round that neighbourhood, during this last winter. They get round the theatres, begging at the cab doors. That is where the principal number of our beggars are apprehended.

9389. You say a very small proportion of the London vagrants are men who would work if they could get it ?—That is so ; that is my opinion.

9390. They do not come within the description of the unemployed ?—Oh, no ; you can see the difference in the men.

9391. They are unemployed, but they are unemployed by their own action ?—In the summer time a very large number of those go off into the country and we lose them for the time.

9392. We have been told that a certain number of them go hop-picking, and fruit-picking, and so on ?—I think principally they tramp the country and live on charity, and then return ; in winter we find them back again.

9393. I suppose there is a certain number of London people who go out into Kent and Surrey ?—Yes, there might be a few.

9394. Now, what is your opinion as to the effect of shelters, and the distribution of free food ?—Well, with regard to the shelters, I think they are beneficial, especially the Salvation Army shelters. Persons can go in there and get a lodging for 2d. a night. Perhaps they do not mind paying 2d., and that keeps them out of the streets. I think a great many of them go and pay 2d. who otherwise would sleep in the streets. With regard to the free food, I am afraid, however well intended, it is a mistake ; it is so much abused. I am afraid some of the genuine working men go there and they find that they can get food cheap, and then they mix with these habitual vagrants, and so they drift into their ranks.

9395. It tends to make them become idle ?—It tends to make them become idle ; there is not the slightest doubt about that.

9396. Do you know how many vagrants there are in your own district ?—We took a census of them on the night of the 7th July, and we found 1,055 males and 176 females. They were principally found on the Embankment, the larger number of them on the seats. There was a later return in which there was a greatly increased number, that is so far as common lodging-houses were concerned, but they include numbers that we did not include in the first return, sir, because there are people sleeping in the common lodging-houses who do work and are not vagrants. Numbers of the Covent Garden porters sleep in common lodging-houses.

9397. There is a very considerable number of men who do work and habitually use the common lodging-houses ?—It increased our number from 780 to 1,824 by including all.

9398. But those would not be vagrants ?—Those would not be vagrants ; we did not class them as vagrants in the first return.

9399. The man who sleeps in the common lodging-house is not necessarily a vagrant ; there is no vagrancy in that ?—No ; that is why we did not include them all in the return. We included some who were in common lodging-houses, but they were known as vagrants ; they simply slept there for the night, and they are shown separately in the return.

9400. Your return gives 780 men in common lodging-houses, and 274 men elsewhere than in the casual wards or common lodging-houses : now is that an increase on late years or not ?—Well, it is an increase. Of course, I have not made comparisons, but we know we have a larger number of vagrants about the neighbourhood than we had a few years ago ; they are increasing.

9401. Is it not owing partly to the fact that there have been a certain number of men unemployed, not from their own fault ?—I think this free food distribution has brought them into the neighbourhood ; that has been the cause of it, sir.

9402. More than the non-employment ?—More than the non-employment. You see the Church Army started a place in Aldwych which was supported by the King, but they asked the men to do a small amount of labour there, such as wood chopping, and the place was open both night and day ; shelter was given as well as food ; the numbers received averaged 215 for every twenty-four hours, but the Salvation Army numbered 920 a night.

9403. The Salvation Army did not demand any task ?—No.

9404. That would make the difference between them and the Church Army ?—The Salvation Army altered their system afterwards ; they issued tickets, and their officers went out with tickets, and only gave them to those persons who they were satisfied were really destitute from want of work, and the numbers dropped down then from 920 a night to 143 a night.

9405. (Mr. Davy.) What did the tickets do ?—The tickets authorised these persons to go to the shelter and get a meal.

9406. Only a meal ?—Only a meal, sir

9407. (Mr. Simpson.) The Salvation Army have no free shelters in your division ?—I think not, only free food places ; they charge 2d. a night for the lodging.

9408. (Chairman.) I want to ask you one or two questions about hawkers' and pedlars' licenses ; would you describe hawkers as vagrants ?—I think not, sir.

9409. I mean they are mostly people who have a horse and a cart, are they not ?—Yes, they have a horse and a cart, and they pay £2 a year for their license.

9410. They are actual traders ?—Oh, certainly.

9411. You would not describe them at all as vagrants ?—Oh, no, not at all.

9412. Now with regard to pedlars, they are in a different position ?—Well, they are somewhat, sir ; of course, they only pay 5s. for their certificate, but very strict inquiry is made into their character before the certificate is issued. We make the inquiries ourselves.

9413. I suppose the Metropolitan Police take care to inquire into what the position of the pedlar is ?—We do. We make very strict inquiry into their character before the certificate is issued.

9414. So that the pedlar shall not make his certificate a cloak for something else ?—Of course, there are, no doubt, men who go about as pedlars who hold no license, and I am afraid they give trouble at times.

9415. If a man is peddling, do your men ask him for his license ?—Oh, yes, they do ; they charge him when they find him peddling without a license.

9416. When they find a man peddling without a license they take him up before the magistrate ?—Yes. Of course, these men wear no badge, and there is nothing by which a house-holder can identify them as to whether they are licensed pedlars or not.

9417. I do not know whether you have heard of the way-ticket system by which a man would be obliged to carry with him a ticket identifying him, which he would have to show whenever he was called upon so to do ; in that way you would be able to identify the man if he were an habitual vagrant ?—I think it would be a very good system ; something ought to be adopted different to this free food distribution, because that was given to all comers, whether they were working men or not.

9418. With regard to the vagrant using the casual ward, there probably would be very little difficulty in obliging him to take with him a way-ticket ; but there would be a greater difficulty with a man in the common lodging-house, because he pays for his bed, and you could not oblige him to take it ?—But still he should not be able to get a free meal without a ticket.

9419. If you make the way-ticket tolerably general, I think you would agree with me it would be a very good means of identification ?—I do. I have not thought it out, but as you have mentioned the subject I certainly think it would be a good thing.

9420. (Mr. Davy.) What boroughs do you include in your district ?—I have not a whole borough ; I have nearly the whole borough of Holborn, at any rate about three quarters of Holborn.

9421. (Mr. Simpson.) Some of the Strand, I suppose ?—Yes, that is part of the city of Westminster.

9422. (Mr. Davy.) Have you much of Westminster ?—All that part east of Northumberland Avenue.

9423. So that you include a great part of Westminster and nearly all Holborn ?—Yes, and I have a small portion of the borough of Finsbury and a small portion of St. Pancras.

9424. Is St. James's Park in your district ?—No sir, that belongs to the "A" Division.

Mr. Thomas Cole.

18 July 1905.

Mr. Thomas
Cole.

18 July 1905.

9425. You say that you cannot get a conviction for sleeping out unless you prove that the man has no visible means of subsistence?—That is so.

9426. And a penny is held to be visible means of subsistence; is that a recent decision?—Oh, no, sir, that is a decision of old standing.

9427. It is an understood thing?—Yes, sir.

9428. What are the usual sentences for sleeping out?—Well, they vary very much; sometimes the magistrate will simply sentence the prisoner to one day, and if it is the first offence he is generally discharged; they get sentences up to three months.

9429. Are they ever sentenced to a substantial term?—No, unless it is a repeated offence.

9430. How do you know it is a repeated offence?—Well, we know if they have been charged before.

9431. In your division?—Yes, sir.

9432. But you would not know if they had been charged in another division?—No; they get the advantage of that.

9433. They just run the chance of being spotted twice in the same division?—That is so, and the same with beggars.

9434. How many police magistrates' courts are there in your district?—Only one, Bow Street.

9435. So you have only experience of that one?—We send charges to Clerkenwell as well; in part of the district the prisoners go to Clerkenwell; the district and the division of the police court are not the same.

9436. Do you find that the sentences in Clerkenwell and in Bow Street are pretty uniform?—Yes, sir; I think as a rule they are very lenient with these vagrants, because they think there might be a doubt. They make a great many excuses that they cannot get work and so on, and they get the benefit of it as a rule.

9437. You say you do not prosecute them for begging, unless a private individual complains or the constable actually sees them begging?—That is so.

9438. Supposing a man begs at a theatre door from some private individual, and the private individual calls a constable and gives him in charge, what is the procedure then?—The private individual would have to go to the police station to prefer the charge.

9439. Then and there?—Yes, sir, and attend the court the next day.

9440. Suppose he says he will not go to the police station?—The policeman has no power to act.

9441. And if the private individual does not turn up next day?—There is no evidence against the man.

9442. So that it means the private individual must then and there go to the police station, and next day must go before the magistrate?—That is so. Of course, as I said just now, it is very rarely you can get a private individual to go to that trouble.

9443. He would have to be very much annoyed indeed?—Yes, sir.

9444. With regard to common lodging-houses, they supply a necessary want, do they not?—Yes, sir, there is no doubt about that.

9445. You cannot say that they are in any sense a mischief or a nuisance?—Oh, no, I think not; I think the reverse, because they are the means of those people getting a cheap lodging, without which they would be sleeping in the streets.

9446. And in London, at all events, the common lodging-houses are very well administered, I think?—Yes, very well.

9447. Have you any free shelters in your district, any like Medland Hall?—No; no free shelters.

9448. I mean free sleeping shelters?—No; the cheapest we have is the Salvation Army; they charge 2d.; I do not know of a free one.

9449. There are some, but not in your district?—Not one in my district.

9450. You would, I take it, as a matter of principle, be opposed to free shelters, as you are to free food?—Well,

I do not know altogether about that; if there were free shelters, probably these people would go to them instead of sleeping on the streets or in outhouses.

9451. What is the harm of a man sleeping on a bench on the Embankment?—Well, I do not know that there is any particular harm; of course he monopolises the seat; that is the only thing you can say.

9452. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) There is plenty of accommodation at that time of night?—Both night and day; you will see them sleeping in the daytime as well as in the night.

9453. (Mr. Davy.) And he belongs to a very degraded class?—Yes, sir.

9454. And sleeping on these benches makes it easier for him to continue his mode of life?—It makes it rather awkward for respectable people to go and use those seats.

9455. On account of vermin?—Yes.

9456. To your knowledge, do the police exercise any supervision over the people who sleep in the day-time in St. James's Park and lie about there?—All they do is probably to wake them up and tell them to move on.

9457. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Do they do as much as that?—They cannot legally, but they do it all the same.

9458. (Mr. Davy.) Can you wake a man up?—We cannot legally, but we do. If a man says "Well, I am not going to move," then we are powerless; we can do nothing more.

9459. Do you think that is a satisfactory state of the law?—Well, I should scarcely say it is, sir.

9460. You are of opinion that the police ought to have some more definite authority over free food and free shelters and that sort of thing?—I do not know about free food and free shelters, but I do think with regard to these people sleeping in the open, or on those seats and in outhouses, they ought. When we find people asleep in outhouses we take them into custody, because they might be on the premises for some unlawful purpose. It is difficult to deal with them if they have money on them.

9461. Do you charge them with being on premises for an unlawful purpose?—Sometimes, but something might turn up that we are satisfied that they only went there to sleep, and then we charge them with that offence, provided they have no money on them of course.

9462. But taking them on the other charge gives you an opportunity of searching them?—Yes, it does, sir.

9463. I suppose the difficulty is to search to see if there is any money on them?—That is so; we have no power to do that, as a matter of fact.

9464. Might you not say to a man "I am going to apprehend you for sleeping out, unless you can produce some money"?—Well, then he would be sure to say he had money, so that we should not be able to do much in that respect. A man would say "I have got some money, I do not want to go into the lodging-house, I prefer to sleep here."

9465. He might on sanitary grounds prefer to sleep out?—Yes, sir.

9466. (Mr. Simpson.) Suppose a man wants to break into a house, and has got into the outside premises, if he hears a policeman coming, he will probably pretend to be asleep when the policeman comes?—Yes, he might.

9467. And the policeman in the first place can only take him for sleeping out, I suppose?—Well, that depends; if he were going to break into a house, he would probably have some instrument about him.

9468. But you do not know whether he has got a jemmy until you have arrested him?—If the policeman found a man under those circumstances he would ask him his business, and probably say "Now what have you got about you?" and perhaps feel his pockets. If he found a screw-driver or something of that kind about him, he would take him into custody for being on enclosed premises with house-breaking implements in his possession.

9469. So I suppose you convict a good number of people during the year under the Prevention of Crimes Act, for being on premises for a felonious purpose?—Oh, yes, we get a good number of them.

9470. I suppose a good number of those are really sleeping out cases?—No, as a rule they are not of the vagrant class; very few of them are, as a matter of fact.

9471. The constable on duty may know the man by sight as an old thief, may he not?—Yes, that is so, but we find as a rule these vagrants are not thieves, except that they will do any petty little thieving of anything they can lay their hands on easily; they will not go and break into a house; they do anything of that sort very seldom.

9472. But there is a great deal of petty thieving by the cab runners; they will steal if they can?—Petty thieving, but not any such thing as house-breaking.

9473. Petty thieving may mean taking a purse or a chain?—But they are not clever thieves; they will steal anything if they can pick it up easily without any trouble.

9474. Larceny from the person is not a thing that is committed very much by tramps, do you think?—No, I think not, because it requires some little skill to pick a person's pocket without detection.

9475. When you run in a man for begging, would the police of the division usually know the man as an old beggar?—Sometimes.

9476. Are they finger-printed?—No.

9477. Beggars are not finger-printed at present?—Oh, no, sir.

9478. Do you work in connection with the Mendicity Society?—Oh, yes.

9479. I suppose their officers know a great number of beggars?—We send particulars to the Mendicity Society on a form which is supplied for the purpose of every beggar convicted or in custody.

9480. What does the society do with that information?—Well, the society have officers who attend the different courts, and they frequently identify these persons as old hands at begging, and give evidence of their former convictions.

9481. Their officers attend the courts, but they do not act as policemen or look about the streets for vagrants, do they?—Sometimes they do. If they see an old hand begging, they will call a constable and give him into custody.

9482. So that would be a case in which you are helped by a member of the general public, if one may so call the mendicity officer?—He is an officer something like a policeman, acting in the same capacity.

9483. I suppose he is paid by the society?—Yes.

9484. Apart from that private individuals do not do much, I think you say?—Very rarely; we very rarely find a case, unless a householder gets very much annoyed by someone, and then they do it on the spur of the moment.

9485. What would you think of finger-printing beggars so that you would have an easy way of identifying a man if he had been convicted before; do you think it is worth while?—I scarcely think it is; there are so many of them and you see they travel the country so much.

9486. I mean it would be general all over the country, as a way of putting down vagrancy?—I should scarcely think it is worth the trouble.

9487. Do you suppose the magistrates, if they were aware of a long list of previous convictions, would give a much heavier sentence?—It is very seldom they give more than a week at the utmost, and if it is a first offence they generally say one day, and that means discharge at the rising of the court.

9488. Then if you found from the records all over the country that a man had been convicted twenty or thirty times for begging, I suppose they would give him a longer sentence?—That would mean in every case that a prisoner charged with begging would have to be remanded for enquiry into his antecedents, and they do not remand them as a rule; the man is taken into custody say this evening, and would be dealt with to-morrow morning, because the evidence is complete in itself as a rule with regard to begging.

9489. Whether the magistrate knows much of the man's antecedents depends upon whether the policeman who has actually arrested him knows him, or whether a mendicity officer recognises him?—Yes, or very often Mr. Thomas Cole.

the gaoler at the court identifies him.

9490. The Metropolitan police make careful enquiries before granting a licence to a pedlar?—Yes, sir. 18 July 1905.

9491. But if a pedlar comes from another district already with a licence, do they renew it pretty readily?—Yes, sir.

9492. I suppose you do not make the same enquiries when renewing the licence?—Oh, yes, we do; the fact of his having a licence from a constabulary district assists very much; according to the Act he must reside in a place a month before he can be granted a certificate.

9493. Do you find licences in other districts have sometimes been granted in a very easy way?—Well, of course, I cannot say with certainty, but I am rather afraid it is so in some of the country districts.

9494. Do you find, for instance, that men whom you have run in for criminal offences have had pedlars' licences?—No, I cannot say that I do, but I am afraid there is not the strict enquiry made into their character in some of the country districts that there is in the London district.

9495. Probably they have not so good an organisation as you have for enquiring?—No, sir.

9496. Have you in your division had any difficulty with coffee stalls open at night?—We frequently get complaints from the inhabitants about them.

9497. Do you think those complaints are at all well founded?—Well, the noise that takes place frequently at these coffee stalls must disturb the people in their rest; there is no question about that, and we frequently try and shift coffee stalls to some place where they are not likely to cause that nuisance to people.

9498. Man can get hilarious over coffee just the same as over beer?—Well, it is not always that; perhaps they get hilarious over beer before they come to the coffee stall.

9499. After the public houses are closed they gather round the coffee stalls?—That is so.

9500. I suppose they meet a real need in the case of the men who have to go to work very early in the morning?—Oh, I do not think so. They open at the time the public houses close.

9501. Do you think there is any genuine need at all for a coffee stall between, say, 12 and 2 in the morning?—I do not; I should think even a later hour than that, 3 o'clock, is quite soon enough for a coffee stall. Very few men are out going to work before 3 in the morning; printing offices we know are leaving off, but then, as a rule, the men from these are going home on leaving their work, and they do not want to remain at a coffee stall.

9502. Some of the stalls are open all through the night, are they not?—Oh, yes, the majority of them.

9503. And they do not require a licence?—No, sir.

9504. They are not refreshment houses?—No, they are on wheels; they are movable things.

9505. Refreshment houses have to get a licence?—If they keep open after ten o'clock.

9506. How soon can they open in the morning?—Four o'clock. One hour earlier than the public houses.

9507. Is not that rather hard on the refreshment houses?—Not at all; they have only to go to the excise authorities and they are granted a licence at once.

9508. It is only an excise licence; you have nothing to do with it?—Nothing at all; they simply go to the excise authorities and take out the licence.

9509. (Sir William Chance.) The class of persons to whom you have been referring are those who may be brought within the Vagrancy Act?—Yes.

9510. Do you know anything about the class of persons who frequent casual wards?—I should take it they are of a similar class, the majority of them.

9511. You think they are of a similar class?—There may be a few who are going about the country trying to get work, but very few.

9512. I am talking of London now; you think there is not much distinction between them?—They are of the vagrant class, I think.

9513. Have you ever visited a casual ward?—No.

Mr. Thomas
Cole.

18 July 1905.

9514. You have no power to visit, have you?—No, sir.

9515. Do you think it desirable that the police should have power to visit the casual wards?—I do not think any good would be done by it; they are under the charge of very good officers.

9516. Would it not help identification?—If we identify the casuals no good could arise from it; they are committing no nuisance in the casual wards.

9517. (Dr. Downes.) You think the shelters may be beneficial, because they help to clear the streets of undesirable characters?—Yes, I think so.

9518. Now, do you think that these persons who frequent the Embankment at night are undesirables?—The majority of them are, sir.

9519. Might not that be a danger to people passing along the Embankment at night?—Well, there is not much danger; a few probably would molest the respectable people passing by; in fact it has happened, we know, on the Embankment.

9520. That they do molest respectable people?—Yes, in the way of begging and so on.

9521. And there have been cases of infamous charges being brought against people?—Yes, and there have been several cases where they have really attacked people and robbed them, but these are very rare.

9522. But still they exist?—Yes.

9523. And of course they might increase?—Yes, sir.

9524. Have you got more police on the Embankment in consequence of those people sleeping out there?—No, we have not; you see we get vagrants in other parts as well. The beats on the Embankment are rather short, so that the constable is frequently passing.

9525. Have you had experience of other parts of the Metropolitan district?—Yes, sir.

9526. People of that sort would be a danger in an outlying district, would they not?—I should think they would be in the summer, at any rate; during the winter we should probably get them back here again.

9527. Can you suggest any more stringent powers that would be useful to the police in dealing with them?—No, the only thing would be to make it an offence for them to sleep out at night, whether they have means or not.

9528. Their sleeping out appears to be a possible public danger?—Yes, sir.

9529. As regards the use of a way-ticket would there not be a danger that it might be regarded as a licence to continue the vagrant life?—It is open to that construction.

9530. There ought to be some limit of time?—We would then get a better supervision over them.

9531. Do you think that the way-ticket should be limited in time, that is to say, if the man did not get work in a certain time, the ticket would lapse?—There are some who would never get work.

9532. Would you let a man wander about for ever with a ticket?—Probably not, but it requires some discrimination with regard to the issue of such tickets.

9533. (Sir William Chance.) What is your idea of the way-ticket in London?—Well, I do not exactly understand the working of it.

9534. What is in your mind as to what the way-ticket is?—Why, it is to enable a man to attend these places, and get accommodation at night for sleeping. The ticket would enable him to go to a shelter and get accommodation there.

9535. From whom would the man get the ticket; from the police?—That would be going back to our old system. There was a time when the police used to issue tickets for people to go to the casual wards, and that was abolished some years ago; it was found objectionable then.

9536. That is how the way-ticket presents itself to your mind?—Yes.

9537. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) You told us about the men sleeping on the Embankment being a danger to the public; but is it not a fact that people who have designs on travellers choose secluded spots where there is nobody about; for instance, in the parks?—Yes; there are many places, but not along the Embankment.

9538. The fact of the men being there would almost be a source of safety to the passer-by, because I should not think the wrongdoer would select a spot where there were men sleeping all about?—I am afraid those men who sleep on the Embankment, if they saw one of their comrades doing something wrong, would not interfere to prevent him.

9539. But there might be some of them who would answer a call for help?—I am afraid you would not get these others to go to the help of a respectable person.

9540. I should have thought the highwayman would be rather shy of a thickly populated district like the Thames Embankment?—We have had a few cases occur.

9541. A very few cases?—Oh, they are not many.

9542. But compared to solitary roads, the Embankment would not be so dangerous?—Well, we generally find someone passing along the Embankment, that is, within a reasonable time.

9543. (Captain Showers.) Do you think if there were more uniformity in the sentences for vagrancy: that is, if the magistrates made up their minds to give, say, three weeks in all cases, it would act as a deterrent to vagrants?—I think it would do a lot of good.

9544. Do you not think that if vagrants were fingerprinted with a view to previous convictions being proved against them, that also would prove a deterrent to vagrancy?—Yes, probably it would, but as I said before these persons are now generally dealt with next morning.

9545. If you had to find the previous convictions, a man would have to be remanded for a few days?—Yes.

9546. Suppose a vagrant is run in at night, do you feed him that night, if he is in want of a meal?—We do.

9547. And you give him a breakfast next morning?—Yes.

9548. What sort of meal do you give him?—It consists of a pint of coffee and bread and butter.

9549. And the same thing in the morning?—And the same thing in the morning to the cost of 3d.; the cost varies; in some districts they pay 4d. for it; we get it at Bow Street for 3d.

9550. In the provincial districts it is supposed to be three meals a day at 4d.?—Yes, that is so.

Mr. J. MULVANY, Superintendent of the Whitechapel Division of the Metropolitan Police, called; and Examined.

Mr. J.
Mulvany.

18 July 1905.

9551. (Mr. Davy.) You are in charge of the Whitechapel division?—Yes.

9552. What borough does that include?—The borough of Stepney. That is the whole of the old parishes of Spitalfields, Whitechapel, Mile End (Old and New Towns) and Ratcliff.

9553. What is your procedure with regard to persons found begging?—We arrest them, if the evidence justifies it, and if we find that they are actually begging.

9554. What sort of sentence do they get?—Well,

I think, sir, that would entirely depend upon the circumstances of the case, and upon the individual begging. For instance, if it was a man who said he was out of work the magistrate would probably consider what he said; if he was an old beggar then he would probably be punished.

9555. What is the maximum sentence that is given?—As I said, it entirely depends upon the circumstances. A beggar sometimes gets seven days, sometimes gets fourteen days, sometimes a month, and sometimes in the case of foreign beggars the magistrates have exercised their discretion, where the man has agreed to it, and he has been sent back to Russia, for instance.

9556. What police courts have you got in your division ?—The Thames police court in the division, and we also send cases to Worship Street police court.

9557. Do you find the sentences for begging pretty uniform ?—Yes, sir, I should think generally so.

9558. Now what do you do with regard to children found begging ?—We take them before the magistrates, and they are invariably disposed of in a different way ; they are sent to industrial schools.

9559. Are they as a rule sent to industrial schools ?—As a rule.

9560. What is the difficulty in charging the persons who sleep out ?—The difficulty is in proving want of means.

9561. Visible means of subsistence ?—Yes, we are required to prove that they have no means of subsistence.

9562. Do you ever make a serious attempt to find out whether they have visible means of subsistence ?—Yes ; sometimes these people are asked to go into the workhouse, and why they remain in the streets. They will not go into the workhouse.

9563. Does the magistrate sometimes discharge them on a promise of going into the workhouse ?—Invariably, sir.

9564. Do they ever go into the workhouse ?—They promise to do so, but my experience is that they never keep their promise.

9565. Yet the magistrate continues to discharge them on receipt of that promise ?—That is the general practice ; they are discharged on promising to go into the workhouse.

9566. Spitalfields is in your district, is it not ?—Yes, sir.

9567. There you have a very large number of persons sleeping out ?—That is so.

9568. They sleep out on the staircases, do they not ?—They sleep on the staircases of buildings, and anywhere they can get ; they are a peculiar class, a very dirty class of people.

9569. And the staircases on which they sleep are pretty dirty ?—We do not patrol the staircases ; the buildings are private property ; we do not patrol there, sir ; sometimes we find these people sleeping there if we are called to the place.

9570. Why should you be called there ?—The resident would call us.

9571. If he complains, you interfere ?—If he complains we would remove the people as trespassers.

9572. If he does not complain you do not interfere ?—No, because we do not patrol ; we have no right in private buildings.

9573. Do you think that is a satisfactory state of things ?—Personally, I do not think so.

9574. With regard to free shelters, I think you have in your district Medland Hall ?—Yes, sir.

9575. There a man gets free shelter and a certain amount of food ?—He gets shelter and food.

9576. Now what class of men frequent Medland Hall ?—I should think they are the regular vagrant class.

9577. Able-bodied ?—Many of them I know to be able-bodied men, for I have seen them repeatedly.

9578. Do men go there continuously ?—Well, to an extent they do. I have a report here as to the Hall ; it shows that 2,489 of those persons were received in the Hall from nineteen to twenty-four nights during the year.

9579. I see that out of 8,500 men received during the year only 337 were sheltered for one night only ?—Yes.

9580. 2,489 were sheltered from nineteen to twenty-four nights, and 444 for a period longer than a month ?—Yes.

9581. That means that a considerable number of men habitually frequent Medland Hall ?—Habitually frequent the place.

9582. Have you any other shelter in your district ?—There is the Crispin Street night refuge.

9533. Is that run on the same lines as Medland Hall ?—It is a philanthropic institution ; I do not know how it is run.

9534. Is there any other ?—Bedford Institute ; that is connected with the Church people ; they give free meals.

9585. And do they give free shelter there ?—They give free meals and shelter.

9536. You have those free shelters in your district, which includes, as you say, the borough of Stepney ?—Yes, sir.

9537. Now are you surprised to hear that on the night of the 17th February last the county council officers found in the borough of Stepney 303 men and 116 women homeless ?—No, I am not surprised to hear it.

9588. It is a pretty well recognised thing ?—Yes.

9539. So that the shelters do not take in all the homeless persons in your district ?—No, sir, because there are so many shelters in this district that, as night falls, particularly in the winter time, all these persons congregate in this locality.

9590. Is the effect of the shelters to attract that class to your district ?—Certainly, sir ; frequently at Medland Hall and these other places there are more persons assembled than can be accommodated.

9591. Is it not a fact that you see, for some hours before Medland Hall is opened, a long line of men waiting for admission ?—That is so, sir.

9592. Those men are pretty much of a class, are they not ?—Yes.

9593. Hopeless vagrants ?—As a class they are.

9594. Now what is your opinion of the life of a hopeless vagrant ; what does he do ?—Well, he is a man who, in the summer time, perhaps, is invariably found in the country ; in the winter he is more in London than in the summer ; he gets a few pence together by any means he can, either by begging, or wandering about the better parts of London, holding a horse, or carrying a bag, or something of that sort, and makes for the free food shelters at night.

9595. The existence of these men is quite aimless ?—Certainly, sir. Many of these young fellows that I see at Medland Hall lead an absolutely aimless existence.

9596. Do they ever attempt to do work of any sort to your knowledge ?—Not to my knowledge.

9597. In your opinion is the tendency of the shelters to attract other men to this life ?—Well, if a man found himself in necessitous circumstances, it would have a tendency to attract him. I do not think it would attract a man if he had any other means of existence, from the very fact that he would not care to associate with these people.

9598. But once associating with them, I suppose he would become one of them ?—Once associating, I am afraid he would soon mix with them, and be dragged down to their level.

9599. Now what in your opinion is the harm of allowing these people to lead that sort of life in London ?—Well, beyond doing a great deal of harm to themselves, there is the fact that they become dirty and filthy in their habits, and they are a source of danger to an extent to the public from that. For instance, we find them in the public gardens, in the warm days in winter, and the hot days in summer, and we find such places are diverted to an extent from the use for which they were intended.

9600. Do these people remain on the streets till they come either into the hands of the police, or into the workhouses ?—That is so, sir, particularly in the neighbourhood of Whitechapel ; there are numbers of men and women there who are in a very filthy condition.

9601. Should you say that a great many of this class of vagrant were unfit to be at large ?—I do say so, sir ; I have seen many of them, men and women, particularly in that neighbourhood.

9602. Is it your experience that there are some of them not quite sane ?—Certainly, sir.

9603. Just a little bit wrong ?—I do think so.

9604. And they gravitate down to the very lowest

Mr. J. Mulvany.

18 July 1905.

Mr. J. Mulvany. condition of filth?—That is absolutely true, and I might add that the medical officer of the Whitechapel infirmary, Dr. Lardner, could throw a great deal of light on that.

8 July 1905.

9605. The return you have furnished shows that during 1904 in the Providence night refuge over 47,000 free meals were given?—Of that number 22,268 were to females.

9606. At the Bedford Institute 16,010 free meals were given?—Yes.

9607. At the League of Charity 100 dinners daily?—They charge $\frac{1}{2}$ d. each for those; about 500 free teas were given on Sundays.

9608. At the Salvation Army shelter in the Whitechapel Road they gave 50,115 free meals during 1904?—That is for the six months ending June.

9609. Does that distribution go on still?—Yes, there is a certain amount still distributed.

9610. I thought they stopped it in the summer?—At Medland Hall they give tickets away. I might add as regards Medland Hall, that those people that they cannot relieve by taking in, they give tickets to; they can have bread and butter, and a ticket to come back in the morning for breakfast or something like that.

9611. Are those included in the 8,512 free meals given in the return?—Yes, that number were actually taken in during the year.

9612. So that a loafer in your district can practically get free shelter and free meals, or if he cannot get free shelter can get an opportunity of sleeping out without being interfered with?—That is what it comes to, sir. Those people pretty well know the law, and they take the precaution to have a half-penny or a penny upon them; they will ask you for a half-penny on the streets to get their night's lodging, something like that.

9613. (Mr. Simpson.) Have you known any case of a man who has lived on free meals, and afterwards been able to regain his position as a decent working man?—No sir, I have not; I have no personal knowledge of those people; I would not be likely to know that.

9614. Do you think it would be fair to say that the percentage of people who have been saved from starvation by a free meal, and afterwards have been able to become fairly decent working men, is very small indeed?—I should think so, sir.

9615. Practically nil?—Practically nil.

9616. Have you any difficulty about coffee stalls in your division?—No, very little difficulty. Of course, where they are in the streets, undesirable people congregate about them in the early hours of the morning. The coffee stall is not really wanted until about four o'clock in the morning.

9617. You do not think so?—No.

9618. But if undesirable characters congregate there it is easier to keep supervision over them than if they are wandering about the streets?—Well, of course, the undesirable characters will congregate about the coffee stalls, and persons using the coffee stalls use it at certain risk. We frequently find cases where persons are robbed on leaving a coffee stall.

9619. (Dr. Downes.) You get some rather bad crimes occasionally in the neighbourhood of coffee stalls?—Yes.

9620. (Mr. Simpson.) Still those crimes are very exceptional?—Yes, sir. But the coffee stall offers a pretext for the prostitute and her bully to remain there on the pretence of getting refreshment; otherwise if they were standing at the corners of the streets together, they would be moved away.

9621. Under what circumstances do you usually arrest people for begging in your division?—There is not very much of it, sir; you find them begging from house to house sometimes, and sometimes the constable can establish the fact that they were begging, but it is rarely we can get anyone to come forward and corroborate him.

9622. I suppose you never arrest people for begging on someone's complaint; you do not run them in unless the police see them, I suppose?—Unless a gentleman gives a man in custody for begging.

9623. But it is very rare that that occurs?—It is very rare that that occurs, in our neighbourhood particularly.

9624. Do you suppose the people who take advantage of free shelters and free distribution of food do get a fair amount of money by begging in your district?—Well, no, sir, I do not think they get much there.

9625. You think they go elsewhere?—They go elsewhere; I should not think they get much money; I should not think their object is to get much, as long as they get a few pence. My idea is that that would be sufficient.

9626. The distribution of food occurs at night, does it not?—Yes.

9627. And the men who get it probably are not doing any honest work; how can they get their food during the day except by begging?—Well, probably that is how they would get their food.

9628. Do you suppose these men are able to get drink, too?—No, sir, I do not find many of these people that assemble to get into the shelters are drunk, or under the influence of drink. It is very rarely we find that, but we have found cases.

9629. It is just a miserable kind of existence?—Yes.

9630. You took a census of vagrants on the night of Friday, the 7th July?—Yes, sir.

9631. How many did you find there were in your division?—There were 447 men and 54 women found in common lodging-houses, out of a total of 5,973 persons who could be lodged in the common lodging-houses in the division.

9632. Do you mean that there are beds for that number?—There are beds for 5,973 persons.

9633. Do you happen to know how many persons there actually were in the common lodging-houses that night?—In common lodging houses on that night there were 4,302 men and 687 women, and of those we say that 447 men, and 54 women were vagrants.

9634. Many working men use these places, do they not?—Yes; a number of those persons who live in the common lodging-houses that we have not included as being vagrants were men who get their living in the day time by all sorts of means; they are labourers, dock labourers, itinerant traders of all sorts, men selling toys about the streets, and newspaper lads.

9635. Rather a large proportion live in common lodging-houses in your division?—We have a very large common lodging-house population.

9636. Do you visit the lodging-houses much?—Well, no, sir. They are under the London county council now.

9637. You have not often occasion to go in?—No, very rarely.

9638. And you do not see any particular reason why you should?—No, sir.

9639. They are well situated for the requirements of the population in your district?—Yes, they are well looked after by the county council.

9640. (Sir William Chance.) You proceed under the Vagrancy Act, 1824, in regard to that class of persons you have been referring to?—Yes, sir.

9641. And, as to the children, under the Industrial Schools Act, 1866?—Yes, sir.

9642. Now is there any way in which you would think the Vagrancy Act might be usefully extended; do you think it meets all possible cases?—No, sir, the paragraph under which we have to prove that the person has no means is rather difficult of enforcement.

9643. You think the Act should be amended, at any rate, in that respect?—Well, I thought so; if a person is found in the streets at night sleeping out, unless he can give some reasonable explanation why he is doing so, he should become amenable to the law, without requiring us to prove that he had no other means. When he produces it, it is held to be means.

9644. Do you think that the Act requires amendment in any other way?—No, sir.

9645. You think it gives you the necessary powers?—Well, as I said, I thought some competent authority should have power to deal with these persons in the street, who are certainly not responsible for themselves, on account of their filthy condition; many of them remain in the streets practically until they die; they come into our hands as persons ill and destitute; then we take them to the infirmary.

9646. You think they ought to be dealt with before they get into that state?—I have often thought that some authority should have power to deal with such people, even from a medical point of view; for instance the borough medical officers; power should be given to somebody in that direction.

9647. That is for the good of the people themselves?—For the good of those people themselves particularly, and for the general public too, I would suggest. As I have said, the medical officer of the Whitechapel infirmary could tell you of the very dreadful condition in which many of these people are admitted when they are brought to him by us.

9648. You think there ought to be some authority to which those people should be referred by the police?—There should be some power to remove those persons from the streets.

9649. Now supposing you met a man whom you knew to be a confirmed vagrant going along the street with children, have you any power to act in a case of that kind under the Industrial Schools Act—supposing you know the children are evidently leading a vagrant life?—That is the difficulty; when you meet them, you probably know nothing about them; you have never seen them before in London, and a good deal would depend upon the age of the children.

9650. But do you think there should be some power to call upon that man to give some explanation as to why he is travelling about with these children?—Yes; let him explain to a magistrate why he is about the streets at night with the children.

9651. He should be required to show that he is a proper person to take charge of the children?—Yes. We found three upon the night this census was taken, but they were sixteen years of age.

9652. And you knew they were really being trained into a bad life?—Well, we had no evidence that they were doing anything for which we could bring them before a magistrate.

9653. But you suspected very strongly that no good would come to them?—That no good could become of them by wandering about the streets.

9654. Do you know anything about the casual wards in Stepney at all?—No, sir.

9655. You do not visit them?—No, sir.

9656. Do you think much the same class of people resort to the casual wards as you have to deal with outside?—I am rather of opinion that many of those people who go to Medland Hall would not go to a casual ward if they could help it.

9657. Why would they not go to the casual ward?—Because a small task is asked of them before they leave.

9658. Have you noticed the class of people who stand round a casual ward door waiting for admittance?—Yes.

9659. Have you noticed among these any that you know frequent the shelters?—No, I cannot say that; I never observed anybody that I have seen outside Medland Hall.

9660. Do the casual ward frequenters appear to be the same class of people as those to whom you have been referring in your evidence?—I should think the people who frequent the casual wards are rather people on tramp; people who are passing through London.

9661. Do you think they make the casual ward their home?—They come regularly; they go from place to place and pass through.

9662. We have had evidence that the casual ward population of London is on the whole a different class from the class which is outside?—Yes, I thought so myself. The people who go to the shelters would not, I think, go to the casual ward if they could help it.

Mr. J.
Mulvany.

18 July 1905.

9663. Why do you think that?—Well, for instance, they would be required to have a bath; I think many of the people who go to the shelters would be rather averse to that.

9664. So it would appear that it is a worse class of people who go to the shelters?—A worse class of vagrant, I would say.

9665. (Dr. Downes.) The ordinary class of working man does not hang about the coffee stall, but drinks his coffee and passes on?—Yes.

9666. The stall is of use to him?—It is of use to him, but the bona fide working man you would rarely find standing about a coffee stall at one o'clock in the morning.

9667. It is not the coffee stalls, but the people who congregate round it, who are the nuisance?—Yes.

9668. There is a certain amount of horseplay going on?—Yes, sir.

9669. A great many of the coffee stalls have been done away with of late years?—I take it there are not so many now as there were some years ago.

9670. Amongst these street loafers at night, there is a certain number of prostitutes, I suppose?—Yes, sir.

9671. And do they attract gangs of lads in your district; lads who have homes, and who ought to be in bed instead of hanging about a coffee stall?—They attract young men.

9672. They are ready to get up to mischief?—Yes, sir; they are always ready for anything that comes along in that way, of course.

9673. That may be a public danger, I take it, in certain cases?—To an extent, sir.

9674. Would you be in favour of a system by which the habitual vagrants and loafers could be identified, such as by an extension of the finger-print records?—Yes, I should think it would be a very good idea.

9675. If it were made universal, it would be useful in dealing with them in other parts of the country?—Yes, it would be a very good idea.

9676. (Captain Showers.) Do you think the way-ticket system would be a deterrent to vagrancy?—I have no knowledge of it, but I should think it would be a good system if carefully administered.

9677. As a rule, the sentences on vagrants are very short, are they not?—Yes, as a rule.

9678. Supposing the magistrates made up their minds to inflict heavier sentences in such cases, do you not think that would be a deterrent also to vagrancy?—Yes, I am sure it would, sir.

9679. (Chairman.) Do you think it would be advantageous to create by law a class of habitual vagrants as we have created a class of habitual drunkards; the habitual vagrant would be a man who had been convicted so many times, say, within a limited period, and would probably be the case to send to a labour colony; do you agree with that?—Yes, I quite agree with that.

9680. The labour colony is not a place to send a man to who has only been convicted for a first time of vagrancy?—No.

9681. Do you think that if you had a way-ticket system in force in the Metropolitan area, that would be such a means of identification that it would, to some extent at any rate, make vagrancy a less comfortable condition of life than it is at present?—Yes, I quite think so.

9682. As a means of identification you think it would be advantageous?—I think it would.

9683. With regard to short sentences for vagrancy, do you think that a sentence of seven days has the slightest effect in deterring a man from going on with his life of vagrancy?—Not the least.

Mr. WILLIAM VALLANCE, called ; and Examined.

Mr. W.
Vallance.

18 July 1905.

9684. (Chairman.) You were clerk to the Whitechapel guardians for thirty-four years ?—Yes.

9685. So that you have a pretty good experience of the London vagrant ?—Within the Whitechapel area.

9686. Previous to that, you were clerk to the Braintree guardians ?—Yes.

9687. I suppose the vagrant in Whitechapel is as low a type of vagrant as you will find in London ?—The vagrant in Whitechapel is typical of the casual poor person in London. It may or may not be that the poorest of the poor resort to the vagrant ward ; at the same time there is the idle loafer who might work if he would, who resorts to the casual ward, but who is content with the treatment that he receives there, by reason of the freedom that he has when he leaves the ward.

9688. I take it that class of man resorts to the particular casual ward where there is less expected of him in the matter of task ?—There can be no doubt that preference is given by the casual pauper to those wards which are least repressive in their administration.

9689. And probably if there was a better diet, that would rather guide him in his choice of the casual ward ?—I believe that the diet is fairly uniform throughout London.

9690. Well now, with regard to the present casual ward system in London, are you satisfied with it, or do you think it should be amended ?—No, I am not satisfied with it ; I am not satisfied with the associated ward, and I am not satisfied with the cellular ward. I think the associated ward admits of a freedom of intercourse between the vagrants, which is very corrupting to the better disposed. At the same time, I am not free from doubt whether the other does not partake too much of a penal character with its separate cells for sleep and work ; and whether for the purpose of dissociation, some modified form of separation may not be possible. This should, of course, be sufficiently protective to the bona fide wayfarer—however rare he may be—and, at the same time, deterrent to the habitual vagrant. At all events, we should not lose sight of the fact that no form of relief can be successfully adopted which does not carry with it the support of public opinion. With regard to the structural arrangements of a casual ward, my own inclination is in the direction of a simple oblong building with open iron staircases in the centre leading to galleries on the longer sides, opening to which would be small sleeping cabins, whilst on the ground floor might be ranged a series of cubicles for work. These would be sufficiently open to ensure supervision and sufficiently separated, the one from the other, to prevent the corrupting effects of association. The best instance within my knowledge of this arrangement is the workhouse on Blackwell's Island, New York ; but a form of it can be seen at the Well Street sailors' home, Whitechapel. The ends of this building would be retained for light and ventilation, apart from a lantern roof. Then, with regard to the task of work enforced in a casual ward, I am of opinion that corn grinding would be found preferable to stone breaking, or oakum picking. The product would be distinctly useful and the task could be made one of time rather than quantity, and so be adapted to every capacity ; whilst the non-habitual might be employed in the various household duties of the ward.

9691. Corn grinding, I take it, would be done by a crank ?—No, sir, corn grinding by a separate mill, which would only require a dressing machine to take away the bran afterwards, when you would have a product capable of being mixed with the ordinary flour of the workhouse and made into bread. Wood chopping could be carried on in the same way.

9692. Yes, but in a large casual ward would you have sufficient occupation ; would you not grind more meal or flour than was necessary ?—Not sufficient, I should say, for the workhouse.

9693. And for each man there would be a separate little mill ?—A separate mill ; they are made for the purpose. They are already made and used in many workhouses.

9694. Are they very costly ?—No, I cannot say exactly ; perhaps £3 or £4.

9695. In a large casual ward, of course, that would come to something considerable ?—Multiplied by say seventy or eighty, or whatever it may be, as a capital expenditure, it would not be large.

9696. And you think you would get out of that something satisfactory in the way of remunerative labour ?—Yes.

9697. Have you had any experience of a task which we have been told is in force in some places, viz., stone pounding, in a sort of pestle and mortar ?—I have never heard of it ; I have no experience of it at all.

9698. We are told that in some cases a good price can be obtained for the product ; one advantage of the task is that you need not have any expert knowledge of it ; it is not like stone breaking, where a clever man can always break twice as much as a novice ?—It is apparent that stone breaking is an occupation that you could not put certain men to ; for instance it would not be fair to put a watchmaker to stone breaking.

9699. Have you anything to suggest with regard to the dietary in a casual ward ?—I think the dietary should be certified medically to be sufficient for the maintenance of health.

9700. Is it adequate now, as far as you know ?—I am not free from doubt on the point.

9701. With regard to the shelters in the Whitechapel district, have you inspected them yourself ; do you know their condition and the condition of the people who frequent them ?—I have visited them, but I have not paid any recent visit. I look upon them as a considerable evil in the district ; I might say that I formulated for the acceptance of my guardians a resolution on the subject, and this resolution which I drafted represents my views in a few words : " That apart from the injurious results to the district of large incursions of casual poor, attracted from all parts of the country by advertised provision of cheap or free shelters, the moral and physical results to the poor themselves are still more disastrous. No organisation, however complete, can carry out a work of restoration and redemption in perpetually moving crowds of squalid poor, while the shelters themselves make more easy an idle vagrant life, and offer no real solution of the problem of labour and relief."

9702. Have you frequently visited shelters at night and seen the class of people there ?—I have not.

9703. Then you are acting more on the intelligence of other officials with regard to that ?—Yes.

9704. But you are satisfied that the shelters are not, we will say, an unmixed good ?—I am satisfied that they add to the congestion and difficulties of a very difficult district by attracting the country loafer.

9705. What shelters are you now speaking of mainly ?—Well, there are four Salvation Army shelters ; a small Church Army shelter, Dr. Barnardo's shelter for women in Dock Street, another in Commercial Street, the Tenter Street East philanthropic shelter, and three other small ones.

9706. Those are all in your district ?—Those are all in our district.

9707. If those were not in existence, what would become of the people who are using them ; would they be elsewhere than in the Whitechapel district ?—They would probably be elsewhere than in the Whitechapel district.

9708. You think that these people are attracted into your district by the fact of the existence of the shelters ?—I do.

9709. I suppose they are all destitute people who would have to be dealt with somewhere ?—I may say this, that a shelter is a very useful provision in connection with any philanthropic effort on behalf of what has been termed the submerged tenth. A man or woman can be received temporarily, pending arrangements to get them on to their own feet. If it is part of a system of reclamation, then nothing in the world can be said against it, but if it is to be merely a cheap casual ward or a cheap lodging-house, well, then it is not an unmixed good.

Mr. W.
Vallance.

18 July 1905.

9710. The shelters you refer to are all places where persons are taken in for the night?—Yes.

9711. And not only where they can get a meal and are passed on?—Oh, no, these shelters are places to which certain classes resort as a matter of course. They can lead an idle life in the day time, pick up a few pence, which is quite sufficient, and then they can get into the shelter at night. They are thereby attracted to an idle life.

9712. Are there many men and women who habitually use those shelters in Whitechapel night after night?—Yes.

9713. It is not a question of going for one night and passing on somewhere else?—In many cases it is not.

9714. There are some who habitually use the shelters night after night?—They might use the shelters night after night for ten or twelve nights, and ring the changes—go to others.

9715. Have you any suggestion to make as to what should be done with the class of people who use the shelters?—In the absence of the shelters we should not have the same migration of these classes and the congestion of these classes in London; they would be dealt with in the districts from which they come in a much more effective way by the general operation of the ordinary Poor Law.

9716. Do you mean they would go to the casual ward which was nearest to them?—No, the districts from which they come are districts in which they would have a legal right to relief when destitute. They become vagrants by the voluntary act of coming to London.

9717. But if they had not money to go to a common lodging-house and pay for their bed, and there was no shelter, they would probably either sleep out or have to go to the casual ward?—These persons come from a district in which they have an abiding place; in that abiding place they would not go to the casual ward, but if destitute they would apply to the relieving officer in the ordinary way for relief in the workhouse, and they would be dealt with as ordinary paupers.

9718. That would be, of course, if they were at their place of residence?—Yes.

9719. (Sir William Chance.) You say, instead of being relieved in their own parishes, they are attracted to London?—Precisely.

9720. (Chairman.) Have you anything more to say with regard to the arrangements of the casual ward?—Not beyond what I have said; I have not worked out details; I have merely desired to say that I do not entirely approve of the present semi-penal cellular system.

9721. Have you inspected the structure of many of the casual wards in London?—Yes; that is, I have inspected the more modern cellular wards. The last one I visited was St. George's-in-the-East; that is very complete in itself and very costly.

9722. Do you not think that you might have a satisfactory casual ward without going to the very great expense that has been incurred in some of the London wards?—The structural provision such as I have indicated in regard to cabins running off galleries, I am convinced would not cost much, if any, more than one-third of the money.

9723. Then, in your opinion, it is possible to make a satisfactory and proper casual ward without going to very great expense?—I think it is quite possible; I think there is too much money expended upon the erection of the more modern casual wards.

9724. Do you think it would be an advantage if the Local Government Board issued some model scheme for casual wards?—I have no doubt if the Inspectors were asked to confer together upon the general subject, they would soon bring out a satisfactory scheme.

9725. Have you any idea how much per bed that system that you suggested would cost?—No, I have not.

9726. I think you have some views as to dealing with persons who are found sleeping out?—I feel very strongly that in any provision for the casual poor we must carry the public with us, and we must justify our advice to the benevolent to withhold their alms; and I say it is nothing less than a scandal that there should be in London people under any circumstances sleeping out at night; and where a man or woman is found sleeping out within certain specified hours, he ought to be taken by the police to the casual ward, and the casual ward should be open to receive him.

9727. In that case, taking the numbers that are sleeping out at the present time, you would have to make a very large addition to the casual wards first?—You would have to make an addition, but I very much fear we are creating the classes by affording them the facilities for sleeping out. Of those people who are now sleeping out, some would, no doubt, find a place to sleep, and some would gradually fall back into the ranks of the working classes. The law is practically a dead letter with regard to this sleeping out; they see they can do this in London, whereas in many of the country districts the justices are very strict in the matter.

9728. Have you any idea what the relative numbers are of those using casual wards, and of the sleepers out in Whitechapel?—No. Of the sleepers out, the London county council made a census some time ago, and the figures arrived at were tabulated as: walking in the streets 1,509, asleep in doorways etc., 100. That was only in a certain portion of London, in a space extending from Hyde Park to Whitechapel, between one and five in the morning.

9729. You do not know as regards Whitechapel what are the numbers of sleepers out and those in the casual wards?—No, I could not say.

9730. I was trying to arrive at the additional provision which would have to be made in case you got all the sleepers out, and took them, as you suggest, to the casual ward?—The compulsory admission of the sleepers out into the casual wards is not going to increase the number of casuals by that number, or anything like it.

9731. Because you think the practice of sleeping out would be given up?—Yes.

9732. What is your opinion as to the effect of the way-ticket system in the Metropolis?—I think in the Metropolitan area the way-ticket would be absolutely useless for a man who spends his year in going from one casual ward to another casual ward in that area. The ticket could only be used for begging purposes.

9733. But if the police asked for the production of the ticket that might afford a means of identification of the man as to whether he was really in search of work?—The question would be under what circumstances the police constable would be justified in asking him for the ticket.

9734. If the way-ticket system were established, you probably would have to give the police increased powers?—With regard to the way-ticket system generally, I am very much in favour of a man carrying with him some credential, either from an employer or someone who can show that the certificate is bona fide, to enable the master of a workhouse or the superintendent of a casual ward to deal differently with him, and to discharge him in the morning without work or further detention. I believe there would be advantage in that; in fact, in the case of the Whitechapel wards, the superintendent had instructions years ago, immediately after the Act of 1882 was passed, to exercise very careful discrimination and to discharge men—reporting it to the guardians afterwards—at six o'clock in the morning with their breakfast and without work.

9735. It would act in other words as a passport to that man?—Yes. On the other hand, if the way-ticket is to be adopted generally, I have considerable misgivings in regard to it.

9736. Now with regard to the present method of short sentences for vagrancy offences, do you think the sentence of seven days or under is in the least effective in deterring a man from his method of life?—Well, sir, whilst I am in favour of a little relaxation of the strictness of what I call the semi-penal character of the casual ward, I do admit that under certain conditions, where a man is adjudicated by a justice to be an habitual pauper, he should be dealt with by law, and sent, say for two years or some such period, to a labour colony. By a labour colony, I mean an industrial colony, under the Home Office.

9737. How would you identify a man as being an

Mr. W. Vallance. habitual vagrant ?—By finger marks, or some system of that sort.

18. July 1905. 9738. Then you suggest that a man who is an habitual vagrant should be sent on to a labour colony ?—For a long period.

9739. You would have a better chance of reformation in that way than by a series of short sentences ?—That is so.

9740. (Mr. Davy.) You think a uniform treatment of vagrants is desirable ?—Most important.

9741. Do you think the uniformity ought to extend both to London and to the country ?—The same uniformity could not be extended, I am afraid.

9742. Uniformity of the same sort ?—Of the same sort ; it would be a uniformity of its own in the country unions.

9743. Is there any uniformity in London at present ?—Tolerable uniformity as to diet ; tolerable uniformity, I suppose, in regard to task of work.

9744. Is that so ?—Excepting in one ward where it is not possible to break stones because of the structural arrangements.

9745. Have you visited the wards ?—I have visited several, but not many.

9746. In Whitechapel do you detain ?—Yes.

9747. You detain always two nights ?—Yes.

9748. Do you think many of the vagrant wards in London detain two nights ?—A large proportion of them do ; at least, I assume they do.

9749. What is the task of work at Whitechapel ?—4 lbs. of oakum, I think.

9750. In Whitechapel are the vagrants a considerable source of trouble ?—No.

9751. You have not built expensive wards, I think ?—No ; they are old associated wards and the guardians some years ago were requested by the Local Government Board to consider the question of erecting improved wards. The guardians were not entirely satisfied with the arrangement of their own wards ; they felt that something should be done ; at the same time, they thought public opinion was decidedly wavering and there was a likelihood of some other system being adopted, and therefore they have held their hands.

9752. If they had built those wards, the cost would have been borne by the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund ?—Yes.

9753. So that you exercised some self-denial in not building them ?—I must say for the Whitechapel board, whatever may be said of some others, that the question of the charge does not influence them in the slightest.

9754. Still it might ?—Oh, it is quite possible.

9755. You told us that you think sleeping out is a scandal ?—Yes, sir.

9756. Why do you think so ?—I think it is a public scandal that a man or a woman should be allowed to sleep out. It implies a destitution for which they are unable to obtain relief, notwithstanding that the relief can be obtained for the asking ; and it leads to verminous conditions.

9757. Do you know that you cannot prosecute a man for sleeping out unless you show that he has no money in his pocket ; he must be without visible means of subsistence ?—I suppose a great many of them have no visible means of subsistence.

9758. Say a man sleeps on a bench on the Embankment, what is the harm ?—It is a scandal in this sense, that there is a public authority charged with relieving the destitute, and impliedly these are destitute people and should be relieved.

9759. Suppose they do not choose to be relieved, but prefer to sleep on a bench ?—But it is contrary to law for a person to lodge, inter alia, in the open air, not having any visible means of subsistence and not giving a good account of himself.

9760. Would you put it that it shows such a low standard of comfort in those people who prefer to sleep out as to constitute a sort of mischief ?—I think it acts in a variety of ways. In this way, too, that the public from their cognisance of the fact that all these hundreds of people are sleeping out say the cause of it is the severity of the laws in regard to the relief of the destitute, and what I feel is that the relief provided by the community should be such as to disarm all opposition and to carry public opinion with us.

9761. You are aware that it is difficult to get sentences for sleeping out in many parts of the country ; the magistrates do not convict ?—Yes, I am aware of it.

9762. Would not sleeping out in the country be a more serious offence than sleeping out on a bench in London ; a man might have matches in his pocket and hay ricks might be set on fire ?—Yes, possibly.

9763. You are also aware that a great many people look upon sleeping out as a very venial offence ?—That may be ; still the law takes cognisance of it as an offence.

9764. You have told us you are against way-tickets in London ?—Yes.

9765. Are you against the provision of a mid-day meal for a vagrant ?—I should be against the provision of a mid-day meal in London.

9766. A man is detained two nights, he is then discharged in the morning and cannot go into a casual ward until the evening ; how is he going to get his mid-day meal that day ?—To give him a mid-day meal would be to relieve him entirely from the necessity for exertion. It is the "odd job" which he seeks, and which enables him to lead a loafing life. That is the demoralising part of it.

9767. Do you think that we can safely assume that he gets his mid-day meal somehow or other ?—Yes.

9768. And you would not provide him with one ?—I see no necessity for it.

9769. It was stated to us if people knew that a man could get a mid-day meal they would not give him so much promiscuous charity ; what do you think of that ?—I should have no serious objection to a ration of bread being given.

9770. On leaving the workhouse ?—On leaving the workhouse.

9771. I see in your notes you refer to a proposal to abolish a distinction between the vagrant and an ordinary pauper ; have you anything to say on that subject ?—It is not generally recognised that there is difficulty in defining the term "vagrant." And yet the broad principle prevails that a destitute poor person, whether vagrant or not, and whether voluntarily, and even criminally, destitute or not, has an undoubted legal right to be relieved at the cost of the public rates. It is also authoritatively laid down as incumbent upon guardians and their officers to afford such relief without regard to residence, settlement, character, or antecedents. And yet we find that a distinction—little more than nominal, perhaps—does exist between resident and non-resident poor, and that a special form of relief is designed for the class which is variously described as "vagrant," "casual," "wayfarer," "wanderer" and "houseless poor." The earliest poor law legislation was directed to the repression of "sturdy vagabonds" and "valiant beggars," between whom and the resident poor (who were prohibited from leaving the hundred in which they dwelt without certain special permission, under pain of the stocks) there was an unmistakable line of demarcation. But this distinction no longer exists. True, an ordinary pauper is presumed to be a pauper who is resident within the parish or union in which he seeks relief ; and relief cannot legally be given to any person who does not reside in some place within such parish or union ; but this restriction is only apparent, since there follows in the Orders of the Local Government Board the wide exception of "the case of a person casually within such parish and destitute." The effect of these words is to make "destitution" the sole legal claim to relief wherever such destitution exists ; and whether the applicant be or be not resident in the parish or union in which the application may be made, the guardians and their officers are equally responsible for such relief. We thus find that there are two distinct forms of relief for two apparently distinct, but scarcely distinguishable classes of destitute poor.

9772. Why do you think an able-bodied man who applies at the casual ward is a destitute poor person ; he may not be destitute ; he is an able-bodied man ?—

Yes, but he may allege destitution and the allegation cannot be gainsaid.

9773. Would you admit to the workhouse an able-bodied man simply because he applies for relief?—If he is destitute, yes.

9774. But would you admit anyone without any sort of inquiry?—A man applies to the relieving officer and says, "I am destitute." The relieving officer says, "But have you made an honest attempt to get work?" "Yes, I have." "Go and make another attempt, and come to me again if you cannot get along." I am speaking now of the country system. And the man comes later in the afternoon and he says, "I have been everywhere round such and such a parish; I cannot find any work." "Have you got any money?" "No." "You are perfectly destitute?" "Yes." "Nowhere to go?" "No." "No means at all?" "No." "There is an order." The relieving officer has no alternative.

9775. I am not talking of that case at all; I am talking of the man who comes to the door of a workhouse and says, "I am destitute." Would you admit him without enquiry?—Enquiry is not practicable at the door of the workhouse in the case of the vagrant alleging destitution.

9776. That is the case of the ordinary tramp, is it not, the able-bodied man who applies for relief; he may be destitute, but he is not necessarily destitute?—Of course, the arrangement for granting the relief is that the master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the vagrant ward should admit the man on an order from the regularly appointed accredited relieving officer for vagrants. If the wayfarer applies to the master for relief and is destitute of a night's lodging, it will be the duty of the master to admit him.

9777. As a sudden or urgent case?—The interpretation of "sudden or urgent" in that case is very difficult.

9778. Are you aware of the Circular of Mr. Charles Buller in 1848, where the whole matter is discussed at some length?—Yes, but you have got to deal with this in the light of the general decisions of justices. The officer who is charged with the duty of relieving those persons, if anything were to occur to that man, would be amenable to the law for having neglected his duty.

9779. In view of the suggestion that the vagrant should be treated as an ordinary pauper, would you admit him to the workhouse on his own statement, though he might be able-bodied, without enquiry, and, having admitted him, would you put him with the ordinary paupers?—Yes.

9780. And how long would you keep him?—I would let the ordinary rules operate.

9781. He would have to give notice of discharge?—Yes.

9782. An ordinary pauper is entitled to discharge himself from the workhouse on twenty-four hours' notice?—Yes, if he has not previously discharged himself within a month. But for more frequent discharges there is an increased power of detention.

9783. So that his detention would be less than at present?—Yes, under the circumstances I have mentioned.

9784. And would give him the ordinary workhouse diet?—Yes.

9785. That varies from day to day?—Yes.

9786. There might be a chance that a man might get a meat dinner or a potato dinner?—Yes.

9787. Would there be any objection to that, do you think?—I may say that I have always felt that there is one claim, and one claim alone, to relief from the public rates, and that is destitution; and that an able-bodied person who is destitute should be relieved in one way, and that is in the workhouse. I may just refer to the fact that the Central Poor Law Conference in 1880 (upon a paper which I read upon the subject of vagrancy) adopted a resolution to a similar effect. In 1888 I gave evidence before the House of Lords Committee. I then also expressed my opinion in the same direction as did three or four other witnesses, but in the face of the evidence the House of Lords Committee definitely reported in favour of the retention of the distinction; and therefore since then I have spoken with a good deal of diffidence.

9788. But you see there are difficulties?—Yes, no doubt there are difficulties.

9789. Might you not also treat the wandering destitute able-bodied person, as being a law breaker, and let the police look after him?—I do not see how the police are to look after him without bringing him before the justices, and then the difficulty would be to get the justices to support such a policy. With regard to the intervention of the police generally, within my own experience in the country, a sergeant of police was appointed an assistant relieving officer for vagrants, and of course he was distinctly told that the object of his appointment was to bring a little more pressure to bear upon these men who were travelling the country and living upon society, and that he must be as strict as possible with them. This strictness frequently took the form of urging them on another stage. But eventually local public opinion was aroused and the police-sergeant settled down into a "relieving" officer.

9790. What happened to the number of tramps?—They increased in number.

9791. (Mr. Simpson.) Is the casual ward at Whitechapel separate from the workhouse?—Yes.

9792. And you have a superintendent at the casual ward?—A separate superintendent who is the relieving officer for vagrants; they apply at the door.

9793. Are the staff under him, quite independent of the workhouse?—Quite independent.

9794. The vagrant applying at the casual ward probably is not, as a rule, a resident within the union?—No, he is not.

9795. Does it occur to you that as regards casual wards, it might be better to have a larger area of administration, say the county; it would then be more possible to get uniformity?—I do not quite appreciate the advantage that would arise from that.

9796. If vagrants are maintained at the cost of the rates of the particular union, is there not a temptation to induce them to go on to the next union, so as to shift the burden?—That may apply in the country; it does not apply in London, since every expense in connection with the casual ward including the maintenance of vagrants, is a charge upon the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

9797. The Metropolitan Common Poor Fund is derived from the London unions?—Yes, in accordance with their rateable value. The expenses of the vagrant wards, including the repayment of principal and interest, including maintenance, including even soap and soda, are chargeable upon the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, which is administered at the Local Government Board.

9798. Distributed there?—The contributions and claims are dealt with there.

9799. Take the case of two unions; say one simply spends money on the vagrants that come to the vagrant ward, and the other spends large capital sums on improving their ward, does not the latter get any more from the fund than the former?—No; if the expenditure of Whitechapel were in the hands of Kensington, the charge would be precisely the same.

9800. Do you not think in the country a larger area of administration would be of advantage in the way of securing greater uniformity of treatment and expenditure?—You might secure greater uniformity and there might be certain improvements in the administration, but it would be at very considerable cost, and it would, I fear, afford an inducement to guardians unduly to shift their poor and convert many of them into vagrants.

9801. Do you think the casual wards in a county might be managed by a joint committee of the guardians of the different unions within the county?—It would require very costly machinery to carry it out.

9802. (Sir William Chance.) How long were you clerk at Braintree?—Three years.

9803. Your poor law experience began before that?—Oh, yes.

9804. When was your first appointment in connection with the poor law?—Forty-four or forty-five years ago, I think.

9805. When did you first begin to take a special interest in the vagrant question?—The question was not a prominent question in the country; I did not take part in

Mr. W. Vallance,

18 July 1905.

Mr. W
Vallance.
18 July 1905.

any discussions or read any papers or anything of that sort in the country; I did not take up the question really until I came to London.

9806. Do you remember the reports of the Poor Law Inspectors in 1866 on vagrancy; Sir John Walsham was, I think, the Inspector of your district?—Yes.

9807. Do you remember his report?—No, I do not.

9808. Are you aware that he then expressed a very strong opinion in favour of the police having the entire control of vagrancy?—Yes, I think he did.

9809. And several of the other Inspectors expressed the same opinion at that time?—Yes, probably.

9810. You remember the coming into force of the Act of 1871?—Yes.

9811. What was the effect of that Act in Whitechapel?—I am afraid I cannot speak very clearly as to that. I have not the figures.

9812. You cannot remember whether there was a decrease in vagrancy immediately after that Act?—At that time there was a decrease to such an extent that at my suggestion the Bethnal Green and two other casual wards were closed, and we received them all in Whitechapel.

9813. After that there took place an increase of vagrancy?—Yes.

9814. I think the opinion grew that the Act and Order of 1871 were not sufficiently stringent?—That is so.

9815. Then the matter came before the House of Commons again in 1882, and the Casual Poor Act was passed, and there was a new Order?—Yes.

9816. Which made the law more stringent?—Yes.

9817. There was again a decrease after that, was there not, in London?—A temporary decrease.

9818. And then vagrancy rose again?—Yes.

9819. And what are the conditions now?—A continuous increase.

9820. That, I suppose, is sufficient to show that, however we dealt with vagrants in the past, we have not been very successful in stopping vagrancy?—Precisely.

9821. At the same time, you do not think there is much change required in the present system?—I am not prepared to suggest in the face of the House of Lords' Committee Report that the distinction between vagrant and pauper should be abolished. We have got the distinction after a careful inquiry, and after hearing evidence in favour of the abolition. The Committee reported strongly in favour of retaining the distinction, and, therefore, I feel a good deal of diffidence in now expressing an opinion to the contrary.

9822. You accept the position now that it is quite impossible to carry out the views expressed by you in 1888?—I accept the position that, whilst the evidence appeared to me to be in favour of the abolition, and yet in face of that evidence the Committee reported to the contrary, the Committee must have had some reason which acted powerfully on their minds in specially reporting in favour of the retention.

9823. All the evidence was in favour of abolishing the distinction?—Several clerks to guardians gave similar evidence.

9824. Do you think that the appointment of police as assistant relieving officers in the country has had a good effect in those places where it has been adopted?—I do not know whether it has been generally so. There is no doubt that the appointment of a police officer as an assistant relieving officer has a deterrent effect upon certain applicants for relief. At the same time, as I said in my own case, a point is reached at which the police officer, finding he is no longer a police officer but a relieving officer, says, "I cannot accept the responsibility of acting in the strict way I have been doing." So that there is a breakdown at once.

9825. Have you sent any vagrants from Whitechapel to Hadleigh or any other labour colony in England?—No.

9826. As a matter of fact, I think very few vagrants have ever been sent to Hadleigh?—If I had been asked the question I should have said we had no power in the case of vagrants.

9827. You might recommend them to go there?—The order authorises vagrants to be detained in the workhouse, but I am not aware of any authority to send them to a labour colony.

9828. You could recommend the vagrant in your casual ward to go to Hadleigh; have you ever done that?—The superintendent of a casual ward is generally a very intelligent man, and I believe he does his best to discriminate and find out men who have got any good in them, and who may possibly be lifted up by being brought into contact with hopeful influences, and to introduce them accordingly.

9829. And you think that some vagrants may have been brought to Hadleigh in that way?—Some may.

9830. But you do not know that they have?—I do not know that they have; I should think not, unless they had passed through one of the shelters.

9831. Now is not the vagrant in London rather different from the country vagrant?—I should say he was very different. The London vagrant is in most cases a loafer who simply migrates from one ward to another. He is in Whitechapel to-night and in St. George's-in-the-East to-morrow night, and he will go across to Kensington the next night, but he does not leave London. If he gets a copper or two in his pocket he may go to the Salvation Army for preference; he may ring the changes; he has a happy-go-lucky sort of life.

9832. Therefore so far as regards the London vagrant, the way-ticket system would be of no use at all?—The way-ticket system, in my judgment, would be of no use at all in London. If a man has got anything in his pocket which bears evidence of his bona fide intention to travel down to Newcastle in search of work or anywhere else, that credential produced at a casual ward should have its effect in preferential treatment.

9833. Now, in the case of a man starting from London, who would give him that credential; he would have to go to somebody for the purpose?—Yes, and it should bear some stamp of a proper official authority.

9834. What would be the proper authority?—The poor law authority would be the better, I should think, where there is no credential from an employer.

9835. Do you think they could make the proper enquiry as to that man?—Yes, if he is in the district.

9836. Do you think the police would be the proper authority to go to in the country; do you think they would be the right people to issue the way-ticket?—The only objection I have is bringing the police into contact with the administration of the Poor Law. I think the police and the Poor Law ought not to be associated.

9837. Do you draw any distinction really between the ordinary vagrant and the man who frequents a shelter or the loafer who is generally known to the police?—None whatever, and in London I would go further and say a great many of those who resort to the casual wards have been in the workhouse, and a great many men in the workhouse have been in the casual ward.

9838. Would there be any objection then, having regard to that, to bringing them under the same authority; it is difficult to differentiate between the casual pauper and the ordinary vagrant?—It is so difficult that in practice it really depends upon the door at which the man applies for his relief. He goes to the door of the casual ward and he says, "I want a night's lodging; I am destitute." He must be received there. He comes to the relieving officer in Whitechapel and says, "I am down on my luck; I have nowhere to go; will you give me an order for the workhouse?" The relieving officer asks him questions about his residence, and says, "You must go to the casual ward." He goes to the casual ward, and next morning he comes to the workhouse. That is how he gets into the workhouse.

9839. You have told us of the disadvantages of these free shelters?—Yes.

9840. Do you not think they should be under the cognisance of the police, and be visited by the police in some kind of way?—I do; I think they should come under the Common Lodging Houses Acts.

9841. You do not consider there is much difference between the ordinary tramp and the loafer who begs or wanders about the street, and resorts to a shelter or common lodging-house?—Not in London, but in the country the tramp is a different genus.

9842. Do you think the country tramp is different from the vagrant in London and other large towns?—Yes, there is a very considerable difference. The tramp in the country goes his stages of ten or twelve miles, living as he goes upon society, intimidating every man and woman he meets, and he gets on very well. He also may take his family with him, and pots and kettles, which have to be taken care of. He tramps longer distances, and his experiences are different, and he turns out to be a different man from the man who is just loafing about London.

9843. On the other hand, there are the London tramps who go into the country for summer holidays, for instance?—Yes.

9844. As regards that country tramp that you have described who uses threats to get money, would there be objection to the police dealing with him?—Perhaps not.

9845. I suppose one of your objections to the sleeping out is that it attracts indiscriminate almsgiving?—There is no doubt it does.

9846. You think sleeping out should not be allowed?—The fact of men and women sleeping out at night implies that they are destitute of the means for obtaining a lodging. If they are not destitute of the means, they should not be allowed to sleep in public places, because it leads, amongst other things, to crime. Many crimes which are committed at night are the result of being about the streets late at night. There were two cases at sessions the other day of young fellows who had been wandering about. One of them said, "I have had enough of this," and he took up a big stone and threw it through a plate glass window of the value of £20 or £25. If the man had been in the casual ward or any lodging, of course, that would not have occurred to him. At all events, in the administration of the Poor Law, no matter in what department, I do feel that we must seek in every way to carry the public with us, and to educate the public. You will never educate the public by introducing the police, and the police alone, for everything. Let the public see that, as far as practicable, the administration is made educational as well as deterrent; then they will have a good deal of sympathy with us.

9847. You have taken a great deal of interest in the question of vagrant children?—Yes, I have.

9848. What would be your idea as to their treatment?—I entirely agree with the Bill with which you are associated, the Bill which was introduced last year.

9849. You think that the children of habitual vagrants should be taken away from them?—Yes.

9850. (Dr. Downes.) Have you ever heard any suggestion of public good or advantage arising from these people perambulating the streets at night or loafing, or sleeping out in a great city?—None whatever.

9851. I gather from what you have said that you conceive that there are many disadvantages and even dangers to the community from such a state of things?—I do.

9852. I also gather that such a state of things is promoted and increased by the existence of these free shelters?—There can be no doubt about it.

9853. Which under present circumstances, so far from reclaiming people, rather attract others into the abyss?—Precisely.

9854. Have you considered what control might be exercised over shelters to prevent this result?—I am not aware of any control which could be exercised, other than in the preservation of public health. It is difficult to see in what way the police or the London county council could interfere, either with the general scheme of providing shelters or with the internal economy of those shelters.

9855. But it might be required that they should be so ordered as not to be a danger to health?—Oh, clearly.

9856. Or not to be a nuisance to the community in which they are established?—Yes.

9857. That is to say, the local authority of the district, whatever it may be, should have some control over shelters which are established in their midst?—I feel that very strongly.

9858. I see you have a note in your statement about the wards being made more helpful to the vagrants; what have you to say on that point?—Well, take the London casual wards; as I have said before, we should seek to carry the public with us, and what occurs to me is that if the boards of guardians were required to appoint vagrant ward committees, and if each vagrant ward committee had authority to co-opt a certain number from outside of ladies or gentlemen interested in philanthropic work, so as to afford a medium of communication with helpful agencies, the public would be satisfied that something was being done, and only a residuum be left to the strict discipline of the wards.

9859. That is to say, you would introduce some machinery which might prove helpful in the way of reclaiming the man who was going on the road?—Yes; I think that there should be every information possible in the ward, that the papers which refer especially to labour should be in circulation there, that the superintendent of the ward should be in touch with any labour bureaux in the district, so that in exceptional cases—I am sorry to say they are few—every means might be taken to bring these people into contact with helpful influences.

9860. The object of the casual ward should not be to help a loafer to loaf through the country, but to facilitate the movement of the bona fide working man in search of work if he exists?—Yes, I think a given number of admissions to the casual ward covering a specific period of time and subject to the adjudication of justices, should render a man liable to conviction as an habitual pauper.

9861. Do you see any advantage in sending first offenders to prison for an act of vagrancy?—No, I do not.

9862. Might there not be certain disadvantages in sending a man to prison even for a short time?—I think so.

9863. The present system of sending people to prison for vagrancy offences is not, in your opinion, advantageous?—No; the main object, I take it, of a labour colony would not be alone to place a man under a lengthened period of restraint, but to introduce into his life the habit of work and the element of hope.

9864. You would be in favour of a conviction for begging, say, being recorded against the man?—Yes.

9865. You would identify a man as being an habitual vagrant by his finger-prints?—Yes.

9866. There would be evidence that he had been using casual wards?—Unmistakeable evidence that he had been resorting to casual wards with the frequency which may bring him within the category of an "habitual pauper."

9867. When would you first get his finger marks?—When the system commences, whenever he comes into the ward.

9868. You would have the finger marks taken in the ward?—Yes; I may say that the present system of identification is very imperfect; it depends really upon the recollection of the visiting police officer who visits the ward.

9869. As to the structural arrangements of casual wards, can you tell me whether the Well Street home that you spoke of was built for its present purpose, or was it adapted?—It was built for its purpose, but in many respects, it is admittedly defective. The workhouse at New York is a much more perfect and efficient arrangement, as regards staircases and galleries. Still, there is something of the same principle in both.

9870. Where do they do their cooking at Well Street?—That is another department altogether.

9871. Is there a cook or does each man cook for himself?—All meals are cooked for the inmates, who pay 10s. 6d. a week.

9872. (Captain Showers.) Notwithstanding your experience at Braintree, are you not in favour of the police being assistant relieving officers throughout the country?—Well, my experience is so remote that I should prefer leaving the question to be answered by those who have some recent knowledge of the working of it. That was my one experience, but it is forty years ago.

Mr. W.
Vallance.

18 July 1905.

Mr. W. Vallance. 9873. Do you think longer sentences would be a deterrent to vagrants?—I do, if you could obtain them.

18 July 1905. 9874. In a labour colony would you have two grades, so as to give a man a chance to rise?—Yes, there may be advantage in that.

9875. Do you not think it would rather be an incentive to make him turn over a new leaf and become perhaps a useful man and work, by letting him rise to the higher grade and the higher benefits and so on?—I think it is an excellent suggestion. May I just say, sir, that some years ago Mr. Piddock, of Toynbee Hall, visited the Whitechapel casual ward for three to four months, night after night. He examined the circumstances in great minuteness of some 530 men, and he made a very careful analysis. Of 200 men, 36 had been admitted for the first time, 37 for the second time, 43 had been in and out of the ward more than a year, and 84 or 42 per cent. had resorted to the wards periodically for over five years.

9876. (Mr. Davy.) Have you any further information as to that enquiry. I do not think we have that pamphlet?—Yes, he also made a careful analysis of the causes of their resorting to the casual ward. The principal causes were drink, crime and dishonesty, desertion from the Army, insubordination and quarrelling, incapacity and negligence and so forth, 17 per cent.; personal causes, family or physical reasons were 19·2; then various causes such as voluntary dislike of particular occupation, unsuccessful attempts to better themselves, private disputes with employer, non-membership of trade societies, 7 per cent.; economic causes (involuntary), that is, inability to find employment, bad clothes, seasonal causes, foreign competition, displacement by machinery, and so forth, 54·4 per cent., and 2·4 miscellaneous. Of course, with regard to the conditions in which these men exist, one cannot help feeling the temptation there is on the part of parents to place their lads in unskilled employment. They get in as carters, or something that requires no previous knowledge at all, and the fellow when he grows up has got nothing in his hands. It is no doubt a very considerable cause of pauperism that they have nothing to resort to and no skill of hand.

9877. The drawback of all these conclusions is that they are taken from statements made by the men themselves?—Well, in a measure, no doubt, but they are also more or less deductions from their statements.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

Wednesday, July 19th, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.
Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Mr. BROOK T. KITCHIN, F.R.I.B.A., called; and Examined.

Mr. B. T. Kitchin. 9878. (Chairman.) You are the Architect, I think, to the Local Government Board?—Yes.

19 July 1905. 9879. How long have you been in that position?—I have been Architect for 4 years, and was Assistant Architect for 8 years before that.

9880. Amongst other things you have given your attention to the construction of casual wards?—Yes.

9881. What is the practice of the Local Government Board with regard to giving advice to public bodies when they are constructing casual wards?—Well, the procedure is this. A scheme is initiated for the construction of casual wards quite independent of our Department; at any rate so far as architectural matters are concerned it is quite independent. It is initiated by the local authority, I think, very often with the assistance of the Inspector, and when it has been considered and decided upon, the scheme is submitted to our Architectural Department; sometimes it is submitted in an embryo form—in the form of sketch plans—before anything definitely has been decided; that is to say, before the money that is going to be spent has been considered at all.

9882. Do they give an estimate when they send the plan?—Not with that sketch plan.

9883. It is not compulsory on them to send you an estimate as well as a sketch?—Not at that stage. We are prepared to look at the scheme in sketch form without any reference to the cost.

9884. But before they commence any work they have to send you a detailed estimate?—Oh, yes, certainly.

9885. Then you have the examination of that estimate?—Yes, that comes on later.

9886. As well as the plan of the building, you have the examination of what they estimate as the cost?—Yes.

9887. Have the Board power of rejection of those schemes?—Yes.

9888. Within your knowledge have schemes been rejected on the ground of being insufficient and badly conceived?—Yes, and schemes have been returned for modification; and there are cases where schemes have been dropped entirely on account of the Board's opposition to them; but as a rule they are returned either for modification on account of the expense or details, or whatever it may be.

9889. Does a local authority often, or ever, apply to the Board to be furnished with a plan of a scheme?—Unofficially, they sometimes come to me and ask me for assistance.

9890. For suggestions?—To lay down some lines for them upon which they can proceed.

9891. Have the Board what we may call any model scheme for a casual ward?—Yes, there was one prepared many years ago, but it is not used at all now, or since I have been in the Architect's Department, that is in the last twelve years.

9892. Would it not be a decided advantage to have one or more model plans for a casual ward; of course, it would depend on the particular locality very much?—Yes, it would very much. A board of guardians do not like adopting a cut and dried plan. It is rather well that they should not; they might get more than they want or they might not get sufficient.

9893. You might have two or three suitable for various localities, but you think on the whole it is better to wait for their scheme?—On the whole, I think it is better to deal with the plan that they suggest. It is a little more laborious, but I prefer to deal with it in that way.

9894. Now as regards the casual wards that have been constructed within your knowledge, I suppose the cost per bed varies very much?—Yes, enormously.

9895. Can you say what would be the average cost?—Well, in London I should think the average cost per bed

Mr. B. T.
Kitchin.
19 July 1905.

would be about £150 roughly; I have not actually worked out the average. In the country, speaking at a guess, the average, I should think, would be something like £60.

9896. (Captain Showers.) Does that mean only the separate cells?—No, that is the whole thing, including the administration buildings; they cost a good deal more than the cells.

9897. (Chairman.) That would include anything in the way of a dining room?—Yes.

9898. And all the outbuildings, I suppose, of every description?—Yes.

9899. What would you suggest would be an average sufficient cost per person in an agricultural labour colony?—Well, I have looked into that question as closely as I could, and I have got a memorandum here giving what I think to be the initial cost of a labour colony. A great deal depends upon the amount of land and of farm buildings, and of course on the general character and cost of the land. This is a rough sketch (see Appendix XXXI.) I have had made in the Department showing a little labour colony, with about 150 beds in two blocks, a large and a small pavilion, an isolation block and a little hospital block, a dining hall and kitchen, bath rooms, lavatories and laundry, and a boiler house; a superintendent's cottage, and a cottage for the steward, bailiff and two other officers. All that I reckon would cost £6,396. That is simply the buildings; it does not include the cost of the land, farm buildings, road making, or furnishing. It comes to £53 per bed; that is the cost of the brick buildings, exclusive of furnishing, road making, and drainage, and all that sort of thing. The cost of the actual dormitory accommodation I reckon would be £19. 7s. 6d. a bed.

9900. (Sir William Chance.) What are the materials used in the buildings?—Brick almost entirely in that estimate.

9901. (Mr. Davy.) You have no model plans you told us for vagrant wards?—There is a plan, but we do not use it.

9902. But you have some general instructions on points on which you are asked, I think?—Yes.

9903. Do these include information as to the construction of vagrant wards?—Yes.

9904. Do you now insist upon the provision of cells?—The Board's requirement is that cells shall be provided in vagrant wards.

9905. And is that requirement insisted on now?—I believe so.

9906. Have you any knowledge of the decision of the London magistrates that a man may not be locked up in a cell?—I have heard of the decision; I have no official knowledge of it.

9907. That would necessitate an attendant walking up and down in the corridors and passages?—It might, but it does not. I believe the actual practice now is to lock them up, and if they want to come out to let them out.

9908. If they come out what is the use of the cell?—Well, they are locked in till they do their work.

9909. They may or may not be locked in?—Yes.

9910. When you have plans submitted to you do you ever reject them on the ground that they cost too much?—Yes.

9911. And bring a certain amount of pressure to bear on the guardians to make them cost less?—Yes, that is very common indeed.

9912. Do you find that guardians are occasionally somewhat obstinate and insist on spending the money?—Yes, extremely obstinate in some cases.

9913. Guardians would be advised by their architects in those cases?—Well, they would to some extent.

9914. How are architects usually paid?—Five per cent commission.

9915. Therefore the greater the cost the greater the commission?—Yes.

9916. You say that in London the average cost per bed is £150, and that in the country it would be about £60, that is a little more than one-third of the cost in London?—Yes.

9917. Can you account for that great difference?—Well, it is accounted for in different ways. In the country there are a great many more unions, and a great many unions build their casual wards at a cost of something like £30 to £50. In the average of course you have got a good many of those smaller vagrant wards; but, if you take the larger towns in the provinces, they do not come out at so very much less than the London vagrant wards. For instance, Manchester cost £148 and Leeds cost £145. Brentford was very expensive.

9918. It seems to suggest that the cost goes up in urban districts?—Those are larger towns where you see the cost is very much higher, but there are a great many smaller towns where the cost is considerably lower; for instance, Farnham is only £55.

9919. Do these sums include the cost of the site?—No, they do not.

9920. The site usually belongs to the guardians already, being on workhouse ground?—Yes.

9921. Now, what is the cost to a rural union of providing new wards, according to your requirements?—Well, it has been done for £33. I think that is about the lowest—£33 per bed for the whole system.

9922. What would that provide for?—At Tavistock the cost was £33 per bed: there were fifteen cells that cost £500.

9923. That is exceptionally low, is it not?—Yes: there is another, Pewsey at £39.

9924. How many cells?—Twenty-three.

9925. What was the total cost?—£900.

9926. A very poor rural union may be compelled in order to carry out your requirements, to spend a very large sum of money?—Not necessarily. Take the case of Royston; they provided their cells out of some old shed, some old out-building, I think it was, and that came out at a merely nominal sum of £5 or £6 per head. We should not necessarily insist on new casual wards being built, if something could be done with existing buildings.

9927. Quite so, but a very poor rural union might have as many casuals to provide for as a large urban union?—Yes.

9928. And the question of providing wards would fall with special severity on that poor union?—Yes, it would.

9929. For housing casuals who really do not belong to them more than to the rest of the country?—Yes, but I do not think the Board would insist on a very expensive scheme in a purely rural district.

9930. I presume you do not want to insist upon a very expensive scheme anywhere?—No, we do not.

9931. If it is good enough for the country, why should it not be good enough for the town?—What I mean is: every union, I take it, has casual wards of some sort or another; and it has either to be a matter of extension or the building of new casual wards, and if there was a very poor district that complained of the burden of this undertaking, I do not think the Board would press them to build new buildings, if they could utilise or make shift with some old buildings.

9932. I suppose the Board would press them to provide such buildings as would enable them to carry out the regulations with respect to detention?—I suppose they would; I could not say.

9933. It is an expensive thing to provide cells for two nights' detention?—Yes.

9934. What term of years do you allow for casual ward loans?—Thirty years for new vagrant wards.

9935. Are there any special regulations with regard to London?—No, the regulations are the same in that memorandum: that applies to London equally with the rest of the country.

9936. Do you not impose on London guardians a very expensive scheme?—No: we rather take the opposite line; we try to make them build less expensive vagrant wards.

9937. In London, the cost of the vagrant wards falls on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, does it not?—Yes.

9938. So that the guardians spend the money and the whole Metropolis pays?—Yes.

Mr. B. T.
Kitchen.
19 July 1905.

9939. The position of your Department, I take it, should be more strictly in favour of economy in London than elsewhere?—Morally, perhaps, but I do not agree altogether with that; morally we might be, but I think that our Department looks at everything from the same point of view; that everything in the way of building for casual wards must be done as cheaply as possible.

9940. So that you do not put any extra pressure in favour of economy upon the London wards because the cost is borne by the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—We have put extra pressure, but not because the charge is on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund; we do not take that into account.

9941. You simply look at it from the building point of view?—Yes.

9942. What is the greatest sum that has been spent on a London vagrant ward?—The largest amount that has been spent is at Hackney, £36,710.

9943. Those wards have just been opened, I think?—The sanction was given in 1899.

9944. You were not Architect to the Board at the time they were built?—No.

9945. The actual cost was, I think, greater than the amount you mention?—No, not that I am aware of; I can verify that if you wish. It was only part of a scheme which was proposed; there was a great deal cut out, including a test house.

9946. The test house was entirely cut out?—Yes.

9947. What is the accommodation provided?—For 62 men and 44 women; there are 32 cells for women.

9948. Roughly, 100?—106 inmates.

9949. That would bring the cost up to £350 a cell?—£346.

9950. Do you regard that cost as excessive?—Yes, certainly.

9951. Can you account for it in any way?—It was an expensive building. There was a lot provided in the building in connection with the test house, which was not dropped. When the vagrant wards were built, there was a large water tower provided which was to supply the whole of the test house, which remained in the scheme in case the test house was completed at a later stage. Then there was a great deal of money spent upon foundations; they were down on the bed of the River Lea, and they had to go down 14 or 15 feet with concrete to get a base for their buildings.

9952. Then there was a wall round the place?—Yes, I was going to refer to that. There is a wall about 14 feet high round the whole of the building, including the site for the test house. I do not know what the actual cost of that was, but it was a very expensive item, no doubt.

9953. There are also some boilers there that would be sufficient for a large institution?—The boilers were provided for the whole scheme.

9954. Would the cost of the test house, if sanctioned, have fallen on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—No, I think not. I should say perhaps that the Board urged the guardians in this case to provide another site, as it was foreseen that it was going to be a very expensive building, on account of the foundations.

9955. The whole of the charge was put on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, I suppose?—I believe it was.

9956. Including those buildings which were not for the vagrant ward, but for the test house?—I think a proportion was taken out; I know it was very carefully divided; the accounts of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund are very carefully watched at the Local Government Board, and I am pretty sure I am right in saying something was taken out on account of all that was left that would be usable in the event of the test house being erected.

9957. In your judgment, if we had to build further vagrant wards in London, the same sort of expenditure might again take place?—It should be £160 to £170 under ordinary circumstances.

9958. But here it is £346?—Yes.

9959. There are, I think, about forty water closets in that vagrant ward; do you think that was necessary for 100 people?—Well, I was not aware that there were so many water closets; I think there are four or five on each floor; and they are for women as well as men. I have not actually counted them.

9960. The point to consider is the possibility of such an expenditure being incurred again?—Yes; well, so far as London is concerned, unless there is some radical alteration in the policy, I do not see how it is going to be very materially reduced. Of course, there are a lot of elements which tend to make London building particularly expensive.

9961. The requirements of the Board are not likely to be relaxed, unless there is some general change?—I think the proof is rather that the requirements of the Board do not necessarily involve such very costly buildings. Under the requirements of the Board, buildings for £33 or £43 per bed have been sanctioned.

9962. Still, the fact remains that the Board sanction loans chargeable to the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund to the extent of an average of £150, and occasionally approaching £350 a cell?—Yes; but whether it was the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, or any other fund, it would be much the same.

9963. We must presume that the Department does the best it can for economy, especially in the expenditure out of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund?—Yes; I could give you several instances, if you want to have them, as to what steps have been taken in order to get a reduction of the cost made.

9964. Would it be right to say that the provision for vagrants in London is enormously costly?—It is.

9965. Now, with regard to labour colonies, have you seen the buildings at Hadleigh or Lingfield?—Yes, I have seen them both.

9966. Are they, in your judgment, sufficient?—They differ very much, Hadleigh and Lingfield.

9967. Well, take Lingfield, where, perhaps, there are the better buildings?—Lingfield, I should say, would be quite sufficient.

9968. Do you know what they cost per head?—So far as I can make out from particulars I have got, the cost per head for sixty colonists was £97, but that I find is a good deal less than what Mr. Brooks stated. That does not include the road making, or the drainage; and they have got no sewage disposal system there.

9969. We only want to know the buildings?—Perhaps I had better just say what that total cost includes:—

	£
Existing farm of 250 acres - - - -	2,900
Recreation hall and workshops - - - -	350
Dormitories and dining-room - - - -	1,000
Piggeries and cow-sheds - - - -	650
Two cottages - - - -	550
Furniture - - - -	180
Laundry and water supply (proportion of rent to the colony side of the institution) - -	200
Total - - -	5,830

but I think that last item, £200, is rather low.

9970. (Sir William Chance.) Of what material are the dormitories built?—The dormitories are built of concrete 9971. Is that cheaper than wood?—No.

9972. But cheaper than brick?—Yes, a little cheaper than brick.

9973. (Mr. Davy.) Several of those buildings are of wood?—The dining-hall is wood.

9974. Why should a dining-hall not be of wood?—Well, it depends; I should say it depended whether the thing was experimental or not. If it is experimental, I see no objection to it being of wood; if it is a permanent institution, I think it is an economy to build it of more solid material—brick work.

9975. But I mean apart from the question of loans?—You cannot depend on a wood building lasting more than ten or twelve years.

9976. But, as a matter of fact, they do last much more than ten or twelve years, do they not?—Well, I do not know that that class of building would. They want to rebuild the dining-hall at Lingfield, and they say they will not rebuild it of wood; but if it was a really well-built building of wood it would last more than ten or twelve years; it would not be very much cheaper than brick.

9977. I put it to you that it would last forty or fifty years?—It might be made to last a great deal longer than that.

9978. (Mr. Simpson.) There are buildings hundreds of years old in England built of wood?—But then the quality and the workmanship are very much better. A building such as you see advertised which is run up for a small sum, is of no quality, and the workmanship is poor stuff.

9979. (Mr. Davy.) But the cost is not one-fifth of our buildings, is it?—Oh, yes; I should think there was not much more than 25 to 30 per cent. difference.

9980. (Chairman.) Is there much creosoted wood used now in such buildings as those?—No, it is not used at Lingfield or at Halleligh.

9981. In cases where you have to put wood partly underground it is a considerable advantage to use that sort of wood?—Yes.

9982. For instance, it might be used for the main stays of the corners?—The woodwork would not go under the ground at all; the timber supports would be carried on bricks and concrete; the creosoting keeps the material very well, very much better than paint.

9983. And makes the wood last a very long time?—Yes, but it is very inflammable, of course.

9984. I suppose workmen do not like it, because it is very awkward to work with?—Yes, it is.

9985. (Mr. Davy.) Practically all those expensive buildings are built out of loans, are they not?—Yes.

9986. In your opinion does that lead to extravagance on the part of the local authority?—Yes, I think to a certain extent it does; that is to say that I think if the loan period was very much lengthened, it would lead to a good deal more expenditure.

9987. Your efforts in the direction of economy would be more successful, if the loan period was shorter?—I think so.

9988. In most of the farm colonies in other countries, the buildings are built by the colonists themselves?—Yes.

9989. That would diminish the cost?—Yes, it would.

9990. (Sir William Chance.) How are the colonists housed while the buildings are being built?—They get a building first of all and put in a number of colonists, and these colonists proceed to build other buildings.

9991. (Mr. Davy.) Did you notice that in the dormitories at Lingfield and Halleligh there are four rows of beds?—Yes.

9992. Do you see any objection to that?—No.

9993. The Local Government Board do not allow more than two rows of beds?—Well, that is the case in workhouses; it has not been adhered to closely in the case of test houses.

9994. It has not been adhered to as a requirement in the buildings at the Laindon farm colony?—No, it has not.

9995. Is it, in your judgment, essential that you should only have two rows of beds?—No.

9996. Does it materially diminish the cost to have four rows of beds?—Not materially; it does make a saving, but not a material saving.

9997. (Mr. Simpson.) What is your distinction between an ordinary workhouse and a test house?—Well, a test house is a kind of colony erected for able-bodied paupers; in a workhouse the inmates, of course, are mostly aged and infirm, and sick people; all that is eliminated from a test house, which contains the working pauper population of a union, or a group of unions. The Manchester and Chorlton unions combined together to build a test house, and they put into it all the pauper labour from the two unions.

9998. Can unions combine also to provide a workhouse?—I do not know of any case where there has been a combination of unions to build a workhouse, unless one union has been amalgamated with another. There have been cases of that.

9999. (Dr. Downes.) I think perhaps I could answer that question. There are cases where unions have combined to provide a joint workhouse. I have one in my own district; Croydon, Richmond and Kingston are proposing a joint workhouse for feeble-minded people?—Yes, that is for a special class.

10000. There is no statutory distinction between a workhouse and a test house; it is only the use to which they apply it?—Yes.

10001. (Mr. Simpson.) The difference is in the class of inmates that occupy it?—Yes; it is the nearest approach to a labour colony that arises in connection with the Poor Law.

10002. (Sir William Chance.) Do you know anything about the history of Hackney as regards the casual wards; what casual wards were there before these new ones were built?—Well, I believe there were casual wards at the workhouse, but I do not know what the history of the wards was.

10003. That was really before your time?—It was; of course, it comes before us as a scheme on an accepted site, independently of the workhouse and what is existing. We are not really concerned with what is already existing.

10004. You do not know whether the old casual wards still exist at the workhouse?—I cannot say.

10005. They are not utilised for other purposes?—I do not know whether they are or not.

10006. You do not know whether pressure was brought to bear on the guardians by the Local Government Board to use them for other purposes?—It may have been done by the Inspectors, but I do not know what the early history of the case was.

10007. Take some other union, where casual wards have been recently built which are next to Hackney in cost; do you know how much it worked out at; I suppose Hackney is the highest?—Hackney is the highest.

10008. Take St. George's-in-the-East wards; when were they built?—They were built in 1894.

10009. Do you know what they cost?—They cost £170 a bed—£18,036 in all.

10010. Do you know those casual wards?—No, I have not been to St. George's.

10011. Are there any other casual wards which have been built recently which have cost more than £150 a bed?—Yes, there is St. Pancras, which cost £160 a bed. Wandsworth and Clapham in 1886 cost only £108.

10012. How did that come about?—Well, building was a good deal cheaper then, wages were a good deal less, and materials were a good deal cheaper.

10013. Do you know those two casual wards?—Yes, I have been to them.

10014. Are they satisfactory?—Yes, I believe they are satisfactory.

10015. Cost of building could not have accounted for that great difference of expenditure between the Wandsworth casual wards and the Hackney casual wards?—Well, it would have accounted for a good deal of it; I was surprised that Wandsworth worked out at so low a figure. It is on the circular system; it is now twenty years old.

10016. Is there any other casual ward that cost more than £170?—Yes.

10017. Erected recently?—Poplar cost £219 in 1894.

10018. Were those wards built quite separately from the workhouse?—Yes.

10019. That figure did not include the cost of the site?—No.

10020. Simply the buildings?—Yes.

10021. What is the accommodation at the Poplar wards?—Poplar has got forty-eight male cells, eleven female cells accommodating fourteen; on the manner in which we compute it that gives a total of sixty-two.

10022. Would Poplar come next to Hackney as to cost per bed?—Yes. Of those that are built.

10023. Now would it be more economical to build

Mr. B. T. Kitchen.

19 July 1905.

Mr. B. T. Kitchen. these casual wards in storeys rather than in model dwellings?—They are built in storeys.

19 July 1905. 10024. How many storeys are there at Hackney?—Hackney has got three storeys, I think.

10025. It was suggested to us yesterday that storey buildings would be cheaper?—I do not think there is any economy in it.

10026. You do not think there is any economy in it?—No, I do not think there is any special economy, because you get floors. Directly you get floors in a public building under the London Building Act, you must make them all fireproof; that means a lot of steel construction.

10027. But still, if land is very expensive, it would economise in that respect?—If land is very expensive, it would.

10028. (Mr. Davy.) Are your workhouse buildings under the London Building Act?—Yes.

10029. You have to comply with the requirements of that Act?—Yes.

10030. Does that increase the cost?—Yes, it increases the cost.

10031. Materially?—Yes, I should think it increases it materially.

10032. (Sir William Chance.) Do you think if there was a labour colony established there would be any objection to using wood in the construction of the buildings, as is done at Hadleigh, in order to reduce the cost?—You could not in the London labour wards.

10033. But in the labour wards in the country?—Yes.

10034. Would there be any objection there to using wood buildings?—No. I think they would have to be safeguarded to a certain extent as regards fire exits and that sort of thing.

10035. But you think that if they were built substantially so as to last for a very long time the difference of expenditure would not be very great between the brick building and the wood building?—No; I do not think the difference would be more than 20 per cent.

10036. I suppose if a labour colony was started it would be better to begin with some kind of temporary building?—Yes, if it was experimental I should recommend wooden buildings; I mean to say if it were experimental to the extent of covering a period of ten or twelve years, I should be inclined to recommend wood.

10037. Corrugated iron buildings, I suppose, might be put up temporarily. You want to accommodate these colonists to begin with, in the hope that you would employ them in building more permanent buildings themselves?—Yes, I think as the initial experiment of a labour colony you might very well start a certain amount of buildings in that kind of way.

10038. By those means the initial capital expenditure would be very much decreased, would it not?—Not very much.

10039. You would get your colonists' labour practically for nothing?—Yes.

10040. And these temporary buildings would be much less costly than building permanent buildings to begin with?—They would be less costly.

10041. Therefore the capital expenditure would be decreased?—Yes, the capital expenditure would be less.

10042. Has the expenditure on casual wards had a tendency to increase of late years in a marked way?—Yes, it has.

10043. On account of the buildings?—The cost of labour has increased pretty steadily and the cost of materials has increased, though it is rather lower now than it was five years ago; but the requirements have not increased.

10044. The requirements of the Local Government Board have not increased?—No; the present requirements have been in force for the last fifteen or twenty years, as far as I know.

10045. (Mr. Davy.) The requirements of the Local Government Board have rather decreased, have they not?—Well, not as regards vagrant wards.

10046. But as regards buildings generally?—Yes.

10047. Such as in the matter of sanitary projections and so on?—Certainly.

10048. (Mr. Simpson.) Do the requirements of the Local Government Board include the requirements of local building bye-laws?—No; that is quite independent.

10049. So that a local authority has to look to the requirements of the Local Government Board and also to the bye-laws in force?—No; the local authority has only to look to its own bye-laws, but the local authority deals with a scheme quite independently of the Local Government Board. You see the Local Government Board only approve a scheme as a whole, they do not approve it in detail; the details are dealt with by the local authority according to their bye-laws.

10050. (Sir William Chance.) Have not the Local Government Board very often found a great disinclination on the part of boards of guardians to provide casual wards on account of the great expense?—I am hardly in a position to say that; you see, I am not in touch with the local authorities.

10051. Have not Bethnal Green stood out for years against providing casual wards?—Yes, I think so; but they are going very strong now with their wards; they will come, I think, the next to Hackney in cost.

10052. At present there is no disinclination to provide casual wards?—Not so far as I have found. I have found no disinclination at all; I have found a difficulty to get them to provide a cheap building.

10053. Does that apply to the country or chiefly to London?—Chiefly to London, and the big towns more than small towns.

10054. The more money they have to spend the more they want to spend?—The less they seem to consider the importance of economy.

10055. (Dr. Downes.) There is no difference, I think, between the Board's requirements for London and the Board's requirements for the country with regard to casual wards?—No, the requirements are the same.

10056. In addition to the question of the Building Act and the local bye-laws, there is the question of drainage: local authorities differ in their views as to the requirements of drainage; that would be a matter in their hands, would it not?—Yes, that is a matter in their hands, and it is rather a serious matter in London; the requirements are very much more severe and stringent in London than in the country.

10057. With regard to the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, are you aware that the Local Government Board are continually applying the limitations of that Fund to a reduction of expenditure in London?—I know that expenditure is very carefully watched on behalf of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

10058. When plans of a new building are submitted to you, do you often find that the first estimate gives you a fair idea of the final cost?—No; the first estimate is very uncertain and unreliable, especially if there is a competition for the work.

10059. Is it generally exceeded or the reverse?—The original estimates are exceeded.

10060. May I say almost invariably exceeded?—Yes, I think you may say almost invariably exceeded.

10061. A disadvantage of that is that it is not only misleading to the Department considering the plans, but also to the ratepayers?—Well, it is not always so misleading to the Department as it is to the ratepayers, because we are pretty well used to it, and we know pretty well what the cost of these things is going to be.

10062. But the ratepayer is frequently astonished to find what the total cost comes to?—Yes, that is so.

10063. Is the machinery for acquainting the ratepayer with the total cost quite all that it should be; do not the additions creep in by degrees, and the final cost comes out very often at a much later date, so that the ratepayer does not get the opportunity of really seeing what the total cost comes to?—I think the ratepayer is in a very obscure position as regards the cost of buildings that he has got to pay for, and I do not think the ratepayer is fairly treated in many respects. These schemes are very often undertaken merely on architects' estimates. The local authority has sufficient money sanctioned to proceed with the scheme, and by the time the scheme is finished perhaps there is an increase of thirty or forty or even fifty per cent. on what the ratepayer supposed he was in for.

10064. And spreading the cost over a number of years by means of a loan, tends further to keep the matter from the knowledge of the ratepayer, does it not?—No; I do not think that does.

10065. But if the ratepayer had to find the money out of current rates he would immediately become aware of the expenditure?—Yes, to that extent he would be keener perhaps.

10066. If it were possible to limit the loan to the original estimate and require the local authorities to find the difference out of the local rates, would not the ratepayer then be much more aware of what was going on?—He would if it became public. In the case of expenditure by a board of guardians there is no public inquiry as in the case of expenditure proposed by a sanitary authority.

10067. There would be a large addition to the public rate?—But a man would not wake up to that till he had to pay for it on his note.

10068. He would remember it at the next election, would he not?—Yes, he might. There are several cases in which the Board have done what you referred to, that is to say, refused to sanction a loan for an extra expenditure, but that is in the case of public health work—infectious hospitals, for instance.

10069. I think a great deal of the Board's insistence in the case of buildings is not so much on expenditure as on the reduction of expenditure?—Yes, it is.

10070. A large proportion of the correspondence is directed to the reduction of expenditure?—Yes, it is. I could give you instances of the way in which the Board have pressed upon local authorities a cheaper scheme than they were advocating.

10071. And whether that effort is successful depends very much on the willingness of the guardians and the willingness of their architect?—Yes, certainly.

10072. In some cases it is possible that increased original expenditure might reduce the cost of up-keep, such, for example, as the introduction of glazed bricks to save painting?—Yes; and there is a good deal in the arrangement of the building, which affects the cost of the administrative parts.

10073. It does not follow that an original large cost would be money thrown away, if it would conduce to diminish subsequent expenditure?—No, if it really could be shown that it was reducing expenditure.

10074. And the same consideration applies to some extent to the question of using permanent materials, such as brick, as opposed to wood and iron?—Yes, it is easier to keep permanent materials of that sort in order.

10075. You have, in fact, to balance the cost of maintenance and the cost of original construction?—Yes.

10076. In the case of labour colony buildings, I think you said it would depend on the probable permanence of the particular institution?—Whether it was really an economy or not.

10077. If the reclamation of land or temporary work of that sort were intended you would not recommend expensive permanent buildings?—No.

10078. Unless the colony were going to remain there?—Yes. I think it would be economy to build certain parts, at any rate administrative parts of a building, if they were to be permanent, of permanent materials, and the temporary accommodation, or accommodation that might change in character, of temporary materials.

10079. With regard to the Hackney casual wards, I think these wards are provided with rather expensive boiler accommodation?—Yes.

10080. There is a chimney shaft, if I remember rightly?—Yes, that was made in connection with the test house. It was to serve a very much larger population than the boiler and laundry house really do serve.

10081. And that possible addition of a test workhouse also affects the site; it is a much larger site than you would require for a casual ward?—Yes.

10082. And the wall that has been mentioned, I think, is so built that party walls can be dovetailed into it at some future time?—Yes, it is built for them.

10083. A good deal of the buildings appear to be constructed with a view to some future contingency?—Yes, there was a great deal of money spent in connection with the test house scheme.

10084. Some of those superabundant water closets that have been mentioned are connected with the boiler house and outbuildings of that sort?—Yes.

10085. Evidently intended for a staff?—I think there was to have been a sort of separate labour establishment there; originally there were three departments included in the scheme; one was a labour department, one a vagrant department, and the other was a test department.

10086. So that what is built is the outcome of what was originally a triple scheme?—Yes.

10087. Will you give us some information as to the dimensions required for casual wards?—According to the instructions issued by the Board, the dimensions in the case of cells for men are a minimum width of 4 feet, a minimum average height of 10 feet, a minimum floor space of 36 feet, and a minimum cubic space of 360 feet; and for separate cells for women with children a minimum width of 5ft. 6in., a minimum average height of 10 feet, a minimum floor space of 54 feet and a minimum cubic space of 540 feet.

10088. What is the size of the working cells?—The instructions say that, if provided, they should be 6 feet in length, about 4 feet in width, and have an average height of not less than 7 feet.

10089. Are there any conditions as to the ventilation of labour cells?—No; there are no special arrangements, because they must necessarily have very fair ventilation, on account of the grids through which the stone is passed in the case of stone breaking cells.

10090. Are you aware that the amount of air required for a man in active muscular exercise is much larger than in the case of a man who is doing practically nothing?—Well, no, I am not aware of that.

10091. Do you see any architectural advantage in having the cells arranged at the end of the sleeping cells in the present manner?—No, there is no architectural advantage; it is done to be in compliance with the requirements of the Board.

10092. It is purely administrative?—Yes.

10093. (Chairman.) I suppose the real fact is that it is done with the object of having better control over the men?—Yes, they cannot get out.

10094. (Dr. Downes.) From an architectural point of view, do you see any objection to providing bunk arrangements which would sufficiently separate the men working in the yard?—None whatever, if constructed fairly solidly; they might get knocked about, if they were constructed of thin wood.

10095. In these places the men would be comparatively in the open air?—Yes, I think that would be preferable.

10096. Have you formed any opinion as to whether the cost of casual wards might be reduced if the female vagrants were treated separately in the workhouse instead of in the casual wards: that is to say, if you had not to make provision for the female vagrants in the casual wards?—Yes, it would make some reduction in the cost—not a very large reduction per head, because the cost of providing for women is not very much more than the cost of providing for men, so that the total cost per head would not materially be reduced.

10097. The number of female casual paupers is very small?—Yes, it is.

10098. Of course, it would necessarily imply a staff to deal with female casuals if you receive them also in the casual wards?—Well, there is generally the wife of the porter who looks after the female vagrants. I should like to say I think it is the cost of the staff that is a great element in the cost of the vagrant wards and the workhouse buildings generally. You have only got to look at one of these plans to see what the proportion of the staff accommodation is to the inmates' accommodation.

10099. Could you give us any information as to the staff accommodation that is provided at the casual ward; could you say roughly what the proportion is?—Well,

Mr. B. T. Kitchen.

19 July 1905.

*Mr. B. T.
Kitchin.*

here is a plan of a casual ward recently approved by the Board. (Plan exhibited.)

19 July 1905.

10100. In this case the ground covered by the staff and administration accommodation appears to be about one third more than that actually covered by the sleeping accommodation of the inmates?—Yes.

10101. (Mr. Simpson.) Then probably the cost of the administration buildings is very nearly as large as the cost of the buildings for the inmates?—It is larger.

10102. (Dr. Downes.) Do the Local Government Board insist on such accommodation for staff as that?—No, not as laid down on the plan.

10103. (Sir William Chance.) That is the Bethnal Green plan?—Yes, it is copied from all these London casual wards.

10104. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you know how much the cost works out to in this case per head?—These wards are for twenty-three, and the cost works out at £261 per head on the estimate.

10105. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Is there only accommodation for twenty-three casuals there?—Yes.

10106. What is the staff?—Well, there is accommodation for a superintendent and his wife and a friend, I should say in this case; the night attendant would sleep out, I think they generally do; the day attendant sleeps out.

10107. (Mr. Davy.) And there is a night porter's room?—There is a night porter's room, yes; you could house a staff of four on the premises.

10108. I see they have put in two baths; is that one for the male, and one for the female?—Well, I think that is the superintendent's bath, and the superintendent generally has a wife. I was asked some questions in connection with the cases of London vagrant wards as compared with provincial vagrant wards. In London the day rooms are kept as day rooms, and in the provincial unions the day rooms are used as associated wards; consequently I have only been able to take the accommodation in cells in London, but in the provinces I have taken the associated room or day room as affording accommodation for a good number of inmates.

10109. (Chairman.) Are there beds that turn up?—Yes, there are hammocks very often that fit into hooks.

10110. (Dr. Downes.) There would be a greater fluctuation of inmates in the country than in London, would there not?—Yes.

10111. Could you give us any suggestions for the reduction of the cost of casual wards generally?—No. So long as the policy is to provide accommodation on the cellular system, I do not think any material reduction could be made so long as the guardians have the matter more or less entirely in their own hands.

10112. (Chairman.) I suppose the Metropolitan building requirements do keep up the price?—They do; the standard of building in London, whatever it is, is very high.

10113. That is not the fault of the guardians?—That is not the fault of the guardians.

10114. The guardians have that dead weight round them to begin with?—Yes, and they are led by what has been done in London.

10115. Can you tell us what proportion—supposing there is a casual ward costing £150 a bed—is due to the requirements of the London Building Act?—I could not say it in that way. I should think it might mean a difference of 15 per cent. on the cost of the building as compared with what might be done in the provinces where there were no bye-laws.

10116. The cost is about 15 per cent. more owing to the London Building Act requirements?—Yes, I should say about 15 per cent.

10117. Over and above the ordinary cost?—There is a great deal of expense in drainage, in fire-proof buildings, and in escape staircases.

10118. (Mr. Davy.) Is the number of water closets affected by the London Building Act?—No, not the number.

10119. (Dr. Downes.) I think you have some information as to the cost of test houses; by test house, I mean a work-house in which able-bodied men are set to work as a test of destitution?—Yes. With regard to test houses of important size, three to my knowledge have been built in the provinces, one by the combined unions of Chorlton and Manchester for 686 inmates at a cost of £41,233, which represents about £60 a head; one by Sheffield for 240 inmates at £41 13s. per head; and one by West Derby for 1,000 inmates at £113 per head, to which was added or is being added at the present time vagrant wards at a cost of £80 per head.

10120. (Sir William Chance.) Why should West Derby be able to erect casual wards at only £80?—Well, they have a very large establishment; it provides for 480, and there are a good deal more in associated wards than there would be in London.

10121. And is there not so much accommodation for the attendants?—No: I think that is a good deal more moderate than in London; the administration is cheaper. It was a scheme which was very much cut down.

10122. There is no reason why the administration should not be cheaper in London?—No, I should have thought that the administration might have been cheaper in London.

10123. Of late years have the majority of the casual wards in London and in large towns been erected on sites quite separate from the workhouses?—Yes.

10124. That of course would add to the cost of administration?—Yes.

10125. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) In vagrant cells, do the Board require that there should be bell communication with the officer in charge?—Well, so long as the tramps are locked into their cells, I think there should be some communication with the porter.

10126. Is that insisted upon?—Not necessarily. There is a provision in the regulations as to suitable means of communication being provided; a bell should be fixed in the attendant's room.

10127. Is artificial light required to be provided in the cells for the dark hours?—No, I do not think it is required; it is nearly always provided, though.

10128. Does that come into the expense of the building?—Yes.

10129. How long ago were the Hackney casual wards opened?—About three years ago, I think.

10130. Have any other casual wards in London been opened in your time?—Yes; there was St. Pancras.

10131. Was that on the new cellular system?—Yes. Holborn and Stepney, too, are recent. I do not know whether they have been opened since I have been Architect to the Board.

10132. Could you say from memory what number of country ones have been opened in the same period?—Not from memory.

10133. Can you say roughly; there are about 600 altogether?—Well, not more than about ten a year, I should think, on the average.

10134. That would be in your time?—I should think about ten a year, speaking quite roughly.

10135. You mentioned about four or five in London?—Yes.

10136. (Chairman.) Would it, in your judgment, be possible to have an amount fixed by the Local Government Board for the average cost of casual wards: it would of course vary in London, in the large towns and in the country districts?—Yes.

10137. If that amount were fixed, any board of guardians should be required to show cause for any excess over that amount?—It might be done in London, I think, but it would be very difficult to do it in the provinces owing to the variety of prices in the labour market.

10138. But it would be a good reason for any excess, if they had to pay 10d. an hour instead of 7d.?—I think it would be very easy for a local authority to make out a case if they wanted to spend more money, and I think it would be very difficult for the Local Government Board to check it: it is much easier to make out a case for expenditure than to make out a case for economy.

10139. I thought it might be an advantage if the Local Government Board fixed an average sum for a casual ward, say on the cellular system, and required the guardians to show good cause for any excess?—Yes, I think it might be done, but I think it would be rather troublesome and not entirely satisfactory.

10140. Do you not think it would lead to a more uniform cost?—I think there would be some difficulty about that; I think I may say we find that the rural authorities are very much more interested in economy than the towns, and there is no need for the pressure to be put upon them as there is in the case of the towns.

10141. But in all cases, town or country, the Local Government Board have to supervise?—Yes, in all cases.

10142. (Mr. Davy.) Have you considered the possibility of limiting the loan to what you consider a reasonable amount?—It was done in Brentford.

10143. It has been considered in the case of the cost of isolation hospitals?—Yes; it has been done there.

Mr. H. J. TORR, called; and Examined.

10148. (Chairman.) You are a justice of the peace for Lincolnshire?—Yes.

10149. And one of the authors of the very admirable report of the Lindsey justices on the Belgian labour colonies?—Yes.

10150. Now, in your county is the law as to vagrancy enforced?—Yes, we have been committing to prison for a very long time now for simple begging, giving generally seven to fourteen days; that system has been in operation nearly 50 years I should think.

10151. Do you give cumulative sentences; that is to say, if you get a man convicted two or three times for begging in the same year, do you then give him a longer sentence?—Yes, we generally give seven days for the first, and fourteen days or a month, or possibly three months subsequently.

10152. You deal with them on the cumulative principle?—Yes, distinctly.

10153. Do you find that the seven day sentence as a rule has much effect?—Well, the point I wanted to make was that none of them have the slightest effect, the figures absolutely prove that. Take the last five years, the persons proceeded against for begging in 1900 were 912; in 1901, 1,290; in 1902, 1,474; in 1903, 2,207; in 1904, 2,409; and there is again an increase in the first six months of this year. That is in spite of the practice of giving these sentences.

10154. Are those as a rule men who come out of casual wards?—Very largely, they pass the night there; and then the police have very strict orders to arrest for begging. If a man goes to a cottage and begs—if he only asks for a cup of water or a cup of tea and bread and butter—and the policeman sees him, he will arrest him for it. When he comes before the bench, speaking generally, if it is fairly obvious that he is a bona fide working man—if his hands show traces of work—he would be cautioned as to the practice of the county, and no further notice would be taken, but if he showed that he was a man who had been on the road a good long time, if he was an habitual, he would certainly be sentenced. Judging from the sentences at one court, nearly 90 per cent. of the persons proceeded against are convicted.

10155. Do you think a sentence of seven days is deterrent at all?—I do not think it is a deterrent in the slightest degree; I have cuttings from the newspapers of a good many cases where they deliberately ask for more. There was a case tried at the assizes only a week ago. A man deliberately set fire to a stack of hay on the windward side of a second stack, and he went and gave himself up to the police, and in the calmest way said he wanted to get a good long sentence. There is another case which came before the recorder of Lincoln, in which a man broke a plate glass window worth £40, and gave himself up to the police, saying his object was to get sent to prison.

10156. Do the masters of casual wards in your county give a task?—Yes, all our workhouses have tasks.

10144. Did you find anything result from that?—It is very difficult to say whether they feel it at all; of course the burden of it comes upon the ratepayers.

10145. In country districts is it not very often the case that the Inspector is urging the guardians to make this building provision, and he throws his influence in favour of getting the building set up somehow or other?—Yes, I think there are a good many cases in which the Inspector takes the initiative in connection with building schemes.

10146. And would be very unwilling to see them abandoned altogether, as they might be if you insisted on economy?—Yes.

10147. Have you any opinion whether vagrant wards could be used for other workhouse purposes?—I do not see any reason why the cells in vagrant wards should not be used for ordinary inmates of workhouses. The cubic space in the cell is precisely the same as what is required in dormitories, and with very little alteration they could be made perfectly suitable for a certain class of inmates.

10157. There is uniformity with regard to that?—There is no uniformity with regard to the tasks; but there is a task in every workhouse.

10158. Of course, they have the power of limiting the task according to the physical capability of the man?—There is a large discretion vested in the masters.

10159. Do you think the task is such as makes a man shun the casual ward and try elsewhere instead of going back to the casual ward again?—I think the task is a little heavier in the workhouse than in the prison; I do not think we break granite in our prison; you see we cannot get granite readily, that is a difficulty. One or two of the workhouses have gone to some expense in the matter purely as a deterrent, and the granite breaking in those, I think, has reduced the vagrancy.

10160. Do you suggest that men may prefer to go to prison rather than to the casual ward, because the casual ward labour is harder than that in prison?—Yes. You see, owing to the fact that prisons are run on a military system, and the warders are like non-commissioned officers with relatively long periods for meals, marching men backwards and forwards and calling the roll, the duration of a labour task is exceedingly small. That was one of the points we made. If in a labour colony you could get, instead of warders, a foreman, the men would go on a regular labour task of some educational value. Warders march the men off to breakfast, there is the time for the warders' breakfast, then there is the calling of the roll again, and by the time the warders have come up after their period for meals, you get the actual hours of work reduced to very small numbers.

10161. What is your view with regard to the establishment of a labour colony in England?—We feel very strongly on that point. In the first place, the vagrant class who now come before the magistrates under the Act of 1824, instead of being sent to prison, should be sent to a labour colony; that is to say, the powers of the magistrates should be extended so that they might be able to impose this alternative punishment; instead of giving a short period of imprisonment, the magistrates should be empowered to give a long period of detention.

10162. I take it that the man you send would be one to whom you could apply the term "habitual vagrant," that is, a man who has been convicted a good many times of acts of vagrancy; you would not send a man to a long sentence of detention in a labour colony who had only been convicted once or twice?—No, but I would sooner send him three months to a labour colony straight off than for a week to prison. The short sentence diminishes what little self-respect he has got; it does not teach him any single thing; he comes out rather bitter against the world. If we send him to a labour colony, even for a few months, that deteriorating effect is not felt, and there is some chance of finding out whether with regular labour, doing his nine hours a day, he cannot be put into better shape.

Mr. B. T. Kitchin.

19 July 1905

Mr. H. J. Torr.

19 July 1905

Mr. H. J.
Torr.

19 July 1905.

10163. Might not public opinion be rather against sending a man for even three months simply for an act of begging; do you not think it would be the best plan, say, to bind the man over or register his conviction, say for once or twice, and then if he commits the offence a third time, there would be no hardship in sending him for a long period to a labour colony?—That would be quite satisfactory. My point is that he ought not to go to prison, and that you are doing no good by these terms of short imprisonment, which cost the country a lot of money.

10164. If the man before being committed had been convicted twice and warned, there would not be the same feeling against his detention for a long period?—I think that is an excellent idea; I think that would meet the difficulty.

10165. In that case the labour colony could be the place of actual detention?—Yes; as the result of examining the colony at Merxplas and the Swiss colonies, and knowing most of the English ones rather intimately, Hadleigh and Lingfield, and the rest, I am absolutely convinced that without the power of detention the colony cannot permanently succeed, because the man that you most want to help, I think you will agree, is the man who comes out of our slums, who has never been taught to work, who is unfit in some way, it may be physically, morally, or mentally. Of all of those men who were in the Church Army labour tents and similar places last winter, there was not one to whom an employer could give a full day's work for a full trade union day's wage, and get his wage back again; they are all unfit in some way. These men go to a place like Lingfield, or Hadleigh, and a few of them turn out well, but the great difficulty is that the men who most want the long period have not got the grit to stay there for it. For the whole of that class, the class that has never learned to work, you must have compulsion, just as you make a child go to school to work. Another man whom we find rather frequently on the road is the working man who is dropping out of regular employment. The pressure on the inefficient is tremendous now in any trade. You have seen all sorts of statements that people will not employ men of over forty since the Employers' Liability Act came in. That is a very broad statement, and not literally true. But it is true that the pressure of modern labour conditions is driving out the inefficient. The employer cannot afford to employ them at full wages, and public opinion is against "half wages." A man when he starts downward has got almost the full skill at his finger tips, and he gets little odd jobs here and there on the road, and he gets down. If you could put him in a colony, unless there is detention, he will not stay there, because the life of freedom appeals to most men, and he will go out and go down. You get him there, and what do you see at Merxplas; the most highly skilled men are perfectly content. I had a talk with a man who was carving a statue of the Virgin for their chapel. It was a beautifully artistic work, and he was clearly comfortable and not discontented.

10166. Was that man looking forward, do you think, to getting out and earning good wages afterwards?—No, it was drink in his case; he would go out, but he would not be out very long when he would take to drink again and break up altogether. Inside, away from drink, he was working and turning out most beautiful work.

10167. He was well content where he was?—He was well content where he was till the fit came upon him.

10168. I suppose at remunerative work a man like that would do well?—Outside, that man could be earning £3 a week.

10169. As regards the work done in a labour colony, do you think the men would nearly pay for their keep?—I think if the colony was given a free run it could be made, not exactly to pay, but very nearly to pay; I mean in this way; if you let the colonists do the whole thing, let them build their own buildings, and do all their work, so that there is plenty of employment for them; but if you are going to start outside labour to put up a lot of new buildings, and charge the colony with interest and depreciation on them, and then have nothing for the colonists to do, it will be a dead loss, a failure.

10170. Then you would begin with a smaller number of men, and let them gradually provide accommodation for a larger number of men?—Build the whole thing up like Merxplas. Merxplas has no capital value against it at all, and the consequence is the colonists have always had plenty to do. They started by building one set of houses and then another; now they are building their farm buildings; there is always something to do, and there is very little competition with outside labour; there is none of the difficulty of having to do something you have to sell; the men have always got to do something which they can use.

10171. I suppose there might be some outcry on the part of outside labour?—I would challenge them on the ground, that if they object to a colony selling in the outside market, then, as any trade unionist would admit, the trade unionists have no right to compete with the colonist in his market. You can have your two markets, but the basis of the trade union's outcry is unfair; they build all the prisons, make all the clothes of the prisoners, and they say the prisoners are not to sell outside. The whole chance of the prisoner's labour is gone for ever, because what they ought to be making, their houses and clothing, is already provided from outside.

10172. Do you know Merxplas well?—Well, we spent three long days there.

10173. Is the system there one that you could apply in England?—I think so, in the main; but considerable improvements might be made on that system. I think in the first place that it is much too big; 5,000 men in one place is far too many.

10174. What is the limit in numbers that you would suggest for England?—Well, I should like to see them limited to hundreds; 500, I think, would be quite enough; otherwise, I think you cannot get personal touch.

10175. Then as to the controlling power, would you have it under Home Office inspection?—Yes, certainly. I think the general idea amongst those one has talked with, and my own idea too, is that there should be no hard and fast type of colony, but that a good deal of experimental work might be done, provided they were all inspected and certified. The counties might start some, philanthropic bodies might start others, and the Home Office others—probably those for the longer terms—but they ought all to be entirely under Home Office inspection.

10176. You think it would be far better to have them under Home Office control than to have them under the control of a local body?—I think you must have Home Office inspection, and Home Office rules, and have them certified.

10177. There might be a visiting committee of local magistrates as in prisons?—Yes.

10178. With the actual supervision of the Home Office Inspector?—Yes. We thought that with regard to labour colonies, the director or the head should have a certain amount of power, just the same as a prison governor has, and further powers should be vested in visiting justices, exactly in the same way as in prisons.

10179. They would make their report, and the Government Inspector would see that report, and use it as he thought fit?—Yes. Another point we felt very strongly about Merxplas is that there is so little grading about it; it is all uniform, there is nothing to inspire a man to go on. If we had colonies in England, the whole chance would lie in grading everything, grading each colony in itself into different classes, and then having various grades of colonies.

10180. Would the grade be in proportion to the character of the man?—At the outset.

10181. The character of the offence and so on?—But I think distinctly with power of progress in the man to go up from class to class and colony to colony.

10182. You might have two colonies within reach of each other; one for men convicted of offences more serious than vagrancy?—Yes.

10183. It would be advantageous to have colonies with different degrees of severity of imprisonment?—Yes, certainly, and I should like to see it made possible for a colonist to work himself up from the one to the other, so that he need not be permanently sentenced to the more penal one.

10184. Then you would also have grades in the same

Mr. H. J.
Torr.

19 July 1905.

colony?—Yes, and even from colony to colony, and I should like to see the whole system kept distinct from the criminal system; that again is an objection, of course to Merxplas; I think that they put certain classes of criminals into it.

10185. We understood that the Salvation Army do the same thing, and put a man who has been several times convicted amongst men who have never been convicted. I gather that you would not favour such a system?—It is a large question; certainly when the men are disposed of authoritatively the two systems ought to be absolutely distinct. The man is a colonist, he ought to be spoken of as a colonist; abroad he is a détenu, but even if he were sentenced to seven years, it ought to be seven years' detention as a colonist, never to be confounded in the public mind with the criminal, or anything to do with the criminal.

10186. For some crimes a man must, of course, become an actual convict?—Oh, yes. My point was that you would keep the whole of this series under the vagrancy law, and not under the criminal law.

10187. Now, if you put a man in a colony, how are you to make him work, if he is a regularly idle man who is determined not to work?—I agree with Mr. Brooks at Lingfield very much. You dock his food. I think a director must have a large amount of power in cases like that, and there must not be too much routine.

10188. You would have grades of food then?—I would.

10189. A man who does a good day's work should have a good meal, and a man who refuses to do a good day's work should be fed on a lower scale?—Just to keep him alive; and then I would give him cells, and make it hot for him; and then if you put side by side with this system of penalties a premium system like that at Hadleigh, whereby a man by earning a little more can buy a little more food and secure greater comfort, you provide an immense incentive to work. Take the principle of allowing a man to work himself up from the bottom grade colony, where the conditions were rather severe, to a higher grade colony and so on, and put that motive; and then, instead of as at Merxplas, where they send them to bed when they have nothing more for them to do—that is all they do with them—let philanthropic agencies and religious bodies under proper supervision, really organise the leisure time of the men, really try to educate them, and work amongst them. I believe the whole of the Merxplas figures could be transformed if there were something of that kind; the whole of the reformatory side in these colonies abroad is non-existent.

10190. One drawback in the Merxplas system seems to be that they mingle the men too much together?—Yes, there is very little grading and very little distinction of any kind.

10191. Have you any idea as to the probable cost of a labour colony in England?—One has only to be able to see what they have done abroad, and take the figures of the Local Government Board return about the workhouses in England.

10192. Have you gone into the cost of the vagrant now who, when convicted, is sent off in charge of a policeman to the county gaol, some thirty or forty miles off. The man gets only a few days' imprisonment, but it costs the county a considerable sum. Against that in a colony, if a man would work, the relative cost would be small?—Yes, you would save a good deal, and you would keep him there for a much longer period.

10193. You keep that man from begging on the roads; you save his cost in the casual ward?—Yes.

10194. I do not know whether you have ever calculated the profit and loss on the whole transaction?—There is not much to go by. Our governor gave us some figures on the subject; one man cost the county £12 and another £16 10s. in travelling expenses alone in being taken to the place of trial and to gaol. In one case there were thirty convictions; that would mean only about 10s. a time.

10195. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) And there would be the expenses of the man's escort?—Yes; that would have to be paid by the county.

10196. The county would get the set-off against all that?—Oh, yes, if you put him in the colony, you would have the set-off of what he probably would incur in being taken backwards and forwards to prison. You have got a very large number of savings, what he begs, what he costs in the workhouse, in the prison, and on the road, and the community as a whole would save all that.

10197. (Chairman.) I take it from what you have said that you are not of opinion that the short sentence is useful as a deterrent?—We are absolutely certain of that, as the result of experience of a county where the law has been uniformly enforced for now something like 50 years.

10198. Have you studied the way-ticket system?—No, not largely. I did some sixteen or seventeen years ago, when it was in vogue in Gloucestershire.

10199. You probably are aware of what the Gloucestershire system is?—Yes, I had a good deal of correspondence with Colonel Curtis-Hayward; we wanted at first to introduce it into Lincolnshire; but we were not very keen on it, I think, from the difficulty of getting other counties to agree with it, and one thing and another. The whole essence of the thing depends upon it being general.

10200. A great many witnesses we have had have considered some such system?—I think it would be of value in another way. You raised the question of public opinion. I think if we are to have a scheme of this kind, it must be one which would appeal to the public; you must convince the public that you fully meet the man who is a bona fide working man in search of work. I believe the public will then tolerate a very large amount of detention for the other class, the permanently inefficient man.

10201. To the man honestly in search of work, the ticket would be a passport, while it would be a means of identification against the dishonest man?—Yes, I should like to see that worked as part of the colony system, if you had a colony for the permanently inefficient and the vagrant; you should have some way-ticket system to facilitate labour movements.

10202. You think that a way-ticket system might be advantageous if it were generally applied?—I do, certainly; and, unless it is general, I think the difficulties would be too great.

10203. (Sir William Chance.) You would give the ticket to the bona fide traveller?—Yes, I take it the man of labour, bona fide seeking employment in new scenes, will be continually growing; with the new conditions of labour, trade shifts from place to place rapidly now, and you must provide for that man as apart from the habitual, if only for the reason that public opinion will not allow you to segregate the habitual vagrant unless you have offered the bona fide working man a real good chance.

10204. (Chairman.) There would be the difficulty that you could hardly apply the ticket system to the man who has been in the common lodging-house?—I think if it was in existence, public opinion would largely enforce it themselves, because they would cease to give to tramps.

10205. (Mr. Davy.) What in your view is the best form of colony?—Well, my view on that point is that, judging from my experience both of the English colonies and the foreign colonies, the colony system as a whole must include industrial as well as agricultural labour. If the colonies are merely agricultural, although some good may be done by putting a comparatively small number of men back on the land, yet the progress of machinery makes the demand for labour on the land continually grow less. Further, the agricultural colony makes no use of the skill the down grade workman already often possesses, and thus wastes a very valuable national asset. I think our experience has been that so many of these men are bona fide workmen who have been to a large extent slipping down, just through a little lack of efficiency in one form or another; the moment they first slip out of the ranks of regular labour, they practically possess a very large modicum of skill, and what we want to do is to save that skill, both for them and for the nation. It is a gross waste to put a mason, a book-keeper, an engineer etc., to cart manure. At Merxplas, you will see the most delicate electrical indicators and those sort of things, all made entirely on the place. The money value of these electrical indicators to the nation represented a wage earning capacity of perhaps £2 or £3 a week. It is absurd when you have got a man like that, that you should set

Mr. H. J.
Torr.

19 July 1905.

him to cart manure, the value of which is perhaps only 10s. or 12s. to the nation. And that largely affects the question whether it may be made self-supporting or not. It could not be made self-supporting if you are to grade everybody down to the wages of the agricultural labourer. It can be made self-supporting, if you are to use the skill of the artisan at its proper financial equivalent. We submit it also neglects the chief lever available to raise them—their professional pride. It also inevitably leads to competition with outside labour in the market, and consequent friction. The comprehensive colony system on the other hand, as organised in Belgium, largely avoids these difficulties. Each man brings his existing skill to the profit of the whole system. Men temporarily out of work can also thus keep themselves without losing their capital—their technical skill. For instance, if a watchmaker ceases to make watches for a very short time, and is put on to break stones, he has lost what is of immense value to him as well as to the nation—his manual dexterity—which is rapidly deteriorated by such rough work. To secure this system, however, it must be remembered that it is essential that the colonists should supply all their own wants, housing, clothing, &c., as well as their food. The complaints of outside labour that prison labour at present competes unfairly with them is due to the fact that outside labour has already deprived prison labour of all that portion of its natural share of work which is comprised in the erection of its housing accommodation. In prisons this cannot be avoided probably, but in any colony system if outside labour starts by providing the houses and the clothing of the colonists, obviously there will not be sufficient work for the colonists to do, except by producing goods for sale in the outside market. Merxplas with some small exceptions is fully organised on the basis of a self-supporting communistic community. The colonists provide all their own requirements from the very beginning, and in consequence there is little lack of employment. When their necessities are provided they can produce comforts for themselves, and ultimately, possibly, even luxuries.

10206. You are aware that at Merxplas they do not teach anything?—Yes.

10207. They do not have any apprenticeship, but they utilise a man at his own work?—Yes, that is one of the deficiencies; there is a little teaching however done at the colony at Wortel.

10208. To teach would considerably increase the expense?—Well, you would teach on a sort of apprenticeship system, I gather; at least I should think to bricklayers you would attach the unskilled, and they would gradually become skilled, and to the men making the different things attach a certain number of quasi-apprentices in each shop; you could do a considerable amount of teaching.

10209. That is not done at Merxplas?—That is not done.

10210. At Merxplas a purely unskilled man goes to land reclamation and digs the land?—And provides the motive power. There is no steam power for the lathes and everything like that, and there is a great mill; 120 men are taken up in driving a mill—a frightful waste.

10211. They would not learn anything?—No, nothing whatever.

10212. So that your idea of a colony is one which is industrial as well as agricultural?—Yes, very much like Merxplas, only I do not see why you should not have an agricultural colony in one place, and an industrial colony in another, so as to keep the numbers in each place down; they need not necessarily be in one place, although they are included in one system.

10213. You suggest some modifications in the Merxplas system; you think Merxplas is too large?—Yes. It becomes very much like our old barrack schools; there is very little possibility of teaching the men individually, or keeping in touch with them.

10214. You are aware that the director is of the same opinion?—Yes.

10215. And that the Belgian Government contemplate starting another colony somewhere near Liège?—I do not know that.

10216. For 1,000 men?—That would be an immense improvement. Then, as I have already pointed out, we do think grading is essential, everything should be graded. I think it is the experience, both at Hadleigh and at Lingfield, that the great motive force to get these men up again is to give them a chance of climbing up a ladder, therefore you must make a ladder. At Hadleigh it is splendid, they grade every single thing upwards from the barest necessities of life. A man starts with his meals on a bare board, and he goes up to the top room, where he dines on a table with flowers and a table cloth on it; he begins with a box and leathern coverlet and can win a room to himself, all by working himself up.

10217. But the numbers at Hadleigh are quite insignificant?—Yes, they are.

10218. 120 to 200?—Yes. But supposing you had these colonies not exceeding 500, you could introduce an immense amount of grading, if you had got an able director and gave him a free hand.

10219. And your idea would be that the punishment would be by docking his food; would you pay the colonists?—Yes, I should let them earn a small and a nominal sum; I should have no fixed wage, whether they worked or not, but if a man worked fairly I would give him a small bonus, probably largely in tallies that he could use at a canteen at the place.

10220. So that he could supplement his food?—Or buy tobacco or any little extras.

10221. As regards the dietary at Merxplas, they do not give any meat, I understand?—Meat in soup, I think; I think there is meat occasionally, but the dietary probably would not be considered sufficient in England.

10222. In considering cost we have got to make allowances for the differences in character between the two nations?—The food was very good; I tried it all; but you would have to allow more in England. On the other hand, if you used machinery you could increase the productive capacity of the colony. The 120 turning the mill were not earning sixpence a day probably. If you put a machine in, you could let the colonists work the machine, and then let those 120 do something else.

10223. If you increase the output, you would increase the difficulty of getting rid of the output?—You would consume it all in the place.

10224. (Sir William Chance.) You spoke of delicate electrical plant just now. Do you suggest that anything of this sort should be made at the colony?—No, I was referring to a man, say a watchmaker, who is put on to picking oakum or breaking stones. The delicacy of his fingers is gone; you ought to put him on to something which would preserve the delicacy of his fingers.

10225. (Mr. Davy.) At Merxplas they make certain things which are sent to England?—I did not know that they sent them to England.

10226. We were told they sold mats which come to England?—Oh, they do sell mats, but I did not know that they came to England.

10227. In England we are not allowed to sell mats and such things made in prison, on account of the interference with outside labour?—Yes.

10228. And yet things made in foreign penal colonies can be introduced into this country?—Mr. Chamberlain had better deal with that, had he not? It is not a thing one would support at all, but my point is that you must either isolate outside labour as a whole, and let the colony provide for itself entirely, in which case you may rightly say "You must not sell anything in the outside labour market"; but you have no right—as is being done now—to say to the colonists, "We will do a lot of work for you, in the shape of making your clothes, building your house, grinding your corn and sending it in as flour, but you must not do any work for us." If the outside labour sends into the colony, the colony must send out to pay for its purchases, but if on the other hand you start the colonies, or develop them, on what you may call a communistic basis, so that they do everything for themselves, then you may quite easily insist that they shall sell nothing outside.

10229. My point was this; we may think the present restrictions on the sale of prison goods is absurd, but still they exist, and we have to take them into consideration when we are considering what could be done in a large industrial establishment of this sort?—Yes.

10230. For instance now, what would be done in this country with the bricks that are made at Merxplas?—It would take a good many years to build the houses for their own accommodation, their own farm buildings and everything.

10231. What would be done here with the shirt buttons that they make?—They use a great deal; they need not make more than for themselves. They would go on making other things for themselves.

10232. There would be a difficulty in selling things in the open market unless public opinion or the view of the trades unions changes?—I should like to see them entirely cut off from the open market, and be entirely self-supporting communities, subsisting by their own exertions.

10233. Going back to Merxplas again, would you introduce machinery; do you think that the community could consume on the premises all that could be made, electrical machines, bricks, buttons, the castings, etc.?—Distinctly; if they can produce more than they consume, they are more than self-supporting; the whole mischief of these places is that they cannot produce as much as they consume, and that is why the outside world has to help them.

10234. They have to pay for supervision, officers' salaries, etc.?—All that comes in from outside. However you start these colonies, however much they produce, outside labour will always have to pay something for them.

10235. I am merely pointing out the difficulties?—I am trying to drive at the economic basis of the whole thing, that it is impossible for them to produce more than they can consume. It is perfectly true they may produce more buttons, and want to dispose of those, but then they have had to buy the slates. I think the principle we have got to insist upon is this, that if we buy slates from the outside world, we should be justified in paying for those slates with buttons. I mean, to put it in a very crude shape, outside labour would lose nothing.

10236. You adopt the language of the economist; how shall we satisfy the button-maker by saying you have bought slates from the slate merchant?—As far as possible, I should buy nothing and sell nothing; you might have one colony, if you want a lot of slates, in a place where you can get slates, and you might have another colony in the Lincolnshire fens, because there is an immense amount of land to be reclaimed there, and you might have another colony where timber was to be grown.

10237. There would be a distinct advantage in having many colonies in different parts?—Certainly, but I think if you went outside for things, I would face a trade unionist on that argument, and I believe he would see it. Might I say I do attach great importance to the introduction of religious influence. I think that has been noted by other witnesses here, but that again is absolutely deficient at Merxplas; there is nothing whatever done.

10238. (Mr. Simpson.) And you feel strongly the desirability of religious influence in a labour colony?—Very strongly.

10239. It might be managed by charitable or philanthropic organisations being allowed to come into the colony?—Personally, those are the lines I should like myself to see it on, rather than the State doing it.

10240. (Mr. Davy.) Merxplas is in no sense reformatory I think?—I do not think it is at all; hardly at all.

10241. The day we were at Merxplas there were only twenty colonists there for the first time?—They are mostly habituals.

10242. It means that once a colonist, always a colonist?—Oh, yes.

10243. Were you informed that men were discharged very often, and re-arrested within two or three days?—Well, we were told that when they went out they often went on the drink, and then came back again.

10244. What would you do with the wives and children of your colonists?—That is a difficult question. I do not think the class of vagrant who comes before us in Lincolnshire very often has a wife, or at any rate an acknowledged wife.

10245. It is more a paper difficulty than a real one?—Yes.

10246. Now, just a question or two about Lincolnshire; do you ever send a man to quarter sessions as an incorrigible rogue?—Yes.

10247. For what sort of an offence?—For a long list of convictions. Practically that is all.

10248. And what do quarter sessions give him?—Almost always twelve months.

10249. Do they ever flog him?—Never to my knowledge. I have never heard of such a case.

10250. That is a possible arrangement according to the present law?—Yes, it is, I believe.

10251. Your suggestion is that the incorrigible rogue for vagrancy offences should be detained in a labour colony?—Yes, instead of giving twelve months' imprisonment, I would give him seven years in a colony. There were two up before us only a fortnight ago, and one of them was only just out from a twelve months' sentence.

10252. What had he done this time?—He had been caught begging again. He got twelve months' hard labour at the Lindsey quarter sessions on the 12th November, 1903, as an incorrigible rogue. He was up again on 30th June.

10253. Can you hazard any suggestion why that man stays in the county of Lincoln, where apparently every beggar is run in?—I do not know.

10254. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Probably he would be caught before he could get out?—He had a chance to get out. The police are fair.

10255. (Mr. Davy.) Do you have many cases of sleeping out?—Not many in our petty sessional division; I believe there are a certain number in some petty sessional divisions.

10256. Do the police apprehend for that offence; I mean are they strict?—Well, I would not like to say; certainly we do not in our petty sessional division and in the two that I know.

10257. There would not be many cases of sleeping out, I suppose?—I do not think so; it is nearly all begging.

10258. Your figures are remarkable in this way that although you enforce the Vagrancy Act very strictly, yet the number of pauper vagrants and the number of vagrant convictions increase?—Yes, the numbers of paupers in the workhouses are increasing very largely.

10259. Paupers of all classes?—Yes.

10260. Now take the two men whom you mention in your report. All the convictions set out are within the county?—Yes.

10261. Now probably they would be convicted occasionally outside the county?—I do not know that other counties are enforcing the Act in this way. I wrote to Nottinghamshire, our adjoining county, and they certainly are not.

10262. Your figures are quite remarkable as compared with other counties?—They are.

10263. Why do these men who are so frequently convicted for begging stay in the county?—I do not know.

10264. You say that prisons are not deterrent to the vagrant class at present?—That is so.

10265. Do you think that prisons are less deterrent than they were?—Yes, I do.

10266. Can you attribute any reason for their becoming less deterrent?—Well, I think the old treadmill was distinctly a deterrent, whereas nobody minds wood bundling under comfortable conditions.

10267. What is your equivalent to hard labour in Lincoln?—Well, I think they do as much wood bundling as anything.

10268. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Wood chopping?—Wood chopping, wood bundling, and a bit of gardening. I am not certain whether they do stone breaking or not. I know a short time ago they were not, because there was great difficulty in getting stone, but they may be stone breaking now.

Mr. H. J. Torr.
19 July 1905.

Mr. H. J. Torr.
19 July 1905. 10269. (Mr. Davy.) Would you allow justices in petty sessions to send men to a colony for a term of years ?—I do not know about a term of years ; I thought the Chairman's suggestion was an excellent idea.

10270. The Chairman's suggestion was that a conviction should be recorded, and after a certain number of convictions the man should be sent to quarter sessions to be dealt with?—I would not deal with him at quarter sessions, because I think it makes him too much of a criminal for one thing, and the other thing is you have a great many of these cases, and they would be dealt with as incorrigibles by quarter sessions as a mere matter of routine. Incorrigibles are not tried by a jury, they are disposed of at once. If they were not dealt with perfunctorily, you would have quarter sessions broken down by the number. Quarter sessions just gets through its work in a day.

10271. Would you trust petty sessions with a man's liberty for three to seven years ?—I do not know about the seven, I would certainly do so up to three, after giving the man a warning once or twice.

10272. Have you formed any sort of estimate of the number of people who would have to be locked up at starting ?—I think a considerable number. I was talking to a Labour Member in the House a short time ago, and he said he could pick me out 2,000 in his own knowledge who might be sent as colonists.

10273. The man who has taken to the road wholly you wish to segregate ?—Yes, and the men in half the shelters in London and in the Salvation Army tents are men like that.

10274. You must have some colonies ready to send them to ?—But you would only begin a system of this kind, I take it, on quite small lines ; get one or two colonies with power of detention vested in certain persons, and gradually the surplus labour of these men would go in building accommodation for others. If you get these men off the street you would also stop the breeding of these creatures.

10275. What I mean is this ; a man would have to be sentenced to segregation for those years by a judicial sentence of some sort, even if it were only justices in petty sessions ?—Yes, I should keep it as little judicial as possible. In the Belgian system there is a distinct difference between the judicial system and the sentences on these men.

10276. You would sentence a man by the course of law, I take it ?—Yes, but an administrative order is more my idea.

10277. An administrative order must be given by somebody, and that administrative order must have the force of law in so far as it takes away that man's liberty for seven or three years ?—Oh, yes, it does ; you would have to have the same authority to do it.

10278. Then you must have some place ready to which these people can be sent ?—Yes.

10279. Therefore I suppose the Home Office would be responsible for providing those places ; or could you trust to voluntary societies ?—Our idea is that the Home Office might start some ; a certain number of the existing colonies, like Hadleigh and Lingfield, might be certified by the Home Office, and counties might be encouraged to start others, and they should be certified in the same way that an inebriates' home is certified now, subject to certain rules and regulations by the Home Office ; the magistrate then should have the power, instead of sending men to prison, to send to any certified labour colony under certain limitations.

10280. Who should pay for that certified labour colony ?—Well, presumably the Home Office would pay for part ; the Home Office would save on its prison population ; the boards of guardians might pay for part because they would save on their workhouse accommodation.

10281. Boards of guardians are not much interested in the tramp ; he has got no settlement ?—They have to take him as a vagrant in their casual ward.

10282. But the man has no settlement ?—No. There was a movement a short time ago to establish cells for vagrants in Lincolnshire. We rather got it stopped on this very ground, that it was unwise to commit ourselves to heavy expenditure for cells, for if the law were altered the same amount of money spent on colonies would be much more remunerative.

10283. If a magistrate in petty sessions sent a man to a colony for seven years, would the board of guardians be willing to pay for that man ; would they not rather say, " Let the people who sentenced him pay for him " ?—I think they would probably pay half ; I think the Home Office would have to pay part, because the local people otherwise would say, " He will have to go to prison, and the nation will have to pay the lot." In Belgium they pay one third.

10284. In prisons and labour colonies you would have two different authorities paying in the two cases ?—Well, you have got places like asylums where you have the Imperial contribution, and then you have got the same dual system in the inebriates' homes, where guardians make large grants.

10285. The asylums are for people with a settlement ?—They are supposed to have a settlement.

10286. They do have ; if they are not settled, then they are a county charge ?—I do not think you could enforce the settlement principle here ; you would have to base it on the number of the casuals, and the expense they would save in the casual ward.

10287. That is, we are told, about 2d. a day ?—Apart from the capital cost.

10288. Which in some unions is nil ?—I have read papers on this subject before several of the Poor Law conferences, and the idea of the colony has generally been well received ; and I think what one generally put forward was that the cost should be shared between the local authorities and the Imperial authorities.

10289. And you have no objection to the Imperial authorities bearing the whole cost ?—I think I would rather like the local people to be interested in it as well ; I think I should prefer the local people to be interested, for I think that you must get the human element into it. I am certain that is the lesson of all these foreign colonies that I have seen. The absence of the human element prevents any possibility of reformation, and if the whole thing were under the Home Office, I do not think you would get local people interested in it.

10290. You have read the literature of the foreign labour colonies ?—Yes.

10291. The Board of Trade Reports and so on ?—Yes.

10292. You would probably agree with these Reports in saying that the colonies exercise no reforming influence ?—I think the German ones surely exercise a certain amount, and I think at Lingfield and Hadleigh they certainly exercise a certain amount. In England we are all for religion in our colonies and no discipline ; abroad they are all for discipline and no religion, except in Germany ; and I think they fail because they have none of the humanising influences ; and we fail at Lingfield and Hadleigh because we cannot keep the people there long enough.

10293. (Mr. Simpson.) Having thought over the system a good deal, and visited the foreign labour colonies, are you of opinion that if there was power to commit people compulsorily to a labour colony in England, Hadleigh and Lingfield might be certified as places for the purpose ?—Yes, with certain rules laid down by the Home Office.

10294. Subject to Government inspection ?—And with some such system as I have suggested of visiting justices to whom the disciplinary part might be entrusted.

10295. Possibly with a greater chance of doing a certain amount of reformation than there is at Merxplas ?—Certainly, a very much greater chance, because you have the human element and the religious element.

10296. And do you think there would be much prospect of other places being started, on the same lines, by philanthropic effort ?—I think philanthropy would be wholly inadequate to deal with the number, and I think you would have to trust mainly to the rates and the taxes, but I think we might start a few.

10297. Do you think it would be possible for county authorities to start a place like that, provided that the State contributed to the maintenance of the people in it?—I do, on very much the same lines as the asylums. I should like to look upon all this class of person as the same type of creature as the imbecile, in that he requires treatment rather than punishment; put it before the local authorities on those lines.

10298. The union is a very small area to contribute to the cost of a vagrant, simply because he happened to be caught within their district?—Yes.

10299. The county is a larger area?—Yes; the county feeling is growing.

10300. Do you think it likely that the county would agree to pay a certain amount per head for vagrants committed to, say, Hadleigh, by the justices in that county, provided the State paid the rest; or perhaps it might be divided into three parts, State, county, and voluntary contributions; do you think that would be a practicable arrangement?—Yes; the State paying a fixed amount and the county a fixed amount. Of course at Hadleigh and Lingfield there is a large amount of work done which is not in connection with the vagrant, the training of the Christian brothers and all that.

10301. I was only mentioning Hadleigh as being a labour colony started by voluntary enterprise?—Yes.

10302. Well, you think it would be practicable, in the case of a labour colony started by voluntary enterprise, for the county to agree to pay so much a head on the understanding that that colony would take in every vagrant committed by justices in that county?—I think some arrangement of that kind could be made.

10303. It would be an arrangement between the county and the Treasury, of course, to a great extent?—Yes.

10304. You would not have a vagrant sent for a long time to a colony simply for begging, unless he had been convicted frequently before?—No; I think that suggestion the Chairman made was the right line; the man should be warned once or twice.

10305. But still he must show a considerable amount of persistency in his offence before you would go the length of depriving him of liberty for as much as twelve months simply for an act of begging?—In Belgium their first offenders go to Wortel, and they are sentenced to be detained until they have earned fifteen francs, and I think an arrangement like that would be a half-way house between the positive detention and the warning. The first sentence always might be an indeterminate sentence of that kind.

10306. As regards the men who are sent up to your quarter sessions as incorrigible rogues, are they mostly persistent beggars, or what is their offence?—Persistent beggars, petty thieving, small offences, cumulative offences, until they come up on a final offence as incorrigible rogues.

10307. In some counties they have no incorrigible rogues, except people addicted to indecent exposure; I was wondering whether that was the case in your county?—No; I never had any come up for that; they are all persistent beggars.

10308. In 1903 there were 240 men sent up to quarter sessions all through the country as incorrigible rogues; I suppose they would probably be well qualified for a labour colony?—Yes. Speaking as a magistrate, what led me to take this whole question up fifteen years ago was the feeling of hopelessness in giving these seven day sentences. Here is a fellow standing before you; you only give him fourteen days; it is no earthly good; what one longed for was the power to put him into a labour colony, to give the man a chance, or at any rate to save him doing damage both to himself and the country.

10309. (Mr. Davy.) You can always give him twenty-eight days?—But then when you do that, they do not care, because in cases they have asked for more.

10310. (Mr. Simpson.) And you think that class of man who does not mind prison a bit, has increased of late years?—Yes; I think the whole class dislike prison a good deal less than they did.

10311. (Sir William Chance.) Are you a guardian, or have you been a guardian?—I used to sit as an ex-officio guardian.

10312. How long were you an ex-officio guardian then? Mr. H. J. Torr.
—I was keen on it for about four years.

* 10313. Did you pay any attention to this particular question at that time?—Yes. 19 July 1905.

10314. Did you visit the vagrants in the casual wards?—Yes.

10315. What was your union?—Lincoln.

10316. What kind of vagrant wards had you there?—We had not cells; it was one ward; they used to sit in a sort of cabin to break their stones, and chuck the stuff through a hole; I do not know what they do now.

10317. But you took a special interest in the people who frequented these wards?—Mainly as a magistrate; that was how the matter came before me by those fellows continually being brought up. I used to hate sentencing them, and I took this question up in the hope of finding some alternative treatment.

10318. What was your opinion of the class of men who frequented the wards; what proportion should you think were professionals?—Generally throughout the year, I should think three-fourths of them were professionals.

10319. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) You laid some stress on these men not minding being sent to prison nowadays?—Yes.

10320. Do you think they would mind three months in a labour colony more?—I do distinctly.

10321. Why; would the conditions be harder than in prison?—It would be nine hours a day in a labour colony; you cannot do more than six in prison.

10322. And as regards food; would the diet be worse in a labour colony than in prison?—No, I do not suppose so.

10323. And there would be association in the colony; they would be allowed to talk to one another?—You would give them outdoor work instead of indoor work.

10324. They would not be in separation, as they are in prison for the first month?—No, they would not.

10325. Do you not think they would prefer the association treatment to the cellular treatment?—I would give them different types of work; you are rather limited in a prison.

10326. I want to know in what respects the labour in your colony would differ from that in a prison?—The unskilled man would be put to dig, to break up land; there would be something fairly hard for him to do. The other man would be put to his trade, but he would do a solid day's work, which he certainly does not do in prison.

10327. How would you enforce that?—By punishment, docking his food and docking his accommodation. I think the experience at Lingfield and Hadleigh is that if they have a power of rising they work for that improvement. If they may have a pipe of tobacco, they work to get that extra; in prison you give no encouragement.

10328. You say prison is less unpopular now, put it that way, than it used to be?—Yes.

10329. And the reason for that, you say, is the abolition of the treadmill?—Yes; and there is greater comfort and the food is better.

10330. In what way is there greater comfort?—The cells are warmer.

10331. They are exactly the same as they have been for the last thirty years?—I think the main thing that has done it is the treadmill; they had a dislike to the treadmill. I hope you will not go away with the impression that I am against the improvement of the prison system. I am not.

10332. What is your standpoint exactly with regard to the prison?—The prison falls between two stools. You have removed the old deterrent system of treatment; inside prison you used to make it so hot for a man that he did not like it; a short term was then quite enough. Now you have got your prisons on a basis of being reformatory, not uncomfortable, but you have not correspondingly increased the length of your sentence, so that the reformatory influences have no time to operate.

10333. That is a question for the magistrates?—We have not the powers. You have gone in for humanising

Mr. H. J. Torr.
19 July 1905. influences in prisons very much ; it is splendid, but a man is not there long enough ; those sentences should be brought into co-operation with the new treatment in the prison.

10334. You have been speaking of Lincoln and Lincolnshire all this time ?—Yes.

10335. You were away from Lincolnshire for some time ?—Yes.

10336. You were on the bench before you went away ?—I was put on in 1889.

10337. Do you not remember that the numbers of men going to prison then were enormous, although there was a treadmill ?—I have not the figures in my mind ; there were a lot.

10338. You refer to the man who has become inefficient on account of age ; would you send him to a labour colony ?—I would.

10339. How would that improve his efficiency ; would you keep him there for ever ?—I believe he would stop there.

10340. He would stay there for ever ?—Yes.

10341. That would increase the population of the colonies ; it would get to something enormous ?—I would let the man stay for this reason ; you have done away with the labour opportunities that he formerly had, the old half-day job on our roads ; a nice comfortable opening and 1s. a day for it ; now you have to pay full wages ; the country wants able-bodied men, and those chaps cannot get a job, they are drifting down ; failing everything in the country, give them a chance in a labour colony, like a very large number of these fellows at Merxplas.

10342. Could you give any idea as to the number who would have to be provided for ?—No, I should like to see the colonies started on a small scale ; ultimately you could maintain an immense number of men.

10343. And you are under the impression that they could be self-supporting ?—Not quite, but nearly so.

10344. Considering the large staff, and the fact that means of detention must be secured ?—I do not think it would be self-supporting, but I think it would be certainly cheaper to the community than the total sum these people now cost the community.

10345. (Mr. Davy.) You are aware that one of the reasons for abolishing the treadmill was that so many men were exempt by medical certificate ?—Yes.

10346. Suppose you had a medical officer in your colony ; these men are usually of feeble physique ; might not he exempt a great number of them from that nine hours' labour ?—I think not many. You see the treadmill was a peculiarly severe type of labour ; it strained the body in some ways, whereas the work you could put them on in the colony would be every type of labour, from sweeping the floors of the dining room, upwards.

Mr. W. J. FARRANT, called ; and Examined.

Mr. W. J. Farrant.
19 July 1905. 10347. (Mr. Simpson.) You are head of the statistical branch of the Home Office ?—Yes.

10348. And you prepare the judicial statistics each year ?—Yes.

10349. We understand that there is a certain number of vagrants who do not mind prison, and that prison is no deterrent to them ; it has been suggested by some witnesses that the number of those men has increased of late years, and that this may be due to certain alterations in prison discipline, consequent on the Act of 1898 ; and it has been suggested that the figures relating to refractory paupers, that is, paupers proceeded against for refusing to do their task, might throw light on the question : what have you to say as to these figures ?—They have shown a remarkable increase during the last four years, from 1899 to 1904. Previously, the increase was only in proportion to the number of vagrants, and perhaps the population ; probably they were in excess of the population figures, but in the last four years they have increased more in proportion than any other figures which we have.

10350. They have gone up each year ?—Each year since 1900.

10351. And gone up remarkably ?—Yes, the figures have about doubled in four years.

10352. Before 1900 can you find any run of four or five years similar to the run during the last four or five years ?—No ; there was an increase for two years in 1867–1868.

10353. That was for two years only ?—Yes, it was equally sudden, but it did not extend beyond the two years. I cannot suggest any reason why the numbers should have increased in those years.

10354. Speaking generally, before 1900 the total has gone up and down in a somewhat irregular and casual way ?—Yes, there has been no very marked increase except on two occasions, that is to say, in 1868 and 1883.

10355. But since 1900 it has gone steadily up ?—Yes, beyond all precedent.

10356. Is that increase connected with the number of vagrants relieved at casual wards, for instance ?—Yes, I think so. There has been a similar increase in vagrants relieved in casual wards, but not in the same proportion—the increase is only about half as much.

10357. Was there not a great drop during the war in the number of vagrants relieved at casual wards ?—Yes, that was in 1899.

10358. The figures of vagrants relieved were low during the progress of the war ?—Yes, but there had been a great increase from 1889 to 1896, and during the war it never fell back to the figures at the beginning of that period.

10359. When the figures fell back, do you find any corresponding decrease in the figures of refractory paupers ?—There was a slight decrease, but so slight that it could hardly be in connection with the other figures.

10360. Then, in 1903, there was a drop in the number of casual paupers ?—Yes, but they rose again in 1904.

10361. Was there any corresponding drop in the number of refractory paupers ?—No.

10362. Does it appear that the number of persons proceeded against as refractory paupers is closely connected with the number of vagrants relieved ?—No, it is not ; while the one figure increases continually, the other varies.

10363. Do you find that the total number of persons proceeded against summarily has equally increased with a comparable regularity during the last four or five years ?—The figures for vagrants sleeping out have increased in the same way, though not to the same extent as misbehaviour by paupers.

10364. Similarly ?—Yes.

10365. Starting from the same date ?—Starting from exactly the same date.

10366. Take the total number of persons proceeded against summarily for all offences ; has there been a steady increase ?—No, it does not appear that there has been. The figures were highest in 1899, and since then they have decreased, and they would have decreased still more, I believe, but for the large increase of drunkenness prosecutions in 1903 on account of the change in the law.

10367. But, on the whole, they have decreased ?—They have decreased.

10368. Therefore, it looks as if there were some exceptional cause for the steady and marked increase in refractory paupers ?—Yes.

10369. And it looks as if it were some cause which did not operate before 1900 ?—Yes.

10370. Taking the whole of the figures you have got in the judicial statistics, do you find any other figures at all that run up from 1900 in the same regular and marked way ?—No ; no figures whatever, with the exception of the two connected figures begging and sleeping out ; they have shown an increase in those four years.

10371. Speaking generally, do you see the same tendency running through the country generally, or is the increase due to any particular counties?—There is an exceptional increase spread all over the country.

10372. There is a marked increase in the West Riding of Yorkshire; but that is not sufficient of itself to account for the whole increase?—No, it only accounts for half of it.

10373. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) What was the increase in the West Riding?—The total increase was 500, roughly; half of it was in Sheffield.

10374. (Mr. Simpson.) Since 1900 what has been the actual increase in the number of prosecutions of refractory paupers?—The total in 1899 was 3,632; in 1904 it was 7,436.

10375. It doubled in that time?—More than doubled.

10376. Therefore, even if we exclude the West Riding of Yorkshire, the increase would still be something altogether exceptional?—Yes.

10377. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Is that so?—Yes; in 1904 there was an increase of nearly 1,000 over 1903; about 500 of that 1,000 was in the West Riding.

10378. (Mr. Simpson.) That was in one year?—Yes.

10379. But since 1900 there has been a steady increase quite apart from the West Riding?—Oh, yes. It was 1,300 in 1901; 800 in 1902; and 400 in 1903, and 500 in 1904.

10380. Then is it fair to deduce from those figures that there is some cause at work all through the country?—Yes.

10381. You cannot regard the increase as merely casual?—No, certainly not, because there is nothing like it in previous years.

10382. Are there not some other figures which might bear on the same subject?—Well, there is the increase in the proportion of persons who go to prison in default of payment of fines.

10383. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Has that anything to do with vagrancy?—No.

10384. (Mr. Simpson.) The rise in these figures from 1900 may have had something to do with the change which took place about that time in the treatment in prisons under the Prison Act, 1898?—Well, at any rate it seems that convicted persons were less reluctant to go to prison instead of paying the fine. Up to 1900, the percentage had decreased.

10385. The percentage of persons fined who went to prison in default of a fine?—Had decreased from 1893, that is the earliest year for which we have figures, up to 1899.

10386. Continuously?—Yes, continuously.

10387. Could you assign any cause for the decrease up to 1900?—It may have been due to greater willingness on the part of the magistrates to allow time or to allow payment of the fine by instalments.

10388. Have you any reason for thinking magistrates were, during the period from 1893 to 1900, more willing to allow time?—No, I cannot say I have any reason for thinking so.

10389. Do you think that it could have been due to this—that more and more well-to-do people were fined in connection with bicycles and motor-cars and so on, therefore a larger proportion of defendants were able and willing to pay their fines?—Yes, probably that is the explanation.

10390. If that was the explanation, you would expect that decrease to go on now when there are so many motor-car prosecutions?—Yes, certainly.

10391. But as a matter of fact, what has happened since 1900?—The percentage has increased from about 14 per cent. to 21 per cent.

10392. Steadily and continuously?—Steadily and continuously.

10393. It is rather difficult to say that that is a mere casual variation?—Yes, I think the period is too long for a casual variation; there must, I think, be some permanent reason for it.

10394. (Dr. Downes.) First of all, I think you gave us statistics relating to refractory paupers or refusals to do work?—Yes.

10395. And you compared the increase in those figures with the movement of vagrancy?—Yes. Mr. W. J. Farrant.

10396. Can you differentiate in your convictions for refusing to do work, the convictions of vagrants as apart from the inmates of workhouses?—No, we cannot. 19 July 1905.

10397. Then you are comparing one movement with another which does not quite relate to the same class?—Well, it is probable that the offences are all committed by vagrants, but we cannot say with certainty.

10398. If the inmate of an ordinary workhouse refuses to do his work, and is convicted, as happens from time to time, would that conviction be recorded in the figures you have just given us?—Just so.

10399. (Mr. Davy.) He would be included with the vagrants?—Yes, in fact, we have no means of discriminating between the offences committed by vagrants, and those committed by the inmates of ordinary workhouses.

10400. (Dr. Downes.) You are aware that the statistics of vagrancy do not include inmates of ordinary workhouses?—That is so.

10401. (Mr. Simpson.) You have also got the figures for paupers generally, have you not?—Yes, the number of paupers.

10402. The number of able-bodied paupers exclusive of vagrants?—Yes.

10403. Do you find an increase in the number of able-bodied paupers comparable to the increase in the number of convictions?—There is an increase in the same direction, but I think not quite so great.

10404. (Dr. Downes.) Taking the convictions for begging and sleeping out, how do these agree with the number of vagrants relieved?—The two together I show on this diagram (see Appendix XX.)

10405. Convictions for begging and sleeping out have increased in like proportion to the number of vagrants relieved?—Yes, I think they have.

10406. Can you tell us what the actual figures are; in 1884, the vagrants relieved on the night of the 1st of July were 4,100; what are your convictions for begging and sleeping out?—In 1884, for begging and sleeping out together, 24,965.

10407. Then in 1894 the vagrants relieved on the 1st of July were 6,916?—The figure for begging and sleeping out is 27,398.

10408. In 1904, the number of casual paupers was 10,843?—The figure for begging and sleeping out is 34,821.

10409. Well, now, what is the rate of increase from 24,965 to 34,821?—About 40 per cent.

10410. And what is the rate of increase of the vagrants relieved on the corresponding dates, 4,000 to 10,000?—150 per cent.

10411. Therefore the vagrants have increased in a greater ratio than the convictions for begging and sleeping out?—That is so; but do you think it is quite fair to compare isolated figures like that—should you not rather consider the whole progress of the figures?

10412. I am merely testing your figures by taking different years, I am not in a position to go into the full diagram; I put that test of two years?—I do not know whether the fact that one has increased more than another shows no agreement or connection.

10413. (Mr. Davy.) Your diagram shows at all events that there has been a very large increase in the number of convictions; that is certain, is it not?—That is certain, yes.

10414. Whatever we may deduce from it, it is a fact that the number of convictions has increased from 1900?—Yes.

10415. Will you give us the actual number of persons in 1900 who were convicted for misbehaviour?—In that year, 3,717 persons were prosecuted for that offence.

10416. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) What are the later numbers?—In 1901, 5,118 were prosecuted, in 1902, 5,959, in 1903, 6,496, and in 1904, 7,436.

10417. (Mr. Davy.) The number of persons proceeded against has risen from 3,700 to 7,400?—Yes.

10418. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Now what is the number of casuals relieved in those years, that is relieved on one night?—The number of casuals relieved

Mr. W. J. Farrant.
19 July 1905 on the 1st July, 1900, was 4,170; 1st July, 1901, 5,455; 1st July, 1902, 6,609; 1st July, 1903, 5,121; 1st July, 1904, 6,748.

10419. (Mr. Simpson.) Your figures show a very great rise in the proportion of prisoners who go to prison rather than pay fines since 1900?—Yes.

10420. Which is in marked contrast to the period before 1900?—Yes.

10421. That will be affected to a certain extent by the provision in the Prison Act, 1898, which allows people to pay part of their fine and get off part of their imprisonment?—Yes.

10422. Would it lead to a rather larger number of persons going to prison because they would be able to get out after a few days?—No.

10423. It would affect it to a certain extent?—Yes.

10424. Now of those persons who go to prison in default of a fine, what proportion pay part of their fine?—About 13 per cent.

10425. That is not a very large proportion?—13 per cent. of those who go to prison pay the fine or part of it afterwards.

10426. Do you think that the new procedure under which they can do that is sufficient to account for that increase?—It is only a matter of opinion, but I think it is not sufficient; I think part of it must be due to the amelioration of prison discipline.

10427. (Mr. Davy.) Have you statistics showing the total number of persons summarily convicted?—Yes, we can show you the number received in prison on summary convictions.

10428. For the whole year?—For the whole year.

10429. That will be better than taking an average number in prison?—I think so.

10430. Can you tell me the number received into prison on summary convictions for those four years?—The numbers received were as follows:—In 1900, 139,179; in 1901, 155,100; in 1902, 162,969; in 1903, 179,979; in 1904, 189,445, thus showing a continuous rise from 1900. From 1901 and onwards the number has been larger than it has ever been since 1857.

10431. Those were all summarily convicted prisoners?—Yes; but only a small proportion of them would be vagrants or disorderly paupers.

10432. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) But they include the vagrants?—Yes.

10433. And persons who go to prison in default of paying a fine?—Yes.

10434. (Mr. Davy.) There is an increase from some cause in the number of prosecutions both for sleeping out and for misbehaviour by paupers?—Yes.

10435. There is an increase from some cause in the persons who prefer to go to gaol?—Yes.

10436. And there is a marked increase in the total prison population?—Yes.

10437. All these increases date from 1900?—Yes.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY.

Tuesday, 1st August, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.

Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.

Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.

Captain SHOWERS.

Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Mr. H. LOCKWOOD, called; and Examined.

Mr. H. Lockwood.
1 Aug. 1905. 10438. (Mr. Davy.) You have been General Inspector of the Local Government Board in the Metropolitan district for eleven years?—For eleven years.

10439. Previous to that you had some years experience as an Inspector in more than one country district?—In the Midlands; and I was for twelve years in the Eastern counties.

10440. Will you tell me what machinery you have for the inspection of vagrant wards in London?—We have five visiting officers as they are called, the principal one of whom, Mr. Simmons, you have had before you already. I daresay he described to you his system of inspecting wards. Each of the wards is visited not less than twice a week by himself or his assistants, with a view to identifying vagrants for the purposes of detention.

10441. When a vagrant has been identified, do the guardians detain him for the statutory period?—Not in all cases; of course, the majority of the guardians do, but in certain instances they do not. And then again, as you know, under the Order issued in Mr. Ritchie's time, a superintendent has authority at his discretion to discharge a man early in the morning following his admission, if he has reason to believe that he has work to go to. I am bound to say that as far as I know in London it is quite the exception for vagrants to demand discharge on those conditions, but still it does happen occasionally.

10442. Would that discretion of the superintendent extend to men who had been identified as having been in the wards during the month previously?—Well, it should not, but I think it is quite possible that a superintendent, knowing the wishes of his guardians, although he was aware that the man was liable to detention, would allow him to go out before the full time, say next morning.

10443. I suppose the object of these visiting officers is to secure a certain amount of uniformity in the management of the wards?—Partly that, but mainly I think to ensure detention, because the theory was that the enforcement of detention would have a distinctly deterrent effect upon the habitual casual.

10444. As a matter of fact, is the system of detention uniform throughout the Metropolis?—No.

10445. Have not Mr. Ritchie's Order and the general power of the superintendent to discharge certain classes the effect of making the matter practically one for the guardians' discretion?—In a great measure, yes. Perhaps I may just quote my report of 1894, which sums up what I then knew to be the practice in London, or the absence of practice, and what I stated then obtains to this day. "The question of vagrancy and its increase has received special attention during the past year, and conferences on the subject have been held in various parts of the country, but without, as yet, any practical results. The general desire on the part of local authorities is apparently to pass on the problem to be solved by some other authority. Numerous applications have been made to the Board to provide for uniformity of system, but this was done 12 years ago in the Order of 1882. The provisions of that Order have never been strictly carried out by any considerable number of guardians, and failing voluntary adoption the Board have no power to enforce it. There is no real uniformity even in London; some guardians do not detain, some give one task, some another, and some 'practically none at all.' And the dietaries vary—well to some extent, but I question whether the variations are outside the four corners of the Order, beyond, that is to say, the giving of broth or soup in lieu of gruel, or something of that sort. If they do, it is done sub rosa; I do not think they often give food which is not provided for by the Order; still it is done occasionally.

10446. (Dr. Downes.) There is a considerable difference between broth and soup of the kind that is now made in the workhouses?—Oh, certainly, yes; but I take it that they would contend that broth would cover anything in the nature of broth or soup, although the ingredients of broth are strictly speaking, I suppose, different to those of soup.

10447. (Mr. Davy.) I think you will agree that in the country unions there is absolutely no uniformity in the way vagrants are treated?—There never was in any I have had experience of.

10448. The usual reasons for want of uniformity are that some of the unions are extremely poor—too poor to provide wards in which you could enforce detention?—Yes.

10449. Should you say there is a general lack of uniformity in London?—Well, I do not know that I would go quite so far as that.

10450. But practically within certain limits the matter is left within the discretion of the various boards of guardians?—Yes.

10451. Who in their administration are not altogether guided by the general policy of the Local Government Board?—No, they are guided by what they conceive to be their own interests, and in many instances by sentiment and humanity, and so on.

10452. In London, a good many of the boards of guardians discuss social questions that are closely allied to general politics?—I think they do.

10453. That would have an effect on their treatment of a class like the vagrant?—Oh, very likely.

10454. In London, bread alone is not the dietary for vagrants; you always give gruel, do you not?—Yes, bread and gruel or bread and cheese.

10455. That is under a special Order for London; still, do you think that by regulations or pressure on the part of the Board, greater uniformity could be secured?—In London?

10456. Yes?—No, I think not.

10457. Do you think you could secure uniformity in London by any means short of transferring the management of the wards to one central authority?—No, I do not think you could.

10458. It has been suggested to us that the police are the right authority to manage the wards; what is your view?—Speaking for myself, I should be inclined to say yes, but on the other hand I am not sure whether public opinion would carry one as far as that. There is a disposition, I think, on the part of a good many people to say you have no right to treat a man as a criminal because he happens to be out of work and in want of food, and if you hand him over to the police you would be treating him as something in the nature of a criminal.

10459. Is there any other authority in London that you could suggest as a central authority?—No; on occasions of this sort the authority spoken of is almost invariably the Metropolitan asylums board. In my own opinion the asylums board have quite as much as they possibly can do. Then the county council have been mentioned, and I should be inclined to think that body also have as much to do as they conveniently can. Then I may say that some years ago, in consultation with my colleague, Dr. Downes, we considered whether it would be possible to create a new body composed of delegates from various boards of guardians in London, who would deal with the able-bodied of London, and incidentally with vagrants; but on the whole it appeared, to me at all events, that it would be very difficult to arrange that a body so composed would really find time, or have the inclination to carry out the duties in connection with the relief of the able-bodied and vagrants in the way one would wish for, so the matter dropped.

10460. The relief of the able-bodied and the vagrants is rather an unattractive object, is it not?—Yes.

10461. Now, what is your experience of bodies that are not directly elected by the ratepayers, who are delegated from other authorities, or co-opted; is it not that they are apt to be extravagant?—Yes, I think there is a disposition to extravagance in the case of authorities who are not directly responsible to the ratepayers, though the same may be said to apply equally to those who are, for the ratepayers as a rule do not take sufficient interest in what affects their pocket.

10462. I suppose a great many London guardians are men who do not pay much rates?—Oh, a good many of them, in the South and East certainly.

10463. Men who live in small houses?—Yes; and on pretty well every board of guardians there is a certain number of men who, at the outside, are rated at a very low rate, even if they pay rates at all.

10464. With regard to the casual ward class in London, we have been told that they are rather a distinct body, easily distinguished from those who use shelters and common lodging-houses?—Yes, I believe that is so. Of course the vagrant is a class of person about whom it is exceedingly difficult to get anything like really accurate information, but so far as can be judged from what is known of them, I should say it is a fact that there is an appreciable number of London vagrants whom you may almost say are a class by themselves. I do not know whether Mr. Simmons referred to two returns that he made out for me. The last was made in 1904, in which there is a list of 767 men and 200 women who were known to the visiting officers as habitual vagrants in this sense, that they had all been identified. Here is the list; there is no sort of question about it, because here are the christian names and surnames and ages, and so on; it is rather interesting to note—you had some similar figures to these, I think, given you by Mr. Lamb—that of the 767 men, there were 192 between the ages of fifty and sixty, and between sixty and seventy there were 175, and over seventy there were 13; so you see one-third of the number were aged persons who must have been living this sort of life probably for many years; I do not think these persons ever go very far. It is impossible to prove it absolutely, but I think there is good reason to suppose that a large number of the 1,100—more or less—persons who are returned as being relieved every Friday night in London in the casual wards, spend the greater part of the year in London. They have their time for excursion, when they go either to the seaside, or hopping-picking or fruit-picking, and so on, but for the greater part of the year, I am inclined to think, they are in London, and they circulate round about the casual wards.

10465. Do you find that detention in casual wards in London is a deterrent?—No, I question whether it is.

10466. In the country I think you will agree that it is?—I think so, yes. In a report I made in 1892 I suggested increased powers of detention. Perhaps I may read what I then said:—"The vagrant of to-day is the 'despair of poor law administrators; excessive severity failed 300 years ago as it has failed since, and in any case would not be tolerated now. I can myself conceive of no deterrent method of relief calculated to meet with the approval and co-operation of the public other than that of giving greater powers of detention combined with uniformity of treatment. If, in the absence of satisfactory evidence of genuine search for, and reasonable probability of obtaining, work on the part of the applicant, it were a condition of his relief that he submit, not to punishment, but to, say, a week's discipline and work, opportunities for inquiry, help and improvement would be afforded which are obviously impossible under the present system, which is essentially casual in its working and application. Moreover, it must be remembered that were it not for well-intentioned but inconsiderate almsgiving, vagrancy in its present excess would be impossible, and if the public could be assured that relief in the best sense of the term, as implying investigation, and assistance other than casual, were available for 'destitute wayfarers' in every union, it is at least conceivable that the flow of mis-applied charity would be checked, and life on the road, as it has come to be called, would lose much of the attraction it unquestionably possesses for the majority of those who gravitate to it, whether their descent is originally due to ill-fortune or constitutional aversion to regular employment." I think I am right in saying that in several instances in the Eastern counties, where detention was adopted, the

Mr. H.
Lockwood.

Aug. 1905.

*Mr. H.
Lockwood.*
1 Aug. 1905.

number of vagrants applying for relief at those particular wards certainly diminished, and on more than one occasion I have been able to confute what guardians had argued previously, when I used to advocate detention. They said, "We have sleeping accommodation here, say, for twenty men; well, if we take them and keep them for two days, then we shall have twenty more men the next night, and we shall have no room for them," but in some mysterious way it used to get about among the community that if they went to these particular places, they would be detained, and, so far as that particular ward was concerned, detention for a time at any rate did reduce the number of applicants there.

10467. (Chairman.) Detention means task as well?—Oh, yes.

10468. That probably is one of the principal reasons for objecting to detention?—Yes.

10469. (Mr. Davy.) But in London they appear not to mind being detained?—I doubt whether they do.

10470. Have you come across cases of men and women in London who use the vagrant wards as a sort of half-time workhouse; that is to say, spend three nights a week, or four nights a week, in the vagrant ward?—You mean that they work in the neighbourhood.

10471. They do some work in the neighbourhood?—It is quite possible there are cases of that sort, but I may say the only instance that came under my knowledge lately was at the casual wards at Mary Place, where I believe it was discovered by some members of this Committee, that there was a certain number of persons who would go and get an odd job at say a laundry in the neighbourhood and sleep in the casual ward. I have got no positive evidence on the subject, but I should question whether the practice obtains to any considerable extent.

10472. Still, I gather from your evidence that, in your opinion, the London casual ward is systematically used by a body of London casuals?—Yes.

10473. Who do not dread detention?—No.

10474. And who are under regulations which are by no means uniform throughout London?—That is so.

10475. I think the Board insist that every union shall provide a vagrant ward?—Yes. You see in London it so happens that the Metropolitan Houseless Poor Acts, 1864-5, required each board of guardians to provide within its own union or parish wards for destitute wayfarers and wanderers. I suppose the object of that was that each board of guardians should do what was considered to be its duty; so that one board should not shirk providing casual wards, and so avoid the cost and trouble of maintaining them.

10476. This system would preclude any general arrangement throughout London of casual wards placed in the most convenient situations?—Yes.

10477. The particular site would have only relation to the wishes of the individual board of guardians, and not to the need of the whole Metropolis?—Certainly, that is quite true; the Acts of 1864-5 continue in force, though by the Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867, the whole cost of casual relief, including the buildings and their maintenance, and the salaries of the officers, was made a charge on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.

10478. We have had some evidence from Mr. Kitchin in which he tells us that the average cost of the casual cell in London is about £150?—Yes.

10479. Have you any theory as to the reason why the cost is so heavy?—I take it that there are several reasons why many buildings erected in London would cost more than in a rural district, but I have often wondered myself whether it would not be possible to provide for this class of person at a less cost per bed; for instance, amongst other necessary items of cost is the brick division between the cells, or the sleeping places. I think, however, that in London one would hesitate to take the risk of putting up a wooden building, where a casual ward would ordinarily have to be provided. I mean, the neighbours might demur to the risk of fire.

10480. Could you do so under the Metropolitan Building Act?—I doubt whether you could. I am glad you have reminded me of that; the Metropolitan Building Act, by certain of its provisions, necessarily adds very considerably to the cost of any building that is used for the relief of the poor of any class, because the moment you get a poor person into any building provided by the guardians, it becomes a public building, and consequently you are subject to special regulations for the protection from fire, and so on.

10481. And the surveyor is practically autocratic?—Yes. The surveyor is practically autocratic. I may just give an illustration of what may happen; it has a bearing on the subject. A certain board of guardians some seven or eight years ago, in order to provide a receiving home for children, bought one side of a street. The houses in this street had been occupied by respectable artisans; they were very well arranged and substantially built, but the moment it was decided to put the children in them, the district surveyor came along and said, "This is a public building, and I must see to it, that my responsibility in respect of fire is carefully safeguarded, and so on. The first thing you have got to do is to take out all the staircases and put in teak." The guardians came to me and said, "What are we to do about this?" I said, "It is awkward; I will see what we can do; under the Act the surveyor is an autocrat, and until you have satisfied him you cannot put a single child into the homes." It occurred to us that we might get over the difficulty by having division doors which would run the whole length of the street, between each of the houses, so that if one staircase was blocked by smoke or fire, the occupants could go through the door and down the staircase in the next house. The surveyor subsequently, being a reasonable man, saw that it would be possible to protect the children from fire by these alternative means of exit through the division doors, and he gave way and did not insist upon a teak staircase being put in every house. Of course it would have greatly increased the cost of the receiving homes to the guardians. I give you that as an illustration of what may happen.

10482. You get from the various visiting officers a return of the refusals of admission at the casual wards?—Yes.

10483. What do you do with these returns?—They are kept and are published in the Board's Report every year; sometimes the guardians are written to. In the case of the City of London casual ward at Thavies Inn the refusals for want of room have been very numerous in the course of the last eighteen months or so. The guardians have been asked, and I myself have gone down there, to try to ascertain what the reasons are for so many more persons applying there than there is room for. One gets the usual reply, that it is near a shelter, or that it is in a vicinity where there are means of getting food for nothing in the early morning, and so on; but the strange thing is that neither the superintendent nor, so far as I am aware, the police in the neighbourhood—I am speaking now of Thavies Inn—can give you any accurate and conclusive evidence as to where the individuals actually do go after they have been refused admission.

10484. Are the regulations carried out at Thavies Inn as regards detention, work, and so on?—Yes; but it is more or less an associated ward; I think some of you have seen it, and for some reason or other associated wards are more popular than the cellular, or to use the more tender word, the separate ward.

10485. Should you not say, taking these figures, that the number of refusals is greater where the wards are more popular?—I think so.

10486. That is to say, where the deterrent regulations are less carried out?—Yes, and so far as figures prove anything, there appears to be no question whatever that an associated ward is always more popular than a ward on the separate system. There is the notable case of Holborn, where for many years the ward was the old-fashioned associated one, and there the refusals for want of room were always considerable. Then recently they have built new wards, and the refusals for want of room have very greatly diminished.

10487. Probably because the regulations are more strictly enforced?—Yes. They have better means for putting the men to work. In the old ward a man sat on the foot of his bed and picked oakum and so on, and they talked and chatted together, and it was rather a pleasant place of meeting for them.

10488. Is it not a fact that at some of these popular wards there is quite a crowd of people standing outside about three o'clock in the afternoon to be let in?—Yes, and it has occasionally been the subject of complaint by the neighbours, with the result that at a certain number of places—at Marylebone, for example—they have now a shelter inside.

10489. In some places they put up a notice that the wards are full?—The only place at which I am aware that that was done of recent years was Paddington, and the guardians were told that they ought not to do that, and they have ceased doing it.

10490. If the wards are full, why should they not do it?—Well, it is rather a difficult question to answer, but certainly they were told it was not right.

10491. It destroyed the value of your refusal return?—Partly that, and partly because the idea was that where the habitual got to know this he would be there before the notice was put up, and consequently the genuine wayfarer would come so late that he would never have a chance of getting in.

10492. Have you any information as to whether the case is at all frequent where a vagrant cannot get accommodation anywhere and has to sleep out?—I have said that, having regard to the enormous number of refusals in the year, it was an extraordinary thing how few people there were who had nowhere to sleep and were obliged to sleep out. I am speaking now of eight years ago. The then Commissioner of Police was a friend of mine, and I understood from him from inquiries made by the police in the particular neighbourhood I am speaking of—Vine Street, Holborn—that they did not notice any considerable number of persons there whom they had to move on from a doorstep or who were frequenting the streets late at night or early in the morning; but from reports lately made by officers of the London county council, and one of the witnesses who appeared before you, it seems that in some parts of London, at all events, there is a very considerable number of people who do spend the greater part of the night either on doorsteps or in the streets.

10493. Yes, but such evidence as we have got tends to show that that class is not the class that frequents vagrant wards?—No; I think very possibly that is so.

10494. They are the class from free shelters?—I think they are, possibly.

10495. And apparently there is a regular sleeping out class?—There seems to be.

10496. Supposing the police had control of the vagrant wards, would it appear to you that that would facilitate their taking proceedings to put an end to sleeping out?—You mean that they would take the persons they found sleeping out and insist upon their going to sleep in the casual ward.

10497. They might say, "You must go to a casual ward or else we will proceed against you?"—Yes, I think they might do so.

10498. What is in my mind is that some general unification in the administrative body which deals with all these different classes of casuals might be useful?—Undoubtedly it would; there can be no question about that, and I might mention it so happens that with hardly any exception the casual wards throughout London are so placed that they are not actually part of the workhouse; whatever other body might take them over would have in them self-contained institutions which they could manage quite independently of anything that the guardians are doing.

10499. You have heard of that decision of a London police magistrate that it was an assault to lock a man up in a cell?—The London stipendiary is an autocrat, and he does as he pleases in every case, but of course it is a little difficult to go to a superintendent and say, "Here your magistrate says that this is illegal; never you mind, go on doing it." If one says so, one has to say it in a whisper. But what I feel is this, that if you put an able-bodied man into a work cell or a separate sleeping place, you have a right to lock him in if you have provided means of communication between him and the officer outside, and it seems to me no possible harm could result from it.

10500. The man has a bell?—Yes; and provided there is proper communication between him and the officer outside it appears to me not at all unreasonable to say to a man, "You are going to bed and we will lock you in."

10501. Separate cells are rather expensive?—They are very expensive.

10502. If the decision of the magistrate is good, is there any use in building separate cells?—Not if you are to have separate compartments without a door. Well, there is just this much to be said: that you could not very well converse with a man through a brick wall, but at the same time you could come to the door of your cell and talk to him. I mean if you are not going to have any doors, there is not very much difference between a separate cell and an associated ward, because you do not prevent intercommunication. The whole theory, I take it, of the cellular system was that it cut both ways, that it was assumed to be a deterrent to the ordinary casual who liked what one may call the club life, that is, association with the others relieved, and on the other hand the genuine wayfarer in search of work, who is more or less a negligible quantity, would naturally prefer to be put in a place to sleep by himself, than to be put alongside some fellow who might not be very clean, or be objectionable in other ways.

10503. A good many of the vagrants that you see are old and infirm people who are wandering to their own hurt; I mean old women especially?—Yes, that is so. In the return of habitual vagrants that I referred to, out of 200 women, 63 were between fifty and sixty; 58 between sixty and seventy, and 12 over seventy, so that half would be what you would call old women.

10504. Have you ever received complaints from them that they found a difficulty in getting into a workhouse?—No, I never have.

10505. There was the case of a woman who had tried four or five times to get into the Fulham workhouse and had failed each time; but it turned out on enquiry that she never saw anyone but the labour master and had not the sense to apply to the relieving officer?—I have not frequently heard complaints of that kind; it is quite possible that it might happen.

10506. The Committee have had two suggestions with regard to that particular sort of case; one is that these persons should be committed to the workhouse by the magistrates as being unfit to be wandering about, and detained until enquiries have been made respecting their settlement, and that then they should be deported to the place of their settlement?—I see no objection to that; it might be tried as an experiment, I think.

10507. There would be this objection, would there not, that there would be great difficulty in finding their settlement?—Yes; it would give a good deal of additional trouble to the clerk, no doubt.

10508. And also that the detention in the workhouse might conceivably have to be for a very long period, because the woman might discharge herself?—Yes, I take it that if you were to make provision for the committal of a person of that sort to the workhouse, she would be committed there under some regulation differing from those in force at present.

10509. It would be an entire change of the whole system of the voluntary nature of the English workhouse?—Yes.

10510. The other suggestion is that no cases in the workhouse should be allowed to discharge themselves without the consent of the governing body; that is the Danish system. That again would be an entire change in the English Poor Law, would it not?—Yes; it would be rather a large order, I think.

10511. It would have the advantage of doing away with the "ins and outs"?—Well, it would mean this, I take it; that a person once inside the workhouse would not be entitled to leave for at least a week, or possibly a fortnight. Then the proposal that the governing body should determine in each case as to discharge is a new proposition to me. I was thinking how in practice you could carry it out; whether the workhouse committee or the board of guardians meeting weekly or fortnightly would have before them every person who had been admitted

*Mr. H.
Lockwood.*
Aug. 1905.

Mr. H.
Lockwood.

1 Aug. 1905.

since their last previous meeting and then would consider each case and determine whether it was one for detention or for discharge.

10512. I suppose they would consider each case which made an application for discharge?—Yes; and then they would determine whether the person was to be allowed to take his or her discharge and, if not, how much longer he or she was to remain in the house.

10513. In the country in which that is the law, there is also the provision that every inmate of an institution shall be paid a small daily sum part of which is put by, so that when the sum gets to 5s. he has a claim to discharge?—Is this money earned by labour or by mere residence in the workhouse?

10514. It is given for good conduct; like marks?—It opens up rather a large question, on which I should not like to give an opinion off-hand.

10515. It would involve an entire reversal of the whole Poor Law?—It would entirely.

10516. (Mr. Simpson.) Who appoints the visiting officers of casual wards in London?—The Local Government Board.

10517. And to what fund are their salaries charged?—They are paid out of the Office Vote, out of moneys voted by Parliament.

10518. Is not the work they do for the guardians really to help them in discriminating between one casual pauper and another?—It is to help the guardians in a sense, but it does not matter particularly to guardians whether they have a large number of persons relieved in the casual ward or not, because the whole charge is put on the common fund.

10519. Then if you take those visiting officers and the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund together, there is a kind of central organisation for the whole of London?—Yes, that is so.

10520. What we all want is uniformity in administration; and so far as London is concerned, do you think it is possible that this organisation might be developed under some common authority to deal with casual wards?—I think there is no question whatever that if you desire, as I think we all do, something approaching uniformity in the treatment of vagrants, it will be necessary to have some single authority to deal with them. The question is what that central authority should be.

10521. In each county?—I am thinking only of London; but I take it in the country the same principle would apply.

10522. There is no parallel outside London to the functions of the Local Government Board with regard to casual wards in London?—None that I am aware of.

10523. Do you think it would be possible outside London to get a central authority for the county by means of joint committees of guardians?—Of course it would be possible; but I am not prepared off-hand to make a suggestion as to what should be the composition of the authority that would act for the area of a county; whether that authority should be composed entirely of guardians or whether you should bring in some other agency, is a matter one would have to consider.

10524. Prima facie, the natural thing would be to form a committee of guardians in the county, if you make the county the unit?—Yes.

10525. And what I want to get at is whether you think it would be possible to do that. It seems to me a more natural proposal than to give the control to any existing county authority?—Well, it is a subject which requires a good deal of consideration. Take the county of Essex, for instance, you would have to establish an authority to deal with vagrants, composed of representatives of the thirty boards of guardians. One would have to consider where they were to meet, and how they were to arrange for the supervision of the casual wards; I mean you would have to consider the question of distances, and so on. I am speaking for myself. I am perfectly satisfied that you must have a single authority if you are going to have anything approaching uniformity. It is one thing to say that, and another thing to go on straight away to say how that authority is to be composed, and how they are to carry out their duties.

10526. There are other purposes for which the guardians can combine, are there not?—Yes. They can combine for schools, and for a sick asylum, but whether this could easily be done, I do not know. There are instances in the country, I think, where there are such combinations.

10527. Are they very frequent?—I think not.

10528. (Mr. Davy.) They are difficult to bring about?—Yes. I am speaking for myself again; I am not particularly fond of joint bodies. I have had experience of the difficulties arising from the management of district schools in London where you have four or five different authorities represented; for instance, a board of management as formed at a particular time may work very well and the combination may be perfectly justified by the facts at the time of its creation, but as time goes on and the circumstances of the different areas change you get conflicting interests and divergence of opinion on the board, and as a consequence it is often very difficult to get what are really desirable reforms carried out.

10529. (Mr. Simpson.) You do not think that joint committees of boards of guardians have been remarkably successful?—As regards joint committees of boards of guardians I have not had any experience of them, but certainly boards of management seem the same thing. A board of management composed of half a dozen different boards of guardians as a rule starts very well, but after a time, as I say, circumstances change, and each member of the board of management thinks rather more of the interests of his own board and constituents than he does of the business he has to do as a manager, so you get delays and difficulties and friction.

10530. Do you consider that the primary duty of guardians is to look after the poor resident in their union?—Yes, I suppose it is.

10531. That is the theory of the Poor Law, is it not?—I think so.

10532. Then the casual wards which are established for the benefit, not of the people resident in the union so much as of people passing through, are rather an excrescence on the Poor Law?—Yes, you may say that.

10533. You do not find any reference to casual wards in the earlier Poor Laws?—Certainly not.

10534. In 1834 it was not recognised as the duty of the guardians to provide for wayfarers passing through the union?—No, the Houseless Poor Act, 1864, which governs these matters in London, first provided for casual wards.

10535. So the casual poor are a distinct excrescence on the Poor Law?—Yes, I suppose the casual ward was originally committed to the guardians as they were possibly the only available bodies in existence, so everything was given to them to start with.

10536. It would not really be a reversal of Poor Law principles to take vagrants away from the guardians?—No, I do not think it would.

10537. (Sir William Chance.) Before you were appointed to London you said you had experience in the country?—In the Eastern counties, and in Northamptonshire and Bedfordshire.

10538. How long would that have been altogether?—I went to the Midlands district in 1879. I have not the least objection to saying that if I were a pauper I am old enough to be classed with the aged and infirm.

10539. You have attended conferences, I expect, of guardians on this subject of dealing with vagrancy?—Yes. When I first went into the Midland counties I was comparatively new to this business, and I used carefully in those days to collect all the press reports of conferences, and I came across the other day an odd volume of 1880 and 1881. I collected all sorts of materials in Northamptonshire and Bedfordshire in regard to vagrants. That is ancient history now, but it is so far interesting to find there has been very little change. What is occurring now is very much the same as happened in 1879 and probably happened in 1779 and also in 1679, except that the total numbers are larger. There always seems a percentage of this class of the community who prefer living the nomadic life.

10540. You have met and talked to several guardians on this subject?—Yes.

10541. Have you not often heard that many guardians would like to see the vagrants separated entirely from the Poor Law, and put under the police?—I do not know that they have specified any particular authority, but time and again it has happened when this has been discussed the guardians have said some other authority ought to take it; probably they may have mentioned the police before the institution of county councils, but when the county council was instituted they said why do not the county council do it; or why do not the Local Government Board do it; in fact, the disposition was to shift them on from one to the other.

10542. The guardians generally have no particular love for the vagrants?—No; I think you would find with a few exceptions the boards of guardians would receive with acclamation the intimation that some other authority was to take charge of their relief.

10543. And under the present system, the expense falls very hard on the smaller unions?—Yes; it is not too much to say, speaking from recollection, that in some of the poorer unions in Norfolk for instance, there were but two alternatives—either the accommodation for the vagrants must continue such as one could not say was adequate and sufficient, or you were in the position of having to endeavour to get guardians representing a poor locality to spend money on making provision for a class of men who are a fluctuating and uncertain quantity, and the result has been in my own case that one has been rather disposed to leave things as they were. I myself have felt very reluctant to ask a rural board of guardians with a small rateable value to spend a large sum of money for, as I say, a class of persons so uncertain in numbers.

10544. (Mr. Davy.) Who have no connection with the union?—And who have not necessarily any connection with the union at all.

10545. (Sir William Chance.) And the general inclination is to move them on and get them out of the union as quickly as possible?—Yes.

10546. Have you paid any particular attention to the question of vagrant children?—I have, sir, and I have no desire to dogmatise or set myself up as an infallible authority, but my own impression is that the number of vagrant children supposed to be walking about the country is greatly in excess of the actual number. I think that four or five benevolent persons may very possibly see the same family, and then they compare notes at a garden party or a tea party, and say "How dreadful it is to see these people walking about the country;" the family is multiplied by as many times as they have been seen. As an illustration of how fallacious figures may be, Mr. Simmons gave me the names of three women who were known to him personally; one woman had two children, another three and the last, three, that is to say there were three mothers with eight children; and these three women were admitted to different casual wards in London nine times in the course of three weeks; so in three weeks you have seventy-two children returned as admitted into the wards, whereas in fact there were only eight children.

10547. Still, admitting that the number of children is not large, what would your opinion be as to the manner of dealing with the children of habitual vagrants?—Well, it is not a very simple question. With regard to two of these mothers, the visiting officer knew them, inasmuch as they had been identified and he had known them off and on for some three or four months, while in each case two of the children were under four years of age; the children were always clean, were always apparently well nourished, and the maternal care bestowed upon them was as good as you could expect of any mother. The only thing was that they were taken about the streets and possibly made a pretext for begging, but as far as the children were concerned, it is a very great question whether you would have been justified in taking them away from their mother. On the other hand, with regard to the habitual tramp, there may be instances in which it might be desirable to take the children away, but I think you ought to make the parent contribute to the cost of them. If you take away a child of school age from an undesirable father, and let the father go, he will probably produce more children, so that it does not seem to me very useful from a social point of view.

10548. If habitual vagrancy were made an offence under the Vagrancy Act and persons convicted of it were sentenced to a labour colony or something of that kind, what do you think should be done with the children?—I think it would be a good thing to take the children away. But while you take the children away, it would not mean that there would be no more children. If you commit a man for vagrancy you only commit him for a short time, and the man and wife come together again.

10549. Would you suggest that the children should be committed to an industrial school?—It would depend on the individual child. I think it does not follow that because a child is going about with a vagrant mother or father that he is necessarily bad; though I admit the surroundings are not what you would think would be likely to be good or useful for a child.

10550. Do you think that the shelters act really as feeding houses for the workhouses or the casual wards?—I think there is no question about that; nobody can deny that; but it is more as regards the workhouses that they act as feeders.

10551. Would you have the shelters inspected?—I do not know; you may inspect them as much as you like, but you cannot prevent the class of person coming to the shelter.

10552. The class of person who frequents shelters is very much the same class that frequents the casual wards?—I do not know that one would be justified in saying that of the Rowton Houses, for instance, but you may take it that whether it is the Rowton Houses or any other sort of shelter, there would be a percentage of persons who would be pretty sure to gravitate to the workhouse, sooner or later. You see it in all these places. If a man comes drunk, he is told to go away and probably by the time he gets reasonably sober he wants shelter, and he either goes to a workhouse or a casual ward. If a man is very dirty he is told he must go away, and if he is generally disagreeable he is told he must go away and not come back. At the workhouse it is all fish that comes to the net. They can refuse nobody if he is apparently destitute.

10553. (Dr. Downes.) A certain proportion of them fall sick and get taken into the infirmary?—Certainly they do; of course, they cannot afford to keep a sick man in any of these shelters; he has to be got rid of somewhere; I think you had evidence of that in respect of Whitechapel by Mr. Vallance.

10554. (Sir William Chance.) Do you think voluntary labour colonies could be used for the reception of some of this class?—Whether voluntary or not, I should like to see the experiment of colonies tried somewhat further than it has gone at present; but in any case I do not myself see that we can hope for any practical results from the establishment of labour colonies, unless you get authority for detaining persons very much longer than is at present the case, and I have always understood that there would be a difficulty in getting any Act of Parliament passed for that purpose.

10555. Therefore if those persons were sent to a labour colony, there would have to be power of detention?—I think it must be admitted by everybody who has thought about the question at all. It is useless to send a man to Hadleigh for a week or a month. It is difficult to say how long it should be; I should say three months at least.

10556. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) You said that detention was a deterrent in the country, but not in London; why is that?—Well, it is rather difficult to explain. To begin with, there is, as a rule, better accommodation, I think, in a London casual ward than in an ordinary country one.

10557. The country ones vary so much, do they not?—They vary very much; and then the London casual, I am inclined to think, says, "Well, here I am; I am put in here for the next four nights, I shall not come to much harm, I shall be warm, I shall not have to work very hard," and he knows that if he is kept secluded for four days that at the end of the fourth day he can get out into the street, and it is the old story—it is easier in every sense to pick up a living in a big place like London than anywhere else. He would have an opportunity, if he could run, of running after a cab and getting sixpence,

Mr. H. Lockwood.

1 Aug. 1905.

Mr. H. Lockwood.
1 Aug. 1905. and so on; whereas the man who is detained in the country vagrant ward—presumably he does not think it necessary to tell the superintendent so—has a notion that he will sleep at this place to-night, and go on some little distance further to-morrow.

10558. The man in the country has got some objective; the London man is simply going round and round?—Yes, simply going round and round.

10559. (Mr. Davy.) And then the food in the London casual wards is distinctly better than in the country casual ward?—I should think it is.

10560. And the man in the country casual ward probably has a shilling buried under the hedge?—Yes, very likely, and he dislikes the chance of losing that.

10561. (Captain Showers.) As regards a way-ticket system, how could you work that?—I have had no experience of it; it has never been in practice in any district or county where I have been, so I am afraid I am not an authority on that; I have not thought about it.

10562. Do you think the police would be more successful in getting uniformity in the treatment of vagrants?—Certainly; I mean nothing could be less successful than the present system; I am quite prepared to admit that.

10563. What makes you think the police would be more successful?—To tell you the truth, I said, “Yes” to the police, because there we have an authority ready to hand, and with a force who probably would be available to deal with the vagrants.

10564. If the police were given control, it would mean an enlargement of the force in every county?—I suppose it would.

10565. It would mean considerable expense?—I may confess at once I am prepared to repeat that uniformity is impossible under existing circumstances, and uniformity would only be possible if we take a large area, like a county, administered by one authority. One is disposed to turn to an existing authority like the police as the most handy, so to say, but I presume it would mean an increase in the force. And then it has just occurred to me that there is this much to be said, that in taking the country unions at large, a considerable number, if not the great majority of the casual wards are within the workhouse precincts, so that you would have as it were two authorities dealing with part of the same institution.

10566. If the police were in charge of what was part of the workhouse, would it not be very likely to cause friction between the guardians and the police?—Yes. As I say, it has just occurred to me there is that difference between country vagrant wards and metropolitan vagrant wards. The metropolitan vagrant wards, with about three exceptions, I think, are on entirely separate sites, whereas in the great majority of country unions the casual ward is either within the workhouse walls or close outside it. In fact, I think in every instance the master of the workhouse is the man responsible for the casual ward.

10567. Do you not think that the honest wayfarer might rather object to being overhauled or questioned by a policeman, and might not that very likely tend to keep that sort of man from using the casual wards?—Yes, I think that there is something in that; on the other hand, I do not know why a really honest man should have any objection to being questioned by a policeman.

10568. (Sir William Chance.) Is it not more difficult to secure uniformity from a popularly elected body than from officials; is not that a reason why you might have greater uniformity under the police than under the guardians?—I think that is so.

10569. The police would be working under certain orders, and if they did not carry them out they would be dismissed?—Yes.

10570. Would it be your idea that vagrants should be put under police control entirely?—The immediate control of the wards, I think, should be in the hands of the police; that is to say that, when you come to the details as to the class of work to be done, and so on, the police should be the authority to determine what it should be. I think if they had to refer questions possibly to a joint committee—a committee, say, composed of guardians, you might find it very difficult to get uniformity there.

10571. Would not the police have to decide as to the task of work and also the food?—Yes.

10572. Would there not have to be a regular dietary scale and task of work set down?—Yes. I think we are all agreed there. You may say that in the casual ward in a given county the dietary is to be so and so, and the task of work is to be so and so, and unless you have one authority who is to see that these regulations are carried out you will not get uniformity.

10573. (Chairman.) If you give the control of the casual wards in a county over to the police it would seem that a casual ward would become a sort of lock-up?—Yes, I think one must admit that, if it is handed over.

10574. That would undoubtedly make a considerable difficulty so far as the British public is concerned?—Yes.

10575. I do not suggest that those who are in the casual wards would suffer in any way either by extra hard work or by oppression of any sort; one has to face the idea that they would be to some extent prisoners for the time being?—Yes, you must have regard to public opinion; there is no use trying to run counter to it.

10576. I should like you to consider a middle course. Supposing the casual wards remained under the guardians, but it was the duty, we will say, of the sergeant of police of the district to superintend or visit the casual wards so many nights a week; do you not think that would put a very wholesome—I will not say restraint—but supervision over the man in charge of the ward?—Yes; I am under the impression that that has been the practice in the past.

10577. In certain places?—In certain places; not universal.

10578. Not universal by any means?—Oh, no.

10579. And if that were made a universal practice it would to a certain extent, at any rate, have the effect of keeping the casual wards up to the mark more than they are at present?—Yes.

10580. From what we have heard, the casual wards where a task is invariably imposed are unpopular compared with those where there is a slacker discipline?—Yes.

10581. Would not the effect of the supervision of the police be to secure that in every case a task was imposed?—Yes, it might be.

10582. That might be the result of the police supervision?—Yes, we are all of us the better for supervision, and if the superintendent knew that he was liable to a surprise visit from the sergeant probably he would be more particular about seeing that he carried out the law.

10583. I am only putting that suggestion to you as something short of the greater proposal, which would be, at any rate, a wholesome change?—It might be a great advantage; where it has been tried in the past, I think it has always worked very satisfactorily.

10584. I gather that you are not in favour of establishing voluntary colonies, where a man can come and go as he pleases?—No, I do not see how you can expect any really useful results from that sort of thing.

10585. From what you know of the existing labour colonies, do you think that they have been at all successful in the reformation of the vagrant?—I know something about the Salvation Army colony at Hadleigh. I have been there three or four times, and I am prepared to give them every credit for this—that their supervision is excellent and the treatment the men receive is very good of its sort, and they certainly have a faculty of getting the last ounce out of the men while they are there. It is hardly for me to say what the Salvation Army ought or ought not to do, but where I think they have made a great mistake, and are apt to make a judicious person doubt perhaps more than he is justified in doubting the actual results of their system, is in the general statements made that the great majority of the persons who have been to Hadleigh and other colonies are after a short stay there absorbed in the wage-earning respectable and self-respecting part of the community. I think they made a mistake in that, although I should be sorry to say that amongst the many colonists whom they dealt with at Hadleigh there have been no cases of absolute re-establishment; but I have been unable on the three different occasions that I have endeavoured to do it to get anything approaching convincing figures or statements as to the percentage of completely successful results.

10586. The question of the success or non-success of a colony is whether you reform the man from being an idle man into a working man?—Certainly; and perhaps it is going wide of the question, but from what I have read of the various labour colonies abroad, there does not seem to be any convincing record of a system which is more or less voluntary resulting in complete re-establishment of the men.

10587. I take it you would regard with favour a scheme for the establishment of labour colonies where there would be power to detain for, say, from six months to two years?—Yes.

10588. And I suppose you would suggest that the people to be sent there would be habitual vagrants, that is, men who had been convicted so many times of begging, or had, say, for twelve months refused to do anything to maintain themselves?—Yes.

10589. They should be sent to a colony where there would be a chance of getting them to work well?—And I think if you established a colony of that sort, you would be justified in saying this is not necessarily a penal colony. A man tells you he is destitute, and we will take his own story if you like; and the ordinary casual will tell you he cannot find work. "I have been trying all this time and have failed and you have had to deal with me so many times in the casual ward, or the workhouse, as the case may be;" to send him to the colony would not be treating him as a criminal. "You say you have done this, that, and the other, and you have failed; we will see if we can make something of you. You are not a prisoner, but a condition of your coming to us is, you will stay with us, say, twelve months till we see what we can do with you. It is absurd to say we can regenerate you in a week or a fortnight, but come along and we will see what we can do for you." The advantage of such a system as that would be this: I do not know if it would so act, but if the thoughtlessly benevolent public knew there was a place where a man might be taken, they might be disposed to keep their hands out of their pockets and say, "You go there and you will be taken in hand by the authority who manages this place, and they will do something really useful for you."

10590. You might have two different sorts of colonies?—Oh, yes.

10591. One for the absolutely confirmed habitual vagrant, the man who is determined to do no work, and another where the control would not be so strict, where you would put the man who is willing to do work if he could obtain it?—Yes, I think you might have, so to say, graduated colonies, or separate colonies for each class, but I feel that even in the better class it would be an essential that the man, voluntarily if you like, must commit himself for a given period. What that period should be is another question.

10592. Like the habitual drunkard in the old days who signed his liberty away for a certain length of time?—Yes, and then supposing—I do not see why it should not be possible—you had a place where a man might go in voluntarily, and where, if before the end of the time he said: "I have had enough of this, I am going to chuck it," you would be able to say to him "You are not a man of your word; the next time you come along you will have to go to the other place."

10593. I think we are all agreed that the great object is to get greater uniformity of treatment for the vagrant than exists at the present time?—Unquestionably, for his own sake, and for the sake of the public at large.

10594. It is essential if you are going to do any good at all; and it is impossible to get uniformity under the existing circumstances without having a stricter system?—Yes.

10595. (Mr. Davy.) One of the advantages of getting uniformity would be that you could treat tramps rather better in the way of food and accommodation?—Yes.

10596. The food for tramps at present is not very satisfactory in the country?—No, I think not. The accommodation in London is as good as anything could be really, so far as material conditions are concerned. I mean the place where they sleep and the provision made for them, but that does not apply to the country.

10597. Unless you have uniformity you cannot prudently increase the diet in any particular place, because all the tramps would run there?—Of course they would go there.

10598. You are of opinion that the vagrant wards should be a county charge at all events?—Yes, I think that is only reasonable.

10599. You would shut up unnecessary vagrant wards?—Oh, certainly.

10600. You would consider the county, or the larger area, as one?—Yes, let the cost be thrown over the larger area.

10601. Should you see any objection to the guardians letting their vagrant wards to the standing joint committee?—None at all.

10602. Should you see any objection in exceptional cases to the standing joint committee appointing the master of the workhouse as a special constable for the purpose of managing the wards?—No; one would assume that they would exercise judgment in the selection of the man.

10603. Yes, and it would be necessary to get various consents?—Yes.

10604. That would get over the difficulty in small and not very frequented casual wards: no special officer need be appointed there by the county?—No, but I take it this appointment you are contemplating would follow on the taking over of the management of the wards by some one authority, whoever it might be.

10605. Some wards would be closed, other wards would be hired, and a retired constable specially appointed: in others again the master of the workhouse would be left in charge?—Yes, to that extent the workhouse master would be the servant of the central authority.

10606. Do you see any very great objection to that?—No. I think it sounds like the basis of a scheme which would have good effect.

10607. Would not the increase of constables be somewhat made up by the decrease of expense in the existing officers?—I really have not thought the thing out, but I should incline to think that a scheme of this sort would necessarily involve an increase in the constabulary staff, and that the number of poor law officials whose services would be dispensed with would be less in comparison.

10608. But in any case you will agree that to make an omelette you must break some eggs?—Oh, certainly.

10609. And the omelette looks to be a desirable one?—I think everybody is agreed about that.

*Mr. H.
Lockwood.*
1 Aug. 1905.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY.

Wednesday, 2nd August, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.
Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Mr. EDWARD NICHOLAS FENWICK, called ; and Examined.

*Mr. E. N.
Fenwick.*
2 Aug. 1905.

10610. (Chairman.) You are, as we all know, one of the Metropolitan police magistrates, and you are at present at Bow Street ?—Yes.

10611. Before you became a London police magistrate, you were, I think, for some time at Bradford ?—I was for two years at Bradford, and I have been just about eighteen years in London.

10612. And you were on circuit before that ?—The North-Eastern, and I think I have served at most of the districts in London. I was appointed to West London as it is now called, Hammersmith it was then called ; from there I went to Woolwich and Greenwich, and from Greenwich to Southwark ; from Southwark I was appointed to Marlborough Street, and from Marlborough Street I went to Bow Street. I do not think there is a single magistrate, with the exception of the Chief Magistrate, who has sat, as I have, in every Metropolitan police court.

10613. You have tolerable experience of the inhabitants of London, including, I think, the vagrant class ?—So far as they appear in the police courts, I have.

10614. During your time in London what opinion have you formed as regards the sufficiency of the present vagrancy law ?—On the whole, I think the present law with regard to vagrancy, if administered by an active police force and a firm and watchful magistrate, is sufficient to cope with the vagrancy as ordinarily understood. Subject to one observation I should like to make presently, I think that on the whole it is sufficient. Improvements might perhaps be made in other directions, but I am talking of the police courts. There is, I think, one class—a very small class perhaps—with regard to which I confess I wish there were some more effective means devised to deal with it, and that class is the class which is commonly called the incorrigible rogue ; I mean the able-bodied rogue, a man who has passed through all the different stages of vagrancy, from the idle and disorderly person, the rogue and the vagabond, and has at last reached the stage of the incorrigible rogue, who has been dealt with as such at the sessions perhaps more than once, who goes to gaol over and over again, but only comes out apparently to recommence his own old career of idleness and vagrancy. The man has shown by his past record that he is a confirmed and habitual beggar ; he has shown that he is a lazy, able-bodied vagrant, deliberately preying upon society, and demoralising all who come in contact with him by the evil example which he sets. With regard to that man, I think it is desirable that some means should be devised, either by sending him to a penal workhouse or labour colony—I do not care by what name you call it—by which he could be checked by detention, and placed in such a position for some considerable period so that he can no longer prey upon society, and set a bad example to others.

10615. I take it you would be in accord with any suggestion to make by statute a class of habitual vagrants who would be more severely dealt with than the ordinary vagrant ?—Yes, I should be in favour of that. By habitual vagrant, I would mean something analogous to what is meant by the incorrigible rogue in the Vagrancy Act.

10616. The man who lives on the public, and who is determined not to do a stroke of work if he can ?—Send him to a reformatory, reform him if you can, instil into him habits of work if you can, but keep him under restraint somewhat in the way you do the habitual drunkard, so that he should no longer prey upon his fellow men. I think they are a very small class, so far as they appear in the police courts, but there they are and they appear over and over again.

10617. Speaking roughly, what percentage of them would you say there is among the ordinary London vagrants ?—I have a return here, for Bow Street, for the year ended 31st May last. There were 339 convictions for begging ; 9 of those were sent to the sessions and were dealt with as incorrigible rogues—9 out of 339. The total in London at all the police courts convicted for begging was 3,019, and of those 134 were committed to the sessions as incorrigible rogues.

10618. The incorrigible rogue, under the present law, can be dealt with very severely ?—He can be flogged. I remember one case some time ago in London, where a man was ordered at the sessions to be flogged. That is the only case which I can recall.

10619. But as a rule it means twelve months over and above whatever sentence has been imposed on him before by the petty sessions ?—Petty sessions commit him to be sentenced at the quarter sessions, who can give him a year themselves.

10620. It is looked upon as a severe statute ?—It gives twelve months at any rate.

10621. With this class of habitual vagrant, you probably might begin with six months, we will say, and go up to three years ?—Sentencing him for six months to some labour colony, if you please to call it so. Of course it would be in the discretion of the tribunal that had to send him, how long he should be sent.

10622. The labour colony should be for the habitual vagrant, and not for the ordinary vagrant on his first or second offence ?—I quite agree with that, but I limited my observations to the able-bodied incorrigible rogue. Incorrigible rogue under the statute, of course, means at least three convictions.

10623. A man who has been proved to have deliberately abstained from any attempt to get work, or even to have refused work when he could have got it ?—Exactly, always being able to work.

10624. Being an able-bodied man ?—Being an able-bodied man. The other day the Chief Magistrate told me that he had a man before him lately as an incorrigible rogue, who was just over twenty-two ; he had begun his incorrigible rogue career as early as that. He must have been living by begging practically ever since he could remember.

10625. Now what would be your views as regards the dietary in a labour colony ?—Of course it would depend on how you work the man ; if you work him hard, you must allow him a liberal dietary, of course.

10626. Quite so ; if you gave a liberal dietary to the man who worked well, that would be an inducement to the idle man to come into the ranks of the workers ?—Putting aside flogging for the moment, I do not see that you would have any other inducement for a man to work, if he did not wish to work, except dietary. If he did not work, of course his scale of dietary would be lower; if he did work he would be rewarded by being put on a higher scale.

10627. Or he would be punished by being put on bread and water if he refused?—That is a question of diet again.

10628. If his health permitted?—Yes.

10629. Do you think that a short sentence of seven days, or anything, we will say, under fourteen days, has the least deterrent effect upon the vagrant class?—Speaking generally, I should say that short sentences of three, five, or seven days, are not deterrent at all. Of course there may be exceptional cases, but, as a general rule, I do not think they do the least good.

10630. They fill the gaols without deterring the vagrant from his life?—I think so. I think when a man comes out, he does not very much care for it. I think that sentences of twenty-one days, a month, and longer sentences, up to even a year, are deterrent, but even in these cases I think there are some men who do not—judging from their demeanour—apparently care what they get; they are a very small number though.

10631. But those are men whom you would contemplate putting into the labour colony?—I believe there is a small percentage of men who view their imprisonment indifferently. Those are the men who ultimately become the incorrigible rogues; they go to gaol and they do not care for the punishment.

10632. Have you yourself made any study of the labour colony?—No, I have not, nothing beyond what I have heard generally about it. I have taken some interest in the question.

10633. You have not inspected any labour colony?—No, I have not.

10634. But, as I understand, you do not contemplate a labour colony otherwise than as a place of actual detention?—No, certainly not.

10635. The colony where a man is invited, and where he is free to leave when he pleases, would be little or no use?—I should think not, but of course I have had no experience of how that system works in labour colonies. There are some labour colonies where the men can leave when they like. I do not know whether it is found that they do leave, but I should have thought, prima facie, you ought to put some restraint on them, and keep them there.

10636. Have you at all considered the question of the way-ticket?—Of course I know nothing about the working of the way-ticket practically, beyond what I have read, but it does seem to me that the way-ticket is an excellent suggestion with a view to sorting out men, and anything which helps to sort out men of course is of assistance to the justices when they come to deal with the cases and have the men before them.

10637. It might be a means of identification of the habitual vagrant?—Yes, to some extent. Every little that helps is always acceptable. The difficulty in a police court is to ascertain anything about these men that helps you. The fact that the man has a way-ticket and is not on his way throws some little light upon him; it may be explained, of course.

10638. It has been suggested to us that the finger-printing system would come in there?—I do not know at all what would be the expense of the finger-printing system. At present I believe it is not applied to vagrants. The practice in the Metropolitan police courts with regard to identifying is this: if a man is brought up and remanded for inquiries he is seen of course by the officers of the court at which he is, by the jailers, and the warrant officers there; they may or may not know him; he is also seen by the officers of the Mendicity Society; they may or may not know him, but in the end, if he is remanded to Brixton for inquiries, the warders at Brixton will probably know him. They see the man and say, "Why, you were here a couple of months ago." Having ascertained that they send notice to the police court, and when the man comes up again on remand you have the note that the warder knows him and that he has been there.

10639. At any rate in the case of habitual or incorrigible vagrants the finger-print system would be undoubtedly valuable?—Certainly. I believe the finger-print is absolutely reliable. If you had this test, of course it would show where the man had been before. At present if a man comes into the Metropolis, although he may be a confirmed beggar in Birmingham, so far as I know, there is no means of identifying him; he may be dealt with as a first offender in London, whereas in Birmingham he may have been sent to gaol over and over again. Mr. E. N. Fenwick.

2 Aug. 1905.

10640. In the country, if it is a question as to whether a man should be committed as an habitual vagrant, you probably would be of opinion that he ought to be dealt with by a court of petty sessions and not by a single magistrate—I am not speaking of the stipendiaries?—Oh, certainly, I think so.

10641. Do you think that petty sessions should send him to a labour colony?—I should suggest that that should be done by quarter sessions in the same way as they deal with the incorrigible rogue now. I do not think a court of petty sessions in the country should be able to send a man for three years to be kept under control.

10642. Would you have the man tried by a jury, or dealt with as at present?—I would deal with him as you deal with the present incorrigible rogue; let quarter sessions say for what period he should go.

10643. In that case it would of course shorten the process of legislation if you were simply to add the habitual vagrant to the list of those who are in the Vagrancy Act?—I am not sure that the incorrigible rogue at present would not almost cover this class of men. At present, of course, there is no power to send an incorrigible rogue to any such institution as you have suggested.

10644. You would have to make a statutory provision for them?—For them; but the class of man I think is already almost indicated by the incorrigible rogue.

10645. By the definition in the present Act?—He must have been convicted as an idle and disorderly person and he must have been convicted as a rogue and a vagabond, and after that he becomes an incorrigible rogue. Therefore you get the three convictions against him; it almost seems to indicate the habitual vagrant.

10646. Would you like to make any suggestion as to the number of convictions and the time within which they should take place to make the man an habitual vagrant?—I should follow the Vagrancy Act and deal with him after the third conviction.

10647. Now, would you suggest any minimum for a sentence for vagrancy in view of what you have said with regard to the seven days' sentence?—No, I should be opposed to that altogether; I would rather leave it to the absolute discretion of the magistrate. I know of no class of cases in which the circumstances vary more than in these cases, and I would rather leave it entirely to the discretion of the magistrate.

10648. There might be occasional cases where the seven days would be a sufficient sentence?—Yes. You must remember that occasionally a man comes up after he has been in custody on remand for seven days. Seven days' imprisonment after that gives him fourteen days' detention. I would not like to hamper a magistrate in his discretion.

10649. (Mr. Davy.) Do you think the number of incorrigible rogues is increasing?—That I cannot tell you, because I have not the statistics for the other years. I should say from my own experience—I am only giving you my own opinion now—that it remains about the same; I do not think that it is increasing much.

10650. Do you think the dread of prison is diminishing amongst persons committed for vagrant offences, such as begging and sleeping out?—I do not think the dread is increasing.

10651. Do you rely entirely upon detention as a deterrent?—Detention of course deters a man; he cannot pursue his old career as long as you detain him. No, I would not rely entirely upon that; I said I would reform him if you can.

10652. Do you think severe punitive measures in prison would have a deterrent effect?—You mean in the shape of diet?

10653. Diet and increased hard labour and increased discomfort generally, supposing it were practicable?—Well, I could hardly express an opinion about that, because I do not know exactly what they do in prison, or what effect it would have upon them.

Mr. E. N. Fenwick. 10654. One difficulty is that these people have an extremely low standard of comfort?—No doubt.

2 Aug. 1905. 10655. And further what would be no punishment to them would be a severe punishment to a prisoner of another sort?—No doubt. Some prisoners have a higher standard of comfort than others.

10656. That would be an argument in favour of classification of prisoners so as to deal with this class apart from others?—Yes, it would be an argument, but whether it would be a good one or not I do not know. I am not quite sure what the effect of it would be when you have treated him more harshly than the others.

10657. I do not mean that. I mean it is apparently very difficult to arrange a prison system which would be hard enough for the man of so low a standard of comfort as the vagrant, and yet not be too hard for the other people?—Yes, I dare say there would be some difficulty about that.

10658. To that extent the establishment of a second form of detention in a penal colony, we will call it, would be useful?—Yes, I agree with you.

10659. There would be an advantage in some further classification in prisons?—I think that classification would be a good thing.

10660. Now, you have told us that the incorrigible rogue is a very small class; how would you deal with habitual sleepers out, and habitual beggars who go to the shelters?—Habitual beggars would of course come under the police; they would be arrested for begging.

10661. We have it in evidence that the number of prosecutions for begging in London is not very great in comparison with the offences. Unless a policeman actually sees the man begging he takes no steps practically?—You mean a great many men beg who are not arrested.

10662. Private persons will not take the trouble to prosecute?—I have no doubt that is so; one knows one's self that if a man begs of you you do not take the trouble to prosecute him.

10663. Would you leave that class alone?—Well, that is a question I have not quite considered; I can only consider it from the point of view of the vagrants who come to the police court; those are the men who come within the provisions of the Vagrancy Act of George IV.

10664. If that class were left alone, at all events for the present, any recommendations of this Committee in the direction of locking up habitual vagrants would be much smaller in extent?—You would, I suppose, have to charge them with something to get hold of them, would you not?

10665. Yes, that is what I mean?—I do not see how you are to get hold of them.

10666. Would you lock up a man for a long term simply for being a beggar, or would you say he should be charged with something?—If you lock him up for being a beggar, there must be some tribunal to say whether he is a beggar.

10667. Quite so, but the police might take a different view of it?—The man would have to be arrested by somebody who would have to make some charge against him.

10668. Before you take those steps that charge would have to be investigated by a court of law, that is to say by a magistrate?—I think so.

10669. You would not be in favour of allowing an administrative body, for instance the board of guardians, to have power to deal directly with a man's liberty?—I think not. A man should be brought before some proper tribunal before he is deprived of his liberty.

10670. It should be done very carefully and one of the advantages of sending to quarter sessions, I put it to you, is that it means a more formal procedure?—I think so. It should be done very carefully, because you contemplate putting a man under restraint for a considerable time—two or three years.

10671. That is to say the procedure should be in a high degree formal?—I think so, and judicial too.

10672. When a man is sent up as an incorrigible rogue, what happens to him between the time when he is dealt with by the justices and the time that he appears at quarter sessions?—He remains in gaol waiting the sentence of the quarter sessions.

10673. Is he under sentence?—He is committed to be dealt with by quarter sessions; that is to say he remains in custody; I do not think he has hard labour.

10674. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Yes; he is committed with hard labour to the next sessions?—I did not know that 10675. (Mr. Davy.) What would be the period in London between the conviction by the magistrates and the sentence by quarter sessions?—Oh, it would vary from a week to perhaps four weeks, something of that sort, not longer.

10676. It might be rather longer in the country?—It might, of course, in the country; he might have to wait nearly three months.

10677. That three months, of course, might be taken into consideration by quarter sessions in sentencing him?—I should think it would: I think all courts in sentencing a man take into consideration the fact that he has been in custody some little time.

10678. Most incorrigible rogues and vagrants are men who neglect to maintain their families, are they not?—There are some of them, but I think the larger number are the beggars.

10679. In London?—Yes; and the beggars charged at Bow Street chiefly come from the neighbourhood of the theatres at night.

10680. We have it in evidence that this class of vagrants do not supply many criminals?—No, I should not think that the ordinary vagrant could be said to be one of the criminal classes; he may commit little petty thefts if he gets the opportunity, but he certainly is not one of the criminal classes.

10681. Would you say that when a sentence of a month on a man ceases to be a deterrent he ought to be dealt with by a longer term of imprisonment?—So he can be at present. He is liable on his first conviction as an idle and disorderly person to a month; that is the limit; on his conviction as a rogue and vagabond he is liable to three months; after that, on his conviction as an incorrigible rogue, he is liable to twelve months; it is an ascending scale.

10682. Many witnesses have told us that some men have practically passed the last ten or fifteen years in prison; as soon as they come out they get convicted again?—I have no doubt that is so.

10683. And that is the class of man that you want to get hold of?—That is the class of man that becomes the incorrigible rogue, who comes out to pursue his old calling directly; he is occasionally arrested, almost the next day, at his old haunts beginning again: some times you find him in the same street even.

10684. There is one man who every time he comes out of prison goes into a vagrant ward and breaks a window and then gets another term?—Yes?

10685. Do all the London magistrates practically take the same view as to incorrigible rogues?—That I could not tell you.

10686. Do you think that the number 134 out of 3,019 fairly represents the total number of persons who really are incorrigible rogues, that is to say, men to whom prison ceases to be a deterrent?—I suspect not, I suspect there are more of them.

10687. Is there any common agreement as to sentences in London amongst stipendiary magistrates?—As near as you can get it; we have our quarterly meetings when we discuss these things. After all, when a man is brought up the circumstances of these cases do vary so infinitely that it must be left to the magistrate; but we do meet, and for my colleagues at Bow Street I may say they take exactly the view I have expressed that short sentences are very little use.

10688. (Chairman.) Can you say that that appears to be the opinion of your colleagues?—That appears to be the opinion generally of the body, and I know it is the opinion of my two colleagues at Bow Street, because I have talked to them about it, and they entirely agree with what I have told you.

10689. That is very valuable information for us?—I was only talking a day or two ago to Sir Albert de Rutzen and Mr. Marsham, my colleagues, and they both agreed that sentences of three, five, and seven days are practically no use at all. You will no doubt find if you search the records of prisoners who have been sent for seven days at Bow Street that they have already been in custody for seven days, and it has been a small offence perhaps. Might I tell you what our practice is with regard to these men? If a man is charged at Bow Street with vagrancy and the case is proved, inquiries are at once made, if anything is known about him. Sometimes something is known about him, sometimes the warrant officer knows him, or the Mendicity Society's officer knows him. If it is his first offence, instead of sending him to gaol he is sentenced to one day's imprisonment. It is duly recorded by the gaoler against him, and he is told that he is sentenced to one day's imprisonment, but it will be remembered, and if he comes again he will not get off so easily. If nothing is known of him, then he is remanded for further inquiry, and if on inquiry it turns out still nothing is known and he is such a man as I have described—a first offender—he is sentenced to one day. If it turns out he is a well-known man, who has been convicted before, then according to the number of times he has been previously convicted so he is dealt with, one month, two months, three months, or he may be sent to sessions to be dealt with as an incorrigible rogue. There are some cases where a man for his first offence would probably be dealt with summarily and get a month, such as where a man put his foot in the doorway and tried to intimidate servant-maids, or made use of obscene, filthy or blasphemous language to women who declined to give him anything. In such cases, although it may be his first offence, the man would probably go to prison for a month.

10690. (Mr. Davy.) We have it in evidence that in some petty sessional courts sentences of three days for vagrancy offences are quite common. Now that involves removal to the gaol at considerable expense and all the witnesses are opposed to such sentences?—I should have said such a sentence was absolutely useless. I may say I have been through the sentences at Bow Street exclusive of the one-day sentences which I have not taken into account, and I find that the average sentence passed upon the vagrant there is twenty-five days, less a fraction of a day.

10691. But take the case I have just put to you, where sentences of three days or seven days are habitually given. I am not speaking of the Metropolitan courts, but petty sessional courts. Can you suggest any means whereby we can put a stop to such sentences, which everybody seems to be agreed are purely mischievous?—No, I am afraid I cannot. I am in favour of leaving the discretion to the magistrates, and I cannot suggest any means of compelling them to give more than in their discretion they think the man ought to receive.

10692. You say there might be no objection to giving a sentence of one day?—Of course that is nothing at all.

10693. That would mean that the conviction would be practically nothing at all; it would mean no expense to the county, and no expense and trouble to the gaol; but there is great objection to giving a sentence of three days?—It seems to me useless.

10694. Can you conceive any circumstances in which a three days' sentence is the right one?—No; no case occurs to my mind in which a three days' sentence would be of the slightest use at all.

10695. Would it be a great interference with the discretion of magistrates if they were prohibited giving any sentence between one day and, say, seven days?—Well, I can only say that I am strongly in favour of leaving it entirely to the magistrates. I had some experience of petty sessional courts in the country. I have often sat with benches of justices and my experience of them is that they are very sensible men and they do their work as a body remarkably well.

10696. Do you think that a Circular from the Home Office setting out all the facts of the case would be sufficient to cope with the evil?—Well, I think it would certainly draw their attention to it, and I have no doubt they would pay every regard to what was the opinion of the Home Office.

10697. Sentencing a man for three days afterwards would have the appearance of being perverse?—That depends upon the particular magistrates, of course.

10698. (Mr. Simpson.) From Bow Street all your prisoners go to Brixton?—Yes. Mr. E. N. Fenwick.

10699. That is on remand, I think?—On remand they go to Brixton. Aug. 1905.

10700. And on conviction to another London prison?—Yes.

10701. And you have a regular van service every day, so to send one more prisoner practically does not increase the cost?—No, I do not know how the vans fill up; I should think it would not increase the cost.

10702. Therefore any objection to three and five day sentences would be much stronger in a country district where, if a man is sent to prison, a policeman has to be taken off his duty specially to take him to prison; there is the cost of the railway journey to the prison, and, in some cases, perhaps the prison authorities have to give the man a ticket to go back to the place where he is convicted; and there the element of cost would come in?—Yes, I agree that the element of cost would come in, but, apart from the element of cost, I think the three day sentences are of very little use as a deterrent.

10703. (Mr. Davy.) Probably the establishment of labour colonies might lead to more reasonable sentences; I mean taking these extreme cases?—Yes, probably it might.

10704. Philanthropic magistrates might be less averse to dealing suitably with these men?—Yes, I think probably men would be more freely sent to a labour colony if you brought reformatory influence to bear upon them; where the magistrates knew that efforts would be made to reform the man, and instil working habits into him, then probably they would be more ready to send him to a labour colony for a term of years, than they would to send him to a gaol where the treatment was more or less penal.

10705. Magistrates at all events would know that the man was being dealt with on some settled system?—Yes, assuming labour colonies to be established.

10706. And one day sentences seem to be from every point of view better than three day sentences?—One day sentence is no sentence at all.

10707. It is a conviction?—It is a conviction; it enables you, if the next occasion is a very bad one, to give him three months because he has already been convicted as an idle and disorderly person; and, if after having been convicted as an idle and disorderly person, he comes again, he is a rogue and a vagabond, and is entitled to three months. It might be very useful; it is better than discharging him, for you get a hold over him.

10708. And better than the three day sentence?—I said that the three day sentence is of very little use.

10709. (Chairman.) If at petty sessions a man is sentenced to one day's imprisonment, would that involve his being sent off to the county gaol?—I think not. I can only tell you that at Bow Street the man is not sent to Brixton or any other gaol; he is discharged from the court.

10710. Is it equivalent to being sentenced till the rising of the court?—It is equivalent to that. He is discharged from the police court.

10711. The county is not put to the expense of sending a policeman with the man to prison?—No, but if he had three days he would have to be taken there.

10712. (Mr. Davy.) The one day sentence would of course not be a deterrent?—Except that there would be the fact of the conviction, which would help you on the second occasion to deal with the man more severely.

10713. (Mr. Simpson.) Speaking generally, quite apart from the treatment of incorrigible rogues, you think the Vagrancy Act works well?—I do; assuming the police are active in arresting these men, and the magistrate watchful and determined to do his duty, it works well.

10714. I suppose at Bow Street you do not have many cases of sleeping out?—They are chiefly children, and in these figures I have given you I have not included children. There is no difficulty about the children; they are easily disposed of by means of the industrial schools, and the many institutions which are ready to take them.

10715. In some districts it is very necessary to proceed against tramps for sleeping out, and it has been represented to us that a man caught sleeping out cannot be

Mr. E. N.
Fenwick.
Aug. 1905.

proceeded against, if he has as much as 2d. in his possession—he has visible means of subsistence; has that point ever come before you?—No; I have seen reports of cases of that sort, but it has never come before me.

10716. It has never been brought before you?—No. It is seldom that adult men are brought up in London for sleeping out.

10717. If the mere possession of a couple of coppers could give a legal right to sleep out, it does seem to impede the action of the police in cases where it is necessary to proceed against tramps for sleeping out in out-houses and so on?—Yes, I think you would have to depend upon the common sense and the discretion of the magistrate to deal with those cases; I think they are perfectly capable of dealing with them.

10718. We have it in evidence that some magistrates have considered they are precluded from dealing with a man for sleeping out if he has got 2d. on him; do you think it would be reasonable to amend the law so as to give them a discretion in dealing with such cases?—I hardly think you could legislate for every particular case of that sort. For myself I would rather leave it as it is, and leave it to the common sense of the bench before whom it comes to deal with it. If you once put in 2d. the man says he has 2½d., and he is outside the statute; if you put 3d. the man says he has 4d., and so you go on. You can always put cases on the line which are difficult. Sometimes many a man gets off, really because his case is on the line. He may be really said to be guilty, but he gets off; the magistrate gives him the benefit of the doubt and lets him go.

10719. At all events you have no reason to think such cases are frequent?—I do not think they are. Of course they would arise more in the country than in London.

10720. Under the Vagrancy Act, the money found on persons dealt with can be forfeited by the court and used for the cost of their maintenance in prison; do you have many applications before you for that purpose?—No, I have never had one; I do not think I have ever had a vagrant who has had much more than a copper or two found on him.

10721. Do not some of the beggars have a good deal on them?—No, very few; sometimes it is as much as a shilling or it may be 11d., but no large sums.

10722. We hear that some people make quite a fair living by begging; probably they do not keep the money on them?—I do not think they carry it about with them; I think they are aware that there is always a danger of being arrested and searched. They take care if they have any valuables to keep them somewhere where they will be perfectly safe.

10723. Have you had before you any question of charges made by the police for maintenance of vagrants while in their custody—for giving them a meal or two before they are brought before the magistrates?—Never.

10724. I think you said there were about 130 incorrigible rogues?—In the Metropolis there were 134, but it would only be a percentage of those that I should call able-bodied. I may perhaps say this with regard to the able-bodied vagrants; I have an opportunity of seeing them of course myself in the dock, but I was talking the other day to our head gaoler at Bow Street, who is a very intelligent and very observant man, and asking him what his opinion was as to the percentage of able-bodied men amongst the vagrants charged; it was his opinion, and I should certainly confirm it from my own observation, that 80 per cent. of them were able-bodied men in this sense, that they could do a fair day's work, light porter's work, driving vans, and all that sort of work, but of course they could not compete with what you call the old thick-legged navvy; they could not compete with him, but for light work they are able-bodied men; they would not be fit to go on the railway works, and do hard work with a pick and spade.

10725. Would that apply to all those 134 that were sent up?—Well, if you take 80 per cent. of those, assuming the same proportion are able-bodied, you would get about 106 able-bodied incorrigible rogues.

10726. And do you suppose almost all of those 106 might have been properly dealt with by being sent to a labour colony, supposing it to be a labour colony which could give different sorts of work—not only hard work, but also light work?—I do; I think it would have been a good thing to have dealt with those men in that way if there had been labour colonies to send them to; they are able-bodied men—I am assuming my percentage of able-bodied men is well founded—who have been convicted over and over again. One talks about the three convictions to make the incorrigible rogue; many of these men have been convicted fifty or sixty times.

10727. I suppose there are many beggars who come to the police court who might be dealt with as incorrigible rogues, but who are not in fact dealt with in that way?—Undoubtedly; their history may not be known. I have no doubt that many a man who is really qualified to be dealt with as an incorrigible rogue comes to the police court, and by reason of his not being known, and his protestation that it is his first offence, he is dealt with as a first offender, and he gets off with one day.

10728. (Mr. Davy.) Or he may be old, infirm and miserable?—Old and infirm men I exclude. I refer to capable and able-bodied men.

10729. The old and infirm are not as a rule sent on as incorrigible rogues?—No; it is difficult to know what to do with them.

10730. What are you to do with them?—It is extremely difficult to say, because the old, broken-down, infirm man will not go into the workhouse. You discharge him, for you are moved by sympathy towards him; you get his promise that he will not come back again; next time you sit at the court you find him there again.

10731. Sometimes they are discharged on their promise to go into the workhouse, and they do not go?—A man says he will go to the workhouse, but he does not go to the workhouse, even when you send a constable down to the workhouse with him; he somehow appears again.

10732. He beats you?—Yes.

10733. Those are most miserable cases?—They are very painful cases to deal with; you do not know what to do.

10734. (Mr. Simpson.) If there was a labour colony, do you not think even for those men a place might be found; they might potter about the colony, and be given some light sort of work, and be kept away from begging?—Well, I do not really know that they could do any light work at all; their proper place would be in their own workhouse, in their proper place of settlement; if you could get them there, that is where they ought to be. I do not think many of them could do any work at all.

10735. (Mr. Davy.) They are almost infirm cases?—Old, bowed men, who can hardly look up, it takes them all their time to get from the door of the court to the dock; they have to be assisted sometimes by the gaoler to get into the dock. You could do nothing with them so far as work is concerned.

10736. The Poor Law can do nothing with them, because they have the power voluntarily to discharge themselves?—That is so, and one sometimes thinks it would be a good thing if they could be compulsorily put into the workhouse and kept there.

10737. (Mr. Simpson.) Give the magistrate power to send them to the workhouse?—Yes, to be kept there.

10738. (Mr. Davy.) Is not that the only solution that occurs to you?—Certainly, it is the only one which occurs to me, but there may be others which have not occurred to me; that is the only one I can think of to deal with such cases satisfactorily.

10739. (Mr. Simpson.) Supposing there were in existence labour colonies which afforded a reasonable way of dealing with the incorrigible rogues, do you think there would be more incorrigible rogues sent up to sessions than there are at present?—It is rather speculating, but I am inclined to think there would be.

10740. Do you not think for instance, the police themselves would be rather more anxious to find out such cases?—I am inclined to think they would be for the reason I have said; the court would think it is for the man's own interest we are going to send him there, to keep him off the streets, and try to do something with him; if he can be reformed, reformatory influence will be brought to bear on him; he will be taught to work, and will be given some instruction.

10741. Then it would not be safe to infer that, supposing a labour colony were established, there would not be more than 100 men in the year sent to it from the Metropolitan police courts?—It would be extremely difficult to try to give the number of people who would be sent.

10742. At all events the figures of the incorrigible rogues who have been dealt with previously would not afford a sufficient basis to estimate?—Roughly, I think they would, but I think there is something in what you suggest that the magistrates would be a little more ready to deal with these men as incorrigible rogues, if they thought they were going to a labour colony.

10743. (Mr. Davy.) But, on the other hand, if you take these away probably the crop coming on would be somewhat lessened?—Yes. All those speculations as to what the figures would be in the future are extremely difficult to answer. I once tried to get out the figures of what the habitual drunkards were going to be, but I have not the slightest doubt they were absolutely unreliable.

10744. (Sir William Chance.) During your long experience as a Metropolitan police magistrate, have you had to deal with wandering children brought before you under section 14 of the Industrial Schools Act, 1866?—Yes, numbers come.

10745. And are those children generally wandering about alone?—Yes, wandering about the streets usually by themselves; sometimes they are lost; sometimes it turns out they have been deserted.

10746. Have you had many cases brought before you where they have been under the charge of somebody at the time they are apprehended?—Yes, occasionally they have been under the charge of and going about with their parents, sometimes with the mother alone, sometimes the father alone.

10747. Was the reason for their being arrested that the guardianship was improper?—Yes; and that must, of course, depend upon the character of the parents.

10748. We have had it in evidence that some magistrates take different views as to the meaning of "proper guardianship" in section 14, some holding that if the child is with its parent, even though he is known to be of bad character and vicious habits, the child cannot be taken away under the section?—I think in regard to that you must give a common sense interpretation to the statute. For instance I will give an illustration. Suppose a child were found tramping the country with its father; it is shown that he is a professional beggar sleeping in casual wards, and in common lodging-houses, and under fences, roving about with his child for no other purpose than mendicancy; I should think that no magistrate would have the slightest hesitation in sending that child away to an industrial school.

10749. You think the circumstances of that case would be covered by this section?—They would. Now take another case. Suppose a child were found tramping the country, going along a country road with his father; assume if you like the father has begged on the way, asked for a copper, and it is shown that that man is temporarily without a fixed home, a bona fide working man who is on his way, say, to Birmingham or Manchester with the view of getting work there; if you were satisfied of that you would have no doubt in saying this is not a case for taking the child away from the man. It is true he has begged, but you must remember the case of Pointon v. Hill. He is not a man who is habitually getting his living by begging or vagrancy; he has begged once, but his mode of livelihood is that of an honest bona fide working man. Nobody would take his child away from him I think. I do not think in the application of the section in those cases there is very much difficulty in practice. Of course you may put hypothetical cases on the line and they become very difficult to answer. Sometimes you may put it to one man and he will answer it in one way, and you put it to another equally experienced man, and he will answer it in another. I think in practice there is very little difficulty in dealing with them.

10750. Are you aware of a Circular Letter of the Home Office in 1869 in which they take the same view of the section that you have just given?—No, I was not aware of it. I think no magistrate would have any doubt that if a man were shown to be an habitual vagrant roving the streets getting his living by vagrancy, he would not be a proper person to have the custody and control of his child.

10751. Do you think that the act of habitually tramping a child about should be an offence; it is not an offence at present, but do you think it should be made an offence?—You mean an offence on the part of the father?

10752. Would you let the father go free and not punish him at all; that is the question?—I think the great thing is to get the child. I think you have really effected your purpose almost when you have got the child.

10753. You would not take the child, unless it had been proved to you that it was being habitually tramped about?—Oh, no, I would not take the child of a working man who was moving from London as I said to Manchester or Birmingham, who casually begs once or twice on the way; I would not take that child away.

10754. Therefore it would be a bad case of tramping about that you would deal with under the Act?—Certainly.

10755. Do you think that that man should go absolutely free, without any punishment at all, and possibly get another child?—If the man is tramping about begging, you can deal with him for begging.

10756. You mean you might catch him again afterwards?—You might probably catch him at the time. If he is a professional beggar, you will deal with him as a beggar and take the child off to the industrial school. For myself I do not think that you want any further power there.

10757. If the parent is considered sufficiently bad not to retain control of the child, you think he should not be punished for the offence of tramping about with the child?—I do not like the idea of creating further offences if you can help it. I think the mischief and evil can be sufficiently dealt with under the present statute.

10758. You have been very kind in your remarks about the justices at petty sessions; you have given them credit for a great deal of common sense which some people do not suppose they always possess?—I have often sat with them, and I must say I have always observed it.

10759. Do you draw any distinction between county magistrates and borough magistrates?—At Bradford I frequently sat with the borough magistrates, and I was always much struck with the shrewd common sense of the justices there.

10760. In a certain borough the magistrates some time ago absolutely refused to give any punishment to casuals brought before them by the guardians for not performing their task; do you consider that common sense?—Well, of course, you must remember in such a large body of men as the magistrates of the kingdom, the unpaid magistrates in the country, you will find some men who do rather eccentric things; you would not expect otherwise; I am speaking of them as a body; I have a great respect for them; I think they are a thoroughly efficient body who do their work well.

10761. But still common sense is a variable quantity, is it not?—I do not agree with those magistrates.

10762. We have had evidence that in similar offences of vagrancy there was an astounding variety in the sentences. I have no doubt all these magistrates in giving their decisions thought they were exercising their common sense in the particular cases?—I have no doubt they thought they were.

10763. You are rather against a minimum sentence for these vagrancy offences?—Yes.

10764. Having regard to the varying decisions of the different benches in really similar cases, would it not be advisable to let them know that there must be some minimum sentence given for the particular offence?—I am entirely opposed myself to interfering with their discretion; I prefer to leave it to them, even at the risk of action sometimes being taken by the magistrates that probably you and I would not approve of.

10765. (Dr. Downes.) We have been dealing to a large

*Mr. E. N.
Fennwick.*
2 Aug. 1905.

Mr. E. N.
Fenwick.

Aug. 1905.

extent with the case of the incorrigible rogue, and it was suggested that he should be consigned to a place of detention or a labour colony, whatever you like to call it. I take it that the longer a man is on the road as a vagrant the more difficult it would become to reform him?—I suppose that the more confirmed he becomes in his habits of vagrancy and wandering and idleness, the more difficult a case it would be to reform.

10766. Incorrigible rather implies that?—Yes, he has arrived at that stage.

10767. I have been thinking of the case of a man who has not reached that stage; would it be of any assistance to the magistrates if there was a possibility of consigning such a man to a place under voluntary management, such as the Salvation Army colony, or something of that sort?—I do not know why the ordinary labour colony to which you are proposing to send the incorrigible rogue should not be a voluntary establishment, subject of course to inspection.

10768. Would you send the man there before he qualified as an incorrigible?—No, I do not think I would.

10769. My point is that the longer you leave it the more difficult the question of reform becomes?—No doubt, but the more certain you are that you have got the right man to go.

10770. But what would be the use of your labour colony if it is only for those men?—You mean what would be the ultimate benefit to the man?

10771. What would be the ultimate benefit to the nation?—Well, you would try and I presume you would get a certain percentage of men to reform; it would depend upon how you carried it on and the sort of men you had, and the instruction you gave them. A certain percentage of them might come out and be absorbed into the labour market and become decent men; they are young you know; they are not old men.

10772. You do not regard incorrigible as necessarily meaning that they are hopeless in the sense of reform?—I use the word incorrigible to designate a class pointed out under the Vagrancy Act of George IV. The word is used in the statute as meaning a man who has been dealt with on two previous occasions and sentenced twice before. I do not use the word incorrigible in the sense that absolutely nothing can be done with him in the future.

10773. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) If the man has been brought up for begging is he charged by the police with being an incorrigible, or is that point settled by the magistrate?—It is settled by the magistrate after he has gone into the case and heard the proof of the previous convictions. The magistrate then says, "I shall send you to the sessions as an incorrigible rogue."

10774. It is entirely in his hands?—Yes.

10775. A policeman cannot bring a man up of his own knowledge and charge him with being an incorrigible rogue?—He brings him up and charges him with begging; the constable may not know the man's history.

10776. He may or may not?—The constable finds him in the street and charges him with begging only; when inquiry is made, it is found out that he has been convicted before over and over again.

10777. (Captain Showers.) Do you not think that if we had a better system of identification we should be able to pick up these incorrigible rogues very much quicker than we do now?—Oh, no doubt.

10778. A man passes on from one county to another and he is convicted probably once or twice in each county, and you know nothing at all about him and he comes up as a fresh man at each place?—That is true. I have not the slightest doubt that men come in to London who are old convicted provincial vagrants, and they pose here as first offenders and get treated as such.

10779. Do you not think that a system of finger-printing these convicted vagrants would be a good thing?—I think it would be a good thing if the expense would not be very great; I do not know how that would be; whether the expense and trouble would not be considerable.

10780. There would be of course a certain amount of delay in having a man remanded; and there would be the expense of sending him back to prison while these finger-prints were being taken?—So many men are now remanded for inquiries in the week; it could be done in the week I suppose. I take it that if the man were remanded for inquiries his finger-prints could be taken and forwarded to some head office where they keep the records, and they could be examined easily in the week.

10781. The remand for a week while the inquiry is being made would be a deterrent to vagrancy?—The man of course could not get out into the street to beg during that week. When he comes up for sentence the fact is taken into consideration that he has been already in custody for seven days; the magistrate will say "You will go to prison for seven days," that is fourteen days altogether.

10782. In some cases the magistrate will say, "If you promise to get out of the town I will discharge you"?—I am aware that that spirit of passing him on prevails.

10783. It is rather a wrong system?—Of course it is not punishing a man for his offence; it is getting rid of a burden upon the rates.

10784. Do you think that if the police had more to do with the casual wards, that would be a deterrent?—I am afraid you are asking me to go into a subject upon which I have not had very much experience. Of course I only come across these cases in the police courts.

10785. You have a better system in London of identifying the vagrant than there is in the provinces?—We have no means in London of identifying a man who has come from a distance; if a man comes, say, from St. Albans, we should not know him here. Supposing he has been convicted and sent to gaol in St. Albans for begging there; he arrives in London and is brought up before a magistrate who asks "Anything known about him?" "Nothing."

10786. In the provinces the vagrants are more on the move?—Of course we have numbers who remain about London. They haunt the West End of London. To show you how the vagrants haunt that part of London I may tell you that we have at Bow Street, with one exception, the largest number of vagrants—330; at Marlborough Street, however, they had last year 1,208; there is no court like it, but of course "where the carcass is," etc. That is why he is caught in the Marlborough Street district. You will find him right in the centre of the West End, the wealthy part of London. The next is Bow Street, and then there is a considerable fall. Bow Street includes a great number of theatres and the neighbourhood of the House of Commons.

10787. You are aware that in the provinces a man wishing to get, we will say, from London to Ipswich, directly he gets out of the Metropolitan area and into the county of Essex commits some small act—breaks a window or something—and he is run in; he is sent to gaol at Chelmsford for a few days, and then that gets him nearly twenty miles on his road to Ipswich; and he does the same thing when he gets into Suffolk?—Yes; it is only another illustration of the mischief of short sentences.

10788. (Chairman.) You have suggested that the man should be sentenced in the case of a light offence to the rising of the court, and I suppose that if his second offence is trivial he might have the same sentence imposed the second time, but in each case, whatever the sentence was, that sentence would be recorded?—Yes.

10789. Instead of letting the man go free altogether, there would be a record of that sentence; and if it could be accompanied by some other means of identification, finger-printing or otherwise, it would be useful?—I do not suggest the second sentence need be a heavy sentence. It may be that the second case is a trivial matter and is so surrounded with excusing circumstances that one might think a day sufficient for it. It is recorded; he is then convicted as a rogue and vagabond as distinguished from an idle and disorderly person.

10790. He would get the warning of the court that the third offence might lead him to be considered a rogue and vagabond and sent for a considerable period?—Yes.

10791. Have you anything further you would wish to say?—Perhaps it might interest the Committee to know that I have got out the average age of the vagrants convicted at Bow Street, and I find it is thirty-six and a half years.

10792. Can you say what number would be of the class of old and absolutely helpless men?—I could not tell you; I have not got the figures here, but there would be a certain number of them absolutely helpless old fellows.

Mr. FREDERICK GOWLAND HOPKINS, M.A., D.Sc., M.B., F.R.S., and Mr. HORACE FLETCHER, called; and Examined.

10793. (Dr. Downes.) Dr. Hopkins, you are Reader in physiology at the University of Cambridge; and Mr. Fletcher's interest in the economics of dietary and in the recent researches in the United States of America is well known?—That is so.

10794. In your official capacity you have given considerable attention to questions of dietary from the physiological point of view?—I have.

10795. Will you be kind enough to give us in popular language the main outlines of the questions that we have to deal with. I think perhaps if you were to explain to us the chief constituents of food and their different roles, that would help us as a commencement?—The actual purposes served by the food stuffs in the body of a man are first of all the repair of broken down tissue, and secondly the supply of actual energy for the internal and external work that the body may be called upon to do. These two needs are supplied by three basal food stuffs, proteids, that is nitrogenous food stuffs, the fats, and the carbohydrates.

10796. The last named being chiefly starches and sugars?—Yes. As regards the supply of energy all these classes come into account. One may or may not be more efficient than another—and this is a point that may come up later—but all can supply energy to the body. On the other hand, proteids alone can serve to repair the tissues, and therefore the proteids have to be considered as a quite special class of food stuffs, and it is in connection with the proteids that the more complex questions arise as to the optimum quantity that the body should receive, and as to the precise way in which the proteid is dealt with. Scientific views have changed a good deal as to how precisely the nitrogenous food stuff is dealt with after it is taken into the body. At the earliest stage of what may be called really scientific information on the subject, the two classes of food stuffs were held to be dealt with on different lines in the body. Liebig taught that the proteid could only have one fate, namely, to be wholly and entirely built up into the living tissues, that is to say that any proteid which was dealt with could not be broken down again, and final products could not themselves be got rid of until they had formed an actual part of a muscle or other living structure. Liebig's conception was that other food stuffs, the fats and carbo-hydrates, were dealt with, so to speak, on a lower plane, those could be burnt direct, and supply heat and power of work—energy; but the proteid had this special fate, that it must be built up before it could be utilised and serve as the sole source of muscular energy. In Liebig's view that was a very prominent point, that the proteid and the proteid alone could serve as a source of mechanical energy. That view exercised a wide influence, but it became modified as soon as actual quantitative studies of the excreta in relation to food stuffs became possible, and at a later stage, beginning about the sixties, the point of view was rather this, that the essential use of the proteid was repair, and perhaps repair only; that the fats and carbo-hydrates could supply the source of muscular energy, mechanical energy, just as readily and perhaps more readily than the proteid. Therefore, with that view, while the proteid is an absolutely essential food, because the body is always needing repair, the quantity of it that is actually necessary becomes less certain, because it has no special function over and above that of the fat and carbo-hydrate as a source of muscular energy. So with the change of view, there came some uncertainty as to what was to be looked upon as the optimum amount of proteid, although there was no doubt that a certain minimum was absolutely essential. That view, modified more or less, has held the ground largely for the last forty or fifty years. I ought to mention that a very prominent teacher of chemical physiology at the moment, Professor Pflüger of Bonn, is in a modified way inclined to return to the view of Liebig, in this sense, and in this sense only, that he looks upon proteid as a preferential food for all purposes, and this will bring us quite to the heart of the difficulties that will have to be discussed. According to Pflüger then, the proteid is a preferential food. The muscle is not compelled to use it for the purposes of producing mechanical energy, but it is more efficient, more advantageous, and a preferential food stuff for the purpose of muscular work. In that view I ought to say, Pflüger largely stands alone, although he is an authority to whom a great deal of respect is due. Quite the most recent work that I expect we will deal with to-day is not compatible with that extreme view of Pflüger. One has to admit of course that there is a great deal of conflict of opinion here, but it is possible more or less to reconcile the facts and bring them to order. The most recent experimentation which we will have to deal with to-day has brought us to this probability, that when the nitrogenous food stuff is absorbed, so far as it is not used for the purpose of repair of tissue, and that is probably quantitatively something small, it is not stored as proteid, but the nitrogen is eliminated through the kidneys at the moment of absorption, and the main part of the substance of the proteid is stored as non-nitrogenous material. If that view is correct, you will see that except for the purpose of repair the proteid is to be looked upon as merely in line with the fats and carbohydrates, and the question arises as to which of those is really the best for the purpose of energy production and for maintenance of temperature of the body. It is clear that we have as yet no settled theory of nutrition, and the optimum conditions must be determined by direct observation. In the endeavour to get at what may be called the normal nutrition of man, the normal dietary, three methods have been adopted. First, what may be called the statistical method, that is to say, to assume that what is customary is best, and to get, on statistical lines, what has been customary, what have been the habits of the various classes of the community in the matter of diet; we have many very exhaustive studies on these lines. Another method, which I would call the first experimental method, is that a man should be actually studied, with suitable apparatus, as a working machine, and the balance drawn between income and outgo of his food stuffs representing fuel, and of the work he does, the heat he produces, and of his excreta; and it should be ascertained exactly how much that individual man is utilising for the needs of the moment. A third method of experimentation is rather to vary the amount of diet taken, and vary the proportion of its constituents, and observe the effect upon human efficiency and health. Those three methods really almost exhaust the lines of approach to this problem of obtaining information as to what is to be looked upon as the optimum ration. Before discussing these three methods, which I can do I think briefly, I would like to define the method usually adopted of measuring the total energy contained in the food stuffs. We usually employ, as a convenient measure, a unit called "calorie" which represents the amount of heat involved in raising a kilogramme of water one degree centigrade. By stating their total energy-value in calories, one can compare the value of the dietaries we have to deal with. First of all take the dietaries obtained by the statistical method. The difficulties in the path of the statistical method, here as elsewhere, are first of all a certain difficulty in getting really accurate data; and secondly the difficulty that one has to admit somewhat of an assumption that the customary practice is the optimum practice. I might be allowed for instance to illustrate that, I think, in this way, without prejudice. Suppose one wanted to determine the optimum, that is the normal and proper dietary, by the statistical method. Half a century ago, if we were to choose the more wealthy classes and the more intelligent classes as a standard, it would seem that a certain, not very small, ration of alcohol would be looked upon as essential, whereas I think it must be admitted that the actual value of an alcohol ration so determined by statistical methods may be much too high. That seems to me a legitimate way of illustrating that, even in the question of the basal food stuffs, proteids, fats, and carbo-hydrates, the statistical method is not necessarily an indication of the optimum. But still, from the difficulties with other methods, and the undoubted value of experience, a great deal of attention has been, and is rightly, given to statistical dietaries

Dr. F. G. Hopkins and Mr. H. Fletcher.

2 Aug. 1905.

Dr. F. G.
Hopkins
and Mr. H.
Fletcher.
2 Aug. 1905.

The result of the experience and the information offered by statistics can be very fairly summed up in the familiar table which was supplied by Carl Voit, of Munich, because his dietary has served as the basis for considerations of dietaries all the world over, and it is interesting to find that if one takes a very large number of statistical studies all over the world, the average tends very much to approximate to Voit; and more recent studies of this sort made in America, especially amongst the professional and well-to-do classes, on the average tend to approximate to the Voit standard. In America there is a slightly higher fuel value, though they do not depart very greatly from the Voit standard. That standard was this, that the gross dietary should contain about 118 grammes of proteid, 56 grammes of fat, 500 grammes of carbo-hydrate (sugar and starch), and that the amount of energy that could be extracted from the diet should be represented by some 3,000 calories. For the moment I need go no further into the data obtained from statistics. The experimental method in essence clearly makes for greater accuracy, because everything can be carefully measured, weighed, and the whole balance carefully struck. The difficulties and objections to it are these, that it is extremely difficult to extend an experiment over a sufficiently long period, and for the most part the studies of this question on experimental lines have been too brief to be wholly satisfactory, because it is clear that to obtain good information as to the effect of a given dietary a comparatively long study is requisite. I mentioned that one line of experiment consisted in using suitable apparatus and obtaining a balance sheet, and seeing, in other words, exactly how much material of each sort, and how much fuel energy in the total, a given man under given conditions is utilising. For experiments of this sort of an important kind we have had to look to America. The experimentation is extremely expensive, the apparatus required is very expensive, and the details for carrying out the experiments are expensive too, and so far only in Middleton, Conn., more or less under the Agricultural Department of the United States, and under the influence of Professor Atwater, have experiments really wholly satisfactory, from one point of view, been done. In these experiments, which one may speak of as Atwater's, men actually lived for some three or four days, more or less, in a small but practicable room, which was a respiration chamber, so arranged that the total products given out from the lungs could be collected and measured, and was at the same time a calorimeter, that is to say an apparatus in which the total heat given out by the human body could be measured with accuracy; if, in addition to these two factors, the diet is carefully analysed, its value in proteid, fat, and carbo-hydrate known, its fuel value in calories known, and lastly the solid and liquid excreta analysed, then you have all the data for striking a balance sheet and determining exactly what has gone on in the body of the subject of the experiment. It is somewhat of a tax upon any one to spend any large time in this chamber, whatever may be his scientific enthusiasm. Mr. Fletcher, who is here, has passed some days in that chamber, and he can speak on the point. For that reason the experiments are rather few; in all they amount to some fifty, I think, but I would not like to speak definitely as to that. They have been carried out on only very few individuals, perhaps eight in all, a very small number for such an important question. But, briefly, what was found in Atwater's chamber was this, that neglecting the actual diet given, and attending to the actual breakdown that occurred in the body, that is to say, the amount of proteid, carbo-hydrate, and fat which was used in the body, and the total fuel value, Atwater found higher figures than have been accepted as normal, and as a result of those experiments, few as they were, Atwater was led to advocate a higher fuel value, a higher proteid value, than the accepted values based upon Voit's table. For instance, he found that a man at rest within this chamber—the rest was as complete as possible—utilised 107 grammes proteid per diem, and of calories some 2,260; Voit's figures were, it should be remembered, supposed to cover average work. I take it that I may discuss these figures in grammes; if one remembers that the Voit standard is 105 grammes proteid and 3,000 calories, it is easy to compare the figures.

10797. We had better say grammes if you are speaking of the one measure?—Thank you.

10798. (Mr. Simpson.) You were speaking of one day?—One day. These figures do not refer to the diet given; of course that was also measured to see if the body was actually gaining or losing. These experiments measured what actually was broken down, not only what was given. If the diet was deficient the body itself suffered. The utilized proteid then on the average, with men resting, was 107 grammes, the calories 2,260; if this is expressed per kilo. of body weight, which is more satisfactory from some points of view, we find of proteid 1.54 per kilo. of body weight, and for calories 2.5 per kilo. of body weight. As soon as work was done in this chamber, by a man doing measured work on a bicycle, the demand both for proteid and for fuel value in the diet apparently went up to a very marked extent, and the results of these chamber experiments led Atwater to put the figures on this sort of level: with very hard work as done in the chamber—a man actually bicycled for sixteen hours out of twenty-four—for such employment as that he required 175 grammes of proteid and 5,500 calories; a man on hard work, work which it is perhaps fair to speak of as something comparable to hard labour in the ordinary accepted sense, utilized 150 grammes of proteid and 4,150 calories. A man with quite moderate work required 125 grammes of proteid and 3,400 calories, which is beginning to approximate to the Voit standard, but is distinctly above it. So much then for the most accurate information which we really at present possess as to what amount of foodstuffs may be actually broken down in an individual case. These chamber experiments do yield interesting information, extremely interesting to the physiologist, on the lines of showing what in any particular man can be utilised in the body under different conditions, but I venture to suggest that experiments of that sort do not give any indication as to the optimum, and for this reason: the human body naturally strives always to come to an equilibrium if the diet be in excess, and gets rid of both energy and actual substance; it gets rid day by day of what is supplied to it day by day, therefore if one deals with an individual whose previous habits have set him to a certain height of metabolism, one would be sure that, if supplied with the same amount of material in the dietary in a chamber, such as this used by Atwater, one will find the material broken down. I think we have not sufficient to justify us in concluding that this high standard which comes from Atwater's results is an optimum standard, because, as all those who work in this chamber admit, the conditions were anything but favourable for hard work, apart from the fact that the subjects chosen were folk already employing by habit a very high nitrogenous value, and very high calories in their diet. We now come to experimentation of the other sort, namely, where the diet is varied in quality and quantity, and the actual efficiency of it as a standard tested by its effect upon health and bodily efficiency. A large number of experiments of this sort exist in the literature, especially as carried out in Germany twenty-five or thirty years back, or longer, by Voit. But none, although they give interesting data, have been carried out for more than a comparatively brief period, let us say of a week. Now to anyone who considers this question candidly, the information obtained as the result of a week's study is not in itself of great value. Quite recently, within the last two or three years, work has been carried out by Professor Chittenden of the Sheffield physiological school, Yale, work originally stimulated, I might say, by the enterprise of Mr. H. Fletcher who is here, and aided by the American Government and by grants from various research funds available in America. The new feature of this experimentation is this, that it was extended over periods which are so long that they put the value of the evidence, I take it, on quite a different plane. I should like to mention briefly the points brought out by this work of Professor Chittenden. The experiments were carried out upon three quite different types of individuals: first upon five professional men, either scientific men at work in laboratories there, or men associated with the departmental work of these laboratories; secondly, upon a squad of soldiers, thirteen in number, of whom eleven carried the experiment right through. These were volunteers from the United States Army Hospital Corps, and they were of course well under control, and the whole conditions of their diet could be thoroughly well studied. Lastly, and these seem to me to be important from the point of view of the present inquiry, there were a group of trained athletes who during the experiment continued in training, and many of them engaged in athletic contests as before. First of all I would like just to mention what happened to the first group; merely to give you an idea of the extreme reduction in the diet which can be carried out with apparent efficiency and health. Professor Chittenden himself, from November, 1902, to June, 1903—some eight months, a period of preparation, gradually reduced both the fuel value and the proteid of his diet, and during this period, although not a heavy man, weighing some sixty-five kilos—or about ten stone—he lost some ten per cent. of his weight, but from June, 1903, onwards, that weight remained strikingly constant at its lower value. Now from October, 1903, to June, 1904, that is for a period of nine consecutive months, separated from the preliminary period at which the diet was already at a low value, his whole income and outgo was carefully studied, and Professor Chittenden remained during those nine months on an average of 35.5 grammes of proteid, and on a calorie value of a little over 1,600. In other words, he was on rather more than one third of the Voit standard for proteid, and only rather more than one half of the Voit standard for fuel energy. Professor Chittenden throughout this time was, needless to say, not doing hard physical work, but he was organising the whole of this research, and had academical and other duties to carry out at the same time; he was in no sense loafing. These then are extraordinarily low figures. Professor Mendel, a colleague of Professor Chittenden, is in some sense even a more striking case. He was a heavier man, and although he too lost weight when he first reduced the value of his diet—he went down to seventy kilos, that is to say just eleven stone, and remained at that with great steadiness during the period of some seven and a half consecutive months. He metabolised of nitrogen only 6.5 grammes representing some 40 grammes of proteid, and his diet had a calorie value of something like 2,500. Professor Mendel on those low figures remained in perfect health, and his work was of a probably good deal more arduous character than that of Professor Chittenden, since he carried out practical work day after day continuously in the laboratories, and had other duties of a multifarious sort at the same time. I only mention these two instances to give you a sort of idea of the extreme reduction which occurred with apparent efficiency. The soldiers during the period of five consecutive months metabolised daily from 53 to 59 grammes of proteids with a calorie value of 2,500 to 2,800. The athletes metabolised during a period of five months 55 grammes of proteid a day and with a calorie value which was in all cases something like 2,500. A word as to the results of this treatment upon the men themselves; the efficiency of the soldiers was carefully studied by, first of all, their behaviour in the gymnasium, which was looked upon by good authorities there as a good test. What came out was this, that these men in spite of being on this very low diet were able to be efficient in the gymnasium, and to improve greatly in training. That I take it is a very important way of looking at this question, that with the low diet there was a capacity to raise their bodily standard. They showed a daily improvement in their efficiency, and in their ability to carry out gymnastic exercises requiring both nerve and skill. The athletes were tested in the same way, but as they were already necessarily highly efficient in that connection a further test was made, and it was found that quantitative investigations into the actual muscular strength showed a continuous improvement and a large improvement by the end of the period.

10799. (Dr. Downes.) Their strength was measured in the gymnasium, and the totals summed up?—The totals summed up, and it showed a marked improvement. (Mr. Fletcher.) And when they started they were supposed to be in the pink of condition, ready for the contests of the year; they were taken at the height of their training.

10800. But notwithstanding that there was a still greater increase in their efficiency as tested in the gymnasium?—From 75 to 100 per cent. in the actual measurements of their strength. (Dr. Hopkins.) The indication of these experiments goes to show then that the Voit minimum standard of proteid of 105 grammes or thereabouts per diem can be greatly lowered, even to half, or perhaps more without apparent harm, without apparent loss of efficiency, at least so far as experiments over the length of time I have mentioned would indicate. Now it seems to me of considerable importance that we should have still later information as to the subjects of those experiments, and of that I have no official information, but at second hand one hears that the habit made in these experiments has not altogether, if at all, been lost by individuals; they all speak now for a preference for this lower dietary; but I would prefer, if you should be willing to hear him, that Mr. Fletcher should speak as to that, because he has first hand and more recent information. I should like to say myself of this work that first of all there is not the slightest doubt about the actual experimental data; all precautions were taken to ensure accuracy, the processes used in analysis were beyond reproach, and every detail that foresight could suggest was carefully attended to. Our information from these experiments is that for periods of several consecutive months men can maintain, after perhaps a preliminary loss, their body weight, and remain efficient muscularly, with a sense of well-being as regards their health.

10801. To sum up what you have told us about the dietary standards, may I say that what we call the Voit standard, which has dominated the preparation of dietaries up to the present time, was really drawn from the experience of people who were more or less free to choose their own dietary?—Yes.

10802. And that the Atwater experiments were conducted under conditions which were very far from natural conditions?—Undoubtedly.

10803. Then we come to the third kind of experiments of which Professor Chittenden's has been the chief; the men experimented on, I think, lived under fairly natural conditions?—(Mr. Fletcher.) As natural as the necessary control would permit; in the case of the soldiers, for instance, there was the necessary surveillance.

10804. The dietary was fairly varied?—That is a great feature; the dietary was varied and they had great choice.

10805. The professional men and the athletes were under perfectly natural conditions; it was necessary to keep the soldiers under surveillance?—Consequently there was more or less the monotony of the restraint.

10806. They were more or less under restraint?—That is so, they were not permitted the freedom to go from under observation.

10807. But the other classes were under natural conditions?—Yes.

10808. With the exception that the dietary was carefully regulated and measured?—Yes.

10809. But it was a varied dietary?—(Dr. Hopkins.) Yes, there was a wide choice.

10810. Have you looked at the dietary at present enforced for casuals in this country?—Yes, I have carefully looked into it, and I have calculated its calorie value.

10811. First of all, it gives certain alternatives; a man may have simply bread, or he may have gruel, or he may have soup?—Yes.

10812. And those alternatives differ in their nutritive value, I think?—I have calculated the calories for the lowest possible combination of those alternatives, and for the highest possible combination.

10813. Now what do you think of the lowest?—The lowest possible combination would give 53 grammes proteid, and 1,663 calories. It is somewhat of interest to notice that that approximates very closely to the actual dietary of Professor Chittenden himself, and perhaps in view of his experience one would be less horrified at figures of that sort than one would have been without Professor Chittenden's experience.

10814. I understand the bread is the lowest?—This is the lowest possible combination of the three alternatives—53 proteid and 1,663 calories.

10815. Is that taking the three meals, breakfast, dinner, and supper?—That is taking breakfast, dinner, and supper, and in order to get the lowest possible combination I took the lowest breakfast ration and doubled it, on the assumption that they have the same for breakfast and supper, and I added to that the lowest value given for dinner.

Dr. F. G. Hopkins and Mr. H. Fletcher.

2 Aug. 1905

Dr. F. G.
Hopkins
and Mr. H.
Fletcher.

2 Aug. 1905.

10816. (Mr. Davy.) What was that—six ounces of bread, or eight ounces of bread?—The lowest is the third alternative—bread six ounces, broth twenty ounces, which gives .43 proteid, .6 fat, 3.41 carbo-hydrate.

10817. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Is eight ounces of bread then of more value than bread and broth?—Apparently; after calculating the value of the combination given.

10818. (Dr. Downes.) Could you tell us what it comes to in the case of a casual pauper who remains for one night, and only gets the lowest supper and breakfast; what would that work out to?—I am sorry I did not actually work that out.

10819. It would be simply sixteen ounces of bread?—Sixteen ounces of bread gives exactly 1,200 calories, and 35 grammes of proteid. The highest possible combination of the three meals gave 85 grammes of proteid, and 2,230 calories.

10820. Sixteen ounces of bread is what the tramp who simply comes in for supper and remains for breakfast, and is not detained, might get as a minimum under the Order?—Yes.

10821. Assuming that he does not supplement that in some way, do you consider that a sufficient dietary for a man who has to walk ten or twelve miles?—Very far indeed from being sufficient.

10822. Then take the minimum dietary for the whole day, including the dinner, 53 proteid and 1,663 calories, that is the whole day's meals; what should you say as to that for a day's work?—Having regard to the fact that you speak of the lowest value of the whole?

10823. The lowest value of the whole three meals; breakfast eight ounces of bread, dinner six ounces of bread and a pint of broth, and for supper eight ounces of bread; that I think works out to 53 proteid and 1,663 calories?—Yes.

10824. And the question is how far that may be regarded as sufficient for a man doing a fair day's work?—Well, I think, myself, it is decidedly much too low.

10825. (Mr. Simpson.) It is as much as Professor Mendel had, is it not?—Professor Mendel was above that figure in calories; he used on the average something like 2,400 to 2,500.

10826. (Dr. Downes.) There is this difference between the tramp and Professor Mendel, that Professor Mendel was not limited to bread and water for breakfast, and bread and water for supper, and bread and something not much different from water for dinner?—On the contrary, he had great choice.

10827. Is there not a great deal to be said for variety?—I believe it is of great importance.

10828. Then the tramp, as compared with Professor Mendel, is at a distinct disadvantage?—Yes. His diet compares not unfavourably from a quantitative point of view with that of Professor Chittenden himself, but one cannot take it that the actual calorie value of the work done by Professor Chittenden is anything like as great as the average casual would be called upon to do. (Mr. Fletcher.) You do not realise that Professor Chittenden is one of the most active men that I know of living. (Dr. Hopkins.) Still, I think a laboratory life does not mean in actual foot pounds of work done anything approaching the eight hours' stone breaking and the like. (Mr. Fletcher.) No, perhaps not.

10829. (Mr. Davy.) But that diet for the tramp is only for one day; he might go out the second day and pick up a large amount of calories?—Yes.

10830. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Does the size of the man affect the matter at all?—It should be taken into consideration in any accurate estimation of the optimum diet; this should be expressed per stone of body weight.

10831. (Dr. Downes.) And this as a hard and fast measure for every tramp might be still more inefficient for the big tramp?—Beyond all question. (Mr. Fletcher.) That does not always follow; the rhythm of metabolism is different.

10832. Have you anything more to say on the general question of the dietary standards; I am thinking of Professor Chittenden's work. For example, it has been said that a man who is run down in proteids may not have the resisting power if he is overtaken by disease at some future time. I do not know whether there is any valid evidence for that statement?—I think there is no evidence on the positive side whatever. It is, of course, a question that everyone would feel he would like settled. These experiments teach us that the work can be done and people can feel perfectly well upon that level of dietary, but one would certainly like the further experience of how far the resistance of these men to disease and the like is affected. The best evidence that we have available is in the fact that some of the subjects of those experiments have maintained these habits now for an extra year under all sorts of conditions, and have maintained their good health.

10833. And they have maintained these habits of their own free will?—Of their own free will, so far as they have been followed apparently.

10834. Although they might have gone back to their previous mode of life, they have preferred to stick to the standard they have tried?—Yes.

10835. Then another thing that has been urged is that the man who takes the low proteid dietary is deficient in energy, I do not mean energy in the sense of force, but in quickness of appreciation and activity of mind and body?—I hold strongly that whatever these experiments of Professor Chittenden may have failed to prove, they certainly have proved that that is not so.

10836. I was reading recently a text book in which the Japanese dietary was commented on and the note was added that these nations were deficient in energy: I do not know whether recent history has thrown a new light upon that?—I applied to the Japanese Embassy for the purposes of the present occasion, but they were unable in the short time to supply me with what one would have very much liked to have known, namely, the present fighting ration of the soldier. I have here the dietary of the Japanese Navy up to 1898, and it is of some interest to observe that in 1890 they for the first time instituted what is practically a canteen system. I might read to the Committee the footnote to the dietary:—"The decrease in the amount of food since the year 1890 is due to the alteration of the food regulations in April of that year and also to the fact that according to the revised regulations, when members of a table company exceed five in number they are allowed to receive per every five members (this number was altered to 10 in 1898) one man's allotment in money with which they can buy whatever food they like, and this food is excluded from the table." In another report they speak of the favourable influence of the canteen system, but apart from that added quantity which the men buy it is rather remarkable to find that the ration that is given for the year 1898 was 171 grammes proteid, 30 grammes fat, 540 grammes carbo-hydrate and 3,200 calories; but, of course, it is quite certain that high values of that sort are not the Japanese ration in the proper sense. There is a selected ration for the sailor; presumably that is much higher than the average normal Japanese ration.

10837. The ration of the Japanese peasant who is called up as a reservist is a very different thing to that?—Very much lower, I think, but it is very difficult to get really accurate information about it.

10838. Then whatever might be said as to the risks of a low proteid dietary, I take it from you there is no positive evidence?—There is none at all, but we cannot even now be said to know what is the minimum limit for permanent safety.

10839. There is no doubt whatever, I think, that an excess of proteid dietary leads to certain dangers from products of that excess; for example, the danger of an excess of uric acid is known to every one, I think, and uric acid is not the only product?—No; I believe it is a very important point that of the substances produced in the body in the course of metabolism those which have really been proved to be deleterious have almost without exception been proved to be nitrogenous. Now a nitrogenous breakdown product, be what it may, can only arise from proteid.

10840. (Mr. Davy.) Which is, roughly speaking, the meat?—There is a vegetable proteid too. On that point one cannot distinguish. The case of uric acid which is so familiar is rather exceptional. That is in the main a meat product. It does not arise from a pure proteid metabolism in the body; that is a point which I think has been thoroughly established of late years. For instance, white of egg, or a pure proteid of that type, does not increase uric acid, but the more complex proteids found in the animal cells are really specially responsible for the increase of uric acid; but although that substance stands a little by itself in that respect yet all substances produced in the body which are known to be deleterious have been shown to be nitrogenous, therefore it seems a fair assumption to say that if the optimum level of proteid can be found, that is, if the minimum efficient level of proteid can be found, anything above that is undesirable.

10841. (Dr. Downes.) And proteid is also an expensive food as a rule, as compared with carbo-hydrates?—Weight by weight very much more so.

10842. So it is not only a costly food to take to excess, but from what you have been telling us, it may be a dangerous food to take to excess; a man can get rid of a good deal of waste, but there is a limit to the waste that he can get rid of?—I should not like to put it quite like that. We do not store, even with a very large dietary, to any large extent.

10843. I should have added, without injury?—Precisely; with the necessity for dealing with more than is that optimum comes the liability to abnormal products which may be injurious.

10844. Certain portions of the body, the kidneys and so on, may be strained in the endeavour to get rid of this excess of proteids in the dietary?—Exactly.

10845. If you can hit upon what is really the best amount of proteid to give to the tramp we should not only save cost of waste, but it would be to the benefit of the tramp himself physically?—I think one is justified with the present position of things in saying yes.

10846. You may have some difficulty in inducing him to believe that?—Quite so.

10847. (Mr. Davy.) The nuisance of uric acid is that it causes gout?—That is one effect.

10848. If we reduced the proteids we might get rid of gout amongst the vagrant class?—I am not prepared to say that that would follow from reducing the proteids still further.

10849. (Dr. Downes.) Assuming there was some place of detention for the vagrant class where they could be kept for a number of years perhaps to be taught habits of industry and to be induced to work, would you be prepared to give us any suggestion as to the kind of dietary that might be adopted; I am assuming that there would be a canteen system whereby a man who worked well and hard could earn certain tokens or marks by which he could supplement his food?—I have carefully calculated with accuracy so far as the data would permit, and certainly with very close approximation to the truth, the calorie value of Dr. Edward Smith's dietary for the able-bodied man to which you called my attention, and I find that the actual calorie value of the dietary is probably 3,200; certainly it is above 3,000.*

10850. That is a dietary which was drawn up by Dr. Edward Smith some forty years ago for certain workhouses in his district; it was adopted in a number of cases?—Might I also say that the proteid contained in this dietary on the average per day is 85½ grammes; although it is only 80 per cent. of Voit's standard, in view of this later evidence one is much inclined to say that it is quite ample.

10851. The proteid value is 85 against Voit's 118, but in view of the later evidence you would be prepared to advise that the 85 was a sufficient standard for the particular purpose?—Certainly. (Mr. Fletcher.) I was at St. Louis at the exposition at the meeting of the Scientific Congress, and Professor Atwater was the chairman of the Department of Chemical Physiology in which this question of dietary was considered. Nearly all the papers were occupied with that subject and Professor Atwater introduced two papers by men who are working with him in the agricultural experiment station to show that they got better efficiency in two groups, one a college group and one a labouring group, at 85 grammes of proteid than on the Voit standard; so it appeared that Professor Atwater, from having exaggerated his ideas beyond the Voit standard, was gradually introducing evidence from statistics in America to approach the Chittenden standard and bring the Atwater standard down at least to 85 grammes.

10852. Was that this year?—That was at the exposition last September.

10853. Subsequently to the publication of Chittenden's work?—Yes.

10854. So I gather that Atwater's late work has modified the views which he had obtained from the experimental chamber?—Yes.

10855. And I think you said 85 grammes, which exactly corresponds with the figure settled by Dr. Edward Smith in this country forty years ago?—Yes. (Dr. Hopkins.) As to the actual materials forming Dr. Smith's dietary: he gave for breakfast, which was of constant composition seven days a week, one and a half pints of gruel and six ounces of bread; supper varied: four days a week it was one and a half pints of gruel and six ounces of bread; three days in the week eight ounces of bread, one pint of broth, one and a half ounces of cheese. Dinners varied still more, and I think this is a very important feature in the dietary and adds to its value. Dinner, two days a week was eight ounces of bread, one pint of broth, one and a half ounces of cheese; one day a week it consisted of four ounces of bread and sixteen ounces of potato meat pie, the calorie value of which I ascertained from the recipe; on two days of the week it was four ounces of bread, ten ounces of suet pudding and one pint of broth. And working from the recipes given with some care, it turned out to be of a calorie value much that of the Voit standard.

10856. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) The words "broth" and "gruel" are hardly scientific terms?—By no means, but he has given a recipe; it is very carefully given.

10857. (Dr. Downes.) Then I gather that you think that a lower standard of proteid than the Voit standard, but such a standard as the one which you have quoted now, which is the dietary of Dr. Edward Smith, might be safely recommended?—Quite.

10858. And a lower calorie value than that set by Dr. Smith might be taken; could you suggest a calorie value for that particular purpose, remembering that it is supplemented by a canteen?—I myself am not inclined to recommend a lower calorie value for a basal diet for a man under average conditions than somewhere about 3,000. I should like, if I might, to go into that point.

10859. It is an important point?—I take it that in dealing with the diet for men at work, so far as Chittenden's experiments bear upon this, one ought rather to look at the soldiers and the athletes than at the laboratory workers; at least that seems more satisfactory at first sight. Now if one considers the actual calorie value which was given the soldiers, we find that it varied from something like 2,500 to 2,800; at the same time they were on this very low proteid. If one tries to get approximate information as to the amount of work these men were doing during the experiments one finds that they spent one hour to an hour and a half in the gymnasium doing gymnastic exercises, that they were severely drilled for another hour in the day, that they had what we call general duties, which simply consisted in clearing up their own living quarters and so forth, and for one hour, which I suppose must be called brainwork, they had instruction in their hospital duties; but one hour on the gymnasium and one hour drilling may be said to be the limit of their actual hard work. Now that utilised from 2,500 to 2,800 calories. Supposing one puts the figure of a somewhat harder day's work, a hard eight hours' day, at the figure of something like 300 calories energy value (I mean to say the work done will have that value in energy), most data that we have so far to rely upon suggest that the body as a machine has about 20 per cent. efficiency, that is to say that for every calorie value of work done it wants five calories of food stuffs; so that to do those 300 calories value of work the diet ought to be increased, taking the obvious calculation first of all, to the extent of something like 1,500 calories over and above the absolute value of the pure rest diet. Now the soldiers did some work; but supposing

*Dr. F. G.
Hopkins
and Mr. H.
Fletcher.*
2 Aug. 1905.

*Dr. Hopkins writes that on recalculation he finds that the caloric value of this dietary is over-stated in the evidence. It should be 2,800 calories. This reduction, however, does not make him think that the dietary is inefficient as it stands.

Dr. F. G.
Hopkins
and Mr. H.
Fletcher.
2 Aug. 1905.

one were to assume—and I think I am not far from the truth—that what they did was not more than one-half of what one has put down as this 300 calorie value, one should increase their diet for the harder work by something like 700 to 750 calories. Well, if one takes their lowest figure of 2,500, on that calculation we arrive at a calorie value of 3,200 for the man doing eight hours' work a day. Now in the case of the athletes one does not find that their calorie value fell much below 2,500. The work they were doing was of a sort calling for great efficiency, but probably reckoned up in foot-pounds it was not as much as what a man will do in eight hours actual labour, so if they utilised 2,500 I do not feel myself prepared to suggest that, upon present knowledge, the calorie value of a diet should be below 3,000.

10860. But that is providing for an eight hours day of work?—Yes.

10861. Say work equivalent to 300 foot-tons, something of that sort?—For that value of work one would not like to go below 3,000 calories.

10862. In the case of the colony, I was rather assuming that the man who did work would earn tokens by which he would be able to supplement his dietary?—Having regard to that I think this dietary of Dr. Edward Smith is more than ample; I feel that strongly.

10863. In settling a dietary for a tramp—a man who is detained in the casual wards—if he has to be detained in order to work for the food that is given to him, it is an important thing to him that the food should be a cheap food; do you agree with that?—Yes.

10864. That is to say, if he preferred a beef steak he would have to be detained for such a length of time to pay for it that the thing would defeat itself?—Exactly.

10865. Could you suggest any simple food not involving much cooking which could be given to the tramp, and especially to a tramp leaving in the morning, which would afford a mid-day meal?—This dietary for the casuals, when one looks at it closely, is specially deficient in fat; in addition to its very low total calorie value it is strikingly deficient in fat. What occurs to my mind at the moment, at any rate, seems to be that the most likely things would be something in the nature of a suet pudding, if that would not involve too much cooking, or some cheap fatty cheese.

10866. There is a question I want to ask you bearing on another point of the matter; if a man is put to break stones would it not make a material difference if he were in an enclosed space or if he were in the open; is not the man at a greater advantage in the open than in the enclosed space?—The supply of air would be unlimited in the open.

10867. I am afraid I confused my question. If a man is doing hard work the more you put him in the open the better, is it not, for him?—Very much, from every point of view, because the moment the carbonic acid rises, as recent experiments carried out by Haldane show, the respiratory mechanism must work harder, and if there be deficient aeration this always involves increased breakdown of tissue.

10868. The worse the ventilation, the greater the disadvantage at which the man is placed?—The greater the disadvantage beyond all question.

10869. (Mr. Davy.) These discoveries as to diet are rather recent?—Within the last two years, really.

10870. That is to say, since the prison and workhouse dietaries in this country were fixed?—Certainly.

10871. Would you say that the discoveries would render some reconsideration of these dietaries expedient?—I think so, decidedly.

10872. From the point of view that if you are keeping a man at the public expense you should not give him more than is necessary?—That is so.

10873. Now, is not the scientific dietary which was apparently adopted by Dr. Chittenden rather uncongenial?—Indeed, no. He had a very great choice; indeed, there was no restriction as to the choice or the type of things eaten.

10874. The ordinary man would want to go back, after a week of that, to his beef-steak and pint of bitter?—The difficulty in eliminating suggestion in these matters, no doubt, is great; no doubt the soldiers might have wanted this, but the evidence goes to show that they experienced no craving of the sort.

10875. Take the ordinary prisoner or vagrant; he would not look on this diet as a luxury?—Oh, I think on the contrary he would, if he were given what Professor Chittenden had; he would think himself in clover.

10876. It would be a new thing to him and he would not consider it to be in any way a luxury; he would be willing to work for his canteen?—Well, but you must distinguish between the quality of the diet and its actual quantitative value. Professor Chittenden's dietary, which these soldiers had, was of a very tempting sort; there was large choice; all they were asked to do was to keep down to a certain standard.

10877. Do you really believe the ordinary English habitual vagrant would want a diet of this sort?—In quantity?

10878. In quantity?—No, I do not think he would.

10879. He would not come to prison to share the advantage of the diet?—Oh, decidedly not.

10880. That is what I am driving at; might not a man, after he had got the requisite quantity of calorie value, still feel a bit hungry although he had physiologically speaking quite enough to sustain him for twenty-four hours?—I think certainly he would, if he had previously been used to a higher standard, but I think on the other hand his body would rapidly adjust itself. I have not argued for a calorie value so low as that in Chittenden's experiments.

10881. And meanwhile the canteen would come in?—Meanwhile the canteen would come in beyond all question.

10882. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) How long would that condition last?—I should say roughly one would adjust oneself to a diet of that sort in ten days or a fortnight.

10883. (Mr. Davy.) The effect of the diet would be this, I take it, that the man would be fed sufficiently for his bodily needs, but that the effect to a man of his previous habits would be somewhat unattractive?—Exactly.

10884. If he felt hungry, he could supplement his need by doing a fair amount of work and buying at the canteen what nature told him he wanted?—I think so, and the opportunity for choice at the canteen is a great advantage.

10885. (Mr. Simpson.) Fourteen days on that diet would be punitive, without doing a man any harm in any other way?—I should like to say definitely yes, but there is this distinction to be made, and I wish to emphasise it; if you propose to get the same values as Professor Chittenden got for his soldiers with ordinary materials, such as bread and oatmeal and the like, then undoubtedly it would be a punitive diet.

10886. But though punitive it would not do him any harm?—I think one may safely say, that with this experience in America, there is no harm to be feared for a diet of that value over, at any rate, a period not exceeding three months.

10887. And, as I gather, you would be inclined to say it would not only do him no harm but it would do him good?—Well, I do not think one ought quite to dogmatise too far. After all we are relying on one set of experiments, and the basal ration would not have the variety or the quality of Chittenden's diets, but I do feel we have real justification for believing it would do him no harm.

10888. (Mr. Davy.) Suppose a man does work which is continuous work but does not involve hard physical exertion, such as sewing mail bags or picking light junk, what calorie value would you give him?—Of course, an accurate measure of that sort of work is very difficult to get.

10889. Would you give him a much less calorie value than you would give a man who was breaking or pounding stones, or lifting heavy weights or digging?—Oh! beyond all question; I should say at least 500 or 600 calories less.

10890. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Having regard to the fact that he is in a cell as against being in the open air?—That is a fact that has to be considered, certainly.

10891. On the other hand he would not be puffing and blowing; he would not be sweating; he would be sitting quietly, picking his oakum?—But he would be in a bad atmosphere.

10892. (Mr. Davy.) We cannot presume that a well ventilated prison cell which is supervised by the Home Office contains bad atmosphere?—I think it perfectly fair to say that the difference between working in a cell and working in the open air is so great that it will not only affect the efficiency of the man as a machine, but it might even affect the actual nature of the diet that that man would need.

10893. (Dr. Downes.) You cannot ignore the depressing influences also?—Decidedly not.

10894. And there is another point about the cell system: does it not involve having a set ration for everybody; you cannot serve bread in common if the men are in cells, you must have a set ration for each man?—Yes.

10895. You must make that ration sufficient for the big man, or he will go short?—There is the usual difficulty of the set ration; it must be sufficient for every one.

10896. (Mr. Simpson.) I understand your view is that if a man is under depressing circumstances he wants more calorie value, or in other words more food than a man who is not in those conditions?—Yes.

10897. (Mr. Davy.) You realise that the diet you have given for the casual wards is only for a certain number of days in the week, that the man on the other days goes out and gets what he can?—Of course if one knows that the man was well fed before and after, this diet would offer no danger.

10898. (Mr. Simpson.) Do you feel able to offer an opinion on this question; we know that in different countries, say in the North and South of Europe, there is an immense difference in the character of the diet; should you say that was due to a difference in the requirements of people in Italy and in England, or is it mostly a matter of pure habit, that in England possibly one eats too much, or in Italy too little?—I should like to put it this way: I believe the most important factor is habit and custom pure and simple, but I am fully prepared to believe that the optimum may neither lie with the lowest nor the highest, and the information as to the optimum is exactly what we are seeking, and it is towards getting information as to the optimum that experiments of this sort have been done, but as to the difference of diets in different races, I think it is possible a racial factor comes in.

10899. And climate?—And climate. But the more one considers statistics, and the relative influence of climatic and other features respectively, the more do you see it is a question of supply plus habit.

10900. And you think researches are likely to lead rather to abolishing the distinction between one country and another, than to establishing them?—On the whole, I think the optimum diets for European countries would tend to convergence.

10901. (Sir William Chance.) As regards the Japanese dietary, is meat used at all, to your knowledge?—In this naval diet it is, but not largely. I believe that a reasonable amount of fish and flesh is eaten by all who can afford it.

10902. Do you consider that for these particular classes of which you are talking now meat is at all necessary: is there any substitute for it which would be cheaper?—Of course weight for weight proteid as supplied in bread, and especially as supplied in oatmeal, is much cheaper than proteid supplied in meat, even allowing for its less availability.

10903. Is it not a fact that in cheese you get a considerable amount of proteid in addition to fat which is necessary?—Yes, very high.

10904. Is not cheese a good diet?—I think it is a good addendum.

10905. Addendum to what?—Well, to food stuffs containing large amounts of carbo-hydrates; it is a good addendum to a diet which is largely bread; that is the common experience.

10906. I am rather looking upon it as a substitute for meat?—Might I, to elucidate the point a little more, call attention to a fact which at present has hitherto only been looked upon as of academic interest, but which may become of real importance in practical dietaries, and that is the observation of the Russian physiologist Pavloff, that for a proper supply for a normal flow of gastric juice there are two factors of prime importance. The most important one, as common experience might have suggested, being appetite and the actual enjoyment of food. There is a real psychic reflex condition produced always as a result of that sense. But as a second stimulus to the flow of normal juice when the food stuff reaches the stomach, whether this previous flow has occurred or not, there is a local stimulus which is much more specific in relation to the particular dietary. Now so long as there is the psychic stimulus, as Pavloff calls it, and so long as the psychic juice flows efficiently, then it does not much matter about the second stimulus in the stomach, and any diet which happens to be swallowed and meets the psychic flow will be digested. But, assuming a diet not eaten with such appetite, to get it at all digested you must depend more on the second factor. Now the evidence goes to show that specially efficient stimulants in the stomach itself are such things as meat extracts, and that a pure proteid put into the stomach in the absence of an efficient appetite flow would be very indigestible. You put a small quantity of meat extract in and a local flow is produced almost independent of this appetite flow. These facts are somewhat academic, but careful experimentation shows they are no doubt true, and I think they do bring out the difference between a good utilisation of a food, and the efficiency of the stuff as a food eaten under good conditions and under depressing and bad conditions respectively. Bread, for instance, might be an extremely good foodstuff to the healthy man with a full appetite; bread might be a bad foodstuff to the prisoner in the cell, because he lacks his appetite juice; he needs something more stimulating to call forth the local flow.

10907. You have to consider the appetite juice?—You have to consider the appetite juice and the other. (Mr. Fletcher.) You do not need to consider anything else if you have the hang of it.

10908. According to that, if I understand it, you would recommend a certain amount of meat to give that variety which would please the appetite?—(Dr. Hopkins.) I think so.

10909. That might be in the form of soup?—Perfectly well. There is no question that these broths and soups and meat extracts are very important as an addendum to a diet which is bread and oatmeal principally.

10910. I suppose you are acquainted with Dr. Haig's theory?—Exceedingly well.

10911. He carries his theories to an extreme, I suppose?—Oh, to a very great extreme.

10912. (Mr. Simpson.) As a matter of fact meat extract is no good as a substitute for meat?—The energy value of the meat extract is almost nil, but, as a matter of fact, an extract of that kind does promote a strong flow of gastric juice, which is a specific stimulant which a pure proteid—egg white or may be even cheese or bread and so forth—does not produce.

10913. Do I understand rightly that if a man is given meat extract with this food he gets more good out of the other food than he would without the extract?—I think one is entitled to say to that, yes.

10914. (Sir William Chance.) Does not that depend a good deal upon his working in the open or in confinement; if a man works in the open he has an appetite for anything that is given him?—Yes.

10915. He might get on without these meat extracts?—Certainly.

10916. (Dr. Downes.) A man who is not overfed would be more likely to have the natural appetite which would be independent of those meat juice stimulants?—Certainly.

10917. (Chairman.) Have you at all considered what the money value would be of the diet that you recommend; for instance, what would be the value of the daily food for the vagrant?—I am afraid not, sir.

10918. (Dr. Downes.) I think you wish to add a few words about the difficulty of what I may call the Chittenden standard on the basis of common cheap foods in this

Dr. F. G. Hopkins, and Mr. H. Fletcher.

2 Aug. 1905.

Dr. F. G.
Hopkins
and Mr. H.
Fletcher.

2 Aug. 1905.

country?—That is exactly the point. It comes to this: supposing one wished to take advantage of the desirability or the safety of using low proteids, then if one is to keep up the calorie value at anything like 3,000 the difficulty is, that if one takes bread as the basal thing, or oatmeal or any of the really cheaper basal rations, oddly enough they contain so much proteid in themselves, that by the time you have got your 3,000 calories you have not got very far from the Voit standard for proteid. That is true of bread and it is especially true of oatmeal; to get 3,000 calories from the latter one has to get 100 grammes of proteid.

10919. In order to adjust the balance between the foods of this country you would have to give a certain amount of fat and other things?—In looking into how Professor Chittenden carried on his experiments one finds e.g., that on one particular day—this is more or less an extreme case—a soldier took 3,200 calories and only 49 grammes of proteid. He was taking a large quantity (twenty-three ounces) of cooked potatoes, two and three-quarter ounces of syrup, over two ounces of butter, and in addition to that the more expensive cereals; bread only two and a-quarter ounces. The difficulty which perhaps might be overcome on consultation with men who have practical experience in dietaries would be to get the proteid as low as 50 or 60, assuming this to be correct, and yet give calories as high as 3,000. You would want a basal ration less nitrogenous than oatmeal and bread.

10920. When you begin to give fats you begin to give expensive foods?—Expensive material.

10921. (Mr. Davy.) Do you think it is absolutely necessary to get proteid down to a low standard?—I take it that if it really comes to be shown, as is quite possible, that anything above a certain optimum of proteid is really bad, then will come the time certainly to strive after that.

10922. (Chairman.) We have had a good deal of evidence with reference to the mid-day meal that a vagrant ought to have: it is obvious that he ought to have something to eat between the time he leaves the workhouse in the morning and when he lands at the next casual ward in the evening: could you make any suggestion as to what would be the best thing either for him to carry with him or to apply for at some station, in addition to bread?—Taking his dietary as it stands, I feel strongly that there would be benefit, especially in winter, if a little fat could be added to it.

10923. (Mr. Davy.) Soft cheese?—Yes, soft cheese: cheese somewhat rich in fat.

10924. (Chairman.) You want something palatable and something that would not break in his pocket easily; something a man can take with a certain amount of relish and which will keep him going without making begging a necessity to him?—Dripping on whole meal bread would be too expensive, I think. Suet pudding might do, but I am afraid there would be difficulties in using it.

10925. (Mr. Davy.) I think we may say that bread and cheese may not be the ideally best food, but still it would be theoretically defensible, and it would answer practical purposes?—You could adjust the ration of bread and cheese to give just about what is essential to improve this dietary.

10926. (Sir William Chance.) Is not that an ordinary mid-day meal of the agricultural labourer; he takes his bread and a piece of cheese out with him and that carries him through the day?—Yes, at any rate in many districts.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY.

Tuesday, September 12th, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P. (in the Chair).

Sir WILLIAM CHANCE, Bart.
Mr. J. S. DAVY, C.B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.

Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT
Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Mr. ROBERT J. PARR, Director of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, called; and Examined.

10927. (Chairman.) Mr. Parr, I believe you are the director of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children?—Yes.

10928. Will you kindly state shortly what the action of your Society is?—Practically, in a sentence, it is to carry out the conditions laid upon us by a charter under which we work; that is, to safeguard the interests of the King's youthful suffering subjects.

10929. When was that charter granted to you?—May 28th, 1895. The exact terms of the charter are "To prevent the public and private wrongs of children, and the corruption of their morals. To take action for the enforcement of laws for their protection. To provide and maintain an organisation for the above objects. To do all other such lawful things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects."

10930. You have kindly come to-day to give us what information you can, and to make any suggestions you can, as to the treatment of vagrant children. Now, we find that amongst the army of vagrants, the number of children is extremely small; is that your experience?—Yes, that is so.

10931. I understand that something like 3 per cent. of the whole number of vagrants are children?—With one or two exceptions, possibly that is so; in certain districts we find rather a larger percentage. In Stafford, for instance, for a period of three months, during which we were able to analyse the statistics supplied by the police, we found the number of child vagrants in proportion to the total number of vagrants was 6 per cent.

10932. Was that a populous district or a rural district?—The vagrants were passing through from the coal fields and the hop districts of Shropshire adjoining.

10933. Were those the children of people who were seeking employment, or of ordinary vagrants?—I should say they were the children of habitual tramps, as we had no information as to the children who were sleeping with their parents in common lodging-houses; they were the children who were with their parents during the time they sought refuge in the casual wards, and the numbers do not affect those other children, of whom there are always a few, who sleep with their parents in common lodging-houses.

10934. That was in Staffordshire?—In the town of Stafford.

10935. (Sir William Chance.) May I ask in what year that was?—In 1903.

10936. (Dr. Downes.) Do you know at what time of the year the census was taken?—August, September, and October, 1903.

Mr R. J.
Parr.
12 Sept. 1905.

10937. That would be about the time of the hopping ?—Yes.

10938. (Chairman.) Are there any other places where you found there was an abnormal number of children ?—No, I would agree with the statement that 3 per cent. was a fair average, with the exception of this particular instance. As the Committee doubtless know, public attention was called to the enormous number of tramps in and about Stafford, and reference was made in the newspapers to that effect. I can give you the number of tramps passing through Stafford in that period, which led to a very strong resolution being passed by the Stafford board of guardians.

10939. Then this large number of children was accompanied by an abnormal number of adults ?—That was so. Speaking generally, we find from our annual reports that the number of cases of actual tramp children that we have to deal with are comparatively small in proportion to the total number of children that we assist. For instance, last year we had 105,926 children passing through our hands, but we had only 375 cases of exposure for begging purposes and hawking, in which class the vagrant would be included, and the number was comparatively small. We have, I am sorry to say, at the moment, no reports of the actual number, but an abnormal number would be reported to our statistical department.

10940. You yourself would hear of it ?—Yes.

10941. (Mr. Simpson.) What exactly do you mean when you refer to 105,926 children passing through your hands ?—These children were the subject of inquiries made by the Society.

10942. Not criminal proceedings ?—No, either complaints of cruelty or ill-treatment, or some sort of neglect.

10943. Fresh cases in the year ?—Fresh cases in the year.

10944. (Chairman.) That would rather seem to show that the children of vagrants, or these children you refer to, are not as a rule made use of as instruments of begging ?—I am afraid they are. I shall hope to be able to show the Committee presently that this is one of our great difficulties in dealing with the vagrant class, that the children are of value to the parents in obtaining money as they go about the streets.

10945. Then you will deal with that particular point a little later on ?—If I may.

10946. Have you yourself formed any estimate of the number of vagrant children in England and Wales ?—No. I should like later, if I may, to give the Committee the outline of a scheme that we have had in hand for two years, and are just completing, for the purpose of obtaining an accurate return of the number of children who are constantly on tramp. We have found great necessity for that, and unfortunately, although our statistics are fairly complete, they do not contain that particular information.

10947. I understand you to agree that the ordinary percentage is something like 3 per cent. ?—Yes.

10948. Then from that we might assume what the number of children is ?—Yes ; but our purpose in forming a register would be to endeavour to apply that principle to the Society's work, which, so far has been such a success in dealing with the vagrant class generally, that is, preventing them, by warning in the first instance, and by prosecution if necessary, from tramping their children about in a manner likely to cause them unnecessary suffering.

10949. In what way would you deal with these children ; take the case of a child who is apparently fairly well nurtured and fairly well clothed, but who is being tramped about regularly ?—In the first instance, if the child had manifestly no sign of ill-treatment or neglect, and was well nourished, and clean and decently clothed, we should have no opportunity of doing anything at the moment.

10950. That would be according to the objects of your Society ?—Exactly, our position is simply that.

10951. The question of education, I suppose, does not come under your purview so much ?—No, we have to look after the children who are ill-treated or neglected in a manner likely to cause them unnecessary suffering, and if they do not come under that description we cannot interfere. We safeguard ourselves to this extent, that we issue to our 200 inspectors a memorandum saying that unless the child does present that particular feature, the inspector has no right to interfere.

10952. Unless he has some good cause to believe that there is some suffering or ill-treatment of the child ?—That is so.

10953. You do not touch the question of whether the child is being deprived of education and so forth ?—No.

10954. You refer to a scheme for registering tramps; that, of course, would include tramp children ?—That is practically the object of it, to secure, if possible, reliable information as to the number of children, as to the routes taken by the parents, and as to their heeding the warnings that are given by the inspectors at various places ; the difficulty, of course, is that if a warning is given to-day to a tramp in charge of children walking through a certain district, it is impossible, next week, to discover if that has had any effect. Under the system which we propose to introduce, we should publish a monthly register, containing the names and descriptions of tramp children, and the officer in the district to which the tramp came would be able to discover on his arrival if he had benefited by the warning that had been given him a month before.

10955. Have you inter-communication with your officers throughout England, to be able to give warning to the officer in another district if a man were taking children there ?—Yes, there is a regular system of inter-communication.

10956. Telegraphic or telephonic ?—Not between the officers themselves, but between secretaries of branches. Each of our officers acts under the direction of an honorary secretary, who is usually a person of some public position in the town, a solicitor or a doctor or some public man, who is responsible for seeing that the officer does his duty. The communication would pass, not between one officer and the other, who might possibly be inclined to neglect the duty, but between the two responsible persons, the honorary secretaries of the branches, one reporting a fact to another, who would see that the necessary inquiry was made.

10957. Well now, what is your opinion as to the number of those tramp children who are subjected to discomfort and cruelty, or anything approaching to that ?—Well, so far as the cases that we dealt with last year were concerned, 375 cases of children exposed for begging or hawking were enquired into, but only six of those were sufficiently grave tramp cases to warrant a prosecution. Taking previous years, the figures for 1900-1 were twelve, for 1901-2 seventeen, 1902-3 twelve, 1903-4 twelve, and in 1904-5 (owing to a more complete system of warning, and to following them up from place to place) only six needed prosecution ; but of course in each of the cases reported to us there was a bona fide reason for making inquiry into the condition of the children.

10958. Of those numbers what convictions were there ?—I think I am safe in saying that with very few exceptions during the last five years, every prosecution we have entered against a tramp has been successful. One exception was in Lancaster some three years ago. The conditions under which we proceed in these cases are so grave, as I shall be able to instance to the Committee presently, and the social conditions and surroundings are such as to almost compel a conviction.

10959. I suppose desertion is one of the charges against a parent ?—Desertion and abandonment. I have a specimen case that I can give you on that particular point, the case of a man who with his wife tramped the country with four children ; they left them in various unions as they went along. His boy, aged twelve, was discovered in Preston by our inspector, and it was found then that there were three other children, Emma aged four, Henry aged three, and a baby at the breast, Elizabeth, seven months old, and each of the three older children, Thomas, Emma, and Henry, had been deposited in various workhouses, and abandoned by the man on his progress.

10960. You took up those cases and prosecuted as cases of cruelty to the children ?—Cruelty to the children.

Mr. R. J. Parr.

12 Sept. 1905.

Mr. R. J.
Parr.

10961. And convictions followed?—Yes; two months hard labour for both parents.

12 Sept. 1905. 10962. I suppose the man was convicted for desertion?—Under the Act, for neglect and abandonment; that is the term.

10963. (Sir William Chance.) Do you follow up the history of these children at all?—Yes, in each of those tramp cases we endeavour, if possible, to remove the children, and to provide for them in some way, either under the Industrial Schools Act, or by adoption by boards of guardians; and if those two instances fail, then by taking custody ourselves, and retaining custody until the children become sixteen, during which time we place them in some school where their defective education can be made up, and they can be taught a trade. So far as possible, where we deal with the tramp we endeavour to provide for the custody of the child, so that he shall not go back to the parents.

10964. What was done with the children when the parents came out?—This particular case is a comparatively recent one; the two children, Emma and Henry, have been left at the workhouse; and the boy aged twelve is now at Preston, and the case is pending for us to make enquiries as to under what authority legal custody could be taken.

10965. I suppose your plan would be to bring the boy before the magistrates and get him committed to an industrial school?—The difficulty of our doing that is, that if we bring the case before the magistrates and ask them to commit, they charge us with the cost of his maintenance, and we hold that it is an unfair thing that while the Act of Parliament has provided that maintenance shall be granted out of the rates, private charity should be called upon to do what is necessary.

10966. Is there power of doing that?—The Industrial Schools Act, in section 14, says “Any person may bring before two justices or a magistrate any child apparently under the age of fourteen years” that comes within any of the descriptions mentioned in the section; and the justices or magistrate may order the child to be sent to a certified industrial school. A circular was issued by the Society to its inspectors as to these cases; we are bound to safeguard ourselves against making an application, because if we did we should be unable to continue our work on account of the enormous increase of the cost.

10967. Could you show me where the words are which would lay the burden of the cost upon you?—There are none; but the magistrates in each case—in three or four cases that we have taken—have held that the person bringing the child before the justices should undertake the cost. I would say that it is taken as a natural thing; they say, “This is a big society, working under a charter; you do a lot of work; if you are interested in these children you must pay for them.” Our answer to that is, that under the Elementary Education Act, 1876, under the Industrial Schools Act just quoted, and under the Poor Law Act of 1899, it is definitely stated that the education authority or the board of guardians shall provide for the maintenance. We, therefore, now proceed by calling the attention, in the first instance, of the recognised officer appointed to enforce the Acts; failing the appointment of such an officer we go to the police; and if they refuse to act, then we approach the clerk to the board of guardians, and sometimes, I regret to say, neither of these bodies will act, and after every other means has been tried the case comes back upon the Society, and if it is sufficiently grave, we are bound in the child's interest to take custody.

10968. (Mr. Davy.) Supposing the Society had taken no action at all in the case of those children, the rates would have had to pay for their maintenance?—I am afraid if the Society had taken no action the children would have been still tramping about in their discomfort and misery.

10969. By themselves?—With their parents.

10970. But those were deserted children, as I understand you, who were left behind?—No, the cases we deal with are the children of parents who are convicted for an offence; you cannot take custody of a child until the parent has been convicted under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904; before you can get legal custody the parents must have been convicted of the offence of cruelty against the child.

10971. In the case you mentioned the parent was charged before a magistrate for deserting the children?—Yes.

10972. The children are found deposited in the workhouses, and then you bring the case up before the justices; if they order the removal of these children to an industrial school, you say the justices then make an order upon you for the maintenance of these children in the industrial school?—That is so, if we take the initiative; in a recent case at Spalding we were expected to undertake this responsibility at a charge of 7s. a week.

10973. Well then, the children being in the workhouse when you first take action, they would have remained in the workhouse if you had taken no action?—If you are referring to the two girls—they would certainly have remained.

10974. If you take them out, the rates are relieved?—We are only taking action in the case of the boy we found at Preston; we are not interfering in the case of the two girls; they are provided for in the workhouse and will remain there.

10975. (Sir William Chance.) Have the guardians adopted them?—That I cannot tell you. It is quite a recent case.

10976. (Chairman.) How many cases have you had of the cost of the maintenance being laid upon you?—Very few, for since our first one or two applications under the Industrial Schools Act we have issued a circular to our officers telling them what must not be done in such a case.

10977. Have you made any representations to any Government Department calling attention to the hardship?—Repeatedly.

10978. And what has been the answer?—We have had every assistance from Scotland Yard in their administration of the Industrial Schools Act, but unfortunately the only thing they can do is to send down to the local authorities and ask them for their observations on the cases; which they make; and these are sent back to us.

10979. Has there been any application made either to the Home Office or to the Local Government Board on the subject?—I think Mr. Waugh, my predecessor, had an interview with some one at the Local Government Board, but as to that I am not quite sure.

10980. (Mr. Simpson.) When you say “Scotland Yard” you mean the offices of the Inspector of Industrial Schools?—Yes.

10981. (Chairman.) I am afraid we have asked you a good many questions on this matter, but it is very important this mulling of a Society which is trying to do its duty?—It makes it practically impossible, because we are dependent upon public subscriptions, and the Act having provided for these particular cases, it does not seem fair to call upon private charity to provide what the Act has provided for.

10982. (Mr. Davy.) Have you any definite proposal for a change in the law?—I should suggest, if I might, that the particular business of enforcing the Act should be put on one definitely defined body. The weakness of the Elementary Education Act, if I may venture to say so, lies in the concluding sentence of section 13. May I read the section? It applies only to children who are suffering because of a lack of education and are of school age. It is as follows—“Where the local authority are informed by any person of any child in their jurisdiction who is stated by that person to be liable to be ordered by a court under this Act to attend school, or to be sent under this Act, or the Industrial Schools Act, 1863, to an industrial school, it shall be the duty of the local authority to take proceedings under this Act, or the Industrial Schools Act, 1866, accordingly, unless the local authority think that it is inexpedient to take such proceedings.” And that is where the difficulty lies. The education authority exclude themselves on that sentence: “Well, we do not think it is expedient; try the guardians.” We go to the guardians; the guardians say: “No, if the education authority will not do it, we will not do it.” And there you are.

10983. Do you think that the refusal of the education authority or the board of guardians, as the case may be, is in any way affected by the question of the expense of the maintenance of the child?—Certainly, I think so; indeed I am sure. In the recent case we had at Spalding a woman was prosecuted by the Society for continually wandering about with a child and endangering its health. It was a little girl of tender years. The woman was sent to prison and the child was placed in the workhouse. We applied under the Industrial Schools Act to the officer working the Act for the enforcement of that provision; under the Poor Law Act, 1899, the guardians considered the matter and agreed to adopt. They then found that it would entail an expense of 7s. a week, whereupon they refused to proceed with the matter and handed the child back to the mother, after having practically promised to undertake its control, and the child is now tramping the country.

10984. The mother, I suppose, was a vagrant?—Yes.

10985. Not settled in the union?—No. A further difficulty arising out of that was the question of settlement; the case came under the Spalding guardians, and they held that the difficulty was first the question of settlement. They could not identify the regular settlement of the child. I would venture to suggest, if the Committee have not considered it, that that is a point that might be settled by saying that the place of birth, in the case of a vagrant child, should be its place of settlement. It may strike you as being somewhat haphazard, but it seems to work out fairly reasonably on the whole. If it was settled that the place of birth in the case of a tramp child was its place of settlement, it would assist guardians, who are not always unwilling to help but who are sometimes prevented from acting because of the fear of the general outcry as to extravagance.

10986. They think it unjust to their own constituents that they should maintain a child who is not chargeable to them?—Certainly. Speaking frankly, I never object to the decisions of either of these bodies. One has to carry out one's duties as best one can, and where difficulties arise endeavour to get them removed in the legal way. I make no reflections either upon the education authority or the board of guardians, but simply state the difficulty.

10987. Would the difficulty be minimised if the area of chargeability were increased; that is to say, if the charge of these children were made a county charge?—Certainly; I have ventured to suggest further that I would make the application of the Act compulsory, rather than as it is now, provisional.

10988. (Sir William Chance.) You are referring to the Act of 1876?—The Education Act of 1876. The sentence that causes us the whole difficulty is "unless the local authority think that it is inexpedient to take such proceedings." If it were made compulsory, it would put on the education authority in each district the responsibility of enforcing the provisions of the Act in the case of every child under school age brought before it. As to the child of a vagrant they could at least order that that child should be sent to an industrial school. And in the other cases, if the charge of the maintenance under the Poor Law Act of 1899 were transferred to the county instead of to the union area, the whole difficulty would be overcome.

10989. (Chairman.) The difficulty I have in my mind is as to the power of the court to order the payment of the cost of the maintenance of the child out of your funds?—We have never been able to settle that. We have argued it, but we have never gained our point. We say that there is absolutely no law under which that charge can be made.

10990. Has it ever been pointed out to you under what section that is done?—No, never. I may say that, of course, after the first time or two, when they tried to put the burden on us, we have safeguarded ourselves by moving along the lines of that Act. The Education Act explicitly says "the officer appointed." The Industrial Schools Act says "magistrates may have power to commit." They cannot, of course, commit unless the police bring the cases to them. Therefore we go to the police and say, "Will you take this case to the magistrate;" or to the guardians, in a case under the Poor Law Act, 1899. So that, after the first time or two, when the attempt was made to put the burden on the Society, we have not given them the opportunity of doing it; we have proceeded along these three lines—the industrial schools officer, the police, or the guardians.

10991. (Mr. Simpson.) Are any orders in force now by which you are required to pay maintenance?—I believe we are paying in two cases. I could not be sure as to the actual number. Why I say that is because we have undertaken the legal custody of something like 2,000 children, for which we have been practically responsible. May I just explain one further point, in connection with this question of custody, that is worthy of notice, because the Society holds strongly that the duty of providing for a child is the duty of the parent. That is the root principle on which we work, that we ought not to relieve the parent of the responsibility of maintaining his child. In the ordinary cases of custody, taken under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, we get an order of maintenance against the parent and enforce it. With the vagrant child you cannot do that—first, because you have a difficulty of proving earnings; and, secondly, because you have a difficulty in collecting the money.

10992. (Sir William Chance.) The Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act of last year, I believe, gives you no new powers over these children?—Not over tramp children.

10993. The difficulty you have always found, as I understand, in dealing with these vagrant children is that you have to prove an overt act of cruelty?—Yes; or not necessarily that; it might be anything likely to cause the child unnecessary suffering. The failure to provide food would be an offence under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act. Further, if a child was fed by a third party, it would still be an offence against the parent. It is not necessary to prove even that the child is not fed; it is sufficient for you to prove that the parent has neglected or abandoned the child and left the duty of feeding it to someone else, or done anything in that manner likely to cause unnecessary suffering.

10994. (Mr. Simpson.) It is an offence if a father, say a widower, on tramp with a child, allows it to get unreasonably dirty?—Yes.

10995. (Sir William Chance.) Is that so?—If it causes unnecessary suffering; a dirty head with nits in the hair, or failure to wash, causing the child to have bad feet from constant walking, is an offence.

10996. Now, we have had evidence that some of the workhouse authorities work in co-operation with your Society; and in some cases it is the rule that when the workhouse master has reason to suspect that the child is being habitually tramped about and not properly treated, he warns your officer before the parent leaves the workhouse that he is going in a certain direction; then the officer lies in wait, and takes steps if he finds that the child is not being properly treated?—That is so. Speaking generally, public authorities, whether workhouse masters or people in charge of casual wards, and in a wider sense, the police generally throughout the country are in very friendly communication with the Society in all these matters.

10997. In how many workhouses do you think that practice of co-operating with your Society is adopted?—I do not know one in which it is not. Failure to get assistance in any workhouse would be reported to me in the natural order of events by the inspector; and inability to get information as to a tramp child would be reported.

10998. There is a general system of co-operation between the workhouse master and your inspector?—I should say it was general throughout the country.

10999. Do you know it as a fact?—I should say I have known of very few difficulties put in the way by workhouse masters.

11000. Is it at all usual for the workhouse master, when he has reason to suspect that a child is being improperly treated, to notify the inspector?—Yes, certainly it is.

11001. Have you ever inquired as to the number of workhouses who have adopted that practice?—No, I have never inquired as to the number. In many of the very bad cases as we call them, in which persons have been convicted, we have had information in the first instance from the workhouse, which gives something to go upon to enable us to trace the person who is offending.

Mr. R. J. Parr.

12 Sept. 1905.

Mr. R. J.
Parr.
12 Sept. 1905.

11002. (Mr. Davy.) Have you heard that the General Inspectors of the Local Government Board systematically advise guardians to establish relations with your Society?—Yes; and we have again and again given in our monthly organ, "The Child's Guardian," the reports of speeches by Mr. Preston-Thomas in the West of England, Mr. Bagenal of York, and others who have repeatedly advised guardians; I think it is largely due to the Local Government Board Inspectors that we have got the information.

11003. (Sir William Chance.) Have you heard that the result of that action being taken is to decrease the number of tramp children frequenting the particular workhouse?—Certainly.

11004. You know that also as a fact?—Yes.

11005. Your Society has no institutions for maintaining these children?—None.

11006. You merely make use of the institutions and homes already in existence?—With the large number of children passing through our hands every year we have a fairly large connection amongst the homes of the country; we have no difficulty provided the child is in good health. We have great difficulty in finding places for children who are feeble-minded, or who are in some other way deficient.

11007. You utilise institutions of other voluntary organisations?—Yes. The Society of course becomes responsible for the maintenance; that is to say, we do not take up the case of a child and then communicate with other institutions and say, "Will you take this child?" Wherever we take charge of a child after we have initiated the proceedings, we become responsible for its maintenance.

11008. Do you happen to know whether guardians put in force the provisions of the Poor Law Act of 1899 with regard to these children very frequently?—A good many of them do.

11009. In spite of children not being settled in their unions?—Oh, yes; of course everything depends upon the particular board.

11010. But there are instances where they do put the Act in force in regard to vagrant children?—Oh, yes, in some unions every facility is given for adopting under the Act. We always say, as a matter of fact, in dealing with these cases, that if the guardians will adopt, that is by far the most successful method, because where you get the board of guardians willing to adopt, you usually get the further advantage of an intelligent dealing with the children in cottage homes, for instance; there is a regular system of visitation on the part of the lady guardians, and a general following up of the individual case.

11011. Have you considered two Bills which were introduced for the protection of these children last year, one by the State Children's Association, and another by a committee of persons interested in the subject; one was called the Vagrant Children Protection Bill?—I saw one which was produced by a committee, but that I am afraid, was some time ago.

11012. That empowered any police officer to take action where he had reason to suspect that a child was being tramped about, and was not receiving proper education, and to apprehend the person tramping the child about; if the case was proved, the person responsible for the child could be sent to prison for a certain period, and there was power to enable boards of guardians to deal with the child, the cost of its maintenance being thrown on the county instead of the union?—In the Education Act, and again in the Poor Law Act of 1899, a somewhat similar provision actually obtains. Any person can call the attention of the authorities to the fact that the child is a vagrant child.

11013. But the Bill I refer to proposed for the first time to make the mere act of habitually tramping about a child, quite irrespective of whether any cruelty was proved, an act which would justify the arrest of the person?—Yes, I see that.

11014. The act of tramping about the child habitually was to be an offence?—Yes.

11015. That Bill, of course, was drafted on the supposition that the control of vagrants would remain with the guardians?—Yes.

11016. Is your Society generally in sympathy with the lines of that Bill?—The difficulty would be to say that tramping with the child was an offence, because we have had so many indications of certain tramp children being well cared for, and therefore it would be very difficult for me to say off-hand that the Society would take the line that it was an offence.

11017. Where it could be proved that a person was habitually tramping a child or children about, is it your opinion that that should be dealt with as an offence?—Well, it would not come within the province of the Society, certainly.

11018. You do not want to give any opinion on the point yourself, personally?—It would not come within our province, you see; therefore the Society would not express an opinion on it, on the ground that it does not come under the conditions.

11019. Therefore you do not care to express an opinion on the subject?—If I did, it would be purely my personal opinion.

11020. (Mr. Davy.) A child tramping about with its parents may be very happy?—I have seen three children during the last week in Sussex who were really so apparently happy that to transplant them down to the condition of the East end of London children would be to create a grave offence, I think.

11021. (Dr. Downes.) I think it is a policy of your Society to preserve family life as far as possible?—That is the root principle on which we work, not to divide the family, and it is only as the last resort that we take custody to secure the removal of the child.

11022. You would rather try to reform the parents than take the children away from them?—That is the great success of the Society's work, if I may say so; that is where our whole hope lies in the work we are doing to reform the homes of the people.

11023. You mentioned that you had an unusual number of tramp children in a census at Stafford; was that a usual condition of things at that time of the year?—At that season of the year, I should say usual.

11024. Do Stafford people provide for the hop-picking?—Very largely. The people from the surrounding towns go through Stafford on their way to the hop-picking; they do that because, as the Committee know, the Stafford union has the reputation, to use the vernacular of the tramp, of being one of the softest places in the Kingdom. In Lichfield in the immediate vicinity, where a good labour test is provided, and where the workhouse master is constantly communicating with our inspector, you will find there are scarcely any tramps passing through at all.

11025. That is what you think forms an attractive tramp route?—Yes. Mr. Mitchell, a member of the Stafford board of guardians, referring to this particular subject, pointed out that they had relieved during the year 1901, 11,000 vagrants, 14,318 in 1902, that is over 270 per week, and he attributed this to the easy going system adopted by the Stafford guardians.

11026. (Mr. Davy.) How many tramp children now are the Society actually paying for?—The number of children of the vagrant class in the legal custody of the Society, and for whom we pay, is 107 (71 girls and 36 boys). The average number taken for the past four years is 13, but the actual number has increased progressively from 10 to 20.

11027. Where are they?—In different homes in the country.

11028. Homes like Dr. Barnardo's?—Yes; or, as is so often the case, in convalescent homes, because many of the cases we have taken are of such a nature that we have been compelled to move them completely away where they can have special treatment by the sea.

11029. Is it your opinion that, if the Society had not interfered, the bulk of these cases would have become chargeable to the rates?—I am afraid not, because it would be so difficult to discover them. The cases which are discovered by the Society have in themselves peculiar features. May I give you an illustration?

11030. Please?—There was the case of a child, the daughter of a woman in Edinburgh. The woman was brought before the magistrates for exposing her child begging, a child of six, and she was sentenced to three days' imprisonment. That had so little effect that the woman pursued her course; she was asked by a man, also on tramp, to give him the child. She refused. A few days afterwards she left the child outside a house; the man passed; he was a one-armed man, and seeing a one-legged child, the child he had tried to get given him, he took it away, and tramped with it from Edinburgh through every city and intervening town to Bolton. There our officer saw the child walking with the man and discovered that she was in pain. He spoke to her; took her to his house; got a doctor to examine her, and found such a condition of things that he immediately gave the man in charge. The man was sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. The child remained with the inspector. To the inspector's wife she told her story. She was then seven years old; she had been so brutally outraged by this man as to be in a condition absolutely indescribable, even in an audience of men. The man was re-arrested on this further charge, after his sentence of six months had expired, committed to the assizes, tried before Mr. Justice Grantham, and sentenced to ten years penal servitude. The difficulty to my mind is, that if the inspector had not been sharp enough to have seen there was something wrong with this child, something written on its face, and taken the matter into his own hands, the possibility is that the child would have been tramping about the country to this day. On the surface there was nothing but the bruises of the last night's beating to show there was something wrong. That is the kind of case we have to meet.

11031. I put the question to you rather suggesting that your Society were relieving the rates, and that, therefore, they were entitled to some more equitable method of treatment. What I thought you were putting to us was that the Society was unfairly burdened with the maintenance of these children?—Tramp children?

11032. That they ought to be paid for by the rates?—Under the Acts providing for their maintenance, yes.

11033. My question was put to you by way of showing that in certain instances you relieved the rates?—That is so. In such a case as that it was manifestly unfair that that child should have the opportunity of going back to its mother; we applied for custody at once.

11034. You suggest that that one-legged child was picked up by that one-armed man as being a picturesque spectacle?—A valuable asset in his business. If we could secure the stopping of gifts on the part of the thoughtless so-called benevolent people, tramping with a child for the purpose of gain would soon die out. We have another specimen of a similar nature, except that it is a proof of defective education, and shews the terrible results of allowing this thing to continue. We had a case sometime in 1903, dealing with a number of children who had never been to school in their lives; a case in which a man and woman, named Chapman, were brought before the bench with two children in a very dirty condition. Neither of these children had been at school in their lives; and it is quite a usual occurrence, I am sorry to say, for us to find that the children of tramps have not received any education.

11035. (Chairman.) I suppose it is almost invariably the case that vagrant children are absolutely uneducated?—Yes.

11036. (Mr. Davy.) They have never been to school?—They have never been to school; I will put it that way.

11037. When you get one of those children in the convalescent or other home, could the parents claim the child from you?—By making application to the court; under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act of 1904, the court has power to give custody to a person until the child reaches the age of sixteen, afterwards giving the right to the parent to apply to the same court for revision of the order in his or her favour. We, therefore, retain; there is very little fear of a tramp applying for a child, although, so far as ordinary custody is concerned, we wish parents to apply. But may I give you an illustration of one who did? I have only this morning, before coming here, given consent to a child being restored to a woman who was a tramp, but who has now settled down in a Yorkshire town as a respectable member of her own class. The child, whose care we have had for some ten years, is now being handed back to her at her own request. A similar case I have in mind at this moment was the case of a woman tramping through Chester, her husband having gone to the war. She was found drunk in the street, lying on the edge of the pavement with a baby, quite a small child, in her arms. The inspector reported the matter, we proceeded against the woman for neglect, and, contrary to our usual rule, took custody of the child on the ground, in that case, that the man was serving his country at the war, and we were doing a kindness to him by taking care of his child, at least until he came back; and we asked for custody until the man returned from the war. Some three years after having taken custody, a woman turned up in London, having walked all the way from Liverpool, saying she was now earning her own living as a laundress, living with a married daughter. We caused inquiry to be made by the local inspector, who found that her statement was correct, and the child was handed back to her, subject to periodical visits by the inspector; and the reports from the inspector show that the child is well cared for. Therefore, if I may emphasise the point, brought out by a member of the Committee just now, lying behind this question of custody, is that question of parental control and home influence, which is the thing which we seek, above all others, to bring about.

11038. Your Society does not seek any further powers of detention?—We have not done so, no.

11039. Have you ever had any difficulty with the detention of children who are under the age of nurture?—Yes, particularly with regard to this Preston case, in which there was a child at the breast; as a rule, they have to go with their mothers.

11040. You are aware of the old decision in the case of the Queen v. Birmingham,* that is to say, that a child under the age of nurture has a right to be with its mother?—Yes, and I think that is the best place for it really.

11041. So that the Society does not press for any further detention?—Oh, no.

11042. What do you mean by saying that you are responsible for the maintenance of the children; do you pay Dr. Barnardo and the convalescent homes week by week?—In some cases Dr. Barnardo takes custody himself. In other homes we pay 5s. a week; we make quarterly payments; 5s. a week is the regular sum paid for maintenance in all these cases.

11043. But with due notice you can determine that payment at any time?—By removing the child.

11044. Or, if you cease to pay, the child would become destitute and become chargeable to the guardians?—We should be held responsible; we have undertaken responsibility in open court to provide for the maintenance of the child till sixteen.

11045. Have you some form of agreement?—A printed form similar to this (document exhibited), which is brought before me in every case, in which we undertake to bring up the child in its own particular religion; I sign that as director, and am personally responsible to the court for the child until it attains the age of sixteen years.

11046. You have not, I think, described to us your scheme for the registration of tramps and their children?—No. I may say that it came out of this discussion at the Stafford union with reference to the large number of tramps passing through that district. First of all we subjected these figures to a little inquiry and instructed our officer at Stafford to find out if possible how many of this large number of vagrants might fairly be described as children, with this result: the local police supplied the actual number of child vagrants who received casual ward night relief tickets through their office during the past three months; they are as follows—August, seventy-three children; September, thirty-six children; October, eighty-three children. It must be remembered that these figures represent only those who slept in casual wards and not the total number of tramp children. A large proportion of tramps of course sleep in common lodging-houses and these are not included. It is significant to note that Lichfield is a place where the police and workhouse officials are in constant co-operation

Mr. R. J.
Parr.
12 Sept. 1905.

* 5 Q.B. 210 (1870).

Mr. R. J. with the Society's inspector, and after some prosecutions
Parr. for neglect, the tramp child almost disappeared. It does 12 Sept. 1905. not mean that there are less tramps on the road, but that they for obvious reasons avoid Lichfield.

11047. If every union in the country behaved as Lichfield does is it not probable that the total number of tramps would diminish?—Absolutely; I think there is no question about that.

11048. It is no use one union driving them out?—Not when Stafford makes it easy for them to enter. What we propose is to get information as to all families tramping who are met by the Society's inspector, that they should be treated as warned cases; that is to say, the risks they run in exposing and fatiguing their children should be pointed out to them and full particulars noted as on one of the plaint sheets. I have a copy here that is used for our ordinary cases (plaint sheet put in). That is an ordinary sheet in which we take particulars of any case that is inquired into. As the names and ages given on the sheet might not always be relied upon in tramp cases, a short description of parents and children should be added to insure further identification. A descriptive return of all tramps thus warned through the country should be sent on the last day of each month to the central office in Leicester Square, and from these lists a printed "Gazette" or register should be compiled and circulated to all the local officers of the Society and to police officers and workhouses where thought desirable. An inspector of the Society travelling, say, on a country road carrying his list in his pocket, meets a tramp family whose condition warrants inquiry. He is able by means of his list to recognise them as a group warned by inspector—some—miles away, and some—weeks or months previously. Possibly their names might appear in two or three places, registered from different districts, and proof is thus set up, not only that they are regular and professional tramps, but that they have been warned with regard to their conduct. An inspector meeting a family for the first time has only the statement of the offenders to go upon, and although he does not always believe it he finds it impossible to proceed further. The evidence of previous warnings and conditions would be more valuable in procuring convictions in such cases, and thereby driving the professional child exploiter from the means of its existence, which is the child practically. Then we have a form which has been drawn up for the purpose of recognition, because the Committee will easily appreciate that it would be perfectly easy for a man to use a wrong name. We therefore propose to give colour of hair and eyes and complexion, and any distinctive feature. That may be possible of either man, woman, or child. We should then, by reason of our monthly register, supplied to our 200 inspectors and to the workhouse authorities throughout the country and to the chief constables of police, practically be able to identify each family with its children; and we hope in that way that the good work of the Society in dealing with these people by warning over the whole country will be as productive of good results as it has been during the last two or three years.

11049. And you do not think the number of families identified under the scheme would be overwhelmingly large?—I do not think so.

11050. (Sir William Chance.) If the police had the control of tramps, that would probably be of assistance?—Yes, of course.

11051. Would it assist your Society in carrying out your scheme in regard to identification?—There would be this advantage, that we could then of course send our monthly printed list to each division throughout the country, and the police would then have the particulars which we were able to give them, which would certainly be advantageous to both parties.

11052. You work largely with the police at the present moment, do you not, in your action as regards children?—Yes; in the city of London and in the county of London under an order from each Commissioner, and very largely under the instructions of the chief constables in the country, who are very glad to hand over to the Society such cases as we prove possible to warn, and are not what perhaps a policeman would call ripe enough for prosecution; we are able to avoid prosecution by the issue of our warnings.

11053. Would you think that we would get a better chance of uniformity of treatment of the tramp generally under the police than under the present system?—Of course, if the rule as to tramps was a direct rule given to a regular authority there must be some considerable advantage. The difficulty that I see at the moment is that there is no recognised rule. Each locality has the option of doing something or nothing, as the case may be. I take it that if the police were given this duty they would act under a certain rule, and be compelled to carry that rule out. There must certainly be an advantage in having a uniform rule through the country.

11054. (Chairman.) Is there any other matter which you wish to mention to the Committee?—I think I have practically covered the points here.

11055. You may say the vagrant children form a very small proportion of those that you have to look after?—That is so. I should like to emphasise the necessity for some particular authority to be given to some body to enforce the provisions of the Industrial Schools Act. That seems to me to be a great weakness, that it is no-one's business. We are thrown about from the education authority to the police, from the police to the guardians, and then being unable to get any of them to act, it is most unfortunate—I do not say for the Society, because that is immaterial—but most unfortunate for the child.

11056. You mean that under the existing conditions the police do not feel it incumbent upon them to take action?—No.

11057. Without being put in motion by some other body?—That is so.

11058. And is it your suggestion that the police should proceed more on their own initiative in the matter?—The difficulty is this, that in the case of street offences, begging, and so on, it is so difficult for a policeman to get a conviction, and he will not be continually going to the magistrates if he is constantly being put down. Take the case I gave you just now, where a woman is sentenced to three days' imprisonment for exposing her child and begging with it, and the number of cases which have been seen in London and the country where magistrates refuse to convict for street offences.

THIRTIETH DAY.

Thursday, October 26th, 1905.

PRESENT.

The Right Hon. J. L. WHARTON, M.P., (in the Chair).

Mr. J. S. DAVY, C. B.
Mr. A. H. DOWNES, M.D.
Captain EARDLEY-WILMOT.

Captain SHOWERS.
Mr. H. B. SIMPSON.

Mr. F. L. TURNER (Secretary).

Sir ERIC A. BUCHANAN, Bart., Secretary of the London Mendicity Society, called ; and Examined.

11059. (Chairman.) Sir Eric Buchanan, you are, I believe, secretary of the London Mendicity Society?—Yes.

11060. How long have you been in that position?—Seventeen years last May.

11061. And you have acquired a very great knowledge of beggars in London?—Yes. I probably know as much about the question as anybody, because it is not a sort of work that people can take much interest in unless they are working at it.

11062. I think you desire to make a short statement as to the work of your Society?—The London Mendicity Society was founded in 1818 by the great Duke of Wellington to deal with street begging before the Metropolitan Police Act was passed, viz.—before London had any police. When the Metropolitan Police Act was passed the best legal advice was taken by the Home Office and the Mendicity Society to ascertain if that Act was sufficiently elastic for the Home Secretary to authorise the Chief Commissioner of Police to give certificates to as many constables as the Mendicity Society wished to employ. The result was that the Home Secretary found he had power to authorise the Chief Commissioner to give certificates to mendicity constables to apprehend street beggars and to appear in the Metropolitan Police Courts to give evidence. Therefore the London Mendicity Society is quite unique, as it is a private society officially recognised by the Home Office. The Mendicity Society at present incurs an annual expenditure of more than £200 a year on three constables, whose work I will explain directly. But I have now the pleasure of stating that the work of the Society is not confined to street beggars. About fifteen years after it was founded it initiated a system for dealing with begging letters, and the result of its labours in this branch of its work is that it is able to inform the public that 25 per cent. of begging letter writers are downright impostors; a further 50 per cent. do not deserve relief; but 25 per cent. are found to deserve assistance, and of these, 5 to 7 per cent. are very deserving indeed, so much so that with a subscription list of under 300 members the Society is instrumental in relieving genuine cases of distress to the extent of not less than £1,000 a year in sums varying from 10s. to £10, the test of the committee's decision in every case being simply "is this a helpable case worthy of benevolent sympathy?" The Society has endeavoured to educate its subscribers and the public not to give money in the street without prompt investigation at the office of the Mendicity Society, which is usually done in forty-eight hours, and not to give money to a begging letter writer without similar investigation, which is usually done in three weeks, or, during great pressure of work, in a month, but often in three or four days, thanks to the Society's 234,000 documents. That is all I may say on behalf of my committee. My committee wish you clearly to understand that the rest of my evidence is simply my own personal experience and my own personal views, without in any way committing them.

11063. Quite so. You mentioned a large number of begging letter documents: during what period were those documents dealt with?—They have accumulated during the eighty-six years that the Society has existed. But we have had to destroy a great many. Two or three years ago we destroyed, I suppose, several thousands.

11064. About how many begging letters a year do you deal with, on an average, would you say?—Well, our Society is small now, the Charity Organisation Society having also having taken up begging letter work. The total number of begging letters received during the year 1904 was 1,469, of which 629 were returned to subscribers for whom the Society acts as almoner, and 840 were dealt with by the committee.

11065. Do I understand you to say that you work in harmony and accord with the Charity Organisation Society?—Oh, yes.

11066. Do you have anything in the nature of a joint committee?—No, but we have tried that. I read a paper before the council of the Charity Organisation Society in 1897, with the object of getting the Society to make a co-operative arrangement, in order that their local committees might have the services of our mendicity constables. They joined us for two years, and paid us £20 a year. At that time they had, roughly, forty or forty-five committees, and I suggested that every committee should subscribe 10s. a year—that is £20. I said to Mr. Loch, "Of course, you have really no machinery for dealing with street beggars; all you can do is to inform the police, and the police have to come to us; therefore it would be better for each of your committees to come direct to us and let us do the work." However, the Charity Organisation Society said that they could not afford to continue the subscription, so that dropped through. In times past there has been a great deal of friction between the Societies, but now there is no friction at all.

11067. You work in harmony?—In perfect harmony. The Charity Organisation Society is so large that there is not the least occasion for them to deal with street begging, and the begging letter work is entirely different. The Charity Organisation Society would investigate a begging letter for anybody without any charge, but we cannot possibly do that. We have to do it for the King and all sorts of big people; we are required to do it very well indeed, and we cannot do it without a small subscription. Therefore we are, as it were, the private society for begging letters, while the Charity Organisation Society is the public society, and there is ample work for both.

11068. What is the amount of your subscription list for the year?—The whole income is under £1,200; it varies from £1,100 to £1,200.

11069. And a considerable portion of that goes in the payment of your police?—Yes; the police cost us more than £200 a year.

11070. Are they fully employed?—They are fully employed. We are now doing all the work we possibly can. We now have a deficit of £80, and if we appointed another police officer it would cost us another £70 a year.

11071. Does the Charity Organisation Society supply you with evidence upon which your police can work?—No; they cannot help us at all; we can help them, but they cannot help us. I may say that the Chief Commissioner of Police, Mr. Henry, admits that he is very much indebted to our Society—and I hope that this will enable the Home Secretary favourably to con-

Sir E. A.
Buchanan,
Bart.

26 Oct. 1905.

Sir E. A.
Buchanan,
Bart.

26 Oct. 1905.

sider what we have asked him to do now that the Mendicity Society is really in want of funds. We really want £100 a year more. If I could only persuade the Home Secretary when he has considered this evidence to give an annual grant, there would be no difficulty in getting the city companies to support the Society. It is not a society that can expect private assistance, because nobody takes the slightest interest in street begging. That I proved last winter. One paper said there was £100,000 a year given away to street beggars in London, and another said the amount was £300,000; I gave the newspapers all the particulars about our work, and what do you think we got in return? Four donations amounting to £2 12s. 6d.

11072. Your Society deals principally with beggars in London, I think?—My Society deals with street beggars in London only.

11073. What is your mode of action?—The appointment of our constables is controlled by the Chief Commissioner of Police, in accordance with regulations authorised by the Secretary of State, and dated 1st May, 1857. Formerly our constables used to apprehend a great many beggars, but now as the Society's present income will only admit of three constables being employed instead of eight, as formerly, the time of the present three constables is occupied every day from 10 in the morning till 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon in the police courts, giving evidence before the magistrates out of the Society's 76,000 records of street beggars. After they have left the police courts they are at the disposal of the Society's subscribers for the purpose of clearing any particular neighbourhood of beggars in co-operation with police constables in uniform and plain clothes.

11074. What information have you as to beggars?—We have 76,000 records of street beggars, and I may mention that Mr. Henry admitted to me, in a personal interview with him last March, that the mendicity constables had a greater personal knowledge of London street beggars than any constable in the Metropolitan Police. In the Society's last annual report it is stated that the number of begging cases attended during the year 1904 by the mendicity constables at the various police courts, and dealt with from their own personal knowledge, and the Society's records was 1,929; and during that year the three constables gave evidence in no less than 90 per cent. of the cases they attended at the various Metropolitan police courts, i.e. but for the London Mendicity Society's records 90 per cent. of the above-mentioned 1,929 street beggars apprehended in the year 1904 might have had to be dealt with by the London magistrates without any previous complete record of convictions, although the mendicity records sometimes show thirty convictions against one person. The reason of that is that the police authorities keep records only at individual police courts, so that if a beggar is taken to Westminster, say, nothing may be known about him there, but there may be thirty convictions against him in other police courts. Sir Edward Bradford, when he was first appointed, asked me to explain the nature of our work, and he was so pleased with it that he sent round a circular to the superintendents of all the police courts telling them that whenever any case of begging was brought before a magistrate the particulars were to be sent to the Mendicity Society, so that now we have an absolutely complete record of any beggar that is dealt with.

11075. Do you identify them by the finger-print system or anything of that sort?—No. We have a list of questions sufficiently exhaustive to enable you to be quite certain of the identity and the particulars of a man—like an ordinary prison sheet.

11076. How do your officers identify the beggars?—Our constables identify the street beggars from their personal knowledge—because they are in the police courts every day and have been for several years—and from our 76,000 records. Two of the constables have been in the service of the Society for over twenty-four years, and the third is an ex-police constable, who was in the force for twenty-one years. That would account for their being able to do it; they are doing it every day of their lives.

11077. Seeing that you have only three expert constables of your own, have they not some difficulty in dealing with all the police courts of London?—Quite so; we cannot deal with them all. We could easily find work for more constables—for one more and probably two more; but these constables cost us £70 a year. If the Home Office could see their way to paying for another constable we would put one on at once.

11078. But do you find any difficulty owing to the small number of your constables?—Yes, we cannot be as often in the police courts as we should like to be; there is not the slightest doubt about that. At least one more constable is wanted.

11079. (Mr. Davy.) Do the London police magistrates adjourn cases for the attendance of the mendicity officer?—Constantly—nearly every day. If a beggar is not known in the court at which he is charged, he is remanded for inquiries to be made at the Mendicity Society's office.

11080. (Chairman.) What sentences as a rule are given in these cases?—From one day to three months in the police courts, and, if sent to the sessions, from four months to twelve months.

11081. Now what is your opinion of the London beggar?—I regret to say that my opinion after my seventeen years' experience at the Mendicity Society is that the London beggar is quite unhelpable. My reason for making this statement is that seventeen years ago a system of food and inquiry tickets was introduced, by which any case could be sent to Red Lion Square for very prompt inquiry and very prompt relief, provided the case was deserving, or rather provided the case was helpable. The word "deserving" is always a difficult word to use in charitable work, but the word "helpable" has an unmistakable meaning. Many cases have been sent to Red Lion Square by the enquiry tickets during the last seventeen years, but up to the end of June, 1905, I have never known a single case that my committee were justified in giving money to after the prompt enquiry had been made. I am, however, very pleased to be able to add that during my absence in July last one of our subscribers sent us a man she had met in the street, with one of our inquiry tickets. The man had two young children with him, and was selling matches. He said he wanted money to get a violin out of pawn. The case was dealt with in forty-eight hours, and the man's statement proving to be true the violin was taken out of pawn by an officer of the Society at a cost of 7s. 6d. from our immediate relief fund. Now that we have found one helpable case I sincerely hope we may find more, but seventeen years is a long time in which to find one helpable case only, considering that the Society seldom deals with less than 1,500 street beggars in every twelve months. I should like to read an extract from the paper which I read before the Charity Organisation Society in 1897:—"And now we come to the chief object of to-day's meeting, viz., 'Street Mendicity.' Here I regret to say the deserving cases are absolutely nil, at least as far as my own personal experience goes, for although I have made it a rule for the last two or three years to stop and listen to any street mendicant I happen to meet and send them to Red Lion Square, I have never yet been able to find that one exception which proves the rule, and I have sent so many cases to the office that my visitors have implored me not to send any more. They say, 'Well, sir, you have sent every variety of street beggar for investigation, but they are one and all no good, and the committee always decline them as unhelpable or undeserving and it is really useless trying this experiment any longer.'"

11082. Since then you have had one deserving case?—Yes, the other day, when I was out of town. I am delighted to have got that one; I have tried so very hard to find one, because it seemed absolutely absurd not to be able to do so.

11083. (Mr. Simpson.) What was the character of that one?—The man was quite satisfactory, or we should not have helped him.

11084. Was he a man who had fallen temporarily out of work?—Yes; he was really destitute and had been obliged to pawn his violin, and he said that directly he got his violin he would be able to go to some seaside town and earn a living. I purposely use the term "helpable case," because I have been so much criticised in the papers for saying "deserving." Whoever writes the article says, "Of course the experienced secretary knows what is deserving and what undeserving, but he probably takes a very hard view of the matter." Everybody can understand the word "helpable." What we mean by "helpable" is—if we give money, it will not put a man permanently on his legs, but help him over a temporary difficulty if he is in one. But these beggars are not in temporary difficulties; they are chronic beggars and chronic loafers.

11085. And you think that this man really did go down to the seaside to make a little money, after your Society got the violin out of pawn for him?—I have no doubt he did.

11086. (Chairman.) "Helpable" would mean "worthy of help," would it not?—Yes; perhaps that is the best way of putting it. What we mean is rather this. If the word "deserving" is used, they think the societies are very hard-hearted and expect a very high character, and that is not the case. You cannot give to a man who drinks, because he would at once spend the money on drink; but in our case, if we knew a man to have been a drunkard some years ago, but felt pretty satisfied that he had given it up, and that by our giving him money he would be helped to a fresh start, we should give it him.

11087. (Mr. Davy.) Would you put what you mean as high as this: "helpable" means that assistance given to the man would not be injurious to him?—That it would not be wasted. We do not pretend to build up a case permanently, so that he will never come on the rates; but we mean that if it will give him another start the money will not be wasted.

11088. (Chairman.) Does the London beggar frequent the casual wards?—Yes, but he also frequents common lodging-houses.

11089. What are his average earnings?—The Mendicity Society have felt justified in stating during the last seventeen years that a successful street beggar can collect 5s. per day, so that allowing him to rest on Sunday he is capable of collecting 30s. per week. You will naturally want to know how I get at that figure. I get at it in this way. I was extremely anxious to be able to give the public some information on the question of how much a successful beggar could earn, and I have based my figure on the amount of money that has been found on beggars when apprehended. I have asked every officer in my office, the constables and the clerks, and I have always said, "You are quite certain that we are not over-stating it?" and they have all been unanimous in saying that, for a successful beggar, that is below the mark, that a great deal more is obtained. You all know of the celebrated case last winter of a man who had been getting £6 a week for years; he was living in the suburbs, and by shamming paralysis actually got £6 a week. I feel perfectly justified in sticking to the figure of 5s. a day.

11090. Do you include in that itinerant musicians?—Oh, no; certainly not.

11091. Do you include any man who is doing anything?—No. I am trying to define that very question of what is begging and what is not begging. There is the question of singing in the streets. But let me quote what I said in my paper before the Charity Organisation Society: "I must now explain that the law cannot be set in force unless a street beggar is seen to receive alms, or is seen to be drunk and disorderly. The question of singing and selling boot-laces, matches or a few flowers, is a very difficult one, as magistrates will often refuse to convict. Not long ago we apprehended a man for singing in the streets, and the case was dismissed, and our officer was told he might as well apprehend a German band. There is of course singing and singing; if a man walks along the street singing without looking up at windows or at foot passengers, and without an appeal for alms, that is not begging; but if the singer is constantly looking towards windows and foot passengers, making an appeal for alms, that is begging. That is as near as you can get it."

11092. That would protect the crossing-sweeper, even if he is not a regular one?—We should never dream of interfering with a crossing-sweeper, because he is doing something. A beggar does nothing, although he may have two or three boot-laces or a match-box. If he had more than that, if he had a bunch of boot-laces or several boxes of matches, he would not be interfered with. But if he has one single box of matches, or two or three boot-laces, and he is seen by the police to stop people and solicit alms, that is begging.

11093. The man with one box of matches, or one or two laces, would be watched to see if he took money other than for his wares, I suppose?—Yes.

11094. Is there any chance of reforming such men?—In my opinion there is no chance whatever, unless they are sent to farm colonies, and perhaps you will now allow me to explain my views about farm colonies as the only efficient remedy for street begging. The State cannot allow any man, woman, or child to starve, to steal, or to beg. In Germany—and I believe also in Belgium, and certainly in Switzerland—no one is allowed to beg, but every destitute person who is able-bodied is sent to a labour institution or to a farm colony. On a farm colony it is possible to make use of all able-bodied men and women. My seventeen years' experience at the Mendicity Society has taught me that sending a street beggar—whether man or woman—to prison, has no effect on them as far as begging is concerned, for even when they are sent to prison for a year they always begin to beg again when they leave the prison, in spite of the prisoners' aid societies, which I believe co-operate with every prison in the country, and offer the prisoner work on leaving prison. I would, therefore, deal with street beggars as Sir Robert Anderson, in a recent article in some magazine, advocates that habitual criminals should be dealt with, viz:—confine them permanently in some institution or labour colony until they have acquired habits of industry which would enable them to be self-supporting. I am quite aware that I may be told that this would be interfering with the liberty of the subject, and therefore, perhaps you will allow me to point out that this street-begging question is closely connected with a portion of the unemployed question. As long as public opinion considers it is interfering with the liberty of the subject to confine an able-bodied street beggar or an able-bodied tramp in a farm colony, the time and money that has to be spent in distinguishing the genuine unemployed working man from the idle loafer is almost endless. At the present moment it appears to me that not only the idle loafer, but even the hopelessly thriftless, both in town and country, practically say to themselves, "If I can't get a living by odd jobs. I'll take to street begging;" whereas if public opinion could be educated to adopt my suggestion about labour colonies, both the idle loafer and the hopelessly thriftless would know that when they cease to work for themselves they would be compelled to work for the State, and that they could not spend their time between street begging and the prison, both of which are demoralising to the individual and unremunerative to the State. With regard to establishing farm colonies the initial expense might be great, but after that, as the State would get the labour free of cost, all the able-bodied would eventually recoup the outlay for their maintenance, and I would advocate that in these colonies those who had earned a character for industry should be given some slight remuneration, and eventually allowed to leave the labour colony after they had recouped the State for their maintenance, and could be trusted to be self-supporting citizens. Perhaps I may be allowed to add that the unemployed question might be met by Government industrial schools for adults, who should be allowed to earn a wage as soon as they had recouped the State for their maintenance, and be allowed to leave as soon as they could find work at a wage which would support themselves. If this suggestion could be adopted, I think the poor rates for our workhouses would diminish, the genuine working man would be saved from the taint of pauperism, and the inmates of the workhouse would simply consist of those who are physically or mentally incapable of any kind of work; but these incapable persons should not be allowed to beg, and a magistrate should have the power of confining them in the workhouse, and in order to make the workhouse a humane institution, the respectable incapables should be separated from the disreputable incapables. If Government industrial schools for adults cannot be thought of, would it not be possible to have workshops attached to work-

Sir E. A.
Buchanan,
Bart.

26 Oct. 1905.

Sir E. A. Buchanan, Bart.
26 Oct. 1905.

houses to enable the workhouse authorities to test the ability of the skilled pauper, and get him employment and so save the rates? I must apologise for going into the matter at such length, but the question of street begging, in my opinion, is a complicated one, and having been at it so long it naturally makes one think, and this is the result of my thinking.

11095. I understand you to be in favour of having trades taught at labour colonies?—Yes.

11096. Say carpentry or boot and shoemaking, and so forth?—Yes.

11097. Would you be inclined to have that as an adjunct to a farm colony?—Yes, because there are a certain number of paupers who really have a trade in their hands: why keep them doing nothing? I would say, keep them until they have paid the State for their maintenance. There are lots of quite young people who get into the workhouse, and if it took them five years, or even ten years, to recoup the State for what it had spent on them, they might even then start again. There is another point I should like to mention. Nowadays it is almost impossible for a man to get work after he is forty years of age if he happens to get out of employment through the failure of his employers, or other cause. Therefore, unless they happen to have friends or other means of support, such people must go to the workhouse. So that there is an enormous amount of good material wasted under our present poor law system.

11098. Have you many cases of repeated convictions?—Possibly the best way of answering that question is to say that one case—I can give particulars if desired—shows thirty-six convictions from 1883 to 1899; another, thirty-one from 1891 to 1904; another, twenty-three from 1880 to 1899; another twenty-six from 1881 to 1898; and another, twenty-one from 1889 to 1901.

11099. Are they principally for begging?—Yes. I will take the first case; I see there are several convictions for being drunk, and for assault, as well as many for begging.

11100. Being drunk and assaults are rather worse than ordinary begging?—Many of these people, when they are drunk, assault people and beg. I may state that the convictions in each case are merely a question of time, as my experience in most cases is that when once a street beggar has been taken to a police court he spends the rest of his life in street begging and in prison.

11101. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Does the large proportion of drunkenness, and so on, among the beggars who are convicted, mean that magistrates, as a rule, are not satisfied merely with begging, but require additional evidence?—They are taken on two distinct charges—one for begging and the other for being drunk and disorderly.

11102. Do you find any difficulty in getting convictions for pure begging?—No. It is only sometimes that a beggar is both a beggar and drunk and disorderly.

11103. (Chairman.) Your Society, I think, gives tickets for free food: perhaps you will describe the system?—I have brought some of the tickets with me. (Books of tickets handed in.) Perhaps you will allow me to read the draft of a letter to a newspaper, drawn up by our vice-chairman and myself: it will explain the whole thing. "No doubt many of your readers think that the Mendicity Society is solely employed in the suppression of street begging and the detection of fraudulent begging letter writers, but there is, besides, a more benevolent side of their work, viz.: the immediate relief fund, and the money given away through our begging letter department is estimated at not less than £1,000 a year. The immediate relief fund, which gives immediate relief on either personal or written application, proves that the Mendicity Society is anxious to assist honest distress. Inserting this appeal would give you an opportunity of educating your readers by a leading article on a problem which cannot be properly dealt with without the co-operation of the public themselves. In your leading article I would suggest that you should point out that unless street mendicity can be put down or kept down to narrow limits, the work of free shelters and philanthropic lodging-houses, instead of supplying a want of the honest poor, simply becomes in a great measure comfortable quarters for the street beggar, as the Mendicity Society feel justified in stating that a successful street beggar gets 5s. per day, or 30s. per week, a wage many honest working men would be glad of. It has been said that anyone giving to a street beggar without enquiry not only demoralises the beggar by teaching him that money can be got without working for it, but demoralises the giver by teaching that the pleasure of a philanthropic emotion can be obtained without the trouble of even writing a cheque or getting a postal order, or by spending more than sixpence, or even a penny. In London there is not the slightest excuse for giving to street beggars owing to the fact that there is the Mendicity Society and several organisations supported by the public for their use. Another fact not generally known is that every beggar sent to prison can when coming out of prison be offered work by the prisoners' aid societies, of which there are more than forty branches in different parts of England. Another point all Londoners should remember is that not only the honest unemployed drift to London—and these, I believe, never beg in the streets—but also vagrants from the country districts naturally make for London during the winter, and probably pick up enough by street begging to exist in free shelters or common lodging-houses. If the public think there is such a thing as a deserving street beggar who intends to make some effort to get work, the food and enquiry tickets of the Mendicity Society place at the disposal of the public a means by which the public can deal with the problem of street begging without doing any harm to the honest poor or without injustice to the street beggar. To give an enquiry ticket without a food ticket as well is certainly hard on the beggar, but the food ticket should not be given without an enquiry ticket, and it has been clearly demonstrated by the above remarks that indiscriminate almsgiving, either in the streets or otherwise, is a distinct public evil."

11104. Can you suggest any means of checking almsgiving?—The London Mendicity Society for eighty-seven years has endeavoured to educate their subscribers and the public not to give money in the streets until a prompt enquiry has been made by the Mendicity Society, which can generally be done in forty-eight hours. I venture to assert that the Mendicity Society's food and enquiry tickets place at the disposal of the public an absolutely perfect system for ascertaining whether any case of apparent distress met with in the streets is a helpable case and worthy of benevolent assistance. Unfortunately, however, my seventeen years' experience has taught me that only a very small percentage of benevolent persons wish to take the trouble of using an enquiry ticket. They think that if they give the food ticket instead of money they are taking quite trouble enough, whereas I suppose that, as it has been proved that at least £100,000 a year is given away in London to street beggars, it would be no exaggeration to say that probably 90 per cent. of persons who pity the lot of the street beggar simply give him money to relieve their personal feelings, without troubling themselves whether the case is helpable or unhelpable.

11105. What is your opinion as to the effect of free food and free shelters in attracting this class of person?—I think the ordinary street beggar probably frequents the casual ward and the common lodging-house in preference to free shelters. But I may add that my opinion about free shelters with free food is that unless the committee of the shelter make a bona fide effort to find employment for the occupants of the shelter, which is done by the House of Shelter, Baggallay Street, Burdett Road, free shelters for food and lodging do a great deal more harm than good, and are to a great extent responsible for the great influx of unemployed and unhelpable cases from the country districts. There is one exception, however, I should like to mention here to the foregoing remarks, viz., the case of the blind beggar. In my opinion blind beggars should be permitted to beg by the police authorities, for the simple reason that there are not enough blind institutions in the country to provide for destitute blind persons.

11106. Do you consider that short sentences are of any use?—I consider both short and long sentences useless with regard to street beggars after they have been sent to prison three or four times.

11107. You do not think, then, that any sentences are deterrent?—Not the least. It does not matter how often a beggar is sent to prison, he always goes back to begging again, and so back to prison.

11108. Do you think a sentence of twelve months would not deter a man?—Not the least. Just look at the cases in our report; every one of those men will be begging again as soon as his sentence is over.

Sir E. A.
Buchanan,
Bart.

26 Oct. 1905.

11109. You think that a man would prefer to run the risk of a twelve month's sentence rather than give up his begging life?—Yes. Once a man begins to beg he is hopeless. We had one curious instance of a clerk who got out of work through no fault of his own—his employers failed; he came up to London to try to get work, but was unsuccessful; he took to begging and he found it so much better than what he could get as a clerk that he stuck to it. There is not the slightest doubt that £100,000 is given away in London every year; one paper puts it at £300,000.

11110. We have been told by the police authorities and others that the best "happy hunting ground" for beggars is outside the theatre?—You mean what are called cab touts, the people who try to get you a cab; that is illegal, but, of course, they do it.

11111. Has that been held to be illegal?—Yes; the police authorities are constantly having to make a raid on some particular theatre or street to clear off the cab touts, and they are all sent to prison for a short time. These unfortunate people are so dirty, you cannot tell what disease they may have, and they bother ladies who go to the theatre by themselves.

11112. (Captain Eardley-Wilmot.) Is it the same with the cab runners?—That is the same thing. You may please yourself about it, but if you employ them you do so at very great risk. You do not know where they have slept, and if you allow them to come into your house you may get some disease. All these things ought to be put down. I very strongly advocate that. Personally I would eradicate begging. I would give the police such authority that there could not be any begging. That is my own personal view about it, and I have already explained my remedy.

11113. Have you considered the question of giving food to a man when he leaves the casual ward in the morning; if he were given some bread or something of that sort it would deprive him of the excuse for begging?—I should be distinctly in favour of giving him food of some kind, and of making it known everywhere that he had been given food, and that therefore there could be no excuse for his stopping at houses or asking people for money.

11114. Perhaps you are aware that that is the system in Gloucestershire; and notices are issued informing the householders that bread is provided at various places for men leaving casual wards?—I am very much in favour of that.

11115. At any rate, you would be in favour of some provision being made, either for food to be given to him as he leaves the casual ward, or for its being provided for him en route?—Yes.

11116. (Mr. Davy.) The police cannot apprehend a beggar except on the charge of some one?—That is a very difficult point. That is so technically. The whole object of the Mendicity Society is to save people the bother of going down to the police court. For instance, if a beggar begs from you, and you go to a constable and give him in charge, the constable says to you, "You must come down in the morning and appear against him." One object of the Mendicity Society is to save you that trouble. Instead of bothering about the beggars yourself, you say that your street is troubled by beggars, and ask us to send a couple of our men down in plain clothes. If they see a man who is likely to beg they wait until he does so, and then they take him up. They themselves appear against him the next morning, saying they saw him beg. If a complaint is made to Scotland Yard they send down a certain number of plain clothes men, really detectives, and they simply apprehend the beggars, but when they get them to the police court the question is, can you identify them; have they been in that particular police court before. Therefore they have to be remanded for the Mendicity Society officers to see if they can identify them.

11117. Is the evidence of the person who gives the alms necessary?—I do not think it is now; it used to be, but I do not think the police bother about it now; the Mendicity Society scarcely make any apprehensions at all now, we have not the time to do it.

11118. You mean to say that a man could be convicted of begging if one of your officers said he had seen him receiving money?—Yes.

11119. Supposing the man was an habitual receiver of alms?—If one of our officers had seen him receive money he would certainly be dealt with. If one of our officers saw him he would take him to the police court, and the question then is, first of all, that particular charge, and then whether he is an old offender—which has to be found out by the Mendicity Society records.

11120. Suppose, as I go down the street, I see a poor fellow to whom I give sixpence; he may not have asked me for alms?—That is a technical point. But he is standing there to receive alms. I will tell you what the law says.

11121. (Mr. Simpson.) Is not the gist of the offence not the receiving of alms, but the standing in the street for the purpose of receiving alms?—That is exactly it. I will read to you what the law says: "penalties shall be inflicted on every person wandering about or placing himself, or herself, in any public place, street, highway, court, or passage, to beg or gather alms, or procure or encourage any child to do so . . ."; it is not necessary that the person should be seen actually to solicit alms.

11122. (Mr. Davy.) In this case, it is quite clear that the evidence of the giver of the alms is not necessary. Take another case: a man begs from you as you are leaving the theatre and are about to get into your cab, and you charge him; then your evidence is necessary?—Yes, if you charge him.

11123. If you do not charge him, there is apparently no remedy?—No; if you do not charge him he gets off.

11124. Although, in a way, he is a more offensive beggar than the man who merely presents himself in the street?—Yes. But it is quite possible that there may be constables in plain clothes about if there has been a complaint about cab touting in connection with that particular theatre, and without your knowing it the man would be apprehended by one of the constables in plain clothes and locked up, and the next morning the detective would say that he saw him begging of a gentleman who was getting into a cab.

11125. Would he be convicted without the evidence of the donor of the alms?—Yes.

11126. Would it be necessary, to secure a conviction, for your officer to show that he was an habitual vagrant?—He would be convicted in the first instance on what the detective had said, and the magistrate, before passing sentence, would say, "Is the mendicity officer here?" If he was not, the magistrate would remand the case to find out whether he was an old offender.

11127. Then your evidence would be necessary not to secure the conviction but to enable the magistrate to determine the sentence?—That is exactly the point.

11128. Now we come to the main point: you claim that you relieve or assist the police in doing their work?—Yes.

11129. That if your constables did not exist, other means for dealing with beggars would have to be taken by Scotland Yard?—Quite so.

11130. When you appoint a fresh constable have you to submit the name to Scotland Yard?—Yes, to the Chief Commissioner.

11131. And a formal certificate is given?—Yes; and the Chief Commissioner can dismiss our men at his pleasure.

11132. (Mr. Simpson.) The constable is sworn in before a magistrate?—Yes, and they have to report themselves once a year.

11133. (Mr. Davy.) Do you consider that these facts constitute a claim on behalf of your Society for some sort of pecuniary assistance from the police fund?—Yes, for this reason. Here are three men who are experts about begging; it costs us £200 a year to employ them; Mr. Henry admits that it would take the police authorities many years to accumulate these documents and make use of them. I said to him, "For the sake of argument, suppose we give you the documents, will you take over the three men; they have been trained to this work; they are over fifty years of age and we do not like to dismiss them. Would you allow me to make that suggestion to my committee?" He replied, "I could not possibly do it." Then I said, "For the sake of argument"—this is simply an argument to try to prove my own case—"why should a small private society go on paying £200 a year without getting any support for this part of its work? Had we not better cut it off entirely Sir E. A. Buchanan, Bart. from our work? The other part of our work is supported by the public; this part is not. Why should we cripple ourselves by performing—"

Oct. 1905 11134. By performing a public service?—Yes. "We do it because we will not dismiss these men. We shall be quite content if you will take over the whole thing. We have all the documents, and you admit that they are of very great service to you." I have proved that without them 90 per cent. of the cases could not be dealt with.

11135. Now I would ask you, having secured your conviction or having brought the case into court, do you find that there is any uniformity among police magistrates in their way of dealing with such cases?—Yes, there is a certain amount of uniformity, but, of course, some magistrates are more severe than others.

11136. You mean, habitually more severe?—Yes habitually more severe.

11137. Do you think that the beggars who come before you may be said to belong to the criminal class?—No, I do not think they belong to the criminal class.

11138. Do you find some beggars in rather superior positions, living in villas, and so on?—No.

11139. Have you a class of beggars known among their comrades and neighbours as "askers," a euphemism for beggars, I do not mean street beggars?—No, I have never heard the term.

11140. None of the beggars who come before you are men who live in considerable comfort and have a sort of position in life?—Oh, no.

11141. And are known among their friends professionally as "askers"?—No, I never heard that.

11142. (Mr. Simpson.) You spoke of beggars not being members of the criminal class?—Yes. But perhaps I ought to be more accurate and say with rare exceptions. Once or twice Bosley, who was a very well known mendicity officer, was rather severely handled by beggars because he got them convicted so often. They said they would kill him if they could. But they were criminals only in that respect.

11143. There are no burglars or housebreakers, for instance?—No.

11144. And not often pick-pockets?—No.

11145. I believe that a beggar when he asks for alms usually tells some such story as that he has a wife and family dependent upon him. Should you say that in 90 per cent. of the cases that story is false?—Ordinary people who think they know something about philanthropic work, say, "Well, the Mendicity Society is quite right in saying that perhaps 90 or 95 per cent. are unworthy, but there are at least 5 per cent. who are helpable." I regret to say that my reply is that I have been able to find only one case in seventeen years, and that was this last year.

11146. Well, putting it that 95 per cent. tell a false story, if the man is successful he has obtained money by false pretences?—Yes.

11147. That is an offence punishable by five years penal servitude, or seven years on a second conviction?—Yes.

11148. Can you really draw a distinction between the man who gets, say, 5s. a day by false pretences and is called a beggar and is dealt with summarily, and the man who does it by letter, but probably does not make as much, and yet may, and sometimes does, get five years penal servitude?—You mean a begging letter writer.

11149. Or take a bogus registry office. A man obtains money by false pretences and gets five years penal servitude; possibly if he repeats the offence he gets seven years. Can you draw a very clear distinction between that man and the beggar who makes a good living by street begging?—It is a question I was never asked before, but I should be inclined to answer it by saying that technically you cannot draw any distinction at all; one is as much a fraud as the other. The only thing is that there have been beggars from the beginning of time, and begging is only deceiving you up to the point of getting a penny or twopence out of you.

11150. If a man gets £6 a week in that way it is by no means a small offence?—But it is not fair to talk like that. In the whole history of begging in London there has never been another case like that £6 a week case. I should strongly recommend you in talking about beggars never to go beyond the 5s. a day; otherwise you at once begin exaggerating the matter, and you talk of exceptional cases which really do not apply.

11151. Then put it in this way. The man who makes 30s. a week by swindling in the form of begging comes very near to being a criminal, does he not?—We have to remember that at one time begging was a religious profession. Even at the present time in all Roman Catholic countries beggars are permitted, and religious people are rather given to understand that it is a religious duty to give to them. It is a fraud entirely different from any other fraud.

11152. Do you not think that at the present day the professional beggar who really makes money, makes it not so much by appealing to the religious instinct as by actual false pretences?—Oh, yes; I think that.

11153. Therefore it is not unfair to say that the professional beggar, if he is not a member of the criminal class, savours very much of the criminal?—Putting it in the way you have done, I think technically you are quite right. But if in my paper I had called beggars criminals, I should have been hauled over the coals by nearly all the newspapers.

11154. (Mr. Davy.) In countries where almsgiving is more or less a religious duty, there is no Poor Law?—I suppose not.

11155. In this country none need starve?—Quite so.

11156. Whereas in those countries where a man says he is destitute and probably has a licence to say so, that is a substitute for the Poor Law?—That is the case, I suppose.

11157. (Mr. Simpson.) As a matter of fact, if a man takes a book and goes round from house to house, pretending to collect money for a volunteer fire brigade, or something like that, it is a mere chance whether he is run in for begging or for obtaining money by false pretences?—Quite so. There is a good deal of that, until they happen to go begging of some one who knows something about these things, and hands the petition over to the police or the mendicity officer to inquire into.

11158. Can you say from your experience whether a beggar gets more in one part of London than in another, in the west than in the east, in the poorer districts than in the richer?—Oh, yes; I should say that they vary very much. Some parts at certain times of the year would certainly be better than others.

11159. In my experience I cannot think of any of my acquaintances who give indiscriminately to beggars in the street. Do you know many people who do?—Not many; I know a few ladies who do.

11160. Do you suppose that these beggars get most of their money from well-to-do people, or from servants, or from poor people, or from all classes alike?—From all classes alike. It is a question upon which people have such different views, and about which so many people are perfectly ignorant. Before I went to the Mendicity Society I used to give to beggars myself.

11161. The appendix to your eighty-seventh report mentions the vagrants sent to the North London, the South London, and the Middlesex sessions, during 1903, and I notice that, speaking roughly, every one of those vagrants came from the West end or the North; I do not see any East end cases?—No; I should say there are very few East end cases. But the last time I was at Lambeth police court, just after Christmas, I was talking to the chief clerk, and they had just had a bad begging case—a case of a woman and a child who in two or three hours got I do not know how much money. People in the East end or in Lambeth, would give a penny to a woman with a child in her arms, but not to an ordinary beggar. At Lambeth there used to be a great many cases. The reason we have not got them in this report is simply that we have not enough constables to attend at these places; there is a great deal of begging at Lambeth.

11162. Probably your report shows rather the districts in which you have prosecuted than the districts in which begging prevails; it may be equally prevalent in other districts?—Those are all the police courts where we have been; they are the most notorious parts; but I think that if we had another constable we should be able to include the poorer districts as well. There is always a certain amount of begging in the other districts as well, but our constables are so much wanted in the West end police courts, that there is not time to go to the East end police courts, or very much to Lambeth.

11163. Have you heard of many of these beggars living in the Rowton Houses?—We have not heard of any street beggars living in the Rowton Houses, but a great many begging letter writers do. They are capital places for begging letter writers, because you cannot make any inquiries about them; the authorities do not allow you.

11164. You mean that if you suspect a man of being a begging letter writer, and go to a Rowton House, you do not get any assistance in getting at him?—No; you cannot get any evidence at a Rowton House.

11165. Are there many in common lodging-houses?—We have cases of begging letter writers in common lodging-houses; we get assistance in these cases.

11166. From the deputy?—Yes.

11167. He may do something in that way to help you?—Yes. But we have no difficulty in dealing with men in common lodging-houses if we want information. We constantly have begging letter writers in common lodging-houses; that is quite a common thing. We would get the information from the deputy master, or in the neighbourhood.

11168. You do not get the same assistance from Rowton Houses?—That I am certain of; Rowton Houses will give no assistance whatever.

11169. I understood you to claim assistance from the Government in respect of your constables on the ground that you are a private society enforcing a law which otherwise the police ought to enforce?—We began in that way, and then at the time the Metropolitan Police Act was passed, the Home Secretary went into the whole matter and authorised the Chief Commissioner of Police to give us these constables, and these constables report themselves to the Chief Commissioner every year; therefore we are distinctly under the Home Office.

11170. But they are paid by your Society?—From our private funds.

11171. And you claim that some of that cost, at any rate, should be borne by the Home Office?—Yes, now that we cannot do it ourselves. All this time we have done it very well ourselves. The reason we cannot do it for ourselves now is simply that there are so many charities now, and the competition of the Charity Organisation Society is so great; their work is so well known and popular because it is so interesting. Our work is not interesting except to the few who engage in it regularly. We confine ourselves to street begging and begging letters; everybody admits that the work is well done, but it is not work you can get the general public interested in; people like to read about it and to hear about the frauds and so on, but they naturally say that it is police work.

11172. I think there are other societies which are doing somewhat similar work to yours; one is the Vigilance Society which does police work in suppressing disorderly houses. Another is the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; they do police work in the sense that they enforce the law relating to cruelty to animals, and in many parts of the country their officers are sworn in as constables, I think. A third society, I have in mind, is the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Are not some of their officers sworn in?—I do not think they are sworn in. Any society that holds a certificate from the Chief Commissioner would be on the same footing that our Society has always been on; but I did not know there was any other society whose officers absolutely held a certificate from the Chief Commissioner of Police in London.

11173. I do not say in London. But in the first place it is the being sworn in that makes a man a constable, not the holding of a certificate from the Chief Commissioner?—But our men have the Chief Commissioner's certificate.

11174. But that does not make them constables; it is the being sworn in?—Being sworn in and having a certificate.

11175. I suppose it is a certificate of being sworn in. But in other parts of the country the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals get some of their officers sworn in as constables?—That is exactly our point. Our men are sworn in as constables, and the Chief Commissioner could deprive them of their licence to-morrow, but as long as they have a certificate they can use it.

11176. (Captain Showers.) It is a warrant card, is it not?—Yes; but my point is that this warrant card can be taken away at a day's notice. It is really a certificate that they are certified to do a certain public work which the Chief Commissioner can stop at any moment. If the officers of other societies are in the same position they are absolutely identical; but I have not heard of any other society having that privilege.

11177. I think some have in the provinces; if so, they would have to be sworn in before a magistrate, and would have a warrant card issued to them, signed by the chief constable of the county or borough, as the case might be?—In that case they are in identically the same position. But it would be very much to the detriment of the public and of the Chief Commissioner if we said we must give up this branch of our work because nobody supports it. We are paying for this public service out of the other department of our work, and why should we go on doing it.

11178. (Mr. Simpson.) I should like to know what is the exact ground on which you claim a contribution?—We claim it on this ground. We have done the work for eighty-seven years, and the Chief Commissioner admits that our three constables know more about beggars than anybody in the police, and that it would take him a considerable time to get any three men in the force with the same information and the same personal knowledge; that is altogether apart from the documents.

11179. In what way would you distinguish your Society from the other societies I have mentioned?—I think the most logical way would be to say that the £200 for these constables has to be paid by the other department of our work, the begging letter department, which people do take an interest in. As there is a deficit on that branch of the work we have put the whole matter before the Home Office and the police authorities, and if they cannot help us our best plan will be to try to find some occupation for the three officers in our employ, and then cease to do the work. When we started the work there were no police, and we started it for the defence of our subscribers. But all that has gone by now, and our best plan will be to find other employment for our officers and then cease to do the work.

11180. Your point is that if the police have to do the work they will not do it so well, and it will cost more?—It will cost more, and I want to make a very strong point of this—that the police could not do it so well because here you have three men educated to the work, with technical knowledge of the beggars, having been on the work day after day for all these years. It would take any other men at least five or ten years to get the knowledge. I do not say that the other societies have not equal claims, it would be rather difficult for me to give an opinion on the point; but I say distinctly that if a small annual grant is given us I hope it will enable us to obtain donations from the city companies with which to continue this useful branch of our work.

11181. (Dr. Downes.) What proportion of these food tickets are redeemed by presentation at the various places named on them?—I can tell you the number issued.

11182. You say that 3,676 food tickets were presented during the year 1904; but how many were issued?—We do not issue them. Any subscriber may write for them on the terms stated.

11183. Supposing 100 tickets were given away to street beggars, how many of them would be presented for food?—They would all be presented. The beggars would be glad to have the food.

11184. Does it take long to identify your record of a man?—No. The records come before the committee

Sir E. A. Buchanan, Bart.

26 Oct. 1905.

Sir E. A. Buchanan, Bart. and as soon as there are a sufficient number they are bound into a volume.

26 Oct. 1905. 11185. You say you have 76,000 records. If a request is made to you as to whether you know anything about, say, John Smith, how would you hunt up in your records John Smith, or the so-called John Smith, because that may not be his real name?—We have an index to the whole of the records.

11186. But that index would be under names, would it not?—Both under names and under numbers. There are full particulars in the register. We should look under the names in the first instance; he might be alias something else; a beggar is very often known under several names.

11187. Before turning to his record would it not be necessary for somebody to identify him personally, by sight?—What happens is this. We have sent to us from the police court a document giving us some particulars of John Smith or John Brown, or whatever it is, and asking whether we know the case.

11188. Particulars of his appearance?—The ordinary police court particulars. They send us the description, and the constable asks whether we know anything about him, and we refer to the records.

11189. Do you find the police court descriptions sufficient to enable you to hunt up a man in the records?—Yes.

11190. How long, on the average, would it take to trace a man's record?—In the ordinary way it would not take more than ten minutes or a quarter of an hour.

11191. And who does that?—The chief constable as a rule, but the clerk in the office can always do it. Our rule is this. When a police constable comes with the particulars and says the man is remanded until to-morrow, all that is necessary is for the clerk to ask him to leave the particulars and to say that our man will be down the next day if possible. The clerk is not obliged to spend his time in looking up the particulars, but if the constable is very anxious to know at once he could do so. But our constables are at the office at nine o'clock in the morning for that special work, and in nine cases out of ten the thing would be done in ten minutes.

11192. How many years would he have to go back; occasionally he would have to go back a considerable period, would he not?—That, of course, takes some little time. Here are particulars of some cases (document produced.)

11193. Here is a case going back to 1883, but there is a gap in the record between 1894 and 1899; now how long would it have taken your people to identify this man with a gap of five years in the record?—It is just possible that they might recognise him directly they saw the particulars.

11194. Personal identification would come in then?—Yes; that personal identification the police have not got. You might get it perhaps after ten years if you had three men engaged only on this work.

11195. Have you considered the question of adopting the finger-print system?—No, we have not had occasion to do that. I have never heard of anybody being apprehended for begging and sent to prison on a wrong identification.

11196. Under your system you have not had any instance of mistaken identity?—No. To guard the public against that we have a written resolution put up in the board room, and every constable has a copy of it—that if any constable gives evidence against a man that he is not personally acquainted with he is subject to instant dismissal.

11197. (Mr. Davy.) It must be absolutely personal recognition?—Those are our orders. After that great mistaken identity case, which you will remember, it was necessary to pass the resolution to guard against any possible mistake, and the resolution would certainly be enforced.

11198. (Dr. Downes.) Do the magistrates as a rule require corroborative evidence in cases of begging?—Yes. Before passing sentence they want to know whether the man is an old offender or whether it is his first offence. The police authorities only know about the one particular district, and though there may not be any previous convictions of a man at that particular court, there may be ten or fifteen elsewhere.

11199. You have told us that you think twelve months' imprisonment is no deterrent to these habitual mendicants; how long would you keep a man of this class in an industrial colony?—I would keep him until he had proved himself capable of earning his own living.

11200. An indeterminate period?—Yes. I thoroughly agree with what Sir Robert Anderson says about criminals—that it is no use sending them to prison after two or three sentences. I would lock them up in some institution and keep them there until they had learnt habits of industry.

11201. (Mr. Simpson.) Detention for life unless they reformed?—Yes. If that is interfering with the liberty of the subject, I say that instead of being a blessing liberty is a curse.

11202. (Captain Showers.) Your great point is that your three constables from their experience are able to identify the beggars in the different courts?—They are.

11203. Supposing that through misconduct or ill health you had to get rid of one of these men, it would take you some years before a new man could get into proper working order?—We have one ex-constable who was in the police twenty-one years; that is the nearest we can get. Some of the police have been working at beggars for many years, and we naturally try to get an ex-constable who has had something to do with them.

11204. (Dr. Downes.) What food do men get for one of these twopenny food tickets?—Cocoa or tea, and a scone or bread and butter. But for three tickets a man would get a good meal.

DIGEST OF EVIDENCE.

DIGEST OF EVIDENCE.

DR. HENRY E. ARMSTRONG (3043-3234).

Has been Medical Officer of Health of Newcastle-on-Tyne for 32 years, and has made a close study of the question of infectious disease (particularly of smallpox) in relation to vagrancy in England and Wales; made reports on the subject in 1893 and 1904, 3043-7.

BATHING.

Aids detection of disease, 3075-8, 3081.
Two casuals should not be bathed in same water, 3084-5.
Examination in the bath not a sufficient protection, 3130.

CASUAL WARDS.

No isolation accommodation at, 3058-62; smallpox cases should be removed to hospital, 3187-9.
Every casual should be medically examined on entering, 3126-9.
More effective than common lodging-houses in preventing spread of disease, 3200-3.
Measures to be taken in, against disease, 3163-8, 3173-4; difficulties of country unions, 3169-72.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Preferred by vagrants to casual wards because of absence of bath, 3078.
Baths should be required in, 3150.
Beds in, not looked after so carefully as in casual wards, 3079.
Should be divided into two classes, one for vagrants only, 3086; which should be under sanitary authority, 3157.
In Newcastle, popular and in fair condition, 3086, 3140, 3224; inspection of, 3205-7, 3228-31.
Difficulty of inspection of, in small towns, 3232-4.
Proceedings against keepers of, rare, 3221-5.
Adoption of bye-laws should be made compulsory, 3139-57, 3205.
No provision for medical inspection, bathing, or for keeping of register of inmates, 3158, 3161-2; register of inmates should be kept, 3159-60.
Local authority may require keeper of, to report every lodger, 3213-6.
Whether casual ward regulations should be applied to, 3174-7.
As sources of infection, 3204, 3221-2, 3226-7.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE

Typhus, formerly prevalent, abolished owing to provision of isolation accommodation and improved sanitary arrangements at casual wards, etc., 3047-51, 3194-8.
Smallpox largely spread by vagrants, 3052-5, 3066; summary of information obtained from certain towns, 3067-71.
Conference of sanitary authorities called by London county council in 1894, 3056-61; resolutions passed suggesting bathing and medical examination of persons entering casual wards and common lodging-houses, 3124-5.
Further conference of sanitary authorities held in 1904, 3063-5.
Vagrants not sufficiently examined at casual wards, 3072-3; whether they can refuse examination, 3074.
Cases of smallpox traced to casual wards and common lodging-houses, 3113-6, 3137-8.
Smallpox not always easy to detect, 3080-2; a "dirt" disease, 3083.

DR. HENRY E. ARMSTRONG—cont.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE—cont.

Diseases other than smallpox spread by vagrants, 3117-21.
Bona fide working men also spread disease, 3182-6.
Vaccination, if systematically carried out, would cause smallpox to disappear, 3190-9; compulsory vaccination of all tramps in casual wards and common lodging-houses advocated, 3208-12.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Vagrants should be detained in, 3066, 3090-3, 3111, 3122, 3217.
Should be under inspection and control of Home Office, 3094-3102.
Might be both voluntary and compulsory, 3218-9.
Sexes should be kept separate, 3220.

SENTENCES.

Short sentences harmful, 3096, 3103-12.

VAGRANTS.

Should be taken off road, 3086.
How dealt with in Tudor times, 3133-4.
Castration as a remedy, 3134.
Only small proportion use casual wards, 3135-6.
Bona fide wayfarers should be helped on their way, 3178-82.

WAY-TICKETS.

Favoured, but less important than means for sending vagrants to labour colonies, 3087-9, 3131-2.

MR. R. B. BARCLAY (6399-6446).

General Superintendent of Poor, and Inspector of Poorhouses in Scotland, 6399-6401.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Advocated for vagrants, 6419.

POORHOUSES IN SCOTLAND.

No person admitted without an order from inspector, and a medical certificate that he is not able-bodied, 6402-3; certificate given by parish doctor, but in his absence certificate of any medical man received, 6430.
Able-bodied men not entitled to relief, 6404.
Sixty-eight poorhouses in Scotland: house sometimes twenty or thirty miles from the parish, 6408-9.
Few offences committed by inmates, and no prosecutions for refusing to work; governor can himself order punishment, 6420-1.
Inmates punished by deprivation of food or shutting up in cells, but cells seldom used, and police rarely called upon, 6423-5.
Dietary in, 6426-8; not uniform over country; tramps know the houses giving better diet, 6442-3.
Many inmates physically able-bodied but not mentally fit, 6429.
Parishes sometimes combined for poorhouse, but not for out-relief, purposes, 6437-40.
Several towns have their own poorhouses, 6440-1.
Labour in, principally stick breaking, but sometimes stone breaking, 6444-6.

MR. R. B. BARCLAY—cont.

SHELTERS (CASUAL SICK-HOUSES) IN SCOTLAND.

Provided in the majority of parishes for persons footsore, etc., who are admitted for a night, after examination by medical officer, 6404-7, 6410.

Provided near inspector's house, 6410.

Difficulty caused by absence of shelter at Mearns on moorland road between Kilmarnock and Glasgow; applicants for relief principally women; men sleep in farmers' lofts, 6417-8.

System bad, especially for women with children, 6419.

Often one room in a cottage, kept clean by occupant of cottage, 6431-2.

Inmates seldom stay more than one night, and after second night are removed to poorhouse, 6433.

Female tramps taken in labour difficult to deal with, but cases rare, 6434-5.

VAGRANTS IN SCOTLAND.

If footsore, etc., sent to casual sick-house or to common lodging-house for a night, 6404.

Not many in the North, but class found all over the country; they sleep out in warm weather and never work, 6411.

Large number found in Glasgow, 6416.

Half-yearly census taken by police, 6436.

WOMEN IN SCOTLAND.

Many wander from parish to parish and have done so for years, 6413.

MR. W. H. BARNEBY (4162-4274).

County Alderman of Herefordshire. Has been a guardian since 1867; was chairman of Hereford guardians from 1890 to 1894, and of Bromyard guardians from 1895 to 1900, and chairman of Hereford rural district council from 1894 to 1903. Is now guardian for both Hereford and Bromyard, 4162-8.

CASUAL WARDS IN HEREFORDSHIRE.

Lenient treatment in, cause of large increase in number of admissions, 4177-8, 4195-6.

Regulations as to detention not carried out, 4236-8.

Advantages of separate cell system, 4241-2.

Difficulties of enforcing regulations, 4244-50.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

As to treatment of: they might be dealt with under Education Acts; difficulties of question, 4205-18.

DETENTION IN CASUAL WARDS.

Hop-picking vagrants not detained in Herefordshire, 4232-5.

System in Herefordshire compared with that in Kent, 4234-5.

DIETARY IN CASUAL WARDS.

Sufficient for ordinary vagrants, but bona fide travellers should have more liberal diet, 4190-4222.

ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS.

Regulations cannot be enforced, owing to lack of accommodation and staff, 4170-5, 4243-4; ratepayers object to providing accommodation for people not belonging to union, 4176.

Regulations not now enforced anywhere, 4250.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES AND TRADES UNIONS.

Members of, do not enter casual wards, 4196.

Provide travelling members with tickets, 4229-30.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

Objections to: cost should not be put on rates, 4226-8.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Not favoured, they would be expensive and would not reduce vagrancy; existing workhouses should be sufficient, 4224-5.

If established, should be under police, and should not be a local charge, 4266-9.

MR. W. H. BARNEBY—cont.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Tickets for, given by Mendicity Society in Herefordshire; objections to system, 4190-2, 4258-61.

Bona fide traveller should be provided with ticket for, 4222.

POLICE.

Should have entire supervision of vagrants; suggested duties, 4170, 4182-4, 4190, 4222-3, 4230-1, 4270.

PRISON.

Preference for, sometimes shown by vagrants, 4199-4201.

SEARCHING OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Not thoroughly carried out in Herefordshire, 4239-40.

SENTENCES.

Cannot be uniform, but no vagrant should be let off; eight days suggested as a minimum, 4219-21.

TASKS OF WORK IN CASUAL WARDS.

Stone breaking and digging the only available tasks in country districts for men, 4185-8.

Practically none for women, except washing and cleaning, 4185, 4188-9.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT.

Cannot be secured at present time owing to large increase in vagrancy, 4177, 4255-6.

VAGRANCY.

Difficulty of dealing with, in hop-picking season, 4179-84.

Recent large increase of, in Herefordshire, 4192-4.

Inquiry refused by Mr. Shaw-Lefevre in 1894 on the ground that regulations had not been carried out by guardians, 4251-7.

VAGRANTS.

Should be lodged in separate buildings from the bona fide traveller, under supervision of police, 4190, 4223, 4231, 4270.

Work refused by, 4227-8.

Percentage of idle men among, 4229.

WAY-TICKETS.

Bona fide traveller should possess way-ticket or pass issued by local authority, and should be lodged in casual ward or lodging-house; the cost to be charged to union from which he starts; man without pass should be treated as a vagrant and relieved by police, 4190, 4197-8, 4222, 4264-5, 4271-3.

Gloucester system not favoured, 4203-4, 4262-3.

Suggested system described, 4222.

Not cheaper to send traveller by train, 4274.

REV. CANON BARNETT (5911-6100).

Has been a guardian for thirty years in Whitechapel, 5912-3. Gives evidence on behalf of State Children's Association.

ALMSGIVING.

Indiscriminate charity might be checked if proper provision were made for vagrants, 6036-40.

CASUAL WARDS.

Should be turned into receiving wards, where discrimination should be exercised, and certain of the inmates sent to training homes, labour colony or infirmary, etc. State could exercise controlling influence and pay a capitation grant, 5936, 5938-9, 6035-40, 6069-71, 6075-8, 6082-4.

Bad effect on inmates of treatment in existing wards, 5939-42.

Whitechapel and St. George's (East) wards compared; as to locking cells, 6019-24.

REV. CANON BARNETT—cont.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

Sir John Gorst's Bill approved; provisions of Bill; children of vagrant parents to be detained by magisterial order, adopted by guardians, and then boarded out or emigrated, the cost being made a county charge, 5916-21, 5926-8, 5968-82, 6066-8; Bill would create a new offence, 6090-2; number of children subject to provisions of Bill, 5956-66; comparison with Bill of 1900, 5983-6.

Many children pass through country workhouses, but in towns they go to shelters, 5922-3.

Not many found in London casual wards, but a large number in streets, shelters and common lodging-houses, 5923-5.

Women mostly assert unwillingness to give up children, 5987-92.

Children do not want industrial training, but "home" training; boarding out preferred, 6070-4, 6097-6100.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES IN LONDON.

Have been improved, and fulfil a useful function, 6025-8.

More popular than shelters, owing to greater freedom; numbers using, not diminished by competition of shelters, 6029-34.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

Not suitable for younger children; training in, expensive and often unsuccessful; former inmates of, often found in common lodging-houses, 5928-34, 5993-6018, 6062-6, 6095-6.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Habitual vagrants should be committed to, for three or four years; system of identification would be necessary, 5942-50, 6041-57.

Labour colonies and prisons; distinction between, 5951-3.

Inmate refusing to work should be sent to prison, 5955.

SENTENCES.

In London, not at all uniform, 6058-9.

On habitual vagrants might be automatic, according to number of admissions to casual wards, 6061.

SHELTERS.

Encourage vagrants, but they must be continued until something better is provided, 5914, 5935-9.

Institutions admitting children, 5961-2.

VAGRANTS.

Attracted to Whitechapel by shelters and common lodging-houses, causing difficulty in poor law work, 5914.

Prevent "unemployed" problem being dealt with, 5936.

London vagrant frequenting casual wards a separate and clean class, 6085-7.

REV. J. L. BROOKS (5032-5283).

Director of Lingfield and Starnthwaite Training Colonies, 5032.

CASUAL WARDS.

Should be abolished, and be replaced by compulsory colonies, 5248-51.

Might be utilised as relief stations in connexion with colonies, 5257-8.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

Should be established in connexion with labour colonies for the bona fide workman in search of work, 5252.

LABOUR COLONIES AT LINGFIELD AND STARNTHWAITE.

Description of colonies and of life therein; training chiefly farming, 5032-57, 5065-8, 5076-82, 5117-9.

Colonies were established by Christian Social Service Union, 5039.

REV. J. L. BROOKS—cont.

LABOUR COLONIES AT LINGFIELD AND STARNTHWAITE—cont.

Limits of age for colonists: many from workhouses between sixteen and twenty-five years of age, 5042, 5045.

Inebriates also admitted; difficulties experienced with this class, owing to absence of classification, etc., 5057-64, 5219.

Type of men received dull, feeble, and debilitated, and often mischievous and difficult to teach farming, 5065-6, 5052, 5073-4, 5078-81, 5109.

Cost at Lingfield for land, buildings, repairs, maintenance, etc.; average loss per man, 5068, 5122, 5130-44, 5153-65.

Distance from London and from railway station, 5120-1.

Percentage of inmates obtaining independent positions after fifteen to eighteen months' training; men difficult to keep in touch with, 5069-71, 5237-42.

Many colonists go to Canada; none have ever been brought back, 5072, 5096, 5240-4.

Results of training good, so far as men can be traced, 5072-3.

Earnings of men in colony practically nil, 5075-80.

Vagrants not admitted; inmates are either sent by guardians or by their family, and are paid for, 5083-4.

Dietary cut down for breaches of discipline, 5085, 5269-73.

Men encouraged to work by grants of money, which are given them to buy tobacco, extra food, etc., or retained till their discharge, 5085-9.

No power of detention in colonies, 5090.

Duration of stay in colonies: men going to Canada stay more than a year, 5091-3.

Men much improve in physique while at colony, with consequent gain to State; examples showing this, 5094-7.

Staff all paid, but some partly by training, 5147-52.

Payments made by guardians for men sent to colonies, 5162-4.

Colonists not skilled, and farm therefore not economically worked, 5175-85, 5282-3.

Produce sent to local market and to London, but a large quantity used in colony, 5194-6.

No local objection to competition of colony; shops never undersold, 5197.

No serious difficulty as regards discipline, 5198-5201.

Moral offences not frequent, but a danger to be watched, 5202-3.

Inmates mainly come from workhouses: some by friendly arrangement with magistrates, 5219-21.

Disadvantage that colonists should come from institutions (e.g., workhouses), 5222.

Arrangements for medical attendance at Lingfield, 5224-5.

Inmates resent association with ex-criminals, and would therefore object to promising men from compulsory colonies being admitted, 5226.

Colonies founded and conducted on German system, 5228-31.

Women and children cause little difficulty, 5267-8.

Number of inmates dismissed in 1903 and 1904 for misbehaviour and incapacity, 5277-81.

LABOUR COLONIES FOR VAGRANTS.

Advocated, but with compulsory detention and classification; they should be quite distinct from voluntary colonies, 5099-5103, 5204-12, 5227.

Sentence of detention should be at most three years, but director and visiting justices should have discretion to liberate inmate after one year, and to re-grade at any time, 5205-9.

Food the best incentive to work; men refusing to work should be cut down to minimum diet, 5104-6, 5269-76.

Work should be simple: in lowest grade chiefly with fork and spade, but should include industrial work, and should not compete with outside labour, 5107-12, 5186-92.

Foreign colonies (except in Germany) not satisfactory; dull routine, with no humanising influence; Merxplas practically a prison, 5113-6, 5119, 5245-7.

Farm training colonies cannot be financially profitable, 5166-74.

REV. J. L. BROOKS—*cont.*LABOUR COLONIES FOR VAGRANTS—cont.

Means of enforcing detention: walls not necessary, 5213-8.

Distinctive dress not desirable, 5215.

Staff would require special training, 5230-6.

Relief stations might be established in connexion with; existing casual wards might be used for the purpose, 5254-7.

If free colonies are to be established for the ordinary unemployed there should be a distinction drawn between them and compulsory colonies for vagrants, 5258-60.

Should be directly managed by State, but experiment might also be tried by charitable people assisted by local authorities, 5261-4.

Several colonies would probably be necessary, 5266.

Women and children, how to deal with, 5267-8.

VAGRANTS.

Work-seekers should be offered work in labour colony and treated as vagrants if they refuse it, 5253-4.

WAY-TICKETS.

System favoured, 5319.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Should perhaps be sent to workhouse when men go to labour colony, 5267-8.

WORKHOUSES.

Demoralising effects of training in, 5222-3.

MR. JOSEPH BROWN (850-981).

President of the Association of Poor Law Unions of England and Wales, 850.

ARMY.

Old soldiers are found on tramp, but not in large numbers, 927-8.

CASUAL WARDS.

Association wards attract casuals, 868; honest working man prefers separate cell, 869.

Cannot be dispensed with, even if labour colonies established, 878-81, 976-8.

DEWSBURY CASUAL WARDS.

Treatment of inmates of, 853-4.

Diet in, costs under 4d. a day, 853, 864-5.

Numbers admitted to, 854; recent increase, owing perhaps to return of men from war, 907-9.

Tasks of work in, 854, 898-906, 910-2; no complaint from outside public as to interference with local trade, 898-900.

DIET.

For vagrants should be improved, 853.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Should be established, 853, 894.

Treatment in, should be not entirely penal, but also reclamatory, 853.

Period of committal should be three years, with power of discharge at end of one or two years, 853, 946-7.

Recommendations of Poor Law Unions Association as to, 854, 913, 932.

Management of, should not be in hands of popularly elected bodies, but of Government through Home Office, guardians having power of inspection, 855-7, 886-91, 931, 939-43.

Cost of, should be borne by local rates, 858-60, 929-30.

Confirmed vagrants should be sent to, on order of magistrates in petty sessions, 883-5, 933-8, 946-7; some would never be reclaimed, but would cost less in colony than in prison and casual ward, 895-7.

Settlement of vagrant sent to, might be considered to be in district where he was convicted, 944-5; guardians would be more disinclined to pay for vagrant than for settled pauper, 971-2.

Dormitories should be within a wall, but work could be carried on outside if there was supervision, 948-9.

MR. JOSEPH BROWN—*cont.*LABOUR COLONIES—cont.

Colonists could be graded, 951.

Trades should be carried on, 950.

Uniform for inmates would be indispensable, 953-4. Escaped colonist need not be apprehended if he was earning his living outside, 955.

Colonists should be paid wages, 957-9.

Should be supplementary to present system of casual wards, 976-8.

SENTENCES.

Seven day sentences worse than useless, 973-4; a month much more effectual, 975.

VAGRANCY.

A subject of continual discussion at Poor Law Conferences, 852.

History of three men who drifted into vagrancy, 852. Only 3 per cent. of vagrants honest working men, 876-7.

VAGRANTS.

"Confirmed vagrant" defined, 914-6; difficulty of identifying vagrant as having been previously convicted, 917-23.

WAY-TICKETS.

Objected to, as interfering with the liberty of the subject, 872-5.

SIR ERIC BUCHANAN, BART. (11059-11204).

Has been Secretary of the London Mendicity Society for seventeen years, 11059-60.

ALMSGIVING.

Demoralising, both to giver and to recipient, 11103-4.

A religious duty in some countries, and a substitute for the Poor Law, 11151, 11154-6.

BEGGARS IN LONDON.

Constables of Mendicity Society authorised to apprehend, 11062; procedure of constables in dealing with, 11074-8.

Number of records of, possessed by London Mendicity Society, 11073; procedure adopted in identifying beggars, 11184-97.

Magistrates adjourn cases for attendance of mendicity officer to identify offender, 11079, 11126-7.

London beggar quite unhelpable; only one genuine case in seventeen years, 11081-5, 11145; "helpable" defined, 11081, 11084, 11086-7.

Frequent casual wards and common lodging-houses in preference to free shelters, 11088, 11105.

Average earnings of, 11089-91, 11103.

"Begging" defined, 11091-3.

Farm colonies the only remedy for, 11094.

"Incapables" should be detained in workhouses, 11094.

Many cases of repeated convictions of, often for drunkenness also, 11098-11102; few convictions from East End, 11161; magistrates require corroborative evidence in begging cases, 11198.

Blind beggars should be permitted to beg owing to dearth of blind institutions, 11105.

Cab touts and cab runners should be suppressed, 11110-2.

Police should be given sufficient authority to stop begging, 11112.

Apprehension of; evidence of donor of alms not necessary, if offender is seen by police or mendicity officer to receive money, 11116-27.

Not, as a rule, members of criminal classes, 11137, 11142-4, 11153.

Stories told by, generally untrue; distinction between begging and other methods of obtaining money by false pretences, 11145-53, 11157.

Get more in some districts and at certain times than others, but from all classes alike, 11158-62.

Many begging letter writers live in Rowton Houses and common lodging-houses; information always refused at Rowton Houses, but easily obtained at common lodging-houses, 11163-8.

SIR ERIC BUCHANAN, BART.—cont.

FREE SHELTERS FOR FOOD AND LODGING.

Do more harm than good unless efforts are made to find employment for occupants; cause influx of unemployed and unhelpable cases from country districts, 11105.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Advocated for street beggars, who should be detained until they have acquired habits of industry and recouped State for their maintenance, 11094, 11097, 11199-11201.

Trades should be taught at, or as an adjunct to farm colonies, 11095-7.

LONDON MENDICITY SOCIETY.

Founded in 1818, before London had a police force, to deal with street begging, but now deals also with begging letter writers, 11062.

Recognised by Home Secretary, who authorises Chief Commissioner of Metropolitan Police to give certificates to mendicity constables to apprehend beggars, and to give evidence in Metropolitan police courts, 11062, 11130-2, 11169, 11172-6.

Number of begging letters investigated by, 11063-4.

Relations with Charity Organisation Society harmonious, 11065-7.

Comparison with work of Charity Organisation Society as to begging letters, 11067.

Annual income of, 11068.

Cost of constables employed by, 11069-70; number not sufficient to attend all police courts, 11077-8, 11161-2.

Assistance rendered to police constitutes claim to grant from Home Office; another mendicity constable could then be appointed, 11071, 11077, 11128-9, 11133-4, 11169-80, 11202-3.

Deals with street beggars in London only, 11072.

Mode of action of Society in identification of beggars, etc., 11073-8.

System of food and inquiry tickets introduced by, 11081; system described, 11103-4, 11181-3, 11204.

No experience of beggars in superior social position who are known as "askers," 11138-41.

Other societies also do police work under authority of Home Office, 11172-9.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Should be given to man leaving casual ward in morning, or provided for him en route, 11113-5.

PRISON.

No deterrent to street beggars, 11094.

SENTENCES FOR BEGGING.

Sentences given in London, 11080.

Uselessness of both short and long sentences in case of street beggars, 11106-9.

Magistrates fairly uniform in dealing with beggars, but some habitually more severe than others, 11135-6.

UNEMPLOYED WORKMEN.

Might be sent to industrial schools, or to workshops attached to workhouses, 11094.

MR. E. BURGESS (2376-2580).

Has been master of Sheffield workhouse for last 4 years, and before that was 6 years at Fulham, nearly 2 years at Leeds, and nearly 2 years at Skipton, 2376-9.

ARMY.

Number of ex-soldiers and pensioners admitted to Sheffield casual wards in 1902, 2516-20.

BATHING.

Strictly enforced at Sheffield, 2411.

An aid to detection of disease, 2412-3.

MR. E. BURGESS—cont.

CASUAL WARDS AT SHEFFIELD.

Accommodation at, 2380; on cellular system, 2390.

Average number of admissions per week, 2381; increase in 1904, 2382; only 10 per cent. over 60 years of age, 2507.

Honest tramp allowed to leave earlier than loafer, and without performing task, 2390-1, 2416; how distinguished, 2392-4.

Procedure on admission of vagrant, 2411-5.

Women received by female officer, 2578-80.

CHILDREN.

Decrease of late years in number of children admitted to Sheffield casual wards, 2508; attributed to action of School Board officers and National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 2509-11; but numbers have recently increased, 2515, 2533.

Adoption of, by guardians, not advocated, 2534-5.

DETENTION OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

One-night detention more objectionable to vagrant than two nights, 2450.

Regulations not always observed at Sheffield, 2469-70, 2541-4, 2573-7; casuals not detained on Sundays, 2556-7; discharged on completion of task, 2558-63.

Families not often detained, 2540.

DIETARY OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

In accordance with regulations at Sheffield, 2450, 2471-4, 2536-9.

Not sufficient; mid-day meal should be given to casual on discharge, 2561-7.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

Vagrants suspected of, admitted to workhouse, 2407; instances of cases of eczema and smallpox discovered, 2408-10.

Vagrants nightly examined by medical officer when smallpox is prevalent, 2410.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Experiment suggested, with compulsory powers of detention, 2395-6, 2423-4, 2495-7, 2500-1.

Habitual tramp should be compelled to enter, and made to work or be punished, 2395-8, 2427-8, 2503.

How farm colony should be conducted, 2425-8.

Difference between suggested farm colony and rural workhouse, 2498-2500.

Cost of, how to be borne, 2504-5.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Should be given to casuals on discharge, 2564-5; food might be thrown away, but it would remove excuse for begging, 2566-7.

PAUPERISM.

Increase of, in Sheffield in late years, 2512.

POLICE.

Visitation, or control, of casual wards by: whether deterrent, 2527-32, 2552-5.

PRISON.

Casuals damage property in order to be sent to, 2463-7.

SEARCHING.

Enforced at Sheffield, 2414.

SENTENCES.

Local magistrates give longer sentences to casuals than stipendiary, 2455-7.

SHEFFIELD WORKHOUSE.

Arrangements for employment of able-bodied men, 2399-2400, 2402-6, 2513; employment on farm two miles distant a deterrent, 2404-6.

Number of inmates, 2401; classification of inmates, 2479-89; proportion of men willing to work, 2432-5; number suitable for outdoor labour, 2487-9.

Amount of land under cultivation at farm and at workhouse, 2475-8, 2490; farm unprofitable, 2491-4.

Vagrants admitted to, in case of sickness or suspected infectious disease, 2407.

How loafers are dealt with at, 2431.

MR. E. BURGESS—cont.

TASKS OF WORK.

- Stone pounding and stone breaking; difficulty of selling produce, 2439-41.
- Corn grinding and wood sawing unskilled tasks, 2442-3; firewood unprofitable owing to competition of local labour, 2444-7.
- Prosecutions for refusing, 2451-62, 2468; examination by medical officer made if casual pleads inability, 2458-62, 2545-51; men sometimes desire prosecution, 2463-7.

VAGRANCY.

- Recent increase in, 2386-7, 2514; attributed to depression of trade, 2386-7.

VAGRANTS.

- Percentage of bona fide working men in 1904, and in previous years, 2383, 2388-9, 2437-8, 2502; percentage of those fit for labour colony, 2503.
- Former employments of working men on tramp, 2384-5.
- Large works cause influx of tramps who prey on the navvies, 2448-9.
- Information as to previous occupations obtained from, 2521-2.
- Habitual tramps admitted to workhouse and returned to place of settlement, if known, 2523-6.
- Do not keep to one district, 2568-72.

WAY-TICKETS.

- Would be useful, and a check on loafers, but system should be universal, 2417-22.

WOMEN.

- Decrease in recent years, in numbers admitted to casual wards, 2508.

REV. W. CARLILE (8008-8275).

- Founder and Honorary Chief Secretary of Church Army, 8008. Has been practically the head of Church Army from the first (1881), 8009-10. Has visited German colonies, 8106.

ALMSGIVING.

- Persons giving alms should be fined; indiscriminate charity manufactures vagrants, 8087, 8268-9.

CASUAL WARDS.

- Present system should be abolished, but buildings might still be utilised in connection with way-ticket system, 8080-6, 8251-65.
- Frequenters of, in London, a distinct class, the élite, 8148-50.
- In London, have improved in recent years, 8244.
- Difference of treatment in, and in Church Army homes, 8245-50.

CHILDREN.

- Not dealt with by Church Army, 8114.

CHURCH ARMY LABOUR HOMES.

- Co-operate with police, Charity Organisation Society, and Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, 8032, 8070-1.
- Arrangements for obtaining men from casual wards willing to work in, 8020-3, 8027.
- Employment found outside homes for inmates; arrangements described, 8024-6, 8031, 8038-41, 8071-5.
- Percentage obtaining permanent employment outside; destiny of the rest, 8028, 8141-7.
- Labour homes and receiving homes, difference between; Banner Street Home, 8029-31, 8200-7.
- Majority of cases come from police and casual wards; prisoners received but sent to separate homes; prison and poor law cases compared, 8033-7, 8068-75, 8236-41.
- Diet in labour homes; four meals a day, 8058-60.
- "Shirkers" have to leave, 8061-2.
- Work of inmates mostly "jobbing," 8063, 8210; few complaints of robberies or laziness as regards inmates, 8064-5.

REV. W. CARLILE—cont.

CHURCH ARMY LABOUR HOMES—cont.

- Men not received a second time under twelve months, 8066.
- Ages of men received; generally from seventeen to forty-five, 8067.
- Iron buildings objected to by county council, 8118-9, 8125-6.
- Inspection of homes by county council; not objected to, 8127.
- Standard of living in, good, 8164.
- Cost of lodgings in; lodging homes pay their way, 8166-70.
- Number of homes in London, 8171, 8199.
- Farm home—at Newdigate, Surrey—used as a test for emigration, 8208-9.
- Largely supported by philanthropic people as customers for products of industry, 8211-5.
- Men often sent by police "with judgment deferred"; generally the best of the cases, 8216-8.

CHURCH ARMY RECEIVING HOMES.

- None free; all inmates must work for food and lodging; arrangements described; work does not compensate for cost of food and lodging, 8042-55, 8128-32.
- No distribution of free food in, 8056.
- Free shelters and free meals a mistake; free shelters should be compulsorily closed unless work is insisted upon, 8056-7, 8154-62, 8206.
- Do not relieve casual wards, as shelters are closed early, 8131-2.
- A certain standard of comfort should be maintained; sheets should be provided for all beds; low standard of lodging not helpful to a man, 8163-5.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

- Strongly favoured; information should be given at police stations or casual wards, 8076-9.
- Should be run both by State and local authority, 8173-8.

LABOUR COLONIES.

- Should be of three classes; penal, compulsory and voluntary; inmates should be classified according to previous character; habitual vagrants should be sent to compulsory State colony, 8098-8104, 8220-2, 8230.
- Church Army homes practically voluntary colonies; if Government start penal colonies, Church Army would start additional voluntary colonies to receive cases from Government, 8105, 8122.
- Penal colonies should be under direction of State, but voluntary colonies under some society, with State grant, 8107-10, 8230-1.
- Suggested period of detention in; inmates should be able to shorten term by good work, etc.; Elmira as a model, 8111-3.
- Colony should be broken up into "families" to be reclamationary; size of each family, 8113, 8120-1.
- Buildings should be inexpensive and colonists should erect them; probable cost of buildings, 8115-9, 8124, 8270-1.
- Should not have more than 500 inmates unless divided, 8123.
- Agricultural work favoured—especially for drunkards; but subsidiary industry desirable, 8185-90.
- Cannot be made to pay, 8191-5.
- Withholding food should be the incentive to work, 8196-8.
- As to probable numbers to be dealt with, 8270.
- Voluntary associations licensed for compulsory detention of vagrants; whether they would be successful; inebriate colony as a precedent, 8221-32.
- Voluntary colonies useless for sturdy beggars, 8223.
- Work on land better than town colony, even for worst cases, 8233-5.
- Fencing in of penal colony hardly possible, 8272-3; a portion might be fenced in for special class, 8274.

POLICE.

- Should have greater powers of arrest for begging, 8087.

PRISONS.

- A good field for obtaining men willing to work in Church Army homes, 8022; prisoner more hopeful than tramp, 8033.

REV. W. CARLILE—cont.PRISONS—cont.

Church Army allowed to enter and hold missions, 8071.

Discharged prisoners the most hopeful cases, 8151-2, 8236-41.

Every discharged prisoner offered work by Church Army, 8069-75.

SLEEPING OUT.

Largely practised in London and other large towns; law against, not enforced as a rule owing to public opinion, 8133-40.

VAGRANCY.

Any scheme for dealing with, should not apply to London only, 8275.

VAGRANTS.

Numbers dealt with by Church Army in London and other large towns; cost per head; great increase last winter, 8013-9.

Majority do not seek work, but live a comfortable and healthy life, 8086-7, 8093-5.

Man without character the most hopeless case, 8153.

Only the more hopeful cases dealt with by Church Army, 8219.

WAY-TICKETS.

System tried by Church Army described; cause of failure of; system satisfactory as a deterrent where task was enforced; founded on German system, 8080-2, 8088-93, 8179-84, 8266-7.

If system is made general it should be worked through police, and sturdy beggars locked up for one or two years, 8096.

Casual wards might be used as relief stations in connection with, 8263-5.

Scheme for London only would be fatal, 8275.

WOMEN.

§ Only a small percentage of total number of vagrants, 8172.

ADMIRAL CHRISTIAN (Chief Constable of Gloucestershire). See LIEUTENANT-COLONEL CURTIS-HAYWARD.

MAJOR E. G. CLAYTON (731-849.)

Secretary to Prison Commissioners, 731.

CONVICTIONS.

For workhouse offences and begging since 1893; number did not increase immediately after introduction of new prison dietary, 756-71.

DIETARY IN PRISONS.

New diets introduced in local prisons in 1899 and 1901 on medical grounds, giving greater variety, 732-46, 755; no immediate increase in number of convictions for workhouse offences and begging ensued, 756-71; no alteration made in admission diet, 743-9.

Present dietary satisfactory, 750.

New diet has not made prison more attractive, 751.

Difference between stirabout and gruel, 753-4.

Prison population soon learn change in, 772-3.

Prison diets not meant to be penal, nor to bear too favourable a comparison with diets of free labourers or inmates of workhouses, 849.

EMPLOYMENT IN PRISONS.

Treadwheels, cranks and all unproductive labour abolished, 774-7, 805-6.

Treadwheel not suitable for man with weak heart, 809.

Stone breaking and sack making the present "hard labour" tasks, 778-82, 797-800, 828-31.

Nearly 50 per cent. of prisoners not certified as fit for hard labour, 783-4.

MAJOR E. G. CLAYTON—cont.EMPLOYMENT IN PRISONS—cont.

Short sentence prisoners put to hard labour if able-bodied, 796.

All hard labour done in separation, 801.

Prisoner unfit for hard labour tasked by medical officer, 803-4.

Only 50 per cent. of prisoners of tramp class fit for crank, 807-8.

Prison labour either hard labour or industrial labour, 827.

Productive industrial labour, such as making mail bags, baskets, mats, etc., more general than formerly, but only a few mats now sold to public, 832-7, 842.

Prisoners now taught trades by instructors after first twenty-eight days, 838-41, 843-7.

Labour for first twenty-eight days intended to make prison unpleasant, 848.

Procedure in case of short sentence prisoner, 785-96; formalities give as much trouble as in longer sentences, 816-8, 825.

Separate confinement continues for first twenty-eight days, 802.

SENTENCES.

Seven days' sentence means six days' imprisonment if convicted on Monday, and only four days' work, and three days' sentence means only one day's work, 792-5, 810-5.

Day of conviction and day of discharge count as part of sentence, 814.

For begging and sleeping out, mostly seven days, 820-1.

Under fourteen days, not classified in returns, 822-3.

Short sentences an enormous proportion of total, 824.

SUPERINTENDENT COLE, Holborn Division of Metropolitan Police (9371-9550).

BEGGING.

Number of arrests for, in Holborn division, during twelve months; principally at theatre doors, 9375-7, 9388.

Difficulty of procuring prosecutions for, 9437-43.

Identification of beggars; finger-printing not the practice at present, and scarcely worth while, 9475-7, 9485-6.

Mendicity Society co-operates with police in suppressing, 9478-83.

Private persons rarely prosecute beggars, 9484.

CASUAL WARDS.

Frequenters of, are of vagrant class, 9510-2.

Police have no power to visit, and if they had no benefit would arise, 9514-6.

COFFEE STALLS.

Complaints as to nuisance caused by; no genuine need exists for stalls before 3 a.m.; comparison with refreshment houses, 9496-9508.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES IN LONDON.

Habitually used by many working men, as well as by vagrants, 9396-9.

Supply a want, and are well administered, 9444-6.

CONVICTIONS.

Under Prevention of Crimes Act; not generally of vagrant class, 9466-70.

POLICE.

Pedlars' certificates only issued in London district after strict inquiry, but men sometimes peddle without certificates and give trouble, 9412-6, 9490-5.

Food given by, to vagrants arrested; cost of, 9546-50.

SENTENCES.

For sleeping out, very variable, 9428-9.

Uniform at Bow Street and Clerkenwell, but Magistrates lenient with vagrants as a rule, 9436.

For begging seldom more than a week, and generally one day for first offence; offenders not remanded as a rule for inquiry, 9487-9.

Uniform sentences would be deterrent to vagrancy, 9543.

SUPERINTENDENT COLE—cont.

SHELTERS.

- Salvation Army shelters giving free food, 9385-8, 9404-7.
 Shelters may be beneficial, but free food a mistake ; system tends to make genuine working man idle, 9394-5, 9450, 9517.
 Effect of free food distribution on vagrancy, 9401-2.
 Salvation Army and Church Army shelters compared, 9402-4.
 No free shelters in Holborn division, 9447-9.

SLEEPING OUT.

- Number apprehended for, in twelve months, 9375, 9383.
 Generally takes place in buildings, etc., and on Thames Embankment, 9378.
 Not an offence by itself, and not a danger in open street, 9378-82.
 Difficulty of procuring convictions and of proving previous convictions, 9425-7, 9430-3, 9436.
 Sleepers on public seats, etc. ; objections to ; majority undesirable, and sometimes a danger to public, 9451-5, 9518-26, 9537-42.
 Present state of law not satisfactory ; police should have more power ; sleeping out should be made an offence whether offenders have means or not, 9456-60, 9527-8.
 Difficulty of dealing with men found in outbuildings, etc., 9460-9.

VAGRANTS.

- Percentage who would work if they could get it, very small ; vagrants not the "unemployed," 9384-5, 9389-91.
 Many London vagrants tramp country in summer, 9392-3.
 Particulars of census taken on 7th July, 1905, 9396-9400.
 Increase in numbers of late years ; probably caused by free food distribution rather than by non-employment, 9400-2.
 Pedlars and hawkers not of vagrant class, 9408-16.
 Vagrants not generally thieves or burglars, etc., 9471-4.
 Identification of, by fingerprints might be deterrent, 9544-5.

WAY-TICKETS.

- Preferable to free food distribution, and would identify vagrant, 9417-9.
 Possible objections to system, 9529-36.

MR. W. CROOKS, M.P. (5324-5503).

- Chairman of Poplar board of guardians.

BATHING.

- Not now a deterrent to vagrants, 5420-1.

CASUAL PAUPERS IN LONDON.

- Many habitually use casual wards, 5431-3.
 Identification of, not difficult, 5436-8.

CASUAL WARDS IN LONDON.

- Present system of inspection by Local Government Board should be extended, 5399.
 Should be retained, but not under control of guardians, 5400-2.
 Refusals of admission to certain wards, 5417-9.
 Relieve workhouses of certain number of able-bodied men, 5434-5.
 Not necessary, if labour colonies started, 5445.

CHILDREN.

- Of habitual vagrants should be separated from parents, and sent to industrial schools, and afterwards to Canada, or to Welsh farmers, 5377-83.
 Instances of children sent to Welsh farmers doing well, 5379-82.

DETENTION OF CASUALS.

- Not advocated until man is sent to labour colony, 5404-5.
 Wide discretion allowed by Orders of Local Government Board, 5406-7.

MR. W. CROOKS, M.P.—cont.

EMPLOYMENT OF CASUALS.

- Competition with outside labour a difficulty, 5430.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

- Children of habitual vagrants should be sent to, 5377-83.
 Examples of successful results of training in, 5381-3.

LABOUR COLONIES.

- Advocated for habitual vagrants ; admission should be voluntary at first, 5348-50, 5367-8, 5376.
 Inmates refusing to work should be prosecuted, 5369.
 Additions to diet, but not money, should be given as inducements to work, 5370-4, 5503.

LAINDON COLONY.

- Intended to relieve workhouse of able-bodied men, 5384.
 Excellent effect on men of training in, 5384-6, 5488-9.
 Arrangements for supervision of colonists, 5387-91, 5493-5.
 Cost of buildings compared with workhouse buildings in London, 5481-4.
 As precedent for colony for vagrants, 5485, 5489.
 Class of men sent to, 5486-9.
 Inmates do not receive money from guardians, but 6d. per week is paid from private source, 5499-5500.
 Inmates have much liberty, 5502.
 Complaints as to conduct of inmates ; whether further supervision is needed, 5496-5502.

POLICE.

- Control of vagrants should be transferred to, 5411 ; contact of bona fide wayfarer with, would be no hardship, 5448.
 As to police having power to clear streets of night loafers, 5491-2.

POPLAR CASUAL WARDS.

- Full every night, and applicants turned away, 5327.
 Only one or two children admitted a week, 5328.
 Arrangements for admission, searching, bathing, detention and task described, 5329-42, 5406.
 Few women admitted, 5331.
 Very little money found on applicants, 5343.
 Not more than 1 per cent. really employable and trying to find work, 5344-6.
 Men only detained as a rule one night, and discharged without performing task, 5329-32.

SENTENCES.

- Of three to seven days have no effect as a deterrent 5365-6.
 No uniformity in, 5444.

SHELTERS.

- Men frequenting, mostly unemployable, 5348-9.
 An encouragement to the vagrant, and might be abolished with proper treatment of unemployables, 5452-9.
 Frequenters of, a class below tramps, 5464-8.

SLEEPING OUT.

- Many sleepers out in London, but mostly broken down and beyond treatment, 5456-7, 5465-9.
 Sleepers on staircases ; compulsory detention in workhouse no remedy, 5470-3.

TRADES UNIONS.

- System of dealing with travelling members, 5449-51.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

- Absence of, in London, shown by number of refusals of admission for want of room at certain wards, 5403, 5417-20.
 Not possible while present discretion is allowed, 5407-9.
 Uniform system should be laid down, and enforced by one authority, 5409-11.

VAGRANCY:

- Should be dealt with by a system of identification and classification over larger areas, with uniformity of management, 5348, 5393-9.

MR. W. CROOKS, M.P.—cont.

VAGRANTS.

Present system of dealing with, not satisfactory, 5347.
Should be classified, and able-bodied men, after three admissions to wards, should be sent to farm colony, 5348-50.
Control of, should be taken away from guardians, 5411.
Control, not relief, the primary thing in dealing with, 5412-3.
Could get work, if they liked, as a rule, 5414.
Class created by law of settlement, 5415-6.
London vagrant not, as a rule, a criminal or beggar, but causes great trouble in dealing with unemployed, etc., 5422-9.
A social evil requiring further treatment, 5439-43.
Bona fide wayfarers: proportion of, about 1 per cent., 5344-6, 5447.
How the "unemployables" might be dealt with, 5458-68.
Old and infirm vagrants should be compulsorily detained in workhouses, etc., and taken care of, 5474-80.

WAY-TICKET SYSTEM.

Gloucestershire system criticised—it does not prevent begging, and the casual wards are full, 5351-4.
If made general and strictly enforced, it would assist in identification of habitual vagrants, and be ultimately successful, 5355-64.
System would increase the sympathy of the poor towards vagrants, 5359-62.
Whether it would interfere with the liberty of the subject, 5446.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL J. CURTIS-HAYWARD (1547-1782).

Chairman of Gloucestershire Vagrancy Committee from 1883 to 1904.

ADMIRAL CHRISTIAN.

Chief Constable of Gloucestershire.

ALMSGIVING.

Success of circular issued by police against, 1575-8, 1672.

ARMY.

Large numbers of ex-soldiers and reservists on tramp, 1774.

BATHING AND SEARCHING.

Universal in Gloucestershire, 1771; and beneficial, 1772.

BEGGING.

Poor people give more to tramps than rich, 1579-80.
Few complaints of threats by tramps when begging, 1673-6.
Average amount found on persons arrested for, 1683-4.
Decrease in number of persons arrested for, in Gloucestershire, 1692-4.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Numbers admitted to casual wards in Gloucestershire from 1885, and analysis of their trades, 1663.
Proportion of men to women and children in 1904, 1753.

CASUAL WARDS.

Absence of, on Chepstow-Westbury road the cause of many arrests for begging and sleeping out, 1699-1714; occupations of persons arrested, 1700-1; suggested remedy, 1702-12.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Vagrants given orders for, get free bed but not food, 1728-30; preferred to casual wards, 1731-2, 1773.
None for women alone in Gloucestershire, 1735-6.
Price per bed, 3d., 1737.
No municipal lodging-houses in Gloucestershire, 1738.
In Cheltenham and Gloucester visited every night by police, 1738.
Numbers relieved in, in certain years, 1745-7; numbers constant owing to limited accommodation, 1748-52; proportion of men, women and children relieved in 1904, 1754.
Have decreased in country districts, causing more tramps to go to casual wards, 1777-8.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL CURTIS-HAYWARD and ADMIRAL CHRISTIAN—cont.

DETENTION.

Has no effect on vagrants, 1559-61, 1629.
Of habitual vagrants in reformatory for two years favoured, 1656.
Order of 1882 has had no effect on vagrancy, 1740; but has protected roadside residents, 1741-2.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE VAGRANCY COMMITTEE.

Constitution of, 1549-51.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE WAY-TICKET SYSTEM.

System described, 1552-8; tickets given out at police stations, 1715.
Ticket entitles holder to bread ticket, 1553-4, 1591-5; amount of ration, 1591-5, 1602; about 28 per cent. use bread tickets, 1599-1601, 1677; remainder must obtain mid-day meal from other sources, 1677-83.
Meaning of "good" and "bad" tickets, 1556-7; proportion of good tickets, 1635.
Every vagrant supplied with ticket, without distinction between honest workman and others, 1558.
Ticket removes excuse for begging, 1558, 1584-5.
Caused reduction in vagrancy at first, but numbers have increased, 1562-70; recent increase partly caused by new railways, docks, etc., 1571-3.
Successful owing to co-operation of police, 1574-5, 1588-90; has practically stopped begging, 1575-8, 1596, 1682.
Effect of, on other counties, 1565-7, 1581-3.
Co-operation of all unions in county essential to success of system, 1586, 1605-11.
Cause of system breaking down in Berkshire, 1587.
Tickets not transferred, 1616.
Cost of system, 1636-7.
Tickets given to women and children as well as to men, 1688-91.
Prospect of mid-day meal next day would not attract vagrant to casual ward, 1743-4.

POLICE.

As assistant relieving officers, 1589-90, 1612-5; knowledge acquired by, in issuing way-tickets and taking census of vagrants, advantageous, 1765-6.

PRISON.

Preferred by many vagrants to casual wards, 1580, 1618-23, 1654-5.
Not deterrent under present system; increased work suggested, 1622-4, 1648, 1657-8.

SENTENCES.

Seven days not deterrent, 1580, 1626; 14 days with treadmill might be, 1648-9.
Short sentence harmful to alcoholic tramp, 1666-8.
No pre-arranged uniformity amongst magistrates with regard to, 1638-9.
Average sentence 7-10 days, 1640; magistrates apt to discharge vagrant offender, 1641-2; and sometimes to give him money, 1643.

SLEEPING OUT.

Tramps found sleeping out in Gloucestershire always arrested, 1705.
Number of persons proceeded against in 1904, 1759.

STATISTICS.

Of vagrants relieved in Gloucestershire in certain years, 1562-4, 1567-70, 1630-2.

VAGRANCY.

A hard but lazy life, 1669-71.
An evil requiring a remedy, 1699.

VAGRANTS.

Railway works, docks, etc., attract vagrants, 1571-3, 1664, 1767-70.
Many intemperate and unfit for hard work, 1665.
Often conceal money, etc., before entering casual wards, 1685-7.
Numbers charged with stealing in Gloucestershire, 1695-7.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL CURTIS-HAYWARD and ADMIRAL CHRISTIAN—cont.

VAGRANTS—cont.

- Add to amount of crime, 1698.
- Fruit pickers give little trouble, but pea pickers are the refuse of the towns, 1718.
- About one-fourth the whole number enter casual wards, 1722-4; others sleep in common lodging-houses, 1726-7.
- Man often enters casual ward and sends wife and children (with his money) to common lodging-house, 1755.
- Estimated total number in England and Wales, 1775-6, 1779-82.

Mr. R. J. CURTIS (2581-2892).

Clerk to guardians of King's Norton union. Was previously clerk to Norwich guardians, 2581-4.

ARMY.

Percentage of casuals claiming to be ex-soldiers, 2604, 2608-10.

BATHING.

An aid to detection of infectious disease, 2621-2, 2626-9.

BEGGARS.

- Easily live without work, aided by indiscriminate charity and lodgings in casual wards, 2651.
- Alms mostly obtained from poorer classes, 2652-3.
- Mid-day meal would assist in preventing begging, 2654-8, 2670-3.
- Treated leniently by police and magistrates, 2670.
- Whether indiscriminate almsgiving should be made an offence, 2773.
- Police notice threatening beggars with prosecution might have good effect, 2859.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Sometimes admitted to workhouse infirmary, 2835-7.
Classification of, suggested, 2677, 2689, 2890.

CASUAL WARDS.

- Admissions to the three Birmingham unions in 1903 and 1904, 2598-600.
- Treatment in, compared with that in prison, 2630-9, 2838-42.
- Failure of present system, 2640-8; regulations carried out in Birmingham (city) unions, but not in country unions, 2718-20; cost a difficulty in country unions, 2728.
- Existing wards not far enough apart, 2668; one ward for Birmingham would be sufficient, 2727.
- Greater uniformity in management of, might be obtained by transfer of cost to State, 2850-1.

CHILDREN.

- Vagrant Children Protection Bill—making cost of children a county charge—approved; guardians would then be willing to adopt children, 2697-8, 2821, 2864-71.
- Action not taken under Industrial Schools Act by King's Norton guardians, 2819-20.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

- In King's Norton and Birmingham, 2779-82.
- Whether a common lodging-house attracts vagrants, 2783.

DETENTION.

For four nights not frequent, 2676.

DIETARY.

Habitual vagrant does not live upon food obtained at workhouse, 2758-60.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES AND TRADES UNIONS.

Casuals claiming to have been members of, 2605-8.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

- Smallpox introduced by vagrants in casual wards and common lodging-houses, 2620-5, 2830-4.
- Casuals systematically inspected by medical officer at King's Norton when smallpox is prevalent, 2829.

Mr. R. J. CURTIS—cont.

KING'S NORTON CASUAL WARDS.

- Accommodation provided at; separate cells for men and associated ward for women, 2589-92, 2596-7; not now sufficient, 2593.
- Recent increase in number of admissions, 2594-5, 2730-1, 2749-51; causes, 2601-3, 2650-1, 2793-2802, 2822-3.
- Trades of casuals admitted in 1904, 2604; whether information given by casuals reliable, 2736-9.
- Investigation regarding casuals admitted in a period of three weeks; ages, trades, etc., 2605-14.
- Regulations strictly carried out, 2649-50, 2712-7, 2729-31, 2803-4.
- Tasks of work at; whether skilled, 2702-3, 2708-10, 2721-6, 2824-5.
- Women received by female officer, 2862-3.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

Employment sometimes obtained for casuals, 2616-9.

LABOUR COLONIES.

- Habitual vagrants should be sent to, for at least one year and be taught a trade, 2693-4.
- Should be under Government control, like prisons, 2694.

PAUPERISM.

Decrease in general pauperism at King's Norton, Aston and Birmingham, 2784-8.

POLICE.

- Sometimes visit casual wards at King's Norton, 2763-5, 2813-6.
- Advantage of, acting as assistant relieving officers, 2765-71, 2857-8.

PROSECUTIONS.

For refusal of task at King's Norton, 2752-3, 2852; medical officer always examines casuals before prosecutions are undertaken, 2826-8, 2853-6.

SENTENCES.

- Average sentence for refusing work seven days, 2740-2, 2747-8.
- Proportion of seven and fourteen-day sentences, 2745-6; stipendiary firmer than other magistrates, 2743-4.

SHELTERS.

Whether free shelters account for increase in casuals in Birmingham, 2843.

TASKS OF WORK.

- Easier to some men than others, 2703-5.
- Prescribed tasks sufficiently wide, 2711.
- Oakum picking should be discontinued, 2711.
- Unloading coal as a task, 2753-5.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT.

As to baths, search and task, necessary, 2889.

VAGRANCY.

Present system fails to repress vagrancy, 2732-5; but rather encourages it, 2772.

VAGRANTS.

- Avoid returning to same district owing to risk of detention for four nights, 2674-6.
- Classification of, 2677, 2689.
- Percentage of those incapable of work, 2677-9; effect of low dietary on, 2680-1.
- Percentage of men willing to work varies with trade depression, 2682.
- Itinerant workmen unthrifty, 2683-8.
- Distinction between bona fide workman and habitual vagrant suggested; former should carry certificates or way-ticket issued by trade society or police, 2689-93, 2805-12, 2844-9, 2872-88; habitual vagrant should be placed under licence issued by guardians or police, 2693, 2891-2.
- Cost of habitual vagrants should be State charge, and cost of genuine workmen a local charge, 2699-2701.
- An underfed class, 2756-7.
- Frequent complaints of nuisance caused by, 2762.
- Mostly resort to casual wards, 2777-8.

MR. R. J. CURTIS—cont.

WAY-TICKETS.

Favoured if made general, ticket should show route of casual and entitle him to mid-day meal; would prevent begging, 2654-63, 2669-73; 2774-6.
Co-operation of police necessary, 2665.
Would assist police in dealing with beggars, 2671-3.
Certificates to bona fide workmen, and licences to habitual vagrants; suggestions, 2689-93.

MR. W. H. DAWSON (3514-3920).

Author of books on Social Reform Movements and Labour Laws in Germany and Switzerland.

BEGGING.

Laws against, in Germany severe, 3569-71, 3807-8; almsgiver liable to punishment, 3817-20.
Number of convictions for, in Prussia and England compared, 3805-7.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Generally without handicraft, 3749.

CASUAL WARDS.

Abolition of, suggested, 3518, 3762, 3779; use to which existing wards might be put, 3871-2.
Nothing in Germany equivalent to, 3540.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

None in Germany similar to those in England, 3720, 3852-3.

GERMAN LABOUR COLONIES.

Carried on by philanthropic societies; distinct from relief stations, and workhouses; all voluntary, with no power of detention, 3609-12, 3615, 3621-2, 3698-9, 3835-6, 3860.
Number of colonies and number of admissions, 3613-4; only one for women, 3614; number of colonies and admissions have steadily increased, 3718-20, 3854-6.
Increase in number of colonists between twenty-one and thirty-one years of age, 3857-8.
Inmates earn money rewards, 3616.
Average duration of stay in, 3617-9, 3859.
Employment in, mostly agricultural, except in two industrial colonies, 3620.
Grants received from local, but not Imperial funds, 3622-3.
No supervision by State, police, or local authorities, 3624-5.
Average annual cost in, per head, 3626-8; none self-supporting, 3630.
Not suitable for tramps owing to absence of restraint and compulsion, 3628-9, 3726-7.
Whether buildings are under local sanitary bye-laws, 3633-4.
Established because highways were overrun with tramps, and to prevent necessity for begging, 3702-5.
Many inmates are discharged prisoners, 3724; percentage of inmates of Lühlerheim colony who had been in gaol, 3733-4.
Have created a class of "colony loafers," 3728-37.
Cannot be regarded as reformatory institutions; system has obvious defects, 3738, 3903-4.
Bielefeld colony; little employment left after reclaiming the land, 3752-7.

GERMAN RELIEF STATIONS OR SHELTERS.

No State shelters at present, but State is being urged to take over the relief stations, 3538, 3850-1.
Of two classes (1) voluntary (Herbergen) maintained by philanthropic societies; (2) relief stations (Verpflegungs-stationen), maintained by local authorities, 3543-7, 3572-3, 3577-9, 3700-1, 3802; Herbergen and relief stations compared, 3822-9.

MR. W. H. DAWSON—cont.

Herbergen: in every large town, 3545, 3709; receive three classes of lodgers, including many resident lodgers, 3548, 3851; work generally required in return for free lodging, 3548-59, 3870; number of Herbergen, 3558; inmates discharged about mid-day and sometimes given food or free railway tickets, 3560-3; food also supplied at by-stations, 3563; number of admissions, 3558, 3709-13, 3721; whether trade depression affects number of admissions, 3714-7, 3845-6; appreciated more now than formerly in spite of better times, 3722-3; conducted on moral and religious basis, but only open to men with papers, 3743-4; importance of rigorous enforcement of regulations in, 3868-9, 3899-902; largely used by travelling members of trade societies, but objected to by socialists, 3896-8.

Relief Stations: not adequate at present, but numbers are increasing, 3572, 3850-1; number of inmates on a particular night compared with number of casual paupers in England, 3706-8; maps placed in each station showing roads and relief stations, and traveller helped to select his route, 3579-80, 3583; route entered in travelling book, 3580-2; traveller without book liable to apprehension, 3587-90; administration of stations simple, 3881; bath not compulsory, 3883.
System removes necessity for begging, and enables habitual tramps to be detected and genuine work-seeker to be relieved, 3584-6, 3803, 3847-9.
Vagrancy diminished by, 3604-8, 3746-8; but tramps and beggars have not been abolished, 3804.
Similar classes resort to both Herbergen and relief stations, 3823.
Whether system encourages a wandering life, 3845-50, 3561-6.
Traveller must obtain pass from police by payment or by work, 3863-5.
Cost of maintenance of; probably no great difference from cost of casual wards in England, 3880-4.
None established for women only, 3882.

GERMAN WORKHOUSES (Arbeitshäuser).

Not equivalent to English workhouses, but penal establishments in which offenders may be detained for not exceeding two years, 3574, 3591-9, 3636-9.
Class of offenders sent to, 3600-1, 3740.
Number of commitments to, in certain districts, 3602-3, 3652-3.
Vagrancy claimed to have been reduced by system, 3604-7, 3842-4.
Men medically examined on admission, 3635.
Westphalia workhouse (Benninghausen); fewer inmates now than in 1821, 3639-40; description of, regulations, punishment, etc., 3641-51; commitments to, 3652-3; employment in—trades taught, 3654-6; gross expenditure per head, 3657-9; on discharge of inmate, money earned by him is sent on to place of destination, 3660-2; percentage of inmates previously committed to a workhouse, 3663-4; average length of detention in, 3665; dietary at, 3819-20.
Berlin bridewell described, 3693-7, 3801.
Compared with English prisons, 3787-94.
Restricted to certain classes of offenders but practically prisons, 3796-8.
Labour of inmates often farmed out to private persons, 3799-3800.
Competition with outside labour restricted as far as possible; goods produced supplied chiefly to municipal and provincial institutions, 3831-2, 3886-7.
Receipts and expenditure in some cases nearly equal, 3833-4.

GERMAN WORKMEN.

Carry labour book (Arbeitsbuch) if under twenty-one, and certificate of insurance, etc., or Army discharge papers if over twenty-one, 3523-37, 3539, 3667-9, 3814, 3820-1.
Book or certificate accepted as passport to shelters, 3537, 3542-4; man without book or certificate must go to police, 3541.
Labour book described, 3820; book might be forged, but inducements to do so not apparent, 3671-4; system of finger-printing would prevent forgery and make identification certain, 3816-7.

MR. W. H. DAWSON—*cont.*GERMAN WORKMEN—cont.

Men under twenty-one cannot be employed without book, 3812-3, 3820.

Are accustomed to carry papers, 3670.

Sometimes travel for purposes of instruction (Wanderjahre), 3911-4.

Industrial conditions in Germany have taken permanent form, 3915.

GERMAN POORHOUSES.

Purely local, and maintained out of local funds, 3574-6.

GERMAN VAGRANTS.

Habitual tramps and cognate offenders sentenced to imprisonment, and to detention afterwards in penal workhouses for not exceeding two years, 3591-9, 3889.

Summary of system for treatment of, 3905-8; arrangements for sick travellers, 3916-8.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Amount of profitable labour in, decreases as land becomes cultivated, 3631-2, 3752-3.

On German model not advocated; but colonies should be established for honest unemployed as State or county institutions, 3725, 3762, 3772-3, 3780, 3858, 3904.

Whether they should be voluntary or compulsory, 3763-4.

Industrial colonies better than agricultural colonies, 3749-51, 3780.

Whether sufficient colonies could be established by voluntary effort in England, 3758-61.

Counties might be combined for establishment of, 3771.

Magistrates should have power to commit first offenders to, 3837-40.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Supplied in Germany at by-stations, 3563-8.

POOR LAW.

Difference between English and German, 3675-92; no provision in German law for travelling poor, except under police, 3702-3.

RELIEF STATIONS OR SHELTERS.

Should be established, where honest working men could obtain lodging in return for small payment or work, without being pauperised, 3519, 3779-82.

SENTENCES.

Long sentences favoured in Germany as giving men a chance to learn trade, 3666, 3794-5, 3891-5.

For begging much longer in Prussia than in England, 3809-11.

VAGRANTS.

Genuine work-seekers should be helped, but others should be handed over to penal law, 3515-8, 3762, 3783-4.

Habitual tramps and loafers should be sent to workhouses (houses of correction) on continental pattern, 3725, 3762, 3774-8, 3785-6, 3841, 3876-9, 3889-90; employment should be on industries easily learned, 3885-7; interests of community should be considered before interests of outside labour, 3888.

Voluntary institutions for dealing with, difficult to set up in England, 3741-2.

German system not suitable for dealing with English vagrants, 3745.

Proportion of honest work-seekers on tramp in England, 3765-9, 3909-10.

WAY-TICKETS OR PASSPORTS.

German system of, practically the same as English, 3520-2.

Adoption of, suggested; pass might be given by police, trade union or Charity Organisation Society, 3873-5.

CAPTAIN DESPARD (6859-6941).

Chief constable of Lanarkshire, 6859.

Was also chief constable at Dewsbury for three years, 6859-60, 6902.

BEGGING IN SCOTLAND.

Simple begging not an offence in rural districts, 6868. Should not be made an offence where no provision is made for tramps, 6873.

Pedlars' certificates do not give chance of begging, 6916-7.

By threats at country cottages, 6941.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Penal colonies might be effective and deterrent, if men could be made to work, but system would be expensive, 6918-23.

POLICE.

Many towns in Lanarkshire under separate police administration, 6862.

Give assistance to vagrants in Lanarkshire out of their own pockets, 6874-5.

Shelter not given to vagrants at police stations in Lanarkshire, 6876-7.

Take census of vagrants twice a year, 6903-4.

Vagrants and vagrant wards might be placed under control of, but too much police government not desirable, 6893-9, 6933-4.

SENTENCES.

For offences under Trespass Act, mostly fines, which do not vary much; absence of casual wards causes lenient treatment of offenders, 6881-7.

SLEEPING OUT.

A serious offence from farmers' point of view, 6901.

VAGRANCY IN LANARKSHIRE.

Difference between burghs and rest of county in dealing with vagrancy, 6863-7.

Practically no means of relief beyond shelters in one or two towns; Charity Organisation Society give free shelters in one town; shelters a useful help to vagrants, 6869-74, 6878-9.

Trespass Act enforced, but farmers etc., often give shelter to tramps, causing a nuisance, 6880.

Vagrancy an evil that State should deal with, 6935-6.

VAGRANTS.

Relief of, in Scotland, left to charitable persons; charity useless in absence of common lodging-houses, 6874-5, 6910-1.

Do not commit offences in order to get into gaol, 6888-92.

Not a criminal class; simply lazy, but commit petty crimes, 6907-9, 6938-41.

System of identification would be expensive, 6912-5, 6921.

Vagrants follow the main roads, 6924-6.

Number in county compared with number in Glasgow, 6927-30.

Residential population of vagrants in Glasgow; probable cause of, 6931-2.

Live on the navvies employed on public works, etc., 6937.

WAY-TICKET SYSTEM.

If Gloucestershire system—extended over larger area—were adopted, casual wards might be placed under control of police, 6893-6900.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Few found tramping in Lanarkshire; child vagrancy not a serious question, 6905-6.

MR. DAVID DEWAR (6619-6763).

Chief constable of Dundee and procurator-fiscal, 6619, 6732.

BEGGING IN SCOTLAND.

General statutes relating to, 6622-7.

Only "masterful" begging regarded as an offence in counties, 6627-8.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES IN DUNDEE.

Inspected by sanitary authorities; police have power of entry, 6671-4.

All run by private individuals, 6681.

Municipal lodging-houses would be preferable, 6682.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Advocated for habitual offenders, with compulsory detention, and liberation at discretion of directors, 6690-6700.

Guarantees from responsible persons might be required before discharge of inmates, 6696.

Voluntary colonies at Locharwoods etc., not suggested as models, 6738-42.

State should bear cost of, and administer, colonies, 6701, 6760-1.

Prisons would be relieved by establishment of, 6762-3.

POLICE IN DUNDEE.

Town council are police authority, and magistrates are all members of, and are appointed by, town council, 6632-5.

No paid magistrates, except sheriff who deals with serious cases, 6636-7.

Formerly supplied tickets for common lodging-houses to destitute persons, but applications now rare, owing to opening of night refuge, 6675-8, 6710-6.

Co-operate with parish authorities, 6683-7.

Cannot bring charge direct; case must be taken before procurator-fiscal (who is also chief constable) who decides whether it is to proceed; system advantageous in case of juvenile offenders, 6732-7.

Not concerned with vagrants unless they commit some offence, 6743-5.

Food supplied by police to persons under arrest, 6753-5.

POORHOUSES.

Power of compulsory detention in, desirable, 6649-51, 6687-9.

PRISON.

Not deterrent to habitual offenders; sometimes stated to be preferred, 6707-9.

SENTENCES IN DUNDEE.

For begging, etc., vary considerably; explanation of certain sentences, 6638-60.

Short sentences harmful and costly, and not deterrent, 6701-6.

SHELTERS IN DUNDEE.

Night refuge (a charitable institution) intended for bona fide searchers for work; applicants must be destitute and not drunk; has been full of late, 6664-70, 6681.

SLEEPING OUT IN DUNDEE.

Contraventions of Trespass Act (including sleeping on staircases) dealt with, 6630-1.

STATISTICS.

As to offences against Vagrancy and Trespass Acts, 6731.

VAGRANCY AND BEGGING IN DUNDEE.

Statutes (local and general) relating to, 6621-6.

Beggars apprehended as a rule, 6629.

Further legislation required for dealing with, with power of compulsory detention, 6657-61.

Offenders mostly Scotch, but strangers to Dundee, 6662-3.

MR. DAVID DEWAR—*cont.*VAGRANCY AND BEGGING IN DUNDEE—cont.

Provision for vagrants consists of night refuge and common lodging-houses; it is sufficient, although not attractive, 6671-80.

Census of vagrants in night asylum, prison, lodging-houses and sleeping out, taken yearly; how taken, 6717-27.

June and December census of vagrants; many tramp in winter and work in summer, 6727-30.

System of identification of vagrants scarcely necessary, 6746-7.

Increase in recent years of convictions under Vagrancy and Trespass Acts, 6748-52.

Inquiry in case of death from starvation, 6756-9; such cases rare, 6757.

SIR JOHN DORINGTON, BART., M.P. (4275-4464).

Has been chairman of Gloucestershire county council for eighteen years, and was for many years chairman of quarter sessions, 4275-6.

ALMSGIVING.

Discouraged by way-ticket system, 4294-6, 4336.

Poor people sometimes bullied into giving food, etc., 4297-8.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Whether cost of maintenance should be a county charge, 4427.

CASUAL WARDS.

Difficulty of placing wards under police, 4340-1.

Applicants for admission sometimes possessed of means, 4407-8.

Guardians should retain control under Order of Local Government Board, 4341-2, 4354-7.

Poor unions at a disadvantage in regard to provision of, 4347-8.

Whether any wards could be closed as unnecessary, 4350-3.

Management of, by joint committee of guardians might be practicable, 4358-9.

Charge might be allowed on county fund for maintenance of, in certain cases, 4354.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

Children of habitual vagrants should be sent to work-house and treated as orphans: how cost of maintenance to be borne, 4410-20.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Frequented by about 75 per cent. of vagrants, 4451.

Vagrant inmates of, presumably live by begging, 4453-4.

DETENTION OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Very irregular in Gloucestershire, 4339.

Uniformity might be secured by detaining all vagrants not possessing "good" tickets, 4343-5.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Experiment of penal colonies advocated, 4299-4300, 4306, 4371, 4433-4.

Extra diet would be best inducement to work, 4301-4, 4428-9.

Colonies for willing workers undesirable, 4307.

Penal colonies should be controlled by Home Office with local visiting committee, 4308-12, 4372-3, 4433-4.

Would be a deterrent to sturdy beggar and a relief to destitute wanderer, 4370-1.

Experiment might be tried by private persons under supervision of Home Office, 4374-9.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Present allowance of bread in Gloucestershire sufficient, 4409.

Not given to lodging-house tramps, who presumably obtain means by begging, 4452-4.

SIR JOHN DORINGTON, BART., M.P.—cont.

POLICE.

As assistant relieving officers: a desirable arrangement, 4397-8.

PRISON.

Attractive to vagrants rather than otherwise, owing to absence of hard labour, 4302, 4313-5, 4435-45.
Too comfortable for short sentence prisoners, 4315, 4437.
Refusal to work punished by loss of diet, 4456.

SEARCHING AND BATHING.

Wayfarers with "good" tickets should be bathed but not searched, 4447-9.

SENTENCES.

Short sentences not deterrent and not reformatory, 4313-9.
Should be lengthened in proportion to number of convictions, but imprisonment for vagrancy could not be seriously lengthened under present state of law, 4320-1.
Discretion of justices should be retained, 4322-5.
Cases might be remitted to quarter sessions for sentence, 4326-8.
Seven days' sentence means only five days in prison, 4455.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT IN CASUAL WARDS.

Not practised in Gloucestershire, 4337-9.
Might be secured by a special grant in aid payable by county, 4457-63.

VAGRANCY.

Recent increase in Gloucestershire caused by increased destitution and large works, 4280.
Navvies engaged on large works attract vagrants as "hangers on," 4281-2.
Report on vagrancy in Gloucestershire in 1904, 4283.
Recent increase in number of honest travellers, 4284.
As a profitable business depends on amount of sympathy created, 4294, 4304-5.
Vagrancy, like drunkenness, a disease, requiring special treatment, 4446.

VAGRANTS.

Encouraged by lax treatment, 4329.
Numbers largely depend on situation of casual wards, 4346-7.
Honest wayfarer: difficulties of dealing with, 4360-9.
Ordinary vagrant not as a rule a criminal, 4380-2.
Should be kept distinct from "in and out" class of workhouse inmates, 4431-2.
Only 25 per cent. of total frequent casual wards, 4450.

WAY-TICKETS.

Gloucestershire system favoured; it enables honest traveller to be distinguished from professional vagrant, and discourages vagrancy by making it unprofitable, 4278, 4286-8, 4294-6, 4333-6, 4383-90;
System very successful for some years, 4279, 4331-2;
Recent increase in number of "good" tickets, 4284; "good" ticket defined, 4285.
Difficulty of working universal system under Order of Local Government Board, 4288.
System should be worked through police with co-operation of workhouse masters, 4289-91, 4393-8.
An aid to magistrates in dealing with vagrants, 4292-3.
Universal application of system suggested, 4330, 4391-2.
Vagrants without tickets should be detained two nights, 4383-8.
Tickets should be issued from casual wards, not by police, 4392-6.
System should not be extended to wayfarers in common lodging-houses, 4399-406.
Danger of ticket being made excuse for begging, 4421-2.
Bartering and sale of tickets guarded against in Gloucestershire, 4423-4.
Recovery of cost from authority starting wayfarer on journey; whether practicable, 4425-6.
System worked by vagrancy committee in Gloucestershire and Wiltshire, 4464.
Wayfarers with "good" tickets should be bathed but not searched, 4447-9.

MR. W. J. FARRANT (10347-10437).

Head of statistical branch of Home Office, 10347.

STATISTICS.

Prosecutions of refractory paupers: great increase since 1900: larger in proportion than increase in number of vagrants relieved, 10349-56, 10359-62, 10368-81, 10415-7, 10434.
Prosecutions for sleeping out: increase since 1900, but proportion not so great as that of refractory paupers, 10363-5, 10434.
Number of persons proceeded against summarily for all offences: recent decrease, 10366-7.
Recent increase in percentage of persons going to prison in default of payment of fines: probable reasons for increase, 10382-93, 10419-26, 10435.
Ordinary workhouse offences included in statistics of refractory paupers, but workhouse inmates not included in statistics of vagrancy, 10394-400.
Number of able-bodied paupers relieved, exclusive of vagrants, has not increased in same proportion as number of prosecutions of refractory paupers, 10401-3.
Convictions for begging and sleeping out have increased similarly with number of vagrants relieved, 10404-14.
Numbers of vagrants relieved on one night in each year since 1900, 10418.
Number of persons received in prison on summary conviction since 1900: continuous increase, 10427-33, 10436.

VAGRANTS.

Increase in recent years in numbers relieved: decrease during war, with subsequent increase, 10356-60.

MR. E. N. FENWICK (10610-10792).

One of the Metropolitan police magistrates; now sits at Bow Street. Has been a London magistrate for eighteen years, and has sat in every Metropolitan police court. Before coming to London was at Bradford for two years, and before that on the North Eastern circuit, 10610-2.

BEGGARS.

Should be brought before court of law before being detained for long period; administrative body should not have power to deal directly with man's liberty, 10660-71.
Magistrate decides whether offenders shall be sent to quarter sessions as incorrigible rogues, 10773-6.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Able-bodied habitual vagrants and incorrigible rogues within meaning of Vagrancy Act should be sent to; "incorrigible" not necessarily hopeless, 10614, 10621-4, 10726, 10765-72.
Dietary in, should be made an inducement to work, 10625-8.
Should be places of actual detention, 10634-5.
Men should be sent by quarter sessions, not petty sessions or boards of guardians, 10640-2, 10669-71.
Classification in, would be useful, owing to varying standards of comfort, 10657-8.
Existence of labour colonies would probably lead to more reasonable sentences, and cause more incorrigible rogues to be sent to quarter sessions to be dealt with, 10703-5, 10739-43.
Colonies might be voluntary establishments, subject to inspection, 10767.

PRISON.

Dread of, not increasing; classification of prisoners would be an advantage; varying standards of comfort a difficulty, 10650-9.
Vagrants often get sent to, as a means of getting nearer their destination, 10787.

SENTENCES.

For incorrigible rogues may be twelve months; in addition males may be flogged, 10618-20.

MR. E. N. FENWICK—cont.SENTENCES—cont.

Up to seven days not deterrent at all; short sentences expensive (especially in country) but discretion should be left to magistrates; circular from Home Office as a remedy; some men indifferent to any sentence, 10629-31, 10681-4, 10687-712.

Third conviction should make man an habitual vagrant; first and second sentences should be recorded, 10646, 10788-90.

Minimum sentence objected to; discretion of magistrates should not be hampered, 10647-8, 10763-4.

General agreement as to, amongst London magistrates, 10687.

Treatment of man committed to quarter sessions as incorrigible rogue, 10672-7.

Procedure in case of man charged with vagrancy at Bow Street, 10689.

One day sentence better than three days; man is discharged and conviction is recorded, 10706-12.

By county and borough magistrates generally satisfactory, 10695, 10758-62.

Magistrates sometimes discharge men on promise of leaving town, 10782-3.

SLEEPING OUT.

Cases at Bow Street mostly children; men seldom charged with, in London; difficulties of dealing with, 10714-9.

VAGRANT CHILDREN.

Generally wandering alone; they can be dealt with under Industrial Schools Act; how to deal with parents, 10714, 10744-57.

VAGRANTS.

Present law sufficient to cope with, except as to incorrigible rogues, who should be sent to penal workhouse or labour colony and detained for long periods, 10614-6, 10713.

Number of incorrigible rogues dealt with in London; mostly beggars; number stationary, but many probably not identified, 10617, 10649, 10678-9, 10686, 10724-27, 10778.

Identification of, finger-printing would be valuable if not too expensive; practice in police courts as to identification, 10638-9, 10689, 10777-81, 10785.

Not a criminal class, 10680.

Only small sums of money found on, as a rule, 10720-2.

80 per cent. of vagrants charged are able-bodied, but only fit for light work, 10724-5.

Old and infirm vagrants difficult to deal with; they might be compulsorily detained in workhouses, 10728-38.

Large numbers haunt wealthy districts of London, attracted by theatres, etc., 10786.

Average age of vagrants convicted at Bow Street; some would be old and helpless, 10791-2.

Definition of incorrigible rogue in Vagrancy Act seems to indicate the habitual vagrant, 10643-5.

WAY-TICKETS.

Would help in identifying habitual vagrants, 10636-7.

MR. BALDWIN FLEMING (4872-5031).

General Inspector of the Local Government Board, 4872.

CASUAL WARDS.

Lack of uniformity of treatment in, 4903.

Separate cell system advocated, in interests both of professional tramp and honest wayfarer, 4904-8; requirements of Local Government Board as to, excessive, 4907.

Tramp could not be forced to use, instead of common lodging-house, 5020-2.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

Law as to, should be strengthened, but question bristles with difficulties; weakening of parental responsibility undesirable, 5010-2.

Number very small in proportion to total number of vagrants, 5013-5.

Generally travel with women, 5016.

MR. BALDWIN FLEMING—cont.COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Vagrants travelling in gangs sometimes send one member (holding their money) to, while rest of gang go to casual wards, 5017.

Absence of, an objection to way-ticket system, 5019, 5023.

Need better supervision and management, 5028-31.

DETENTION OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

On Sunday; opportunity should be given of attending services, 4908.

For two nights gives control over vagrant, but only a few boards of guardians enforce it, 4924-6.

DIET OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Should be improved, and be equal to that of able-bodied workhouse inmates; men leaving casual wards should be able to obtain food in middle of day and not have to beg or steal, 4934-42.

Absolute uniformity not practicable, 4942.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

Should be established to assist vagrants willing to work, 4967.

LABOUR COLONIES.

With compulsory detention, advocated for vagrants who can, but will not work; cost would probably be less than under present system, 4967-70, 4999-5001, 5002-3.

Would be reformatory rather than deterrent, 5000-1. Existing voluntary colonies might be utilised, if they have means of enforcing detention, in preference to colonies of a penal nature, 5003-8.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Bread tickets approved, as taking away excuse for begging, but bread now supplied is often thrown away, 4886, 4927.

System in Dorsetshire described; worked by mendicity society and not confined to vagrants who go to casual wards, 4928-30.

Cost of, should be defrayed by public, 4931-2.

Tickets should be given through police, magistrates and clergy, 4933.

Should not be handed to casual when leaving casual ward in morning, 4939.

POLICE.

Appointment of, as assistant relieving officers favoured, 4889-91.

Advantages of placing vagrants under control of, 4956-61.

SENTENCES.

Present practice of giving a few days' sentence ridiculous, 4909-14.

Uniformity and minimum sentences advocated at recent Hampshire assizes, 4913.

Recording first and second convictions and subsequent long imprisonment might meet difficulty, 4915.

TASKS OF WORK FOR CASUAL PAUPERS.

Uniformity in, not practicable, 4944-6.

Corn grinding an even and useful task and quite as economical as wood cutting or stone breaking, 4946-7, 4989-91.

Stone pounding an uneven task, 4993-5.

Stone breaking more skilful than stone pounding, 4994.

TRADES UNIONS.

Members of, do not tramp, 4885.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Cannot be obtained under present system, 4917.

Absolute uniformity not practicable, and not always desirable, 4942-55.

Local Government Board have no practical means of enforcing, 4949-51.

Not possible from elected local bodies, 4952.

Might be secured by county authority, if system administered by police, 4956-61.

MR. BALDWIN FLEMING—cont.

VAGRANCY.

- Cost of, should be a national, not a local, charge, 4932.
- Repression in treatment of, a failure; present system most unsatisfactory, 4987-8.
- Treatment of, important as a social question; vagrants a serious burden on the rates, a nuisance and a worthless class, 4996-8.

VAGRANTS.

- Identification of, difficult, 4881-3.
- Many do not enter casual wards, 4893.
- Increase in number of elderly vagrants in 1904, as compared with 1884; possibly caused by influence of Employers Liability Act, and trades unions, 4917-9.
- Total number relieved in 1884 and 1904, 4920.
- Only accidentally a concern of guardians, 4962-6.
- Classification of:—1. Incapables, who should be sent to their own union and permanently detained. 2. Old and helpless, who should be detained and provided for in institutions. 3. Those who can work, who should be dealt with by means of labour bureaux (if willing to work) and colonies (compulsory) if unwilling to work, 4915-7, 4967-70.
- Weakly vagrants should be compulsorily detained in workhouses by order of justices, 4971-86; sometimes treated unsympathetically now, 4971-3.

WAY-TICKETS.

- Expediency of system doubted, owing to difficulty of enforcing uniformity, and practice of indiscriminate almsgiving; system would do some good, but would only affect a small proportion of vagrants, 4876-902, 5019.
- Systems in Dorsetshire and Wiltshire, 4876.
- System (with bread tickets) first started in Hampshire in 1871, before detention for two nights was authorised, 4876-8, 4921-2.
- Hampshire system described—only 120 passes used out of 415 issued in first year, 4879.
- Objected to in 1868 by Sir John Lambert, 4880.
- Identification of casuals a difficulty, 4881-3.
- Might help honest men on tramp, but they are few in number, 4884-5.
- Origin of system dates from fourteenth century, 4886.
- Police should work system, if it is applied generally, 4888.
- Difficulties of enforcing a compulsory system, 4894-4902.
- Morning task should not be enforced, 4923.
- German passport system objected to, 5024-7.

MR. HORACE FLETCHER. See DR. F. G. HOPKINS.

MRS. HIGGS (1285-1546).

- Wife of Congregational Minister, Oldham; became an inmate from philanthropic motives of certain casual wards and common lodging-houses, 1286.

CASUAL WARDS.

- Visits to, made owing to representations by women, 1293-4.
- Objections of women to, 1293-5, 1361, 1371-3.
- Complaints against officials and pauper attendants, 1300-23, 1345, 1357-61, 1385-9, 1419-20, 1438-41.
- Difficulty of obtaining water in, 1332-3, 1335-9, 1348-52, 1393, 1415, 1429-34.
- Instances of casuals being refused admission to, 1385, 1389-91.
- Work in, damages casual's own clothing, 1406.
- Sanitary conveniences in, satisfactory, 1484.
- Better than common lodging-houses for single women, 1486-8.
- Should not be used for women, 1505.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

- Often met with in common lodging-houses, 1461.
- Should be detained in workhouses, 1533.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

- Personal experiences in, 1468-70, 1483, 1485.
- Compared with casual wards, 1469-75, 1486-9, 1495.
- Sanitary arrangements in, not satisfactory, 1485, 1493-4.
- Scarcity of, for single women, 1485, 1498.
- Cost of beds in, 1490-2, 1496-7.
- For couples, more profitable than those for women only, 1499-502.

MRS. HIGGS—cont.

DEWSBURY CASUAL WARD.

- Personal experiences in, 1288-9, 1300-42, 1389, 1426-31.

DIETARY IN CASUAL WARDS.

- Objections to, 1332-5, 1347-8, 1353, 1368, 1395, 1406, 1412-4, 1458.
- Suggested improvements in, 1542-5.

MANCHESTER CASUAL WARD.

- Personal experiences in, 1297, 1379-1425, 1438-44, 1448-56.

NORTH BIERLEY CASUAL WARD.

- Personal experiences in, 1297, 1343-77, 1432-4.

POOR LAW.

- Law of settlement should be abolished, 1546.

SEARCHING.

- Of women at casual wards, 1476-80.

TASK OF WORK IN CASUAL WARDS.

- Hard, and out of proportion to amount of relief, 1481-2.

WOMEN.

- Accommodation should be provided in towns, under suitable conditions, for single women, 1485-6, 1504; they might be received into the workhouse proper, 1505.
- Lady protector should be appointed in connection with every workhouse; suggested duties, 1505-28.
- Feeble-minded women should be compulsorily detained, 1529-30.
- On tramp with their husbands should be taken into workhouse and possibly detained, 1532-41.

WORKHOUSE.

- Instance of female vagrant being refused admission to, 1421.

VAGRANCY.

- Alleged to be a happy and healthy life for women, 1534-6.

DR. F. G. HOPKINS, M.A., D.Sc., M.B., F.R.S., AND MR. HORACE FLETCHER (10793-10926).

- Dr. HOPKINS is Reader in Physiology at Cambridge University; has given considerable attention to questions of dietary from a physiological point of view, 10793-4.

- Mr. FLETCHER, an American greatly interested in the economics of dietary who has taken part in the recent researches of Dr. Chittenden and others in the United States of America, 10793.

DIETARY.

- Constituents of food stuffs and their purposes, 10795-809.
- Standards of diet from experience and experiments: Leibig's view as to source of muscular and mechanical energy not now accepted, except perhaps to a certain extent by Pflüger, 10796.
- Voit standard the universal basis, and recent studies tend to approximate to it, 10796, 10801.
- Atwater standard higher than Voit, but evidence not sufficient to justify acceptance of it, and his views have since been modified, 10796-8, 10802, 10851-4.
- Chittenden standard much lower than Voit; experiments conducted under natural conditions with varied dietary show that Voit proteid minimum can be reduced by one-half without harm or loss of efficiency, 10798-10800, 10803-9, 10859.
- Dr. Edward Smith's dietary for able-bodied (drawn up forty years ago) lower than Voit standard, but in view of recent experiments is ample, and may be safely recommended for vagrants under detention, especially if dietary is supplemented by earnings, 10849-62.

DR. F. G. HOPKINS AND MR. HORACE FLETCHER
—cont.

DIETARY—cont.

Nutritive values of prescribed diet for casual paupers: diet not sufficient for man doing fair day's work, but with good meals before and after detention it would offer no danger, 10810-31, 10897.

No positive evidence that low proteid diet affects man's power of resisting disease, or makes him deficient in energy, 10832-8.

Diet of Japanese sailor and peasant, 10836-7, 10901.

Dangers of excess of proteid dietary, 10839-48.

Proteid food more expensive than carbo-hydrates, 10841.

Suggested standard for vagrants detained in labour colonies, supplemented by canteen system, 10849-51, 10855-62.

Food given to vagrant for work done should be a cheap food, 10863-4.

Mid-day meal for vagrant might be suet pudding, or bread with cheese rich in fat, 10865, 10922-6.

Effect as regards diet, of work in open air and cells, 10866-8, 10892.

Recent discoveries render reconsideration of workhouse and prison dietaries expedient, 10869-72.

Scientific diet need not be uncongenial; the quantity might not be attractive, but canteen system would remedy deficiency, 10873-84.

Human body would adjust itself to alterations in diet in ten days or a fortnight, 10880-2.

Diet on Chittenden's standard might be punitive, but it would be harmless, at any rate for three months, 10885-7.

Hard work (stone breaking, etc.), although in open air, would require higher standard than lighter work (picking oakum, etc.), 10888-91.

Working under depressing conditions (e.g. in cells), affects diet needed, 10892-3, 10896.

Cell system involves set ration for each individual, which must be sufficient to meet every case, 10894-5.

Habit, custom, race and climate are important factors in diet, 10898-900.

Bread and (especially) oatmeal, cheaper than meat as proteid food, 10902.

Cheese a good addendum to bread diet, 10903-5.

Meat juice, soup, broth, etc., useful as stimulants to appetite and digestion, 10906-16.

Difficulty of obtaining sufficiently low proteid diet with bread and oatmeal as basal foods, 10918-9.

Fats are expensive foods, 10920.

Amount of proteid should be reduced to a certain standard if excess over that standard is shown to be bad, 10921.

MR. J. HOWE (2011-2375).

President of Workhouse Masters' Association, 2015-7. Has been master of Cuckfield workhouse for nineteen and a half years; was previously master of Daventry workhouse, and schoolmaster in three or four workhouses; has been in Poor Law service about thirty-five years, 2013.

BATHING.

Strictly carried out at Cuckfield, 2075; but not at every workhouse, 2080, 2083.

Sometimes objected to by casuals, 2076-7.

Aids detection of disease, 2079-80.

Water not changed for each vagrant, 2081-3.

BEGGARS.

Formerly numerous, but have decreased with decrease in vagrants, 2239-43.

Sunday a good day for, 2291-3.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Men genuinely in search of work treated exceptionally at Cuckfield, 2089; but proportion very small, 2089-90, 2245.

Present system of dealing with, satisfactory if uniformity were observed, 2109; workhouse masters should have absolute discretion, 2110, 2374-5.

Food in possession of, on admission to casual ward returned on discharge, 2223-5.

Often spend their last money in drink before entering casual wards, 2227-8.

More frequent in winter than in summer, 2261-6.

MR. J. HOWE—cont.

CASUAL WARDS.

At Cuckfield, admissions since 1885, 2018; recent decrease attributed to task of stone pounding and stringent carrying out of regulations, 2018-21, 2173-9; not to alteration of diet, 2313-9; or task, 2321-3; complaints received from neighbouring unions, 2180-2; staff and arrangements described, 2143-72, 2287-93.

Many wards unsatisfactory, 2097, 2100-8, 2169.

Separate cell system would meet all requirements, 2097.

Loafers prefer to be in association, 2098-9.

Sometimes used as lodging-house, 2140, 2232-3.

CHILDREN. See WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Absence of, at Cuckfield and Haywards Heath, 2069, 2071, 2229-30; effect on casual wards, 2231.

Sometimes bad and verminous, 2099-100.

DETENTION.

Over Sunday should be enforced, 2287-93.

DIETARY OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Gruel an attraction to casuals, 2049-50.

Food often thrown away by casuals, 2221.

Whether it renders man unfit for work, 2365-6.

ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS.

Reduction in number of casual paupers attributed to, 2173-7, 2197.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

Casual paupers should be inspected weekly or fortnightly by medical officers simultaneously at all wards, 2078, 2308-12.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

At police stations or workhouses advisable, 2131.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Penal colonies advocated for vagrants who can but will not work, 2121-8; other colonies—not penal—might be established for men who would work if they could get it, 2129-30.

To be successful must probably be established on different lines to existing colonies, 2294-7.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Advocated, if made uniform and universal, 2091-2, 2095-6, 2118-9.

Casuals sometimes allowed to take unconsumed bread ration from casual ward, 2115-6.

No legal provision for, 2117.

Generally obtained by casual by begging from poor people, 2366-8.

POLICE.

Co-operation of, beneficial in dealing with vagrants, 2110-4, 2267-9, 2308.

Good effect of visits by, to casual wards, 2219-20, 2361-3.

PRISON.

Sometimes preferred to performing task in casual ward, 2054-62.

Diet in, better than in casual ward, 2355.

SEARCHING OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Strictly carried out at Cuckfield, 2075; pipes and matches returned on discharge, 2088.

Unpopular, 2084.

Money generally hidden before entering casual ward, 2085-7.

SENTENCES.

For refusing task at Cuckfield always twenty-eight days, 2048, 2060; magistrates support guardians by giving uniform sentence, 2197-9.

Short sentences (two to seven days) useless, 2199-201. Should be uniform, 2308.

MR. J. HOWE—cont.

TASKS OF WORK.

Stone pounding at Cuckfield, reduction in vagrancy attributed to, 2018-21, 2029, 2173-7, 2272-5; stone-pounder described, 2022-6; about 33 per cent. of casuals put to, 2027, 2073-4, 2171; a deterrent task, 2029, 2044-5, 2052-3; work easy and unskilled, 2035-7, 2184-9, 2250-1, 2254, 2337; cost of stone and price obtained for pounded material, 2038-40; task profitable—material utilised for making paths, concrete, etc., 2191-6, 2255; prosecutions for refusing, 2046-8, 2332-4, 2354-5; if illness or inability pleaded medical officer's certificate obtained before prosecuting, 2209-18, 2343-6, 2352-3; method of performing task, 2325-31.

Stone pounding now fairly uniform throughout Sussex, 2051, 2183.

Gardening and pumping as tasks, 2041-3.

Tasks should be uniform and universal, 2045, 2308, 2340-2; difficulty of securing uniform material, 2356-8.

Tasks should be irksome and unskilled, 2110.

Stone pounding more deterrent than stone breaking, 2248-9, 2335-8.

Stone breaking a skilled task, 2252-3; whether it would be profitable, 2356; flint the best stone, 2359-60.

Task for women at Cuckfield, 2320.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Should be enforced, if present system is continued, 2308.

VAGRANTS.

Classification into (1) those who can but will not work, (2) those who would work if they could get it, and (3) those incapable of work, 2120-1, 2129.

Often refuse work if offered, 2131-2, 2237-8.

Proportion of honest wayfarers under 3 per cent., 2133-4, 2234-6.

Attracted by large works, 2135-6; contractors should be required to provide accommodation for their workmen, 2136-9.

Not an underfed class, 2222.

Care of, should be transferred to Home Office or police, 2298-2308.

WAY-TICKETS.

Advocated, including allowance of bread at midday; tickets to be given to vagrants on discharge from casual wards, and bread to be obtained and eaten at recognised centre, 2091-6; system would prevent begging, 2092; would be an advantage to honest men, and a deterrent to loafer, 2093-5; should be uniform and universal, 2095-6; holder of ticket might be discharged next morning without task if system were made universal, 2246.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN AT CUCKFIELD.

Children fewer than in previous years, 2064-7, 2072, 2319.

Attention of National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children called to children not properly cared for, 2067, 2070, 2270-2, 2324; resulting in fewer women and children coming to workhouse, 2177, 2256.

Children sometimes sent to industrial school, 2257-9; but existing law not strong enough, 2276-86.

Children detained for inquiries if admitted alone, 2259.

Children should be taken away from habitual tramps, 2282, 2349; their parents might be sent to labour colonies, 2350-1.

Women received by female attendant, 2364.

WORKHOUSE MASTERS' ASSOCIATION.

Suggestions of, 2078, 2091-3, 2121-30, 2245, 2282, 2298-308, 2339-42, 2349, 2365.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Possible effect on vagrancy, 2020.

MR. JOHN HUTTON, M.P. (3921-4161).

Chairman of North Riding county council. Was for seven years chairman of North Riding quarter sessions, 3922-3.

ALMSGIVING.

Vagrants mainly supported by poorer classes, 4087-8.

If almsgiving ceased, vagrancy would probably cease also, 4089-90.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Under present system of relief to, police co-operation desirable, 3971-3.

CASUAL WARDS.

Treatment in, compared with that in prison, 3927.

Separate cell system and enforcement of regulations at Northallerton have reduced vagrancy, 4055-65.

Separate cell system probable cause of decrease in vagrancy in North Riding, 4068-71.

CONVICTIONS OF VAGRANTS.

Record of, should be kept, 4026-30.

DETENTION IN CASUAL WARDS.

Regulations have been effective to a certain extent, but a weakness of the system is the discretion allowed to workhouse masters, 3927.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

Useful; employers should supply information to police, 3927, 4136-7.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Advocated, 3927.

Belgian colonies too large; bad effect on inmates, 3927, 4083-5.

Professional vagrants should be committed to, 3939.

Should be under supervision of Home Office, with local inspection, 3948-51.

Contributions towards cost should be made from county rates, 4046-8.

Classification in; criminal class should be excluded and confirmed tramp kept apart from others, 4094-7, 4133.

Sexes should be kept separate, 4151.

Colonies should accommodate from 100 to 200 men, 4152.

Agricultural labour in, not essential, 4154-5.

PENAL WORKHOUSES.

As in Denmark, advocated, to which vagrants should be committed by quarter sessions after repeated convictions, 3927, 3989, 4000-17, 4140-7.

Danish penal workhouses described, 3991-4006.

POLICE.

Control of vagrants should be transferred to; large proportion of wayfarers are professional vagrants and semi-criminal, and police are proper persons to deal with them, 3927, 3952-5, 4072-81; whether it would be necessary to increase force, 4126; existing casual wards might be utilised by police, 3956-66, 4078-82; new wards would only be necessary in a few cases, and some wards might be closed, 3967, 3968-9; sergeant or inspector should have supervision of each casual ward, 3970, 4124-5; danger of police catching disease from vagrants, 4122-3; female tramps would be looked after in same way as female prisoners, 4127-8.

Men arrested in North Riding supplied at police stations with meals, 4041-4.

Discipline and management of police preferable to that of workhouse officials, 4045.

PRISON.

Increase in number of vagrants committed to, 3927, 3974.

Prison preferred to casual ward by vagrants; food, warmth, attendance, and exercise in prison superior, 3927, 3961-2; prison bath superior, 4117.

Prison discipline should be made more severe, 4120.

Treatment in, compared with that in casual wards, 3927.

Vagrant prisons should be penal workhouses, as in Denmark, 3989-91.

MR. JOHN HUTTON, M.P.—cont.

SENTENCES.

Short sentences harmful and not deterrent, 3927, 3980.
Seven to fourteen days the average in North Riding, but no understanding exists amongst the magistrates as to length of sentences, 3975-8.
Longer sentences advocated for vagrants, 3930.
Twenty-eight days sufficiently deterrent, as a first sentence, 3979.
Minimum sentence should be twenty-eight days, 3983-5.
"Binding over" suggested for first and second conviction, with long sentence on third conviction; as to recording sentences, 4026-33.

STATISTICS.

As to vagrancy in Northern district, 4059, 4066-7.
Same men counted again and again, 4134-5.
Not reliable in case of dishonest workhouse master, 4071.

TASKS OF WORK IN CASUAL WARDS.

Should be unskilled and suitable to district—stone breaking, oakum picking and wood chopping advocated, 3931-4.

VAGRANCY.

Decrease in North Riding between 1899 and 1903, due to adoption of separate cell system, carrying out of regulations, and activity of police, 3927, 4059-71, 4110-6; increase in Durham and Northumberland, 4067.
Existing system and treatment described, and alterations suggested, 3927.

VAGRANTS.

Should receive remuneration for work, even in casual wards, 3927.
Should be treated entirely apart from Poor Law, 3950.
A nuisance to cottagers in country districts, 3927, 4035-7.
Low standard of comfort of, 3986-8.
Not as a rule guilty of serious offences, 4038, 4091-3.
Frequently walk fifteen miles or more a day, 4034.
Should only be sent to penal establishment by competent court, 4140-7.
Whether temporary influx of, e.g. hop-pickers, should be provided for by county, 4148-50.

WAY-TICKET SYSTEM.

Gloucestershire plan favoured, but to be effective care of wayfarer should be transferred to police, and cost to county rate, 3927.
Possibility of ticket being used for begging purposes, 4024-5.
System should include bread ticket for mid-day meal, 4156-61.
Honest wayfarer should be provided by police with pass, entitling him to lodging and food at expense of county rate, 3927, 3937-8, 4018-21, 4077, 4101-6.
System would assist police in distinguishing bona fide cases, 3940-7.
Doubtful case would be a different kind of ticket, 4022-3.
Bona fide wayfarer would not object to go to police for ticket, 4075-6.
Difficulty as to identity of holder of ticket might be met by system of finger prints, 4098-100, 4129-32.
Man might be passed on by rail, 4138-9.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Would probably cease to lead vagrant life if men were taken off road, 4086.

WORKHOUSES.

If casual wards cease to be under Poor Law, casual applicant might be received at, 4107-9.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL H. B. ISAACSON (9048-9175).

Governor of Manchester prison, 9048.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Dislike supervision by ordinary paupers, 9168.

CASUAL WARDS.

Manchester wards well managed, 9168.

DIETARY OF PRISONERS.

Depends on length of sentence: seven day prisoners get A. diet, and fourteen day prisoners B. diet at end of seven days, 9059, 9063-4.

LABOUR COLONIES.

For habitual vagrants favoured, under control and at cost of State, 9077-88.

Inmates might be allowed to earn rewards as inducements to work, but all should be fed alike; persistently idle men should be sent to prison, 9089-94, 9169-71.

PRISON.

Preference for, to casual wards and workhouses, an old story, 9065-8, 9174-5.
Prisoners convicted of vagrancy should not be classed or associated with criminals, 9069-70, 9079.
Records of 137 offenders under Vagrancy Act: many not really criminals but of working class, 9070-7.
Accommodation in Manchester prison; practically always full, 9095-6.
Commitments to Manchester prison in one year; proportion for vagrancy offences, 9122-7.
Life in prison described, 9128-37.
Locking in cells for few days a deterrent, 9147-51.
Conditions in, have been somewhat ameliorated in recent years, 9152-6.
Prison is punitive for man committed for fourteen days, 9157.

SENTENCES.

Mostly seven and fourteen days for vagrants, 9060-2.

SLEEPING OUT.

Raids often made by police on sleepers out in Manchester, 9116-8.
Offenders should be sent to house of detention, not to prison, 9119-22.

TASKS OF WORK IN PRISON.

Oakum picking, the task in Manchester prison for prisoners of vagrant class: task varies according to quality of junk and physical condition of prisoners, 9050-8, 9097-9105.
Hours of work in Manchester prison: prisoner has nothing to do after task is finished, 9106-9.
Many prisoners exempted from work by medical certificate, 9110-3.
Punishments for refusal of task, 9114-5.
Men unfit for hard work put on industrial labour, 9134-7.
Treadmill, crank and stone breaking not now in existence at Manchester prison, 9138-44, 9172-3.
Oakum picking a greater punishment than treadmill, except to novice, 9145-6, 9153; a penal task, 9147.

VAGRANTS.

A large proportion not criminals, 9158-66.
Would not object to being controlled by police instead of by guardians, 9167.

CAPTAIN FULLARTON JAMES (7506-7747.)

Chief constable of Northumberland, 7506.

BEGGING.

Not many complaints as to begging by vagrants in Northumberland, 7712-3.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Seldom detained for two nights in Northumberland, 7541-2.

CAPTAIN FULLARTON JAMES—cont.

CASUAL WARDS.

- None in Scotland, 7608.
- Some in Northumberland might be closed if area of chargeability were extended, 7638-40.
- Police administration would be an advantage, 7641-5, 7707-9.
- Distance between certain wards in Northumberland, 7728-9.
- Might be placed under joint committee of guardians and members of standing joint committee, with policemen or ex-policemen as superintendents under control of chief constables, 7738-45.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

- Child vagrancy decreasing, 7531-4, 7715.
- No special action taken in Northumberland as to, 7717-8.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

- Inspection of, by police desirable, 7735.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

- At casual wards and police stations giving information as to work in neighbourhood, would be of advantage; description of book issued by chief constables of Scotland giving this information, 7601-7.

LABOUR COLONIES.

- Advocated for tramps refusing to work, 7674-8.

POLICE IN NORTHUMBERLAND.

- Act as assistant relieving officers in certain unions; system successful and should become general; possible difficulties, 7508-14, 7615-21, 7710-1, 7736.
- Inspect casual wards and common lodging-houses, but not regularly, 7515-8, 7622-5.
- Census of vagrants taken by; about 60 per cent. slept in casual wards, 7519-31, 7540-1, 7679, 7725.
- Telephonic communication between police stations very useful in dealing with vagrants, 7563-5.
- Ex-policemen as workhouse masters more successful than others in checking vagrancy, 7571-2.

PRISON.

- Preference for, not expressed by vagrants in Northumberland; no extra comforts in Newcastle prison, 7646-7.
- Cost of taking vagrant to, 7648-51.
- Sometimes helps vagrant on his way, 7652-6, 7732-4.

SEARCHING OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

- Whether absence of, leads to drunkenness, 7746-7.

SENTENCES.

- Seven days or under useless and costly; longer sentences the remedy, 7579-81, 7585, 7657-80.
- Majority of prisoners are serving short sentences, 7584.
- Recording first conviction, with subsequent long sentence, would repress vagrancy, and result in fewer admissions to prison, 7582-3.
- Minimum sentence of fourteen days suggested, 7661-3.

SLEEPING OUT.

- Not regarded as a serious offence, 7667-8.
- Practice more frequent in Scotland than in England, owing to absence of casual wards, 7669-71.

TASKS OF WORK.

- Wood chopping and stone breaking in Northumberland casual wards, but tasks seldom enforced, 7543-4.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

- Should be secured; county administration and county area of chargeability suggested; some casual wards might be closed, 7567-70, 7637-45, 7707-9.
- Regulations of Local Government Board not enforced in many unions; workhouse masters sometimes slack in dealing with vagrants, making wards popular; difficulties of small unions, 7570-1, 7626-36.

CAPTAIN FULLARTON JAMES—cont.

VAGRANCY.

- Considerable increase in, in recent years; attributed to termination of war, slackness of trade, and lower wages, 7554-8, 7714-6.

VAGRANTS.

- Average rate of walking of, 7528.
- Estimated total number in England and Wales, and Scotland, on basis of Northumberland census, 7546-53.
- Complete census of, for England might be taken with little difficulty, 7537-9.
- Found more in agricultural than in mining and manufacturing districts, 7551.
- Commit minor offences in great number, which give much trouble, but not crimes of violence; gipsies commit more violent crimes than other vagrants, 7559-61, 7664-6, 7680-1.
- Cases of intimidation by, not now frequent, 7562, 7566.
- Pedlars and hawkers; system of granting and renewing certificates needs improvement; possible effect on vagrancy and crime, 7573-8, 7682-7706.
- Proportion of men bona fide in search of work small, 7586-7, 7675.
- Vagrants classified into (1) incorrigible or work-shy, the great majority, who are mostly able-bodied; (2) travelling labourers, who work only two or three days and then drink; (3) pedlars, who do little harm, 7587-92.
- Vagrants a nuisance requiring repression; detention in labour colonies advocated for those refusing to work, 7672-8.
- Proportion sleeping in casual wards in Northumberland on a particular night, 7679.
- Commit few offences against poor law, 7719-24.
- Number of gipsies in Northumberland, 7726.
- Control over gipsies not desired; Inclosure Act sufficient remedy, 7727, 7730-1.
- Finger-print system of identification of, favoured, 7737.

WAY-TICKETS.

- Gloucestershire system—if made general—not likely to do much good, but it would prevent begging, and police would be brought in closer touch with vagrants, 7593-600, 7609-14.

WOMEN.

- Number of women on road small as compared with number of men, 7535-6.

MR. H. A. JURY.

- Chief inspector of Common Lodging-Houses under the London County Council. See SIR SHIRLEY MURPHY.

MR. BROOK T. KITCHIN, F.R.I.B.A., (9878-10147).

- Has been Architect to Local Government Board for four years; was assistant architect for eight years previously, 9878-9.

CASUAL WARDS.

- Schemes for erection of, how initiated and considered; often rejected by Local Government Board on account of cost, 9880-90, 9910-5, 9963, 10145-6.
- A model plan might be of advantage, but, on the whole, present system preferred, 9891-3, 9901.
- Difference in cost per bed in London and country; how accounted for, 9894-8, 9916-31.
- Requirements of Local Government Board as to separate cells; no difference in requirements between London and country, 9901-5, 9935-6, 9932-3, 10055, 10087-93, 9961, 10125-8.
- Locking cells; inmates allowed out if they wish it, 9906-9.
- Loans for new wards repayable in thirty years, 9934.
- Cost of, in London, a charge on Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, 9937-8.

MR. BROOK T. KITCHIN.—*cont.*CASUAL WARDS.—cont.

Economy always considered by Local Government Board, not (because of Metropolitan Common Poor Fund) especially in London, 9939-41, 10057, 10069-71. Hackney wards described; cost excessive, 9942-56, 10002-6, 10079-86.

Provision of, in London very costly; 15 per cent. of cost due to requirements of London Building Act, 9957-64, 10112-8.

Mostly paid for out of loans, a system leading to extravagance, 9985-7.

Cost of, at Hackney and at other unions, 10007-24, 10103-7, 10120-2.

Accommodation at Poplar wards, 10021.

Buildings in floors not cheap owing to requirements of London Building Act as to fireproof floors, 10025-7.

Expenditure on, has increased of late years; but not the requirements of Local Government Board, 10042-7. Bye-laws of local authority are independent of Local Government Board requirements, 10048-9.

Guardians in London and big towns not inclined to economy, 10050-4.

Drainage arrangement a serious matter in London, 10056.

First estimates uncertain and unreliable, and generally exceeded, misleading the ratepayers; whether loans should be limited to original estimate, 10058-68, 10142-4.

Increased original expenditure sometimes reduces cost of upkeep, 10072-5.

No objection to working bunks being in open air, 10094-5.

If women were treated separately in workhouse, cost of wards would not be largely reduced, 10096-8.

Accommodation for staff and administration costly, 10098-108.

London and provincial wards compared, 10108-10.

No material reduction in cost can be made, if cellular system continued, 10111.

Cost of administration increases when wards are on site separate from workhouse, 10123-4.

Wards opened in recent years, 10127-35.

Local Government Board might fix average cost for London, but it would not be entirely satisfactory, and would be difficult in country, 10136-41.

Wards might be used for ordinary workhouse inmates, 10147.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Plan of suggested colony; average cost per inmate for buildings, 9899-900.

Lingfield colony; cost of buildings, 9967-73.

Durability of wooden buildings; advantage of creosoted wood, 9974-84.

In foreign colonies buildings erected by colonists themselves, 9988-90.

No objection to four rows of beds in, 9991-6.

No objection to wooden buildings in country, with safeguards in case of fire; difference in cost about 20 per cent., 10032-5.

If experimental, temporary buildings of wood and iron recommended, 10036-41, 10076-8.

WORKHOUSES.

Distinction between ordinary workhouse and test house, 9997, 10000-1.

Unions may combine to build joint workhouse, 9998-9.

London Building Act applies to workhouse buildings, increasing cost of construction, 10028-31.

Cost of certain test houses for able-bodied men, 10119.

MR. DAVID LAMB (6101-398, 6985-7505).

One of the chief officials of the Salvation Army; has been an active officer in the Salvation Army for over twenty years, 6103; was governor of Hadleigh colony for five years, 7339. Is a guardian of the Rochford union, 6223.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Special census taken of men in London casual wards; summary of census and inquiries, 6106-21.

Not anxious to lead casual ward life, 6360.

MR. DAVID LAMB.—cont.

CASUAL WARDS.

Wards at Rochford workhouse unsatisfactory, 6223-6. Cost of building new wards a serious item to country unions, 6227-9.

Must be retained for some time, but should be gradually eliminated, 6230-2, 6237-42.

CHILDREN.

How dealt with by Salvation Army, 6210-3.

EMIGRATION.

Advantages of an organisation like Salvation Army in dealing with, 6163.

Not many vagrants have been emigrated by Salvation Army, but on the whole they have done well, 6164-7; numbers sent from Hadleigh, 7104.

Emigrants in trouble in Canada would return to Salvation Army authorities there, 6308-10.

Instance of successful emigrant to New Zealand, 7354-5.

HADLEIGH LAND AND INDUSTRIAL COLONY.

An absolutely voluntary colony, 6132.

Accommodation at, and number of inmates received, 6139, 7267, 7357-60.

Staff at; some promoted colonists, 6140-1, 7337-45, 7206-11.

Work mostly agricultural and brick-making, but other trades are taught with success, 6142-54, 6339-41.

Instances of successful colonists, 7353-5.

References to, in book "The Story of a Great Endeavour;" "able-bodied" construed as "willingness"; mark of prison no bar to admission; age no bar; aim of colony, 6154-62, 6329-35, 6169-76, 6180.

Places of skill or trust open to colonists, 6173, 7309-14.

Results of training in, described, 6173-6.

Classification in, largely in hands of governor, 6177-8.

Certain criminals might not be admitted, 6179-80.

Has been in existence about fourteen years, 6181.

No special accommodation for children, but cottages are provided for married people, 6208.

Men with families; how dealt with, 6209, 7326-36.

Cases not followed up, as a rule, after discharge from colony; impracticable and undesirable to do so, 6295-6311, 7355-6.

Cost of colony; capital expenditure added to by purchase of land for prospective improvement, 6342-8, 7346, 7389-98.

Not a vagrant colony; more for unemployed, 6349-50.

Not many inmates leave without notice, 6361-3.

Inmates mostly wear their own clothes, 6364-6.

Buildings described; cost of, much less than buildings at Rochford union workhouse, 6367-82, 6376-9.

Competition with local shops occasionally complained of; neighbouring farmers sometimes benefited by colony, 6385-98, 7268-76.

Cases received in, from Broadmoor for compulsory detention; payments received for such cases, 6991-4.

Payments made by guardians for men sent to; in some cases men earn their keep and guardians cease to pay, 6992-9, 7383.

Arrangements for medical attendance at, 7015-6, 7228-9.

Arrangements for religious services, 7017-23, 7260-5.

Inmates of London casual wards occasionally received, but most London guardians send ordinary workhouse inmates, 7044-52.

Class of men received at colony; casual ward class would be refused, 7089-91.

Boards of guardians sending fewer cases; probable reasons, 7053-7.

Men returning to union from colony not always prosecuted for refusing to maintain themselves, 7058-60.

Particulars as to certain men sent to colony by Woolwich guardians, 7061-76.

Men must be willing to work; how willingness is decided, 7077-8.

Every likely applicant would be placed in probation colony, 7079-84.

Men often sent away for want of room, 7081-2.

Men not generally admitted off road except through city colony, 7085-7.

MR. DAVID LAMB—*cont.*HADLEIGH LAND AND INDUSTRIAL COLONY—cont.

Percentage of successes claimed as result of treatment in; particulars as to, 7103-24, 7234-8, 7361.
 Women and children employed for fruit picking, etc., 7209.
 Food at; minimum fixed; colonists can purchase additions out of earnings, 7212-8.
 System of tokens preferred to money, 7219-23.
 Men refusing to work discharge themselves, 7224-7, 7239.
 Work provided for partially disabled men, 7230-2.
 Colony consists of receiving farm and main farm, 7233-5.
 Class of work done by "gentlemen's brigade" (doctors, solicitors, etc.), 7266.
 Earnings of colonists; if banked with Salvation Army interest given, 7277-9.
 Discharged colonists sometimes cause nuisance by loafing around colony and village, 7280-3.
 Visits of police to colony discouraged, 7284-7.
 Drink the chief cause of inmates having fallen from good positions, 7288.
 Certain inmates paid for by relatives or friends, 7289-95.
 Percentage of men admitted from workhouses, 7296-7; percentage for whom no payment is received, 7298.
 Men sent by Mansion House and "unemployed" funds unsatisfactory, and had to be kept separate, as they demoralised others; their families were not received, 7299-308, 7315-25.
 Inebriate home at, kept separate, but some inmates work on colony, 7347-50.
 Average value of inmate's labour, 7351-4.
 Accounts of colony; valuation of stock, etc.; probable loss on colony, and cost per man, etc., 7346, 7362-403.
 Only a few men received from Salvation Army shelters and workshops, 7414-9.
 Discharged inmates have fares paid to place whence they came, 7453.
 Inmates ultimately maintain themselves, 7472-4.
 Hours of work in colony, 7478-80.
 More inmates in winter than in summer, although less ordinary work is available, 7481-5.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Advocated for London vagrants, with compulsory detention, 6125-31.
 Voluntary colonies should be established apart from, but in close touch with, compulsory colonies, and under one administration, 6133-4, 7204-5.
 Many men would voluntarily enter compulsory colony, as in case of inebriate retreat, 6134-8, 6254-5, 7088.
 Many men now in prison might be transferred to, 6169.
 Children of colonist should be taken from him, but placed near colony, 6207.
 Whether man compulsorily detained would be a prisoner, 6256-9.
 Treasury might contribute towards cost of maintenance of vagrants detained, 6260-1.
 Probable number to be detained, 6262-5.
 Establishment of colonies would have deterrent effect on vagrancy, 6266-7.
 Whether, like workhouses, colonies would be objected to, 6267-78.
 Colonies worked by charitable institutions preferable, but State colony might be necessary for hopeless cases: philanthropic management more successful than official management, 6279-82, 6287, 7096-102.
 Suggested period of detention one to three years—hopeless ones for life, 6283-6, 6315.
 Result of dealing with the first 10,000 cases—the "arrears"—not hopeful, 6288, 6353.
 Foreign colonies not found to be reformatory; colonists find it difficult to obtain employment outside, 6289-94, 7166-71.
 Advantages of compulsory detention, 6312-5, 6352.
 Teaching a trade in, would be expensive, but it is the only chance for hopeless men, 6316-31.
 Farm colony idea not a new one, 6336-8.
 Colonies should be industrial as well as agricultural, 6340-1.
 Responsible authority should arrange to send cases to philanthropic colony like Salvation Army colony; cost, how to be charged, 6354-8.

MR. DAVID LAMB—*cont.*LABOUR COLONIES—cont.

No difficulty anticipated as to safe custody of inmates of voluntary colony, 6359-63.
 Buildings should be cheap, and exempt from building bye-laws, 6383-4.
 Men committed by magistrates could be sent at once to separate farm at Leigh Park; they would be kept separate from existing colonists and under stricter supervision, 6985-8, 7000-7; farm would be subject to Government inspection, 7014; accommodation at Leigh Park, 7257-9.
 If Salvation Army scheme carried out, much more accommodation would be required: cost of fresh sites and other accommodation could be provided for in same way as in scheme for light railways, 6989-90.
 Industries to be established must be determined largely by locality, 7008.
 Difficulty of establishing industry lessened by inmates being sent for term of years, 7009-13.
 Intermediate institution between colony and free life required: "discharge machinery," 7170-5, 7454-5.
 Work in, decreases naturally in course of time, 7194-5.
 Costly permanent buildings not desirable, as development of colony cannot be foreseen, 7194-203.
 No difficulty anticipated with men refusing to work, 7239-43.
 Eighty per cent. of the casual ward habituals would probably enter colony voluntarily for one year: at end of year they could be recommitted, 7244-56.
 Religious services at: ministers could have access, 7260-5.
 Probable cost of establishing: cost might be met by scheme, based on Light Railways Act, the State finding the capital expenditure, 7379-81, 7458-66, 7489-92.
 Earnings of colonists should be controlled, 7456-7.
 Appointment of officers, if State provided colony, 7467-8.
 Regulations for conduct of inmates should be drawn up and approved by Secretary of State, 7469-71.
 Colonist should earn his food and have a choice beyond a certain minimum, 7493-502.
 Bearing of, on unemployed question, 7502.

PRISON.

Not now deterrent, and often preferred to casual wards, 6189.

SALVATION ARMY CITY COLONIES.

Are workshops in town, 7024-9.
 Men sometimes admitted from shelters, 7034.
 Inmates occasionally sent to Hadleigh, and vice versa, 7041-3.
 Not popular with loafers, because of task of work exacted, 7093-5.
 Are free shelters provided for destitute men, 7422, 7425-7.

SALVATION ARMY SHELTERS IN LONDON.

Number of shelters, accommodation at, and average number relieved, 6182-3, 6186, 7411-4.
 Shelters are graded: payment varies from 2d. to 6d., 6184-5.
 None are free; all supposed to pay their way; food sometimes supplied free, 7030-3, 7165, 7176-84, 7404-5, 7423, 7430.
 Intended for casual workers, not loafers, 7034-40.
 Cheap food and shelters render loafing easy; whether loafing is increased by these means, 7185-9.
 Might be used as receiving house for habitual night loafers, 7190-3.
 Accounts of, show a profit, 7404-10, 7429-30.
 As feeders for labour colony, not necessary, 7416-9.
 Occasionally give free shelter, 7428.

SENTENCES.

Short sentences useless and expensive, 6187-90.
 Difficulty of following a vagrant if system of recording convictions is adopted, 6191-6.
 Vagrant would probably prefer option of going into labour colony for a year to one or three months' imprisonment, or to being sent up for trial, 6194-5.
 Indeterminate sentences favoured, 7475-7.

MR. DAVID LAMB—cont.

SHELTERS AND FREE MEALS.

- Objections to free shelters, 7420-5, 7431-2.
- Lack of shelters would be a danger, 7433-6.
- London shelters full: the need of others, 7437-40.
- Institutions giving free meals in London, 7441-4.
- Make it possible for sleeping out class to continue their existence, but also lessen the evils of that class, 7445-52.
- Must be continued, under existing social conditions, 7488.

SLEEPING OUT.

- Estimated number of persons sleeping out in London on a particular night; 80 or 90 per cent. would welcome opportunity of working, 6123-4.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

- Impossible to secure, if treatment is left in hands of boards of guardians, 6218.

VAGRANCY.

- Bill of 1904 embodies suggestions of Salvation Army; Act of 1824 should be extended; classes to which Act should apply, 6188-9, 7147-64.
- Central authority should be created for whole country to deal with vagrancy, either through police or Poor Law authorities; proposed system described, 6191-3, 6215-22, 6229, 6240-66.
- Policy of Salvation Army based on classification and individual treatment, 6214.
- Industrial conditions, etc., affecting vagrancy, 7486-7.
- Necessity for dealing with, a matter of urgency, owing to its bearing on the unemployed question, 7502-4.

VAGRANTS.

- Proportion of men bona fide in search of work, difficult to arrive at; perhaps 5 per cent., 6105-6, 6249; number small; workhouse masters treat them specially, but practice interferes with uniformity, 6249-51.
- Modern conditions as to railways, etc., should prevent existence of class of wanderers, 6236.
- Habitual vagrants should be detained; some would voluntarily submit to detention, 6252-8, 7088, 7091-2.
- Advantages of compulsory detention, 6312-5.
- More hopeless and hardened as a class than the "unemployed," 6351-3.

WAY-TICKETS.

- Modification of continental system possibly desirable, but not at present practicable; men would enter labour colony without ticket; system would be more effective in country than in London, 6197-206, 6233-6, 6245, 7125-30.
- Objections to; implication that State must find work; casual ward class do not want it; discrimination between bona fide working man and habitual vagrant a difficulty; absence of means of identification; cheaper to send men on by rail or boat, 6245-8, 7130-46.
- Decent workmen would not object to go to police for tickets, 7139-45.

WOMEN.

- Career of women dealt with by Salvation Army can be followed up for three years, 6311.

MR. J. G. LEGGE (4465-4643).

- Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools, 4465.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

- Vagrant children in industrial schools stated by superintendents generally to be below average in mental capacity, undersized and underfed, more willing to work in shops and on land than in schoolroom, but less inclined to settled occupation than other children, 4469-75, 4477-9; they turn out well, but not so well as average inmate, 4476.

MR. J. G. LEGGE—cont.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS—cont.

- Children of gipsies, etc., in industrial schools few in number, but described as never settling down when they leave, 4495-7.
- Industrial Schools Acts and other existing Acts probably sufficient to deal with, but any uncertainty might be removed by a definite enactment dealing with children of habitual vagrants, 4575-610.
- Practice of taking control of children away from parents a deterrent to parents—example showing this, 4611-8.
- Should be dealt with under Industrial Schools Acts, not under Poor Law; interference of parents less likely, 4619-28.
- Such children occasionally committed, not as vagrants but for larceny, 4508-9.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS AND REFORMATORIES.

- Only a small percentage of inmates are vagrant children; numbers in Cumberland and Durham schools, 4467-8, 4502-9, 4498.
- Inmates with few exceptions committed to by magistrates, 4480.
- General results of training in, satisfactory, in spite of difficulties with parents, etc., 4485-94.
- Spare accommodation in, attributed to lull in working of Industrial Schools Acts since passing of Education Act of 1902, 4481-3.
- Treatment in, the most practical way of dealing with vagrant children, 4499-501.
- Vagrant children easily distinguished from others on admission, 4518-20.
- No legal obstacle, though administrative objection, to admission of infants to, 4524-5.
- Cost of maintenance in, recovered from parents in some cases, 4526.
- Cost of industrial schools per head; London schools very expensive, 4527-36, 4633-4.
- Size of schools—accommodation should not exceed 200, 4357-41.
- Vagrant children should be treated with others, not separately, 4542-6.
- Inmates of reformatories do not now try to escape, owing to introduction of drill and athletics, 4551-2, 4555-8.
- Reformatories and industrial schools mostly under voluntary committees with Government supervision, 4559-61.
- Schools under local authorities more expensive than those under private management, 4562-4.
- Voluntary local management with co-operation of local authority preferred to that of State, 4565-70, 4573-4.
- Legislation leading up to Act of 1866, 4575.
- Industries in, interfere but little with outside labour, 4638-43.
- Magistrates loth to send children to, especially vagrant children, 4588-9.

LABOUR COLONIES.

- Experiment well worth trying; reformatory school with land for cultivation, as a model; work could be done for surrounding farmers, but outside labour should not be interfered with more than is necessary, 4510-7, 4533-4, 4565-72, 4629-32, 4635-7, 4643.
- Cost in, should not be so high as industrial school or reformatory, 4534, 4548-50.
- How inmates might be kept interested, 4553-5.

STATISTICS.

- As to vagrant children in reformatories and industrial schools, 4502-7, 4521-3.

VAGRANTS.

- Children should be sent to industrial schools, and adults to labour colonies, 4547.
- Many are between twenty and thirty years of age, 4553.
- Charge of, should be transferred to education or police authority, 4623.
- Habitual vagrant should be punished for his vagrancy, 4607-10.

MR. C. S. LOCH, D.C.L. (8545-8851).

Has been Secretary of Charity Organisation Society since 1874. Has visited labour colonies in Germany, 8677.

ARMY.

Many pensioners and Reserve men in a certain London workhouse, 8653-6.

BEGGING.

Figures for, compared with vagrancy, 8553-5.
Law against not strongly enforced since 1893, 8554.
Statistics as to begging and sleeping out offences during past ten years, 8563-4; analysis of figures for certain counties, 8575-83.
Effect of Dorset bread-ticket system on begging offences, 8565-74.

CASUAL WARDS.

Systematic visitation of, recommended, 8702.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Inmates of, should be "identified," 8633-4.
Sanitary condition of, in London and provinces; power of licensing possessed by London county council should be given to local authorities in provinces, 8737-40.
Frequenters of, fill lowest grade of labour, 8666.
Partly used by men of same class as those frequenting shelters, 8658.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Foreign colonies not very successful: in Germany power of detention sometimes desired, 8677-81, 8749, 8685.
Colonies never paying institutions, 8682-4.
Separation of ex-convicts from other inmates, 8686.
Penal colonies advocated for criminals, under Prison Commissioners and Home Office, 8687-9, 8692; other colonies might be under supervision of Home Office, as in case of industrial schools, 8690-3.
Period of detention in: first sentences important, when man is "corrigible," 8769-73, 8828-30.
Would be remedial in case of young men, and a deterrent for the rest, 8716-8.
"Sweeping the streets" into, not approved, 8736-7.
Vagrants should be sent to, by justices in petty sessions rather than by quarter sessions: quarter sessions might send incorrigible rogues to colonies, 8764-8.
Establishment of penal colonies would be expensive, 8738-41.
Voluntary colonies useful in certain cases, but they should be under definite regulations, 8774-5, 8835-7.
Voluntary colonies should only be started under authority, and should not receive public subsidies, 8788-91.
Size and classification of colonies, 8796-800.
Difficulty experienced by inmates of foreign colonies in obtaining employment outside, 8801.
Children of colonists should be sent to industrial school, 8809-11.

POLICE.

Whether control of vagrancy should be transferred to, 8792-5.

PRISON.

Whether a deterrent to "corrigible" vagrant, 8831-4.

SENTENCES.

No uniformity in London in cases of begging and sleeping out, 8584-90.
Short sentences of a few days neither a deterrent nor a cure, 8694.
Minimum for habitual vagrants should be a year, 8695-6.
A month should be minimum for begging and sleeping out; "defective" man might be treated partly as invalided, and sentence lengthened for his own good; subsequent sentences should end in labour colony, 8697-9, 8711-5.
Indefinite sentences: difficulties of, 8744-8.
Uniformity might be secured by Home Office circular after amendment of Vagrancy Act, 8750-9.

MR. C. S. LOCH—cont.

SHELTERS.

Vagrancy and crime fostered by; history of certain persons using shelters, etc., 8607-23, 8635-6, 8657-62.
Indiscriminate shelters strongly objected to, 8622-3.
Should be officially inspected and classified, including Rowton Houses, and the inmates "identified"; new shelters should not be started without official authority, 8624-32, 8671-3.
Bad effect of shelters in Whitechapel on pauperism of district, 8642-8.
Effect of "King's tent" established by Church Army: men attracted from common lodging-houses, etc., 8649-52, 8784-7.
Every case admitted to, should be investigated; probable results, 8659.
Shelter system shows man how to live without work, 8667-9.

SLEEPING OUT.

Analysis of figures for ten years; reduction in London since 1898, 8563-83.
Law against, should be strictly enforced; difference of opinion among magistrates a difficulty; uniformity might be secured by Home Office circular, 8750-5.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Would be a great advantage in London, 8653.
Absolute uniformity of administration in both rural and crowded districts not desirable, 8704.
Uniformity impossible under present administration by boards of guardians, 8705.
Whether uniformity could be secured by police control, 8792-3.

VAGRANCY.

Effect of South African war on; increase due to lapse of work, not to returning soldiers, 8556-60.
Inquiries by Charity Organisation Society as to; recommendations, 8641-2, 8702-3.
Definition of vagrancy, 8662-5.
Vagrancy Act should be amended in view of modern needs, 8686, 8699, 8754-9.
French law as to, explained, 8742-3.
Unemployed question; its bearing on vagrancy; report of Charity Organisation Society, 8802-6, 8838-9.
"Ins and outs;" how to deal with; practically of same class as vagrants, 8805-8.
Effect of, on labour market; settled and unsettled vagrancy, 8820-4.

VAGRANTS.

Estimated number in England and Wales and Scotland; 8550-4, 8561-2, 8816-9, 8825-7.
Require more stringent supervision, either by Home Office or Local Government Board, 8605-7.
Gipsies; many encamp on Surrey commons, causing a nuisance; difficulty of dealing with them, 8591-8604.
Have intimate knowledge of districts providing shelters, soup, etc., 8616-21.
Percentage of honest men who would accept work, 8670.
Discrimination in treatment of, between ex-convicts and others should be made, 8674-6.
Identification and registration desirable; finger-prints, 8700-2, 8759-63.
One supervising body in each county suggested, 8703, 8709-10.
Numbers would decrease if police rigidly carried out laws against begging and sleeping out, but some sort of refuges would be necessary, 8706-8.
Weak-minded vagrants a numerous class; in some cases compulsory detention approved, 8719-24.
Some form of segregation necessary in certain cases, 8725-6.
Relief to, not at present costly, 8727.
Should only be detained under judicial sentences, the offence being habitual vagrancy, 8727-35.
Control of; joint committee of police and guardians in each county suggested, 8792-5.
Census of; what to include, and how to be taken, 8840-51.

MR. C. S. LOCH—cont.

WAY-TICKETS.

Berkshire and Gloucestershire systems taken by themselves, not favoured; reasons, 8776-7, 8780-1.
German system not possible in England, 8778-9.
Dorset system (food tickets) not objected to, 8782-3.

WORKHOUSE.

Admission to, not always better than tramping for man out of work, 8838-9.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Very few on tramp compared with number of men, 8812-5.

MR. H. LOCKWOOD (10438-10609).

General Inspector of Local Government Board. Has been General Inspector in Metropolitan district for eleven years, and was previously Inspector in Midlands and in Eastern Counties, 10438-9, 10537-8.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

In London, a distinct class from those using shelters and common lodging-houses; spend greater part of year in town; numbers identified as habituais, and their ages, 10464, 10503.

Single authority to deal with, required in London, 10498, 10520-1; for a county outside London, whether it might be a joint committee of guardians, 10523-5.

CASUAL WARDS.

Outside London, not visited by identification officers as in London, 10522.

Provision of, not really a Poor Law matter, 10530-6.

In country, mostly within workhouse precincts, and police control would probably cause friction, 10565-6.
Immediate control of, should be in hands of police; inmates might perhaps be regarded as prisoners, 10570-5.

If wards remain under guardians, police might visit wards and see that task is imposed, 10576-83.

Diet and accommodation in country wards not generally satisfactory, 10596.

Cost of, should be county charge, and unnecessary wards should be closed, 10598-10600.

Wards might be let to standing joint committee of county who might appoint workhouse master as special constable for management, 10601-6.

CASUAL WARDS IN LONDON.

System of inspection by visiting officers; object, to identify vagrants liable to detention, and partly to ensure uniformity of management, 10440, 10443, 10516-8.

Difficulties of transferring management of, to police, asylums board, London county council, or joint committee of guardians, 10458-9.

May sometimes be used by persons employed in neighbourhood of wards, but probably not to any considerable extent, 10470-1.

Systematically used by a body of London casuals, 10472-3.

Wards required in each union by Houseless Poor Acts, but system precludes any general arrangement of wards for convenience of Metropolis, 10475-7.

Cost of, a charge on Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, 10477.

Average cost of, heavy; cheaper wards could be erected but for London Building Act, 10478-81.

Refusals of admission to; large number of refusals at certain wards, probably owing to popularity of associated wards and to less stringent carrying out of regulations, 10482-7.

Thavies Inn wards; refusals numerous owing to shelters, etc., in neighbourhood; no evidence as to what becomes of persons refused admission to wards, 10483-4.

Congregation of applicants outside wards sometimes causes nuisance; objection to notice being put up that wards are full, 10488-91.

MR. H. LOCKWOOD—cont.

CASUAL WARDS IN LONDON—cont.

Casuals refused admission probably not of the class that sleeps out, 10492-4.

Wards mostly conveniently situated for transfer to another authority, 10498, 10566.

Locking in of inmates not unreasonable where bells or other means of communication are provided; otherwise separate cells useless, 10499-502.

Central organisation provided to some extent by system of visiting officers, and by Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, 10519.

DETENTION OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Casuals not detained in London in all cases for the statutory period; superintendent has discretion to discharge vagrant on morning following admission, 10441-2, 10444-5.

Detention in casual wards deterrent in country, but not in London; increased powers suggested; accommodation and diet better in London wards, 10465-9, 10556-60.

GUARDIANS.

Different boards may combine for purpose of providing schools, asylums, etc., but arrangement not always successful, 10526-9.

Primary duty of, to look after resident poor, 10530-1.

Sometimes discuss questions allied to general politics, 10452-3.

Many individual guardians pay little in way of rates, 10462-3.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Experiment should be tried for habitual vagrants, but with power of compulsory detention for three months at least, 10554-5, 10587-9.

Voluntary colonies not favoured, 10584.

Existing colonies not proved to be reformatory, 10585-6.

Colonies might be graded; in one class men might commit themselves for given period, 10590-2.

POLICE.

Control of vagrants by, would probably mean enlarged force and increased expense, 10564-5, 10607-9.

Honest wayfarer might object to police questioning, but reason for objection not apparent, 10567.

SHELTERS.

Act as feeders to workhouses, infirmaries, and casual wards, 10550-3.

SLEEPING OUT.

A considerable number sleep out in London, but they are separate from class frequenting casual wards, 10492-5.

Police control of casual wards would aid in stopping practice, 10496-7.

TASKS OF WORK.

Casual wards unpopular where task imposed, 10580.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Treatment not uniform in London; detention, task, and diet vary; treatment left to discretion of guardians, 10444-6, 10449-54, 10474.

No uniformity in country; some unions too poor to provide proper wards; uniformity can be secured only by a single authority for each county, 10447-8, 10523-5, 10565, 10572.

Could not be secured in London by regulations or pressure of Local Government Board, but only by transferring management to one authority, 10455-7.

Police would be more successful in securing than a popularly elected body, 10562-3, 10568-9.

Greater uniformity desirable, both for vagrant and for public; one result would be better food and accommodation for vagrant, 10593-7.

VAGRANCY.

Preference for nomadic life always shewn by a percentage of the community, 10539.

VAGRANT CHILDREN.

Number not large; children of habituais might be taken away from parents, and in some cases sent to industrial schools, but parents should be made to contribute towards cost, 10546-9.

MR. H. LOCKWOOD—cont.

VAGRANTS.

Relief of, an unattractive object, 10460.

Old and infirm vagrants; suggestions for dealing with; detention in workhouse pending inquiry as to settlement; discharge only with consent of governing body, etc., 10503-12.

Transfer of control of, to another authority would be welcomed by most guardians, 10540-2; present system hard on smaller unions, 10543-5.

WORKHOUSES.

Proposal that detention or discharge be determined by governing body; whether practicable, 10510-2.

Money payments to inmates, as in Denmark, for good conduct, 10513-5.

CAPTAIN HARDY MCHARDY, R.N. (6764-6858).

Chief constable of Ayrshire, 6764.

BEGGING IN SCOTLAND.

Simple begging an offence under Burgh Police Act, but not in rural districts, 6783.

"Masterful" begging; Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, contains provisions dealing with certain aggravations of vagrancy, but does not touch simple begging; begging attended with abusive words, or behaviour not amounting in a legal sense to intimidation, not punishable in Scotland, 6784-90.

Simple begging should not be an offence in the absence of provision for the relief of able-bodied but destitute poor, 6808.

If provision is made for food and shelter as the Ayrshire system gives, begging might be made an offence, 6847-8.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

Action taken by Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children in case of child coming within Act, 6830.

Children would benefit if taken away from parents; but number might be large and not a few parents would be glad to get rid of children, 6831-2.

FOOD AND LODGING TICKETS.

Supplied to vagrants in Ayrshire; system described, 6765-77, 6844.

POLICE IN AYRSHIRE.

Keep record of all vagrants "challenged," 6778-80.

Do not give shelter or food except under organised system of relief tickets; but constables sometimes buy tickets themselves to use in relief of destitute wayfarers, 6795-6, 6803.

Police stations not used as shelters, etc., 6797-9.

Do not act as relieving officers, 6818.

Pedlars' certificates; how issued, 6822-7.

Entire control of vagrants should not be handed over to police, 6840-3.

POOR LAW IN SCOTLAND.

Able-bodied and their dependents receive no relief, 6819.

SLEEPING OUT.

In barns, etc. (not on public road), effectually dealt with under Trespass Act, 6791-4, 6819-21.

VAGRANCY.

County councils empowered by Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1899 to make bye-laws for repression of vagrancy, but bye-laws left in abeyance owing to legal decisions, 6834-9.

Vagrancy an evil that State should deal with; professional vagrants should be penalised, 6853-8.

VAGRANTS IN AYRSHIRE.

System established in 1885 for giving food and shelter to tramps now very little used, but still useful, 6765-6, 6772; tickets bought by public from charitable society, and given to vagrants instead of alms; tickets exchanged by police for orders on lodging-houses, 6767-9, 6773-4; inconvenience sometimes caused by many vagrants applying to one house for tickets, 6770-1; tickets for lodging-house more sought after than food tickets, 6773; applicants sometimes searched by police, 6775; system occasionally abused, 6776; under this system, food not so liable to be sold or thrown away, as commonly happens with food given direct, 6850-1; no other mode of relief in county, 6800; working of system described, 6844-51; system does not encourage vagrancy, as police have discretionary power to refuse orders, 6846-52.

CAPTAIN HARDY MCHARDY, R.N.—*cont.*VAGRANTS IN AYRSHIRE—cont.

In Ayr, trial has been made of giving tickets exchangeable for something more than bread, but the slight improvement in relief is found to attract vagrants, 6777-8.

Police sometimes recognise applicants as being "wanted," 6781-3.

Many are searchers for work, but are not regular workers, 6801-2, 6314-7.

All vagrants "challenged" by police, 6779-80.

Not recruited from children of vagrants, but mostly broken down workmen, 6833.

System for identification of those convicted of vagrancy in other districts, such as by finger-prints, would be invaluable, 6828-9.

Varying numbers of vagrants; causes of, 6804.

More than half are Scottish; the remainder English and Irish, mostly Irish, 6805.

Vagrants attracted by large railway works, etc.; some merely hangers-on to the navvies, 6806-7.

English system of relief not favoured; if provision for assisting able-bodied men is made, habitual vagrants should be treated with severity, 6808-10.

Census taken by Ayrshire police very complete; how taken, 6811-3.

WAY-TICKET SYSTEM.

None in Scotland, 6845.

MR. G. W. MEATS (982-1059).

Vice-chairman of Hereford board of guardians, 983.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

About 20 per cent. are men bona fide in search of employment; at fruit and hop-picking times percentage may be larger, 997.

Great increase in numbers admitted to Herefordshire casual wards in recent years, 1006.

Treatment in Hereford casual wards, 1008-15; possibly partly accounting for increase in vagrancy, 1016, 1019-21.

CASUAL WARDS AT HEREFORD.

Arrangements described, 1008-15.

CHILD VAGRANCY.

Statistics as to number of children admitted to casual wards not conclusive, as many children go to common lodging-houses, 1040-2.

Suggested remedy to prevent, 1043-50.

LABOUR BUREAU.

Should be established at every workhouse, 1025-8.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Professional vagrants should be sent to, 1018, 1043-4.

Should be in hands of local elected bodies, but under supervision of State, 1059.

POLICE.

Should deal with professional vagrants and beggars, 1024, 1038.

SENTENCES.

Given by different magistrates often unequal, 1051-2.

Seven day sentences not deterrent, 1053-5.

Twenty-one or twenty-eight days should be minimum, 1056-7.

MR. G. W. MEATS—cont.

STATISTICS.

As to casual paupers in Herefordshire, 999-1005.

VAGRANCY.

Hop-picking often used as an excuse for, 997.

Possible effect of South African war on, 1007.

VAGRANTS.

Men honestly seeking work should have different treatment to professional vagrants, 984.

Professional vagrant really a semi-criminal, 984.

Man often enters casual ward and sends woman and children (with his money) to common lodging-house, 1040-1.

WAY-TICKETS.

Would curtail liberty of professional vagrant, but if properly supervised by police would assist honest wayfarers and reduce number of vagrants, 984, 988-90.

System should be carried out entirely by police, 1022-4. Herefordshire system described, 984-6, 991-7.

MR. A. C. MITCHELL (1783-2010).

Chairman of Wilts Vagrancy Committee.

CAPTAIN STERNE, R.N.

Chief Constable of Wilts.

ALMSGIVING.

Women in country cottages often give from fear, 1829-34.

Stopped in many cases by issue of way-tickets, 1920-1.

By poorer classes, cannot be prevented, 1920-3.

Prevention of, would stop vagrancy, 1922-3, 2010.

ARMY.

About 10 per cent. of tramps in Wiltshire alleged to have served in, 1900-3.

BEGGING.

Sunday the best day for, 1828.

Return of convictions for, 1835-7.

Way-ticket system, with mid-day meal, takes away excuse for, 1849-50, 1853, 1881.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Treatment not uniform; vagrants merely passed on as quickly as possible, 1857-66, 1944.

CASUAL WARDS.

Separate working cells as well as sleeping cells a benefit to the real wayfarer, and a deterrent to the professional vagrant, 1797.

Every ward should have separate cells or system of separation, 1868-9.

Control of, should be handed over to some other authority, 1883-8.

Long distances between certain wards, 1952-7.

Men often enter, and send wives and children to common lodging-house, 2004-5.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Number in Wiltshire, 1968.

DETENTION OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Guardians in Wiltshire generally detain over Sunday, 1826-8, 1924; difficulties caused by unions not detaining on Sunday, 1924-8.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Professional vagrants should be committed to, for long terms, 1881, 1899.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Essential to success of way-ticket system, 1792, 1795, 1849-50.

POLICE.

Control of vagrants should be transferred to, and cost made a State charge, 1875-7, 1889, 1933-8; guardians generally favourable, 1933-5; difficulties of transfer, 1878-9, 1939-40, 1984-93.

As assistant relieving officers, 1890-3; duties help police in discharge of ordinary duties, 1994-6.

MR. A. C. MITCHELL AND CAPTAIN STERNE—cont.
PRISON.

"Often preferred to casual wards, owing to better conditions, 1839-42, 1844-6.

Sometimes used by vagrant to help him on journey, 1847-8.

Failure of, as a deterrent, 1900.

Diet in, should not be better, and labour less, for tramps than in casual wards, 1969-83.

SENTENCES ON VAGRANTS.

Uselessness of sending vagrants to gaol, 1838.

Seldom longer than seven to fourteen days, 1843.

Should be longer, 1900.

TASKS OF WORK.

Advantage of discharging casual on completion of, 1797.

Stone breaking cannot be a uniform task owing to varying nature of stone, 1870-2.

Should be uniform as far as possible, 1873-4.

VAGRANCY.

Report on, made by chief constable in 1871, 2006-9.

VAGRANTS.

Influx of, caused by large railway works, etc., 1806-7, 1896-7, 1962-3.

Increase in number since 1900, 1824-5.

Association wards with bad accommodation and slack discipline preferred by professional vagrants, 1865-6.

Separate organisation advocated for, as distinct from local poor, 1867-8.

Bona fide tramps not numerous, 1898.

Census of, taken by Wiltshire police, 1958-61, 1964, 1998-2003.

WAY-TICKET SYSTEM IN WILTSHIRE.

System described, 1792-7.

Cost of mid-day meals, 1798-1805; mainly contributed by boards of guardians, 1808-14.

Circulars and bills issued calling attention to, 1815-21, 1943, 1997.

Honest wayfarer assisted by, 1822-3, 1851.

Has reduced almsgiving, 1829, 1852, 1920-1.

Proportion of "good" tickets in certain years, 1894-5.

Difficulties caused by lack of uniformity in treatment of vagrants, 1904-6.

Caused decrease of vagrants for some years, but numbers have increased of late years, 1907-15.

Tickets cannot be exchanged for drink, but might possibly be transferred, 1916-9.

Amount of bread given for mid-day meal: no complaints of insufficiency, 1945-7; how given, 1948-51.

System should be universal, 1854-8, 1881.

WILTSHIRE VAGRANCY COMMITTEE.

Constitution of, 1783-90.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Not so many on road as formerly, 2005.

MR. J. R. MOTION (6447-6618).

Clerk and Inspector of poor, Glasgow, 6447-8.

BEGGING IN GLASGOW.

Particulars as to arrests for begging and vagrancy: prisoners sometimes committed to poorhouse for seven days, 6484-97.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

Very few in Scotland, 6582.

Should be boarded out and controlled as in England under Act of 1889, 6593-6.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES IN GLASGOW.

Under regulation of sanitary inspector, 6600-4.

Municipal lodging-houses have improved lodging-houses generally, 6602.

DISEASE.

Danger of, being spread by vagrants, 6598-9.

MR. J. R. MOTION—cont.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Advocated, to which bona fide unemployed workmen should be sent 6541-4, 6579; law of settlement would not create any difficulty, 6545-53.

Management of colony: joint committee of town and parish councils suggested; powers of detention for an indefinite period, 6554-66; no difficulty anticipated as regards compulsory detention, 6583-7.

Unsuccessful result of sending men from Glasgow to Locharbriggs voluntary colony, 6569-75.

Area of administration should be large, 6577-8.

Suggested colony would not be like a rural poorhouse, 6579.

Committal by sheriff preferred to that of magistrate; case to be revised at end of two years, 6583.

Poorhouse used as labour colony would be a prison, but with easier administration, 6568, 6588-92.

POORHOUSES IN SCOTLAND.

Able-bodied men certified as unfit for work sent to, but others refused relief and referred to sheriff, 6453-7.

Magistrates have power of compulsory detention in, while inquiries are being made, but not to order relief, 6506-16.

Rules of Local Government Board as to detention in; maximum seventy-two hours, 6505.

Work of inmates not of much account, 6519, 6522.

Vacant beds in, might be utilised for tramps if labour colonies are provided, 6566-7, 6580-1.

POOR LAW IN SCOTLAND.

Able-bodied men not recognised by, 6449-51.

Law of settlement strictly enforced, 6545-9.

PRISONS IN SCOTLAND.

Diet in, better than in poorhouse, and all prisoners work; preference of man for prison sometimes expressed but not believed, 6517-21.

Employment in Barlinnie prison, 6522-3.

Vagrants do not commit offences in order to be sent to, 6532.

SENTENCES IN GLASGOW.

For begging and vagrancy or sleeping out, 6496-504.

Magistrates have power of compulsory detention in poorhouse while enquiries are made, 6506-16.

Short sentences not deterrent, and do more harm than good; fourteen days should be minimum, 6524-31.

SHELTERS IN SCOTLAND.

Free shelters in Glasgow: (1) the night asylum originally designed for workmen and their families now largely used by tramps; is usually full and is complained of as creating a class; (2) shelters recently opened by Church Army and Established Church, 6467-9, 6605-8.

System not so extensive in Edinburgh, but complaints have been made as to tramps being attracted by soup kitchens, etc., 6481-2.

Free distribution of food by Glasgow corporation; how paid for, 6609-12.

Provided in certain country parishes for cases of illness, etc., 6538-9.

Provision of, not desirable, 6540.

SLEEPING OUT IN GLASGOW.

Persons found sleeping on staircases, etc.; provisions as to, 6499-504.

VAGRANTS IN SCOTLAND.

Bona fide workmen in Glasgow go to night asylum for houseless, but nothing is done for the great majority of destitute men, 6458-60.

Many vagrants in Glasgow are sheltered without legal authority in cells attached to police stations; no food is supplied, 6461-6, 6475-82, 6536-7; large numbers are attracted by soup kitchens, etc., from all parts, 6462-5.

English system of dealing with vagrants not desired, 6471-4.

Analysis of homeless applicants, and tramps applying for relief at Glasgow, 6483-4.

MR. J. R. MOTION—*cont.*VAGRANTS IN SCOTLAND—cont.

Half-yearly census of vagrants taken by police, 6533-5, 6592, 6616.

No authorised legal provision for, 6536-8.

Should be dealt with by police and detained in reformatories, etc.; law of settlement would not create a difficulty, 6541-4, 6550-3.

June tramps a different class to December tramps, 6592, 6613-5.

System of identification, e.g. finger-prints, desirable, 6597.

Many English and Irish tramps in Scotland, but few foreigners, 6617-8.

SUPERINTENDENT MULVANY, Whitechapel division of Metropolitan police (9551-9683).

BEGGARS.

Arrested if evidence justifies it, but arrests are rare in Whitechapel, 9553, 9621-3.

Frequenters of shelters in Whitechapel beg in other districts during the day, 9624-5.

CASUAL WARDS.

Frequenters of, a separate and superior class to those frequenting shelters; bath and task a deterrent to "shelter" vagrants, 9654-64.

CHILDREN.

Found begging sent to industrial school as a rule under Act of 1866, 9558-9, 9641.

Wandering with parents; parents should be required to show that they are proper persons to have charge of children, 9649-53.

COFFEE STALLS.

In Whitechapel division cause police little difficulty, but undesirable people often congregate round stalls and occasionally commit crimes, 9616-20, 9665-73.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Estimated number of vagrants in, on 7th July, 1905, 9631-3.

Working men often live in, 9634-5.

Rarely visited by police; are under jurisdiction of London county council and well looked after, 9635-9.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Habitual vagrants should be sent to, not those convicted for first time, 9679-80.

SENTENCES.

For begging, depend upon circumstances, but are fairly uniform, 9554-7.

On vagrants, short as a rule; heavier sentences would be deterrent; seven-day sentences have not the least effect, 9677-8, 9683.

SHELTERS.

Medland Hall; number and class of men frequenting; many habituals, 9574-81, 9591-3; other shelters in Whitechapel division, 9582-6.

Effect of, to attract homeless and hopeless vagrants to districts, 9587-93.

Tend also to attract men in necessitous circumstances, who may be soon dragged down, 9597-8.

Objections to men leading "shelter" life; many in filthy condition and unfit to be at large, 9599-604.

Return showing free meals given in certain shelters, 9605-11.

Loafer can obtain free shelter (or sleep out) and free meals without interference, 9612.

Percentage of men saved from starvation by free meals and helped to regain position in life, practically nil, 9613-5.

Free food distributed at night; recipients beg during the day, 9626-9.

Inmates rarely found drunk, 9628.

Frequenters of, a separate and lower class than frequenters of casual wards, 9656-64.

SUPERINTENDENT MULVANY—cont.

SLEEPING OUT.

- Difficulty of proving want of means, 9560-2.
- Offenders generally discharged on promising to go to workhouse, but they never go, 9562-5.
- A large number sleep on staircases, etc., in Spitalfields, but police cannot interfere unless residents complain, 9567-73.
- Some competent authority should have power to deal with, 9644-8.

VAGRANCY.

- Proceedings taken under Vagrancy Act of 1824, in cases of begging, etc., 9640.
- Vagrancy Act requires amendment so as to facilitate removal from streets of sleepers out with money in their possession, 9642-3.

VAGRANTS.

- "Shelter" vagrants lead hopeless and aimless lives and make no attempt to work, 9594-6.
- Census of, taken by police on 7th July, 1905, 9630-3.
- Identification of, by finger-prints, would be useful if made universal, 9674-5.
- Creation of class of habitual vagrants would be advantageous, 9679.

WAY-TICKETS.

- System would be deterrent if carefully administered, 9676.
- In Metropolitan area, would be advantageous as a means of identification, 9681-2.

SIR SHIRLEY MURPHY, Medical Officer of Health of London, and MR. H. A. JURY, Chief Inspector of Common Lodging-Houses under the London county council (5640-5910).

CASUAL WARDS IN LONDON.

- Effect of provision of, on common lodging-houses and shelters; inmates of casual wards a separate and cleaner class, 5703-6, 5807-9.
- Not necessary; something more deterrent required, 5707-8.
- Restrictions in, as to cleanliness, etc., a deterrent to both men and women, 5703-5, 5745.
- Many wards have vacant accommodation, 5774.

CLEANSING OF PERSONS ACT.

- Provision under, made in London by borough councils; Act a dead letter to a great extent; no power of compulsion, 5692-4.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES IN LONDON.

- Since 1894 under control of London county council; formerly under control of police, 5646-7.
- First recognised by law in 1851, 5648-9.
- Large proportion of inmates—possibly 90 per cent.—not of vagrant class, 5645.
- Number of, at end of 1904, 5654.
- Large establishments now the rule, 5656-7.
- Charges in; women have to pay more than men, 5659-63.
- Many of the inmates are in regular work, but will take the cheapest lodging obtainable, 5685.
- Vermin and verminous persons; a nuisance and danger to others, 5696-701, 5865-7; keepers prosecuted if vermin found in beds, 5695; recent improvement in, as regards vermin; houses now in very good order, 5702, 5804-5.
- Open all night; wet night affects number of inmates, 5719-20, 5830.
- Often occupied during day by persons who leave at night for free food, and return next morning, 5730-5.
- Largely used by prostitutes, 5749.
- Have many vacant beds, 5773.
- Municipal lodging-houses run by London county council: accommodation in, charges, sale of food, etc., 5775-83.
- Accommodation in, decreasing, owing to provision of Rowton Houses, houses let in furnished lodgings, etc., 5784, 5800.
- Victoria homes; held to be common lodging-houses, 5791-2.
- Difference between, and cheap hotel, 5793-4.

SIR SHIRLEY MURPHY AND MR. H. A. JURY—*cont.*COMMON LODGING-HOUSES IN LONDON—cont.

- Standard in, the lowest that should be accepted, 5810-2.
- Raising of standard of living in, would not affect rest of lower class population, 5816-7.
- Population in, decreases in summer in fruit and hop-picking seasons, 5820.
- Used more by men than women; two or three women often club together to live in one room in lodgings, 5826-7.
- Larger buildings the more economical, but more difficult to manage in case of outbreak of smallpox, etc., smaller houses better in every respect, 5831-4.
- Present powers of London county council sufficient; council have power to require register of inmates to be kept, 5847-53.
- Annual licensing by London county council of, gives larger power of control; whether similar power should extend to provincial authorities, 5851-3.
- Lodging-house and keeper must both be licensed; whether licence could be withheld on economic grounds, 5854-7.
- Inmates of: how recruited; many old soldiers, 5858-61.
- Mortality in, high, especially from phthisis, etc., 5859, 5903.
- Foreigners patronise particular lodging-houses, 5864.
- Inmates of, live cheaply; cost of food and clothing, 5871-94, 5897.
- Many inmates live in a state of semi-starvation, 5883, 5895-6.
- Smallpox spread by inmates of, 5901-2.
- Ventilation of, important, and in some cases requires amendment, 5904-5.

DISTRIBUTION OF FREE FOOD IN LONDON.

- Estimated number of persons receiving free meals; many not really homeless, but attracted by the soup, etc., 5726-37.
- Free food and sleeping out; connexion between, 5717-22, 5743, 5764-9.
- Prevention of giving free meals, would be difficult, 5752-4.
- Givers of free food should be governed by the laws governing tradespeople, 5755-6.
- Influx from provinces caused by, 5861-3.

HOUSES LET IN FURNISHED LODGINGS.

- Increase in number of; often provided in connexion with common lodging-houses, 5800-3.
- Are under supervision of borough councils, but regulations are not strictly enforced and the houses are sometimes only occasionally inspected, 5801-3, 5815.
- Conditions in, sometimes worse than in shelters, but superior to those existing in 1866, 5813-4.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

- Smallpox often spread by inmates of common lodging-houses; vaccination the only safeguard, 5901-2.

ROWTON HOUSES.

- Not under control of, nor inspected by, London county council, 5658, 5785, 5790.
- Distinction between, and hotels and common lodging-houses, 5786-90, 5836-9.
- Number of, and accommodation provided, 5795-9.

SHELTERS IN LONDON.

- Now under control of London county council as common lodging-houses, but question as to power of council where no charge is made to lodgers has been raised, 5651-3.
- Number of, and total accommodation provided in, 5655.
- Definition of, as distinguished from common lodging-houses, 5664, 5835.
- Accommodation in, poorer than in common lodging-houses, but should be levelled up and regulations enforced, 5664-8, 5805-6.
- Action necessary for persons who cannot pay for cheaper lodging-houses, 5810-2.
- Objections to bunks in; occupants sleep in their clothes, and vermin cannot be detected, 5669, 5690-1; practice should be stopped, 5669-71.

SIR SHIRLEY MURPHY AND MR. H. A. JURY—
cont.

SHELTERS IN LONDON—cont.

Provision in, for drying and disinfecting clothes better than in common lodging-houses, 5672-5.
Enforcement of regulations would probably result in increased charges, and would reduce number of inmates, 5676-9.
Many inmates could pay for better accommodation, but tendency is to accept lower standard, if cheaper, 5680-8, 5895.
Minimum standard of conditions should be fixed, 5681, 5688.
Increase in, would decrease number of common lodging-houses, 5683-6, 5706.
If closed, frequenters of would not have to sleep out, but could find money for bed in common lodging-houses, 5689-90.
Shelters always full, 5718, 5772.
Institutions giving free meals, 5714-6.
Not used by prostitutes to any extent, 5748.
Wet night increases number of inmates, 5830.
Societies running philanthropic shelters; some absolutely free; accommodation provided, 5840-5.
Inmates of; how recruited; many old soldiers, 5858-61.
Free food attracts people from provinces, 5863.
Power of county council to refuse licences, 5854-6.
All except free shelters run on a commercial basis; food sold cheap, but at a profit, 5897-9.
Conditions of life in, too low for a civilised community, 5900.

SLEEPING OUT IN LONDON.

Estimated number of persons sleeping out according to winter census; movements of class guided mainly by free food distribution, 5713-7, 5723-4, 5764.
Free food and sleeping out, connection between; practically all persons obtaining free food sleep out, 5717-22, 5726-37, 5743, 5906-10.
Sleepers out a distinct class and cannot be mistaken, 5725.
On staircases: mostly women between thirty and forty, 5738-41, 5746-7.
Comparatively few women sleep out, 5743-4, 5826-7.
Sleepers out should be segregated and detained by State; practice could soon be stopped, 5750-1, 5757-71, 5824-5, 5868-70.
Present condition of things as to, unsatisfactory, 5757-8.
Practice increased by advertisements of free food, 5764-9.
Plenty of accommodation available in casual wards, shelters and common lodging-houses for sleepers in streets or on staircases, 5818.
In summer probably more frequent than in winter; often from choice, 5821-3.
Summer census would be useful, 5823.
Effect of weather on, 5828-9.
Police should arrest all persons found sleeping out, 5868-70.

STATISTICS.

As to shelters and common lodging-houses in London, 5645, 5654.

VAGRANTS.

State should take care of, and detain, persons unable to maintain a certain standard of living, 5709-12.

MR. ROBERT J. PARR (10927-11058).

Director of National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 10927.

NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

Conditions of charter granted to, 10928-9.
Number of children dealt with by Society: proportion of vagrant children small, 10939-43, 11055.
Proposed scheme for registering and identifying vagrants with children, 10946, 10954, 11046-9.
System of inter-communication in use between branches of Society, 10955-6.

MR. ROBERT J. PARR—cont.

NATIONAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN—cont.

Guardians, police and Local Government Board Inspectors co-operate with Society, 10996-11002; action sometimes causes decrease in number of children frequenting a particular workhouse, 11003-4, 11046, 11052.
Has no institution in which to maintain children, but makes use of institutions and homes already in existence by undertaking responsibility of maintenance, 11005-7, 11042-4.
Policy of Society is to preserve family life as far as possible: and to secure reform of parents rather than removal of children, 11021-2, 11037; children taken by Society sometimes given back to parents, 11037.
Action taken by, often relieves rates, 11033.
Does not seek further powers of detention, 11038-41.

VAGRANT CHILDREN.

Numbers usually not more than 3 per cent. of total number of vagrants; larger percentage at Stafford in October, 1903, 10930-9, 10946-7, 11023.
Children used as instruments of begging, 10944; practice would cease if almsgiving ceased, 11034.
Objects of N.S.P.C.C. as to; only children who are neglected or ill-treated can be dealt with, 10949-53, 10993-5; numbers dealt with in recent years, 10957; conviction almost invariably obtained if prosecution undertaken, 10958; prosecutions for neglect and abandonment, 10959-62; children dealt with under Industrial Schools Act or adopted by boards of guardians, or custody obtained by the Society until age of 16, 10963; difficulty caused by magistrates charging cost of maintenance on the Society or on person bringing child before them, and by police and guardians refusing to take action: instances shewing this, 10964-81, 10983-6, 10989-91, 11031-2, 11056-8; enforcement of law should be in hands of one defined body, 10982, 11055; question of settlement a difficulty: suggestion that place of birth should be a place of settlement, 10985; if charge were made a county charge difficulty would be minimised, but action by local authority should be made compulsory, 10987-8.
Difficulty of enforcing orders against parents, 10991.
Act of 1904 gives no new powers over, 10992.
Poor Law Act of 1899 often put in force by guardians as to, although children are not settled in their union, 11008-10.
Vagrant Children Bills of 1904: whether act of habitually tramping about with children should be considered an offence: children sometimes happy although on tramp, 11011-20.
Number of, maintained by N.S.P.C.C., 11026-8.
Difficulty of tracing cases of cruelty to: illustration, 11029-30, 11033-4.
Generally without education, 11034-6.
Children under age of nurture, sometimes a difficulty, 11039-40.

VAGRANTS.

Many tramps attracted to Stafford by lax discipline, but few to Lichfield where strict labour test is imposed, 11024-5.
Uniform treatment would diminish total number of, 11047-8.
Police control of, would assist N.S.P.C.C. in carrying out scheme of registration and identification, and would tend to secure uniformity of treatment, 11050-3.
Difficulty of securing convictions for street offences, 11058.

REV. J. B. PATON, D.D. (5055-5323).

Chairman of Executive Council of Christian Social Service Union, 5284. Agrees in the main with Mr. Brooks' evidence, 5287.

ALLOTMENTS.

System of, should be encouraged among workmen, even in towns, 5312-4.

REV. J. B. PATON, D.D.—cont.

ARMY.

Discharges from, a cause of vagrancy, 5320.
Workshops and farms in connection with barracks suggested, 5320.

CASUAL WARDS.

Should be abolished and other provision made for men seeking work, 5312, 5316.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

Might be sent to workhouse with their mothers, if their fathers are sent to vagrant colony, 5321.

INSURANCE AGAINST UNEMPLOYMENT.

Methods of, in force on continent, might be developed in this country, 5315.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

Should be organised and placed in communication with one another, 5312.

LABOUR COLONIES FOR VAGRANTS.

Inmates should be classified, graded as regards character, and kept separate in colony or in separate colony with prospect of promotion (or degradation) from one grade to another, as in American prisons and Belgian colonies, 5288-96, 5304.

Treatment in, should be reformatory, 5289.

Parole system advocated, as in connection with American prisons, 5296-5303.

Management should be either directly by State or by philanthropic societies assisted by local authorities, who should be represented on committee of management, 5263.

Men should be settled on the land as far as possible, as in Holland, 5305-10, 5321.

Period of detention should be two years with power of parole at earlier period, 5323.

Free labour colony a necessity in connection with relief stations, 5258.

One labour colony (on Lake Neuchatel) pays its way, 5171.

PRISONERS.

On discharge should be allowed to enter vagrant colony, 5320.

RELIEF STATIONS.

Should be provided, as in Germany, for workmen seeking employment; workhouses might be utilised, 5316-7; way-tickets would be required, 5318.

TRADES UNIONS.

Arrangements might be made with, that men past their prime should work by piece work, or for fewer hours, and receive a less wage, 5312.

VAGRANCY.

Suggestions for preventing increase of, 5311-6.

System of relief stations in Westphalia has tended to reduce vagrancy, 5316.

Causes of; discharges from Army and prison, mobility of labour, congested urban life, etc., 5320-1.

VAGRANTS.

Recruited largely from men seeking work, 5311.

Bona fide working men travelling to seek work should be provided with suitable accommodation in workhouses or relief stations, instead of in casual wards, 5312, 5316-7.

WAY-TICKETS.

Favoured, with system of relief stations, 5318.

MR. ROBERT PEACOCK (7748-8007).

Has been chief constable of Manchester for seven years, and before that was chief constable of Oldham for six years and of Canterbury for four years, 7748-7750, 7924; has had twenty-six years' police experience, 7751.

BEGGING.

Offenders in Manchester arrested by police, 7758.

Popularity of Manchester amongst beggars the result of indiscriminate almsgiving, soup kitchens, etc., 8004-7.

MR. ROBERT PEACOCK—cont.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

Number small, how dealt with in Manchester; cases of cruelty referred to N.S.P.C.C., 7925-33, 7979, 7993.
Should be sent to industrial schools, 7994.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Police in Manchester have power to enter and inspect, 7987-8.

DETENTION OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Not enforced in Manchester in case of men seeking work, 8000-2.

DIETARY OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Difficulty of obtaining mid-day meal when not in casual ward, 7864-9.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

System in Manchester described; does not apply to tramps, 7806-17, 7983-4.

Objections to, where employment cannot be given to applicants, 7882-9.

LABOUR COLONIES.

With power of detention recommended as the only practical solution of the tramp difficulty; suggested suitable colony, 7773-4, 7843-4, 7962-4, 7974.

Colonies and colonists should be classified, and men of bad character sent to penal settlement, and others to industrial colony where they might be taught a trade, 7775-81.

Habitual loafer or vagrant should be sent to penal colony and made to work, 7855-7, 7861, 7982.

Difference between suggested colony and prison, 7858-9.

Inmate refusing to work should be punished by loss of food, etc., 7890-1.

Magistrates would probably send men to quarter sessions if latter had power to commit to colony for one to three years; Inebriates Act as precedent, 7897-9.

Should be farm colonies principally, 7965; Salvation Army colony at Hadleigh not suitable for vagrants without power of detention, 7967-70.

MANCHESTER CASUAL WARDS.

Joint casual wards described; accommodation in and average number of inmates, 7762-5, 7765-7.

Inmates allowed to leave early to seek work, 7818-20.

Could be transferred to police, without difficulty; police control would give greater responsibility, but results would probably justify it, 7938-9, 7989-91.

Better managed and cleaner than common lodging-houses, 7959-61.

Police pensioner preferred to active policemen, to take charge of, 7992.

Joint control by watch committee and guardians desirable and would secure uniformity, 7995-7.

Discipline and task exacted in, not the cause of unpopularity of wards, 7999.

POLICE IN MANCHESTER.

Only deal with vagrants as offenders under Vagrancy Act, 7752, 7985.

Do not visit casual wards regularly, but are never refused admission, 7821-2.

Not appointed as assistant relieving officers, 7823, 7986.

With larger powers could deal more effectively with vagrants, 7824, 7934-7.

Total number of police in Manchester, 7837.

Pedlars' certificates, how issued; licence offers facilities for larceny; endorsing convictions on certificates not necessary, 7900-23.

Difficulty of dealing with night loafers, 7980-2.

Police control and management of casual wards would give greater responsibility, but results would justify it, 7989-91.

PRISON.

Preference for, to casual wards, often expressed by vagrants, 7862-3.

Not now disliked, owing to greater comfort in, 7870.

MR. ROBERT PEACOCK—cont.

SENTENCES.

Manchester magistrates very lenient; many men discharged or given seven day sentences, which are not deterrent, 7782-90, 7852-3.

For sleeping out, begging, etc., after a previous conviction, should be a month, 7791-3, 7874-6.

Uniformity in, almost impossible, 7873.

Minimum sentence desirable, but not likely to be adopted, 7877-8.

Convictions might be recorded, and after several convictions man sent to quarter sessions for sentence, 7879-81.

Few "incorrigible rogues" dealt with in Manchester; possible reasons, 7892-6.

SHELTERS.

Sleepers out and inmates of common lodging-houses attracted by free shelters; shelters not therefore beneficial, 7828-9, 7948-53, 7975-8, 8004-5; shelters where work is enforced not so attractive, 7954-8.

Police or city authorities should have power to inspect and close shelters, 7830-6.

SLEEPING OUT IN MANCHESTER.

Persons apprehended mostly tramps, but honest workmen not prosecuted, 7753.

In public places not interfered with, but otherwise police arrest, 7754-7.

More persons found sleeping out in winter than in summer; vagrants go into the country in summer, 7768-9.

Exceptional amount of, although accommodation is available in casual wards and common lodging-houses; cause of preference for sleeping out, 7825-7, 7940-7.

Not a serious offence, but men who sleep out are a dangerous class, 7826-7.

Sleepers out attracted by free shelters and free food, 7828-9.

TASKS OF WORK FOR CASUAL PAUPERS.

Principally stone breaking at Manchester; man allowed to perform task on day of admission, and to discharge himself at 6 o'clock next morning, 7818-20.

Not enforced if men have work to go to, 8003.

Few prosecutions in Manchester for refusing task, 7998.

VAGRANCY.

Law already strong enough to deal with, if magistrates will exercise powers, 7759.

VAGRANTS.

Existing law strong enough to deal with habituals; sending cases up to sessions should be resorted to, 7759-61.

Manchester tramps mostly idle, unskilled men; many have been convicted and are known to police, 7770, 7845-51, 7962-3; percentage who would accept work if offered, 7771-2.

Many live permanently in Manchester or neighbourhood, 7839-42.

State justified in undertaking expense of detaining habituals, 7845-6.

Food of; how obtained when not in casual wards, 7864-9. Should be given a chance to earn a living before being dealt with by police measures, 7854.

Control of, by police would be more successful than under guardians, 7934-7.

Treatment of, should be more uniform both by guardians and magistrates, 7872.

Attracted to Manchester by distribution of free food, etc., 8004-7.

WAY-TICKETS.

System would not be effective in Manchester or other large towns, but if made general would aid in identifying vagrants, 7794-7805.

MAJOR POULTON, Chief constable of Berkshire (4644-4871).

ALMSGIVING.

Decreases, when public are satisfied that vagrant can obtain food by means of way-tickets, 4766-7.

Threats often used to extort alms from cottagers, 4867-9.

MAJOR POULTON—cont.

BEGGING.

Law against, enforced in Berkshire, but police discriminate between cases, 4750-2.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Act of 1882 has not had fair trial, 4779.

CASUAL WARDS.

Whether they could be brought up to standard in prisons, 4715-21.

Separate cell system advocated, 4785-7.

Marked effect of separate cells in certain unions, 4831-5.

Visited by police in Berkshire, but not regularly, 4852.

If taken over by police, care of females would be a difficulty, 4865.

Retired police officers might be appointed superintendents of, 4866.

CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS.

Food distributed to, by Berkshire police out of charitable fund, 4697-8.

Number of, small in proportion to adults, 4699-700.

Should be kept from a tramp life, 4700.

Might be taken care of in union from which man with way-ticket departs, 4701-3.

Dealt with under Industrial Schools Act in Berkshire, but not for simply travelling with vagrants, 4845-6.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Vagrants in, twice as numerous as in casual wards, 4673.

Should have more inspection and supervision, and registration should be improved, 4692-4, 4848.

Police as inspectors of, 4694-6, 4803-8, 4849-50.

Visited by police daily in Berkshire for men "wanted," 4849-51.

DIET OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Inadequate and insufficient to work on; should be improved and made uniform throughout country, 4681-4, 4753-65, 4858-9.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

Should be worked by town authorities, notices being shown at workhouses and police stations, 4704.

System at Reading described, 4705.

Information might be circulated by Labour Department of Board of Trade, 4706-7.

LABOUR COLONIES.

For habitual tramps desirable; should be under control of Home Office or Prison Commissioners, 4689-91, 4858.

Inmates should be treated as in prison; food as an incentive to work, 4708-10.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Way-ticket should provide mid-day meal, and police might have authority to grant it to any man, cost to be a charge on the particular union, 4732-3.

Meal of bread and cheese suggested, which might be given to vagrant when he leaves casual ward in morning, 4734.

Should be given to every man keeping to his route, 4735.

Given by police in Berkshire out of charitable fund, 4847.

POLICE.

Only vagrants committing crime should be dealt with by, 4773-9.

Give meals to prisoners in custody at police stations in Berkshire, 4790-5.

Tendency to increase duties of, deprecated, 4808-17, 4866.

As assistant relieving officers; value of, 4813-4.

Should be in touch with vagrant population, both in casual wards and in common lodging-houses, 4853-6.

MAJOR POULTON—cont.

PRISON.

Preference of vagrant for, attributed to better diet and greater comfort in, 4677-80, 4682, 4711-24, 4862.

PROSECUTIONS.

For misconduct in workhouse; large increase in recent years; probable reasons for increase, 4861-2.

SLEEPING OUT.

Every person found sleeping out in Berkshire prosecuted as a rule; fires caused by practice of sleeping out, 4799-802, 4856.

TASKS OF WORK.

Coal sackmaking not so hard as stone breaking, 4725-6. Wood chopping given up in some cases owing to complaints of interference with outside labour, 4727.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF VAGRANTS.

Should be required throughout country; enforcement of uniformity would not be difficult, 4675, 4744-7, 4780-4, 4837, 4859-60. Might be secured by Order of Local Government Board, 4788-9, 4839-41. Difficulties of securing, from popularly elected bodies, 4837-43. Grants from county might be made conditional on uniform system being carried out, 4842.

VAGRANCY.

Report on, in Berkshire in 1904, 4646. Gradual decrease in, up to 1900 in Berkshire, but subsequent increase attributed to South African war and bad trade, 4646-51. Reduction of, in Berkshire, owing to public ceasing to give alms on introduction of way-tickets, 4766-9. Whether law relating to, could be worked by officials apart from guardians, 4844.

VAGRANTS.

Recent increase of crime by, in Berkshire, 4652. Many travel between London and the west through Berkshire, 4653-6. Small proportion of bona fide workmen amongst, 4657-60. Identification of criminal vagrants suggested, with system of finger-prints, 4685-8, 4742-3, 4863-4. Reasons for lax treatment of, in some unions, 4747-8, 4753. Few come under notice of police, 4749. One authority in each county to deal with, not recommended, 4770-3, 4857. Travel mostly on main roads, 4836. Gipsies a nuisance in Berkshire, but dying out, 4818-22. Route traversed by, depends on expectation of charity from public, 4835. Should be confined to main roads as far as possible, 4847.

WAY-TICKET SYSTEM.

Varying success of, in Berkshire, owing to want of support of guardians and of adjoining counties, 4661-6, 4675-6. If made general and uniform would be of advantage, but system should enable police to identify idle vagrants, 4667-71, 4675, 4728, 4744-6, 4859. Would assist to stop begging and help honest man so far as casual ward vagrants are concerned, 4672-4, 4738-41, 4870-1. Tickets might be issued by workhouse masters and would be certificates of identity, 4728-31. Man leaving his route should be prosecuted under Vagrancy Act, 4736-7. System would not increase the number of regular tramps, 4796-8.

WORKHOUSES.

Situation (as to main roads) of workhouses in Berkshire, 4823-30.

MR. PRESTON-THOMAS (1-730, 8276-8544).

Has been an Inspector of the Local Government Board since 1894, first in the Eastern Counties district and then in the Devon district, and previous to that was for a considerable period in the Local Government Board and Privy Council offices. His present district is Devonshire, most of Somerset, and Cornwall, 1-5.

Made a report in 1904 on methods of dealing with vagrancy in Switzerland, 8276.

ALMSGIVING.

Professional vagrants would vanish if casual almsgiving were stopped, 694-7. Largely a practice of poorer classes, 698. Alms often demanded by threats, 699-701. Diminished in Switzerland by labour colonies and way-ticket system, 8374.

ARMY.

Effect of short service system on vagrancy, 594. Returns of 1897 and 1898 as to proportion of vagrants said to have been in the Army, 595-6. Militiamen using casual wards going to and from training: complaint as to detention, 8541-4.

BATHING OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Not now a deterrent, 495-7. Advantages of, from sanitary point of view, and as means of detecting disease, 498, 529. Should be made compulsory, 500.

BEGGARS.

Early legislation stringent and repressive, 7-8, 13, 17-19. Law against, in Switzerland, varies in each Canton, 8281-3. Decrease in, in Switzerland: causes, 8372-3, 8436.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

First required to be kept in separate ward, dieted and set to work, by general Order of 1842, 39. Identification system in London, 111-21, 428; numbers identified in 1903, and numbers detained four days, 424-5; no identification system in country, 427-8. Disposal of food found on, 378-80. Procedure in case of sick vagrants, 465-75. Often refuse work when offered; instances quoted, 506. Treatment of, not reformatory: no religious services provided on Sundays, 541-2. Mostly professional tramps, 692. See also VAGRANTS.

CASUAL WARDS.

Guardians required to provide by Act of 1871, 102. Separate cells: commended by Poor Law Board in 1868, and by Local Government Board in 1871, 96, 104; cell system need not necessarily be introduced in every workhouse, 606. Dayrooms in; when first suggested by Local Government Board, 167-71. Practically every union has a casual ward, and many have separate cells, 208-11, 603-4. Expense of providing modern wards hard on small unions, 453-8. Abolition of, suggested to House of Lords Committee in 1888, 507. Sunday a day of idleness in, 541-2. Now generally free from vermin, 545-6. Cost of modern wards, instances of expensive and cheap wards, 610-22; if rendered useless by change in present system large amount of capital expenditure would be lost, 623. Not as a rule available for other workhouse purposes, 624. Annual cost of maintaining wards, difficult to estimate, 632-4. Sudden inrush of tramps could be met by temporary provision, 726-7. Guardians sometimes difficult to persuade to provide necessary accommodation, 729. Control of, by combination of unions undesirable, 8469. Might be transferred to standing joint committee; difficulties in way, 8470-4, 8477, 8493-4.

MR. PRESTON-THOMAS—*cont.*CASUAL WARDS—cont.

- Might be rented from guardians, and workhouse master appointed constable in charge, 8478-80.
- Some wards might be closed if control were transferred to police, 8492-4.
- Expenses of, might be diminished if task of work is not enforced, but numbers might largely increase, 8495.

CHILD VAGRANCY.

- Proportion of children very small compared with total number of vagrants, 265-71.
- Vagrant Children Protection Bill of 1904, 513-5.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

- Number of vagrants relieved in, now insignificant, 202-7.
- Absence of, sometimes drives men to casual wards, 386.

DETENTION OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

- For four days, authorised by Casual Poor Act, 1882, but mainly carried out in London, 136-8, 426; outside London, cases so detained rare, 344-6, 418; not much objection has been raised, although practice savours of imprisonment, 419-20.
- Discretion allowed by regulations largely exercised by guardians, 417-23.
- Extension of power of detention advocated by House of Lords Committee in 1888, 507.
- No exceptions should be made; guardians should be required to detain everybody except genuine workers provided with tickets, 605, 647, 663, 674, 711-8.

DIETARY OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

- Uniform diet prescribed for London, 93-4.
- Compared with that of prisoners, 336-43, 347.
- Order of 1887 abolished bread-and-water diet for breakfast and supper in London, and improved children's dietary, 362, 411; improved diet has not increased number of child vagrants, 412-5.
- Cost of, 363-5.
- Has remained stationary since 1882, while that for prisons and workhouses has been improved, 366.
- No meals supplied outside casual wards unless by voluntary effort, 369-76.
- Improvement of, would tend to attract vagrants unless working conditions were altered at same time, but maintenance of present scale is not justified, 384-5, 416; dietary should be improved and made uniform, with no alternative, 647.
- Order of 1882 prescribes alternative dinner of bread and soup, but alternative is not often given, 405-10.

ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS.

- Enforcement of provisions of Order of 1882 as to search, detention, and task, especially if there are cells, almost invariably results in reduction in number of casual paupers, but neighbouring unions suffer unless uniform action is taken: instances showing this, 490-4, 501-6, 602.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE SPREAD BY VAGRANTS.

- Circulars of Local Government Board as to, 528.
- Reports of medical officer of health of Newcastle-on-Tyne, 530.
- Conferences convened by London county council in 1894 and 1904 as to, resolutions passed, 530.
- Suggestions made to Local Government Board as to compulsory vaccination, etc., 531-4.
- Procedure in case of tramp found to be suffering from smallpox on admission to casual ward, 535-6; casual wards sometimes closed, 537-8.
- Persons suffering from smallpox can be compulsorily detained in workhouse or infectious hospital, 539-40.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

- Information as to work available might be posted in workhouses and police stations, 642-3.

LABOUR COLONIES.

- Recommendations made to Local Government Board as to, 516-7.
- Scheme proposed by Poor Law Unions Association, 517, 583.
- Number in England, 566-7.

MR. PRESTON-THOMAS—*cont.*LABOUR COLONIES—cont.

- Colonies having power of detention should be conducted by a responsible authority, not a philanthropic society, 569-75; prison authority preferred to local authority, 576-8, 583-4; voluntary colonies would be useful as adjuncts to others, as in Switzerland, 574-5, 582.
- German colonies all voluntary, with no powers of detention, 579-81.
- Detention in casual ward not analogous to detention in labour colony, 585-7.
- Select Committee of 1896 on Distress from Want of Employment reported against establishment of voluntary labour colonies for unemployed, 588.
- Objections to voluntary State colonies for vagrants, 588-92.
- Difficulty of obtaining information as to subsequent career of men going through voluntary colonies, 593.
- German colony at Munden (Herts); description of colony, 8440-8, 8517-8.
- Elaborate buildings not necessary, 8476-7.
- Inducement to work in shape of additions to diet desirable in a penal colony, 8515-8.
- Classification of; criminals might be sent to colony under Home Office, and habitual vagrants to colony under local control, 8532-4.
- Compulsory detention should only be carried out by State or local authority, not by voluntary society, 8535-8.
- Detained vagrant should be placed in same category as prisoner, and labour colony in same category as a prison rather than as an inebriate home, reformatory or industrial school, 8539-40.

LABOUR COLONIES IN SWITZERLAND.

- Report on, 8276.
- Method of committing beggars to, 8305-6.
- Period of detention in, varies from six months to three years; minimum practically six months, 8306-8.
- Elected bodies with powers of compulsory detention, 8309-10, 8313-4.
- Payment for maintenance in, made by local authorities, 8311-2.
- Forced labour colonies: system covers whole of Switzerland; officers appointed by, and administration left entirely to, canton, 8317-22.
- Making of straw cases for wine bottles, an industry that would not displace any English trade, 8331.
- Generally, only minor criminals sent to colonies, but practice varies in different cantons, 8335-9, 8420.
- System probably reformatory, but no records are kept, 8375-9, 8408-12, 8434.
- Drink the main cause of men being sent to colonies, 8385.
- Only men under thirty or thirty-five found to be reformatory, 8385-90.
- Advantages of men being dealt with by administrative body rather than by magistrates, 8391-2.
- Cases sometimes sent to colonies from workhouses, 8393.
- Inmates of colonies really learn to work, and some earn decent livelihood afterwards, 8408-12.
- Whether small colonies better than large ones, 8413.
- Colony system favoured by intelligent Swiss people, 8432.
- No complaints of competition with outside labour, 8433.
- Voluntary colonies; started to supplement penal colonies; cost excessive, 8434-5.
- Easier to establish than in England owing to different social conditions, etc., 8437-9.
- Food at, mainly vegetable, but sufficient, 8505-7.
- Work in, hard, with no stimulus in shape of tobacco, extra food, etc., 8505, 8508-14.
- WITZWYL COLONY: its administration, work and diet, 8315-6, 8322-53.
- Hours of work in, longer than in English prisons, 8330, 8332-4.
- Remission of one-third of sentence may be obtained, 8354.
- Small bonus given on discharge, 8355.
- Methods of discharge; some sent to voluntary colonies, 8356-7.
- Wives and children of colonists get outdoor relief, 8358.
- Cost of land, 8359-60; increased value of, 8361-6.

MR. PRESTON-THOMAS—*cont.*LABOUR COLONIES IN SWITZERLAND—*cont.*ITZWYL COLONY—cont.

Discipline in colony: punishment by deprivation of food; few escapes; no wall or fence, 8367-70, 8380-4.

Distinctive dress worn by colonists, 8371.

ST. JOHANNSEN COLONY described; old and worn-out men received, 8396-401.

GMUNDEN COLONY: pays its way, 8402-7.

Hours of work, average term of detention, etc., 8414-9.

BASEL COLONY: inmates classified and kept separate; work mainly industrial, 8421-7.

LUCERNE COLONY: consists of two farms, for men and women respectively, 8430.

MID-DAY MEAL FOR VAGRANTS.

Offer of, favoured; it would tend to check indiscriminate almsgiving; co-operation of police would be advantageous, 388-403.

Tickets for, should be issued at workhouse on morning of discharge; meal should be obtained at a police station, 636-40, 717-8, 725.

PAUPERISM.

Depends more on the administration of the poor law than on poverty in any particular district, 257-8.

POLICE.

As assistant relieving officers: system suggested by Poor Law Board in 1848, 46; adopted in London in 1863, 52; effective in Essex, 669; objections of police led to termination of system in London, 75-80.

Quarterly inspection of casual wards in London by, 59. Co-operation of, desirable in providing mid-day meals, 402-3, 638-40.

Transfer to, of relief of vagrants would be costly and difficult, 625; considerations modifying this view, 8468-80.

Whether casual wards might be placed in charge of, 628-31, 8527-9.

Co-operation of, with poor law authority desirable in dealing with vagrants, 626-31, 635.

Ex-policemen generally excellent as workhouse masters, but guardians could not be urged to appoint only such, 8524-6.

PRISON.

Improved diet in, the possible cause of large increase in number of convictions of London casual paupers, 349-361.

Reports of Prison Commissioners as to casuals sent to prison for refusal to work, but found by prison doctors as incapable of hard work, 520.

Often used as a means of getting across a county, 555-7.

Advantages of, over casual wards: Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, better diet, etc., 558-61, 647.

SCOTLAND.

Vagrancy in, recommendations of Departmental Committee as to, 508.

Treatment of vagrants in, 509-12.

SEARCHING OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Disliked by tramps, 495.

Advantage of, in case of casuals with money in their possession, 498.

Should be made compulsory, 500.

SENTENCES FOR VAGRANCY.

Three days a common sentence, 347-8.

Average sentence seven days or less, 551.

Under Act of 1824: heavier sentences rarely enforced, 552-4.

Leniency of local magistrates, 554.

Twenty-eight days would probably deter vagrant from preferring prison to casual ward, 562-3.

Cumulative penalties, if imposed, would be highly deterrent, 703-4.

By magistrates in Switzerland usually shorter than those by district councils, 8416.

SLEEPING OUT.

Vagrants less fond of sleeping out than formerly, 387.

MR. PRESTON-THOMAS—cont.

STATISTICS AS TO PAUPER VAGRANCY.

Statistical returns not always reliable as representing actual number of vagrants relieved, 197-8, 221, 241-2.

Half-yearly returns of numbers relieved from 1858 to 1904, 197-231, 241-8, 253-6.

Fluctuations in numbers in different years, 223-31; drop in 1900 probably through war, 597-8.

Large increase in 1904: possible reasons for, 231-40.

Statistics as to general pauperism compared with, 249-54.

Numbers in London fairly constant; administration more uniform, 263-4.

Varying estimates of total number of vagrants in England and Wales, 297-9.

TASKS OF WORK FOR CASUAL PAUPERS.

First legalised by Act of 1842, 36.

System of tasks first established by Act of 1871, 102-3.

Oakum picking in prison and casual wards compared, 179.

Competition with outside labour deprecated by Local Government Board, but difficult to avoid, 180-1, 484-9.

Wood chopping an unskilled task and largely employed in workhouses, 182-5.

Time task preferable to fixed task and more uniform, although additional supervision might be required, 320, 447-50, 647, 706-10.

Stone breaking: the chief task in agricultural unions, 325; a skilled task, 429; objections, 429.

Oakum picking wasteful and uniformity cannot be ensured; a penal task, and likely to become obsolete; should be abolished as a task, 326-32, 335, 429.

Ideal task would be unskilled, irksome and laborious but useful, such as corn grinding or stone pounding, 333-4, 429, 433-7, 447.

Infirm casual exempt from task; procedure adopted if tramp pleads illness or inability, 430-2, 459-64, 520-3.

Rough work such as stone breaking alleged to injure hands of skilled workmen, 438-9.

Action of workhouse masters in enforcing task, varies: tendency is always towards leniency, 440-6.

Difficulties of task lessened where large numbers of vagrants are dealt with, 451-2.

Difficulty of small unions receiving many vagrants, 452-8.

Prosecutions for refusal of task: reports of Prison Commissioners, 520.

Should, as far as possible, be uniform, 647.

Work suited to persons of low physique desirable, 647.

Absence of, would render provision of accommodation for vagrants easier, but numbers would probably increase, 8495-8.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Circulars of Central Department have insisted on, as regards task, dietary, etc., but Orders have allowed wide discretion, resulting in considerable lack of uniformity, 306-7, 323; discretionary power of discharge should be taken away, 647.

Treatment more uniform in Metropolis than outside, but varies considerably, 308.

Uniformity would result in decrease in numbers of casuals, 309-12.

Difficulties in way of uniformity of task, 313-22, 429.

Absolute uniformity cannot be secured, but change in present system of tasks would probably result in less marked variation in different unions, 324.

Might be ensured by Order of Local Government Board, 705.

Essential in dealing with vagrancy, 8466-7.

Local Government Board could issue fresh regulations for enforcing uniformity, but exceptions must be abolished, 8523.

MR. PRESTON-THOMAS—cont.

VAGRANCY, HISTORICAL ACCOUNT OF:—

- Early measures against vagrancy concerned relief of begging, not poor law relief, laws against begging being stringent and repressive, 7-10.
- Act of 1536 provided for compulsory apprenticeship of vagrant children, and prohibited giving of alms to vagrant under penalty of ten times the amount given, 11.
- Poor Law Act of Elizabeth did not refer to vagrants, 12.
- Various local Acts passed between Act of Elizabeth and Vagrancy Act of 1824 empowered municipalities to commit vagrants or sturdy beggars to workhouse for periods up to one or even for three years, 13-18, 28-9.
- Vagrancy Act of 1824 an Act for repression of mendicity, but magistrates authorised to grant vagrants discharged from prison certificates or passes to enable them to reach places of settlement, and to obtain relief on the way, 19-22.
- Report of Poor Law Commissioners of 1834 recommended issue of regulations for relief of vagrants and discharged prisoners, 23-4.
- Poor Law Act, 1834, did not deal with vagrancy or begging, 25-7.
- Circular of 1837 drew a distinction between destitute wayfarers and professional beggars, the former to be relieved by relieving officer and the latter by constables under Vagrancy Act of 1824, 30.
- Task of work first enforced at Hatfield about 1838, and legalised by Act of 1842, 31-8.
- General Order of 1842 required casuals to be kept in a separate ward, dieted and set to work, 39.
- Reduction of vagrancy between 1842 and 1844 attributed to enforcement of task, and partly to opening of refuges in London, 40-2.
- Poor Law Act of 1844 authorised combination of unions for provision of casual wards, but scheme for division of London into districts was withdrawn, 42-5.
- Irish famine of 1848 caused enormous increase of vagrancy, 45.
- Minute of 1848 issued by President of Poor Law Board called attention to necessity of discriminating between professional vagrants and those really in distress, and suggested uniformity in (a) refusal of relief to men not actually destitute, (b) a sufficient task, (c) employment of police as assistant relieving officers, and (d) system of passes or certificates: decrease in vagrancy followed, 46-9.
- Scheme to divide London into districts again put forward in 1857 but withdrawn, 50-1.
- Circular of 28th December, 1863, recommended appointment of police as relieving officers for vagrants in London: proposal generally adopted, 52-6.
- Houseless Poor Acts of 1864 and 1865 made vagrancy a common charge in London, and required every London union to provide casual wards, 57-8.
- Circulars of 1864 and 1865 specified requirements for casual wards, recommended task and bath, and announced arrangements by which police would inspect wards in London quarterly, 59.
- Reports of Poor Law Board Inspectors in 1866 showed great diversities as to treatment of tramps; more than one-third were relieved in common lodging-houses; many workhouse masters would not enforce tasks, 60-5, 70-4.
- Report of Poor Law Board of 1866 commented on increase of vagrancy, particularly in London, and on objection of police to act as assistant relieving officers in London: system terminated in 1872, 75-80.
- Special officers appointed in 1872 by boards of guardians as assistant relieving officers in place of police, and central supervision provided by four officers appointed by Local Government Board, 81-92.
- Order of 1866 prescribed uniform diet for casuals in London, 93-5.
- Poor Law Board circular of 1868 suggested that register of applicants for admission should be kept; that they be searched, bathed and made to perform task, and commended system of separate cells, 96-9.
- Report of 1871 by Mr. Wodehouse as to vagrancy in Kent—system broke down at hop-picking time, 100-1.

MR. PRESTON-THOMAS—cont.

VAGRANCY, HISTORICAL ACCOUNT OF—cont.

- Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871, required guardians to provide casual wards and established system of tasks; Order of 22nd November, 1871, prescribed regulations, 102-7.
- Report of Local Government Board in 1872 commented on reduction of vagrants, attributed mainly to new Act, 108-10.
- Circular of 30th May, 1872, as to appointment of identification officers in London, 111: Reports of 1873 and 1875 referred to success of identification system and the consequent reduction of vagrancy in London, and suggested further measures for habitual vagrants, 112-22.
- Subsequent reports (1878-1880) referred to increase of vagrancy attributed to depression in trade and severe winter, 133-5.
- Casual Poor Act, 1882, authorised detention for four days, and increased task, 136-42.
- Order of 1882 prescribed regulations: summary of, 144-62.
- Decrease of vagrancy immediately after 1882, but subsequent increase till 1889, 165-6.
- Trafalgar Square gatherings of 1887; their effect on casual wards in Metropolis, 177.
- Circulars of 1887 and 1888 suggested earlier time of discharge for casuals, 178.
- Circular of 1888 as to wood chopping deprecated competition with firewood manufacturers, 180-5.
- Circular of 1889 advocated uniformity of treatment in London, 186-7.
- Order of 11th June, 1892, authorised casual to claim discharge at 5.30 in summer and 6.30 in winter, 188.
- Deputation of guardians to Local Government Board in 1895 pressed appointment of Royal Commission or Departmental Committee, but request was declined and circular of 1896 issued urging enforcement of Order of 1882, 189-92.
- Reports of Local Government Board Inspectors in 1903, on subject of vagrancy, 193-4.
- Deputation of 23rd February, 1904, from Central Poor Law Conference and Poor Law Unions Association resulted in appointment of Departmental Committee, 195.
- VAGRANCY.
- Reduction in, followed issue of official circulars, 126-30.
- Fluctuations of vagrancy: diagram showing ebb and flow, 123-5, 132, 222, 231.
- Localisation of: average number per casual ward highest in London and lowest in North Wales and Cornwall, 300-3.
- Vagrancy Bills of 1904, 513-4.
- Summary of recommendations made to Local Government Board for amendment of present system dealing with, 516-9.
- Swiss system has diminished vagrancy and begging, 8277-80, 8372-3.
- Voluntary society (Inter-cantonal Union) established in certain cantons, for aiding bona fide travellers, 8283-6, 8300-1, 8449-50, 8453-62, 8503.
- Lucerne Inter-cantonal Union: administration described, 8430-1.
- Every traveller in Switzerland must carry book containing papers of origin, and certificate of having worked; results of refusing work, 8453-61.
- Relief stations of Inter-cantonal Union: ordinary houses, not places built for purpose: stations described: not inspected by Government, 8475, 8499-504.
- County authority (police) preferred for dealing with, in England; present system unfair to small unions; combinations of unions objected to, 8467-72.
- VAGRANTS.
- Number of, in any district depends largely upon action taken in other districts and on action of magistrates, 257-60.
- Ages of; analysis of admissions to Exeter workhouse for one year; proportion over 65 compared with general population; mostly in able-bodied period of life, but many handicapped by disabilities, 272-87.
- Not an ill-fed class, 377.

MR. PRESTON-THOMAS—*cont.*VAGRANTS—cont.

Often spend their last money on drink and enter casual ward full of liquor, 381-2.

Many travel from workhouse to workhouse without using common lodging-houses, 386.

A police rather than a poor law nuisance, and police should co-operate in dealing with them; vagrant objected to as beggar, not as tramp, 403-4, 599, 625-7, 635.

Material condition of, has improved; tramp now a clean person, 543-4, 547-50, 600-1.

Present system of dealing with, cheap, 599.

Follow the high roads generally; some unions rarely see a vagrant, 607-9.

Less than one-third of the total number of vagrants are in casual wards; difficulty of dealing with remainder, 641.

Ragged state of clothing may sometimes prevent vagrant obtaining work, 644-5.

Honest wayfarers few in number at ordinary times, 646; suggested treatment of, 647-68; discretionary power of workhouse master should be abolished, 669.

Avoid workhouse where strict discipline is enforced, 675.

Classification of, into (1) criminal, (2) employable, (3) incapable, 678-81.

Earnings of, sometimes considerable, 702.

Large railway works, etc., attract vagrants, but as a rule only as hangers-on to the workers, 728.

Uniform system of management for, with food tickets, police supervision, etc., would reduce numbers, 8488-91.

WAY-TICKETS OR PASSPORTS.

Magistrates authorised by Vagrancy Act of 1824 to grant certificates or passes to vagrants discharged from prison, 19-22.

Suggested by Poor Law Board in 1848, 46; commended by Poor Law Board in 1868, 96; and by Local Government Board in 1883, 168.

Recommendations recently made to Local Government Board as to, 516.

If system is introduced, police should issue way-tickets to vagrants at starting place, and food tickets should be given at workhouse on morning of discharge, 636, 647.

Suggested tickets for genuine workers: possible objections to, 647-68, 717-25; police could assist scheme by telephonic communication, 676-7.

Swiss system of passes described, 8283-97, 8452, 8519-22.

Defects of existing English system, 8290.

If new system established in England, relief stations should be at casual wards or police stations, 8298-9.

Ticket insisting on particular route undesirable, 8452.

Suggested system for England; police should issue tickets, 8463-5.

WOMEN VAGRANTS.

Less than one-tenth of whole number of admissions, but in London proportion about one-fifth; decrease in recent years, 288-96.

All women should be detained, and admitted to workhouse if they wish it, 682.

Probable reasons for small number of women on tramp, 688-90.

WORKHOUSES.

Attendance of medical officers at, 476-81.

Workhouse officials generally kind, 670-3.

Proportion of men and women in, 691.

Swiss institutions described, 8302-4.

Many inmates of English workhouses would be better in penal colony, 8394-5.

Berne poorhouse: a workhouse with 250 acres of land, and power of compulsory detention, 8428-9.

MR. P. HARDING ROBERTS (5504-5639).

Clerk to guardians of Holywell union; hon. secretary of North Wales Poor Law Conference, 5504-6.

ALMSGIVING.

Alms demanded by vagrants from wayside residents, 5601-2.

MR. P. HARDING ROBERTS—cont.

ARMY.

Large proportion of vagrants belong to Army Reserve or are pensioners, 5589-94.

Pension papers never found on vagrants, 5594-8.

Pensions should be paid oftener than quarterly, 5594

BATHING OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Not general in North Wales, 5533.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Treatment of, in North Wales unions: statistics as to, 5510-7; Orders of Local Government Board not strictly enforced in any union, 5520; bona fide working men detained one night at master's discretion, 5520-3.

Sometimes hide their goods, etc., before applying for relief, 5535-6.

Nationality of, relieved in certain unions in North Wales, 5550.

CASUAL WARDS.

In North Wales: detailed particulars as to accommodation, number of admissions, diet, task, etc., 5510-5; present wards often too near each other: some might be closed and others rebuilt, 5575-7, 5585-6.

Administration of, should be left in local hands, but cost of, should be borne by State, 5578, 5588-9, 5619-22, 5631.

Mostly at workhouses in North Wales, 5617-8.

CHILDREN.

Comparatively few vagrant children, but they should be taken away from parents and sent to industrial schools, 5557-60, 5601, 5639.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Not very numerous in North Wales, but used to some extent for relief of vagrants, 5633-5.

CONVICTIONS.

For begging and sleeping out in North Wales, 5540.

Failure to procure, a discouragement to police in apprehending beggars, 5600.

DETENTION OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Detention on Sundays mostly observed in North Wales; practice urged at conference of guardians, 5523, 5632.

ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS.

Stringency in, with police vigilance, would cause decrease in number of vagrants, 5540, 5570.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

Instances of smallpox being spread by vagrants, 5547-8; bathing not always a protection against, 5549.

LABOUR COLONIES.

State colonies for large areas for treatment of habitual vagrants favoured, 5632.

Establishment urged by conference of unions in North Wales, 5632.

POLICE.

Act as assistant relieving officers in some unions in North Wales, 5518-9, 5524-32.

Police stations generally near casual wards in North Wales, 5528-30.

More vigilant in some counties than others, 5541-4.

Should search in all cases and give tickets for casual wards, 5573-4, 5616.

PROSECUTIONS IN NORTH WALES.

Statistics as to, for offences by vagrants; variation in different counties, 5540-6.

Proportion of, to numbers relieved, cannot be stated, 5546.

SEARCHING OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Men searched at police stations in North Wales, where relief is administered by police, 5524-5, 5534.

Women not searched by police, 5537-9.

MR. P. HARDING ROBERTS—cont.

SENTENCES.

Leniency of magistrates in North Wales, 5540.
 No stipendiary justices in North Wales, 5599.
 Short sentences not deterrent but sometimes a help to vagrant on his journey, 5561-5.
 Less than fourteen days useless, 5566-7.

STATISTICS.

As to casual wards, numbers relieved, tasks, treatment, way-tickets, etc., in North Wales, 5510-7, 5635-8.
 As to offences by vagrants in North Wales, 5540-2.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Lack of, in North Wales; guardians too sympathetic, 5509, 5568, 5579.
 Orders of Local Government Board not strictly enforced in North Wales, 5520, 5572.
 Desirability of enforcing, 5569-72, 5584.
 Difficult, if administration is left to guardians, but it should be made compulsory, although it would be heavy charge on smaller unions, 5572-5.
 Extension of area of administration to counties objected to, 5581.
 Urged at conference of guardians of unions in North Wales, 5632.

VAGRANCY.

Steady increase of, in Wales in recent years, 5507-8.
 Causes of, and suggested remedies; resolutions passed at conference of North Wales guardians, 5551, 5579-80, 5632.
 State should take over whole cost of, but not control; administration should be in hands of local guardians with perhaps police inspection, 5587-9.
 An eternal subject at poor law conferences; police often suggested as the authority to deal with, 5623-31.

VAGRANTS.

County or police administration not favoured, as making treatment too penal, 5581-3.
 Very few bona fide working men, probably only 3 or 4 per cent., 5603-4.
 Ultimately become too old to tramp, and become chargeable, 5605-9.
 Distinction between man requiring relief because of illness or old age and tramp preferring vagrant life, 5605-9.
 Relief of, not a police question, but one of destitution, 5610-6.
 Many are able-bodied, 5611-4.

WAY-TICKETS.

Red, white and blue tickets in use in four unions in North Wales: description of tickets, 5513-7; tickets issued by police, 5518-9.
 System advocated, to distinguish bona fide worker from habitual vagrant, 5551-6.
 Genuine worker would not object to obtain ticket from police, 5555-6.
 Gloucestershire and Berkshire systems, 5552-3.

MR. RODERICK ROSS (6942-6984).

Has been chief constable of Edinburgh for last five years, 6942. Was previously chief constable of Bradford, and chief constable and assistant relieving officer at Ramsgate, 6972-4.

BEGGING IN EDINBURGH.

Offenders prosecuted under Local Act: results of prosecutions: cases sometimes sent to parish authorities, 6949-51.

CASUAL WARDS.

Advantages of; tasks deterrent, 6975-6, 6980.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES IN EDINBURGH.

Under supervision of sanitary authorities, not police, 6963-4.
 Salvation Army lodging-house, 6978-9.
 Cheap lodging-houses attract tramps, 6979.

MR. RODERICK ROSS—cont.

POLICE IN EDINBURGH.

Have no official relations with poor law authorities, but co-operate with them, 6965-6.

POORHOUSES IN EDINBURGH.

Two: for old and infirm inmates, 6967-71.

SHELTERS IN EDINBURGH.

Rarely full, although breakfast and supper are given; applicants are not searched, and no task is exacted, 6956-61, 6980.

SLEEPING OUT IN EDINBURGH.

More cases than usual last winter, owing to attraction of free meals, etc., 6952-3.
 Number of convictions for, 6954-5.

VAGRANCY IN EDINBURGH.

No means of relieving at police stations, but cases of absolute necessity sometimes placed in cells, and fed, 6943-8.
 No risk of man dying from want of food or shelter in Scotland, 6977.

VAGRANTS.

Conditions in Scotland easier for, than in England: attractions of free distribution of food, 6981-2.
 All habitual vagrants should be isolated as pests to society, 6982-4.

MR. C. SIMMONS (3235-3513).

Has been superintendent visiting officer of Metropolitan casual wards for twenty-three years; was visiting officer for seven years previously, 3235-7.

BEGGING.

London casuall not professional beggars, 3291-8.
 Food, etc., obtained by: East End more charitable than West End, 3305-8, 3458.

CASUAL PAUPERS IN LONDON.

Proportion of genuine working men amongst, 3281-2.
 Idleness their ideal existence, 3299-302.
 Habitual casuall mostly well nourished and able-bodied, 3309-12.
 Many travel round country, 3314.
 A variable and singular class, and unlike country vagrants, 3347, 3444-5; "once a London tramp always a London tramp," 3490.
 Numbers admitted to casual wards in 1903 and 1904, 3354.
 Dislike workhouse and look down on ordinary paupers, 3463-5.
 Downfall generally due to drink, 3466-9.
 Do not commit thefts or assaults, 3472-3.
 Begin as country tramps, 3474-6.
 Not so rough a class as formerly, 3477-9, 3486.
 Sick vagrants sent to workhouse infirmary, 3503-4.

CASUAL WARDS IN LONDON.

Twenty-eight separate wards, and twenty-eight separate authorities governing them, 3239, 3257; treatment not uniform, 3285.
 Regulations of Local Government Board generally enforced, 3243.
 Procedure in case of person applying for admission, 3244-5, 3261-4.
 Task of work in, varies, 3246-7; but is generally sufficient, 3319; tasks for women, 3248; wards popular where task is not strictly enforced, 3258-60, 3265-7.
 Dietary in, 3249-56, 3277-80; no complaints of its insufficiency, 3254; bread often left uneaten, 3305-7.
 Total accommodation in, 3268; mainly on separate cell system, 3446; accommodation sufficient; some wards never full, 3269-73, 3456; others always full owing to easy task, 3274-6.
 Wards should be placed under one authority to ensure uniformity of treatment, 3285-6, 3318, 3411-2.
 Nine hundred and fifty habitual tramps (men and women) practically live in wards, 3287-8, 3290; analysis of their ages, 3289.

MR. C. SIMMONS—cont.

CASUAL WARDS IN LONDON—cont.

Preferred by vagrant to workhouse, 3290-1.
Bread often left outside wards, 3303-6.
Medical officer always available, 3320-1, 3495-8.
Information as to, soon circulated by casuats, 3348-50.
Cases of men coming from Salvation Army shelter to be cleansed, 3369.
Identification officers; duties to point out casuats liable to detention for four nights, 3373-4, 3390; have no authority to enforce detention, 3382-3; casual often escapes identification, 3376-81; numbers identified and detained in 1904, 3397-9; bona fide working men not identified, 3502.
In theory, casuats only entitled to sleep in wards twice a month, but in practice the "old hands" sleep there every night, 3386-96.
Refusals of admission for want of room, 3400, 3456, 3493-4; mainly at wards where task not strictly enforced, 3401-10; persons refused admission do not sleep out, 3413-9.
Separate cells formerly deterrent, but casuats now accustomed to them, 3447-54.
Separate cells preferred by bona fide working men, 3452-3.
Complaints that shelters have effect of filling wards, 3457.
Abolition of, and admission of casuats to workhouse; whether it would be deterrent, 3459-62.
Work cells sufficiently large, 3491-2.

CONVICTIONS.

For 1900-1904 in London, 3353, 3355.

DETENTION.

For four days not enforced at Poplar or Whitechapel, 3374-5.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Would not succeed with habitual vagrants, even with compulsory detention, 3356-60; but might benefit the younger hands, 3434.

POLICE.

Advantage of police experience in dealing with vagrants, 3483-5.

PRISON.

Preference for, often shown by casuats, 3322-6, 3330, 3334-42, 3351-2, 3358.
A deterrent to some casuats, 3338-9.

SENTENCES.

Particulars of, given to certain habitual vagrants, 3322-42, 3435-40, 3511-3.
Of more than twenty-one days preferred by casuats, 3343-6, 3441-8, 3470-1.
Variation in, given by different magistrates, even at same court, 3421-8; men seldom discharged, 3429-30.

TASKS OF WORK.

Cleaning as a task, 3314-7.
Alternatives to stone breaking difficult to suggest, because of possibility of interference with outside labour, 3361-6.
Stone breaking easy to some casuats, 3367.
Prosecutions for refusing; certificates of medical officer not always obtained, 3431-3, 3505-10.
Whether time task would be preferred to piece work, 3499-3501.

VAGRANTS.

Attracted to London by Lord Mayor's fund; afterwards remain there, 3283-4, 3444.

MR. H. B. SIMPSON (1060-1284).

Member of the Committee and Principal Clerk in Home Office, 1060.

BEGGING AND SLEEPING OUT.

Statistics as to, 1064-84.

CHILDREN OF TRAMPS.

Existing law sufficient to deal with, 1144-73.

MR. H. B. SIMPSON—cont.

HOME OFFICE.

Secretary of State has no statutory powers or duties with regard to vagrants as a class, but certain institutions under control of Home Office receive vagrants, 1061.

Objection of, to new offence being created, 1161-3.

Experience of, with regard to institutions under local or private control subject to State inspection, 1274.

IDENTIFICATION OF VAGRANTS.

Might be effected by finger-prints, 1127-9, 1246-50.

INEBRIATE REFORMATORIES.

Proportion of vagrants in, cannot be stated, 1062.

As precedent for labour colonies, 1198-233.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Inebriate reformatories as precedent for, 1198-233.

Not to be conducted for purpose of profit, 1216-8.

Habitual vagrants might be committed to, by quarter sessions for term not exceeding three years, 1233-5.

Distinction between compulsory farm colonies and prisons, 1262-9.

Home Office would have no objection to either local or voluntary management of, with State control, 1274-5.

System need not be universal, 1276.

County and Government might each contribute towards cost of man committed to, by quarter sessions, 1277.

POLICE.

As assistant relieving officers, 1174-97; views of Home Office, 1174-8, 1189-93; objections to, 1179-82; advantages of, 1183; circular of Poor Law Board in favour of, 1189; services paid for by boards of guardians, 1194-5; system largely in use in Wales, 1196-7.

Visit casual wards every day in many unions, 1184-6.
Co-operation of, essential in treatment of vagrants, 1187.

PRISONS.

Cranks and treadmills abolished since 1899, 1135-6.
Apart from diet, prisoners under impression that conditions of prison life have improved, 1137-8.

Diet in, must be adequate for all classes of prisoners, and therefore better than what might be actually necessary for vagrants, 1139-40.

Accommodation for short time prisoners insufficient, 1251-2.

Building new prisons; powers of Prison Commissioners and Secretary of State, 1253-9.

Prisons may be established under special regulations as to age, sex and health, but not for special class of convicted offenders, 1260-1, 1270-4, 1281-4.

Few petitions received from prisoners in regard to enforcement of Vagrancy Act, 1278-9.

PROSECUTIONS.

For begging and sleeping out since 1859, 1064, 1069; different counties compared, 1069, 1074; number depends more on practice of local police than on number of vagrants, 1069.

Largely influenced by local circumstances, 1083.

For misbehaviour by paupers since 1857, 1085-91; marked increase since 1899, 1086; probably attributable to impression that prison discipline had been relaxed, 1133-8; probable explanation of fluctuations in numbers in different years, 1085-6.

RETREATS FOR INEBRIATES, 1200-2, 1210-5.

SENTENCES ON TRAMPS.

Lack of uniformity in, 1093-102.

Single magistrate can only sentence up to fourteen days, 1094-5.

Under fourteen days not given separately in Home Office returns, 1099-1100.

Magistrates exercise discretion freely, 1101.

Statutory minimum of fourteen days suggested, 1103, 1119-26.

MR. H. B. SIMPSON—cont.

SENTENCES ON TRAMPS—cont.

Practice of "binding over" would be useful, 1105-17 ; some system of registration would be necessary, 1127-9.

Seven day sentence would be detrimental to inebriate tramp, 1130-1.

Sentences of imprisonment cannot be made more deterrent except by being made longer, 1141-3.

Secretary of State can advise Crown to remit any sentence, 1280.

VAGRANCY.

Increase in 1903 probably caused through slackness of trade, 1068.

Criminal and poor law vagrancy compared, 1076-82 ; poor law vagrancy has doubled, while criminal vagrancy has decreased, 1081 ; probable reasons for difference, 1082-4.

Sir John Gorst's Vagrancy Bill followed wording of Inebriate Reformatory Act, 1206 ; and dealt with vagrants only as offenders against criminal law, 1219-21, 1233.

VAGRANCY ACT, 1824.

Majority of persons committed under, probably not vagrants, 1063-4.

Deals with persons for their mode of life rather than for particular offence, 1228-9.

Allows magistrates to give way-tickets, 1230.

Procedure under, in case of incorrigible rogues, 1235-45 ; convictions usually for neglecting to maintain wife and family, 1240-5.

Has worked well, 1229.

CAPTAIN STERNE.

Chief constable of Wiltshire.

See MR. A. C. MITCHELL.

REV. A. S. THOMPSON, B.D. (2893-3042).

Vice-chairman of Wycombe board of guardians ; has been a guardian for twelve years, 2893.

CHILDREN.

Of habitual vagrants should be taken from them, 2934-45 ; application of Industrial Schools Act and Poor Law Act, 1899, 2935-56 ; whether parents should be punished, 2955-6.

Poor law school preferred to industrial school for, 2948-9.

National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children might be utilised, 3008-11.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

At Wycombe and Marlow, 3021.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE.

Smallpox spread less through casual wards than through common lodging-houses, 2960-3, 3020.

Bathing and searching as aids to detection of, 2961-3, 2965-7.

Medical officer should inspect casual wards more frequently, 2964.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Personal experience of Swiss colonies, 2976-84.

Organisation of labour the chief difference between voluntary colonies and country workhouses, 2988-90.

In Swiss and German colonies small payment made to colonists, 2992.

Comparison between penal colony, out-door prison and lunatic asylum, 2993-5.

LABOUR BUREAUX.

Advocated, 2913.

MID-DAY MEAL.

Favoured as preventing necessity for begging, 2968-75, 3034.

POLICE.

Effect of visits to casual wards advantageous but not deterrent, 3003-7, 3035-7.

PRISON.

Diet in, better than that in casual wards, 2929-33.

SENTENCES.

Fifteen days, as a rule, at Wycombe, for refusing work, etc., 2928, 3039-40.

REV. A. S. THOMPSON, B.D.—cont.

TASKS OF WORK.

Farm work as a task unsuccessful, owing to lack of supervision and of power of detention, 2898-902.

Wood sawing a desirable task, 2905-8, 2957.

Stone pounding as a task, 2958-9.

VAGRANTS.

Classification of:—(1) hereditary or professionals ; (2) itinerant unemployed ; (3) social derelicts ; suggested treatment of each class, 2909-12 ; proportion of each class, 3028-33.

Vagrants rare in Switzerland, 2984.

Co-ordination between local authorities essential to successful treatment of, 2913, 2985.

Discouraging effect of antagonistic feeling between guardians, police, and magistrates, 2986-7.

WAY-TICKETS.

Or passports, with personal registration suggested ; system would be effective if made general, 2913-6, 2922, 2939-40, 3022-4.

Form of ticket suggested, 2917, 2921

Tickets should be issued at police stations, 2918-21.

WYCOMBE CASUAL WARDS.

Reduction in number of admissions caused by strict enforcement of task, 2895-6, 2923-6 ; no complaints received from other unions, 3000-2.

Stone breaking the only task at, 2897-8, 2903-4.

Prosecutions for refusing task, rare, 2927, 3027, 3038 ; medical officer examines, if vagrant claims examination, 3018-9, 3025-6.

No recent increase in number of vagrants, 2996.

Regulations carried out at, 2997.

Police visits valuable but not deterrent, 3003-7, 3035-7.

Both men and women received by porter, 3014-5.

Situated on road frequented by vagrants, 3041-2.

WYCOMBE WORKHOUSE.

Number of inmates, 3016.

Medical officer visits thrice weekly, 3017.

MR. H. J. TORR (10148-10346).

Justice of the Peace for Lincolnshire ; joint author of report by Committee of the Lindsey justices on the Belgian labour colonies, 10149. Has been an ex-officio guardian, 10311-2.

BEGGING.

Punishment by imprisonment in Lincolnshire ; law strictly enforced ; numbers proceeded against in last five years, 10150-4.

CASUAL WARDS.

At Lincoln frequented mainly by professional vagrants, 10315-8.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Preferred to prison for habitual vagrants ; magistrates should have power to impose detention in colony as alternative punishment to prison, 10161-2, 10251-79, 10308-9.

Registration of first two convictions and detention for third offence would be satisfactory ; justices in petty sessions should have power to detain up to three years : first sentence might be an indeterminate one, 10163-5, 10269-71, 10304-5.

Colonies cannot succeed without power of detention, 10165-8.

If started without outside labour, and buildings put up by colonists themselves, as at Merxplas, colonies could be made very nearly to pay, 10169-71, 10343-4.

Merxplas system might be applied in England, with certain modifications ; Merxplas too large, 10172-3, 10212-6.

Five hundred should be limit of accommodation in England, 10174.

Colonies might be largely experimental, and started by various bodies, but all should be certified by Home Office, and be under inspection, with local visiting committees of magistrates ; Hadleigh and Lingfield might be certified, 10175-9, 10279, 10293-7.

Colonies should be graded, and each colony divided into classes ; men should be able to progress from class to class and from colony to colony, 10179-84, 10216-8.

MR. H. J. TORR—cont.

LABOUR COLONIES—cont.

System should be kept distinct from criminal system, 10184-6.
Food should be made the incentive to work, and men should be able to earn bonuses, 10187-9, 10219-20.
Philanthropic and religious bodies should organise leisure time of colonists, 10189, 10237-9.
Merxplas and other foreign colonies (except in Germany) not reformatory owing to absence of humanising and religious influences, 10189-90, 10240-3, 10290-2.
Cost of colony as against cost of taking vagrant to gaol, cost in casual wards, etc., 10191-6, 10344.
Colonies should be industrial as well as agricultural, with system of teaching, and be self-supporting, 10205-8, 10212, 10222-32.
Absence of teaching at Merxplas, a drawback, 10206-11.
Dietary at Merxplas would not be considered sufficient in England, 10221-2.
Objections of outside labour market; how to be met, 10171, 10225-37.
Wives and children of colonists not a real difficulty, 10244-5.
Probable number to be provided for at starting, 10272-4, 10342.
Detention might be by administrative order, 10275-7.
Cost of, how to be borne; State and local authorities should pay part, 10280-9, 10298-303.
Hadleigh and Lingfield colonies fail, owing to absence of power of detention, 10292.
Detention and labour in, compared with prison; harder work but more encouragement, 10319-27.
Men inefficient through age might be sent to, 10338-41.
Exemption of inmates from labour on medical grounds; numbers probably few, 10345-6.

PRISON.

Not now deterrent to vagrants but preferred to casual ward because more comfortable and task easier, 10155, 10160, 10264-8, 10310, 10319, 10328-37.
Reasons for abolishing treadmill in, 10345-6.

SENTENCES.

Cumulative sentences given in Lincolnshire for begging, but have no effect, 10151-3.
Short sentences not deterrent—many vagrants ask for more, 10155, 10162-3, 10197.

SLEEPING OUT.

Not many cases in Lincolnshire, 10255-7.

TASKS OF WORK FOR CASUAL PAUPERS.

Enforced in Lincolnshire; tasks heavier than in prison, 10156-9.
Stone breaking a deterrent; has reduced vagrancy where prescribed as a task, 10159.

VAGRANCY.

Law enforced in Lincolnshire; prisoners sometimes sent to quarter sessions as incorrigible rogues for persistent begging, but number of vagrants in workhouse and of vagrants' convictions has increased, 10150, 10246-54, 10258-62, 10306-8.

WAY-TICKETS.

Would be effective, if made general; otherwise difficulties would be too great, 10198-9, 10202.
Should be part of labour colony system, and should facilitate labour movements, 10201.
Scheme by providing for bona fide working man would reconcile public to detention of vagrant, 10200-4.

MR. WILLIAM VALLANCE (9684-9877).

Was clerk to Whitechapel guardians for thirty-four years and previously clerk to Braintree guardians for three years, 9684, 9686, 9802.

CASUAL PAUPERS.

Prefer wards which are least repressive in administration, 9688.

MR. WILLIAM VALLANCE—cont.

CASUAL WARDS.

Frequented by idle loafers, who might work, 9687.
Present system in London not satisfactory, and very costly; suggestions for improved and cheaper wards. Well Street Sailors' Home and workhouse at New York as models, 9690, 9720-5, 9869-71.
Whitechapel wards; detention and task enforced; wards on associated principle and not entirely satisfactory, 9746-7, 9749-54, 9791-4.
Expense of, in London, a charge on Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, and county administration in that area would be no advantage, 9752, 9795-9.
In country, larger area of administration or management by joint committee of guardians of unions in each county would secure greater uniformity, but would be costly, 9795-6, 9800-1.
Committees of guardians and philanthropic persons might be appointed to make wards more helpful in reclaiming men, 9858-60.
Analysis of 530 men admitted to Whitechapel wards, and of the causes of their resorting thereto, 9875-7.

CHILDREN.

Of habitual vagrants should be taken from them, as proposed in Bill of 1904, 9847-9.

DIETARY IN CASUAL WARDS.

Fairly uniform throughout London, 9689, 9743.
Should be certified medically to be adequate, 9699, 9700.

LABOUR COLONIES.

Habitual vagrants should be sent for long period to industrial colony under Home Office, 9736-9.
Vagrants may have been sent to Hadleigh Colony from casual wards, but probably only through shelters, 9825-30.
Object of, not only restraint, but to introduce habit of work and element of hope, 9863.
Classification in; two grades would be advantageous, 9874-5.

MID-DAY MEAL FOR VAGRANTS.

In London, not favoured, but no serious objection to ration of bread being given on leaving casual ward, 9765-70.

POLICE.

Control of vagrants by; in 1866, opinions of Poor Law Board Inspectors in favour of such control, 9789-90, 9806-9.
Police as assistant relieving officers; system might have deterrent effect in certain cases, 9824, 9872.
Police and poor law should not be associated, 9836.
Police might deal with tramps using threats to obtain money, 9844.

PRISON.

No advantage in sending man to prison for vagrancy offences, 9861-3.

SENTENCES.

Short sentences not deterrent; detention in labour colony would give better chance of reformation, 9736-9.
Convictions might be recorded, 9864.
Longer sentences would be deterrent, if they could be obtained, 9873.

SHELTERS.

An evil which encourages sleeping out, and attracts loafers from country, 9701-4, 9707-8, 9852-3, 9839.
Shelters in Whitechapel, 9705-6.
Useful when part of reclamatory system, but not as cheap casual wards or lodging-houses, 9709.
Used habitually by many men and women, who lead an idle life during the day, 9710-4.
In absence of shelters, migration of loafers to London would be greatly lessened; they would be dealt with in their own districts under ordinary Poor Law, 9715-9.
Should come under Common Lodging-House Acts, and be controlled by local authority and visited by police, 9840, 9853-7.

MR. WILLIAM VALLANCE—cont.

SLEEPING OUT.

A public scandal in London which should not be allowed to continue ; persons found sleeping out within certain hours should be taken by police to casual wards ; practice would then be given up, 9726-7, 9730-1, 9755-63, 9846, 9850-2.

Class of sleepers out is created by facilities afforded in London, 9727.

London county council census of sleepers out, 9728-31. Convictions for, difficult to obtain in parts of country, 9761-2.

Attracts indiscriminate almsgiving, 9845.

Encouraged by existence of free shelters, 9852-3.

TASKS OF WORK IN CASUAL WARDS.

Corn grinding and wood chopping preferred to stone breaking, or oakum picking, 9690-1, 9698.

Corn grinding useful and remunerative : cost of mills, 9691-6.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Important, but London should be treated differently to country, 9740-2.

Tolerable uniformity enforced in London as to diet, task and detention, 9743-8.

Greater uniformity might be secured in country with larger area of administration, but it would be costly, 9800.

VAGRANCY.

Act of 1871 caused decrease at first, and certain wards were closed ; subsequent increase led to the more stringent Act and Order of 1882, resulting in temporary decrease, but recently increase has been continuous, 9810-20.

VAGRANTS.

Habituals should be identified by finger-prints ; present system of identification in London imperfect, 9737, 9865-8.

Witness gave evidence before the House of Lords Committee in 1888 in favour of the abolition of the distinction between vagrants and ordinary paupers ; but the Committee reported against this, 9771-88, 9821-3, 9838.

London vagrant different to country vagrant, and does not usually leave London, 9831, 9841-3.

No real distinction in London between ordinary vagrant and frequenters of shelters or loafers, nor any material difference between casual pauper and workhouse inmate, 9837, 9841.

WAY-TICKETS.

Would be useless in London for habitual vagrants ; tickets would only be used for begging purposes : if adopted generally, usefulness of tickets doubtful, 9732-5, 9764, 9832.

Honest wayfarer might carry credential and have preferential treatment in casual wards ; poor law authority should issue credential, rather than police, 9734-5, 9832-6.

MR. H. G. WILLINK (8852-9047).

Barrister-at-law, Justice of Peace for county of Berkshire, Member of county council and chairman of Bradfield board of guardians since 1892, 8852-3. Was previously a member of Paddington board of guardians, 8854. Was a member of the special committee of the Charity Organisation Society on distress from want of employment, 8855.

Has visited the Dutch and Belgian labour colonies and reported on them, 8856-9.

BEGGARS.

In Holland, committed to labour colony after second offence in one year, 8884.

Number of, reduced in Belgium and Holland by labour colonies—especially in towns, 9018-22.

LABOUR COLONIES.

DUTCH COLONIES described : two classes : free colonies and beggar colonies : how started and how maintained, 8860-84.

MR. H. G. WILLINK—*cont.*LABOUR COLONIES—*cont.*DUTCH COLONIES—cont.

Wives and children of beggar colonists sent to poor law institutions. 8885 ; no elevating influence in beggar colonies, 8957-8.

Inmates of beggar colonies ; how persuaded to work, 8886-91.

BELGIAN COLONIES : inducements to work in, 8892-7.

Merxplas Colony, 8908-11, 8979-96 ; inmates allowed to work for outside merchants, 8983-4 ; colony too large, 9015-6 ; employment in, described ; better than in Dutch beggar colonies, 8898-905, 8979-91 ; religious influences, 8996-9003, 9016.

IN ENGLAND : a different class to be dealt with, and more difficult to handle, 8906-8.

Experiment might be tried on private initiative, 8912-5, 9038-9.

Idea of colonies an old one and attracted attention early in 19th century, but opinion then mostly adverse, 8938-55.

Existing colonies not successful or reformatory, but system has reduced number of beggars, 8956-8, 8977-8, 8991-2, 9017-22.

Colonies, if not reformatory, would keep men off road and be a deterrent to others, 8959-61, 9023-5, 9032.

Committal to, should be by judicial sentence after a number of convictions : identification a difficulty : expense would be justified in case of habitual vagrant, 8962-76.

Visitation by outside societies, if properly organised, might aid in reform of inmates by moral and religious influence, 8997-9003.

Colony run by voluntary agency on reformatory school system, with compulsory detention and State aid, might be successful, 9004-8.

Experiment might be tried, 9038 ; but would be difficult to discontinue, 8914 ;

System of privileges would aid in maintaining discipline, 9028-31.

Probable number of men who would become inmates, 9033.

Cost of, would be larger than in Belgium, 9034-7. Segregation a great advantage, 8913.

PRISON.

Sometimes attractive to vagrants, 8923.

SENTENCES.

Of a few days, useless and costly, 8916-22, 8928, 9026-7.

Belgian sentences have been considerably lengthened, 8917-20.

What should be minimum sentence, 8924-7.

Public opinion a factor to be considered in determining sentence, 8928-30, 8968-72.

TASKS OF WORK.

Stone crushing at Bradfield : system a good one, unskilled and deterrent, 9040-7.

VAGRANTS.

Guardians generally would be glad to get rid of control of, 9013-4.

WAY-TICKETS.

Desirable as a means of identification, but success of system doubtful, 8931-7, 9009.

Police could work system better than guardians, 9010-2.

DR. J. H. PARKER WILSON, (9176-9370).

Medical officer of Pentonville prison, 9176.

CONVICTIONS :

More commitments to quarter sessions in London as incorrigible rogues than in provinces ; probable reasons, 9195-9, 9274-80.

DIETARY OF PRISONERS :

Diet A. suitable for vagrants in low condition, 9187-91.

New dietary better than old one, 9367-70 ; when introduced, 9261, 9357.

DR. J. H. PARKER WILSON—cont.

LABOUR COLONIES :

Penal colonies preferred to prison for treatment of vagrant class, 9347-9.

PENTONVILLE PRISON :

Analysis of 100 men of vagrant class admitted to ; many below average weight, in low condition, and unfit for labour ; 80 per cent. inmates for first time, 9178-85, 9190, 9205-19, 9241-50, 9281-4, 9302, 9312, 9329-30.

Serves area from Grays to Barnet, 9186.

Commitments for misbehaviour by paupers, begging and sleeping out, 9183-5, 9251-7 ; large increase during recent years, 9258-60 ; new diet not a cause of increase, 9262-5.

Hard labour in, oakum-picking and sackmaking ; tasks described, 9220-40.

No recent changes in discipline, except that treadwheel has been abolished, 9266-8.

Commitments to ; form of, 9253-7.

Work in, mostly for Government, 9334-6.

Proportion of feeble-minded prisoners ; majority from workhouse class, 9337-42.

DR. J. H. PARKER WILSON—cont.

PRISON.

Preference of vagrants for, to casual ward, not believed, 9092-3, 9300.

Treadwheel not more deterrent than oakum picking or sack making, 9269-70.

Severity in, not deterrent to vagrants, 9270-1, 9287-99.

Ordinary prisoner. below average in weight and height, 9281 ; vagrant class still lower, 9343-6.

Vagrant prisoners the lowest class, with no idea of comfort, 9282-4.

Removal of tramp prisoners would relieve prison administration, 9285-6.

Identification of prisoner ; how effected, 9303-11.

SENTENCES.

Short sentences a deterrent to many prisoners of vagrant class, 9248-9.

TASKS OF WORK IN PRISON :

Hard labour merely a technical term ; man certified as unfit for hard labour not necessarily unfit for all labour, 9236-8, 9313-28, 9360-4.

Object of, only disciplinary, 7272-3.

Industrial labour ; definition of, 9331-4.

"Finger" and "fiddle" as aids to oakum picking, 9365-6.

INDEX TO EVIDENCE, APPENDIX AND REPORT.

INDEX TO EVIDENCE, APPENDIX AND REPORT.

The references are as follows :—

Evidence	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	Number of Question, thus, 7175.
Appendix	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	Number of Page, thus, App. , pages 1-4.
Report	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	Number of Paragraph, thus, REPORT , par. 7.

Able-bodied Paupers

Inclusion of, in definition of Vagrancy—Suggestion, 7157.

Increase in Number, 10403.

Poorhouses, Scotland—Number of Inmates physically able-bodied, but mentally unfit to earn livelihood, 6428, 6429.

Able-bodied Vagrants

Percentage of, among men charged at Bow Street, 10724, 10725.

Scotland—Able-bodied not entitled to Relief, 6404, 6449, 6451, 6536-6538, 6684, 6803.

Cameron Committee Recommendation, 6783, 6840.

Farmers permitting use of Lofts, Outhouses, etc., 6411, 6418.

Glasgow, Arrangements in, see Glasgow.

House of Lords, Decision interpreting Statute of 1845, 6450.

Provision of Relief:

Necessary, if simple begging were to be made an offence, 6808, 6810, 6873.

Not desirable, 6540, 6541.

Separate and Special Treatment needed—Breakdown of French System due to mixture of reclus and hospitalisés, 8742, 8743.

Accommodation for Casual Paupers

Improvised Accommodation, 727.

see also titles Casual Wards, Common Lodging-Houses and Shelters.

Acts of Parliament

Chronological List, App., pages 1-4.

Richard II.—Act for repression of Begging, 8.

1536—Compulsory Apprenticeship of Vagrant Children—Almsgiving to Vagrants prohibited, 11.

Tudor Period:

Poor Law of Elizabeth—No reference to Vagrants, 12.

Stringency of the Laws against Beggars, 8.

Tudor Period to 1824—Local acts relating to committal to Workhouses, setting of Tasks, Establishment of Industrial Houses, etc., 13-18—No general Repealing Act, 28.

1824, see Vagrancy Act, 1824.

1834—No reference to Vagrants, no accommodation provided in New Workhouses, 25-27.

1842—Separate Wards required, Task legalised, Four hours' Detention authorised, 36, 39.

1844—Combination of Unions or Parishes for Provision of Casual Wards, 42.

1848—Cost of Casuals, Union Charge substituted for Charge on Particular Parish, 43.

Acts of Parliament—cont.

1864—Vagrancy made a Common Charge in London, 57, 58.

1871—Police and Admission to Casual Wards, Discharge Question, Uniform Diet, Lodging and Work, 87, 102.

1882—Detention lengthened and Task increased, 136-139.

Administration of Law in regard to Vagrancy, Authority to Control Vagrants, Suggestions, Opinions, etc.

Area of Administration:

Combination of Unions, Opinion against, 8469, 8470.

County, Question of, 9795, 9796

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 129.

The bigger the better, since the Vagrant was a matter for the Country at large, 8467.

Unfairness of present System to Small Unions, 8468.

Whole Country, Suggestion, 6219, 9800.

Area of Chargeability, see title Cost of Relief to Casual Paupers.

Central Authority, Creation of—Suggestion, 6192.

Education Authority—Suggestion, 4623.

Elasticity needed, 6577.

Enforcement of the Law, see that title.

History of, 6-196.

Summary—REPORT, par. 7-45, 257-260.

Law reduced to a Nullity, 2640, 5443.

Scotland, Diversity in Administration, 6627.

Separate Organisation for Tramps as distinct from Local Poor, Suggestion, 1867, 1876, 1884, 2298-2304.

Casual Wards—Use of Existing Wards by New Authority, proposed, 1884, 1886, 1939-1940.

Expense, Question of, 2305, 2306.

Honest Wayfarers, Question of Accommodation for, 1883.

Single Authority necessary to secure anything approaching Uniformity, 10520.

Unification desirable in Administrative Body which dealt with various classes of Casuals, 10498.

see also Names of Authorities suggested—County Authority, Police, Guardians, etc.

Adoption of Child Vagrants under Poor Law Act, 1899 see Child Vagrants.

Ages

Able-bodied period of life, Largest proportion of Tramps in, 287.

Bow Street Police Court—Average age of Vagrants convicted, 10791.

Ages—cont.Elderly Vagrants :

Increase in number—Effect of Employers' Liability Act and of Trades Unions, 4917-4920.

Larger proportion in Summer than in Winter in Agricultural Districts, 272.

Exeter Workhouse Statistics—Analysis of Ages of Vagrants in 1903-4, 272.

King's Norton Wards, 2605.

London—Ages of Habitual Vagrants, 3289, 10464.

REPORT, par. 56, 86.

Sheffield—Percentage of Tramps over sixty, etc., 2507.

Sixty-five, Proportion of Casual Paupers over Age of :

Comparison with average for the Population and average for Country Unions in Devonshire District, etc., 274-282.

Official Returns in 1899 and 1900, 272.

Statements of Tramps—Inclined to give Ages as older than they really are, 284-286.

Statistics, App., pages 26, 27.

Thirty—Number of Tramps under thirty, 4553.

Women, Ages of, 10503.

Agricultural Districts

Elderly Vagrants, larger proportion found in, in Summer than in Winter, 272.

Greater number of Tramps found in, 7549-7551.

"Akbar" Reformatory Ship

Return of cases since 1898, App., page 183.

Allotments, Gardens

Small Holdings for Workmen, suggested as preventive of Vagrancy, 5312-5314.

Almsgiving

see title Begging and Almsgiving.

Anderson, Sir Robert

Habitual Criminals, Treatment proposed for, permanent confinement until they should be reformed, 11200.

Anglesey

Prosecution for Offences under Vagrancy Acts, Number of Prosecutions and Convictions—Leniency of Magistrates, 5540.

Army—Present system producing Vagrants, etc.

Compelling Vagrants physically fit to enter Army, suggestion, 5551.

Gratuities on Discharge, Effect on Vagrancy, 594.

Short Service System, Effect on Vagrancy, 594.

Soldiers on Tramp—Number of Discharged Soldiers, Reservists, etc., on the road, 596, 927, 928, 1007, 1774; App., page 28.

Common Lodging-houses, Number of Old Soldiers in, 5860.

Industrial Schools, after-career of boys entering Army, 6004-6007, 6012, 6013.

King's Norton Ward—Number of Army men on Tramp, Physical condition, etc.—“Not one who had learned a Trade,” 2604, 2608-2610.

Pensions :—

Pawning or Concealing Papers, Possibility of, 5595-5598.

Payment of, at Shorter Intervals, Suggestion, 5594, 8653.

Proportion of Men who had been in the Army among Tramps, 7555.

Returns of 1897 and 1898, 595.

Sheffield Casual Wards, 2516-2520.

Wiltshire—10 per cent., 1900-1903.

Army—cont.Soldiers on Tramp—cont.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 392-396.

Reservists, Number found on the road, 5589-5593.

Training Soldiers in Technical or Agricultural Schools while in the Army—Suggestion, 5320.

Workhouse Ins and Outs,—St. George's, Hanover Square, Large Number of Army men in Workhouse, 8653-8656.

Arrears of Vagrancy

New Machinery would be clogged with arrears for the first ten years, 6197-6201.

Assistant Relieving Officers

Police as—see Police.

Association Wards

Attraction of—Objections to Association Wards, opportunity to arrange plans, etc., 175, 868, 869.

Refusals for want of Room, 10484-10488.

Day-rooms used as Association Wards in the Country, 10108, 10109.

Metropolitan Casual Wards—Number of Association Wards, 3446, 3452.

Number of Casual Wards with Association Wards, App., pages 80, 81.

Association of Poor Law Unions

Parliamentary Committee's Support of Sir J. Gorst's Vagrant Children Bill, 5985.

Aston Union

Detention—Two nights, 2718.

General Pauperism, Decrease in, 2788.

Number of Casuals, 2599.

Axbridge Union

Cells, etc., for Vagrants, Cost per head, 612.

Two Casual Wards in, 210, 211.

Ayrshire

Challenging Tramps—Order to Ayrshire Constabulary, 6779, 6780.

Child Vagrants, number of, Work of Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, etc., 6830-6833.

Honest Work-seekers—Large number of Vagrants were really seeking Work, but were undesirable workmen who would not do regular work, 6801, 6802, 6815-6817.

Mendicity Society—System of giving Tickets for Shelter and Food to Vagrants, 6765-6767, 6844; App., page 102.

Difficulty in Working, Small number providing themselves with tickets, 6770, 6771.

Food tickets, Value of, etc., 6773, 6844.

Two forms of ticket—Very slight improvement attracting Tramps, 6777, 6778.

Inspectors of the Poor, Use of system by, 6803.

Lodging tickets more in demand than Bread tickets, 6773.

Men “wanted” by the Police—Number of Cases of recognition, 6782, 6783.

Police Constables, Tickets bought by, 6795, 6796.

REPORT, par. 167.

Tickets negotiable only through Police, 6768, 6769.

Refusal to negotiate Tickets, Police discretionary Powers—Record of reasons for refusal, etc., 6776, 6781, 6846.

Searching of Applicants—Police discretionary Powers, 6775.

Ayrshire—cont.

Nationality of Tramps, 6805.

Parochial Authorities—No connection with Police in regard to relief, 6803.

Police.

Not acting as Relieving Officers, 6818.

Shelter Relief, giving by Police prohibited, 6797 6799.

Works under New Public Health Act, Tramps attracted by, 6806.

Back to the Land

Remedy for Vagrancy, 7452, 7486, 5321, 7487.

Banner Street Homeless Poor Asylum.

Church Army Receiving Home, Type of, 8030, 8203-4, 8207.

Barlinnie Prison, Glasgow

Employment of Prisoners, 6522, 6523.

Barnardo, Dr.

Boarding out System for Child Vagrants, Experience in favour of, 6074, 6097-6100.

Shelters

Bunks, 5667.

Child Vagrants admitted, 5961, 5962.

Free Food distribution, 5716.

Free Shelters for Women and Children, 5844.

Basel Labour Colony, Switzerland

Classes of Inmates—Administratives and Short-term Offenders, Classes kept separate, etc., 8421.

Cost—Much more expensive than most Swiss Colonies, 8422, 8423.

Employments of Colonists—Industrial Employments, etc., 8424, 8425.

Size—25 Acres, 8421, 8424.

Teaching a Trade—As a Rule they do not profess to teach, 8426, 8427.

Baths in Casual Wards, etc.

Circular of Poor Law Board, 1868—Bath suggested, 96.

Common Lodging-Houses, Bath not enforced, 3078, 3150, 7958.

Cost, 496.

Deterrent to Tramps, Question of, 495-497, 1772 2627, 2628, 3075, 3078, 5703.

Loss of deterrent Value, 5420, 5421.

Enforcement of Regulations, Casual Wards where bath is enforced, App., pages 80, 82.

Evasion of Regulations, 2640, 2641, 2647.

Dewsbury Union, 1325, 1334.

Insufficient Staff, Evasion due to, 4172-3.

Not so general as searching in North Wales Unions, 5533.

Sixty-three Tramps discharged without a Bath, 2083.

Spread of Disease due to, 2622, 2625, 2627-2629.

Fresh Water for each Vagrant:

Cuckfield, 2075-2083.

King's Norton Union, 2803, 2804.

Sheffield, Strictness in regard to Bath—Provision of clean night shirt, Separate towel and fresh water, 2411.

German Relief Stations—Bath not Compulsory, 3883.

Gloucestershire, System Universal in, 1771, 1772.

Itch, Infection spread by Baths, 3120-1.

Opinion in Favour of, 500, 3164.

Order of Local Government Board, 1882—Bath made nominally compulsory, 144, 500.

REPORT, par. 90.

Same water used more than once: Danger in times of Smallpox, 3053, 3054, 3084, 3085.

Baths in Casual Wards, etc.—cont.

Sanitary Advantages—Symptoms of Infectious Disease, etc., discovered, 498, 2078-2080, 2621, 2622, 2626-2629, 2963-2967, 3075, 3130.

Sheffield, Precautions taken at, 2412, 2413.

Superiority of casual Wards to Shelters, 8642.

Temperature of Water in Prisons and Casual Wards, 4714, 4715.

Cuckfield, 2075-2083.

Manchester Prison, Real hot bath in, 9129-30.

Wycombe Union, Regulations strictly carried out, 2961-2967.

Bedford Institute

Free Meals and Free Shelter, 9584, 9585, 9606.

Beds for Casual Wards

Barrack Beds for London—Circulars of Poor Law Board, 1864 and 1865, 59.

Blankets, Dirty Condition at Tame Street, Manchester, 1394.

Chain Mattress, Objections to:

Dewsbury Union, 1331.

North Bierley Union, 1363, 1364.

Rough Hammock Stuff in place of Chain Mattress, Suggestion, 1364.

Common Lodging-House Beds, Comparison with, 1469-1475.

Hammocks:

Cuckfield, 2156, 2157.

King's Norton, use at, 2842.

Itch, Infection spread by Beds, 3120-1.

North Wales Unions, Variety in, 5510.

Plank Beds at Tame St., Manchester, 1395, 1418.

Regulations, Order of Local Government Board as to, 146.

REPORT, par. 92.

Superiority of Prison Bedding at Norwich, 2839, 2840.

Begging and Almsgiving

Apprehension for Begging—Could a man be locked up for being a Beggar, or must he be charged with something, 10663-10668.

Blind Beggars, Exceptional position of—Not enough Institutions to provide for Destitute Blind persons, 11105.

Bread ticket System in Dorsetshire, Reduction of Almsgiving possibly due to, 8571, 8572.

Causes of Almsgiving—Inadequacy of Casual Ward Diet, etc., 4683, 4762, 4765.

Ignorance leading People to give Alms, 11160.

Religious Duty, Almsgiving regarded as, by certain People, 11151.

Satisfaction of the Public Conscience in regard to Vagrant Class would do more than anything else to check Almsgiving, 5939, 6037-6040.

Severity to Vagrants had always Increased Vagrancy by Increasing Almsgiving, 4304.

Cautionary Circulars, Bills discouraging Almsgiving etc., Effects of:

Gloucestershire Way-Ticket System—Circular Distributed in connection with, 1575-1578, 1584-5, 1592-7, 1672, 1677-1683.

Not much heeded by Tramps, 2859.

Sterne's, Capt., Report (1872), 2006.

Wiltshire Way-ticket System, Circulars, 1815-1818, 1920-1923, 1997.

Children, Begging by, see Child Vagrants.

Circuits taken by Beggars, 2347, 2348.

Definition of Begging—Grounds on which a man could be convicted, 11091-11093, 11120-11127.

Begging and Almsgiving—cont.

Earnings of an ordinary Tramp, 702.

Average Amount of Money found on persons arrested for Begging, 1683-1687.

Shelter Population—Food during the day obtained by Begging, 9627.

Evil of Indiscriminate Almsgiving—Vagrants would disappear if Almsgiving could be stopped, 694-697, 2010, 2567, 2645, 2651-3, 4673, 4796, 4887, 5557, 8258, 8259, 10466, 11103.

REPORT, par. 385, 386, 388, 436.

Historical Review of Measures against, 7-19, 30.

Labour Colonies with Indeterminate Sentences the only efficient Remedy, 11094, 11199-11201.

Decrease in Begging due to Labour Colony System in Belgium and Holland, 9018-9022.

London, see London, also London Mendicity Society.

Neglect of Beggars to maintain Families, 10678.

Obtaining Money by False Pretences—Distinction between Beggars making 30s. a week and other frauds, 11146-11157.

Offence, Question of making Indiscriminate giving an offence, 2773, 4090.

Prohibited under Penalty—Act of 1536, 11.

Revival of Law against, proposed, 8268.

Poor people the greatest sinners in regard to Almsgiving, 2652, 4087-4089, 6253.

Prison no remedy, 11094.

Prosecutions and Convictions, 820, 821.

Difficulty in Procuring Convictions :

Discouraging effect on Police, 5600-5602, 11058.

Magistrates and Police, mistaken Sympathy shown by, 1833, 2670-2673.

Increase in Number.

Comparison with increase in total number of Vagrants relieved, 10404-10414.

Effect of Improvement in Prison Diet, 758-760, 769-773.

Increase since 1900, 10370, 10371.

Number of Prosecutions—Few in comparison with Offences, 10660-10662.

Private Persons do not give Offenders into custody, 9376, 9377, 9437-9443, 9483.

Quinquennial Averages of Persons charged, 1859-1903, 1064.

Repeated Convictions, 110 8.

Statistics, 1857-1904, App., page 113, 1903, App., page 114.

Variety of Treatment.

Difference between one County and another due to Police practice, not acreage of County—Statistics for 1903, 1069-1074.

Variety shewn by Statistics for 1893-1903, 8563-8565, 8575-8583.

Reformation not to be hoped for—Once taken to a Police Court, a Street Beggar spent his Life between Street and Prison, 11100, 11106-11109.

REPORT, par. 385-388.

Scotland, see that title.

Sentences—Circumstances considered in White-chapel, Foreign Beggars occasionally sent Home, 9553-9555.

Sunday the best Day for Begging, 2291-2293.

Threats, Extorting Alms by, 403, 404, 698-702.

Birmingham, Complaints from Country round, 2672.

Gloucestershire—Very few Complaints, 1673-1676.

Increase in, 4867-4869.

Begging and Almsgiving—cont.

Threats, Extorting Alms by—cont.

North Riding of Yorkshire, State of Terror in, 3927, 4035, 4036.

Poor People the greatest Sufferers, 1578-1580.

Difficulty in getting Evidence from poor people, 1829, 1832.

Reduction in Number of Cases in Northumberland, Effect of Bicycle Policeman, Telephone and Dog, 7562-7566.

Way-ticket System, a Check on, 4870, 4871.

Way-ticket System and Mid-day Meal as check on Begging and Almsgiving, see titles Way-ticket Systems and Mid-day Meal.

Begging Letters

Charity Organisation Society the Public Society for dealing with, 11067.

London Mendicity Society's System for dealing with, 11062, 11063, 11066, 11067.

Amount annually expended by Society in Relief of Genuine Cases of Distress, 11062, 11103.

Deserving Cases, Percentage of, 11062.

Total Number of Cases dealt with during 1904, 11064.

Belgium

Labour Colony System :

Begging in Towns, Reduction in, 9018-9021.

Government Proposal to start a Colony for 1,000 Men at Liège, 10215, 10216.

Hiring out Colonists, 8983-8985.

Law of 27th November, 1891, App., page 120.

Merxplas and Wortel Labour Colonies, see their Names.

REPORT, par. 231-240.

Sentences for Vagrancy Offences, Lengthening of, 8917-8920.

Berkshire

Child Vagrants, Meals given to, 4697.

Common Lodging-Houses, Police Visits to, 4695, 4803-4808, 4849-4851.

Crime among Tramps, Increase in proportion of, 4652.

Fluctuations in Vagrancy, 4646-4651

Gipsies, 4818-4822.

Industrial Schools Act, 1866, Action under, 4845.

Position on Main Routes between London and the West, 4653.

Unions on the two Main Routes, 4823-4832, 4836.

Proportion of Vagrancy high according to Population, 300.

Report by Chief Constable, App., pages 76-78.

Sleeping out, Mischief caused by, Prosecutions, etc., 4799-4802.

Statistical Tables, 1897-1904, App., page 78.

Way-ticket System, refer to title Way-ticket Systems.

Berlin

Bridewell—Number of Inmates, Causes of Committal, etc., 3693-3697

Workhouse.

Earnings of Inmates, 3660.

Employment of Inmates, 3801.

Berne Poorhouse

Defects of Institution—Mixing of the Sexes, etc., 8428.

Workhouse with 250 acres of Land and power of Compulsory Detention, 8428, 8429.

Bethnal Green Casual Ward

Cost of Construction, 10103-10105
Staff Accommodation, 10106-10108.

Binding-over Vagrants, etc., 1104-1118.

Bridge's, Sir John, proposed treatment of Inebriates 4031, 4032.
Magistrates' Power—Difficulty in case of Vagrants, 1105-1110.
Registration of Identity needed to make binding-over effective, 1127-1129.

Birmingham

Child Vagrants, Number admitted to Casual Wards—Children not received in lodging-houses, 5922, 5959.
Common Lodging-house Accommodation, Cost, etc. 2779, 2780-1.
Free Shelters, 2843.
Number of Casuals in Birmingham Unions, 2594, 2599, 2600.
Parish of Birmingham :
Detention of Casuals—Two Nights, 2718.
General Pauperism Constant, 2787.
Number of Casuals, 2599.
Police as Assistant Relieving Officers—System discontinued, 2767-2770.
Prison preferred to Casual Ward, by Tramps 2632.
Progressive and well-administered Unions, 2789, 2792.
Rowton House about to be opened, 2781.
Class of Men likely to make use of Rowton House, 2781, 2782.
Task in Casual Wards—Length of Sentences for refusal to work, 2742-2748.
Water-works, Tramps attracted by, 5543, 5544.
(for particular Unions, see their names.)

Blind Beggars

Exceptional Position—Not enough institutions to provide for destitute blind persons, 11105.

Boarding-out System for Vagrant Children

Advantages over Industrial School system, superiority in regard to Home Influences, Character, Formation, etc., 6066-6070, 6072-6074, 6593—Dr. Barnardo's Experience, 6074, 6097-6100.

Borstal Prison

Special Regulations in regard to Age, 1271, 1272.

Bow Street Police Court

Average age of Vagrants—convicted, 10791.
Sleeping-out Cases chiefly Children, 10715.

Bradford

Casual Wards, Costliness of Construction, 9917.
Women Vagrants, Conduct of Workhouse Officials towards, 1371.

Bread Ticket Systems

Ayrshire System, see Ayrshire—Mendicity Society.
Dorsetshire System, 4928-4930.
Kent, Introduction in—2006.
REPORT, par. 163-167.
refer also to titles Wayticket Systems and Mid-day Meal.

Bridge, Sir John

Industrial Schools Act of 1866, Application to Children of Vagrants—Sir J. Bridge's Construction of Section 14, 4578.
Inebriates, Evils of Seven day Sentence for—Binding over for first and second convictions with long Sentence for third conviction proposed, 4031, 4032.

Brighton Parish

Increase in Number of Casuals when gruel given in the morning, 2049, 2050.
Stone pounding Task, 2051, 2052.

Buildings, Cost of

Original Estimate—almost invariably exceeded—Misleading of Ratepayers, etc., 10058-10068.
Staff Accommodation one of the chief items in Cost of Casual Wards and Workhouse Building, 10098.
Trade Union prices in 1905 in different localities, App., page 158.

Bye-lawsBuilding Bye-laws:

Church Army had to pull down iron buildings, 8118, 8119, 8125, 8126.
Hadleigh Buildings quite satisfactory, but could not be put up under present Bye-laws, 6367-6376, 6381, 6382.
Labour Colonies, Possible difficulties in connection with temporary buildings, etc., 6383, 6384.
Local Government Board Requirements—Independent of Local Bye-laws, 10048, 10049.
Common Lodging-houses :
London County Council Bye-laws, App., pages 172-175.
Model Bye-laws, App., pages 168-171.
Powers of Local Authorities, App., page 7.
REPORT, par. 325-327.

For Prevention of Vagrancy:

Scotland—Powers of County Councils under the Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1899, 6834.
Bye-laws framed in twenty Counties, but left in abeyance since Midlothian Bye-laws were declared to be ultra vires, 6835-6839.

Hop-pickets, Fruit-pickers, etc.:

Model Bye-laws, App., page 178.
Tents, Sheds, Vans, etc. :
Model Bye-laws, App., page 176.

Carlisle

Casual Ward avoided by Tramps, 3314.

Carrington House, Deptford

London County Council Municipal Lodging-house, Charge, Accommodation, etc., 5776-5778, 5782.

Castration of Male Vagrants

Suggestion, 3134.

Casual Poor Act, 1882

Provisions of—Detention made longer and Task increased, 136-140.
Decrease in Vagrancy and Subsequent Rise, 9815-8.
Reduction in Number of Applicants at Casual Wards, Men driven to really try for Work, 8666.

Casual Sickhouses, Scotland

Existence since beginning of Poor Law System, 6407.
Increase in Accommodation—Local Government Board Circulars to Parishes, 6407.
Lanarkshire, Provision in, 6869-6872.
Nature of Accommodation—Usually a Cottage looked after by a Respectable Woman, 6406, 6432.
Parish Authority, House Provided by, 6431.
Provision of. in Majority of Parishes, 6404, 6406, 6538.
Situated near House of Inspector of Poor, 6410.

Casual Sickhouses, Scotland—cont.

Two Nights the Limit after which a Tramp would be removed to Poorhouse, 6433.

Tramp Woman taken in Labour, Case of—Awkward but rare, 6434, 6435.

Casual Ward Class

Church Army Work among—Proportion of Class ready to work, 8020-8022, 8027.

Percentage of Good, Doubtful, and Bad Cases, 8237, 8240.

Colony Treatment, Number who would benefit by, 7085.

Harder to deal with in some ways than other Tramps, but they get sick of Workhouse, 7192-3.

Increase in—Statistics (1857-1903), 1076-1081; Causes of Increase—Increased Effectiveness of Police and Poor Law, 1082-1085.

London—Casual Ward Vagrants a Separate Class, the Aristocracy of Vagrants, 5703, 5807-5809, 6085-6087, 8148-8150, 9509-9512, 9662, 10464, 10470-10474.

Shade lower than the men usually taken at Hadleigh, 7090-7092.

Very Lowest Class of Vagrants, 6122.

Casual Wards

Abolition of, as Casual Wards—Suggestions, 5248, 5312, 5316.

Discontinuance of Separate Homes for Casuals as tending to perpetuate Vagrancy—Resolution of Guardians of St. George's, Hanover Square (1891) 8642.

Gradual Elimination, 6230.

House of Lords Committee in 1888—Suggestion of Witnesses, 507.

Houses of Call for Work-Seekers, Conversion into, 3518, 3762, 3779, 3871, 3872, 4190.

Receiving Wards where Vagrants would be Classified and sent on for Treatment according to Requirements, use as, 5936, 5939, 6035, 6036, 6075-6, 6082.

Extension of System to all England desirable, 6052-6055.

Honest Wayfarer needing only a Night's Lodging, Case of, 6077, 6078.

London, Probable Effect on Number of Vagrants in, 6083, 6084.

Public Conscience would be Satisfied, 5938, 5939, 6037-6040.

Substitution of something much more severe, 5707.

Workhouse, Substitution of—Casuals' Scorn of the Workhouse, 3459-3465.

Women's Casual Wards, Abolition proposed, 1505, 1529.

Administration, refer to that title, also title Police.

Admission :

Conduct of Officials admitting Women.

Dewsbury Union, 1300-1323.

North Bierley Union, 1345, 1357-1361.

Tame Street, Manchester—Official bullying Women, 1383-1388, 1419, 1438-1441.

Metropolitan Casual Wards, Procedure in, 3244, 3245, 3255.

Order of 1882, Text of, App., pages 9-12.

Order to be signed by a Relieving Officer, etc., Hour of Admission, 144.

Police Powers under Act of 1871, 87.

Police System of issuing Tickets for Casual Wards found objectionable and abolished some years ago in London, 9533-9535.

Casual Wards—*cont.Admission—*cont.Refusals of Admission :

Notice put up at Paddington that Ward was full—Reasons for Objecting to Notice, 10489-10491.

Ordering People off Contrary to Regulations—Dewsbury and Tame Street, Manchester, Cases, 1389-1391, 1450-1452.

Returns—Publication in Local Government Board's Report, etc., 10482, 10483.

Sleeping out, Few Cases in Comparison with Number of Refusals, 10492.

Register :

Circular of Poor Law Board of 1868, 96.

Columns for Description of Vagrants in Old Registers, 144.

Order of 1882, 144, 154-6.

Statistics for year ended 29th Sept., 1904, App., page 80.

Association Wards and Day Rooms, see those titles.

Attitude of Vagrants :

Danger of making Restrictions too irksome—Tramp driven to Prison or to Common Lodging-houses where Sanitary Precautions less possible, 528, 641.

Hatred, Causes of—Being Ordered about by Fellow Paupers greatly disliked, 9168.

Preference for Casual Wards over Workhouses—Reasons for Preference, 8642.

Prison Preferred to Casual Wards, see title Prison.

Cells :

see title Cell System.

Cleanliness :

Common Lodging-houses, Comparison with, 1469-1475, 1485, 2105, 8639, 8640.

Past and Present Compared, Improvement in Recent Years, 545, 546.

Women's Wards :

Dewsbury Union, Laxity as to Cleanliness, 1325, 1328, 1334.

North Bierley Union, 1362.

Tame Street, Manchester, 1393.

Closing of Unnecessary Wards : Local Government Board Inspectors' Suggestion, etc., 517, 5575, 7638, 8492.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 130, 131, 429 (3).

Common Lodging-Houses :

Competition of Casual Wards with Common Lodging-Houses, 45.

Use of Casual Wards as—Fee for Lodging those who could not be accommodated elsewhere proposed, 2140-2, 2232, 2233.

Cost of Construction, App., pages 153-157.

Average Cost in Town and Country, 9895, 9898, 9916-9918.

Economy—Policy of Local Government Board, Attitude of Guardians, etc., 9910-9915, 9936, 9939-9941, 9963, 10052-10054, 10069-10071.

Extravagance on part of Local Authorities, Cause of, 9985-9987.

Female Vagrants, Provision for in the Workhouse—Small Reduction in Cost of Casual Ward, 10096, 10097.

Fixed Amount for Average Cost, Possibility of—Might be done in London, but very difficult in the Provinces, 10136-10140.

Increase in Cost of Labour and Materials of late years, 10042-3.

Casual Wards—cont.Cost of Construction—cont.

- Increased Original Expenditure, might reduce Cost of Upkeep, 10072-10075.
- Lowest Sum for which New Wards had been provided by a Rural Union, 9920-9925.
- Makeshift with Old Buildings, etc., in Rural Districts, 9926-9933.
- Original Estimate almost invariably Exceeded, Misleading of Ratepayers, etc., 10058-10068.
- Permanence of Institution should be considered in deciding whether Buildings were to be constructed of Permanent or Temporary Materials, 10076-10078.
- Reduction of Cost not possible with existing Policy of Cellular System, etc., 10111-10114.
- REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 317-323, 429 (23).
- Requirements of Local Government Board not increased, 10043.
- Site not included in Cost as a rule, 9919, 9920.
- Staff Accommodation, 10099-10108; a chief Item in Cost of Vagrant Wards, 10098.
- Statistics, 610-617.
- Unnecessary Expenditure in the past, 4907.
- Cost of Maintenance apart from Capital Expenditure, 363-365, 632-634, 5621.
- Day Rooms and Association Wards, see those titles.
- Distance between—Wards too close together, 5575-5577, 8492.
- Walk of so many Miles required before a Man could claim relief—Objections to System, 4973.
- Way-ticket System as Remedy, 2668.
- Failure of existing System—REPORT, par. 88-119.
- Germany—Nothing equivalent to English Casual Ward, 3540-3542.
- Honest Wayfarers :
 - Reserving Casual Wards for—Suggestion, 3518, 3762, 3779, 3871, 3872, 4190.
 - Suitability of Accommodation, Question of, 2097-2100, 2105.
- Late Admissions disturbing inmates, 1395-1398.
- Loans for Construction :
 - Limiting Loan, Question of, 10142-10144.
 - Period of, 9934-5.
- London, see that title.
- Metropolitan Police District (outside London), Casual Wards in, App., page 90.
- Militiamen resorting to Wards on their way to and from training—Detention of Militiamen at Exeter, 8541-8544.
- More than one Casual Ward to a Union, 210, 211.
- New Wards, Number opened within the last three years, 10129-10135.
- No Casual Wards or unsuitable Accommodation, Number of Unions with :
 - Inspectors' Reports of 1866, 60, 208.
 - One or two Unions without Casual Wards at the present day, 209.
- Officials :
 - Conduct of, to Women Vagrants :
 - Dewsbury Officials kind and attentive, 1300-1323, 1329, 1330.
 - North Bierley, 1345, 1350, 1351, 1357-1361.
 - Tame Street, Manchester, 1383-1388, 1393, 1419, 1420, 1438-1441.
 - Proper Officer for dealing with Casuals—No proper Officer in many small Unions, 2648, 2649.
- Opinion in favour of System, 6893, 6975.

Casual Wards—cont.

Philanthropic Work in—Appointment of Vagrant Ward Committees, suggestion, 9858, 9859.

Police Inspection :

- Manchester—No systematic Inspection but police never refused access, 7821, 7822.
- No good could arise from Police Inspection, 9513-9516.
- Northumberland—No systematic Inspection, but Police went when they wanted to, 7515, 7516, 7622-7625.
- Not a universal Practice—Worked satisfactorily where tried, 10576-10583.
- Police Stations, Casual Wards attached to.
 - Corwen Scheme, 104.
 - Cost difficulty, 1878, 1879.
 - Government objections in 1871, 102.
 - No existing Accommodation for Tramps at Police Stations in England, 106, 107.
- Police Visits to Casual Wards in search of Persons "wanted," 2528, 2529, 2532, 2553-2555, 2763-2765, 2813-2816.
- Proportion of Vagrants resorting to, 3136, 4450. App., pages 20-22.
- About a Quarter, 1722-1724.
- Not one-third of the Total Number, 641.
- Number of Persons relieved in Gloucestershire Casual Wards, 1630-3, 1663, 1746.
- REPORT, par. 47-58.
- Provision of :
 - Act of 1871, 102.
 - Combination of Unions or Parishes—Act of 1844, 42.
 - No disinclination on the part of Guardians, 10050-10052.
 - Uniformity, Guardians Clamcuring for, 729.
- Renovation and Alteration, Wards requiring :
 - Number of such Wards—Considerable Number. 2103-2105.
 - Responsibility for Condition of Wards, 2101.
- REPORT, par. 47-58, 88-119—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 120-152, 317-323, 429 (1-9, 23).
- Roughness of Accommodation in Remote Unions in Cornwall, 302.
- Sanitary Conveniences :
 - Common Lodging-houses, Comparison with, 1484-1488.
 - Typhus, Improved Sanitary Arrangements due to, 3059, 3062.
- Scotland—No Casual Wards under Poor Law Authority, 510.
- Separate Accommodation for Casuals apart from the Regular Inmates of a Workhouse, 170-173.
 - Additional Administrative Cost, 10123, 10124.
 - First Requirement of a Separate Ward for Casuals—Order of 1842, 39.
 - Self-contained Institutions in London, within Workhouse Precincts in Country, 9791-9793, 10498, 10565, 10566.
- Structural Arrangements, Schemes for Construction, etc., 9722, 9869.
- Criticism of existing Arrangements, Improvements suggested, 9690.
- Dimensions—Requirements of Local Government Board, 10087, 10088.
- Drainage—Requirements more stringent in London than in Country, 10056.

Casual Wards—cont.Structural Arrangements—cont.

- Existing Arrangements made in Compliance with Requirements of Local Government Board, 10091, 10093.
- Inspector, Initiative of, in Connection with Building Schemes, 10145, 10146.
- Model Scheme, Question of, 9724—Scheme in existence, but never used—Better to deal with local plans, 9891-3, 9901-3.
- Preliminary Procedure, Scheme initiated by Local Authority and submitted to Local Government Board, 9881-9886.
- Rejection of Schemes, or Return for Modification, 9887, 9888.
- Requirements of Local Government Board :
 - Not Increased, Independent of Local Building Bye-laws, 10045-10049.
 - Same for both London and Country, 10055.
 - Suggestions as to Plans—Local Authorities asking for help, 9889, 9890.
- Sussex, Class of Casual Ward found in, 2170.
- Uniformity in Management, see title Uniformity.
- Utilisation of, for other Workhouse Purposes—No Reason why Casual Ward Cells should not be used for Ordinary Paupers, 10147.
- Washing Clothes of Vagrants, No Provision for, 1495.
- Women and Children, Treatment of, see Women.

Causes of Vagrancy, 5551.

- Army Short Service System, Effect of, 594.
- Drink, 381, 382, 1665-1668, 2227, 2228, 3466-3468, 3473, 7587, 7588, 7747.
- Employers' Liability Act, 4918.
- Free Food Distribution at Shelters, 5714, 5716, 5717, 5721, 5722, 5726, 5735-5737, 5764-5766, 5906-5908, 7444-7448, 7828, 7829, 8056, 8057, 9394, 9395, 9400-9406.
- Honest Wayfarer, Facility of Descent into Vagrancy, 653-659, 2365, 2366, 5311.
- Irish Famine, Increase of Vagrancy in 1848 Due to, 45.
- Land monopoly, 5551, 5580.
- Large Works in a District Attracting Tramps to Gadge from Navvies, 1571-1573, 1664, 1767-1770, 1806, 1807, 1896, 1962, 1963, 2135-2139, 2448, 2601, 2650, 2794, 2822, 2823, 4280-4283, 5543, 5544, 6670, 6806, 6807, 6936, 7634.
- Lenient administration of Casual Wards, Increase due to, 4177, 4178, 4192-4196.
- Sheffield—Tramps' Statements as to how long they had been tramping and what had started them on the road, 2521, 2522.
- South African War, Termination of, 909, 1007, 1064, 1068, 1069, 1774, 7555, 7714, 8556.
- Increase mainly due to subsidence of demand for unskilled labour—Returned Soldiers who took to the road, etc., were only reverting to their former position, 8557-8560.
- Trade, Depression in, 133-135, 2383-2386, 7556-7558.
- Trade Unionism, 4917-4920, 5312.
- Urban Life, 5321.
- Way Ticket System, Abandonment of, in Berkshire, 1581.
- Whitechapel Casual Ward—Admissions, analysis of, 9875-6.

Cell System

- Bunk arrangements separating Men working in the Yard, Opinion in favour of, 10094, 10095.
- Circular of Poor Law Board of 1868—Cell System recommended, 96.
- Cost of construction, see Casual Wards.

Cell System—cont.

- Decrease in Vagrancy in Unions having separate Cells, 490-494, 501-505, 4057-4071, 4832-4835.
- Difficulties in working—Sunday Question, etc., 4905.
- Allowing Vagrants to attend service on Sunday, suggestion, 4908.
- Lighting—Artificial Light not required, but nearly always provided, 10127, 10128.
- Locking up Tramps—Decision that it is illegal to lock a Man up in his Cell.
- Actual practice to lock them up, and let them out if they want to come out, 9906-9909.
- Expensive Cells no better than Associated Wards, if theory held, 6019-6024.
- No harm in locking a Man up if there is proper means of Communication, 10499-10502.
- Metropolitan Casual Wards, Effect in, 3447-3451.
- Opinion in favour of, 2097, 3452, 3491, 3492, 4242, 4785-4787, 4905-4908.
- Order of Local Government Board, 1871—Cell System recommended, 104.
- Proportion of Workhouses having Cell System in force, 603, 604. App., pages 80, 81.
- REPORT, par. 91.
- Supervision, Question of increase in, 618-620.
- Universal Cell System, proposed, 1868, 1869.
- Local Government Board Inspectors' suggestion, 517.
- Not necessary in every Workhouse—Difficulty in remote Unions with scarcely any Tramps, 604-609.
- Requirement now insisted upon, 9904, 9905.
- Ventilation in cells, 10089, 10090, 10094, 10095.

Census of Vagrants

- Annual Winter and Summer Census, Opinions in favour of, 8842-8844.
- Casual Wards, Common Lodging-houses and Shelters, Inclusion of, 8846-8849.
- Value of such a Census—Well worth the expense, 8850, 8851.
- Hop Pickers and Fruit Pickers, Inclusion in Census, 8840.
- Northumberland Plan—Possibility of getting a fairly complete Census for the whole of England, 7537-7539.
- Police knowledge of Vagrant Class, Effect in promoting, 1765.
- see also* London, Northumberland, Wiltshire, etc.

Central Poor Law Conference

- Deputation to Local Government Board, 1904, in favour of a Departmental Committee on Vagrancy, 195.

Characteristics of Tramps

- Change in, not so rough as a class, 3477, 3478, 3486.
- Country Tramps, 9841-9844.
- Unaccountableness of the London Casual, 3347.

Charities dealing with Vagrant Class

- All Charities should be classed, registered and inspected, and an Annual Report and Financial Statement required as parts of one Co-operative Administration—suggestion, 8627-8631, 8671, 8673.
- Rowton Houses, Inclusion of, proposed, 8671, 8672.
- Attracting Tramps from other districts :—
 - Edinburgh, Philanthropic craze in, 6952-6955, 6982.
 - Glasgow and other Scotch towns, 6462, 6481.
 - Manchester, Amount of indiscriminate charity, 8004-8007.

Charities dealing with Vagrant Class—cont.

Attracting tramps from other districts—cont.

Trafalgar Square gatherings of 1887, Effect on neighbouring Casual Wards, 177.

Very small amount sufficient to attract Tramps, 6778.

Co-operation between Charities and the Poor Law and between Charities inter se—Recommendations of Charity Organisation Society Committee of 1891, 8702.

Co-operation essential to prevent constant admission and readmission without any good being done to anyone, 8673.

Discrimination of cases 'exceedingly necessary—Neither Salvation Army nor Church Army exercised the kind of discrimination needed, 8674 8676.

see also Names of Charitable Societies, Shelters, etc.

Charity Organisation Society

Area of Operations—London, 8548.

Begging Letters, Charity Organisation Society the public Society to deal with, 11067.

Church Army relations with, 8032.

Committee of 1873, Recommendations in regard to Treatment of Vagrancy, 8641, 8642.

Committee of 1891—Recommendations in regard to Shelters, Casual Wards, and Co-operation between Poor Law and Charity, 8702

London Mendicity Society, harmonious relation with, 11064–11067.

Chester County

Begging and Sleeping out—Statistics (1893–1903), 8564.

Child Vagrants

Adoption of Children by Boards of Guardians, 5917–5919, 5927, 5970.

Cost.

County Charge suggestion, 5916, 5917, 5971–5974.

Removing cost from Union suggestion, 2697, 2864–2867, 2951, 2952.

Extent to which Guardians adopt, 11008–11010

Most successful Method, 11010.

Objections to practice at Sheffield, 2534, 2535.

Parents, difficulty of enforcing legal claim against—Parents going scot-free, 2869–2871.

Precaution needed—Provision made for due inquiry, 5921.

REPORT, RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 414, 415.

Whitechapel, large number of Children adopted, 5926.

Age at which Children become a source of income, 5992.

Amount of Child Vagrancy. App., pages 26, 27.

Abnormal Proportion.

Ayrshire, large number in, 6831–6833.

Stafford, numbers due to lax administration of Casual Ward, 10931–10937, 10939, 11023–11025.

Average percentage 3, 10931, 10938, 10947.

Children found in Workhouses in the country, in Shelters and common lodging-houses in the towns, 5922–5925.

Decrease in—Statistics, 265–269, 854, 2005 2064, 2065, 2067, 2177, 2256, 2270–2272, 2508, 2509.

Parliamentary Return, 1890–1898, 265.

Street Trading Act, Effect of, in Manchester, 7927.

Difficulty of ascertaining the accurate number, 5956–5960.

Child Vagrants—cont.

Amount of Child Vagrancy—cont.

Difficulty of ascertaining, etc.—cont.

Number not properly set out in Casual Ward Returns—Tramp sends Wife and Children to lodging-house while he goes to casual ward, 1040–1042.

Estimated Number greatly in excess of actual number, 10546.

Fluctuations:

Seasonal Fluctuations, 288–292.

Sheffield, 2508, 2515, 2533.

Gloucestershire Statistics—Number of Children in Casual Wards and Common Lodging-Houses in 1904, 1753, 1754.

Industrial and Reformatory Schools, Number in, 4495, 4498, 4505–4509.

London, Number of Children in Shelters and Common Lodging-Houses, etc., 5963, 5964, 5965.

School Board Investigation, 5966.

National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children Scheme for obtaining accurate Return, 10946, 11046, 11048–11051.

Not a large source of Adult Vagrancy, 6833.

REPORT, par. 57, 86, 412.

Small Proportion of Child Vagrancy as compared with Adult Vagrancy, 2072, 4699, 4700, 5013–5015, 5510, 5557, 5639, 6582, 6905, 6906, 7532–7534, 7715–7718, 7925, 7926, 7928–7932, 10930, 10939.

Varying with Number of Men Casuals, 2066, 2068, 2256.

Disappearance would probably result from taking men off the road, 4086.

Apprenticeship—Act of 1536, Compulsory Apprenticeship by Public Authorities, 11.

Begging—Children's assistance to Parents in Begging, 5557, 10944, 10945, 11034, 11161.

N.S.P.C.C. Prosecutions for Exposure for Begging and Hawking, 10957—Proportion of Convictions, 10958.

Bill of 1900, Dealing with Vagrant Children on Lines of—suggestion by Local Government Board Inspectors, 517.

Common Lodging-Houses, Children in, 1459–1461.

Cuckfield Union, Investigations made in cases of Children coming alone, 2259.

Custody and Maintenance.

Boarding-out System, Advantages of, 6066–6070, 6072–4, 6593.

Children under Age of Nurture, difficulty with, 11039, 11040.

Conviction of Parent necessary before legal custody could be taken under Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act of 1904, 10949–10953, 10970, 10993.

Dirt—Allowing a Child to get unreasonably Dirty would be an Offence, 10994, 10995.

Cost of Maintenance.

County Charge, Opinion in favour of, 10987, 10988.

National Charge, question of, 4414–4419.

N.S.P.C.C. Applications under Industrial Schools Act—cost charged to Society, 10965–10967, 10972–10985, 10989–10991.

Government Departments, Representations to, 10977–10980.

Precautions taken by the Society—Circular issued to Society's Officers warning them what not to do, etc., 10976, 10990.

Child Vagrants—cont.Custody and Maintenance—cont.*Cost of Maintenance—cont.*N.S.P.C.C. Application, etc.—cont.

Provision for Cost being made by the Act, it is unfair to charge cost upon a private charity, 10967, 10981.

Rates relieved in some cases where N.S.P.C.C. undertake maintenance of Child, 11032, 11033.

Regular Sum paid by N.S.P.C.C., 5s. a week, 11042.

Feeble-minded and Deficient Children, difficulty in providing for, 11006.

Institutions—N.S.P.C.C. had none of its own and utilised those of other Voluntary Organisations, undertaking responsibility for Maintenance, 11005–11007, 11042–11045.

Labour Colonies—Suggestions for disposal of Colonists' Children, 6207.

Law, Amendment of, proposed—Making action by Local Authority compulsory instead of Provisional. 10982, 10987, 10988, 11055–11058.

Means of providing for—Adoption by Boards of Guardians, under Industrial Schools Act or by N.S.P.C.C., 10963, 10967.

No action by N.S.P.C.C.—If the Society had taken no action the children would still be tramping, 10968.

Number of Tramp Children in legal custody of Society, paid for by Society, 10991, 11026–11028.

Official Management to be as far as possible avoided, 4418, 4420.

Parents claiming Children from the N.S.P.C.C., 11037.

Peculiar Features of Cases discovered by N.S.P.C.C., Instances of, 11029–11034.

Power of detention, no further Powers sought by the N.S.P.C.C., 11038, 11041.

Principle upon which N.S.P.C.C. works—Parent ought not to be relieved of responsibility of Maintenance, 10991, 11021–2, 11037.

sal by Education Authority or Guardians—Questions of Expense and Settlement, 10983–10986.

Religion of Tramp Children—N.S.P.C.C. undertaking to bring up child in its own Religion, 11045.

Statutes under which action can be taken—REPORT, par. 413–426.

Taking charge of Children up to eighteen years of age—Extension of provisions of English Act of 1889 to Scotland, proposed, 6594.

Definition of Child Vagrant, 265–269, 290, 291.

Desertion and Abandonment—Charges against Parents, 10959.

Inclusion of deserted Vagrant Children in new definition of Vagrancy—suggestion, 7158.

Instances, 10959–10962, 10964, 10973, 10974, 11039.

Salvation Army Home for deserted Children, 6210, 6212.

Diet in Casual Wards, 2316–2318, 5510, 5512.

Milk prescribed by Order of 1897, 366, 411–415—Text of Order, App., pages 13–14.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 310.

Distinctive Appearance of Vagrant Children—Inability to lie in a bed, etc., 4518–4520.

Education Act, Dealing with Child Vagrants under—Suggestion, 4205–4218.

Child Vagrants—cont.Education Question.

Not within purview of N.S.P.C.C., 10951.

Tramp Children usually quite Uneducated, 5557–5560, 11034–11036.

Emigrating Children, Empowering Magistrates to Emigrate Children, proposed, 5919, 5975, 5980–5982.

Gipsy Children, 4495–7.

Gloucestershire Way-ticket System, Application to Children, 1689, 1690.

Hadleigh Colony, Arrangements for Children, 6208, 6209.

Honest Wayfarers' Children, Provision for in Union from which father started—Suggestion, 4701–4703.

Industrial School System, see title Industrial School and Reformatory School System.

Legislation proposed to Legalise the taking away of children from Habitual Tramps, 513–515, 2697, 4410–4413.

Gorst's, Sir J., Vagrant Children Bill, Provisions of, 5916, 5917, 5968–5971.

Appeal to Magistrate—Loophole for a Repentant Parent, 5976–5979.

Keeping Children outside Range of Education Act an Offence under the Bill, 5917, 5968, 5969, 6090–6092.

Previous Legislative Attempts, 5983.

Support given to Bill, 5985, 6088, 6089.

Offence—Making it a Definite Offence to Tramp with Children.

Power for Police to require an Explanation of any Person Tramping Children about Streets at Night, 9649–9653.

Sufficient Power exists under Present Statute, 10751–10757.

agrant Children Protection Bill, N.S.P.C.C. Attitude, 11011–1102.

Opinion in Favour of, 2697.

REPORT, par. 427.

Workhouse Masters' Association, Suggestion, 2276, 2277, 2282–2286, 2349, 2350.

London Shelters admitting Children, 5961, 5962.

Magisterial Order, dealing with Children by, Suggestion, 5920, 5927.

Meals given to Children in Berkshire, 4697.

Mental Condition of Vagrants' Children, Comparison with that of other Children in Industrial Schools, 4469, 4470.

Parents of, or Persons Travelling with Children, Disposal of.

Difficulty of enforcing Legal Claim against Parents—Parents of Adopted Children going scot free, 2869–2871.

Labour Colonies, Sending to—Suggestion, 2350, 2351.

Present System Breeding Tramps, 5376.

Prevention of Child Vagrancy by Separation of Parents—Suggestion, 1043–1049, 1058.

Physical Condition:

parent Health and Happiness of Tramp Children, 1536, 4581, 11020.

Mostly Undersized, 4471.

Police Co-operation with N.S.P.C.C., 10996, 11052.

Prosecutions and Convictions by N.S.P.C.C.

Parents Convicted for Neglect and Abandonment, 10959–10962, 10964, 10972–4, 10983–10985, 11039.

Statistics of Prosecutions (1900–1905)—almost every Prosecution successful, 10957, 10958.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 310, 406, 411–428, 429 (34–36).

Child Vagrants—cont.

Settlement Question—Making Place of Birth Place of Settlement, Suggestion, 10985.

Withdrawal of Children from Custody of Vagrant Parents—Cutting off Supply of Tramp Class, etc., Suggestion, 2534, 2934-2944, 10547-10549.

Liberty of the Subject Difficulty, 2939, 2940.

Opinion in Favour of, 9847-9849.

Parents, Attitude of.

Desire to keep their Children—Fear of Losing them would be a great Incentive to Reform, 5986-5991.

Parental Responsibility Question, 5010.

Readiness of Tramps to get Rid of their Children, alleged, 4211, 4218.

Parents of Industrial School Children anxious to get their Children back, 4488-4490, 4611-4618.

Tramp Children and Workhouse Children alike maintained at the Public Expense, while the Tramp Child receives no Education, 5557-5560.

Workhouse Authorities, etc.—Co-operation with N.S.P.C.C., 10996-11002.

Decrease in Number of Tramp Children at Workhouses where Practice is adopted, 11003, 11004.

Chittenden, Professor

Dietary Experiments, 10798-10800, 10803-10809, 10859.

[Disease-resisting Power and Energy on a Low Proteid Dietary, 10832-10838.

Extensive Variety allowed, 10826, 10873-10876.

Unattractiveness and Difficulty of Chittenden Standard on Basis of Common Cheap Foods, 10873-10887, 10918, 10919.

Christian Social Service Union

Training Colonies established by, see Lingfield and Starnthwaite Training Colonies.

Church

Poor dependent on Church and Monasteries prior to establishment of legal relief, 9, 10.

Church Army

Buildings—Obstacle to erection of iron buildings, 8118, 8119, 8125, 8126.

Charity Organisation Society, Cordial Relations with, 8032.

Classes dealt with.

Casual Ward Class, Work among—Numbers ready to enter Labour Homes, 8020-8022, 8027.

Greater Number not Casuals at all, 8147.

Majority of Cases came from the Police, Scotland Yard and the Casual Ward, 8033.

Private Recommended Cases, 8068.

Convicted and Judgment Deferred Cases sent by Police, 8035-8037, 8216-8218.

Date of Foundation, 8010.

Discrimination in dealing with Vagrants, Question of, 8676.

Free Food, Attitude in regard to, 8056, 8057, 8154-7.

Grants from Guardians refused, in order that pressure might be put on men to work, 8199.

Inspection of Institutions by the London County Council, 8127.

King's tent in Clare Market, 5907, 8649-8652, 8784-8787, 9402.

Labour Colonies.

Labour Homes were practically voluntary Colonies, 8105

Church Army—cont.

Labour Colonies—cont.

Newdigate Farm Colony.

Subsidiary indoor industry, 8189

Use as test for emigration, 8105, 8208, 8209.

Labour Homes.

Ages of Inmates, 8067.

Conditions of Admission—Contract to stay for two months required, 8023.

Convicted men, Separation from others in different homes, 8035-7.

Dietary, 8058-8060.

Employment of Inmates—Chiefly Jobbing, 8063, 8210.

Complaints of Robbery, Laziness, etc., quite the exception, 8064, 8065.

Employment—Permanent outside Employment for ex-inmates.

Means taken to secure, 8024-8026, 8071.

Percentage of Inmates finding, 8028.

Failures, Subsequent Careers of—Attempts to obtain re-admission, 8141-8146.

Number of, in England and Wales, 8199.

Number of, in London, 8171.

Practically Voluntary Labour Colonies, 8105.

Produce of Labour, Disposal of—Private Orders preferred, 8211-8215.

Provincial Homes, Persons received directly into, 8201.

Re-admission—not under twelve months, 8066.

Receiving Homes as Feeders, 8030, 8049.

Shirking impossible—Inmate must earn 6s. a week or go, 8061, 8062.

Standard of Comfort—Good beds, etc., a means of restoring self-respect, 8163-8165.

Sunday afternoon tea parties of reclaimed Characters, 8066.

Lodging Homes.

Lodgers help labour homes next door, 8169, 8170.

Number of, in London, 8171.

Profit made on—no unfair competition with ordinary lodging-houses, 8167-8169.

Scale of Charges, 8166, 8167.

Number of Homes and Agencies in England, Scotland, and Ireland, 8029, 8171 8199.

Number of Vagrants dealt with, Variation from year to year, 8014.

Object of the Church Army rather to deal with a few permanently than to benefit many temporarily, 8031.

Police, Cordial Relations with—Cases sent to Church Army by the Police, 8032.

Criminal Cases—Information given by Police when cases sent are criminal ones, 8034.

Prison Cases—Discharged Prisoners taken in hand by the Church Army.

Agents on the Spot—The Chaplain is practically the Church Army Agent, 8072-8075.

Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society—Work in connection with, 8070.

Four months' work offered to every prisoner in England, 8069, 8075.

Hopeful, as compared with Tramps, 8033, 8151-8153, 8240, 8241.

Outside Employment for—Employers appealed to on ground of a man's previous character, 8038-8041.

Percentage of good, doubtful, and bad Cases, 8237, 8240.

Church Army—*cont.Prison Cases—*cont.

Work inside Prisons allowed by Prison Commission, 8071, 8075.

Receiving Homes, 567, 5840, 5843, 5907.

Banner Street—Homeless Poor Association absorbed by the Church Army, 8128.

Casual Wards, Comparison with—Receiving home give men the chance of raising themselves, 8245–8250.

Cost of Food and Bed—not compensated for, by value of work, 8050–8055.

Free Shelter in Glasgow, 6608.

Hours of Admission up to 4 p.m., except in Winter, when Work is going all night, 8046–8048, 8129, 8130.

Casual Ward Refusals excluded by hours fixed, 8131, 8132.

Number of, in England and Wales, 8199.

Number of, in London, 8171.

Passing Cases on to Labour Homes—Primary purpose of Receiving Homes to catch Men for the Labour Homes, 8030, 8049.

Standard of Comfort—Good Beds, etc., a Means of restoring self-respect, 8163–8165.

Wood-Chopping, Reasons for adopting as Labour, Disposal of Chopped Wood, etc., 8211–15.

Work exacted :

Conditions of Admission—No Relief without Work, Three Hours Work exacted before giving a night's rest, 8030, 8042, 8043, 8129.

No Competition with Common Lodging-houses, 7954–7957.

Ordinary Task of Work for a night's rest, 8044, 8045.

REPORT, par. 333.

Way-ticket Scheme, see title Way-ticket Systems.

Women's Home at Shepherd's Bush—System of subdividing into Families, 8113.

Circulars issued by Poor Law Commissioners, Poor Law Board and Local Government Board.

1837—Distinction between casually Destitute Wayfarers and Beggars by Profession, 30.

1848—Discrimination between Professional Vagrants and Distressed Wayfarers, and Uniformity on certain Points suggested, 46–48—Text of circular, App., page 15.

1863—Police as Assistant Relieving Officers for Vagrants in London, 52.

1864–5—Casual Wards in London, Requirements specified, Inspection, etc., 59.

1868—Treatment of Vagrants, Advantages of employing Police as Relieving Officers, 96, 97, 1189.

1872—Police dispensed with as Assistant Relieving Officers, Identification Officers, 111.

1882—Issued with fresh regulations, 143.

Uniformity not insured, 143, 159.

1883—Day Rooms and Way-tickets, 168–171.

1887 and 1888—Earlier Discharge of Casuals who have been detained two nights, 178.

1888—Avoidance of Competition in Workhouse Labour with Individual Trades, 180, 181.

1889—London, Uniformity of Treatment of Casuals recommended, 186.

1896—Enforcement of Order of 1882 urged, 192—Text of Circular, App., page 17.

1902—Smallpox in Casual Wards, App., page 166.

Clare Market, Church Army Labour Tent

Common Lodging-houses, Lodgers attracted from, 8649–8652, 8784–8787.

Less popular than Salvation Army Shelter—Small Task imposed, 9402.

Number fed on Night of 17th February, 1905, 5907.

Classes of Vagrants, 7587–7589.

First Admissions, Repeated Admissions, Statistics from Whitechapel Casual Ward, 9875, 9876.

King's Norton Wards—Number of Trades represented, Number who had learned a Trade, etc., 2604, 2605, 2608.

REPORT, par. 78–87.

Sheffield, Past Employments of Men out of Work, 2384.

Tame Street, Manchester, Class of Women in Casual Ward, 1421, 1440, 1441.

(for particular Classes, see their names, Casual Ward Class, Habitual Vagrants, Honest Wayfarers, etc.)

Classification of Vagrants, Suggestions, etc., 2677, 2689, 2909–11, 4967, 5348.

Hadleigh Colony, Methods at, 6177, 6178.

Importance of Classification in connection with Labour Colony or Penal Workhouse Schemes, 4094–4097.

Making Casual Wards into Receiving Wards whence Vagrants would be sent on for Treatment according to their Requirements after Classification, 5936, 5939, 6035, 6036, 6075, 6076, 6082.

Regulations according to Class—Difficulty of making different Regulations for the different Classes except in Case of Distressed Wayfarers, 678–681.

Won't Work, Willing to Work and Can't Work, Classification suggested, 2120, 2129.

Cleanliness of Tramps

Past and Present compared—Modern Tramp one of the Cleanest People to be found among the Working Classes, 543, 544.

Cleansing of Persons Act, 5439–5442.

Provisions in London under the Act, Extent of—Act to a large extent a dead Letter, 5692, 5693; App., page 57.

Clothing

Boots of Vagrants, Improvement in Condition of, in recent years, 547–9.

Damage to own Clothing by Work in Casual Ward, 1406–9, 1420.

Disinfecting and Drying, see that title.

Garments supplied in Casual Wards.

Complaints as to, 1347, 1362, 1393–4.

Nightdress, Supply of, 144.

State of, preventing Employment, alleged, 644, 645.

Test of Habitual Tramp or Honest Wayfarer, 2392.

Washing of Clothing, Provision for in Common Lodging-houses, but not in Workhouses, 1495.

Coffee Stalls open at Night

Objections to—Noise, not needed at such an early Hour, Robbery, etc., 9496–9504, 9616–9620, 9665–9672.

Commercial Road Depot

Number fed on Night of 17th February, 1905, 5769.

Commitments to Prison

Form of—Major Offence only specified, 9253–9257.

Committee on Vagrancy

Departmental Committee, Appointment of—Deputations to the Local Government Board, 189–191, 195.

Common Lodging-houses

Bath, Absence of—Washing not enforced, 3150, 7958.

No convenience for a Woman to cleanse herself, 1485–1488, 1494.

Tramps preferring Lodging-house to Casual Ward on that account, 3075, 3078.

Common Lodging-houses—cont.

Beds compared with those in Casual Wards, 1469-1475.

Byelaws:

Local Government Board, Model Byelaws, 3139-3154; App., pages 168-171.

Compulsory adoption, suggestion, 3155, 3156.

Powers of Local Authorities, App., page 7.

Cheap Lodging, without which many people would be sleeping in the streets, 9444, 9445.

Classification into Nightly and Resident Houses—Suggestion, 3086.

Cleanliness, Lack of, as compared with Casual Wards, 1469-1475, 1485, 2105, 8639, 8640.

Cost per night, 1490-1492, 1496, 1737.

Birmingham, 2781.

Dundee, 6671-6674, 6681.

Food found by Lodgers for themselves, 1489.

Germany—No Common Lodging-houses, 3720.

Honest Wayfarer, Accommodation for—Comparison of Lodging-house with Casual Ward, 2097-2100, 2105.

Inspection and Supervision:

Berkshire—Police Visits to Common Lodging-houses, 4695, 4803-4808, 4849-4851.

Edinburgh—Supervision by Special Inspector and Sanitary Authority, not by Police, 6963, 6964.

Improvement needed, 3158, 5028-5031.

Newcastle, Provision for Inspection, 3205-3207, 3228, 3230, 3231.

Northumberland—Police no right of entry, but always received with open arms, 7516-7518.

Police Inspection:

Appointment of Police as Inspectors—Suggestion, 4694-4696, 4803-4808.

Greater Powers for Police desirable, 7735.

Sanitary Authority, Control by—Suggestion, 3157.

Sanitary Authority, Houses under Jurisdiction of, 1734.

Small Towns and Country Districts, Difficulty in, 3232-3234.

Licensing—Annual Licensing System:

Extension to Provinces of London System—Suggestion, 8637.

Scotland, System in force in, 5852.

London, see that title.

Medical Examination of Persons entering:

No Provision for, 3158, 3161.

Resolution of Conference of 1894, 3124.

Newcastle, Condition of Houses in, 3140, 3151, 3152, 3216, 3224, 3225.

Number of Lodging-houses:

Birmingham, 2779, 2780.

Decrease in Number, 1752, 1777.

Gloucestershire, Number of Persons in Common Lodging-houses in 1885 and 1904—limited Accommodation, 1745-51, 1754.

Marlow, 3021.

Wiltshire, 1968.

Register of Persons using—No Provision for keeping Register, 3159-3162, 3174.

Registration insufficiently carried out, 4693.

Report furnished, if required, to Local Authorities, under Section 83 of Public Health Act, 1875, 3213-3216; App., page 7.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, 324-329, 429 (24-26).

Vagrants using Common Lodging-houses, 1726.

Cuckfield, Absence of Lodging-house increasing Number of Casuals, 2069, 2229, 2230.

Common Lodging-houses—cont.Vagrants using Common Lodging-houses—cont.

Gangs of Vagrants sending one Member with money to Common Lodging-house while rest go to the Casual Ward, 5017.

Gloucestershire—Chief Constable's Statistics, 297.

Least harmful of Institutions supplying Shelter for Vagrants, because they exist on a demand, 8634, 8636, 8658.

London, 297.

Opening new Houses, Effect on Number of Vagrants, 2783.

Preferred by Tramps to Casual Ward, even without food, 1730-1733, 1773.

Proportion of Tramps using, 4451.

REPORT, par. 60, 63-66, 68, 70.

Tickets for Common Lodging-houses given to Tramps.

Gloucester—Overflow Tramps sent to Lodging-houses without food, 1728.

Inspectors' Reports in 1866, 60, 61.

North Wales, Number of Vagrants relieved in Common Lodging-houses, etc., 5510, 5633-5635.

Scotland, 6404.

Small Proportion of Tramps relieved in Common Lodging-houses at the present day, 202-207.

Trafalgar Square Gatherings of 1887, Effect of, 177.

Wiltshire—Number of Persons in Lodging-houses less than number in Casual Wards, 1964-1968.

Women and Children sent to, while men go to Casual Ward, 1463-1467.

Washing of Clothes, Provision for, 1495.

Way-ticket System—Recognition of Lodging-houses not recommended, 4403-4405.

Women, Scarcity and Inadequacy of Accommodation for Single Women, 1483, 1485, 1498.

Explanation of—Lodging-house for Single Women would not pay so well as mixed house, 1499-1504.

Common Lodging-Houses Act of 1851.

First Recognition of Common Lodging-houses, 5648-5650.

Communication in Cell with Workhouse Officer

Absence of Bell in Women's Ward, 1431.

Regulations as to—Order of 1882, 146.

Requirement of Local Government Board not insisted on, 10125, 10126.

Convictions

see Prosecutions and Convictions.

Corn grinding Task

Advantages as Task for Vagrants—Unskilled and even, 429, 2442, 4946-4948, 9690-9696.

Cost of Plant, etc., 4989-4992.

Impossible to make it pay, 854.

Used in Towns, but not much used in Country Unions, 433-435.

Cornwall

Proportion of Vagrancy lowest in, according to Population, 300, 516.

Cost of Relief to Casual Paupers, 4998. App., pages 28, 32.

Capital Expenditure on Casual Wards, see Casual Wards.

Cost of Relief to Casual Paupers—cont.

Change in System by abolition of Casual Wards would mean waste of large Capital Expenditure, 623-625.

Cheapness of Present System, 599.

County Charge, question of, 4427, 7641, 10598-10600.

County Charge and Contribution by the Exchequer — Recommendation to the Local Government Board, 516.

Local Government Board Inspectors' Suggestion, 517.

Difficulty in the way of carrying out Regulations, 2727-2729.

Items of Cost—Maintenance, Provision of buildings, and construction of Separate Cells, 5620, 5622.

London, see that title.

Maintenance, Cost of Tramp Ward apart from Capital Expenditure, Food, etc., included, 363-365, 632-634, 5621.

Germany, Cost in Travellers' Homes as compared with Cost in Casual Wards, 3559, 3880-3884.

Ratepayers' Objections to paying for Tramps who do not belong to their Union, 4175, 4176.

REPORT, par. 93, 99, 102, 118.—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 130, 136, 142, 429 (9).

Small Unions, Difficulties with regard to, 451-453, 5574, 5588, 5621, 10543.

State Charge—Suggestions and Opinions, 1935-1938, 2651, 2697-2701, 2850, 2851, 4932, 5587-5589, 5631, 6220, 6229.

Uniformity, Difficulty in the way of:

Each Board of Guardians treats Casuals in the cheapest way and gets rid of them quickly, 1863.

Extension of Area of chargeability needed to secure Uniformity 7637.

Smaller Unions on Highways between important towns, Difficulty in regard to, 5574, 5588, 5621.

Transferring Cost of Casual Wards to the State in order to secure Uniformity—Suggestion, 2850, 2851.

Union Charge substituted for charge on particular Parish in which Workhouse is situated—Act of 1848, 43.

Cost of Workhouse Inmates

Weekly Cost, 3s. 5d., 971.

Country Tramp

Characteristics of Country Tramp as distinct from Town Tramp, travels longer distances, gets money by threats, etc., 9841-9844.

County Authority for control of Vagrancy, 9795, 9796.

Objection to—Destitution should not be treated Penally, 5581-5583.

Opinion in favour of, 8709, 8710.

(For particular Authorities suggested see their names—Guardians, Police, etc.)

County Councils as Authority to Control Vagrancy

Objection to—Extravagant tendencies, 8474, 8482, 8483.

Opinion in Favour of, 8469.

Crime among Vagrants

Bail, Number of Cases where Bail could not be obtained—Cases not necessarily Vagrants, 4382.

Enormous proportion of Crime, though offences were not very serious ones, 7559, 7560, 7664-7666.

Increase in:

Berkshire, 4652.

Gloucestershire—Increase in number of Convictions, etc., 1695-1698.

Lanarkshire, Petty Crime in, 6939-6941.

Crime among Vagrants—cont

Larceny in connection with Cottages left for the time being, 4847.

Number of Offences reported for which no one was Arrested, 7681.

REPORT, par. 82, 85.

Very little—Vagrants not a Criminal class on the whole, 4038, 4381, 4749, 6907-9, 9158-60, 9163, 9165, 10680.

London Tramps, Absence of Crime among, 3469-3473.

Not of sufficient Skill to be Thieves, 9471-4.

Stack-firing, etc., due to Carelessness, 4091-3.

Crispen Street Night Refuge, 9582-9583.Cruelty to Children

National Society for Prevention of:

Charter granted to Society, 28 May, 1895, Terms of, 10928, 10929.

Education Question did not come under purview of Society, 10951.

Institutions—N.S.P.C.C. had none, Institutions of other Voluntary Organisations utilised, Society being responsible for Child's maintenance, 11005-11007, 11042-11045.

Intercommunication among local Secretaries, 10955-6.

Number of Cases investigated by Society during 1904, 10939-44.

Objects of the Society, 10928.

Family Life, Preservation of—Principle that Parent should not be relieved of responsibility of Maintenance, 10991, 11021, 11022, 11037.

Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904—No new powers over Tramp Children given to Society, 10992.

Registration of Vagrant Families, Scheme for, 10946-10948, 10954, 11046, 11048-11051.

Tramp Children, Action in regard to, see title Child Vagrants.

Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 6626.

Inspectors under—Work in Scotland, 6595.

No new powers over Tramp Children given to N.S.P.C.C., 10992.

Tramping with Children not held to be Cruelty under the Act, 1156-1160.

Cuckfield Union

Accommodation for Casuals in excess of requirements, 2260.

Admission of Tramps, Procedure, 2145-2151.

Bathing and Searching Regulations strictly carried out, 2075-2083, 2088.

Beds, bedding, etc., 2154-2160.

Begging:

Decrease in, 2239-2244.

Same Beggars appearing year after year, 2347.

Child Vagrants:

Decrease in Number, 2064, 2065, 2067.

Investigation into cases of Children coming alone to Casual Ward, 2259.

National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Communication with, 2067, 2177, 2256.

Date of Introduction of System, 2270-2272.

Common Lodging-houses, Non-provision of, 2069, 2229, 2230.

Detention, Time of Discharge, 2165, 2173.

Sunday, Practice in regard to, 2287-2293.

Diet—Minimum allowed by Local Government Board, 2049, 2152, 2163, 2164.

Cuckfield Union—cont.

Honest Wayfarers, Treatment of—Proportion of honest Wayfarers, 2089, 2090, 2133, 2234-2236.

Number of Casuals:

Decrease in Number of Vagrants, Causes of, 2197-2199, 2272.

Greater Number in Winter than in Summer, 2261-2263.

Number relieved in 1904—Number of Prosecutions of Casuals, 2202, 2203-2208.

Statistics, 2018-2021, 2028, 2029, 2044, 2174-2178.

Table for 1887-1904, App., page 208.

Women Vagrants, Causes of Decrease in Number, 2323-4.

Police Co-operation in Dealing with Vagrants, 2111, 2112, 2114, 2219, 2220, 2361-2363.

Date of Introduction of System, 2267-2269, 2272.

Prosecutions during 1903, App., pages 207, 208.

Refusal to do Task:

Number of Prosecutions, 2204-2206.

Physical Incapacity Pleaded, Procedure in Case of, 2209-2215, 2343-2346—Case of Casual Refusing to be Examined by Doctor, 2217, 2218, 2352, 2353.

Return to Workhouse after Prosecution, Rare Occurrence, 2354, 2355.

Staff for Dealing with Vagrants, 2143, 2144.

Woman Official for Reception of Women Vagrants, 2364.

Task:

Gardening and Pumping—Remunerative Tasks, 2041-2043.

Oakum Picking, Abolition of, 2172.

Stone Pounding Task, see that title.

Women, Task set for, 2320, 2321.

Warming of Cells, 2155, 2166-2168.

Workhouse Inmates, Number of, 2014.

Cumberland

Police as Relieving Officers—Complaints of Slovenly Poor Law Administration in 1879, 1174-1178.

Vagrant Children in Industrial Schools, Number of, 4498.

Day Rooms

Circular of 1883, 167, 168.

Description of, 169-171.

Kept as Day Rooms in London, used as Associated Wards in the Country, 10108, 10109.

Decrease in Vagrancy

Cell System, Effect of, 490-497, 501-505, 602, 4057-4071, 4832-4835.

Cell System plus Enforcement of Regulations, 490-497, 501-505, 602, 3927, 4055-4070, 4170.

Country, Decrease in 1869-1875, 125.

Detention Acts as a Deterrent in Country Unions, 10466.

Effect of Circulars, Legislation, etc., in causing decrease, 126-130.

Act of 1871, Reduction of Vagrancy attributed to, 108, 109.

Decrease after every Act and Order and subsequent rise, 165, 9810-9818.

German System, Question as to Reduction under, 3604-3608, 3746-3748, 3841-3865, 3903-3908.

London—Success of Identification Scheme, 111, 112, 120-122.

Police Activity, Reduction due to.

Lincolnshire, 4119.

North Riding of Yorkshire, 4112, 4113.

Decrease in Vagrancy—cont.

Police as Relieving Officers for Vagrants, 1038, 1039.

Success in Essex, 66-69.

South African War—Reduction in 1900, due in part to the War, 220, 597, 1064-1067, 1774.

Task, Establishment of, and Opening of Refuges cause Reduction in Vagrancy, 1842-1844, Report, 40-42.

Warwickshire, Result of Strict Enforcement of Vagrancy Act—Captain Sterne's Report (1872) 2006.

Way-ticket System, Effects of, 1031-1034, 4766.

Wiltshire, 1871—Captain Sterne's Report, 2006.

Definitions of Vagrancy

Act of 1871, Definition of "Casual," 297.

Extended Definition needed, 6191, 6192.

Classes to be Included under desired Definition, 7150-7160.

French Definition, 8742.

German Definition, 8664, 8665.

Mode of Life, Defining Vagrancy as, rather than Determining Vagrancy by fact of Committal of some Offence, 8662, 8663.

Poor Law Unions Association Definition, 914-916.

Smallpox, Communication of—Definition of "Vagrant" as Including the Whole Floating Population, 530.

"Vagrant," 297, 1881, 1889.

"Wayfarer," 1881.

Depression in Trade

Effect in Increasing Vagrancy, 1634, 2383, 7556-7558, 8819-8823.

Derby

Begging and Sleeping-out, Statistics, 1893-1903, 8575.

Description of Vagrants, see Classes of Vagrants.Detention, Length of—Hours of Discharge, etc.

Abolition of Distinction between Ordinary Paupers and Casuals, 9781-9783.

Accommodation Question.

Insufficient Accommodation, Plea of, 4171, 4177, 4345—Circular of 1896, 192.

Workhouse Masters Improvising Accommodation rather than give Tickets for Common Lodging-houses, 726-728.

Acts of Parliament:

Tudor Period to the 18th Century, Local Acts Empowering Detention, 13.

1697—Exeter, Detention for Maximum Period of Three Years, 29.

1842—Detention of Four Hours Authorised on Morning Succeeding Admission, 36.

1871—Extending detention, 102.

1882—Detention Lengthened, 136-141.

Deterrent Effect, Question of:

Country—Reduction of Vagrancy where Detention was Enforced, 10466, 10552-10560.

No Deterrent Effect, 1559-1561, 1625, 1629.

London—Detention not a Deterrent, 10465, 10469-10473, 10556-10560.

Discharge Book, Regulations as to—Order of 1882, 144; App., page 11.

Discretionary Power of Discharge possessed by Guardians and Workhouse Masters, 144, 148-153, 157-160, 164, 417, 418, 10441, 10442.

Exception for Vagrants to demand Discharge in London, 10441.

North Wales Unions, 5520-5523.

Weakness of System, Danger in Case of Dishonest Master, 3927, 4071.

Detention, Length of, etc.—cont.

Discretionary Power of Discharge, etc.—cont.

Whitechapel Wards, 9734.

Withdrawal of Discretion Suggested, 605, 647, 711-716.

Earlier Hour for Discharge of Casuals who have been Detained two nights.

Circulars of 1887 and 1888, 178.

Order of 1892—Right of Casual to Claim Discharge on Second Morning at 5.30 in Summer and 6.30 in Winter, 188—Text of Order, App., page 13.

Extension of Powers of Detention.

House of Lords' Committee Recommendation 1888, 507.

Local Government Board, Suggestion to, 516.

Families—Discharged Early, 2540.

Four Days' Detention:

Casual Poor Act, 1882, Provisions of, 136-139, 148.

Enforcement of—Rarely carried out with Strictness, 418.

Imprisonment, Similarity to—not much Objection raised, etc., 419, 420.

King's Norton—not many Cases, Tramps taking care not to come within the Prescribed Limits very often, 2674-2676.

Order of 1882—Sunday not reckoned, Discretion as to Earlier Discharge, 144, 149-153, 157, 158.

Poplar and Whitechapel Casual Wards—Evasion of Regulations, 3374.

Rarity of, but Cases occur when Order of 1882 Enforced, 344-346.

Sheffield—Cases of detention for four Nights, 2541, 2542.

Honest Wayfarers, Discharge after one Night, Suggestion, 1541.

Liberating each Tramp Independently as soon as his Task is done—Chippenham System, 1797.

Objections to Detention, 5403, 5404.

Old and Infirm Vagrants—Detention pending Inquiry, 10506-10509.

One-night System:

Poplar Union, 5329.

Sheffield System, 2450, 2573-2577.

Breach of Local Government Board Regulations, 2470.

Dislike by Tramps—Same Task exacted for two meals instead of five, 2469.

Order of 1882:

Discharge Regulations, 144.

No Effect on Vagrancy, 1740-1742.

Text of Order, App., pages 9-12.

Poor Houses in Scotland—Magistrates' Powers to order Detention, 6505-6512.

REPORT, par. 93, 94—RECOMMENDATION, par. 151, 152, 180, 429 (8).

Summary of Principal Recommendations made to the Local Government Board, 516.

Sunday, Detention over—Overcrowding on Sunday due to Evasion of Regulations by Neighbouring Unions, 1924-1928.

Two Days' Detention:

Applying to Habitual Vagrants only, Suggestion, 1540.

Number of Unions enforcing two days' detention, App., pages 80, 82.

Workhouse Officers' Objections to, 2574, 2575.

Uniformity, Lack of—Evasion of Regulations, etc., 418, 442-444, 605, 1860, 4923-4926, 10444, 10445.

Country Unions, 118, 2718-2720.

Detention, Length of, etc.—cont.

Uniformity, Lack of—cont.

Effect of Detention Systems only Local—Tramps driven away to another Union—General and Permanent Remedy required, 1018.

Order of Local Government Board as means of Enforcing Uniformity, Suggestion, 4339, 4341-4345, 4357.

Regulations issued had been such as to make the Detention prescribed a matter of Local Option, 306.

Way-ticket System, Theory of, 4383-4390.

Wiltshire System—only one night for Holder of Good Ticket, Variation from Route designated involving Full Detention, 1796, 1797, 1821.

Week, Detention for, Suggested—Opportunity for Inquiry, etc., 10466.

Week or Ten Days for Casuals known to have been in Workhouses more than two or three times during preceding Six Months—Recommendation of Scottish Departmental Committee, 508.

Women detained, 682-684.

Workhouses—no Detention for Tramps, 2396.

Detention, Places of State Management of all places of Detention, Mr. Preston-Thomas's Theory—Advantages of Local and Voluntary Management, 1274, 1275.

See also Casual Wards, Labour Colonies, Prisons and names of Colonies, etc.

Devizes

Only Prison in Wiltshire, 1849.

Twenty miles without a Casual Ward from Devizes to Salisbury, 1952-1957.

Devonshire

Begging and Sleeping out Prosecutions—Statistics for 1903, 1069.

Cost of Building Cells, etc., for Vagrants, 612-615.

Proportion of Vagrancy low according to Population, 300.

Dewsbury Union

Admission to Casual Ward through Police—Effect in making Criminal Tramps sleep out, 6898, 6899.

Diet given to Tramps, Cost, etc., 853, 864.

Number of Casuals:

Association Ward, Attraction for certain Class of Tramps, 868, 869.

Decrease in Proportion of Children, 854.

Increase in, 907-909.

Situation of Workhouse, Effect on Number of Tramps, 854.

Reclaiming Agencies, Absence of, 924-926.

Task:

Difficulties due to Situation of Workhouse, 854, 905, 906.

Oakum picking—small Amount done, 904.

Wood Chopping task, 910-912.

Women's Casual Ward—Experiences in, 1288.

Admission of Women Vagrants—Complaints as to Conduct of Pauper admitting Women, 1304-1323.

Associated Ward, 1428.

Beds—Chain Mattress cold, 1331.

Bell in Ward, Absence of, 1431.

Cleanliness, Laxity as to—Tramp allowed to sleep without bath, Clothes not stoved, etc., 1325, 1328, 1334.

Detention—Time of Discharge—Evasion of Regulations, 1340, 1449.

Dewsbury Union—cont.Women's Casual Ward, etc.—cont.

Dietary—Porridge nauseous, no Water or other Drink provided, etc., 1332-1339, 1429.

Number of Female Tramps, 1426.

Officials in Casual Ward itself kindly and attentive, 1329, 1330.

Refusal to admit, 1391.

Task, 1331.

Dietary in Casual Wards

Abolition of Distinction between Ordinary and Casual Pauper, proposed, 9768, 9787.

Acts of Parliament :

1842—First required that Casuals should be dieted under Regulations, 39.

1871—Provision for uniform Diet, 102.

Basal Food Stuff—Scientific views as to relative rôles served by Proteids, etc., in Repair of Tissue, and Energy production, 10795, 10796.

Bread and Water Diet—Abolished in London by Local Government Board Order of 1887, 362—Text of Order, App., page 12.

Breakfast given before Discharge at six a.m. at Poplar, 5332-5334.

Cheap Food a necessity in settling Dietary for Tramps, 10863, 10864.

Calorie Value of existing Dietary, 10810-10819.

Children—Milk prescribed by the Local Government Board Order of 1897, 366, 411-415, 2316-2318, 5510, 5512—Text of Order, App., page 13.

Chittenden Experimental Dietary, Comparison of existing Dietary with, 10813, 10825-10829.

Cost, 363-365, 652.

Country—Unsatisfactory Dietary, not possible to improve things without uniformity, 10595-10597.

Differences of Diet in different Races, 10898-10900.

Downes's, Dr. A. H., Memorandum, App., page 145.

Experimental method of Dietary Research, 10796.

Atwater Experiments—10796, 10798, 10802.

Modification of Atwater Views, 10851-10854.

Chittenden Experiments with varied Diet upon different types of individuals, 10798-10800, 10803-10809, 10832-10838, 10859.

Extensive Variety allowed, 10826, 10873-10876.

Foster's, Sir M., Memorandum, App., page 143.

German Workhouse Dietary, 3919.

Gruel :

Brighton—Tramps passing intervening Workhouse in order to get Gruel, 2049, 2050.

Making overnight—King's Norton, no Complaints of sour Gruel, 2860.

Objections to—Tendency to be sour, effect on Digestion, etc., 1395.

Haig's, Dr., Theory, Reference to, 10910, 10911.

Ideal Dietary for Vagrants :

Calorie Value—Basal Diet for a man under average Conditions, 10858-10861.

Smith's, Dr. Edward, Dietary—Calorie Value, etc., 10849, 10855-10857, 10862, 10897.

Comparison with Voit Standard, 10850, 10851.

Unattractiveness and Difficulty of Chittenden Standard on basis of common cheap Foods, 10873-10887, 10918, 10919.

Inadequacy of Existing Dietary—Improvement needed, 367-376, 386, 647, 853, 1542-1545, 2523, 9700.

Almsgiving due to prevalence of idea that tramps are insufficiently fed, 4683, 4762, 4765.

Deficiency in Fat, 416, 10821-10324, 10865.

Dietary in Casual Wards—cont.Inadequacy of Existing Dietary—cont.

Effect of continued Casual Ward Diet, Possibility of honest wayfarer being incapacitated for work and driven into tramp habit, 2365, 2366.

Ordinary Workhouse Inmates' Diet for Casuals, suggestion, 4934-4942.

Preference for Prison displayed, Cause of, 336, 349-360, 416, 2929-2933, 4682.

Task could not be done on food given, 416, 4681-4684, 4753-4759.

Workhouse Masters' Evidence, 4753.

Increase in number of Vagrants on relaxation of Diet, 384.

Japanese Navy, Dietary of, 10836, 10837, 10901.

Mid-day meal in Women's Casual Wards, 1365, 1406.

Nutritive Values of Existing and Suggested Diets, App., page 147.

Open-air work and cell-work—Consideration of atmosphere in arrangement of Diet, 10866-10868, 10890-10896.

Prison Diet, Comparison with, App., page 76.

Proteid Dietary :

Dangers arising from an excess of Proteid Dietary, 10839-10848.

Disease-resisting power and energy, question of, on a low proteid Dietary, 10832-10838.

Meat—Possible Substitutes, a little meat desirable, 10902-10909.

Regulations :

Order of 1842, 39.

Order of 1866 as to London, 93.

Order of 1871—Regulations with alternatives which made uniformity impossible, 104.

Order of 1882—Diets prescribed but made variable by Guardians, 146—Text of Order, App., pages 10, 11.

REPORT, par. 95, 97—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 181, 308-310, 429 (6).

Scotch Poorhouses, Dietary in, 6427, 6428.

Lack of uniformity—Better Dietary attracting tramps to certain houses, 6442, 6443.

Size of Man, Consideration of, in estimating optimum Diet, 10830, 10831.

Soup and Bread alternative for Bread and Cheese Dinner, 405-410.

Statistical Method of Dietary Research—Voit Standard, 10796, 10801.

Comparison of Voit Standard with results of other experiments, 10798, 10800, 10850, 10851.

Stimulus required to ensure a proper flow of Gastric Juice—Appetite the most important factor, Value of Meat Extracts, etc., 10906-10909, 10912-10916.

Sufficiency of existing Dietary for Habitual Tramps, 4190.

Medical Certification as to sufficiency of Dietary, proposed, 9699.

Task—Less Calorie value required for a light than for a heavy task, 10888, 10889.

Uniformity, Lack of, 336, 647, 10445, 10446, 10454-10457.

Local option under the Regulations issued, 306.

North Wales Unions, Variation in different Unions, 5510.

Opinion that it is possible to secure uniformity, 162.

Particulars furnished by Guardians, App., pages 80, 84.

Dietary in Casual Wards—cont.

Variety, Importance of, 10826, 10827.

Workhouse proper:

Better Diet than either Casual Ward or Prison Diet, 366.

Differences of Diet in different workhouses, 336.

Ordinary house diet given to Casuals at Sheffield, 2450, 2471-2474, 2536-2539.

Reconsideration desirable in view of recent discoveries as to Diet, 10869-10872.

Discharged Prisoners

Beggars coming out of Prison, Work offered to every Beggar by Prisoner's Aid Societies, 11103.

Church Army Work among, see Church Army—Prison cases.

Opportunity to earn a Character in a Vagrant Colony—Suggestion, 5320.

Salvation Army Work in connection with Discharged Prisoner's Aid Societies, 6170-6172.

Disinfecting and Drying Clothing

Casual Wards, Superiority to Shelters, 8642.

Order of 1882, 144.

Smallpox, Disinfecting Clothes of Person exposed to Infection—Resolution by Conference of 1894, 530.

Distribution of Casual Pauperism in the several Counties, App., pages 22-26, 29-31, 34-37.Dorsetshire Bread Ticket System, 4928-4930.

Abuse of—Tramps changing bread for Liquor, 1916.

Almsgiving, Possible Effect in Reducing, 8571, 8572.

Begging and Sleeping out, Statistics for 1893-1903—Reduction possibly due to Bread Ticket System, 8565-8574.

Certain Roads, Vagrants kept to, 8566-8568.

Date of Introduction, 8573.

Harmless System—Better than giving food or pence, 8782, 8783.

Mid-day Meal Suggestion, 401.

Opinions in Favour of—Recommendations to Local Government Board, 516.

REPORT par., 164.

Report of Society for 1904, App., page 49.

Doyle, Mr.—Poor Law Board Inspector.

Report on Vagrants and their Treatment, 70.

Drainage

Requirements much more stringent in London than in Country, 10056.

Drink as a Cause of Vagrancy—Inebriate Tramps, 1665, 7587, 7588.

Binding over Inebriates for First and Second Convictions, with Long Sentence for Third Conviction—Sir J. Bridge's Proposal, 4031, 4032.

Greater number of Drunken Cases are Vagrants who work for a Week and then Drink for a Week, 7747.

Last Pence spent on Drink, Tramp depending on a Bed in the Casual Ward, 381, 382, 2227, 2228.

London Tramps, Drunkenness among, 3466-8, 3473.

Shelter Population not often under Influence of Drink, 9628, 9629.

Short Sentences, Effect of—More harm than good 1666, 1668.

Bridge's, Sir John, Opinion, 4031.

Clark's, Sir Andrew, Evidence, 1130, 1131.

Dundee

Arbroath Water Works and New Tramway Lines, Tramps Attracted by, 6670.

Begging and Sleeping out, Apprehensions for, 6629-6631.

Census of Vagrants taken by Police, 6717-6726.

Common Lodging-houses—Charge, Regulations, etc., 6671-6674, 6681; App., page 95.

"Ins and outs," Present Methods of Dealing with Unsatisfactory, 6651-6661; App., page 95.

Local Acts with regard to Vagrancy, 6621.

Magistrates.

Appointment from Members of Town Council, etc., 6633.

Sheriff the only Paid Magistrate, 6636.

Nationality of Vagrants—Irish Immigration of Fifty Years Ago, 6662, 6663.

Night Refuge for Homeless Persons; App., page 95.

Nature of Accommodation, 6679.

Number Relieved, 6669, 6670.

Prisoners' Aid Society Refuge Worked in Connection with, 6666.

Qualifications for Admission, 6667.

Parish Authorities, Cordial Relations with Police, 6683, 6684.

Police.

Food given by, to Persons Charged, 6753-6755.

Nothing to do with Tramps unless in Case of Crime or Offence, 6652-6654, 6743-6745.

Shelter Relief given by, prior to Opening of Night Refuge, 6675-6678, 6711-6716.

Cost paid out of Police Funds, 6712, 6713.

Town Council the Police Authority, 6634, 6635.

Procurator-Fiscal, Combination of Office, with that of Chief Constable, 6733-6737.

Sentences, Length of Sentences imposed by Dundee Magistrates, 6638-6643.

Five and Seven Days mean really Five and Seven Days, 6644-6647.

Sheriff, Powers and Functions of, 6636, 6637.

Statistical Tables.

Convictions during 1904, App., pages 96-100.

Number of persons proceeded against, 1889-1903, App., page 101.

Durham County

Begging and Sleeping out, Statistics for 1893-1903, 8576.

Vagrant Children in Industrial Schools, Number of, 4498.

East London Industrial School

Disadvantages of Situation, etc., 6015-6018.

East Preston Union

Stone pounding at, 2958.

Edinburgh

Begging :

Cases sent on by Police to Inspectors of the Poor, 6966.

Prosecutions, 6949-6951, 6954, 6955

Common Lodging-houses, Supervision by specially appointed Inspector and Sanitary Authorities, 6963, 6964.

Free Shelters—Night Refuge at Queensberry House and Asylum for the Friendless and Homeless, 6956.

Food given, 6960.

No searching, 6959.

Very rarely full, 6957, 6958, 6961.

Parochial Authority, Relations with Police, 6965.

Police Shelter Relief and Food given by, 6943-6948.

Edinburgh—cont.

- Poor Houses—Amount of Accommodation, 6967-6970.
- Prosecutions Jan. to May, 1905, App., page 103.
- Salvation Army Lodging-house, 6978.
- Sleeping out, Increase in, due to advertisement of Charity—Number of Convictions, 6952-6955.
- Soup Kitchens, etc., creating Tramps, 6481.

Education Act, 1876

- Section 14 of Industrial Schools Act, 1866, re-enacted by, 4582.

Education Act, 1902

- Child Vagrants, dealing with, under the Act—Suggestion, 4205-4218.
- County Councils, Powers and Duties of, in regard to Industrial Schoo's—Home Office Circular of 1903, App. page 186.
- Industrial Schools Act, lull in working of, due to passing of Education Act, 4482, 4483.

Elementary Education Act, 1876

- Permissive Character—Amendment appointing one clearly defined body to enforce the Act—Suggestion, 10982, 10987, 10988, 11055-11058.

Elmira Prison, United States

- Class of men taken, 5300-5303.
- Promotion System, 5289, 5296.

Emigration to Canada

- Child Vagrants, Empowering Magistrates to Emigrate Children, proposed, 5919, 5975, 5980-5982.
- Laindon Farm Colony, Success of men sent to Canada, 5384-5386, 5485-5489.
- Lingfield Colonists, Number sent to Canada, 5072, 5093, 5240-5244.
- Self-help Emigration Society—Value attached to Society's Emigrants in Canada, 5244.
- Training for—Amount of Training needed, 5093.

Employers' Liability Act

- Effect in increasing Vagrancy among people past middle age, 4918.

Employment

- Information as to, REPORT, par. 184, 185.
- see also* titles Labour Colonies, Labour in Relation to Vagrancy, Prison, Task, also names of Labour Colonies and Prisons.

Enforcement of Regulations in Casual Wards

- Accommodation and Staff of Casual Wards insufficient to carry out Regulations, 192, 4170-4174, 4177, 4345
- Circular of 1896, urging enforcement of Order of 1882, 192—Text of Circular, App., page 17.
- Cost Difficulty, 2727-2729—Case of small Unions, 7627-7636.
- County charge suggestion, 4346-4353.
- Grant from the County on Certificate of Standing Joint Committee or Local Government Board for Casual Wards carrying out Regulations, 4457-4462, 4842.
- Objections to increasing Accommodation at, 4175-4176.
- Detention, Bathing, Task, etc., see those titles.
- Inspectors of Local Government Board, Opinions of, 193, 194.
- Means of compelling Compliance with Regulations, Need for, 5572.
- Means of reducing Vagrancy—Suggestion, 4170, 5570, 11047, 11048.

Enforcement of Regulations in Casual Wards—cont.

- Means of reducing Vagrancy, etc.—cont.
- Not always resulting in Reduction of Number of Casuals—Instance, 2649, 2730, 2789-2796.
- Number of Paupers dependent, not on poverty of a district, but on its administration, 257-260.
- Reduction of Vagrancy an almost invariable result, 490-495, 497, 675.
- Refusals for want of room, Reduction of, 10486, 10487.
- Shaw-Lefevre's, Mr., Refusal to order Inquiry in 1895 on ground that Remedy was to carry out the Law, 4253-4257.
- Preference of Vagrants for Wards which are less repressive in Administration even if Accommodation bad, 1865-1866, 7571, 7572, 9688. Instance, 10938, 10939, 11024, 11025.
- Uniformity in carrying out Regulations:
 - Lack of, 7568-7571:
 - Diversity permitted by existing Regulations—Uniformity might be secured by fresh Regulations, 8523.
 - Leniency of Officials, 440-444.
 - Local Government Board Order sufficient to secure Uniformity, 705.

Enforcement of the Law

- Home Secretary's Power of remitting Sentences, 1280.
- Number of Vagrants would go down if the Law were rigidly enforced, 8706.
- Petitions from Prisoners—Very few Petitions, 1278, 1279.
- Public Opinion Difficulty—Possibility that Public Opinion might think the Poor Law too hard, 8792.
- Sleeping out—Opinion in favour of enforcing Law against, 8750.
- Summarily determined Offences under Vagrancy Act, Decrease in, while Vagrancy had increased—Inference that the Law was not enforced, 8553-8555.

Essex

- Almsgiving—Circulars discouraging, 2006.
- Proportion of Vagrancy low according to Population, 300, 516.

Exeter

- Act of 1697—Committal of Vagrants to the Poorhouse for a Maximum Period of Three Years, 29.
- Ages of Vagrants, Analysis of Statistics for a year, 272.
- Casual Ward:
 - Cells, etc., Cost per head, 612.
 - Cost of maintaining, 632-634.
- Detention of Militiamen resorting to Casual Ward on their way to training, 8541-8544.
- Stone breaking by Casuals, Profit on, 429.

Extent of Vagrancy Evil—Number of Vagrants, etc.

- Administration, Effect of—Number of Paupers in any particular District dependent not on its poverty, but on its administration and that of its next-door neighbour, 257-260, 8706.
- Agricultural Districts, Greater Number of Tramps found in, 7549-7551.
- Casual Wards, Proportion of Vagrants resorting to, 641, 1630-3, 1663, 1722-4, 1746-1753, 3136, 4450.
- Number relieved at Casual Wards on one night, 1900-1904, 10418.
- Census, Possibility of getting a fairly complete Census for the whole of England on the Northumberland Plan, 7537-7539.

Extent of Vagrancy Evil—cont.

Chief Constables of Counties.

Summary of Replies from, App., pages 61-66.

Exaggerated Ideas owing to Method of collecting Statistics—Number not so great as it looks, 197, 198, 270, 271, 1898, 4134, 4135.

Extent sufficient to justify the State in undertaking the Expense, etc., of New Institutions, e.g., Labour Colonies, 6853, 6855, 6858, 6935, 6936, 7672, 7845, 8973-8976.

Highest Years, 1895 and 1904, 253.

Number fairly constant, 1782.

Police, Number known to, 1779.

REPORT, par. 46-77.

Scavenging Tramps out of the Population not a reasonable undertaking, 8729-8737.

Statistical Tables, App., pages 19-37, 111-118.

Total Number of Tramps—Estimates and Statistics, 297, 7546, 7547-7549.

Estimate based on proportion borne by Gloucestershire to rest of England, 1775, 1776.

Inclusion of Persons in Prisons, Outhouses, Common Lodging-houses, etc., 8825-8827.

Two per 1,000—67,000 in England and Wales, 8550-8552.

Unemployed Question complicated by Vagrancy, 7502-7504.

False Information given by Tramps

Punishment suggested, 3174-3177.

Families of Vagrants

Casual Wards—Families discharged early, 2540.

Farm Labour

Demand for Trained Labour, 5189-5191, 5484, 5493.

Skill required—Farm Labour an extremely skilled occupation, 5181.

Feeble-minded and Defective Tramps

Child Vagrants—Difficulty in providing for Feeble-minded or Deficient children, 11006.

Inclusion of, in new definition of Vagrancy—suggestion, 7157.

Most hopeless cases, 8617.

Percentage of Feeble-minded persons in prisons, 9337-9339—Large proportion furnished by Tramp Class, 9340-9342.

REPORT, par. 84, 389, 390. RECOMMENDATION, par. 391.

Sentences on defective Vagrants—Lengthening out sentence for Vagrant's own good, suggestion, 8699.

Women, Compulsory Detention suggestion, 1529, 1530.

Feltham Industrial School

Percentage of Children turning out well, 5382.

Size, 4537.

Welsh Agency for placing boys and girls with Welsh Farmers, Success of, 5379-5381.

Finger-Print System of Identification.

Central authority at Scotland Yard needed for preservation of Records, suggestion, 4687, 4688, 4863.

Cost, question of, 6912-6915, 10779, 10780.

Dislike of Tramps to, 4864.

Not applied to Vagrants at present, 9476, 9477, 10638, 10639.

Number of Records at New Scotland Yard, Time required for identification, etc., 1246-1249.

Opinion in favour of applying system to Vagrants, 922, 6597, 6828, 6829, 6856, 7737, 8760-8763, 9674, 9675, 9737, 9865, 9866, 10779-80.

Question whether it was worth the trouble, system would involve remand for Inquiry, etc., 1127-1129, 9485-9488, 9544, 9545.

Finger-Print System of Identification—cont.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 224.

Restricting to men who come under Police notice as guilty of Law breaking, suggestion, 4685, 4742.

Fires caused by Persons Sleeping Out

Chiefly due to carelessness, 4091-4093.

Rates raised by Scottish Insurance Company owing to frequency of such fires, 7668.

First Offenders' Act

Effect of, in practice—No first Offenders entering Reformatory Schools, 4637.

First Offenders in Vagrancy

Length of Sentence—Eight to fourteen days suggested, 4219-4221.

Prison, Objections to, 9861, 9069-9077, 9116-9121.

Flintshire

Prosecutions for Vagrancy Offences—Number of Prosecutions and Convictions, Leniency of Magistrates, 5540.

Flogging

Incorrigible Rogue can be flogged under present Law, 10618.

Fluctuations of Vagrancy

Country—Fluctuations from 1869, 123-125.

Criminal and Poor Law Vagrancy—Comparative Statistics (1859-1903), 1076-1081.

Economic Question—Vagrancy fluctuating with State of Trade, 6748-6752, 6804.

Worst section of Unskilled Labour thrown into Vagrancy in times of bad Trade and re-absorbed as trade improved, 8819-8823.

General Pauperism and Vagrancy, Statistics not showing any close connection between, 249-252.

Quinquennial Averages of Persons charged with Begging and Sleeping out (1859-1903), 1064.

Refractory Paupers, Proportion of, does not correspond with fluctuations of total number of Vagrants relieved, 10362.

Seasonal Fluctuations, 212-219, 223, 272, 1717, 1840

Cuckfield, 2261-2263.

Sheffield, 2389.

Weekly Return, Fluctuations disclosed by, 230-1.

Wiltshire Way-ticket System, Effect of—

Decrease followed by gradual rise, 1907-1915.

see also titles Increase of Vagrancy and Decrease of Vagrancy.

Food of Vagrants

Casual Ward Dietary, see title Dietary in Casual Wards.

Food of Vagrants apart from Casual Ward Diet :

Broken Food found on Vagrants when searched, Refusal of Food offered in the Workhouse, 378-380, 2222-2226, 2758-2760.

Disposal of, App., page 80.

Mid-day Meal, Provision of, see Mid-day Meal.

Not an ill-fed Class on the Whole, 377, 3309.

REPORT, par. 87.

Throwing away or Selling Food given by Workhouse or Charitable Persons, 2116, 2221, 3301-3308, 6850.

Underfed as a Class, 2756, 2757, 2760, 4763.

Free Food Distributions :

Church Army Attitude—Objections to Free Food, 8056, 8057, 8154-8157.

Food of Vagrants—cont.Free Food Distributions—cont.

Evils of System—Encouragement to Vagrancy and Sleeping out, Attracting Tramps from Provinces, etc., 5714, 5716, 5717, 5721, 5722, 5726, 5735-5737, 5764-5766, 5906-5908, 7444-7440, 7828, 7829, 8056, 8057, 9394-5, 9400-6.—REPORT, par. 338-359.

Glasgow Corporation, Food distributed by, Class of Men fed, 6609-6612.

League of Charity—Halfpenny Dinners and Free Teas, 9607.

Mitigation of Evils of Vagrancy, and a Necessity under existing conditions, 7448-7452, 7488.

Percentage of People taking Free Food who regained position as working men practically nil, 9614, 9615.

Preventing Distribution, Difficulties in regard to, 5752-5754.

REPORT, par. 338-359—RECOMMENDATION, par. 360, 429 (28).

Restricting Free Food Distributions according to laws governing Tradespeople, suggestion, 5755.

Salvation Army give Free Food in special circumstances, 7178, 7179, 7442, 7443.

France

"Lady Protectors," Work of, for Women in Work-houses, 1506.

System of Dealing with Vagrancy, Depôts de Mendicité, etc., 8742, 8743.

Frederiksoord Labour Colony

Number of Colonists, 8862.

Settling Colonists on the Land, Acreage of Colony, etc., 5305-5310.

Free Colonies

refer to title Labour Colonies.

Free Food Distributions

see Food of Vagrants.

Free Shelters

see Shelters.

Freemasonry among Tramps

Extraordinary Knowledge of Locality and of all Possibilities of getting Assistance or Work, 7606, 7607, 8615-8617.

London Vagrants, Freemasonry among, 3348-3350.

Slightest Change in Diet, etc., would decide the Tramp whether to use the Shelter or the Casual Ward, 8618.

Friendly Societies

Number of Casuals Members of, in King's Norton Wards, 2605-2608.

Provision for Members who had to travel in search of Work, 4196, 4229.

Fruit Pickers

Arrangements for, 1718.

Classed as Vagrants, 8840.

Model Bye-laws issued by Local Government Board, App., page 178.

REPORT, par. 401, 402.

Furnished Rooms kept by Common Lodging-house keepers

Increase in Number, Comparative Cheapness and Freedom from Restrictions, 5800-5803.

General Pauperism

Able-Bodied Paupers, Increase in Number, Comparison with Increase in Number of Convictions, 10403.

General Pauperism—cont.

Distinction between Vagrant and Ordinary Pauper :

Abolition proposed—Report of House of Lords Committee in 1888, 9771-9788, 9821, 9823.

No real Distinction between status of Able-bodied Vagrant and the same Vagrant when Old or Ill, 5606-5609.

Fluctuations of—Vagrancy and General Pauperism, Statistics not showing any Close Connection, 249-252.

July and January Statistics more Accurate than in the Case of Pauper Vagrancy, 254.

Statistical Tables, 1857-1905, App., pages 33, 118.

Germany—System of Dealing with Vagrancy, App., page 127.

Almsgiving—Police Law making Almsgiving to Beggars Punishable, 3817-3820.

Begging :

Excuse for, Removed by System of Relief Stations and Labour Colonies, 3584-3586, 3746-8.

Severe Laws against, 3569, 3807-3811, 3817-3820

Casual Ward—Nothing Equivalent to English Casual Ward, 3540-3542.

Common Lodging-house, Non-existence in Germany, 3720.

Convictions in Prussia and in England, 3805-3811.

Decrease in Vagrancy under the German System, Question of, 3604-3608, 3746-3748, 3841-3865, 3903-3908.

Definition of Vagrancy in Germany, 8665.

Food supplied on the Road between Herbergen—By-stations, etc., 3563-3568.

Heimath Colonien, Establishment of, 5309.

Herbergen—Voluntary Shelters with a Religious and Anti-Socialistic Basis, 3543-3547, 3744, 3746, 3824-9, 3898-3902.

Classes of Lodgers—Three Classes, 3548, 3823.

Cost of Relief given, 3559, 3880-3884.

Discharge, Hour of, 3560-3562.

Fluctuations in Number of Guests received, 3709-3717, 3721-3723, 3845-3848.

Funds supplied by Voluntary Societies helped out by Public Funds, 3543, 3546, 3547.

Number of—Number and Classes of Lodgers received in, 1903, 3558.

One to be found in every Town of any Size 3545.

Payment for Relief given :

Power to dispense with in certain Cases, 3559, 3870.

Work required in Payment of Free Lodging, Breach of Contract a Criminal matter, 3549-3557.

Red Tape Management impossible in England, 8180-8184.

Indoor Institutions, 8685.

Labour Colonies—Voluntary Institutions carried on by Philanthropic Societies, 3609-3612, 3621-3623.

Cost per Head, 3627, 3628, 3630.

Detention :

Compulsory Power of Detention, proposed, 8749.

No Power of Detention, 3835, 3836.

Disadvantages of System as a basis for dealing with Tramps in England, 3628, 3629, 3631, 3632, 3724-3742, 3752-3761.

Discharged Prisoners admitted, 3724.

Employment of Colonists, 3620.

Founder's Explanation of Establishment of—Highways overrun with Tramps, 3702-3705.

Germany—cont.Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.

Increase in Number of Admissions, 3718-3720, 3854-3856.

Inducements to Work—Colonists allowed to earn a Reward, 3616.

Inspection, Question of, 3624, 3625, 3633, 3634

"Ins and Outs"—Number of People coming in for the Winter and Leaving in Spring, 8678.

Taking Men after Two Applications on Contract for One or Two Years, 8680, 8681.

Length of Stay—Minimum Length, etc., 3617-3620, 3729, 3730.

Loafer Population, New Type Generated by Colony System, 3728, 3732-3736.

Management, 3698, 3699.

Number of Colonies—Accommodation, 3613 3614.

Reformatory Influences, 3738-3739.

(for particular Colonies, see their names).

Maps of Roads, shewing Relief Stations, etc., every Shelter, etc., Provided with—Route entered in Workman's Travelling-book, 3579-3582.

Pass System for Travellers in Search of Work, 3521, 3522.

Objections to Introducing System in England, 5024-5027, 8778, 8779.

Papers which the German Workman desiring to Travel must carry, 3523-3539, 3580-3582, 3667-3673, 3814, 3815.

Absence of Papers rendering Wayfarer liable to arrest, 3587, 3588.

Labour-book carried by Men under Twenty-one, 3523-3537, 3812-3814, 3820, 3821.

Papers accepted in lieu of Labour Book—Army Discharge Certificate, etc., 3539.

Poor Law—Differences between German and English Poor Law, 3680-3691.

Prosecutions for Vagrancy—Summary Justice, 3589-3601.

Railway Tickets given free in some Cases, 3562.

Relief Stations and Shelters.

Classes of, in Germany, 3543-3547.

No State Shelters in Germany, 3538.

Herbergen and Verpflegungs-Stationen, see those subheadings.

REPORT, par. 168-170, 241-248.

Rogues and Vagabonds, Classes corresponding to—Section 361 of Imperial Code, 5399-3601.

Settlement, Law of—Relief of Destitute Persons without Legal Domicile, 3675-3679.

Sick Wayfarers, Provision for, 3916-3918.

Summary of System—Extract from Mr. Flynt's book, "Tramping with Tramps," 3905-3907.

Verpflegungs-Stationen, 3822-3828.

Classes of people resorting to, 3823.

Maintained by Local Authorities, Inadequate Number, etc., 3543, 3546, 3547, 3572, 3573, 3577-3579, 3700, 3701.

Wanderjahr—Not the practice in England, 3911-3914.

Workhouses :

Administration — Description of Westphalian Workhouse, etc., 3635-51.

Competition with Outside Labour, Avoidance of, 3831, 3832.

Germany—cont.Workhouses—cont.*Cost :

Cost per head, 3657-3659.

Local Funds, Cost falling on, 3574-3576.

Proportion of Expenditure covered by earnings of Inmates, 3657, 3833-4.

Dietary, 3919.

Earnings of Inmates, Small Sum given to man on discharge, Disposal of, etc., 3660-3662.

Employment of Inmates, Instruction in Trades, Value of Work, 3654-3656, 3799-3801, 3886-3888.

English Prison System, Comparison with, 3794-3798.

Habitual Tramps, Committal to Workhouse—Period of Detention, etc., 3591-3599, 3665 3666, 3693-3697, 3738-3793, 3889-3895.

Length of Sentence, Stress laid on—Maximum of Six Years proposed, 3795, 3891, 3892.

No equivalent to the English Workhouse, 3574.

Number of Workhouses in Prussia, 3602, 3603.

Number of Persons Committed—Statistics, 3602, 3652.

Number of Persons Committed more than once, 3663, 3664, 3736-7.

Gipsy Vagrants, 1050.

Berkshire, Gipsies in, 4818-4822.

Children of Gipsies.

Industrial Schools, Number of Gipsy Children in—Very Small Number, 4495.

Reclamation practically 'hopeless, 4495-4497.

Crime among—Crimes of Violence Commoner than with other Vagrants, 7560.

Hawkers' Licence usually held, 7706.

Home Office Memorandum, App., page 167.

Inclosure Act of 1899, Gipsies in process of being abolished by, 7727, 7730, 7731.

Legislation required—No means of dealing with Gipsies except through the Lord of the Manor, who might prefer to leave Gipsies alone, 8593, 8594, 8599-8601.

Northumberland, Gipsies in—very few really pure Gipsies, 7560-7561, 7726.

REPORT, par. 397-399.

Surrey Commons, Attractions for Gipsies, 8591, 8603, 8604.

Vagrancy Act intended to cover Gipsies, 8598.

Winter Arrangements—Older people went to Towns where they made part of the poor of the District and shared in what relief was going, 8601.

Glasgow

Able-bodied Destitute, Provision for.

Church Army and Established Church of Scotland, Free Shelters opened by, 6608.

English Casual Ward System would only attract more Tramps, 6472.

Free Food Distribution by Corporation, Funds taken from the "Common Good," 6609-6612.

Great Majority quite able to "Pick their lone," 6458.

Night Asylum, 6458.

Objections to, as fostering able-bodied Tramps, 6469.

Origin of, 6605.

Police, Shelter relief given by, 6460-6462, 6466. Authority—No legal Authority, 6475, 6476, 6479.

Food not given by Police, 6477, 6478.

Glasgow—cont.

Beggar, Definition of—Provisions of Glasgow Police Act of 1868, 6499.

Begging a Crime, 6487-6489.

Charity, Tramps attracted by, 6462-6465.

Common Lodging-houses, Regulation of—Improvement in Houses, Amount of Accommodation, 6600-6604.

Detention in Poorhouse—Powers of Magistrates, 6505, 6513.

Persons sent for Detention are average able-bodied Tramps, 6512.

Municipal Lodging-houses, 6601.

Number of Vagrants, 6484-6492; App., pages 91, 104.

Comparison with number in rest of Lanarkshire—Residential Vagrant Population indicated, 6927-6932.

Number applying for relief on the way between Kilmarnock and Glasgow, 6417.

Partially able-bodied destitute, admission to Poor House, 6453-6455.

Prosecutions for Begging and Vagrancy, 6485, 6492.

Comparative Statement, 1900-1905, App., page 92.

Slackness of Police and Magistrates—Poor Law Officials' Representations to Magistrates, 6485-6491.

Typical Cases, App., pages 93, 94.

Sentences, 6496, 6500, 6501.

Short sentences, number of, 6515, 6516.

Sleeping out—Stringency of measures taken against, 6499, 8138, 8139.

GloucestershireBegging:

Decrease in Begging—Statistics, 1692-1694.

Prosecutions—Statistics for 1903, 1069; 1887-1903, App., page 43.

Statistics for 1893-1903, 8576-8578.

Casual Wards:

Baths and Search System universal, 1771, 1772

Number of persons relieved in, in 1886, 1630-3.

Number of persons sleeping in, in 1885 and 1904—Statistics, 1663, 1746-1753, App., page 40; 1894-1904, App., page 43.

Trades of Persons in, Analysis of (1904), App., page 41.

Common Lodging-houses:

Number of Persons in—Statistics for 1885 and 1904, 1745-1751, 1754, App., page 41; 1894-1904, App., page 43.

Overflow Tramps sent to Lodging-houses without food, 1728-1730.

Trades of Persons in Common Lodging-houses, Analysis of (1904), App., page 42.

Crime among Vagrants, Increase in number of convictions, etc., 1695-1698; Statistics, 1887-1903, App., page 43.

Number of Vagrants:

Census of Tramps, 1631, 1716, 1760-1764.

Increase in Vagrancy, Causes of, etc., 1571, 1573, 1664, 1767-1770, 4280-4283.

Statistics:

1883-1902—Persons sleeping in Casual Wards and Common Lodging-houses on a night in April, 297.

1883-1904, App., page 43.

1885 and 1904—Number of Persons sleeping in Casual Wards, 1663, 1753.

1886—Statistics of Relief given, 1630-1633.

1904—Persons sleeping in Casual Wards and Common Lodging-houses, App., pages 40-42.

Gloucestershire—cont.

Pea-pickers—Absence of Arrangements for, 1718-1721.

Police Co-operation in dealing with Vagrants:

Assistant Relieving Officer invariably a Policeman, 4290.

Police knowledge of Vagrant class, Effect of Census in promoting, 1765.

Sleeping out Statistics:

1893-1903, 8576-8578.

1904—January 1st to September 30th, 1759.

Prosecutions—Statistics for 1903, 1069.

Suppression of Vagrancy, Success of, 516.

Vagrancy Committee, 1547-1551.

Constitution of, 4464.

Report for 1905, App., page 44.

Gmünden—Labour Farm of Canton of Appenzell.

Employment of Colonists—Nurserymen's work, 8407.

Escapes—Very few escape, 8417.

Hours of work—Eleven in Winter, twelve in Summer, 8414.

Self-supporting—Colony just paid its expenses in 1903, no interest on investment, 8403-8405.

Size—100 Acres, 8406.

Term of Detention—Council give a year, Magistrates only two months, 8415.

Gross Salze Workhouse

Cost per head, Earnings of Inmates, 3834.

Guardian of the Poor

Authority for Control of Vagrancy, Guardians as.

Failure of Guardians under existing system, 7934.

Uniformity impossible under 648 Boards of Guardians, 5406-5410, 6218, 8705.

Feeling of Guardians in regard to Vagrants—Glad to get rid of them, 852, 9013, 9014, 10445, 10530-10536, 10541-10545.

Opinion of Guardians in favour of Police Control of Vagrancy, 8794, 8795.

Joint Committee of Guardians suggested, 4358, 10523-10529, 10570.

Costly machinery, 9801.

London, 10459-10463.

Joint Committee of Guardians and Members of Standing Joint Committee, opinions in favour of, 7742.

Guardians could not be eliminated while cost came from the Rates, 7743-7745.

Joint Committees of Watch Committee and Guardians—opinion in favour of, 7995-7997, 8792, 8793.

Leaving administration with Local Guardians, 5572, 5578, 5588.

Magistrates acting in Agreement with Boards of Guardians and Police—Charity Organisation Society Committee Recommendation, 8641.

Withdrawing control from Guardians suggested, 1867, 1876, 1884, 1886, 1939, 1940, 2298-2304, 4623, 5399, 5411.

Not a suitable authority to commit to Labour Colonies, 8963, 8964.

Way Tickets—Granting by Poor Law Authority suggested, 9836.

Habitual Offenders (Scotland)

Cameron's, Sir C., Committee—Recommendations.

Able-bodied Destitute—Empowering Police to give Temporary Relief and exact an equivalent in Labour, 508, 6840-6843.

Begging—Extending Application of Burgh Police Act throughout Scotland, 6783, 6840.

Habitual Vagrants

- Control, not relief needed, 5412, 5413.
- Getting control of Vagrant without making him a criminal—suggestion, 5364, 5368.
- Definition suggested :
- Given number of admissions to the Casual Ward within a specified period should render a man liable to conviction as an habitual pauper, 9860.
- Something analogous to what is meant by In-corrigible Rogue in the Vagrancy Act, 10614-10616, 10643-10646.
- Isolation of, suggested, 6982, 6983.
- Life of—Aimless existence without attempt to work, 9594-9596.
- Opinion in favour of creating by law a class of Habitual Vagrants, 9679.
- Penal Law, Transference to—Suggestion, 3516-3518, 4762.
- Habit of life to constitute offence—Suggestion, 4140-7.
- Wrong system to treat the Tramp as an offender until he had broken the Law, 4685, 4776-4779.
- Penal Workhouses, Committal to—Suggestion, 3774, 3778, 3785, 3786, 3876-3879, 3885-3888, 3989-4017, 4140-4147.
- Prison, Years passed in, 10682-10684.
- Proportion of Vagrants who would not do work if they could help it, see title Labour in Relation to Vagrancy—Honest Wayfarers and Habitual Vagrants.
- Reformation, Question of.
- Casual Ward taint ineradicable, 3434.
- No hope of reformation under present conditions, 7844.
- REPORT, par. 82, 83; RECOMMENDATION, par. 220-223.
- Severe régime desirable, 2909.
- Severe treatment possible only when provision should be made for cases deserving of Assistance, 6808-6810.
- Sheffield, Method of treatment of "Loafer" at, 2431.
- Workhouses :
- Admission to Workhouse itself, question of—Practice at Sheffield, 2407.
- Compelling to enter Workhouse—Suggestion, 2523-2526.
- see also* Able-bodied Vagrants, Casual Ward Class, In-corrigible Rogues, Unemployables.

Hackney Casual Wards

- New Wards, Opening three years ago, 3401, 10129.
- Cost of construction—Excessive Cost, Causes, etc., 8485, 8486, 9942-9959, 10007, 10079-10086.
- Old Casual Wards, Question of, 10002-10006.

Hadleigh Salvation Army Labour Colony, 566.

- Accounts, 7362-7398, App., pages 133, 134.
- Admission, Conditions of.
- "Able-bodied" construed to mean "willing to work," 6169.
- Age no bar, 6172, 6173.
- Prison mark no bar, 6169.
- Only very extreme cases would be refused, 6180.
- Willingness to work, Means of ascertaining, 7078-7081.
- Age of Colony—About 14 years, 6181.
- Ages of Colonists, App., page 129.
- Arrangements which could be made to take men at once on commitment by magistrates.
- Capital expenditure Question, 6986, 6990.

Hadleigh Salvation Army Labour Colony—cont.Arrangements—cont.

- Certifying Hadleigh as a place of detention subject to Home Office inspection, etc.—Opinion in favour of, 10293-10295.
- Leigh Park Farm, Licensing and subjecting to Government Inspection, suggestion, 6987, 7014.
- Supervision—Stricter supervision than at present would be needed, 7000.
- Brickworks, Cost of, 7394.
- Broadmoor, Compulsorily detained men from, 6991.
- Buildings :
- Cost of, 7392-7395.
- Quite satisfactory, but could not be erected under present Bye-laws, 6367-6376, 6381, 6382.
- Casual Ward Vagrants—Lowest type received, not many taken, 7044-7048, 7089.
- City Colonies and Shelters, as feeders for Hadleigh, 7041-7043, 7414-7419.
- Men sent to City Colonies from Hadleigh, 7041-7043.
- Reasons for taking men from City Colonies rather than directly off the roads, 7085-7087.
- Class of men received, App., pages 129, 130.
- Classification, Methods of, 6177, 6178.
- Clothing supplied to Colonists, 6364-6366.
- Competition with local producers, etc., complaints.
- Colony Produce sold at rather more than Market Price, 7270-7276.
- Not Serious owing to exceptional circumstances, 6386, 6387, 6395-6398.
- Underselling small Shops, charge against Colony—Charge unfounded, 7268, 7269.
- Cost of Colony, 6342-6349, App., pages 132, 133, 134.
- Disadvantages under which such a Colony was run, 588, 589.
- Interest on capital expenditure, 7403.
- Working expenses, 7365-7374, 7376.
- Loss per man per year, 7384, 7403.
- Daily Telegraph* Fund men, 7302.
- Dietary, App., pages 131, 132.
- Discharged Colonists :
- Fare paid to a place—Rule of the Colony, 7453.
- Dormitories, Four rows of Beds in—No objection, 9991, 9992.
- Emigration of Colonists :
- Advantages of Salvation Army Organisation, 6161-6163.
- Extent to which Emigrants are kept in view, 6308-6310.
- New Zealand, Case of man Emigrating to, 7354, 7355.
- Percentage emigrated not large—Probably 150 out of 2,000, 6164, 6165.
- Employment of Colonists, nature of, etc., 6144, App., page 134.
- Better-class Colonists, Employment in market garden—Work done by the "Gentlemen's Brigade," 7266.
- Chair making industry a failure, 7008.
- Giving a man work at which he was certain to be able to maintain himself, 7472-7474.
- Industrial as well as agricultural employment—Trades taught, etc., 6144-6153, 6339.
- Physical ability of Colonists, taking into consideration, 6143, 7230-7232.
- Value of Colonists' labour, Question of, 7351-7354.

Hadleigh Salvation Army Labour Colony—cont.Employment of Colonists—cont.

Winter, Arrangements needed to provide sufficient work, 7482-7485.

Families :

Accommodation for, etc., 7336.

Colonists' readiness to contribute towards furnishing a home, 7326-7333.

Length of time that families usually stayed in the Colony, 7334.

Farm Implements, Machinery, etc., Cost of, 7395.

Furniture and Fittings, Cost of, 7396.

Hours of Work less in Winter, 7478-7480.

Inducements to work :Earnings of Colonists :

Amounts earned—Interest given on sums deposited with Colony, 7277-7279.

Payment partly in Tokens, partly in Money, 7219-7223.

Wages difficulty, 5371, 5373, 5374.

Food—Minimum given, Additions could be purchased out of earnings, 7212-7218.

Grading, System of, Facilities for a man to rise in status, 2294, 2295, 10216, 10217.

Promotion, Possibilities for Colonists, 7208-7211, 7309-7314.

Dependent on Qualification, not Creed, 6173.

Inebriate Home :

Inspection by Home Office Inspector, 7350.

Maintenance and Expenses, 7369, 7371, 7372.

Payments for inmates up to 30s. a week, 7289-7292.

Separation from rest of Colony—Inmates allowed to work on Colony by Arrangement, 7347 7348.

Land :

Amount per Colonist, 7380, 7381.

Appreciation in Value—not brought into account, 7378, 7398-7401.

Cost, Original Cost, 7389-7392.

Leaving without notice, Percentage of Cases, 6361-6363.

Limit of Development not yet reached, 7195, 7201, 7202.

Possibilities when limit should be reached, 7203.

Mansion House Fund, Men sent by :

Admissions restricted over a certain period to make room for Mansion House Fund men, 7316, 7317.

Demoralising Influence—Frequenting public-houses, etc., 7305-7308, 7318-7321.

Not counted as Admissions to Colony, 7359, 7360.

Not very satisfactory workers, knowing that they were paid for, 7301-7304.

Reason why men were taken in spite of their demoralising influence, 7322.

Weekly payments of 10s. for each man, 7300, 7323.

Medical Attendance, 7015, 7016, 7229.

Non-paying Colonists, Proportion of, 7298.

Number of Colonists, 6139.

Average number, 7357-7360.

Full number—400 men and ten or twelve families, 7267.

Paying Colonists :

Broadmoor men, Payments for, 6992-6994.

Daily Telegraph Fund men, 7302.

Hadleigh Salvation Army Labour Colony—cont.

Police visits discouraged—When an arrest has to be made man is taken to Police Head Office and arrested there, 7284-7287.

Probation, Length of, needed to show if it were worth while to keep a man, 7083, 7084.

Re-admissions, Percentage of, 7236.

Receiving Colony at Leigh Park :

Accommodation, 7257-7259.

Admissions included in Return, 7234, 7235.

Suspension of Work due to coming of Mansion House Fund men, 7233.

Refusal to work—Procedure :

Man discharged himself, being induced by reduction in ability to purchase food, 7225-7227.

Physical Inability, Medical Examination in Case of plea of, 7228.

Religious Services—Attendance at a public place of Worship once on a Sunday compulsory, anything else voluntary, 7017-7023, 7265.

REPORT, par. 263-267.

Results obtained—Careers of Ex-colonists, etc., App., pages 129, 130, 131.

Difficulty in ascertaining Effect of Training on subsequent career,—no Records kept, 593, 6176, 6295-6311, 7106, 7112, 7356.

Emigrated Colonists, Extent to which Colonists were kept in view, 6308-6310.

Percentage of Cases of which there was no record, 7361.

Value of Record not sufficient to justify its cost, 6300, 6311.

Women much easier to trace than men. 6311.

Failures, Percentage of, 6304.

Sent back to where they came from, Rule of the Colony, 7281-7283.

Successes, Percentage claimed, etc. :

Case of a man refusing to maintain himself even by bird-scaring, etc. ; 6154-6162, 6173-6176, 6332-6335.

Method of reckoning, Classes considered satisfactory, 7103-7124.

Misleading method of reckoning successes, 8803, 10585.

Results excellent while the men were there, mistake made of claiming success in majority of Cases, 10585.

Woolwich Union, detailed return of men sent to Hadleigh, 7062-7076, App., page 138.

Scope of Work, 6176, 6180.

Staff of Permanent Officials, 6140, 6141. 7206, 7337-7345.

Promoted Colonists—Important element in Administration, 7208-7211, 7313, 7314.

Vagrant Colony, Use as—Hadleigh was not a Vagrant Colony, 6349, 6350.

No power to send Vagrants under existing law. 9825-9830.

Not suitable for reception of Vagrants as at present organised, but the kind of thing needed would be like Hadleigh on a larger scale and with power of detention, 7967-7970, 7974.

Valuation of stock and market gardens, 7362-7364, App., pages 133, 134.

Agricultural Produce including market garden produce, Value of, 7346, App., page 134.

Voluntary Colony, 5942, 6132.

Wharf, tramway and railways, Cost of, 7393.

Hadleigh Salvation Army Labour Colony—cont.

— 'Workhouse men paid for by Guardians,' 6996, 6998, 7383.

Conditions of Admission—Guardians must agree to prosecute in case of failure to maintain 7057-7060.

Guardians giving up sending men to Hadleigh—Explanation, 7053-7057.

Number of Boards of Guardians sending men, 7049-7052.

Number received, 1902-3 and 1903-4, 6997.

Percentage that could be comfortably absorbed by Colony system, 7259-7296.

Poorest type received, 7076.

Relief of Guardians as soon as men were earning what they cost, 6998, 6999.

Total payments for last year, 7297.

Hampshire Way-ticket System

Origin and History, etc., 4876, 4882, 4921.

Hawkers, See Pedlars and Hawkercs.

"Helpable" Cases

"Helpable" a better word than "deserving"—Sense in which "helpable" was used by London Mendicity Society, 11081, 11086, 11087.

Herdern Voluntary Labour Colony

Cost of, Number of Colonists, Failure to Exercise any reformatory Influence, etc., 8434.

Hereford Workhouse

Detention—One Night only, 4177.

Inadequate Accommodation for Casuals, Lack of Deterrents, Lack of Facilities for carrying out Local Government Board Instructions, 1008-1021.

Increase in Number of Vagrants—Statistics, 1005, 4178.

Causes of—Lack of Deterrents, etc., 1008-1021.

Herefordshire

Begging and Sleeping out Prosecutions—Statistics for 1903, 1069.

Increase in Vagrancy :

Causes of—Laxity in enforcing Regulations, Inadequate Accommodation, etc., 4192-4196, 4232-4240, 4243-4250, 4329.

Statistics, 998-1006.

Mendicity Society, 4191, 4192, 4258-4260—Report, for 1904, App., page 48.

REPORT, par. 165.

Percentage of Tramps honestly in search of Employment, 997.

Refusal of Relief—Two Refusals out of 6,000 Applicants, 4247.

History of Vagrancy

Law and its Administration, History of, 6-196.

Chronological List of Statutes, App., pages 1-4.

Summary—REPORT, par. 7-45, 257-260.

Holborn Casual Ward

Refusals for want of Room, Reduction of, on change from Associated Ward to Cell System, 10486.

Holborn Division of Metropolitan Police

Area of District, 9372-9374, 9420-9424.

Census of Vagrants, 9396-9399.

Police Magistrates' Courts to which charges are sent, 9434, 9435.

Holland—Labour Colony System

Beggar Colonies :

Beggars' Liability to be sent to Colony on Second Offence, 8884.

Class of Men taken really Vagrant Class, 8872.

Committal by Magistrates, 8883, 8884.

Discipline—Punishments in Use, 8886-8889.

No deterrent Force—Inmates returned again and again, 8890.

Self-supporting Question—Colony not Self-supporting, 8860.

State, Colonies taken over by, on Account of Financial Difficulties, 8872-8879.

Term of Detention, 8882.

Date of Origin, 1816, 8860, 8946.

Free Colonies :

Class of People Taken not beggars or Tramps at all, but Destitute People who Settled in the Colony for good, 8861-8865.

Number of Colonies—Three were practically one, 8869, 8870.

Number of Families Received Yearly, 8861, 8865.

Population of Colonies—Decrease since 1827, 8867.

Reduction in Begging due to Colony System, 9022.

Reformatory Influence—Conditions Excluding all Likelihood of Reform, 8957.

REPORT, par. 228-230, 273.

Two Classes of Colony since 1850, Free Colonies and Beggar Colonies, 8861.

Hollesley Bay Labour Colony

REPORT, par. 270.

Home Office

Annual Report on Vagrancy—Suggestion 8591, 8605, 8606.

Control of Labour Colonies, see Labour Colonies.

Offences Summarily Determined under the Vagrancy Act, Stricter Supervision by Home Office, Suggestion, 8605.

Position in Regard to Vagrancy—Institutions under Home Office Control largely filled with Vagrants, 1061.

Home Secretary

Power of Remitting Sentences, 1280.

Homeless Poor Association

Absorption by the Church Army, 8128, 8204-8207.

Honest Wayfarer distinguished from the Professional Tramp

Alternative to Tramping was the Workhouse, which provided only a choice of Evils, 8838, 8839.

Casual Wards :

Comparison with Common Lodging-houses as Accommodation for Honest Wayfarers, 2097-2100, 2105.

Honest Wayfarers resorting to, 2136.

Clothes, State of, Preventing Employment, 644, 645.

Cost of Dealing with, Leaving as Local Charge—Suggestion, 2700.

Definition, 1881, 1889.

Differential Treatment Suggested, 984, 3515-9, 3937, 3945-3947, 4103.

Circular of 1837—Wayfarers relieved by Relieving Officer, Professional Beggars dealt with by Police, 30.

Circular of 1848, 46-49—Text of Circular, App., page 15.

Honest Wayfarer distinguished from the Professional Tramp—cont.Differential Treatment—cont.

Relaxation of Casual Ward Discipline in favour of, suggested—Independence of Honest Wayfarer often got him into trouble, 2909–2912.

REPORT, par. 80.

Reserving Casual Wards for bona fide travellers and handing over Vagrants to Police, suggestion, 70, 4190, 4222.

Distinguishing, Means of, 2392–2394.

Facilities granted to Honest Wayfarers, 2089, 2090, 2390, 2391, 2416, 2713–2716, 5514, 5520–5523.

Forwarding quickly to places where work was obtainable, action on Trades Union lines—Suggestion, 3179–3182.

Good class of Working-men were not usually obliged to go to the Casual Ward except in seasons of exceptional depression, 641.

Labour Bureaux and Rest Stations in connection with Labour Colonies—Suggestion, 5252–5257, 5316.

Labour Colonies for, Suggestions, 2130, 5258, 5316.

Loss of Strength on continued Casual Ward Diet, and consequent liability to fall into tramp habit, question of, 2365, 2366.

Police Management of Vagrancy Administration:

Objections to bringing under Police men who had committed no offence, 4685, 4773–4779.

Police as Relieving Officers for the necessitous Poor—Recommendation of Departmental Committee dealing with Vagrants in Scotland, 508.

Possible Objections of honest Wayfarers to, 4075, 4076, 10567.

REPORT, par. 126.

Proportion of Casuals who were honestly in search of work, see Labour in Relation to Vagrancy.

Railway Fare, giving in certain Cases—Suggestion, 4138.

Objections to Scheme, 4274, 4360–4369.

Relief Stations in Workhouses, Provision of, suggested, 5252–5257, 5312, 5316.

Smallpox communicated by, 3182–3186.

Unthrifty as a class, 2683, 4365–4367.

Way-ticket System for, see title Way-ticket Systems.

Hop-picking

Breakdown of the Vagrancy System in Kent—Mr. Wodehouse's Report of 1871, 100, 101.

Classing Hop-pickers as Vagrants, 8840.

Herefordshire Hop-picking Season.

Legal Remedy not put in force, 4182–4184.

Number of Tramps infesting country side and swamping workhouses in hop-picking season, 4175, 4179, 4180, 4181, 4232–4240.

System adopted by large growers, 997.

Model Bye-laws issued by Local Government Board App., page 178.

Professional Vagrants using hop-picking as excuse for Vagrancy, 997.

REPORT, par. 401, 402.

Stafford, Enormous Number of Tramps passing through, on their way to hop-picking, 10938, 10939, 11024, 11025.

Women and Children Vagrants, Proportion larger during hop-picking, 289–292.

House of Lords Committee, 1888.

Detention of Casual Paupers, Recommendation as to, 507.

Distinction between Casual and Ordinary Pauper, Recommendation in favour of Retention of, 9787.

Houses let in Lodgings

Furnished Rooms kept by Common Lodging-house keepers—Comparative freedom from restrictions, 5800–5803.

Huntingdonshire

Begging and sleeping out, Statistics for 1893–1903—Figures extremely low, 8578–8581.

Identification of Tramps

Admission Books containing Columns for Personal description, 144.

Country—No identification system, 131, 427, 428.

Difficulty of identifying Casuals, 4881, 4882.

Difficulty more apparent than real, 917–921.

Finger-Print System, see that title.

Importance of, in relation to any attempt to deal remedially with Vagrancy, e.g., Labour Colonies, 8632.

Measurements, Registration of, etc., suggestion, 922.
Measurements given up, 1250.

Methods of, 9489.

Object of Identification to ensure Detention, 10443.

Shelters, Identification of persons resorting to, Suggestion, 8624–8626, 8632.

Uniformity of Administration dependent on completeness of dossier of the Vagrant, 8759.

Way-ticket System:

Advantages as Means of Identification, 4668–4671, 4730, 4735–4739, 5355–5358, 10636, 10637.

Difficulties in the way, an old hand might very well use it to have a continuous Walking tour, 8933–8937.

Identification necessary to working of, 4026–4030, 4098–4100, 4129–4132.

Illness of Tramps, see Sick TrampsInclosure Act of 1899

Gipsies in process of being abolished by the Act, 7727, 7730, 7731.

Incorrigible Rogues

Able-bodied Men, Percentage of, among those charged as Incorrigible Rogues, 10724, 10725.

Definition of, under the Vagrancy Act, 10622, 10646, 10772.

Detention for some considerable period in a Penal Workhouse or Labour Colony proposed, 10614–10616, 10621, 10651, 10726.

Seven Years in a Labour Colony instead of twelve months' Imprisonment suggested, 10251–10254.

Disposal of, between Conviction by Magistrates and Appearance at Quarter Sessions, 10672–10677.

Flogging—Rarity of Sentence, 1245, 10618.

Grounds of Conviction.

Desertion of Wife and Children and Neglect to maintain, 1240–1245.

Lincolnshire—Offences for which Incorrigible Rogue is sent to Quarter Sessions, 10246–10249, 10306, 10307.

Probably repeated Begging or Sleeping out, 9196–9199.

Magistrates:

Settling the Point as to whether the Prisoner is an Incorrigible Rogue, 10773–10776.

Unwillingness to convict as Incorrigible Rogues, 7760, 7761, 7892–7895.

Explanation—Magistrates' feeling that a few days' imprisonment is enough for begging, 7896.

Incorrigible Rogues—cont.

Number of Cases, 1238, 1239, 1243.

Increase in number of Cases if Labour Colonies existed to which they could be sent, 10739–10743.

Increased number of Convictions in London, Cause of—Greater Pressure by Police and Poor Law Authorities, 9274–9280.

Number of Cases dealt with by Quarter Sessions, in London and the Country, 9195.

Percentage among ordinary London Vagrants, 10617, 10686.

Remains about the same, 10649.

REPORT, par. 217–220. RECOMMENDATION, par. 221–223.

Treatment of, under the Present Law, 1234–7, 10248–51, 10618–20.

Unidentified Vagrants dealt with as First Offenders when they were really qualified as Incorrigible Rogues, 10727.

Increase of Vagrancy

Causes of, see title Causes of Vagrancy.

Country, 1878–80—Increase attributed to Trade Depression and severe weather, 133–135.

Existing Conditions—Continuous Increase, 9819.

REPORT, par. 75–77.

Statistics, 998–1006.

Home Office Statistics showed increase since 1889, 10356–10360.

Number of people sleeping in Casual Wards in 1885 and 1904, 1663.

Weekly Return disclosing extraordinary rise in Vagrancy in 1904, 231–236.

Summary of Replies from Chief Constables, App., pages 61–66.

Industrial Training for Casuals

Existing System—Shortness of period of Detention makes Instruction impossible, 484.

Industrial and Reformatory School System—Remedy for Child Vagrancy, 1061.

Accommodation in Industrial Schools, Number of Admissions, etc., 1145.

Spare Accommodation due to change in local machinery wrought by Education Act of 1902, 4482, 4483.

Age of Admission to Industrial Schools, 4524.

Age below which no child should be sent, 5934, 6072 — Dr. Barnardo's Experience, 6074, 6096–6100.

Infants, Number of, admitted to Industrial Schools, 4524, 4525.

Committed Cases—Tramp Children sent by Magistrates to Industrial Schools, 2257–2259, 9558, 9559.

Practically all Vagrant Children committed, 4480.

Unwillingness of Magistrates to commit Children, 4588.

Competition with Outside Labour Question, 4643.

Labour supplied to neighbouring Farmers, Shops for repairing Agricultural Machinery, etc., 4511–4513.

Current Rate of Wages paid to School, no Complaints of Labour being displaced, 4629–4632.

Control and Management:

Government Control Ineffective, 4568, 4570, 4571.

Local Authorities, Schools under, 4559.

Means of making Local Authorities' Control effective, 4567–4569.

Industrial and Reformatory School System—cont.

Control and Management—cont.

Voluntary Management:

Economy of, 4562.

Majority of Industrial Schools and all Reformatory Schools managed by Voluntary Committees, 4561.

Opinion in favour of—Importance of Utilising Voluntary Workers, etc., 4565, 4573.

Cost—Supply of Funds, etc.:

Amount recovered from Parents in 1904, 4526.

Industrial Schools:

Cost per head, 4527.

Government Grant, Amount of—Balance found mainly from Rates, 4535, 4536.

“Monstrously Expensive,” 5993–5995.

London Authorities' Schools, Cost of, 4527–4530, 4563, 4564, 4633, 4634.

Management, Cost in Relation to—Voluntary Management the most Economical, 4562.

Reformatory Schools, Financial Success of, 4510.

Size, Effect of—Cost mounting after a certain Size, 4540, 4541.

County Councils, Powers and Duties of, under Education Act of 1902—Home Office Circular, App., page 186.

Defects of System:

Home Influences, “Mothering,” etc., Lack of—System quite unsuited for Young Children, 5930–5934, 6062–6070, 6072–6074.

Inefficient Industrial Training, 6008–6014.

State Children's Association's Objections to System, 6093.

Escape Question:

Aiding and Abetting Escape an Offence, 4625.

Disappearance of Tendency to Abscond due to Introduction of Athletics, Physical Drill, etc., 4551, 4552, 4554.

Precautions against—If a Boy wants to bolt, he can, 4551, 4555–4558.

First Offenders Act, Effect of, in Practice—No First Offenders entering Reformatory Schools, 4637.

Gipsy Children—Very Small Number of, Reclamation practically hopeless, 4495–4497.

Industrial Schools Act, 1866, Application to Child Vagrants—Interpretation of “Proper Guardianship” in Section 14, etc., 1144, 1149, 1166, 2953, 10744–10750, App., pages 179, 180, 183.

Advantages of the Act over the Poor Law for dealing with vagrant children, 4621, 4622, 4624. App., page 180.

Parents' Power of Interference much Less in Industrial School than in Workhouse, 4625–4628.

Begging by Parents—Parent Begging held not to be Proper Guardian, 4601–4605.

Bow Street—Chief Magistrate's Opinion, 1144, 1169, 1170, 2953, 4578.

Home Office Notice to Magistrates—Suggestion, 1173.

Ruling never Questioned in a Court of Law, 1171, 1172.

Berkshire, Action taken under the Act, 4845.

Difference of Opinion as to Construction of Section 14, etc., 4575–4577.

Dove Wilson's, Professor, View, 4579.

Education Act of 1902 causing lull in working of Industrial Schools Act, 4482, 4483.

Inadequacy of Act alleged, 2278–2281, 2936–2939, 2941–2944, 2954.

Industrial and Reformatory School System—cont.Industrial Schools Act, etc.—cont.*Inadequacy of Act alleged—cont.

Amendment definitely making Section 14 apply to Children of Habitual Vagrants, Suggestion, 4585, 4586, 4599, 4600.

Enforcement of Law needed rather than Amendment, 1150–1154, 11055.

Punishment of Parents, Non-Provision for—Tramping with Children not held to be Cruelty, 1155–1161, 2955, 2956.

Youthful Offenders Act, Remedy supplied by, 4592.

Maintenance, Provision for, made by the Act, 10967–10981

N.S.P.C.C. Applications under Act—Cost of Maintenance charged to Society, 10965–10967, 10972–10981, 10989–10991.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 416–420, 429 (36).

Inspection—Schools suffering from Over-Inspection, 4566, 4567.

Machinery, Introduction of—Fascination for Boys, 4554.

Number of Children in Industrial and Reformatory Schools.

Total Number of Children in Industrial and Reformatory Schools in England, 4521, 4522.

Vagrant Children, Number of, in Schools—Proportion of total Number of Children, 4467, 4468, 4498, 4502, 4505–4509, App., pages 180, 182–185.

Opinion in favour of Industrial Schools as best means of dealing with Vagrant Children, 4499–4501, 4542–4547, 5377–5383, 7993.

Parents' anxiety to recover their Children, 4488–4490, 4611–4618, 5378.

Poor Law Schools preferable for Child Vagrants, 2949.

Productive Industries in Reformatory Schools, 4638–4641, 4643.

Results of System—After-Career of Inmates, App., pages 181–183.

Army, Boys entering—Number of Old Soldiers in Casual Wards, 6004–6007, 6012, 6013.

Drifting back to old Haunts and Habits—Number of Boys drifting back, 5997–6003.

Official Returns satisfactory, 5996.

Vagrant Children turning out surprisingly well, Careers followed, etc., 4476–4479, 4485–4494.

Satisfactory Working of Reformatory School System in West Riding, 964.

Size—Disadvantages of very small or very large Schools, Absolute Maximum suggested, 4537–4541.

Inebriate Reformatory System—Inebriates Act, etc.

Conditions of Committal to Reformatory, 1233—Committal in same way as if to Prison, 1222.

Experimental System—Classes of People admitted, Variety of Types of Institutions, etc., 1198–1203.

Magistrates availing themselves of Powers under the Act, 7898, 7899.

State Subvention of so much a Head, 1204, 1205.

System as Model for Labour Colonies, see Labour Colonies.

Vagrants in, 1061.

Infectious Disease, Spread of, by Tramps, 6599.

Bath as means of detecting Disease, see title Baths.

Cab Touts and Cab Runners, Risk of Infection from, 11110–11112.

Casual Ward System—Extent to which System is a preventive, 3200, 3204.

Isolation, Inadequate Provision for, 3059, 3060

Infectious Disease, etc.—cont.

Common Lodging-houses, Infection spread by Tramps in, 2960.

Adoption of Model Bye-laws and Constant Inspection, suggestion, 3204, 3205.

Better Class constant Lodgers, Danger to, from Tramps, 3225–3227.

Difficulty of Diagnosing—Diseases escaping Recognition, 3118.

Eczema, Prevalence among Vagrants at Sheffield, 2408.

Influenza spread by Tramps—Not a notifiable Disease, 3119.

Itch—Infection spread by Baths and Beds, 3120–1.

Local Authorities, Conference of, held at County Hall, Spring Gardens, 1904—Resolutions adopted, App., page 164.

Peripatetic Musicians, etc., Disease spread by, 3185.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 368–377, 429 (29, 30.)

Smallpox, see that title.

Vermin, Possibility of Conveyance of Disease by, 5699, 5865–5867.

Influenza

Probably spread by Tramps—Disease not notifiable, 3119.

"Ins and Outs"

Army Pensioners and Army Reservists, Large Number in and out of St. George's, Hanover Square, Workhouse, 8653.

Detention of London "Ins and Outs" in a Workhouse, suggestion, 8805, 8807.

Distinct from Vagrant Class, 4431, 4432.

Inclusion in Definition of Vagrant, suggestion, 7153.

Labour Colony Treatment far better than Workhouse Treatment, suggestion, 8394, 8395.

Legislation needed, 6651–6661, 6688, 6689.

Lower Section of the Unemployed largely "Ins and outs," 8804, 8805, 8808.

Soup Kitchens, Encouragement by, 8620.

Inspector of Poor, Scotland

Functions of, 6402, 6404, 6410, 6455.

Inspectors of the Local Government Board

Co-operation between Workhouse Authorities and N.S.P.C.C., promoted by, 11002.

Opinions asked in 1903 as to how far Regulations were enforced, 193, 194.

Reports to the Poor Law Board in 1866, 60–65, 70–73.

Suggestions to the Local Government Board as to the Treatment of Vagrancy, 517, 518.

Insurance against Unemployment

Suggestion, 5315.

Ireland

System of dealing with Vagrancy—REPORT, par. 153.

Memorandum by Local Government Board for Ireland, App., pages 85–89.

Itch

Infection spread by Baths and Beds, 3120, 3121.

Kent

Bread System introduced—Capt. Sterne's Report (1872), 2006.

Hop-picking—Mr. Wodehouse's Report in 1871, 100, 101.

Proportion of Vagrancy high according to population, 300.

Kind of Relief to be given

Such as only the really destitute will accept—Recommendation of Poor Law Commissioners in 1834, 23.

King's Norton Union

- Accommodation in Casual Wards—New Wards erected in 1878 and 1899, etc., 2588-2593, 2596, 2597—Cost of, 2729.
- Ages of Casuals, 2605.
- Bathing—Fresh water for each vagrant, etc., 2803-2804.
- Bedding in Casual Ward—Hammocks, 2842.
- Children—Communicating with Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children in regard to, 2817, 2818.
- Classes of Vagrants—Labourers, Artisans, etc., 2604, 2608.
- Friendly Societies, Trades Unions, etc., Number of Tramps Members of, 2605-2608.
- Information derived from tramps themselves, 2726-2739.
- Length of time men had been on the road, 2610.
- Number who had learned a trade, 2608.
- Comparison of Casual Wards with Prison, 2630-2633.
- Cost of Casual Relief—Cost making it difficult to introduce best system, etc., 2727.
- Detention:
- Four Nights—Not many cases, tramps taking care not to come within the prescribed limit very often, 2674-2676.
- Two Night System, 2712, 2717.
- Diet:
- Gruel—No complaints that gruel was sour, 2860.
- Same as for short-time prisoner, 2630.
- Slight Improvement in—Possible cause of Increase in Number of Vagrants, 2601-2650, 2794, 2822, 2823.
- General Pauperism, Decrease in—Lower than ratio in whole of the country, 2784-2786.
- Honest Wayfarers, Facilities granted to, at Master's Discretion, 2713-2716.
- Itch, Case of, 2625, 2834.
- Labour Information—No regular System, 2616-2619.
- Number of Casuals, Increase in—Statistics, 2594, 2595, 2599, 2749, 2793-2802.
- Causes, 2601, 2650, 2794, 2822, 2823.
- Increase not due to any slackness in administration, 2649, 2730, 2789-2792.
- Nightly average, 2595.
- Shelters in the neighbourhood not accounting for Increase, 2843.
- Women and Children, No Increase in, corresponding to increase of men casuals, 2797, 2798.
- Police as Assistant Relieving Officers—Worcestershire Chief Constable refusing permission for Police to act, 2765.
- Police Visits to Casual Ward to pick up persons "wanted," 2763-2765, 2813-2816.
- Population, Rateable Value, etc., 2585-2587.
- Refusal to work, 2755.
- Medical Examination in all cases, 2826-2828, 2853.
- Number found to be unfit upon examination, 2854-2856.
- Prosecutions, Number of, 2742, 2752, 2852.
- Seeking for Work—Mainly a Pretence, 2611-2615.
- Sick Tramps—Average Admission to Infirmary, Treatment, etc., 2835-2837.
- Smallpox introduced by Tramps—Precautions taken, etc., 2620-2628, 2829-2834.
- Wards closed for two days in 1904, 2831-2833.

King's Norton Union—cont.

- Soldiers on Tramp, Numbers of, Physical condition, etc.—Not one who had learned a trade, 2604, 2608-2610.
- Task:
- Kinds of Work given, Discretion used, 2630, 2702-2711, 2721-2726, 2753-2755.
- Stone breaking task, 2702, 2703, 2725, Material Rowley rag-stone, 2824.
- Women Vagrants, Reception by Female Officials etc., 286.
- Labour Colonies—Schemes for Compulsory Detention of Habitual Vagrants, Question of Voluntary Colonies or State Provision, etc.
- Buildings—Temporary Buildings, etc.:
- Buildings should be built by Colonists themselves, 8115-8117, 8270, 8271, 9988, 9990.
- Building Bye-laws, Possible Difficulties in regard to, 6383, 6384.
- Materials—Wood, etc., Relative Cost and Durability, 9970-9984, 10032-10041.
- Cost per Man of Iron Buildings, 8118.
- Inexpensive Materials should be used, 8115-8117, 8270, 8271.
- REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 321-323, 429-430.
- Casual Wards.
- Replacing by Colonies, Suggestion, 5248-5250.
- Supplementing not Replacing—Poor Law Association's Scheme, 878-881, 976-978.
- Charity Organisation Committee of 1873, Recommendation of, 8641.
- Class of Person to be Committed:
- Able-bodied Incurable Rogue, 10614-10616, 10621-10624, 10726, 10765-10766, 10768-10771.
- Corrigible Cases, Importance of Selecting, 8828, 8829.
- Criminals should be kept apart and Colonists should in no way be regarded as Criminals, 10184-10186.
- First Offenders or Men who had been once or twice Convicted, Question of, 9680.
- Better three Months in a Colony than a Week in Prison, 10162, 10163.
- Magisterial Powers Suggested, 3785, 3837-3840.
- Recording first and second Convictions and Committing to Labour Colony for third Offence, Suggestions, 10163, 10164, 10304.
- Wortel Labour Colony—First Offenders Sentenced to be Detained until they had earned 15 francs, 10305.
- Inefficient—Reasons for Admission, Length of Stay, etc., 10338-10341.
- Irreclaimable Vagrants, Case of, 894-897.
- All Cases were worth trying, 6282, 6285-6288, 6329, 7002-7007.
- Hopeless Cases would have the best Chance on a Land Colony and if they proved Hopeless would Cost far less than in Prison, 8232-8235.
- State Colony needed for Segregation of Hopeless Class, 6280-6282.
- Parents of, or Persons Travelling with Child Vagrants, Sending to Labour Colony Suggestion, 2350, 2351.
- REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, 219-222, 429 (16).
- Committal to a Labour Colony—Procedure, Authority to Commit, etc.
- Formal Trial a Necessity, 6195, 6560, 6561, 8730-8737.

Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Committal to a Labour Colony—cont.*Formal Trial a Necessity—cont.

Difficulty of getting hold of Vagrants until they had been taken before a Magistrate, 8686.

Gorst's, Sir J., Bill, Precautions of, 5323.

Grounds of Committal, Question of Giving due Weight to previous Career, etc., 8686.

Distinction between Conviction for Crime and Conviction for Tramping, 933-937.

Habitual Vagrancy proved by a certain Number of Convictions for Vagrancy Offences, 8730-8737, 8969-8972.

Mode of Life, not Specific Act, to be ground of Committal, 1228, 6041-6050—Or coming 3 or 4 times to the Ward could be made an Offence and ground of Committal, 6051.

Guardians not a Suitable Authority, 8963, 8964.

Judicial System to be kept distinct from Sentences on Colonists — Committal by Administrative Order, proposed, 933-937, 10276, 10277.

Magistrates, Fitness of, to administer proposed System, Question of, 883, 885, 933, 938, 946, 6056-6061, 8962, 8964-8968.

Extension of Magistrates' powers proposed, 10279.

Magistrates would use powers if they had them—Evidence of proceedings under the Inebriates Act, 7897-7899.

Question whether Sentence could be made Automatic, 6056-6061.

Petty Sessions v. Quarter Sessions as Authority to commit, etc., 4014-4017, 10269-10271, 10640-10642, 10669-10671.

Petty Sessions preferable—Justices would know more of the Case and quick Treatment desirable, 946, 8764-8766.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 221-223.Competition with outside Labour:

Avoidance of, by using existing skill of each man for the Profit of the Colony and consuming on the Premises all that could be made—Bricks, Buttons, etc., 5112, 10205, 10230-10237.

Either the Colony must provide for itself entirely, or if outside Labour sent in Goods, Colonies must send out goods to pay for them, 10228-10232.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 300-302.

Unfairness of Outery—Outside Labour built Prisons, made clothes of Prisoners, etc, 10171, 10205.

Controlling Authority—Suggestions and Opinions:

Combination of Boards of Guardians, Objections to, 583-587.

Home Office Inspection and Control, 3099-3102, 10175, 10176, 10178.

Home Office Rules and Regulations, 10279.

Home Office or Prison Commissioners, 4691, 8687-8689.

Home Office with Local Inspection, 4308-4312, 4372.

Local Authorities not open to the same objection as Charitable Societies, 578.

Magistrates—Visiting Committee of local Magistrates, 10177.

Police, 4267-4269.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 284, 304.

State, Primary Duty of—Objections to delegating Government functions to a Philanthropic Society, 571-573, 578, 582, 2694.

Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Cost—Supply of Funds, etc.:

Capital Charges, Question of, 4534.

Cost of Constructing Buildings, etc., Estimate of initial Cost, 9899, 9900.

Colonists building for themselves——Reduction of Cost, 9988, 9989.

Government Provision for, on lines of Light Railways Act, Suggestion, 6990, 7458-7461.

Interest on Capital, Guarantee by whatever Authority was undertaking the Work, 7463-7465.

Cheaper to keep a Tramp in a Labour Colony than to have him in and out of Casual Wards and Prisons, 895, 3091, 3107, 4999, 8913, 8959, 9032, 10191-10196.

County Contribution, question of, 4046-4048.

Joint Contributions by County and Government Suggestion, 1277.

Food, etc., Estimated Cost, 7490, 7491.

Home Office and Guardians to be jointly responsible for Expenditure, 10280-10289.

Industrial School Cost, Comparison with, 4534, 4548-4550.

National Question, Treatment as, proposed, 6260, 6261.

Poor Law Unions Association's Objections to use of Imperial Funds, 932.

Scotland, Terms on which Prisons were taken over by the State in 1877, 6760.

State Grants should not exceed half or two-thirds of Cost, in order that management might put pressure on men to work, 8109, 8110.

Vagrant should be put in same category with other prisoners, 8539, 8540.

Objections to System on grounds of expense, 6918-6923, 8738-8741, 9034-9037.

Payments by Guardians:

Seven Shillings a week more than Unions would pay, 969-971.

Sheffield Union ready to pay for men sent to Lingfield, etc., 2504, 2505.

Rates of Districts, Charge upon—Poor Law Unions Association's view, 858-863, 929, 930.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 287, 291, 292, 303, 315, 321-323.Self-supporting Colonies, question of.

All work of every kind, building included, being done by the colonists themselves, the colony might be very nearly made to pay, 10169, 10170, 10343, 10344.

Farm Colonies—No Farm training Colony could pay its way, 5166-5174.

Initial expense would eventually be recouped by Labour of the Able-bodied, 11094.

Loss inevitable—Mischief done by Assertions to the Contrary, 8191-8194, 8682-8684.

Compulsory detention would give a little better chance, 8195.

Profit, Institutions worked for—question as to giving compulsory Powers of Detention to Societies or Individuals working Institutions for a Profit, 1216-1218.

REPORT, par. 295-298.

Skill of Artizan should be used at its proper Financial Equivalent, 10205.

Swiss Colony at Neuchatel pays its way, 5171-5174.

Voluntary Colonies—Financial Support difficult, 3758-3761.

Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Cost—Supply of Funds—*cont.*Voluntary Colonies, etc.—*cont.*Public Subsidies for Voluntary Colonies,
Objections to, 8788, 8789.

County Councils, no Action taken by, 568.

Detention, Term of Detention—Suggestions and Opinions :Indeterminate Sentences, 7475–7477, 8715, 11094,
11199–11201.Difficulty, if all cases are kept till reformed,
8745–8748.Discharge on Improvement with Guarantee from two responsible persons, Suggestion, 6696.Discharge only by consent of Administrative Authority, 6693–6696.Long Sentences with Discretion left to director, 5204–5209.REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 286, 429 (16, 21).

Short Sentences quite useless, 4690.

Six to twelve months, 8111–8113.

One to two or three years, 3091–3093, 6189, 6315.

Two years, 6583.

Two years or so, 9736, 9738, 9739.

Two years with possibility of early Parole, 5323.

Three years, 4011–4013.

Three years with Modifications in case of good behaviour, 853, 946.

Three or four years, 5939, 5944, 5945, 5947–5949.

Deterrent effect of advertising fact that tramps would get their deserts and bona fide unemployed be taken charge of, 6266, 6544, 8718, 8961.

Dietary :

Downes's, Dr. A. H., Memorandum, App., page
145.Nutritive Value of Suggested Dietary, App., page 146.REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 290, 311–316, 429 (20).see also subheadings Discipline and Inducements to Work.Discharged Prisoners, Permitting Prisoners to earn a character in a Vagrant Colony, 5320.Discipline, Means of Enforcing Detention, etc., 5213–5218.Bad Cases should be brought up before Magistrates, 3097, 3101, 3102.Diet as means of Discipline, 4301, 4303, 4304, 4428, 4429, 5104–5106, 5270–5276.English Tramp not likely to be so amenable to discipline as his Continental fellows, 8907, 8908.

High Standard needed, 855.

Low Feeding as preventive of insubordination,
8908, 8909.

Dormitory Accommodation :

Estimated Cost, 7489.

Four rows v. two rows of Beds, 9991–9996.Earnings of Colonists, see subheading Inducements to work.Employment for Colonists—Kind of Colony required, etc.:Agricultural Work combined with simple Industrial Work, 5107–5112, 5186–5189, 5192.Asylums, Colonies on Lines of—Treatment rather than Punishment needed, 10297.Combination of Imprisonment and Labour Colony Treatment, suggestion, 8767–8769.Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Employment for Colonists, etc.—*cont.*Difference between a Prison and a Labour Colony :Colony would be more preventive than punitive, 1262–1269.Conditions less easy in a Labour Colony, longer Tasks, etc., 10319–10326.Different Colonies in different Districts—Keeping Numbers down, Regulation of Products, etc., 10212, 10236, 10237.Distress Colony for genuine Work-Seekers—
Suggestion, 3762–3764, 3780, 3837,
3838.

Objections to Distress Colonies, 4307.

Doing for themselves—Let Colonists do all their own Work, build their own Buildings, etc., 10169, 10170.Exemption from Task on grounds of feeble Physique—Variety of Types of Labour would prevent that, 10346.

Farm Colonies—Agricultural Employment, etc.

Age of Farm Colony Idea, 6336–6338.

Agriculture the best curative Agent for Drunkards and Wastrels, 8186–8188.

Costliness, 5166–5170.

Detention, Powers of, required—otherwise
Labour would be lacking when most needed, 2495, 2496, 2500, 2501.Difference between Farm Colony and Rural Workhouse, 2491, 2496.Farm Colonies in connection with Workhouses, Suggestion, 9199–9202.Method of Conducting—Spade work, etc., 2425, 2428, 2491, 2498.Opinion in favour of, Demand for trained
Farm Labour, etc., 5189–5191, 5349,
5350, 5367–5369, 5484, 5493, 7965.Percentage of Tramps fit subjects for a Farm Colony—20 per cent., 2503.Winter Difficulty—Subsidiary indoor industry a Necessity, 7484, 8189, 8190.Hadleigh as a Model—Something like Hadleigh wanted, but it must be larger and have Power of Detention, 2121–2123, 7967–
7970, 7974.Workhouse Masters' Association, Opinion of, 2126–2128.Industrial Colonies preferable to Agricultural Colonies, 3749–3751, 3780.Industrial Employment, Importance of, 6340, 6341—Waste of putting skilled Workmen to cart Manure, etc., 10205, 10224, 11095–11097.Apprenticeship System, proposed, Unskilled attached to skilled, etc., 10208.Difficulties in the way of establishing Paying Industries, 7010.Detention for a term of years would lessen Difficulties, 7009.

Teaching a Trade, Costliness of, 6316.

Industrial School Conditions, running Colonies
under—Suggestion, 8690, 8692, 8693, 9005–
9008.Inebriate Reformatory System—Model suggested by Sir J. Gorst's Vagrancy Bill, 1206,
1207, 1233.Difference in mental state of Inebriates and Vagrants—Inebriate not compos mentis, 1231, 1232.Limit of Development inevitably reached—Foresight needed in planning Capital Expenditure, Improvements, etc., 7196–7200.Machinery, Use of—Productive capacity of Colony could be increased, 10222, 10223.

Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Employment for Colonists, etc.—cont.

Penal Settlement needed to separate Worst Cases from more Hopeful Ones, 7775-7778, 7856, 7857, 8220, 8230, 8231, 8692, 9285, 9286, 9347-9349.

Cheap out-door prison, 8098, 8099.

Difference between a Penal Colony and a Prison, 2993-2995, 6588-6590, 7858, 7859.

Essential to Effectiveness of Way-ticket System, 8096.

Prison System of Labour, Disadvantages of—Foremen needed rather than Warders, 10160.

Reformatory Prison, 5950-5955.

Reformatory School, Colony on Lines of—Suggestion, 4510-4514.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 278-282, 295-305, 429 (22).

Settling Colonists on the Land as at Fredericksoord—Suggestion, 5305.

Employment for Ex-Colonists Difficulty—need for Discharge Machinery, 7166-7170, 8801.

Expenditure of Colonists, Control of, 7456, 7457.

Intermediate Institution which should pay its own way, Suggestion for, 7171, 7175.

Escape, Question of :

Fencing might be Necessary for some cases, 8272-8274.

No need for Walls, 6585-6587, 6591, 6592.

Casuals would not want to escape to Casual Wards, 6360.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par 292.

Walls and Supervision, etc., needed, 948-955.

Families of Colonists, Disposal of, 6207.

Separation of Families necessary, 1045-1049.

Vagrant does not often have a Wife, 10244, 10245.

Very little Difficulty in Practice, Women could generally do for themselves, 5267, 5268.

Whole Family should be taken, Children sent to an Industrial School as a preventive Measure—Women were not likely to be very capable, 8809-8814.

Foreign Countries, Labour Colonies in, see Names of Countries, also Names of Colonies.

Gorst's, Sir J., Bill of 1904, 513.

Grading each Colony into different Classes and having also various grades of Colonies, proposed, 9874, 10179-10184, 10218, 10588-10592.

Classification of Inmates According to Character—Importance of Classification, 4094-7, 5288, 5289, 7779-7781, 8101, 8726.

Criminals, Separation of from Non-Criminals desirable, but difficult when Numbers are small, 8532-8534.

Division of Colonies into Voluntary and Compulsory Sections—Suggestion, 3218, 3219.

Intermediate Stage, Starting on, in Order that Man might have the Double Incentive of Hope and Fear, 5289, 5290.

Lowest Plane, Starting Vagrants on, 5107, 5111.

Premium System by which Men could Work themselves up to a Higher Grade Colony, etc., 10189.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 294.

Three Grades of Colonies Scheme (Penal, Compulsory—Restorative and Voluntary), 8098-8104.

History of Idea—An old idea which had not proved a Panacea, 8860, 8939-8946, 8948-8951, 8952-8955, 9017—REPORT, par. 257-261.

Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Honest Unemployed, Provision for, 6542, 6579.

Men past forty unable to get work—Refuge for, 11097.

Inducements to work ;Diet, Use of as an Inducement.

Better to Feed them all alike, 9091, 9092, 9170, 9171.

Choice of Food up to Certain Value as Stimulus to Exertion, 7494, 7495.

Fixed Minimum with Additions which could be Earned—Advantages of Canteen System, 7496-7502, 8893-8897, 9028-9031, 9094, 9169.

Punishment by Withholding Privilege and not only by Penalty, would Convince the Public that Man had a Chance, 9028, 9029.

Preferable to Money Rewards, 5371-5374.

Scale of Dietary according to Work done, 10625-10628.

Earnings of Colonists :

Control of Expenditure Question, 7456, 7457.

Money Rewards, however Small, Wrongly Considered as Wages and therefore Objectionable, 5371-5374, 5499, 5502, 5503.

No Fixed Wage, Bonus in Tallies, which could be used at the Canteen, 10219, 10220.

Grading of Colonies, see sub-heading Grading.

Need for Stimulus to Work, 8515-8517.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 286, 289, 290, 312, 314, 429 (20, 21).

Intermediate Period before Labour Colony System was in Full Working Order, Disposal of Casuals during, 6242.

Police Lodging-house, Suggestion, 6239.

Labour Information at Casual Wards and Police Stations essential to Penal Colony Principle, 8078.

Lamb's, Mr. D. C., Suggestions, App., page 135.

Legislation necessary to establish any Compulsory System, 572, 1261, 1262, 1270-1274, 1281-1284, 4374, 4433.

Liberty of the Subject Fetish—Only Difficulty in the Way of Detention, 6584.

Limiting to Burghs and Parishes (in Scotland) with a Population of from 50,000 to 150,000, 6577.

Management :

Central or Local Authority, not a voluntary Society, desirable, 8536.

Director to have Power like a Prison Governor, 10178.

Existing Agencies, Use of—Treasury might license Agencies to receive Cases with a Capitation Grant, or find all and employ Agencies to manage the Work, 6354-6358, 7466-7468.

Experimenting with State and Voluntary Management Suggestion, 5261-5264.

Home Office Management with Right of Inspection and Supervision for Guardians, 855-857, 888-891, 939-943, 1059.

Joint Board representing Boards of Guardians within the District Served by the Colony—Poor Law Unions Association's Recommendation, 854.

Joint Committee of Town and Parish Councils, Suggestion, 6554, 6556-6564, 6566.

Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Management—cont.

Popularly elected Bodies, Objections to Management by, 855.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 304.

Standing Joint Committee, Management by, under Home Office and combined with Local Inspection suggested, 3948–3951, 4047.

State Provision and Management, Opinion in Favour of, 6760, 9086.

Penal Colonies, State Management Necessary for, 8108.

Voluntary Societies, Management by:

Advantages of, over Official Management, Men Fighting Shy of Officials, 7098–7102.

Management by a Society with small State Grant, 8107–8110.

No Objections to, 10767.

Private Management Subject to Inspection by Government Department or Poor Law Authorities, Suggestion, 963, 965–967, 1274, 1275.

Religious or Charitable Institutions, Advantage of Management by, 6071, 6279.

Terms on which Church Army would be willing to take Management, 8224–8229.

Merxplas System applicable to England as a whole but capable of Improvement, 10173.

Multiplication of Vagrants, Prevention of, 8913.

Night loafer—Labour Colonies would solve the difficulty of what to do with night loafers, 7980–7982.

Not needed in England—Workhouses would be in effect Labour Colonies if existing regulations were enforced, 4224, 4225.

Number of Colonies which would be required for the whole of England, 8797.

Number of Inmates, see subheading, Size of Colonies.

Number of men who would be sent to Colonies, 6262, 6263, 6266, 9033, 10272–10274.

Object of System :

Complete detention of all Vagrants aimed at, 6231, 6264, 6265.

Reformation of Character, see that subheading.

Opinion in favour of Compulsory Colonies for Habitual Vagrants, 944, 945, 1881, 1899, 1900, 2395, 2396, 2693, 3090, 3122, 4689, 4967–4970, 4999–5008, 5099–5103, 5210–5212, 5632, 5946, 6542, 6690, 6699–6701, 7091, 7092, 7674, 7676, 8835, 9078–9080, 9083, 10161, 10165, 10554, 10555, 10587, 10614–10616, 10621, 10634, 10635, 10726, 11094, 11199–11201.

Advantages of Compulsion both for the Vagrant and the Public, 894–897, 6313, 6314.

Better treatment at first possible under a compulsory System, 6126.

All Inmates of existing Labour Colonies unfit in some way and therefore requiring to be compulsorily detained, 10165–10168.

Compulsion, the only practical solution—Suitable Cases could always be allowed to go, 7773, 7774, 7843, 7845, 7855, 7861.

Experiment on very definite lines, Opinion in favour of, 8692, 8693.

History of a Tramp Family which might have been redeemed by sending to Labour Colonies, 4306.

Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Opinion in favour of Compulsory Colonies—cont.

Leading Working Men, Opinion in favour of Compulsion, 5946.

Licences for suspected Habituals after certain date, all Tramps without certificate to be deemed Habitual Vagrants and be liable to detention in Labour Colony, suggestion, 2693, 2891.

Parole System in use in America, Adoption of, suggestion, 5296–5299, 5303.

Parole should be exacted and absconders would be sent to Penal Colony on re-apprehension, 8103, 8104.

Poor Law Unions Association scheme, 517, 853.

Prison Administration, Relief to, 6763.

Proclamation of certain areas and clearing those Areas by a system of exchange of descriptions of Casuals between Casual Wards in proclaimed Areas, 6240, 6241, 6243, 6244.

Provision of Colonies :

Counties paying so much per head for Colonists sent to Colonies started by voluntary enterprise, 10300–10303.

County Authorities to start Colonies, the State contributing to maintenance of Inmates, Opinion in favour of, 10297.

Experimental Work in starting Colonies by Counties, Philanthropic bodies, and the Home Office, proposed, 10175, 10279.

Philanthropy inadequate to deal with requirements, 10296.

Private initiative would be far better than State Colonies to begin with—once started by the State it would be impossible to drop the System, 8914, 8915, 9138.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 277–284, 305, 429 (17, 18).

Voluntary Colonies, Provision of new Colonies : Church Army would prepare half a dozen if Government started the penal and Compulsory Colonies, 8105.

Only to be allowed by permission of (say) County Authority and in compliance with certain conditions, suggestion, 8788–8791, 8836, 8837.

State Establishment—Difficulties and Objections, 588, 592.

Volunteers carrying out experiment under Government Inspection preferable to experiments by Home Office, 4375–4379, 4433.

Reformation of Character Question.

Age Factor—Advantages of catching Vagrants young, 4554, 4635, 8385–8387, 8715, 8717, 8769–8773, 8830, 9025.

Casual Ward taint once acquired was ineradicable, 3434.

Humanising and Reformative Influences :

Church Army would wish to exert influence with inmates of Penal and Compulsory Colonies, 8122.

Continental Labour Colonies—Lack of humanising and reformative Influences, 5113–5116, 5119, 8678, 10289–10292.

Employment of suitable Mission Workers, suggestion, 8835.

Introduction from outside, 8997–9003.

Philanthropic and Religious Agencies to be allowed to organise leisure time of men, 10189, 10238, 10239.

Religious Services—Ministers would be allowed access to and hold services for Colonists of their persuasion, 7260–7264.

Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Reformation of Character Question—*cont.*Humanising and Reformatory Influences—cont.

REPORT, par. 272-276.

Size of Colonies—Difficulty of dealing with large numbers, 9015-6.

McNeill's, Sir John, forecast, 8977, 8978.

Not much hope of Reform for the Habitual Vagrant, 6697, 8912, 8976, 9023, 9024—Evidence from Foreign Colonies, 6289-6294, 8378, 8379, 8956, 8992.

Object of Colony System, 3096, 3217, 9863.

More important than teaching a trade, 6326-6328, or making a commercial success of a Colony, 7011-7013.

Voluntary Colonies—Results obtained by existing Colonies.

Evils of System by which a large number simply go through the Colony and come out of it, 8775.

Failure due to lack of selection and supervision, 8691.

Mistake made of claiming success in majority of cases, no convincing figures, 10584-10586.

Subsequent careers of Colonists—Difficulty in ascertaining, 593.

Refusal to Work, Procedure in case of, 2397, 2398, 2427, 2428.

Case of a man determined not to work—Difficult, but not impossible to deal with, 6196.

Convictions should be possible when men were offered work at Colonies whose bye-laws had been approved by Secretary of State, suggestion, 7469-7471.

Docking of Food and Accommodation, Suggestions, 4708-4710, 7890, 7891, 8193-8198, 10187-10189, 10327.

Penal Colony, Relegation to, suggestion, 2428.

Persuasion, Use of—Refusing to let the man work, suggestion, 7240-7243.

Prison as Punishment for continued idleness, 9089, 9171.

Tramps preferring Prison to Work difficulty—only means of compulsion would be Prison, which was what the Tramp desired, 3356-3360.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 277-305, 311-316, 321-323, 409, 429 (17-22).

Salvation Army Legislative Scheme based on compulsory detention, 6188, 6189, 6192.

Scotland, Need for Compulsory Colonies, 6419.

Utilisation of Empty Poorhouses, suggestion, 6566-6568.

Separation of the Sexes, suggestion, 3220, 4151.

Size of Colonies:

Limiting to 200 Colonists, suggestion, 4152.

Maximum of 500 Colonists suggested, 8123, 10174.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 293.

Superiority of Small Colonies, Question as to, 8413, 8796-8800.

Humanising Influences, difficulty of dealing with large numbers, 9015, 9016.

Smallpox communicated by Tramps, Labour Colonies as Preventive, suggestion, 3066.

Staff:

Appointment of Chief Officer, Right of, 931.

Importance of getting right Man as Manager, 4516, 4517, 4550.

Training needed for Managers, Overlookers, etc., Work done at Lingfield Colony, 5231-5236.

Subdivision of Colonists into small groups or families, Importance as means of reclamation, 8101, 8113, 8121.

Labour Colonies, etc.—cont.Subdivision of Colonists, etc.—cont.

Size of Family—not more than twenty-five or thirty, 8120.

Summary of Principal Recommendations for Establishment of Labour Colonies made by Boards of Guardians, etc., to the Local Government Board, 516.

System must be worked on a large scale to be of any use, 3759.

Uniformity needed, 980.

Usefulness, Question of, 569, 570.

Voluntary Colonies—Existing Colonies, etc.

Adjuncts to Compulsory Colonies, Use as—Opinion in favour of Voluntary Societies working side by side with, but distinct from Compulsory Colonies, 582, 5211, 5212, 5227, 5260, 7204, 7205.

Certifying Hadleigh and Lingfield as places of Detention, subject to Government Inspection, 10293-10295.

Church Army Organisation, see Church Army.

Difference between German and Swiss Colonies and English Rural Workhouses, 2988-2991.

Disadvantages under which such Places were run—Law at present gives no support, 588, 589, 8224-8226, 9825-9830.

Inspection by Government, Question of:

Objections to Inspection as connoting Assumption of Responsibility, 8535.

Requiring Colonies to submit to Inspection and to furnish Annual Report and Financial Statement, Suggestion, 8789.

Select Committee of 1896 on Distress from want of Employment—Report against Adoption of Voluntary Labour Farms, 588.

Useful for Corrigible Cases under certain Conditions of Classification, etc., 8774, 8775, 8836.

Voluntary Entry into Compulsory Colony, giving Option in certain Cases, suggestion, 6134-6138, 6195.

Compulsory Re-committal would probably be necessary, 7252-7256.

Percentage of London Vagrants who would voluntarily enter a Colony, 7088, 7244-7251.

Signing Obligation to stay during Minimum Period of Detention, suggestion, 6565.

Statement by Vagrants of Willingness to be committed as a mean between Voluntary and Compulsory Systems—suggestion, 1223-1227.

Working in connection with Voluntary Colonies, suggestion, 6133.

Women—REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 409.

(for particular Colonies, see their names.)Labour in relation to Vagrancy Problem—Making Information accessible, Labour Bureaux, etc.

Casual Wards, Making Information available at—Suggestion, 7601, 7602, 8078, 8079, 9859.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, 185, 429 (14).

Superintendent of Casual Ward to be in touch with any Labour Bureaux in District, suggestion, 9859.

Honest Wayfarers and Habitual Vagrants, Proportion of.

Percentage of Casuals who never work and never would work, 506, 2131, 2237, 2238, 2610-2615, 3031, 3032, 4228, 4229.

Largest Class of Vagrants, 7587.

[London Tramps, Proportion of Habituals among, 3287, 3288, 3290, 4655-4660.

Labour in relation to Vagrancy Problem—cont.

Honest Wayfarers and Habitual Vagrants, etc.—cont.

Percentage of Casuals, etc.—cont.

Northumberland Police, Opinion of, 7675.

Percentage of Vagrants charged at Police Courts, etc., who were Professionals, 10318.

Very rare to find a man who deliberately says he will not work; he is ready to start but not to continue, 6128-6131.

Percentage of casuals who are honestly in search of work—Very small, 876, 877, 2089, 2090, 2133, 2134, 2245, 2388, 2437, 3028, 3029, 3763-3772, 3909, 3910, 4885, 5344-5346, 7586, 8086, 8087, 9384, 9385, 9389-9393.

1 per cent. probably not an under-estimate, 8670.

3 or 4 per cent. possibly, in North Wales, 5604.

8 per cent. the outside figure, 6249.

20 per cent., not that proportion at Manchester who would work, 7771, 7772.

Difficulty of ascertaining Proportion among London Vagrants, 6105.

Large Number of Vagrants in Ayrshire really seeking work, but not desiring to keep it, 6801, 6802, 6815-7.

REPORT, 79.

Statistics for 1899; 5768.

Inter-connected System of Labour Bureaux—Suggestion, 5312.

Labour Colonies, Bureaux in connection with—Suggestion, 5252.

Opinion in favour of Labour Bureaux, 3927, 4136.

Police Stations, Making information available at, 642, 643, 2131, 8078, 8079.

Difficulties in regard to—Objections to Police acting as Agency Officers, Question of Cost, etc., 4226, 4227.

Police Stations possibly preferable to Casual Wards as places of information, 7606.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 185, 429 (14).

Reading System—Opinion in favour of, 4704-4707.

Registration of Labour—Register to be supplied to Labour Bureaux, Suggestion, 2913, 3022.

State or Municipal Bureaux Question—Opinion that bureaux should be partly State and partly Municipal, 8173-8177.

Tramps are pretty well informed under present conditions, 7606, 7607.

Workhouses, Establishment of Bureaux at—Suggestions, 642, 643, 1025-1028, 2131.

Recommendation to the Local Government Board, 516.

Lady Protector for Vagrant Women

Appointment in connection with every workhouse, proposed, 1505.

Difficulty of applying hard and fast rules to Voluntary Workers, 1518, 1525.

France, Practice in, 1506.

Investigation of Cases, Difficulties in, 1526-1528.

Limited Nature of Work being done at present, 1517-1519.

Official position needed for Lady Protector in order to oblige Guardians to send her information of Cases, 1508-1516.

Training in Charitable Work which would be gained by Ladies Volunteering, 1520.

Laindon Farm Colony

Fortnightly reports by Farm Superintendent, 5390, 5591.

Money Rewards, Difficulties created by, 5499.

Laindon Farm Colony—cont.

Number of Colonists, 5385, 7971, 7972.

Origin of Colony, 5384.

REPORT, par. 271.

Success of Methods—Men sent to Canada, etc., 5384-5386, 5485-5489.

Supervision, Inadequacy of—Great complaints against Colonists in neighbourhood of the colony, 5494, 5502.

Training of men for Canada, small amount of training, 5093.

Two rows of Beds, Requirement not adhered to, to, 9994.

Lanarkshire

Child Vagrants, Small number of, 6905, 6906.

Number of Vagrants.

Half-yearly Census, 6905.

Number of Vagrants in county as compared with number in Glasgow, 6927-6931.

Police Administration:

Bye-law under Local Government Act of 1889—Valueless, 6863-6867.

Towns having separate administration, 6862.

Public Works, Tramps attracted by, 6937-6941.

Relief of Vagrants:

Police Constables, Assistance given by, at their own expense, 6875.

Police Stations, no shelter or Relief given at, 6876, 6877.

Practically no means of—Extent of Shelter available, 6869-6872, 6878.

Sleeping Out—Enforcement of Trespass Act—Sentences, etc., 6880-6887—Statistics for 1904, App., page 103.

Lancashire

Begging and Sleeping Out, Statistics for 1903, 8582.

Larceny Offenders

No settled place of abode, but perhaps a settled neighbourhood, 9164.

Law as to Vagrancy

Administration, see that title.

Historical Review, 6-196.

Chronological List of Statutes, App., pages 1-4.

REPORT, par. 7-45, 257-260.

(for details see title Acts of Parliament.)

Legal Provisions in force in England and Wales, App., pages 5-14.

Scotland—Public General Statutes, 6622-6626.

Sufficiency of, if actively administered, 7759-7761, 10614, 10713.

(for Particular Laws, see their Names, also title Acts of Parliament).

Leeds

Casual Wards.

Cost of Construction, 9917.

Stone pounding task abandoned on account of difficulty in disposing of crushed stone, 2439-2441.

Common Lodging-house Records kept by Dr. Cameron, 3114.

Legislation relating to Vagrancy—Proposed Legislation:

Bills of 1904, 513-515.

Elementary Education Act, 1876—Amendment appointing one clearly-defined body to enforce the Act—Suggestion, 10982.

Legislation relating to Vagrancy, etc.—cont.

Legislation needed for effective reform of Vagrancy System, 3927-3929.

Salvation Army Scheme based on Compulsory Detention, 6188, 6189, 6192.

Definition of Vagrancy, extended definition needed, 6191, 6192—Classes to be included, 7150-7160.

(see also Names of Particular Measures advocated.)

Liberty of the Subject

Child Vagrants, Withdrawing from Custody of Parents—Liberty of the Subject difficulty, 2940.

Compulsory Labour Colonies, Obstacle to, 6584.

Locking up Tramps, see Cell System.

Registration of Vagrants, Difficulty as to, 3024.

Way Ticket Systems, Possibility of Danger from, 872-875, 984, 4668, 5025, 5026.

Lincoln

Casual Ward—Associated Ward, 10315, 10316.

LincolnshireBegging :

Arrests for Begging—Police Orders very strict, 10154.

Statistics :

1893-1903, 8581, 8582.

1900-1904, Percentage of Convictions, 10153, 10154.

1903, 1069.

Cells, Provision of—Expenditure stopped in view of alteration of the Law, 10282.

Incorrigible Rogue—Offences, Sentences given by Quarter Sessions, 10246-10249, 10251-10254, 10306, 10307.

Law as to Vagrancy has been enforced for fifty years without the slightest effect—Average sentences seven to fourteen days, 8581, 8582, 10150-10153, 10197, 10258-10263.

Reduction of Vagrancy due to Police Activity, 4119.

Sleeping out :

Not many cases, 10255-10257.

Statistics :

1893-1903, 8581, 8582.

1903 Prosecutions, 1069.

Task of Work :

Every Workhouse imposes a task but there is no uniformity, 10156, 10157.

Limiting Task—Discretion of Workhouse Masters, 10158.

Prison Task lighter than that of the Casual Ward, 10159, 10160.

Lingfield—Labour Colony of the Christian Social Service Union, 566.

Age, Limits of, 5045, 5047.

Buildings :

Cost, Nature of, etc., 5129-5146, 9967-9969.

Materials for Dormitories and Dining hall, 9970-9973, 9976.

Certifying as a place of detention subject to Home Office Inspection, etc.—Opinion in favour of, 10293-10295.

Class of Men received—Workhouse youths and private Cases, not Vagrants, 5042, 5073, 5074, 5083, 5219-5222, App., page 140.

Colonists' Resentment of Association with men under Sentence, 5226.

Every man required to come from some Authority, 5084.

Lingfield—cont.

Co-operative Colonies, Establishment of, 5055.

Cost, App., page 139.

Capital Expenditure :

Buildings, Cost of, 5130-5135, 5143-5145, 9967-9969.

Cost per bed, 5068.

Land, Cost of, 5122-5124.

Horses and Cows, Cost of training in connection with, 5048, 5175-5180.

Maintenance Expenses.

Cost per man per week, 5068.

1904 an exceptional year, Average loss per man per year, etc., 5154-5165.

Payments by Unions, 5162-5164, 5222.

Canada, Men trained for—Cost per man to Union, 5096.

Cost per man per month to Union, 2506.

Staff, Payment of—No economy possible, 5148-5151.

Value of Work of Colonists Nil or worse than Valueless—Cost of Supervision, Harm done by unskilled men, etc., 5065-5068, 5075-5081, 5183-5185.

Date of establishment, 5040.

Detention—No power of detention, only Moral Control, 5086, 5087, 5090.

Compulsory Detention undesirable at Lingfield, 5210, 5211.

Dietary, App., page 139.

Discipline :

Dietary, Use of—Physical Condition of Inmates an obstacle, 5085, 5087, 5269.

Privileges granted to good workers, etc., 5085-5089.

Religious Inspiration, Tone of Colony, etc., Value of—No outside help required, 5061, 5198-5201.

Dismissals for Misbehaviour and Incapacity, 5277-5281.

Dormitories, Four Rows of beds in—No objection, 9991, 9992.

Employments of Colonists :

Farm training work, 5048-5050, 5067, 5068.

Market and fruit gardening, Cost, etc., 5048, 5057, 5082, 5282, 5283.

Acreage used for, 5056.

Workshop Work, Very little of, 5051, 5052.

Hours of Work, 5076, 5079.

Inebriates as Colonists—Difficulties in regard to other inmates, etc., 5057-5064.

Land :

Amount of, 5054, 5055.

Cost, Nature of, etc., 5122-5128.

Length of Stay—Number of Colonists staying six months and over, 5091, 5093.

Length of Training required to fit a man for an independent situation, 5070, 5071, 5093.

Medical Attendance, Arrangements for, 5224, 5225.

Number of Inmates, 5041, 5055.

Origin of Colony, Principles borrowed from Wilhelmsdorf Colony, 5228-5231.

Play—Prominence given to organised play, 5118, 5119.

Produce, Disposal of, 5194-5197.

Religious Services, Music, etc., 5119.

REPORT, par. 268-269.

Results obtained, App., page 140.

Emigration to Canada, Number emigrating, None sent back, 5072, 5093, 5240-5244.

Lingfield—*cont.*Results obtained—cont.

Percentage of Colonists getting Independent Positions, 5069-5073, 5237.

Physique of Colonists, Improvement in, 5094, 5097.

Records of ex-Colonists—Difficulty of maintaining Correspondence, 5072, 5073, 5238-5242.

Saving effected for the State and the Union, 5095, 5096.

Self-abuse and abuse of others—No serious Cases, 5202.

Staff :

Christian Brothers—Training given in part payment of Services, etc., 5148, 5152, 5230.

Farm Superintendent a trained Farmer, 5053.

Overlookers, Number needed, 5066.

Members of Staff who could command more money elsewhere, 5148, 5149.

Women—No difficulty in regard to wives of colonists at, they are generally able to do for themselves, 5267, 5268.

Liverpool

Sleeping out—Stringent Measures against, 8138, 8139.

Local Authorities

Co-ordination between Local Authorities, Need for—Existing antagonistic feeling mischievous, 2985-2987.

Extravagance characterising Expenditure in England, 8439, 8474-8477, 8481-8487, 9985-9987.

(See also titles Guardians and Magistrates.)

Local Government Board

Circulars, Orders, Inspectors, see those titles.

Deputations to, for Appointment of a Royal Commission or a Departmental Committee, 189-191, 195.

Enforcement of Local Government Board Regulations, see Enforcement of Regulations.

Uniformity of Administration advocated in all Circulars, 312.

Localisation of Vagrancy—Estimates

Division of Number of Vagrants by Number of Casual Wards, 300, 301.

Population Basis, 300.

Locharbriggs Labour Colony

Cost of Maintenance paid by Parish of Colonist, 6575.

Failure of Experiment, 6569-6575.

Locharwoods Labour Colony, 6738-6740.Lodging-houses

See Church Army Lodging-homes, Common Lodging-houses, Rowton Houses, etc.

London

Able-bodied Men, Percentage of among Vagrants charged at Bow Street, 10724-5.

Ages of Habitual Vagrants, 3289, 10464, App., page 52.

Attractions for Vagrants—Number of Non-Londoners requiring Relief in London, 3474-3476, 5425, 5426, 8615-8617.

Amount of Vagrancy :

Administrative Uniformity, Result of—Nightly average 1,000 during last fifteen years, 263, 264, 306-308.

Decrease—Causes of, etc. :

Identification Scheme, 111, 112.

Refuges, Opening of, in 1842-1844, 40.

Report of 1875, 120-122.

Increase :

Causes, 9400-9406.

Increase in 1904, 3354.

Number of Habitual Tramps practically living in London Casual Wards, 3287, 3288, 3290.

London—*cont.*Amount of Vagrancy—cont.

REPORT, par. 62-64.

Salvation Army, Census of Casuals 10th May, 1905, App., page 137.

Proportion of hopeful, hopeless, and doubtful cases, etc., 6106-6115.

Qualification of Investigators, 6119, 6120.

Streets, Number in, on night of Census, 6123.

Seasonal Fluctuations, 223.

Sleeping out and walking Streets at night—Counts taken by London County Council, 5715, 5717, 5723, 5724, 5726, 5819, 9728, App., pages 56-59.

Women, Proportion of, 288.

Authority for Control of Vagrants—Suggestions.

Joint Committees of Guardians, 10459-10463.

Metropolitan Asylums Board, Question of, 10459.

Police, 10458.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 137-144.

Objections to Recommendations—Mr. Simpson's Memorandum, REPORT, page 123.

Single Authority necessary to secure anything approaching Uniformity, 10520.

Begging and Almsgiving :

Amount annually given away to Beggars in London, 11104, 11109.

Bow Street :

Beggars charged at, come from neighbourhood of Theatres at night, 10679.

Number of Apprehensions, 9375.

Children found begging sent to Industrial Schools, 9558, 9559.

Classes giving Alms—All classes alike gave Alms, 11159, 11160.

Crime—Beggars not criminal, with rare Exceptions, 11142-11144.

Difficulty of Convicting—Private Persons will not give Offenders into Custody, etc., 9376, 9377, 9437-9443.

No difficulty in getting Convictions for pure begging, 11101, 11102.

Earnings, Average earnings of a successful beggar, 11089, 11103.

Extent of, varying in different Districts, 11158.

Interest in Street Begging—Nobody takes the slightest interest, 11071.

Neglect of Beggars to maintain Families, 10678.

No excuse for giving to Beggars in London, 11103.

Rare among London Casuals, 3291-3298.

Reform of Beggars hopeless.

"Helpable" Cases—One "helpable" Case in seventeen years of work with London Mendicity Society, 11081, 11145.

Once taken to a Police Court, a street Beggar spends his life between Prison and Street, 11100, 11106, 11109.

Repeated Convictions, 11098.

Statistics, 1893-1903, 8582, 8583.

Theatres in the Strand, Begging at Cab Doors, etc., 9388, 10679, 1110, 11111.

Casual Wards :

Accommodation, 3268, 3269, 3455, 3456.

Admission to Wards—Procedure, 3244, 3245, 3255.

Refusals of Admission :

Notice put up at Paddington that Ward was full—Reasons for objecting to Notice, 10489-10491.

London—*cont.*Casual Wards—cont. :Admission to Wards, etc.—*cont.*Refusals of Admission—cont.

Popularity of Associated Wards, etc.,
3274, 3400-3410, 3413-3415, 3493,
3494, 10482-10488.

Statistical Tables 1881-1904, App., page
68; 1904, App., page 67.

Attractiveness of—Tramps practically living in the Wards, 3282-3290, 3299-
3302, 3387-3399, 3475, 3476, 3489,
3490.

Beggars frequenting Wards in preference to
Shelters, 11088.

Bathing of Vagrants, 3261, 5341, 5342.

Circulars of Poor Law Board, 1864 and 1865.
—Bath recommended but not prescribed, 59.

Cell System and Associated Wards, 3446-3454,
3491, 3492.

Cost of Construction, App., pages 153, 154.

Average Cost, 9895, 9916, 10478-10481.

Costliness of Provision for Vagrants—Not much chance of reduction unless there is some radical alteration in the Policy, 8477, 9721-9723, 9960-9964,
10111-10114.

Economy—Policy of the Local Government Board, 9936, 9939-9941, 9963,
10052-10054, 10057.

Largest amount expended on a London
Vagrant Ward—Excessive Cost, etc.
9942-9959, 10007.

London Building Act—Requirements materially increase cost, 10028-10031, 10115-10118.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, Cost charged to, 9937, 9938.

REPORT, par. 317, 318.

Staff and Administration Accommodation a chief element in Cost of Vagrant
Wards, 10098-10108, 10122.

Storey Buildings—No special Economy,
Fire Proof floor required under London
Building Act, 10023-10027.

Detention :

Four days—Not in force at Poplar or
Whitechapel, 3374.

Identification, see that subheading.

Large proportion of Vagrant Wards detained two nights, 9746-9748.

Theory and Practice—One visit per month regulation did not prevent Tramps from sleeping every night in Casual
Wards, 3386-3399.

Two nights detention instead of one if Tramps had been twice in same Casual
Ward within a month, 102, 113, 116-
119.

Uniformity, Lack of—Discretion of Superintendents, etc., 10441, 10444, 10445.

Dietary, 3249-3256.

Amplly sufficient to do task on—Old Tramp's
Evidence, 3310.

Bread and Water Diet, Abolition of—Local Government Board Order of 1887,
362—Text of Order, App., page 12.

Improvement in—Less uniform, 366.

Kensington—Better diet, Ward always full,
3277-3280.

Six ounces of bread and a pint of Gruel—
Poor Law Board Order of 1866; 98.

London—*cont.*Casual Wards—*cont.*Dietary—cont.

Uniformity in Diet :

Fairly uniform throughout London,
9689.

No means of securing Uniformity short of transferring Management to one
Central Authority, 10445, 10454-10457.

Number of Wards in Metropolitan District,
3739.

Police Inspection.

Local Government Board Officers, Appointment of, in London, in lieu of the Metropolitan Police, 81-85.

No good could arise from Police Inspection, 9513-9516.

Poor Law Board Circulars of 1864 and 1865, 59.

Preferred to Workhouse, 3290.

Prison preferred—Men refusing to work, Tearing up Clothes, etc., in order to get into prison,
3322-3337, 3340-3342, 3358, 3435-3440,
3511, 3513.

Prosecutions for Offences in :

Particulars of convictions of eight habitual
Vagrants, App., pages 69-73.

Statistics for 1904, App., page 67.

Provision of Casual Wards :

Acts of 1864 and 1865, 57, 58.

Combination of Unions or Parishes authorised by Act of 1844, 42.

Division of Metropolis into Districts,
Schemes of 1846 and 1857 withdrawn
owing to Opposition, 42, 50.

Regulations very well carried out, 3243.

REPORT, par. 100-112.

Requirements specified, Inspection, etc.—Circulars of 1864 and 1865, 59.

"Same Casual Ward" means any Casual
Ward in the Metropolis, 116.

Searching of Vagrants, 3262-3264.

Self-contained Wards, not actually part of Workhouse, 10498.

Additional Administrative Cost, 10123,
10124.

Sites, Difficulty of Re-arranging—Acts of 1864-5, required Casual Ward to be provided in every Union, 10475-10477.

Task :

Circulars of 1864 and 1865, Task recommended but not prescribed, 59.

Cleaning, 3314-3317.

Competition with Outside Labour, 3362,
3365, 3366.

Expertness of Old Hands, 3310-3313, 3367, 3501.

Kinds of Labour given, 3245-3248, 3361, 3363.

Pressure in Wards where Task is Light or not enforced, 3258-3260, 3265-3267,
3272-3275, 3285, 3400-3410.

Profit on Labour, Question of, 3364, 3365.

Refusal to Work—Medical Examination in Case of Physical Inability, 3320,
3321, 3432, 3433, 3495-3498, 3505-
3510.

Stone breaking Task, Question of Profit
on, 429.

Sufficiency of, 3319.

Uniformity needed, 3257-3260.

Women, Task required of, 3248.

London—cont.Casual Wards—cont.*Task—cont.

Wood-chopping Task abandoned owing to Protests of Outside Labour, 3365, 3366.

Temperature of Wards—Tramps complaining of Cold with the Thermometer at 70°, 3385.

Uniformity in Casual Ward Administration:

Adoption of Uniformity—Circular of 1889, 186.

Result of, 263, 264, 306–308.

Enforcement of—Local Government Board Inspectors' Suggestion, 517.

No real Uniformity, 8653, 10445, 10449–10453:

Utter Lack of Uniformity shown by Number of Refusals at certain Wards while others were never full, 5417–5420.

Placing all Wards under one Authority—Suggestion, 3285, 3318, 3411, 3412.

Schemes of 1846 and 1857, 50, 51.

Tolerable Uniformity as to Diet and Task, 9743, 9744.

Visiting Officers:

Number of, Duties, etc., 3373, 3374.

Superintendent Visiting Officer, Duties of—Procedure in rectifying Irregularities, etc., 3238, 3382, 3383, 3385.

Women's Wards never full, 3274.

Census of Vagrants and Inmates of Common Lodging-houses, July, 1905:

Holborn Division, 9396–9399.

Whitechapel Division, 9630–9635.

Characteristics of Tramps:

Change in, 3477, 3478, 3486.

London Casual absolutely unaccountable, 3347.

Children:

Statistics of Vagrant Children, 265.

Very few found in Casual Wards because they were admitted to Lodging-houses, 5922, 5923.

Classes of Vagrants:

Casual Ward Vagrants a Separate Class, the Aristocracy of Vagrants, 5703, 5807–5809, 6085–6087, 8148–8150, 9509–9512, 9602, 9831.

London Vagrants a distinct body, easily distinguished, and who spend the greater part of the year in London, 3444, 3445, 10464, 10470–10474.

No distinction between Ordinary Vagrant, Shelter Habitué and Loafer, 9837, 9838, 9841, 9842.

Cleansing of Persons Act, Extent of Provision under —Act largely a Dead Letter, 5692, 5693; App., page 57.Common Lodging-houses:

Accommodation, 297; App., page 52.

Beggars Frequenting, in Preference to Free Shelters, 11088.

Census of Inmates, 9396–9399, 9633–9635.

Children admitted, 5962.

Class of Inmates, 5922.

Countrymen attracted to London, 5861–5863.

Dosser a Stationary Quantity in London, 5858.

Foreigners restricted to particular houses, 5864.

Improvidence as a class, 5883.

Large Proportion not belonging to Vagrant Class, 5645.

Old Soldiers, Number of, 5860.

London—cont.Common Lodging-houses—cont.

Common Lodging-houses Act of 1851—First Recognition by Law of Common Lodging-houses, 5648–5650.

Control by London County Council since 1894, 5646, 5647.

Bye-laws made by County Council, Text of; App., pages 172–175.

Powers of the Council, 5846–5848.

Annual Licensing, Power of, 5851–5857.

Cost of Living for Inmates:

Clothing, Cost of, 5889–5894; App., page 56.

Extreme Cheapness, Social Mischief wrought by, 5897–5900.

Food, Cost of a Day's Food, etc., 5871–5884, 5888, 5895; App., pages 53–56.

REPORT, par. 336.

Salvation Army Shelters, food given for 2d., 5885–5887.

Decline in Amount of Common Lodging-house Accommodation, 5784.

Causes of:

Furnished Rooms kept by Common Lodging-house Keepers, comparative Cheapness and Freedom from Restriction, 5800–5803.

Rowton Houses, Growth of, Supervision, etc., 5800, 5801.

Distinction between Common Lodging-house and Cheap Hotel, 5793, 5794.

Drying Clothes, Provision for—Inferiority to Provision in Shelters, 5673–5675.

Encouragement of Vagrancy, 5914.

Improvement—Houses in very good order, 5804, 5805, 6025–6028, 9446, 9639.

Information about Inmates easily obtainable, 11165–11167.

Mortality, High Rate of, 5859.

Tables for 1903 and 1904, App., page 60.

Number of Houses at the end of 1904, 5654.

Number of Inmates, App., page 52.

Fluctuations due to Weather and Seasonal Fluctuations, 5820, 5830.

Small Proportion of London lower class Population, 5817.

Open all night, 5719, 5720.

Phthisis, Prevalence of—Ventilation Question, 5859, 5903–5905.

Police do not inspect—No particular reason why they should, 9636–9639.

Prostitutes, Use by, 5749.

Registration of Inmates, Powers of London County Council to require, 5847.

REPORT, par. 328, 329, 336, 337.

Sanitation—Immense Improvement due to Inspection, 8637, 8638.

Scale of Charges, 5659, 5660.

Higher Charges for Women, 5660 5663.

Separation of the Sexes—Only three houses where separation not complete, 5806.

Size:

Larger Houses more economical, 5832–5833.

Largest Common Lodging-house, 5657.

Smaller Houses preferable from a sanitary point of view, 5831, 5834.

Tendency for number of small houses to diminish, 5656.

Smallpox Outbreak (1901–1904) largely spread by Inmates—Comparative immunity of Inmates, 5900, App., pages 52, 53.

London—cont.Common Lodging-Houses—cont.*Vermin Question :

Cleanliness the Rule, 5702.

Legislation needed for Protection of Lodgers against Verminous Persons, 5701.

Prosecutions occasionally necessary, 5695.

Women less inclined to go to Common Lodging-houses than Men, 5826, 5827.

Convictions, 3429, 3512 :

Effect on, of Improvement in Prison Diet, 349-360.

Number of, 1900-1904, 3353, 3355.

Cost of Casual Relief, App., pages 28, 32.Common Charge :

Metropolitan Poor Act of 1867, 9796, 9797, 10477.

Select Committee followed by an Act in 1864—Recommendation that Vagrancy in London should be a Common Charge, 57, 58.

Reduction of—Local Government Board Report of 1875, 120.

Crime, Absence of, among London Tramps, 3469-3473.

Beggars as a rule not criminal, 11142-11144.

Drunkenness among London Tramps, 3466-3468, 3473.

Food wasted by Casuals—Charity of East End Dwellers to Tramps, 3301-3308.

Free Food Distributions, Connection with Sleeping out, etc., 5714, 5716, 5717, 5722, 5726, 5735-5737, 5764-5766, 5906-5908, 7444-7448, 8056, 8057, 9394, 9395, 9400-9406.

Habitual Tramps—Proportion of Men who would not work, 4655-4660.

Haunts of Vagrants—Number of Cases charged at Bow Street and Marlborough Street, 10786.

Homeless Persons, see sub-heading Sleeping out.

Honest Working-men, Percentage of—Two per cent., 3281, 3282.

Identification of Vagrants, 3374-3381 :

Easy in London, 5436-5438.

Mendicity Society, Work of, 9478-9483, 11073-11076, 11079, 11116-11120, 11127, 11184-11198, 11202, 11203.

Methods of, 9489.

Officers appointed to visit Casual Wards and to point out the Casuals liable to detention.

Appointment, Salaries, etc., 10516-10519.

Bona fide Working-men not identified, 3502.

Circular of Local Government Board of 1872, 111.

Number of Identifications, 424, 3397.

Number of Visiting Officers—Number of visits and object, 10440, 10443.

Prosecutions, Question of, 114, 115.

Success of Identification Scheme :

Local Government Board Reports, 112, 120-122.

Number of Casuals relieved on Fridays during the last fifteen years, 263, 264.

System imperfect—Depends on memory of Visiting Police Officer, 9868.

Practice of Metropolitan Police Courts, no means of identifying man coming from a distance, 10638, 10639, 10778, 10785.

Incorrigible Rogues :

Methods of dealing with—Number sent up to Quarter Sessions, 9195-9199, 9274-9280.

Percentage of, among ordinary Vagrants, 10617, 10686.

London—cont.Incorrigible Rogues—cont.

REPORT, par. 218.

Industrial and Reformatory Schools under London Authorities.

Cost of—Double the cost of other similar institutions, 4527-4530, 4563, 4564, 4633, 4634.

Information—Rapidly of Circulation among Tramps, 3348-3350.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund, see that title, also subheading Cost.

Mid-day Meal, opinion against—No objection to a ration of Bread, 9765-9769.

Money left by Casuals at a leaving place before entering Casual ward, 3415, 3416.

Occupations of Habitual Tramp when not in Casual Ward, 3299, 3300.

Pedlars' Licences, Issue of—Strict enquiry into Character, etc., 9412-9414, 9490-9492.

Police Stations, Meals given at, to Vagrants, pending proceedings, 9546-9550.

Relieving Officers for Vagrants :

Police as—Duty reluctantly undertaken, 1863 to 1872, 52-56, 75-80.

Special officers appointed by Boards of Guardians in place of the Police, 81-90.

Scheme for dealing with Vagrants—Scheme restricted to London only would be fatal, 8275.

Sentences :

Begging :

Length of Sentences given, 11080.

Sentences depend upon Circumstances, 9553-9555.

REPORT, par. 187.

Twenty-one days and over preferred, 3343-3346, 3441-3443.

Uniformity :

Lack of Uniformity, 3424-3428, 6058-6060, 8584-8590.

Some Uniformity, 11135.

Stipendiaries—Agreement as to Sentences, 10687.

Vagrants leniently treated, 9436.

Shelters, App., pages 51, 52.

Accommodation :

Insufficiency, 7437-7440.

Number of Shelters and Amount of Accommodation, 297, 5655, 5840-5843.

Children, Shelters admitting—Salvation Army Shelters and Dr. Barnardo's Homes, 5961.

Competition with Common Lodging-houses :

Always full, whereas there are usually Vacancies in common Lodging-houses and Casual Wards, 5718, 5772-5774.

Greater freedom of Lodging-houses would counterbalance the extra cost, 6029-6034.

Tendency to prefer poorer and cheaper accommodation while able to pay for better, 5679-5687, 5690, 5718, 5772-5774.

Control by London County Council as Common Lodging-houses—High Court decision in 1899, 5651.

Exceptions—Providence Row and Baggallay Street, Stepney, Shelters, 5652.

Number of Shelters under Control, Accommodation, 5655.

Distinctive Features of Shelters—Philanthropic object and Poorer Accommodation, 5664, 5835.

Drying and Disinfecting Clothes, Provision for, 5672-5674.

London—cont.Shelters—cont.

Effect in filling Casual Wards, 3457.

Evils of —Loafers attracted from other Districts, 5914, 5936, 5937, 9589-9591, 9597, 9598, 11105.

Filthy condition of Vagrants frequenting Shelters —Source of Public danger, Power required to remove such persons from streets, 9599-9604, 9645-9648.

Free Shelters, 5844.

No free shelters in District of Holborn Division of Metropolitan Police, 9447-9449.

Prostitutes not using shelters, 5748-9.

Reduction of Vagrancy 1842-1844 attributed to opening of Refuges, 40.

REPORT, par. 330-337.

Scale of Charges—Lodgings to be had for 1d. or 2d., 3416.

Standard of Accommodation—Bunks, etc.—Re-arrangement of Bedding required on Standard of Common Lodging-Houses, 5810.

Artificial Warmth doing away with some of the drawbacks of Bunks, 5677.

Inmates could probably pay for better Accommodation, but the tendency is to take the cheapest offered and go down to a lower Standard, 5679-5687, 5689.

Method of giving effect to decision—Lord Chief Justice's Recommendation, 5668.

Objections to Bunks on grounds of Health and Cleanliness, 5669-5671.

Vermin difficulty, 5690, 5691.

Scale of Charges, Probable Effect on—Laundry and Floor Space Questions, 5676, 5678.

Time-limit fixed by London County Council, 5664.

Time-limit for Multiple Bunks already expired, 5665, 5666.

Women—Only one Shelter for Women, 5749.

Sick Tramps—Admissions to Infirmary, 3503.

Sleeping out and Walking Streets at Night in London, 5469, 5470, 5710.

Amount of Sleeping-out in London :

Average of fifteen hundred, 6123.

Percentage of Population Sleeping out, 5717.

Statistics for 1893-1903, 8582, 8583.

Weather, Effect of, 5828—Increase in Sleeping out during Summer, 5821-5823.

Bow Street Cases, chiefly Children—No difficulty in disposing of them, 10712, 10714.

Casuals as a rule do not Sleep out, 3417-3420.

Census taken by London County Council, 9728, App., pages 56-59.

Both Counts taken in Winter, 5819.

Count of 29th January, 1904, 5715, 5717, 5723—Precautions taken against over-estimating numbers, 5724.

Count of 17th February, 1905, 5726.

Weather Substantially fine in both Cases, 5829.

Distinctive Appearance of Sleeping-out Class, 5725.

Hobbledehoys who have got into the habit of Stopping Out, but are not Homeless, Percentage of, 5735-5737.

London—cont.

Sleeping out and Walking Streets at Night in London—cont.

Holborn Division of Police—Number of Apprehensions, 9375.

Means of Livelihood of Sleeping-out Class—Cadging in Common lodging-houses, etc., 5730-5734.

Not due to lack of Accommodation, 5818.

Objections to Sleeping out—Leads to Crime, etc., Scandal that there should be any Sleeping out in London, 9726, 9727, 9755-9760, 9845, 9846, 9850, 9851.

Places for Sleeping—Sheds, Areas, Thames Embankment, etc., 9378.

Police powers in regard to Sleeping out, 5868, 9456-9459.

Staircases in Spitalfields, Sleeping on—Police do not patrol private buildings, 9566-9573.

Segregation of Sleeping-out Class proposed, 5750, 5751, 5811, 5824-5, 5869.

Legislation needed—Deterrent Effect Anticipated, 5757-5763, 5870.

Numbers to be dealt with, 5764, 5770, 5771.

Sentences—Absolute lack of Uniformity, 8584, 8590.

Light Sentences unless it is a repeated Offence, 9428-9433.

Thames Embankment, Objections to Sleeping on Seats, 9451-9455, 9518-9524, 9537-9542.

Walking about at night not an Offence, 5728, 5729.

Women Sleeping on Staircases, etc., 5738.

Age of Women—Not many Young Girls, 5746, 5747.

Casual Wards, Objection of Homeless Women to, 5745.

Homeless Women—Women would not Sleep out if they could pay for a bed, 5743, 5744.

Small proportion of Women Sleeping out, 5846, 5847.

Statistics :

Accurately kept for a long time, 228.

Men, Women and Children shewn separately, 230.

Way-ticket System :

Production of Ticket, Question of, 9733.

Uselessness of, for a Man who spent his time in going from one Casual Ward to another, 9732, 9831, 9832.

London Building Act

Requirements—Cost of Workhouse Building increased by about 15 per cent., 10028-10031, 10115-10118.

London County Council

Authority for Control of Vagrants, Question of, 10459.

Common Lodging-houses and Shelters, Control of, 5646, 5651.

Bye-laws for Common Lodging-houses, App., pages 172-175.

Exceptions.

Providence Row and Baggallay Street, Stepney, Shelters, 5652, 5653.

Rowton Houses, 5658.

Conferences on Spread of Smallpox by Vagrants, 1894 and 1904, 530.

London County Council—cont.

Municipal Lodging-houses established by the Council
—Cost, Accommodation, etc., 5775–5783.

Food Supplied at a Fixed Tariff, 5781.

London Mendicity Society

Almsgiving—Society's Efforts to educate Subscribers not to give Indiscriminately, 11062, 11103, 11104.

Begging Letters, System of Dealing with, Number
Dealt with in 1904, etc., 11062–11064, 11066,
11067, 11103.

Charity Organisation Society, Harmonious Relations with, 11064–11067.

Arrangement with London Mendicity Society for Services of Society's Constables—
Subscription discontinued, 11066.

Constables employed by Society:

Annual Expenditure on Salaries, Payment out of Society's Private Funds, 11062, 11069, 11170, 11177, 11133.

Certificated by Chief Commissioner of Police,
11062, 11030–11132, 11169, 11173–11176.

Fully employed—at least one more wanted,
11070, 11073, 11077, 11078, 11161, 11162.

Founded by Duke of Wellington in 1818, 11062.

Free Food and Enquiry Tickets given by Society, 11103, 11104.

Food given for Food Tickets, 11204.

Proportion redeemed by Presentation at Places named on them, 11181–11183.

Funds of the Society:

Deficit, 11070.

Home Office Grant, Claim of Society to, 11071, 11133, 11134, 11171, 11178–11180.

Income, 11098.

“Helpable” Cases, 11084–11087.

Home Office, Recognition of Society by, 11062, 11169.

Methods of Society in regard to Street Begging—
Identification of Beggars, Records kept,
Personal knowledge of Constables, 9478–
9483, 11073–11076, 11079, 11116–11119,
11120, 11127, 11184–11198, 11202, 11203.

Precautions Taken—no Cases of Mistaken
Identity, 11195–11197.

Time required to hunt up Record of a Man,
11184, 11190, 11191.

Number of Beggars Annually dealt with—Number of Helpable Cases, 11081–11085, 11145.

Police, Society's Services to—Opinion of Commissioner of Police, 11071, 11079, 11128, 11129, 11171, 11198—If Police took over Society's
Work, it would cost more and be less well done, 11180.

Societies doing similar Work and Holding Similar Position to Mendicity Society, 11172–11177.

Lucerne Labour Colony

Accommodation, 8431.

Size, Cost, Term of Detention, Discipline, etc., 8430.

Lühlerheim Labour Colony

Number of Admissions in 1903–4—Repeated Admissions, 3733–3736.

Magistrates

Antagonistic Feeling towards Workhouse Administration, Mischievous Effects of, 2987.

Authority to Control Vagrancy, Magistrates as.

Labour Colonies, Fitness of Magistrates to commit to, see title Labour Colonies—Committal.

Magistrates—cont.

Authority to Control Vagrancy—cont.

Magistrates acting in Agreement with Boards of Guardians and Police—Recommendation of Charity Organisation Society Committee in 1873, 8641.

Industrial Schools, Unwillingness to commit
Children to, 4588.

Leniency of Magistrates—Mistaken sympathy shown to Vagrancy Offenders, 1641–1643, 1833,
1849, 1850, 2670–2673, 5540.

Discharging Vagrant on promise to leave Town,
Practice of, 10782, 10783.

Incorrigible Rogue, Unwillingness to Convict as, 7760.

Explanation—Magistrates' feeling that a few days' Imprisonment was Punishment enough for Begging, 7896.

REPORT, par. 217, 219.

Powers in Scotland:

Detention in Poorhouse, Powers of Magistrates,
6505–6512.

Relief—no Power to order Relief, 6513, 6514.

Refractory Paupers, Uniformity in dealing with needed, 2110, 2308.

Difference in Sentences given by Local and Stipendiary Magistrates at Sheffield, 2455– 2457.

Uniformity in Dealing with Vagrancy Offences,
Need for:

Circular to Magistrates, Suggestion, 7872, 7873.

Difference of Opinion as to enforcement of the Law, 8751, 8752.

Discretion of Magistrates should be left unrestricted, 10647, 10648, 10691, 10695, 10758–10764.

Home Office Circular Drawing Attention to Evil of Short Sentences, Question of,
10696, 10697.

London, Absolute Lack of Uniformity, 8584–
8590, 8751, 8752.

Manchester

Begging:

Apprehensions for, 7758.

Commitments in 1904, 9125, 9126

Statistics, 1900–1904, App., page 161.

Casual Wards:

Accommodation—New Premises capable of Accommodating 1000 vagrants, 7765.

Admissions, Average Numbers, 7766, 7767.

Statistics, 1904 and 1905, App., page 160.

Cost of Construction, 9917.

Detention—Not enforced if Man can give any Evidence that he is likely to get
Work, 8000–8002.

Joint Wards for Manchester, Prestwich and Chorlton, 7762–7765.

Management Excellent—Superior to that of
Common Lodging-houses, 7959–7961, 9168.

Police Inspection—No Systematic Inspection,
but Police never refused Access, 7781, 7782.

Refusal to Work—Very few Prosecutions for, 7998.

Separate from Workhouse—No Difficulty in Transferring Wards to Police, 7938, 7939.

Task of Stone breaking, 7818.

Not enforced if Man has Work to go to, 8003.

Permitting Task to be done on Day of Admission—Regulations passed to stop outcry against Detention, 7818–
7820, 8003.

Manchester—cont.Casual Wards—cont.

Unpopularity with Tramps—Prison and sleeping out Preferred, 7862, 7863, 7934, 7940–7947.

Question in Manchester is how to get Vagrants to use the Wards, not how to keep them away, 7992.

Child Vagrancy, App., page 163.

Activity of N.S.P.C.C., 7931, 7932, 7993.

Decrease in—Effect of Introduction of Street Trading Act, etc., 7927, 7929.

Church Army Shelters—No Attraction for Vagrants, because they have to work there, 7954–7957.

Common Lodging-house and Shelter Accommodation, App., page 159.

Crime among Vagrants, 7847.

Free Shelter and Food in Wood Street: App., page 159.

Men who have previously paid for their lodging attracted by, 7948–7953.

Tramps attracted from other towns, 7975, 7976.

Habitual Vagrants, Number of, 7849–7851.

Permanent nucleus of Vagrants hanging round Manchester and its neighbourhood, 7840–7842.

Honest workseekers, Proportion of—not 20 per cent., 7771, 7772.

Labour Bureau.

Free Registry, 7806.

Conditions of registration excluding tramps, 7983, 7984.

Objections to—Registration was useless without work to give, and the bureau attracted men to the town and led to dangerous assemblages at the offices, 7882–7889.

Posters outside Police Stations and at 100 other places, 7815, 7816.

Pedlars' Certificates.

Forfeiture on conviction—Convicted man permitted to hawk in Manchester only if he is likely to be honest in future, 7913, 7914.

Precautions taken in granting or renewing certificates, 7902–7904.

Police :

No control over Vagrants, Dealings with Vagrant confined to cases of offences under the Vagrancy Act, 7752.

Number of, 7837.

Popularity of town with Tramps—Amount of indiscriminate charity, etc., 8004–8007.

Sentences—Leniency of Magistrates, Number of Vagrants let off, etc., 7782–7786, 7853.

Average length of sentence, 7787, 7788.

Justice, not Stipendiary, Vagrancy cases taken before, 7852.

Sleeping out, App., pages 159, 162.

Apprehension for—Sleeping-out winked at in public places, 7753–7757.

Class of Vagrants—Dangerous class of thoroughly idle men, Percentage known to Police, etc., 7770, 7826, 7827.

Exceptional amount, 7825, 8134, 8135.

Numbers sleeping out, in spite of ample Casual Ward and Lodging-house accommodation, 7862, 7863, 7934, 7940–7947.

Police Powers, Question of further powers—Labour Colonies would solve the difficulty of what to do with the night loafer, 7980–7982.

Statistics, 1900–1904, App., page 161.

Manchester—cont.Sleeping out—cont.

Winter, Larger numbers sleeping out, because in summer the tramps are in the country, 7768, 7769.

Unemployed :

Fund for—Decision not to have a fund for fear of attracting loafers, 7977, 7978.

Marching in a body to demand Relief from Poor Law Authorities, 7887–7889.

Manchester Prison—Treatment of Prisoners of the Vagrant Class.

Accommodation, 9095.

Bath—Real hot bath, 9129, 9130.

Bedding—Plank bed unless mattress ordered by Medical Officer, 9132.

Cell, Size of, 9131.

Commitments for Vagrancy offences in 1904, 9123–9127.

Diet—A. Diet for the first week, B. for the second, 9063, 9064.

Exemption from work by Medical Certificate—Considerable number of exemptions, 9110–9113.

First Day, 9128.

Hours of work, 9053, 9058, 9106–9109.

Industrial labour for Prisoners certified unfit for hard labour, 9134–9137.

Oakum picking task :

Allowance made to a new hand, 9146.

Amount required, time taken, etc., 9052, 9057, 9103–9105.

No mechanical aids permitted, except where a man is not strong, 9098–9102.

Refusal to work, Punishment Diet, etc., 9114, 9115.

Sentences—Average length, 9060–9062.

Medical Attendance, etc., for Sick Tramps

see Sick Tramps.

Medical Examination of Vagrants

Common Lodging-houses.

No provision for medical examination, 3158, 3161.

Resolution of Conference of 1894, 3124.

Compulsory medical examination of all persons entering Common Lodging-houses and Casual Wards—London County Council Conference of 1894, Resolution, 530, 3124.

Inspectors' suggestions to the Local Government Board, 517.

No one's duty—Vagrant could refuse to be examined if he chose, 3073, 3074.

Opinion in favour of, 3124–3130.

Refusal to work, Examination in Case of, see title-Task, also Prison.

Smallpox Epidemics—Daily examination of all Casuals, Local Government Board suggestion to Guardians, 528, 3165.

Cost difficulty, 3166–3172.

Sheffield—Nightly examination of Casuals when there is any sign of Smallpox in Yorkshire, 2410.

Weekly or fortnightly inspection—Workhouse Masters' Association suggestion, 2078, 2308–2312.

Medical Officers of Workhouses

Rules for attendance, by arrangement with the Guardians, 476–482.

Salary, Method of payment, 524–527.

Medland Hall Shelter

Class of men frequenting—Able-bodied Regular Vagrants, 9576, 9577, 9592, 9593.

Food Tickets given to people who could not be taken in, 9610, 9611.

Free Food and Shelter, 5716, 5840, 5843, 5844, 9574, 9576.

Habitual frequenters, 9578-9581.

Mendicity Societies

see their names—London Mendicity Society, etc.

Merionethshire

Prosecutions for offences under Vagrancy Acts, Number of prosecutions and convictions—Police vigilance, 5540-5542.

Merxplas Labour Colony

Classification of Colonists:

Criminals placed among men who have not been convicted, 10184, 10190.

Grants paid by Local Authorities, 10283.

Lowest grade kept entirely separate, 5291-5295.

Cost.

Estimate for 1905, App., page 124.

Less than £10 per head, 4512.

Detention, Benefit of—Highly skilled workmen content, kept away from drink, etc., 10165-10168.

Dietary—Meat occasionally, Food good, but more would be required in England, 10221, 10222.

Scales in force, App., pages 125, 126.

Subdued appearance of Colonists, 8909.

Employment for Discharged Colonists:

Discharge Machinery, Suggestion for, 6291, 7172, 7454-7456.

Work found, but rarely kept, 8956.

Moral defects of Men rather than the Merxplas taint cause of difficulty, 8989-8992.

Employment of Colonists, App., page 122.

Do all their own work, build their own buildings, etc., 10170, 10205.

Difficulty likely to arise when the place has reached the limit of development, 8987, 8988.

Hiring out Colonists, 8983, 8984.

Outside Market, Work done for—Mats sent to England, etc., 6389-6393, 8980-8983, 10225-10227.

Variety of Employment, 8986.

Value of Colonists' Labour—Amount and quality excellent, 8899, 8903, 8904.

Improvement in Tone and Management since 1890, 8979.

Inducements to work.

Payment of Colonists, Advantages of System, 956-959, App., page 122.

Success of System, no unwillingness to work, 8893-8897.

Uniformity, Objections to—no Grading, nothing to Inspire a Man, 10179, 10190.

Industrial Training, Nature of—No real teaching, 6321-6324, 8898-8903, 10206, 10207, 10209-10211.

Medical Arrangements, 8910.

Objections to—Practically a Prison, 5245-5247.

Punishments, App., page 123.

Reformative Influence, Question of—Men not reformed, 8956, 8992, 10241-10243.

Lack of Humanising Influences, 8997, 8998, 9000-9002, 10189, 10240.

Inaccessibility—very difficult to bring any outside religious influence to bear on it, 8995, 8996.

REPORT, par. 233-238, 273, 274.

Merxplas Labour Colony—cont.

Sentences on Colonists kept distinct from Judicial System, 10275.

Sick Men.

Dietary for, App., page 126.

Proportion of, 8911.

Size—5,000 Men in one place far too many, 9015, 9016, 10173, 10213, 10214.

Population of Colony, Statistics 1890-1905, App., page 123.

Time tables for summer and winter, App., page 123.

Metropolitan Asylums Board

Authority for control of Vagrants in London—Opinion that they have as much as they can do, 10459.

Metropolitan Common Poor Fund

Administration of, by the Local Government Board, 9797, 9798.

All Casual Ward expenses fall on, 9937, 9938.

One Union does not get more from the Fund than another, notwithstanding extra expenditure on Casual Wards, 9799.

Metropolitan Houseless Poor Acts, 1864-5.

Casual Ward, Provision of, required in every Union in London, 10475-10477.

Metropolitan Police District

Casual Wards in, App., page 90.

REPORT, par. 137-145.

Mid-day Meal for Tramps leaving Casual Ward

Advisable if it could be made universal, 2118.

Amount of Bread given under Way-ticket Systems.

Gloucestershire— $\frac{1}{2}$ lb., originally 1 lb., 516, 1553, 1591, 1602.

Insufficient to attract tramps to Casual Ward, 1743, 1744.

Sufficient amount, 4409.

Wiltshire, 1945-1947.

Bakers' Shops, Granting Orders on, 401, 640.

Suggestions in Favour of, to the Local Government Board, 516.

Begging and Almsgiving—Mid-day Meal a possible check on indiscriminate Charity, 388-390, 1558, 1559, 1575, 1829, 1849-1853, 2563-2567, 2654-2660, 2671, 2673, 2968-2975, 3034, 4886, 6291, 10204.

Circulars warning people not to give to Beggars, 1575-1578, 1584, 1585, 1592-1597, 1672—Text of Circulars, App., pages 40, 46.

Effect of Circular as shown by Proportion of Tramps not using ticket for Mid-day Meal, 1677-1683.

Effect limited to Casual Ward tramps, 4673.

Bread Ticket Systems:

Dorsetshire, 4928-4930, App., page 48.

Gloucestershire, App., page 44.

Hampshire, 4879.

Herefordshire Mendicity Society, Meal given by, 4191, 4192, 4258-4260, App., page 49.

Wiltshire, 1792, 1795.

Breakfast, Remains of—Tramps allowed to take away Bread from Cuckfield Workhouse, 2115-2117.

Church Army Way-ticket Experiment—Informal provision for Mid-day Meal, 8091-8093.

Cost of Bread given:

Gloucestershire, 1636, 1637.

Payment of Bread bill, 1617.

Statistics, 1890-1904, App., page 44.

Increase in cost in Wiltshire, 1798-1805, 1808-1813.

Every facility for getting Tickets, with Prosecution in case of Misuse of Ticket, suggestion, 4933.

Mid-day Meal for Tramps leaving Casual Ward—cont.

Kind of Food to be given—Suggestions :

Bread Meal not very attractive to Vagrants—they would prefer a glass of Beer, 7597, 7598.

Bread or Bread and Cheese, 393, 516, 4734.

Suitable Food not involving much Cooking, Suggestions as to, 10865, 10922-10926.

London—Opinion against Mid-day Meal—No Objection to a ration of Bread, 9765-9769.

Necessity of Mid-day Meal for the Tramp, Impossible to live on Casual Ward Diet, 2561-2563.

On day of Dismissal from Casual Ward, 7864-7869.

Not provided except by Voluntary effort in a few Counties, 372-374.

Opinion in favour of, 392, 394, 718, 2564-2566, 2968-2975, 3034, 4160, 4161, 4732-4735, 11113-11115.

Place where Meal to be obtained :

Distance between Workhouse and Bread Station, 1604.

Food to be given at the Workhouse door, Question of, 388, 395-401—Practice at Wycombe, 2971.

Meal to be given at a centre where it should be eaten—Suggestion, 2092.

Police, Meal given through—Application at Police Station, etc., 401-403, 638, 639, 640.

Berkshire System, 4847.

Opinions in favour of—Recommendations to the Local Government Board, 516.

Wiltshire System, 1947-1951.

Proportion of Tramps not using Tickets given them in Gloucestershire, 1599-1601.

Effect of Circular against Almsgiving, Extent of effect shown by proportion of unused tickets, 1677-1683.

Public or private Charity, Question as to, 4931 4932.

REPORT, par. 160-168—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 181, 429 (6, 13.)

Summary of Replies from Chief Constables of Counties, App., pages 61-66.

Time of day when food-tickets would be asked for, 637-639.

Militiamen

Number of Militiamen resorting to Casual Wards on the way to and from Training—Case of Men detained at Exeter, 8541-8544.

Misbehaviour by Paupers

see Refractory Paupers.

Money owned by Applicants for Relief

Earnings of an Ordinary Tramp :

London, 11089, 11103.

Found on Tramps who had represented themselves as destitute, 499.

Ayrshire Cases, 6775.

Begging, Persons arrested for, Average amount of Money found on, 1683-1687.

Concealed in Clothes—Man with 5s. in his Cap claiming relief, 2415.

Not much carried about—only small sums found on Vagrants at Bow Street, 10720-10722.

Taken away on admission to Casual Ward—Local Government Board Order of 1882, 144.

Hiding Money, etc., before admission to Workhouse, 2085-2087, 5535, 5597, 5598.

Leaving Places—London Tramps depositing their money at a leaving-place before entering Casual Ward, 3415, 3416.

Money owned by Applicants for Relief—cont.

Taken away on admission to Casual Ward—cont.

One member of gang taking gang's Money to Common Lodging-house while therest went to Casual Ward, 5017.

Tramp sending wife and child to Common Lodging-house with money and going himself into Casual Ward, 1755, 2004.

Moritzburg Workhouse

Cost per head, Earnings of Inmates, 3834.

Morning Post Embankment Home

Type of Church Army Receiving Home, 8030.

Munden Colony—German Labour Colony in Hertfordshire.

Conditions of Admission, 8441, 8442.

Cost—Colony by no means Self-Supporting, 8441.

Employment of Colonists—Indoor and Outdoor Work, 8440.

Object of Colony that no German-speaking Man would have an excuse for saying he could find no work, 8440.

Previous Careers of Inmates very thoroughly examined, 8440, 8442.

Prison—To have been in Prison did not debar Admission, 8443, 8444.

Repatriation, Cost of, borne by the Colony, 8441.

Size of Colony, Number of Colonists, 8440.

Tokens given in return for Work, 8441, 8517.

Trades, etc., of persons admitted in 1904—Number of Waiters, 8445-8448.

Municipal Lodging-houses

London County Council Houses—Charges, Accommodation, etc., 5775-5783.

Opinion in favour of, 6682

National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children

see Cruelty to Children, National Society for Prevention of.

Nationality of Tramps

Ayrshire, 6805.

Dundee, 6662, 6663.

North Wales, Statistics, 5550.

Scotland, 6617, 6618.

Navvies

Character taken away by their Tramp Hangers-on—the Navvy a poor harmless person getting drunk every Saturday, 6937.

Old-fashioned "Velvet-back" almost extinct, 7592.

Presence in a District attracting Vagrants—Navvy a good person to cadge from, 1571-1573, 1664, 1767-1770, 1806, 1807, 1896, 1962, 1963, 2135, 2448, 4280-4283, 5543, 5544, 6670, 6806, 6807, 6936-6941, 7634.

Requiring Authorities responsible to provide Accommodation for their Workmen, suggestion, 2136-2139.

Wandering tendencies—Exceptional for a man to stay on a piece of work for any length of time, 6807, 7590-7592.

Newcastle-on-Tyne

Common Lodging-houses.

Condition of, 3140, 3151, 3152, 3216, 3224, 3225.

Inspection, Provision for, 3205-3207, 3228, 3230, 3231.

Number of people living in, 3229.

Proceedings against, for failure to Report Smallpox Case, etc., 3221-3224.

Newcastle-on-Tyne—cont.

- Medical Officer of Health, Reports on spread of Smallpox by Vagrants, 530.
- Population and Area, 7633, 7634.
- Vaccination—Compensation given to Working Men, 3212.
- Workhouse Authorities, Willingness to notify Infectious Cases, 3167.

Newdigate Farm Colony (Church Army)

- Subsidiary Industry necessary in Winter, 8189, 8190.
- Use of, as test for Emigration, 8105, 8208, 8209.

Night's Relief

- Meaning of phrase, 1825.

Norfolk

- Begging and Sleeping out Prosecutions—Statistics for 1903, 1069.

North Bierley Workhouse—Women's Casual Ward, 1297.

- Admission—Complaint as to Conduct of Pauper admitting Women, 1345, 1357–1361.
- Beds—Chain Mattress, 1363, 1364.
- Cells, 1432.
- Cleanliness of Ward, 1362.
- Clothing.
 - Drying and Disinfecting, 1345–1347.
 - Garments supplied, Condition of, 1347, 1362
- Detention and Time of Discharge—Evasion of Regulations, 1365–1368, 1449.
- Dietary—Sweet Gruel and Bread, Bathroom Water, etc., 1347–1356.
- Mid-day Meal, 1365.
- Task Work very hard on food given—Nature of Food Medicinal, 1365–1368.
- Official, Conduct of, 1350, 1351.

North Wales Unions

- Bathing—Not so General as Searching, 5533.
- Casual Ward Offences—Prosecutions during 1904, 5540.
- Casual Wards at Workhouses, 5617, 5618.
- Cell System—Number of Unions in which Cells provided, 5510.
- Child Vagrants, Number of, 5510, 5557, 5639.
- Common Lodging-houses, Number of Vagrants relieved in, during 1904, 5510, 5635.
- Detention:
 - Discretionary Powers of Masters, 5520–5523.
 - Sunday, Detention over, 5523—Resolution passed by Conference of Guardians, 5632.
- Diet—Variation in different Unions, 5510.
- Distance between Casual Wards—Wards too close together, 5575–5577.
- General Pauperism—Number of Paupers relieved during 1904, 5510.
- Honest Working Men, Discretionary Treatment of, 5514, 5520–5523.
- Increase in Vagrancy during last three years, 5507–5510, 5635–5638.
- Nationality of Vagrants, 5550.
- Police as Assistant Relieving Officers—Tickets admitting to Casual Ward issued by Police, 5518, 5519, 5527, 5531.
- Prosecutions and Convictions under Vagrancy Acts during 1904—Leniency of Magistrates, 5540–5542, 5579.
- Searching—Vagrants searched at Police Station, 5524, 5525, 5534.
 - Distance between Police Station and Casual Ward, 5528–5530.

North Wales Unions—cont.

- Searching, etc.—cont.
 - Hiding belongings before Search, Possibility of, 5535, 5597, 5598.
 - Women Vagrants not searched, 5537–5539.
- Sleeping Accommodation, Variation in different Unions, 5510.
- Smallpox introduced by Tramps whether Bathing Regulations enforced or not, 5547–5549.
- Sympathetic attitude of Welsh Guardians—Treating Vagrants as Christians, etc., 5579.
- Task, Variation in different Unions—Coloured Ticket System, etc., 5513–5517.
- Uniformity, Lack of, 5509, 5568.

Northallerton Union

- Casual Ward, Description of—Cell System, etc., 3927, 4055.

Northumberland

- Begging, 7712, 7713, 8582.
- Census of Vagrants—Census taken on the Roads, 7519–7524, 7530.
 - Accuracy of Accounts, Name, etc., given by Tramps themselves, 7524–7526.
 - Hours between which Census was taken, 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.—Casual Ward Tramps would not escape because two nights' detention hardly ever exacted, 7540–7542.
- Child Vagrancy, Small Amount of—No special protection for Child Vagrants, 7531–7534, 7536, 7715–7718.
- Common Lodging-houses—Police had no right of Entry, but were always admitted, 7517, 7518.
- Cost of taking a man from remote Union to Prison in Newcastle, 7648–7651.
- Crime among Vagrants, Proportion of, 7664–7666.
- Detention—Two nights hardly ever exacted, 7541, 7542, 7545.
- Distance between Casual Wards—Ponteland, six miles from Newcastle, might be suppressed, 7638.
- Drunkenness, Convictions for, 7746, 7747.
- Gipsies:
 - Inclosure Act of 1899, Gipsies in process of being abolished by the Act, 7727, 7730, 7731.
 - Number of, 7560, 7561, 7726.
- Increase in Vagrancy due to termination of the War and slackness of Trade, 7554–7558, 7714.
- Intimidation—Very few cases, thanks to Bicycle-policeman, Telephone and Dog, 7562–7566.
- Lack of Uniformity in carrying out Local Government Board Regulations, Difficulty in case of small unions, 7627–7636.
- Police:
 - Assistant Relieving Officers, Police as.
 - Hours occupied—Additional Police needed, 7512–7514, 7615, 7616.
 - Success of System, 7508, 7509.
 - Inspection of Casual Wards and Common Lodging-houses—No habitual Inspection, 7517, 7518, 7622–7625.
 - Workhouse Officials, Relations with, 7617–7621.
- Poor Law Offences—Very few Convictions, 7719–7724.
- Prison not preferred to Casual Ward—No extra Comforts in Newcastle Prison, 7646.
- Prosecutions, 1902–1904, App., page 79.
- Sentences—Average of seven days, 7581.
- Sleeping out in 1903, 8582.
- Task—Wood chopping and Stone breaking, 7543, 7544.

Norwich

Casual Ward as compared with Prison—Prison preferred, 2633-2639, 2838.

Bedding in Norwich Prison, 2839, 2840.

Refusal to work—Average length of Sentences, 2740.

Oakum Picking

Alternative for those unequal to Stone breaking, 3361.

Amount given, Time occupied, etc., in Manchester Prison, 9052, 9057, 9098, 9102-9105.

Decrease in, in Casual Wards, 175, 327.

Abolition at Cuckfield, 2172.

Small amount at Dewsbury Union, 904.

Mechanical Aids.

Four lbs. with a fiddle preferable to 3 lbs. without, 9366.

Not allowed in Manchester and Pentonville Prisons, 9098-9102, 9224-9228.

Objections to—Penal air, Wasteful, etc., 176, 326, 330-332, 429.

Penal purpose, 9147.

Prisons and Casual Wards, Comparative Tasks—Local Government Board Comment in 1888, 179.

Remunerative Task, Question of.

Dead loss—Every ton costing about £10, 5384.

No Profit, 3364.

Partly Remunerative, 3931.

Skilled Labour—allowance made for a new hand, 9146.

Uniformity Difficulty, 328, 329.

Objection to Tramps

Police Nuisance rather than Poor Law Nuisance, Infesting Roads, Threatening Women, etc., 403, 404, 2672.

(see also title Begging and Almsgiving—Threats.)

Old and Infirm Vagrants

Committal to Workhouse pending Inquiry and Deportation to place of Settlement—Worth trying as an Experiment, 10506-10509.

Difficulty of dealing with, objection to going to Workhouses :

Compulsory Detention of Vagrants in proper place of Settlement suggested, 10729-10738.

Compulsory Removal to Workhouse of Birth-place—Wiltshire Poor Law Association—Recommendation to Local Government Board, 516.

Some form of Segregation needful, 8720-8725.

Discharge, Question of.

Guardians would be glad to get rid of these people, 5478.

No cases in Workhouse to be allowed to Discharge themselves without Consent of Governing Body, 10510-10515.

Increase in Number—Effect of Trade Unionism and Employers' Liability Act, 4917-20.

Interpretation of "Infirm," Intervention of Medical Officer, 473-475.

REPORT, par. 84, 389, 390—RECOMMENDATION, par. 391.

Treatment as suffering from Senile Decay—Suggestion, 5474-5477.

Orders issued by poor Law Commissioners, Poor Law, Board, and Local Government Board.

1842—Separate Ward, Diet, and Task under Regulations, 39.

1866—Diet for London Casuals, 93, 94.

1871—Uniform Diet and Task, Separate Cells, etc., 104.

Orders issued by Poor Law Commissioners, etc.—cont.

1882—Regulations for Treatment of Casuals, 144-158—Text of Order, App., pages 9-12.

1887—Improvement of Diet for Casuals in London, 362—Text of Order, App., page 12.

1892—Discharge on second morning after admission at 5.30 in Summer, and 6.30 in Winter, 188—Text of Order, App., page 13.

1897—Improvement of Diet—Milk for Children, 411-415—Text of Order, App., page 13.

Owestry House of Industry

System for Relief of Vagrants—Captain Sterne's Report (1872), 2006.

Oxford Casual Ward

Diet, Change in—Effect on amount of Vagrancy, 8619.

Parker Street, Drury Lane

London County Council Municipal Lodging-house, 5775.

Charge for Bed, Accommodation, etc., 5776, 5777, 5779-5783.

Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871.

Provisions of, 87, 102.

Pauperism

see General Pauperism.

Payment for work done by Vagrants as means of Reclamation

Suggestion, 3927.

Pea-pickers in Gloucestershire

No bye-laws, no arrangements, 1718-1721.

Pedlars' and Hawkers' Certificates, Renewal Question, etc.

Act of 1882, Certificates made to apply all over the Country.

Abuse, Possibilities of, 6823, 6824.

Supervision by force granting Certificate, No possibility of, 7682-7684.

Apprehensions for peddling without a Licence, 9415, 9416.

Care needed in granting Certificate as it gives facilities for Crime to a dishonest Man, 7573-7575, 7691, 7692, 7902, 7903.

Manchester, precautions taken, 7903, 7904.

Northumberland, care taken in, 7697, 7698.

Strict Inquiry in London, more easily granted in Country Districts, 9412-9414, 9490-9495.

Conditions on which Certificate is granted, alteration proposed—Putting Pedlar on same footing as Hawker, 7576.

Confusion of Pedlars with Vagrants inevitable, 7588 7589.

Conviction involving forfeiture of Certificate, 7906-7913.

Manchester—Permitting a man who had been convicted, but was likely to be honest in future, to hawk in Manchester only, 7913, 7914.

Endorsing Convictions on Certificate—Suggestion, 7573, 7699, 7700.

Drunkenness and Assault, endorsing Convictions for—Renewal would not be refused on account of Drunkenness, but endorsing Conviction would help to guide the renewing Authority, 7701-7703.

Not necessary at all, 7918-7923.

Fee going to Police Pension Fund, Effect on granting of Certificates.

Not likely to have any effect, 7693-7696.

Possible inducement to a very economical Watch Committee in a small district, 7915-7917.

Pedlars' and Hawkers' Certificates, etc.—cont.

Gipsies, Hawker's Licence usually held by, 7706

Identification, Means of—Description of holder on Certificate, 6825-6827.

Lanarkshire, Certificates not abused in, 6917.

Renewal practically inevitable, in the absence of something definite against Applicant, 7685-7690.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 400, 429 (32).

Yearly renewal, 7905.

Penal Workhouses

Adoption of Danish System proposed, 3989-4017, 4140-4147.

Classification of Vagrants, Importance of, 4094-4097.

German System, Adoption proposed, 3774-3778, 3785, 3786, 3876-3879, 3885-3888.

REPORT, par. 257-260.

Pentonville Prison

Area served, 9186.

Diet for short time Prisoners, 9187-9191, 9368-9370.

Dinner Interval—An hour and a half, 9240.

Hard Labour—Oakum picking and Sack Making, 9220-9235.

Increase in Number of Receptions since 1900, 9258-9260, 9263-9265.

Causes—Question whether increase due to changes in Prison Conditions, 9262-9271.

Industrial Labour—Nature of Work done, 9334-9336.

Receptions during 1904-5—Number of Poor Law and Vagrancy Offenders, 9183, 9185.

Vagrancy Offenders, Percentage of First Offenders, 9244-9250.

Possibility that previous Convictions were not always traced in case of short-timers, 9302-9312.

Petroleum Act

Local Authorities, Enforcement by, 4815, 4816.

Petty Sessions v. Quarter Sessions as an Authority for sending Offenders to Labour Colonies.

See title Labour Colonies—Committal.

Petty Offenders repeatedly coming up, Inclusion in Definition of Vagrancy—Suggestion, 7160.Philanthropic Societies

Casual Wards, Work in—Appointment of Vagrant Ward Committee, suggested, 9858, 9859.

Charities dealing with Vagrant class, see that title, also Names of Societies, Shelters, and Church Army, etc.

Labour Colonies, Control and Management of, see Labour Colonies.

Phthisis

Common Lodging-houses, Prevalence in—Ventilation Question, 5859, 5903-5905.

Physical Condition of Average Prisoner

Markedly below average of outside Population, 9231.

Physical Condition of Vagrants and Poor Law Offenders

Child Vagrants—Apparently healthy and happy, 1536, 4581, 11020.

Enormous proportion handicapped by some disability—Drink, paralysis, etc., 287.

Food :

Not an ill-fed class on the whole, 377, 3309.

Underfed as a class, 2756, 2757, 2763, 4763.

Physical Condition of Vagrants and Poor Law Offenders—cont.

Health and happiness of a Vagrant life, 1534-1536, 1669-1671, 3093, 8093-8095.

Past and present compared—Improvement in recent years, 543-550.

Pentonville Prison—Hundred men indiscriminately taken from receptions during 1904, 9185, 9241-9243.

Casual Ward and Workhouse cases, no distinction between, 9208-9219, 9251, 9252.

Lowest Type of Prisoner, 9282-9284, 9340-9346.

Unfit for hard labour—Thirty-eight per cent. unfit, 9181, 9182.

Weight.

Eighty per cent. 12 lbs. below average weight, 9178.

Standard of weight adopted—Average weight of General Population, 9205.

REPORT, par. 87.

Police

Antagonistic feeling towards Workhouse Officials, mischief done by, 2987.

Authority for Control of Vagrants, Police as.

Boase's, Mr., Recommendation, 45.

Bridgnorth Guardians' recommendations to the Local Government Board, 516.

Casual Applicants at Workhouses, method of dealing with, proposed under New System, 3960-3962, 4107-4109.

Casual Wards, closing, hiring, etc., Question of, 625-630, 3956-3970, 4045, 4078-4082, 4121-4128, 8478, 8479, 10601, 10605.

Casual Wards within Workhouse Precincts in the Country—Possibility of Friction, 10566.

Circular of 1848, 46.

Cost, Increase in Number of Constables would scarcely be Balanced by Decrease in Number of Poor Law Officials, etc., 625-630, 10607.

Female Tramps in Casual Wards, Difficulty, 4865.

Habitual Vagrants, Convicted of that, or other Offences, Restricting Police Control to, 4190, 4222, 4223, 4685, 4773-4779.

Honest Wayfarer, Possible Objection to being Questioned by a Policeman, 10567.

Inspectors' Reports to the Poor Law Board in 1866, 70.

Joint Committee of Watch Committee and Guardians, Opinion in Favour of, 7995-7997, 8792, 8793.

Legality, Question of, 1990-1993.

Magistrates acting in Agreement with Boards of Guardians and Police—Charity Organisation Society Committee's Recommendation in 1873, 8641.

Opinion in Favour of, 1877-1879, 1889, 1933, 1934, 3927, 4222, 4623, 4958-4961, 5628-5630, 7934-7937, 8467, 8468, 8794, 8795, 10458, 11050, 11051, 11053.

Guardians' Opinion, 1933, 1934, 8794, 8795.

Walsham's, Sir J., Opinion, 9806-9809.

Objections to, 4354, 4770, 4779, 4844, 4857, 8474-8477, 8493-8494.

Criminal Tramps would certainly sleep out, 6897-6900.

Dealing with Vagrancy a Form of Relief of Destitution and therefore a Poor Law Matter, 5610-5615.

Feeding Question, Police not suited to deal with, 4340.

Government Objections to taking the Police away from their proper functions, 102.

Honest Wayfarers, Possible objections of, 10567.

Police—cont.

- Authority for Control of Vagrants, Police as—cont.
- Objections to—cont.
 - Overworking the Police, 6933, 6934.
 - Possible Objections of Police, 1984–1986, 4122–4128.
 - Public Opinion—Objections to Treating Vagrants as Criminals—Possibility that Public Opinion would think the Police too hard, 8792, 10458, 10573–10575.
- Qualifications of Police for handling Casuals, 7642–7645.
- REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 120–147, 429 (1).
- Sleeping out—Proceedings against Offenders facilitated, 10496, 10497.
- Special Class for Vagrants in prison with more Rigorous Treatment—Recommendation to the Local Government Board, 516.
- Superannuated Policemen, Employment of—Suggestion, 1987, 2009, 7738–7740, 7992.
- No difficulty in getting Ex-policemen, 7738–7740.
- Superintendents who are Masters of Workhouses, putting under Standing Joint Committee for Casual Ward purposes, 8473.
- Supervision of Details, Task, Dietary, etc., 10570–10572.
- Police Ability to Undertake Supervision, 7707–7709, 8527–8529.
- Uniformity more likely to be secured, 4958–4961, 10562–10569, 11053.
- Workhouse Master appointed as Special Constable, Question of, 8480, 10602–10604.
- Casual wards attached to Police Stations, see Casual Wards.
- Church Army, Relations with Police—Cases sent by Police to the Church Army, 8032, 8034.
- Co-operation of Police in dealing with Casuals:
 - Benefits of, 2110–2112, 2114, 2308, 2857.
 - Advantage of Police Experience in dealing with Vagrants, 3483–3485, 3927.
 - Cuckfield, Assistance given by Police, 2111, 2112, 2114, 2219, 2220, 2361–2363.
 - Date of Introduction of System, 2267–2269, 2272.
 - Deterrent Effect—No deterrent Effect.
 - Sheffield, 2527, 2529–2531.
 - Wycombe, 3003–3007, 3035–3037.
 - Importance of bringing the Police into Relation with the Poor Law Authorities, 403, 635.
 - North Riding of Yorkshire, Co-operation in, 3927, 3972, 3973.
 - Objections to Associating Police with the Poor Law, 9836, 9846.
 - Observation by Police of Tramps on Discharge, Benefit of, 2552.
- Country Policemen, Duties of—Objections to Tendency to put everything on to the Police, 4808–4812, 4817.
- Duty of Police as Regards Vagrants:
 - Carrying out Vagrancy Act the only Duty at present, 635.
 - Police should have more to do with Tramps than the Poor Law Authorities, 1024.
- Greater Powers would be Beneficial in Dealing with Vagrancy, 7824, 7934–7937.
- Holborn Division:
 - Part of Metropolis comprised, 9371–9374, 9420–9424.
 - Police Magistrates' Courts to which Charges are sent, 9434, 9435.

Police—cont.

- Inspection of Casual Wards and Common Lodging-houses, see titles Casual Wards and Common Lodging-houses, also London.
- Labour Information.
 - Police Stations preferable to Casual Wards as places of Information, 7606.
 - REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 185, 429 (14).
- Meals given to Vagrants in Custody pending Proceedings, 4790–4795, 9546–9550.
- Charges made by Police, Question of, 10723.
- Mid-day Meal for Vagrants, Police Co-operation, see title Mid-day Meal.
- N.S.P.C.C., Co-operation with, 10996, 11052.
- Preliminary Proceedings in regard to Vagrants applying for relief—Police to search and give tickets in all cases—Suggestion, 5573, 5616.
- Relieving Officers for Vagrants, Police as Assistant Relieving Officers, 1196, 1197, 1589, 1590, 1890, 3927, 4290, 5518, 5519, 5527, 5531, 9789, 9790.
- Admission of Tramps to casual Wards, Police Powers, 87.
- Advantages of System—Need for co-operation between Police and Poor Law Authorities in treatment of Vagrants, 1183–1187, 2771.
- Poor Law Board Circular of 1868, 1189.
- Amount of Vagrancy, Effect on, 1038, 1039.
- Essex—Suppression of Vagrancy owing to arrangements by the Chief Constable, 66–69.
- Assistance to Police in discharge of their ordinary Duties, 1994–1996, 4814.
- Bath Scheme, 104.
- Chief Constable of Worcestershire refusing permission for Police to act as Assistant Relieving Officers, 2765.
- Circular of 1868—Appointment of Police recommended, 96, 1189.
- Country:
 - Advantage of System in, 2771.
 - Office of Assistant Relieving Officer and Police Constable often combined, 92.
 - Deterrent effect to begin with, 9789, 9790, 9824, 9844.
 - Discontinuance of System:
 - Birmingham, Parish of, 2767–2770.
 - Herefordshire, 1036.
 - Ross Union, 1037.
 - Duties of Police as Assistant Relieving Officers, 1188.
 - Evils of System in certain districts—Case of Cumberland and Westmorland in 1880, 1174–1178.
 - Home Office Opinion that Duty of Relieving Officers a perfectly proper Police Duty, 1174–1178, 1189–1192.
 - Honest Wayfarer distinguished from Professional Tramp—Police to deal with the latter, 4190, 4223, 4231, 4270.
 - Casual Wards attached to every Police Station for accommodation of Professional Tramp—Mr. Doyle's Report, 70.
 - Circular of 1837, 30.
 - London—Duties of Assistant Relieving Officers reluctantly undertaken, 1863–1872, 52–56, 75–80.
 - Number of Unions employing the Police—Inspectors' Reports in 1866, 60.
 - Summary of Replies from Chief Constables of Counties, App., 61–66.

Police—cont.

Relieving Officers for Vagrants, etc.—cont.

Objections to Police as Assistant Relieving Officers,

Friction of two Authorities—Mr. Doyle's Report, 71-74.

Hours occupied—Tie on Police when most wanted elsewhere, Additions to Force would be needed, 7512-7514, 7615, 7616.

Theory that a Police Officer should be a Peace Officer only, 1181-1183.

Opinion in favour of, 2858, 4397, 4398, 4889-4891, 7510, 7710, 7736.

Payment of Police Officers by Boards of Guardians, 1194, 1195, 1892, 1893.

Regulations as to Employment of Police—Matter for Local Decision since 1889, 1192.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 151.

Success of System in Northumberland, 7508, 7509.

Welsh System, 516, 5513-5519.

Scotland; Relief of Vagrants by Police.

Ayrshire—Police not acting as Relieving Officers, 6818.

Empowering Police to grant Temporary Relief and exact a Labour Equivalent—Recommendation of Committee of 1894, 508, 6840.

Objections to Scheme as putting too much responsibility on the Police, 6842.

Shelter Relief

Dundee—Relief given prior to opening of Night Refuge, 6675-6678.

Edinburgh—Shelter and Food given in very bad weather, 6943-6948.

Glasgow, 6460-6462, 6466.

Prohibition in Ayrshire, 6797-6799.

Summary of Principal Recommendations to the Local Government Board in connection with Police and Vagrants, 516.

Telephonic Communication as a means of assisting proposed Way-ticket Scheme, opinion in favour of, 676, 677.

Workhouse Master, ex-Policeman as—Desirable, but it would hardly be possible to restrict choice of Local Authorities, 8524-8526.

Poor Law

Co-operation with Charity, Need for—Recommendations of Charity Organisation Society Committee of 1891, 8702.

Early measures against Vagrancy concerned with begging, not with Poor Law Relief, 7.

German and English Poor Law, Differences between, 3680-3691.

Historical Review of Dealings with Vagrancy, 11-196.

(for details, see titles Acts of Parliament, Circulars, Orders, etc.)

Objections to Associating Police with Administration of the Poor Law, 9836, 9846.

Possibility that Public Opinion might think the Poor Law too hard, 8792.

Rights of Destitute Persons, see that title.

Poor Law Act of 1834

No reference to Vagrants and no accommodation for Vagrants provided in New Workhouses under the Act, 25-27.

Poor Law Act of 1844

Combination of Unions in London and certain Towns for Provision of Casual Wards Authorised, 42.

Poor Law Act of 1848

Cost of Casuals—Union Charge substituted for Charge on particular Parish, 43.

Poor Law Act of 1899

Adoption of Vagrant Children by Guardians under the Act, see title Child Vagrants.

Poor Law Board

Casual Wards in London, Schemes of 1846 and 1857; 42, 50, 51.

Circulars, Orders, and Reports, see those titles.

Poor Law Commissioners

Circulars, Orders, and Reports, see those titles.

Poor Law Offences

Statistical Tables:

1857-1904, App., pages 115-118.

1893-1904, App., page 111.

see also title Refractory Paupers.

Poor Law Unions Association

"Confirmed Vagrant," Definition of, 914-916.

Deputation to the Local Government Board, 1904, for a Department Committee on Vagrancy, 195.

Labour Colonies, Scheme for Establishment of, 517, 853.

Number of Unions represented, 960-962.

Poorhouses, Scotland

Able-bodied Inmates—Physically Able-bodied, but Mentally Unfit to earn a Livelihood, 6429.

Combination of Parishes for Poorhouse purposes only, 6437-6439.

Conditions of Admission—Order from Inspector of Poor and Medical Certificate required, 6402.

Any Medical Man can give Certificate, but as a matter of fact it is usually given by Parish Doctor, 6430.

Medical Officers generally discover some Ailment in Cold Weather, 6404.

Detention—Powers of Magistrates, 6505-6512.

No Power of Detention, Power needed, 6649-6651, 6657, 6661.

Dietary, 6427, 6428.

Lack of Uniformity—Better Dietary attracting Tramps to certain Houses, 6442, 6443.

Distance from Parish—Sometimes Twenty or Thirty Miles, 4409.

Management by Joint Committee from Parishes concerned, 6440.

Number of Houses, 6408.

Partially Able-bodied, Admission to Poorhouse, 6453-6455.

Task—Stick breaking the principal labour, Stone breaking used as Test, 6444-6446.

Towns having their own Poorhouses, 6441.

Unoccupied Poorhouses, Utilisation as Labour Colonies—Suggestion, 6566-6568.

Poplar Union

Applicants at Casual Wards, Number of—Wards always full, 5327.

Association Ward, 3452.

Bathing and Searching, 5340-5342.

Bona fide Working-men, Proportion of, 5344-5346.

Cost of Construction, Administration, etc., of Casual Ward, 611, 622, 5328, 5483, 10017-10022.

Detention—One night only, 5329, 5406.

Four days' Detention Regulation disregarded, 3375.

Diet—Breakfast given before Discharge, 5336-5338.

Discharge, Hour of, 5329-5332, 5335.

Poplar Union—cont.

Guardians' Recommendation to the Local Government Board—Detention and Labour Colonies, 516.

Laindon, Poplar Guardians' Colony at, see Laindon.

Martin, Guardians v., 7469.

Task, 5333, 5339.

Not enforced, Few Casuals kept for Cleaning—
Popularity of Ward, 3265–3267, 3403.

Prevention of Crimes Act

Convictions under, 9469–9470.

Prevention of Crimes Act (Scotland) 6623, 6924.

Simple begging not dealt with, 6784.

Prisons

Amelioration of Conditions :

Cells and bedding for Vagrant Prisoners not improved, 9152–9156.

Attractions for Tramps—Preference for Prison over Casual Ward, alleged, 1133–1140, 1839–1842, 1844, 2054–2062, 2355, 2632, 2633–2639, 2838–2840, 3927, 4302, 4317, 6189, 7862, App., page 76.

Explanation, 558–563, 4315, 4436–4445, 4677–4680, 4682, 4711–4714, 10159, 10160.

Extracts from North Riding Local Papers, 3982.

Long standing Preference—Casual Ward and Workhouse alike detested by the poor, 9065–9068, 9174, 9175.

Metropolitan Casual Wards, Exceptional Cases in, 3322–3337, 3340–3342, 3358, 3435–3440 3511, 3513.

Newspaper invention founded on Statements of a certain class of offender, 9193, 9300.

Offences committed in order to obtain imprisonment, 2463–2466, 4200–4202, 10155.

Increase in number of Cases of Misconduct by Tramps in Workhouses, 4861, 4862.

Scotland—Very rare occurrence, 6532, 6708, 6888–6890.

Preference not evident in Northumberland. Newcastle prison has no extra comforts, 7646.

Remedies suggested :

Lengthening Sentences, 1141–1143.

Levelling Casual Ward Treatment up to Prison Standard, 4719–4721.

REPORT, par. 191, 198–215.

Scotland—Simply a stock expression—Attraction of better Food counteracted by the fact that the bulk of Poorhouse Inmates do no Work, 6517, 6519.

Bath, Temperature of, Size of Cell, Nature of Bedding, 9129–9132, 9152–9156.

Classification of Prisoners, Opinion in favour of, 10654–10656, 10659.

Comparison with Casual Wards :

King's Norton, 2630–2633.

Norwich, 2633–2639.

Control—Originally under Local Control, Reasons for taking over by Home Office, 1274.

Conveyance to Prison, Tramp's best means of Locomotion, 555–557, 1121, 1847, 7652–7656.

Cost of bringing man from remote Union to Prison in Newcastle, 7648–7651.

Offences committed in order to secure a free railway journey, 5565.

Short Sentences, Mischief of, 10787.

Prisons—cont.

Cost per Prisoner in local prisons in Scotland, 6701–6705.

Deterrent Force :

Being locked up in a cell is hated by the old hand, 9147–9151.

Fourteen days of Prison punitive, 9157, 10310.

Lenient Treatment of refractory tramps in Gaol renders attempts to deal with Vagrancy ineffectual—Representation to the Local Government Board, 516.

Loss of—Prison no deterrent to Vagrants, 1900, 10650, 11094, 11106–11109.

Cause of Loss of Deterrent Force—Ameliorated Prison Conditions, 7870, 10264–10268, 10328–10331, 10335 10337, 10345, 10346.

Deterrent system of Treatment done away with, without increasing length of Sentences, 10332–10333.

Recent Changes in the wrong direction—Prison no longer deterrent because the Reformatory Aspect unduly insisted on, 4120.

REPORT, par. 191, 197–215.

Protest against Conclusions of Committee—Capt. Eardley-Wilmot's Memorandum, REPORT, page 122.

Dietary :

Admission Diet, 342.

No Alteration recommended by Committee of 1898, 743, 748.

Comparison with that of the Casual Ward, 336–343, App. page 76—Superiority of Prison Diet, 1481, 1842, 2355, 2929–2933.

Explanation, 1139.

Preference of Tramps for Prison Dietary, 1620.

Reduction of Diet for Tramps only in order to diminish Attractions of Prison—Suggestion, 1970–1983.

Discipline, Diet as means of enforcing, 4708.

Ordinary Prison diet not an instrument of Punishment, 849.

Improvement in—Change to existing Dietary, 9152–9156.

Class A., Diet introduced—Addition of Gruel for Breakfast and Supper and variety of Dinner, 734–736.

Date of—immediately after Report of Committee in December 1898, 733, 755

Effect on convictions of Casuals in London, 349–360.

Medical grounds, Changes made on—Greater variety and more fatty substance given, 739–742.

Number of Convictions, Increase in—Effect of Change of Diet, alleged, 751, 756–773, 1133.

Satisfactory Medical Reports on change made, 750.

Scales in force before and after April, 1899 App., pages 149–152.

Reconsideration desirable in view of recent discoveries on diet, 10869–10872.

REPORT, par. 203–206.

Short Sentence Cases, Diet for, 9063, 9064.

Diet A. suitable and sufficient diet for short time Prisoners, 9187–9191, 9368–9370.

Stirabout, Prisoners' Objections to, 752–4.

Prisons—cont.

Discharged Prisoners, see that title, also Church Army—Prison Cases.

Employment of Prisoners :

Barlinnie Prison, Glasgow, Work done in, 6519–6523.

Classification—Hard Labour and Industrial Labour, 827.

Fines, Imprisonment in default of Payment of, Statistics, 1893–1904 and 1900–1904, App., page 119.

German Workhouse System, Comparison of English Prison System with Long Sentence System in Germany, 3794–3798.

Habitual Vagrants—Years passed in Prison, 10682–10684.

Hard Labour :

Easier than Casual Ward Task, 1618, 1650–1655, App., page 77.

Increasing work as Deterrent for Tramps, Suggestion, 1622, 1628.

Medically Unfit :

Definite Lines of distinction necessary—a man might not be unfit for oakum picking, but must be certified to prevent his employment in heavy labour on transference, etc., 9320–9330, 9360–9364.

Percentage of Prisoners certified unfit for hard labour, 783, 784, 807, 9110–9113.

Unfit cases do not escape work because they are certified unfit for hard labour, 803, 804, 9324, 9325, 9361.

Nature of—Oakum picking, Stone breaking and heavy sack making, 779–782, 828, 9220–9235, App., page 38.

Coal-sack making not so hard as Stone breaking, etc., 4724, 4725.

Object of Hard Labour to make Prison unpleasant, 848.

Refusal to Work, Punishment for, 4456.

Procedure in Manchester Prison, 9114, 9115.

REPORT, par. 207–212.

Seven days' sentence means four days' work, 785, 795, 810–815, 1120.

Severity in form of task not deterrent, 9269–9271.

Shot Drill—never in force in Civil Prisons, Abolition from Military Prisons, 829.

Solitary Confinement continues up to twenty-eight days, 801, 802.

Technical term bearing no relation to the fact—Hard Labour obsolete, 4315, 9236–9238, 9313.

Stone breaking and Wood chopping involve a certain amount of Physical exertion, 9314–9319.

Treadmills and Cranks, Abolition of, 774–777, 805–8.

Abolition a mistake—no adequate hard labour for short sentence cases, 4315.

Unproductive Labour abolished, 776.

Hours of Work, 9053, 9058, 9106–9109.

Comparison with hours of work in a Swiss Labour Colony, 8330, 8334.

Increase in proportion of Persons who went to Prison in default of Payment of Fines, 10382–10393.

Cause—Amelioration of Prison Discipline, 10426.

Provision in Prison Act, 1898, which allows people to pay part of Fine and get off part of imprisonment, 10421.

Prisons—cont.Industrial Labour :

Industrial Labour for Prisoners unfit for Hard Labour, 9134–9137.

Instructions given to Prisoners, Instructors employed, etc., 838–841, 843.

Short Sentence Prisoners unable to benefit, 844–847.

Nature of employment, 9134–9137, 9334–9336, App., page 38.

Productive Labour :

Increase in—Articles made, etc., 833, 834, 837.

Sale of Articles made, Public Objection to, 835–837.

Very hard to get, 9334.

Skilled Labourers not working for their own benefit, 832.

Labour Colonies v. Prisons for Habitual Vagrants :

Relief to Prison Administration, 6763.

Would be disliked more than Prison, 10319–10326.

New Prisons :

Form of Imprisonment prescribed by Parliament—Legislation needed to start special prisons for vagrants, 1261–1270.

Power of initiating rests with Prison Commissioners subject to approval by Home Secretary, 1253–1259.

Pressure in, especially for short time Prisoners, 1251, 1252.

Scotland—Terms on which Scotch Prisons were taken over by the State in 1877, 6760.

Vagrancy Offenders :

Number in Prison, 1061, App., page 38—REPORT par. 59, 65.

Objections to present system of sending people to Prison for Vagrancy Offences, 5323, 9069–9077, 9116–9121, 9862, 9863.

REPORT, par. 197, 216, 220.

Prison Commissioners

Labour Colonies, Control of—Prison Authorities v. Charitable Societies, Prison Authorities v. Home Office, 571–573, 578, 582, 4691, 8687–8689.

Reports—Physical inability of casuals committed to Prison for Refusal to work, Medical Examination prior to bringing before a Magistrate suggested, 520.

Prosecutions and Convictions

Begging and Sleeping out, see those titles.

Cruelty to Children, Society for Prevention of.

Instances—Parents convicted for Neglect and Abandonment, 10959–10962, 10964, 10972, 10973, 10974, 10983–10985, 11039.

Statistics of Prosecutions, 1900–1905—Almost every Prosecution successful, 10957, 10958.

Cumulative Penalties deterrent, if imposed, 703, 704.

Failure to procure Convictions, Discouraging effect on Police, 5600–5602, 11058.

Germany—Summary Justice in, 3589–3601.

Identification System, Effect of, 114, 115.

Increase in Number of Convictions.

Causes of—Impression prevalent that Prison has been made much easier, 1133–1140

REPORT, par. 193, 198–215.

Protest against Conclusions of Committee—Captain Eardley-Wilmot's Memorandum—REPORT, page 122.

North-Riding of Yorkshire, 3927.

Prosecutions and Convictions—cont.

Increase in Number of Convictions—cont.

Scotland, Increase due to Dull Trade, 6748-6752.

Prison Diet, Improvement in—Effect on Number of Convictions, 349-360, 756-773.

Proportions of Prosecutions, etc., to Number of Vagrants relieved impossible to calculate, owing to Unions being often in two counties, 5546.

Prussia, Number of Convictions compared with Number in England, 3805-3811.

Recording Convictions, Opinion in favour of, 9864, 10304.

Recording first and second Convictions and committing to a Labour Colony for third offence, 10163, 10164.

Refractory Paupers, see that title.

Rogue and Vagabond, Conviction as, rare, 552.

Scotland—Convictions under Vagrancy and Trespass Acts, Increase in Number due to dull trade, 6748-6752.

Statistical Tables:

- 1857-1904, App., pages 113, 115, 117, 118.
- 1893-1904, App., pages, 111, 116.
- 1903, App., page 114.

Total Number of Persons summarily convicted—Statistics, 10427-10433.

Uniformity of treatment, Effect of, 709.

Providence Row Free Shelter, 5844-5845.

Bunks in, 5667.

London County Council Control, Question of—Exemption claimed on ground that Inmates were Guests, 5652, 5653.

Number of Free Meals given during 1904, 9605.

Prussia

Convictions in, compared with Convictions in England, 3805-3811.

Prisons—Management, etc., 3790.

Workhouses, Number of, etc., 3602, 5603, 3787.

Public Opinion

Essential to convince the Public that sufficient Provision is made for Destitute honest Wayfarers, 6808-6810.

Recommendation of Charity Organisation Society Committee in 1873, 8641.

Way-ticket System, Value of, 10200, 10201, 10203.

Keeness of Interest in Vagrancy Question, 6234, 6235.

Liberty of the Subject, see that title.

Long Sentences for Vagrants, Opposition to be feared, 8929, 8930, 8965, 8968, 8972.

Necessity that public opinion should be in favour of any reform with regard to Vagrants, 9726, 9846.

Police Control of Vagrancy, Difficulty in the way of, 8792, 8793.

Responsibility in regard to Vagrancy—Public Opinion does not endorse Police Action in carrying out the Law, 8093.

Sleeping out—Public opinion not in favour of enforcing Law, 8136-8140.

Way-ticket System, see that title.

Quarter Sessions

Authority to commit Vagrants to Labour Colonies, Suggestion, 4014-4017, 10269-10271, 10640-10642, 10669-10671.

Radnorshire

Tramps attracted by Birmingham Waterworks, 5543, 5544.

Reading

Begging and Sleeping out—Statistics for 1893-1903, 8563, 8564.

Labour Bureau System, 4704, 4705.

Task, Non-enforcement of—Increase in Vagrancy due to, 4859.

Redhill Farm School

Vagrant Boys discharged, 1900-1901, App., page 182.

Recommendations of Committee, Summary—REPORT, par. 429.

Refractory Paupers

Binding over, Suggestion, 1111-1118.

Medical Examination prior to Prosecution—Prison Commissioners' Report, 520.

Number of Cases—Number of Prosecutions, Convictions and Commitments, 3429, 3512.

Convictions of Vagrants not differentiated from Convictions of Inmates of Workhouses, 10396-10400.

Fluctuations prior to 1900, 10352-10354.

Increase in Number of Cases, 10349-10351, 10375-10379.

Actual Increase in number of Prosecutions, 10374.

Cause:

Possibly some cause which did not exist prior to 1900, 10368, 10369, 10380, 10381.

REPORT, par. 193, 198-215—Protest against Conclusions of Committee, Capt. Eardley-Wilmot's Memorandum—REPORT, page 122.

Superior Comfort of Prisons, 4861, 4862

Increase in Number of Refractory Paupers does not Correspond with Number of Vagrants relieved, 10362.

Increase throughout the Country generally, 10371-10373, 10376-10379.

Statistics 1857-1903—Increase attributed to Local Government Board Circular of 1882, 1085-1091.

London, see that title,

Manchester Prison, Commitments for Workhouse Offences in 1904, 9125.

North Wales, Number of Prosecutions during 1904, 5540.

Northumberland—Very few Convictions, 7719-7724.

Not a large number of Prosecutions in the Seventies, 114.

Pentonville Prison—Commitments during 1904-1905, 9185.

Statistics:

1857-1904, App., pages 115, 118.

1893-1904, App., pages 111, 116.

1900-1904, 10415-10417.

Offences Committed within Workhouse premises, 1087-1090.

Scotland:

Punishment by Governor of Poorhouse, very few cases taken before Police, 6420-6425.

Refusal to work—Punishment not allowed, 6421.

Uniformity in dealing with by Magistrates—Suggestion, 2110, 2308.

Refreshment Houses

Excise Licence required if kept open after 10 o'clock 9505-9508.

Refuges

see Shelters and Refuges.

Refusal of Relief

Discrimination between distressed Wayfarers and Professional Tramps, see Honest Wayfarer distinguished from Professional Tramp.

Herefordshire—Two refusals out of 6,000 Applicants, 4247.

Instances at Casual Wards at Dewsbury and Tame Street, Manchester, 1389–1391, 1450–1452.

Registration of Labour

Suggestion, 2913, 3022.

Registration of Vagrants

National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Scheme, 10946–10948, 10954, 11046, 11048–11051.

Need for—Impossible to deal with Vagrants without knowledge of their previous career, 8700.

Personal Register to be kept by Way-ticket or otherwise, suggestion, 2913, 3022, 3023.

Liberty of the subject difficulty, 3024.

Worthlessness of, in so far as it depends on statements of Casuals, 3174, 3175.

Relief Stations for Honest Wayfarers

Establishment of, in England proposed, 3781, 3782.

Germany—Herbergen and Verpflegungs-Stationen, see title Germany.

Swiss system, proposed adoption of :

Stations should be at Casual Wards or Police Stations or both—Suggestion, 8298, 8299.

Task, Question of remitting on score of economy in accommodation, 8498.

Test for bona fides of Applicant proposed: Getting a discharge note from employer, or making a Statement which should be investigated by Police, 8463–8465, 8495–8497.

Man would have to stay in Casual Ward while inquiries were made, 8521, 8522.

(For details of system, see Switzerland—Intercantonal Union.)

Workhouses, Stations in—Suggestion, 5257, 5312, 5316.

Way Ticket necessary to proposed System, 5318, 5319.

Relieving Officers

London—Special Officers appointed by Boards of Guardians in place of the Police, 81–90.

Police as, see Police.

Religious Services

Labour Colonies, see that title—also Names of Colonies.

No arrangements for, in Casual Wards, 541, 542.

Rights of Destitute Persons—Every Applicant to be relieved.

Care of destitute Vagrant compulsory on the Union, 3760.

Circulars of Poor Law Commissioners, interpretation of, 44, 45.

Ignorance among the Poor—Awkward situations might be created if destitute Persons claimed their rights, 7433–7436.

Rochford Union

Accommodation—Difficulty of cost in the way of adopting Cell System, 6223–6227.

New Laundry, cost as compared with cost of buildings at Hadleigh, effect of Building Bye-laws, 6376, 6377, 6380, 6381.

Ross Union

Increase in number of Vagrants—Statistics, 1005.

Police Superintendent acting as Relieving Officer—System abandoned, 1037.

Rothbury Union

Population and area—Increase in Casuals due to Public Works in District, 7632–7634.

Routes taken by Tramps

London and the West, Routes passing through Berkshire, 4654.

Unions on the two main Routes, 4823–4832, 4836.

Main Roads, Vagrants following, 4836, 6924, 6925.

Tramps going all over England, 2569–2571.

Workhouse Masters, Opinion of, 2571, 2572.

Rowton Houses

Begging Letter Writers in—no Inquiries about Inmates allowed, 11163, 11164, 11168.

Birmingham, Rowton House about to be opened, 2781.

Class of Men likely to resort to, 2781, 2782.

Common Lodging-house Accommodation, Effect on, 5800.

Not held to be Common Lodging-houses and therefore not under London County Council Control, 5658, 5785, 5836.

Distinction from Common Lodging-houses—a Rowton House was a Hotel, Magisterial Decision, 5786–5790.

Number of, Number of Inmates, Number of Lodgers in one House, 5795–5799.

Size, Increase in, due to economical Reasons, 5832.

Sackmaking

Prison, Hard Labour in—Heavy Sackmaking, 779, 798–800, 9332.

Unskilled Labour—no physical Exertion involved, 9229–9236.

St. Austell Casual Wards

Statement of particulars as to Vagrants relieved Nov. 1904–Jan. 1905, App., pages 188–206.

St. George's, Hanover Square

Guardians' Resolution advocating discontinuance of separate Casual Ward System (1891), 8642.

Number of Army Pensioners and Army Reserve men admitted to Workhouse, 8653–8656.

St. George in the East Casual Wards

Completeness and costliness of, 9721, 10008–10010.

Expensive Cells really only an Associated Ward, it being illegal to lock up a man, 6019–6024.

Permission to take a Census of Casuals refused by Guardians to Salvation Army, 6109, 6117.

St. Giles' Casual Wards

Charity Organisation Society Investigation of cases in 1887—Proportion of helpable cases, 8642.

St. James's Park

Sleeping out in the day-time, Police have no legal power either to wake a man up or to move him, 9456–9459.

St. James's Shelter

Percentage of cases found to be helpable, 8659.

St. Johannsen Labour Colony, Switzerland

Class of Inmates—Many more old, worn-out and incurably lazy people than at Witzwyl, 8397, 8401.

Cows, Number of, 8399.

Size, 400 acres, 120 to 180 Colonists, 8399, 8400.

St. Pancras Casual Ward

Cost of Construction, 10011.

Inquiries into Circumstances of Casuals—Most of them content to spend the rest of their lives in Casual Wards, 8642.

Opening of within the last three years, 10130.

Refusals of Admission—no Refusals, 3407, 3408, 8648.

Salvation Army

- Census of casuals taken by, in May 1905, 6106-6115, App., page 137.
- Children, Arrangements for, "The Nest" for deserted Children, etc., 5961, 5962, 6210-6213.
- City Colonies and Workshops, App., pages 131, 132, 133, 135.
- Hadleigh, Men sent to from City Colonies and Men sent to City Colonies from Hadleigh, 7041-7043.
- Shelters as feeders for, 7034.
- Task Exacted :
 - Colonies not Popular with Professional Loafer, 7093-7095.
 - Object more to Provide Work than Shelter, 7024-7029.
 - Workshops Free, 7165, 7184, 7425.
- Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies Work in Connection with, 6170-6172.
- Free Food given only in Special Circumstances, 7178, 7179.
- Labour Colony at Hadleigh, see Hadleigh.
- Lack of Discrimination shown in dealing with Vagrants, 8674, 8676.
- Legislation on Vagrancy Question promoted by—Bill based on General Booth's Pamphlet, "The Vagrant and the Unemployable," 6188, 6189, 6192.
- Lodging-house in Edinburgh, 6978.
- Shelters, 5840, 5843.
 - Beneficial effect—Kept people out of the Streets, 9394.
 - Children admitted, 5961, 5962.
 - Class of Men frequenting—Professional Loafer the Exception, 7035-7040.
 - Cleanliness, Lack of, 3369.
 - Colonies, Shelters as Feeders for, 7034, 7414-7419.
 - Food given for 2d., 5885-5887.
 - Free Food Distribution, Popularity of—Alteration of System, 9402-9406.
 - Free Shelters—No Free Shelters, All the Shelters pay their way, 7030-7033, 7165, 7176, 7183, 7186, 7410, 7420-7424.
 - No Free Shelters in Holborn Division of Metropolitan Police, 9407.
 - Profit made on Food and Shelter Section, 7430.
 - Shelters pay their way as a whole, not perhaps each one, 7404.
 - Workshops are Free Shelters, 7165, 7184, 7425.
- Funds Provided in first instance from "Darkest England" Fund, 7181.
- Multiple Bunks, 5667.
- Receiving Houses for Loafers—if Police are empowered to deal with Habitual Loafers, use as, Suggestion, 7190, 7191.
- Registration as Common Lodging-houses, Decision in Case of Logsdon v. Booth, 530.
- Rent, Apportionment of—Rent actually paid, 7406-7409.
- REPORT, par. 332.
- Scale of Charges, etc., 6182, 6186.
 - Charge of 2d. per night, the 2d. obtained by begging, 9387.
- Total Accommodation—Number of Nights' Lodgings given, 7411-7414.
- (for particular Shelters, see their names.)
- Workers raised from the Ranks, and nearer the people worked for, than Officials of any other Institution, 7099, 7101.

Scotland

- Able-bodied Destitute Persons, see Able-bodied Vagrants.
- Administration of Law in regard to Vagrancy, Diversity in, 6627.
- Begging :
 - "Masterful Begging" :
 - Law did not touch a man using threats and Abusive Language unless his Conduct could be held to be a Breach of the Peace, 6785-6790.
 - Punishable in Rural Districts, 6627.
 - Provisions of the Vagrancy Act Practically Applied during the last 10 years, 511.
 - Simple Begging not an Offence in Rural Districts, 6627, 6783, 6868.
 - Able-bodied Destitute, Provision for, if Simple Begging were to be made an Offence, 6808-6810, 6840, 6847, 6873.
 - Crimes Prevention Act of 1871—Simple Begging not dealt with, 6784.
 - Extension of Burgh Police Act to apply Throughout Scotland—Recommendation of Committee of 1894, 6783, 6840.
- Casual Sick Houses, see that title.
- Child Vagrancy—Work of N.S.P.C.C. Inspectors, etc., 6595, 6596.
- Church of :
 - Free Shelter in Glasgow, 6608.
 - Labour Colony started by, 6738-6740.
- Combination of Parishes for Poorhouse purposes only, 6437-6439.
- "Common Good" Fund—Origin and Application of, 6612.
- Common Lodging-Houses—Annual Licensing System, 5852.
- Deaths from Starvation :
 - Almost impossible, 6977.
 - Machinery for Inquiry into, etc., 6756-6759.
- Departmental Committee of 1894—Recommendations, 508, 6783, 6840-6843.
- Extent of Vagrancy—Number of Vagrants, etc., 6411, 6413.
- Census—Half-yearly Census taken by Police. 6436, 6533, 6535, 8845.
- Ayrshire, 6804—Thoroughness of Count increasing Apparent number of Vagrants, 6813.
- * Inclusion of persons in Common lodging-houses reducing comparative value, 8561, 8562.
- Two sets of Figures should be taken together—Tramps of June a different Class from Tramps of December, 6592, 6613-6616, 6727-6729.
- Estimated total number, 7547-7549.
- Number relieved on 15th May, 1903, 6436.
- REPORT, par. 65.
- Statistics 1892-1904, App., page 91.
- Women, Large number of, 6413, 6417, 6419.
- Labour Information published by Chief Constables—Publication discontinued, 7602-7605.
- Laws with regard to Vagrancy, 6622-6626.
- Nationality of Tramps, 6617, 6618.
- Poor Law Offences—Punishment by Governor of Poorhouse, very few cases taken before Police, 6420-6425.
- Poorhouses, see that title.
- Prisons :
 - Cost per head in Local Prisons, 6702-6705.

Scotland—cont.Prisons—cont.*Preference of Tramps for:

Committing an offence in order to get sent to prison—not known or very rare in Scotland, 6708, 6888–6890.

Simply a stock expression, 6517, 6519.

Terms on which prisons were taken over by the State in 1877, 6760.

Procurator-Fiscal, Powers and Functions of, 6733–6737.

Prosecutions, Sentences, etc., see those titles.

Sleeping out:

More in Scotland than in England, owing to absence of Casual Wards, 7669–7671.

Number of Cases dealt with in 1904, 6794.

Penalty in Glasgow, 6499–6504.

Public Road, Sleeping on, not an offence, 6792.

Sentences in Lanarkshire—Feeling that there are no Casual Wards and tramps must sleep somewhere, 6880–6887.

Trespass (Scotland) Act, Offences dealt with under, 6791, 6819–6821.

Staircase, Sleeping on, would come under Act, 6626, 6631.

System of dealing with Vagrancy:

Charitable Persons, Relief of the Poor left to, 6874.

Conditions for Vagrants easier than in England, 6981.

Entirely different from the English system, 509–512.

REPORT, par. 153.

Sentences

Convicting and remitting to Quarter Sessions for Sentence in aggravated Cases proposed, 4326–4328.

Fixing a minimum Sentence for Vagrancy, Question of, 1125, 1126.

Better to let Convictions pile up until the man could be treated as an Habitual Vagrant, 8924, 8927, 8929, 8930.

Desirable, but not likely to be adopted, 7877, 7878.

Discretion of Magistrates should be left unrestricted, 4323–4325, 10647, 10648, 10691, 10695, 10758–10764.

Factories Acts, Minimum Sentences fixed by, 1103.

Identification and Registration of Vagrants a necessary preliminary, 8700.

Length of Sentence which would be useful:

Eight to fourteen days for first offence, 4219–4221.

Fortnight should be Minimum Sentence and minimum of a month would be better, 6528, 6529.

Fourteen Days, 4913, 5566, 7661–7663.

Preferable to seven, 1648, 1649.

Twenty-eight days too high a minimum, 1121–1124.

Month after previous Conviction, Suggestion, 7791–7793, 7874–7876.

Month for First Offence with Sentence on report for Second Offence—Suggestion, 8713.

Month with possibility of prolonging period on report—Suggestion, 8697, 8698.

Nothing under a year would do an Habitual Vagrant much good, 8695, 8696.

Objections to fixing minimum—Number of Persons who would escape Punishment, 1119.

REPORT — RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 194–196, 429 (15).

Statutory Minimum needed, 1103.

Labour Colonies, Effect of—Magistrates would be less unwilling to commit for a term of years, 10703–10705.

Length of Sentences for Vagrancy Offences—Average length, 1640, 1843, 7581, 9060–9062, 10690.

Bow Street, practice at—Benefit of the One Day Sentence as a Record of a Conviction, etc., 10689, 10706–10712, 16788–10790.

Glasgow, Length of Sentences—Glasgow Police Act of 1868, Provisions of, 6496, 6500–6504, 6515–6.

Refusal to do Task Work, Length of Sentences for.

Norwich, 2740.

Sheffield—Longer Sentences given by Local Magistrates, 2455–2457.

Wycombe, 2928, 2929.

Statistics, 1901–1904, App., page 112; 1905 App., 38.

Terms longer than a month to which a Vagrant is liable under the present law, 10681.

Long Sentences—Deterrent Effect of Longer Sentences, etc., 562, 703, 9543, 9677, 9678, 9873.

Defective Vagrants, Case of—Lengthening out Sentence for good of Prisoner, Suggestion, 8699.

Doubtful whether even a month's imprisonment does any good to a Vagrant—Considering case week by week, 8833–4.

German Workhouses—Stress laid on length of Sentences, 3794, 3795, 3891, 3892.

Long Sentence with possibility of early release if the Prisoner showed he could maintain himself, Suggestion, 3894.

Seamen as Honest Way-farers

Motives of Sailors in travelling from port to port, 4365.

Number of Seamen begging their way from Welsh ports to London, 1700.

Searching of Applicants for Relief

Casual nature of search, Women allowed to keep tea, etc., 1476–1480.

Circular of 1868, 96.

Compulsory Search, Opinion in favour of, 500, 3164.

Decrease in Vagrancy due to, 495—Capt. Sterne's Report (1872), 2006.

Dislike of, by Tramps, 1772, 2084.

Enforcement of Regulations, Casual Wards enforcing search, App., pages 80, 82.

Evasion of Regulation, 2641, 2643, 2647.

Evasion owing to insufficient staff, 4172.

Order of 1882, 144.

Police Station, Searching Vagrants at—Practice in North Wales, 5524, 5525, 5534.

Distance between Police Station and Casual Ward, 5528–5530.

Hiding belongings before Search, Possibility of, 5535, 5597, 5598.

Women Vagrants not searched, 5537–5539.

REPORT, par. 89.

Women Searcher for Women, 1477, 1478.

(see also Money owned by Applicants for Relief.)

Senior, Nassau

Report on Condition of the Poor and the Labouring Classes in Europe and America (1835)—References to Dutch and Belgian Poor Colonies, 8949.

Sentences—cont.Long Sentences, etc.—cont.

Need for long Sentences to counteract superior attractions of Prison over Workhouse, Suggestion, 1141-1143.

Six months would no more deter a tramp from refusing work than seven days, 9287-9301.

Twenty-one days and upwards are deterrent, Percentage of men who are indifferent to Punishment, 10630, 10631.

Magistrates, Powers of, etc. :

Absurdity of bringing a man before two Magistrates and then discharging him, 7657, 7658.

Single Magistrate empowered to inflict a sentence not exceeding fourteen days, 1094-1096.

Tendency to let Vagrants off, 1641-1643, 7782-7788.

Range of Sentences up to three months, 1093.

Recording Convictions :

Better to let Convictions pile up till man could be treated as an Habitual Vagrant, 8924, 8927, 8929, 8930.

Recording First Conviction and letting man go, suggestion, 7875, 7879-7881.

Imposing longer Sentence (fourteen or twenty-eight days) for next offence, 7582, 7583.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 196, 429 (15.)

Remand for a week plus sentence of 7 days, 10689, 10781.

Short Sentences—Three, five, seven—twenty-eight days :

Beginning and Sleeping out, Number of Sentences for, 820, 821.

Evils of system—Short Sentences futile, costly, and in many cases harmful, 825, 852, 973-975, 1053-1058, 1103, 1119, 1580, 1623-1626, 1658, 1844, 2199-2201, 3096, 3105-3112, 3794, 3980, 4313-4317, 4919, 4910, 5564, 5565, 6187-6190, 6524, 6525, 6530, 6701-6707, 7579, 7580, 7585, 7659, 7789, 7790, 8694, 8916-8922, 8928, 9026, 9027, 9683, 10162, 10163, 10308, 10309, 10317, 10629, 10630, 10690, 10692, 10694.

Alcoholic Tramp, Effect on—More harm than good, 1666-1668.

Bridge's, Sir J. opinion, 4031, 4032.

Clark's, Sir Andrew, Evidence, 1130, 1131.

Asking for Long Sentences, offences committed with the object of being sent to Prison, 10155.

Bow Street Magistrates agreed as to the uselessness of Short Sentences, 10687-10689.

Dispensing with Punishment in Cases deserving less than 28 Days—Suggestion, 3927, 3983-3985, 4032, 4033.

Expense entailed by short Sentences, 4912-4914, 5565, 10698-10702.

First Offenders :

Percentage in Pentonville Prison, 9244-9250.

Re-conviction of First Offenders—Percentage not increasing, 4319.

Home Office Circular Drawing Attention to evil of short sentences, Question of, 10696, 10697.

Instruction in Trades, men unable to benefit under Short Sentences, 844-847.

Sentences—cont.Short Sentences, etc.—cont.*Evils of system, etc.—cont.

Lincolnshire—Law had been enforced for 50 years without the slightest effect, 10150-10153, 10155, 10197.

Prison used as a means of Locomotion, 10787.

REPORT, par. 188-193.

Seven days' sentence meaning four days' labour, 785-795, 810-815, 1120.

Three Days, 347, 348—Three Day sentence one day's imprisonment, 5561, 5562.

Home Office returns lumping together sentences under fourteen days, 1098-1101.

London Casuals' Affection for Sentences of 21 days and over, 3343-3346, 3441-3443.

Magistrates influenced by Sentiment, Newspapers, etc., 551-554.

Proportion of Short Sentences—Enormous proportion, 823, 824, 6515, 6516, 7584.

Uniformity, Question of :

Casual Poor Act, Magistrates' dealings with breaches of, Uniformity needed, 2110, 2308.

No pre-arranged Uniformity, 1638, 1639.

Recommendation to the Local Government Board, 516.

REPORT, par. 186-187.

Variety of opinion in Courts of Summary Jurisdiction, 1083, 1102.

Settlement, Law of Abolition—Suggestion, 1546.

Child Vagrants, Difficulty in Case of—Making place of birth place of Settlement, Suggestion, 10985.

Creation of Vagrant Class by, 5415, 5416.

Germany, Law in—Relief of Destitute Persons without legal domicile, 3675-3679.

Old and Impotent Vagrants, Compulsory removal to Workhouse of Birth place—Suggestion, 516.

Scotland.

Full advantage of Law taken by each Parish, 6545-6549.

Tramps, Difficulty in regard to—No real Difficulty, 6550-6553.

Sheds, Vans Tents, etc.

Model Bye-laws issued by Local Government Board, App., page 176.

Sheffield

Able-bodied Inmates set to Stonebreaking, 2513.

Able-bodied and partly able-bodied inmates, Number of, 2480-2489.

Accommodation for Casuals, 2380.

Ages of Casuals—Percentage over 60, 2507.

Bath, Strictness in regard to—Provision of clean Night-shirt, separate Towel and Fresh Water, 2411.

Cell System, 2390.

Child Vagrants :

Adoption by Guardians of Children of undesirable Parents—Objections to Practice, 2534, 2535.

Fluctuations in Number, 2508, 2515, 2533.

N.S.P.C.C. work, 2509, 2510, 2511.

Classes of Casuals—Tramps' Statements as to how long they had been tramping and what had started them on the road, 2521, 2522.

Clothing—Drying and Disinfecting, 2414.

Detention—Hour of Discharge, etc., 2558-2560.

Four nights—Tramp returning within the month kept four nights, 2541, 2542.

Sheffield—cont.Detention, etc.—cont.

- One night System, 2450.
- Breach of Local Government Board Regulations, 2470.
- Reasons for—Cleansing Wards, Smallpox Scare, Lack of Accommodation, etc., 2573–2577.
- Tramps' dislike to System—same task exacted for two meals instead of five, 2469.
- Sunday, Tramps not detained over, 2556, 2557.
- Dietary—Ordinary house diet, 2450, 2471–2474, 2536–2539.
- Farm two miles from Workhouse, 2403, 2406.
- Deterrent effect of sending Men to the Farm, 2404, 2405.
- Not a Farm Colony, 2491.
- Produce grown, 2499.
- Size of, 2475.
- General Pauperism—Increase during last two years, 2512.
- Habitual Tramp:
 - Admitting to Workhouse proper, Practice as to, 2407.
 - Method of dealing with, 2431.
- Honest Wayfarers:
 - Facilities for, 2390, 2391.
 - Discretion exercised, 2416.
 - Proportion of, 2388, 2437.
- Infectious Disease:
 - Bath as a means of Detecting, 2412, 2413.
 - Eczema among Casuals, Prevalence, 2408.
 - Smallpox—Nightly Medical Examination of Casuals when there was any sign of Smallpox in Yorkshire, 2410.
- Land attached to Workhouse, Amount of, 2400
 - Amount of Land under Cultivation, 2476, 2477.
- Labour in connection with, 2402.
- Medical Officers, Two Resident Officers, 2462.
- Number of Casuals:
 - Average Number per week, 2381.
 - Rise in 1904, 2382, 2387, 2514.
 - Causes of Rise—Depression in Trade, 2383, 2386.
 - Former Employment of men out of Work, 2384.
- Number of Workhouse Inmates—Average Number, 2401.
- Physical Inability to do task:
 - Discretion used in case of—Medical Examination, etc., 2458–2462, 2551.
 - Examination not strict enough, 2546–2550.
 - Wasted Arm not mentioned till Tramp was taken before a Magistrate, 2468.
- Police Co-operation in dealing with Casuals:
 - Police visiting Casual Wards in search of Persons "Wanted," 2528, 2529, 2532, 2553–2555.
 - Sergeant in charge of Casual Ward—No Deterrent Effect, 2527, 2529–2531.
- Prison preferred by Tramps—Smashing doors and Windows in order to secure Prosecution, 2463–2466.
- Search enforced, 2414, 2415.
- Sick, Infirm and Imbecile Workhouse Inmates, Number of, 2479.
- Soldiers on Tramp, Proportion of, etc., 2516, 2520.

Sheffield—cont.Task:

- Kinds of Work given—Value, etc., 2399, 2442–2447.
- Refusal to Work, Procedure in Case of, 2397–2399, 2427.
- Prosecutions, 2451—Convictions, 2454.
- Sentences—Longer Sentences given by Local Magistrates, 2455–2457.
- Wood Sawing Task:
 - Average Day's Task, 2444.
 - Profits nil, 2446, 2447.

Women Casuals:

- Decrease in Number of, 2508.
- Reception by Tramp Mistress, Taskmaster's Key not admitting to Ward, etc., 2578–2580.

Shelters and Refuges

- Absence of Shelters—People frequenting them would be dealt with in the Districts from which they came, 9715–9719.
- Annual Report and Financial Statement, Requiring from all Shelters as Parts of one Co-operative Administration—Suggestion, 8627–8630.
- Bath Scheme of Casual Relief—Children and Infirm sent to a Refuge, 104.
- Casual Sick Houses, Scotland, see that title.
- Child Vagrants in Towns found in Shelters, not in Casual Wards, 5922, 5923.
- Church Army Shelters, see Church Army—Receiving Homes.
- Class of Vagrants resorting to Shelters as a matter of course, 9578–9581, 9711–9714.
- Percentage of Shelter Cases which might prove to be Helpable, 8659.
- Worse Class of Vagrant than Casual Ward Population, 9656–9664.
- Competition with Common Lodging-houses, 7948–7953.
- Many Men can only take Lowest Grades of Labour, and Shelters are a Temptation to them to give up work, 8666.
- Control:
 - Preservation of Public Health, etc., 9840, 9854–9857.
 - Registration as Common Lodging-houses, Decision in Case of Logsdon v. Booth, 530.
 - REPORT — RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 361–367, 429 (27).
- Differentiation of Functions, Using certain Shelters as Small Homes for Treatment of Hopeful Cases, Investigation of all Cases, etc.—Recommendations of Charity Organisation Society Committee of 1891, 8702.
- Drunkenness, Cases of—Very rare, 9628, 9629.
- Evils of Cheap and Free Shelters—Encouragement of Vagrancy and Sleeping out, Loafers attracted from other Districts, etc., 5452–5455, 7185–7189, 7444–7448, 7452, 7828, 7829, 7833, 7836, 7975, 7976, 8156, 8157, 8607, 8608, 8622, 8635, 8636, 8660–8662, 8666–8669, 8702, 9589–9591, 9597, 9598, 9701–9714, 9852, 9853.
- Classification, Absence of, leading to Infection of Non-Criminals by Criminals, 8623.
- Closeness of Relations between Prison, Shelter and Casual Ward—Addresses given by Vagrants applying for Relief, 8609–8615, 8617.
- Feeding Houses for Workhouses and Casual Wards, 3457, 10550–10553.
- Remedy proposed—Putting a Trained Expert in Charge, thoroughly Investigating Every Case and Endeavouring to Help the Man afterwards, 8659.
- REPORT—par. 338–359.

Shelters and Refuges—cont.

Food during Daytime probably obtained by Begging, 9627.

Free Shelters:

Benefit of—People go to Shelters instead of Sleeping in the Streets, 9450.

Birmingham—Free Shelters, 2843.

Closing:

Closing on General Public Grounds, Placing Power of Closing in Hands of Police or City Authorities—Opinion in Favour of, 7832–7836.

Empowering Municipal Authority to close Shelters unless Work is required, Suggestion, 8158–8162.

Edinburgh—Night Refuge at Queensberry House and Asylum for the Friendless and Homeless, 6956–6962.

Evils of—Encouragement to Vagrancy, etc., refer to subheading Evils of Cheap and Free Shelters.

Licensing, Need for, 7830, 7831.

Salvation Army attitude towards, 7420–7424, 7431–7433.

Identification of Persons resorting to, by Fingerprints or otherwise, Suggestion, 8624, 8625, 8632.

Names given, though assumed, would serve for Verification, 8626.

Inferiority to Casual Wards in Baths and Drying and Disinfecting Arrangements, 8642.

London, see that title; also titles Church Army and Salvation Army.

Memorial to Home Secretary for Subsidy to enable Food and Shelter to be provided for Homeless Persons below Market Price (1889), 8642.

Usefulness, Question of:

Charitable Refuges might be made use of, on Conditions and under Regular Rule and Discipline, 8708.

Mitigation of Evils of Vagrancy, 7448–7452, 9394, 9450.

Necessity under existing Conditions, 7488, 8708.

Usefulness in connection with any System of Reclamation, 9709.

(for particular Shelters and Shelters in particular Districts, see names of Shelters and names of Districts.)

Sick Tramps, Treatment of Admission of Tramps to Workhouse Infirmary, Practice as to, 466–470.

King's Norton—Average Admissions, etc., 2835–2837.

Metropolitan Casual Wards, 3503.

Germany, Treatment in, 3916–3918.

Medical Officer being called in, Provision for, 3173.

Regulations—Order of 1882, 146.

REPORT, par. 96—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 150, 314.

Sleeping Out

Amount of Sleeping out, 820, 821.

Exceptional Amount in Manchester, 8134, 8135.

Less frequent than formerly, 387.

Reduction of Vagrancy in Summer, 214, 7768, 7769.

REPORT, par. 381.

Scotland:

Increase in, in Edinburgh due to Advertisement of Charity, 6952–6955.

More Sleeping out in Scotland than in England owing to absence of Casual Wards, 7669–7671.

Number of Cases dealt with in 1904, 6794.

Statistics for 1893–1903—Variety of Treatment shown, 8563–8565, 8575–8583.

Sleeping Out—cont.

Class of People who sleep out:

Not the Class that frequent Vagrant Wards, 10492–10495.

Percentage who would stick to Work if they could get it, 6124.

Convictions, see subheading Prosecutions and Convictions.

Discharge of Offenders on Promise to go into Workhouse, Promise never kept, 9563–9565.

Enforcement of the Law:

Difficulty caused by Interpretation of Visible Means of Subsistence Question an Obstacle to Apprehension, 9379, 9380, 9425–9427, 9527, 9528, 9560, 9561, 9612, 9642, 9643.

Best left to the Common sense of the Bench, 10715–10719.

Difficulty of apprehending Sleepers-out—they are too sharp, 8133.

Opinion in Favour of, 8750.

Slackness in regard to—Responsibility of Public Opinion, 8139, 8140.

Out-buildings, Sheds, etc., Sleepers in—Police Procedure, 9382, 9383, 9460–9470.

Penalty for sleeping out in Glasgow, 6499–6504.

Police, more power for, proposed, 9460.

Authority for Control of Vagrants, Facilities for putting an end to sleeping out, 10496, 10497.

Labour Colony Solution of difficulty, 7980–7982.

Taking persons found sleeping out to the Casual Ward, proposed, 9726–9731.

Public Road, Sleeping on—not an Offence in Scotland, 6792.

Prosecutions and Convictions:

Difference between one county and another due to Police practice, not acreage of County—Statistics for 1903, 1069–1074.

Gloucestershire—Statistics for 1904, 1759.

Increase in Number:

As Regular but not so great as numbers of Prosecutions for misbehaviour, 10363–10365.

Compared with increase in total number of Vagrants relieved, 10404–10414.

Increase in number of persons proceeded against since 1900, 10370, 10371.

Statistics of number of Vagrants relieved and of convictions for begging and sleeping out—Relative rate of increase (1884, 1894, 1904), 10406–10414.

Manchester Prison, Number of Commitments in 1904, 9125.

Pentonville Prison, Commitments during 1904–5, 9185.

Quinquennial Averages of Persons charged, 1859–1903, 1064.

Statistics, 1857–1904, App., page 113; 1903, App., page 114.

Refusals of admission to Casual Wards—Few Cases of Sleeping out in comparison with number of Refusals, 10492.

Tramps refused admission to Casual Wards do not sleep out, 3417–3420.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 378–384, 429 (31).

Sentences for Sleeping out:

Lanarkshire—Feeling that as there are no Casual Wards, tramps must sleep somewhere, 6880–6887.

Vary very much—Light sentences unless it is a repeated offence, 9428–9433.

Seriousness of Offence—Danger of Fire, etc., 4799–4802, 7667, 7668.

Farmer's point of view, 6901.

Sleeping Out—cont.Seriousness of Offence—cont.

Necessitating Arrest of persons sleeping out, 1704, 1705.

Not very serious, 7826.

Staircases, Sleeping on :

Scotland—Sleeping on Staircases would come under Trespass Act, 6626, 6631.

Spitalfields—Police do not patrol private buildings, 9566-9573.

Trespass (Scotland) Act, etc., Offences dealt with under, 6791, 6819-6821.

Smallpox, Spread of, by Tramps

"Astounding" Effect of Tramps in spreading Disease, 3052.

Common Lodging-houses, Spread of Smallpox by inmates of, 2623, 2624, 5900.

Birmingham, 2623.

Closing houses in case of Smallpox—Case where Compensation was given to keeper of house, 3214, 3215.

Comparative Insusceptibility of Inmates to disease, 5901.

Comparison with Casual Wards as means of spreading Smallpox, 3200-3204.

Number of Cases traced to Common Lodging-houses, Number traced to Casual Wards, 3113-3116, 3137, 3138.

Disinfection, etc., Lack of Facilities for, 2624.

London County Council, Conference of 1894—Resolutions, 530.

Vaccination, Compulsory Vaccination of all Tramps in Common Lodging-houses—Suggestion, 3208.

Conference of Local Authorities at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, 1904—Resolutions adopted, App., page 164.

Conferences of Urban Sanitary Authorities of England and Wales in 1894 and 1904, 530, 3056-3058, 3064.

Detention :

Actual Cases of Smallpox could be detained, but contact cases could not, 539, 540.

Contact Cases—Resolutions in favour of Power of Detention for Local Authority, 534.

Dirt, Smallpox spread by, 3083.

Durham Rural District Council Hospital, Cases of Smallpox traced to a Vagrant, 530.

Epidemic of 1902-1904—Spread of Smallpox by Vagrants, 3053-3056, 3069-3072.

Honest Wayfarers, Smallpox Spread by, 3182-3186.

Labour Colonies Remedy, 3066.

Medical Officer of Health's Reports, 530.

Precautions in Casual Wards :

Bath as a Means of Detecting Smallpox, 2621, 2622, 2626-2629.

Water should never be used more than once, 3084, 3085.

Circulars to Boards of Guardians outside London, App., page 166.

Conference of 1894—Resolutions, 530.

Diagnosis—Difficulty for Inexpert Persons to recognise Signs of Smallpox, 3077, 3078, 3080-3082.

Epidemic of 1903—Infectious Vagrants passed on, Insufficient Examination, etc., 3071, 3072.

Isolation, Inadequate Provision for, 3059, 3062, 3187-3189.

King's Norton Union, 2620-2628, 2829-2834.

Local Government Board Suggestions—Medical Examination, etc., 528.

Smallpox, Spread of, by Tramps—cont.Precautions in Casual Wards—cont.

North Wales Unions—Smallpox brought by Tramps into Unions which bathed, as well as into Unions which did not, 5547-5549.

Possibility of Precautions, a Reason against doing anything to divert Tramps from Casual Wards, 528.

Sheffield—Nightly Medical Examination of Casuals when there was any sign of Smallpox in Yorkshire, 2410.

Undetected Cases—Tramps Suffering from Smallpox passing through Casual Wards undetected, Omission of Bath, etc., 2622-2628.

Wycombe—No System of Examination, 3020.

Procedure when a Tramp is found to be suffering from Smallpox on Admission to a Casual Ward, 535-538.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 368-377, 429 (29, 30).

Smith's, Dr. Edward, Dietary for Able-bodied Paupers 10849-10851, 10855-10857, 10862.

Soup Kitchens

Indiscriminate Soup Kitchens playing into the hands of Indiscriminate Shelters and helping to create Vagrants, 8622.

South African War—Effect on Vagrancy.

Decrease in Vagrancy in 1900 partly due to the War, 220, 597, 1064-1067, 1774, 10357, 10358.

Increase in Vagrancy due to Return of Men from the War, 909, 1007, 1064, 1068, 1069, 1774, 4648-4651, 7555, 7714, 8556.

Increase mainly due to Subsidence of Demand for Unskilled Labour—Returned Soldiers who took to the Road were only reverting to their Former Position, 8557-8560.

Stafford

Attractive Tramp Route—Enormous Number of Tramps passing through Stafford to and from the Hop-picking, etc., 10938, 10939, 11024, 11025.

Child Vagrants, Abnormal Proportion of—Census of 1903, 10931-10939, 11023, 11024, 11046.

Standard of Life among the Lower Classes in London, etc.

Common Lodging-house Standard the Lowest that should be Accepted, 5810, 5812.

Importance of Good Beds with Sheets, etc., as a Means of restoring Self-respect, 8163-8165.

Moral and Social Evil of Low Standard, 5670, 5671, 5688, 5900.

Raising Standard in Common Lodging-houses, would not affect the Class as a whole, 5816, 5817.

Tendency to accept Lower Standard and Worse Accommodation, 5680-5687.

Tenement Houses, Physical Conditions in, 5813-5815.

Improvement due to Inspection, etc., 5813, 5814.

Separation of the Sexes, Difficulty in regard to, 5815.

Tramp Prisoner has no idea of Comfort, 9283, 9284.

Standing Joint Committee

Authority to control Vagrancy—Discussion of scheme, 3927, 4072-81, 4354, 4770-4779, 4844, 4857, 4956-61, 7707-9, 8474-8477, 8493, 8494, 10601-6.

Many Casual Wards would not be satisfactory, and would be rebuilt at great expense, 8474-8477.

Standing Joint Committee—cont.

Authority to Control Vagrancy—cont.

Renting Wards from Guardians, proposed, 8478, 8479.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 129, 130, 131.

Superintendents who are Masters of Workhouses, Putting under Standing Joint Committee for Casual Ward purposes, proposed, 8473.

Workhouse Master might be appointed ad hoc as Constable in charge of Ward where there were very few Tramps, 8480.

Labour Colonies, Management by the Standing Joint Committee under Home Office combined with Local Inspection, suggested, 3948-3951, 4047.

Starnthwaite Labour Colony

Date of Establishment, 5040.

No Resident Head—Local Manager, 5035, 5036.

Number of Inmates, 5037.

Starvation, Deaths from

Scotland :

Almost impossible, 6977.

Machinery for Inquiry, 6756-6759.

State Children's Association

Barrack Schools of any sort, Objections to, 6093.

Gorst's, Sir J., Vagrant Children Bill drafted by Association, 5917.

Statistics of Vagrancy, App., pages 19-37.

REPORT, par. 46-77.

refer also to title, Extent of Vagrancy Evil.

Stepney

Homeless Men and Women, Number found on Night of 17 Feb. 1905, 5908, 5910, 9587-9591.

Stone breaking Task

Amount of Stone to be broken at King's Norton, 2703.

Hard Labour in Prison, 779, 780, 797.

Stone breaking involves a certain amount of Physical Exertion, 9314-9316.

Objections to, 429.

Uniformity Difficulty—Stone breaking Skilled Work, 315-319, 1870, 1871, 2252, 2253, 2703-2707, 2725.

Unsuitable Task—Not fair to put a Watchmaker to Stone breaking, 9698.

Opinion in Favour of, 3931.

Profit on Broken Stones, Question of, 429.

REPORT, par. 93.

Stone pounding, Comparison with, 2247-2254, 2335-2338.

Test in Scotch Poorhouses, 6444-6446.

Stone pounding Task

Chairman of Nantwich Guardians, Task performed by, 2030, 2033, 2034.

Cost of Material, Price realised by Sale of Produce—Task more preventive than remunerative, 2038-2040, 2248, 2249.

Decrease in number of Casuals after introduction of Stone pounding, 2018-2021, 2028, 2029, 2044, 2174, 2178, 2273-2275.

Neighbouring Unions, complaints that Tramps were forced on them by System, 2180-2181.

No alteration of Diet at time of Introduction, 2313-2315.

Disposal of Broken Produce, 2191, 2196, 2255.

Difficulty at Leeds, 2439-2441.

Habitual Tramps, Task usually given to, at Cuckfield, 2074.

Making Task Universal and Uniform—Suggestion, 2045.

Stone pounding Task—cont.

Material at Cuckfield—Flints from Shoreham Beach, 2031, 2032.

Nature of Task, Quantity of Stone to be Crushed, etc., 2022-2026, 2035, 2025-2030.

Physical Capacity of Casuals, Taking into Account—Proportion set to Stone pounding at Cuckfield, 2027, 2035, 2073, 2173, 2371-2374.

Refusal to do Task—Prosecutions at Cuckfield, 2046, 2332.

Prison preferred—Casual twice sentenced to a month's imprisonment, 2054.

Punishment never less than 28 days, 2048-2062, 2199.

REPORT, par. 149.

Sifting—Men trying to force Wires of Sieve further apart, 2331.

Skilled Work and therefore uneven Task, 4993-4995.

Sore Hands, Complaints of, 2188, 2189.

Stone breaking, Advantages as compared with, 2247-2254, 2335-2338.

Sussex Workhouses following Example of Cuckfield, 2051, 2053, 2183.

Task not Completed, Discretion used in case of Men trying to do the Work, 2333, 2334.

Uniformity—Difficulty in regard to Material, 2355-2360.

Unskilled Labour, Suitable Task for Vagrants, 429, 2036, 2184-2187, 2250, 2251, 9040-9047.

Straw Cases for Wine Bottles

Industry in Swiss Labour Colonies, Introducing into English Prisons and Workhouses, Suggestion, 8331.

Street Trading Act

Child Vagrancy in Manchester, Children driven from the Streets by the Act, 7927.

Summary Jurisdiction—Vagrancy Offences summarily determined.

Annual Report—Regular Investigation of Inequalities of Returns suggested, 8591, 8605-8607, 8627.

Courts of Summary Jurisdiction :

Number of Courts, Number of Magistrates for each Court, etc., 1093.

Powers of—REPORT, par. 217.

Single Magistrate, Court composed of—Limit of Magistrate's Powers, 1094-1096.

Difference of Opinion among Magistrates as to Enforcement of the Law, 8751, 8752.

First Offenders, Percentage of, at Pentonville, 9244-9250.

Methods of tracing Prisoners—Possibility that Previous Convictions are not traced in case of Short-timers, 9302-9312.

Injustice of classing Vagrancy Offenders with Criminals, 9069-9077, 9116-9121.

Minimum Sentence for all Summary Convictions, Suggestion, 1125, 1126.

Objection to, removed by Act of 1879, 1103.

Number of Cases :

Decrease in Number of Persons proceeded against summarily for all Offences, 10366, 10367.

Increase since 1900—Increase at Pentonville Prison, 9258-9260, 9263-9265.

Causes of Increase—Question whether Increase due to change in Prison Conditions, 9262-9271.

Manchester Prison, 1904, 9123-9127.

Statistics :

1893-1903, 8563-8565, 8575-8583.

1900-1904, Total Number of Persons summarily Convicted, 10427-10433.

Petty Offenders repeatedly coming up, Inclusion in Definition of Vagrancy, Suggestion, 7160.

Summary Jurisdiction, etc.—cont.

Relation to Vagrancy prior to 1903—Since 1903 Vagrancy has increased, but Offences have gone down and the inference is that the Law is not enforced, 8553-8555.

Statistical Tables :

1857-1904, App., pages 113-118.

1893-1904, App., page 111.

1903, App., page 114.

Stricter Supervision by Home Office, Suggestion, 8605.

Table of Offences and Statutory Enactments applicable, App., page 8.

Uniformity, Suggestions for Securing :

Identification System necessary to Uniform Administration of the Law, 8759.

Remodelling the Vagrancy Act to suit Modern Requirements—Fixing a Minimum Sentence and giving Power to send Vagrants for long Periods to Labour Colonies, 8754-8759.

Reporting Circumstances of all Cases of Non-enforcement to Home Office who could then make a strong Report on the Subject, 8752-8754.

Summary Jurisdiction Act of 1879

Objection to Minimum Sentences taken away by the Act, 1103.

Summary of Committee's Recommendations

REPORT, par. 429.

Sunday

Best Day for Begging, 1826-1828, 2291-2293.

Detention over Sunday, see Detention.

Sunday in Casual Wards—No Reforming or Religious Influence of any kind, 541, 542.

Surrey

Gipsies on Surrey Commons—Difficulty in dislodging, Police have no Power, etc., 8591-8599, 8602-8604.

Proportion of Vagrancy high according to Population, 300.

Sussex Unions

Casual Wards—Class of Wards, 2170.

Switzerland—Administration in regard to Vagrancy.

All Cantons subject to Federal law, but in practice the matter left to each Canton, 8280-8282.

Authority—Council of the Canton and Council of the District.

Elective Bodies not necessarily containing a Government Representative, 8309, 8313.

Power of detaining a man for three years, 8305, 8310, 8314.

Qualifications of Councillors—They know more than a Magistrate about cases from their District, 8391, 8392, 8436.

Begging.

Decrease in—Causes of Decrease, 8276, 8372, 8373, 8436.

Procedure—Police would either take Beggar before a Magistrate or send him to his own Gemeinde; in either case he might be committed to a forced Labour Colony, 8305, 8392.

Cantons outside Inter-Cantonal Unions for Relief of Poor Travellers—Travellers dealt with by Police, 8286.

Causes of Vagrancy—Drink the main Cause, 8385.

Difference between English and Swiss Circumstances—Thriftness of Swiss Authorities, 8437-8439.

Identification Difficulty non-existent—Every person must have papers of Origin, 8436, 8453-8457.

Switzerland, etc.—cont.

Indoor Relief given, but quite apart from Treatment of Vagrants, 8302-8304.

Inter-Cantonal Union for Relief of poor Travellers, 8283-8285, 8297, App., pages 105, 106.

Accommodation given—Rough Accommodation, 8499, 8500.

Almsgiving, Effect of Society in lessening willingness to give Alms, 8286, 8374.

Decrease in Vagrancy and Begging due to system, 8373, 8436.

Distance apart of Stations, 8501, 8502.

Lucerne, Working of System, in, 8430.

Passes, System of :

Forfeiture of Book for begging or refusing suitable Work, 8288, 8291, 8292, 8296, 8458-8461, 8519, 8520.

No Route indicated—Traveller at liberty to go where he chooses in search of work, 8289, 8290, 8452.

Travellers must furnish proof of having worked within the last three months and of having been out of work at least five days, 8287, 8288, 8294.

Police, Connection with—Some Herbergen at Police Stations, 8285.

Public Opinion in Switzerland—System certainly considered successful, 8300, 8301.

REPORT, par. 171.

Voluntary Society with Contributions and Privileges from Federal and Cantonal Governments, 8283-8285, 8449, 8450, 8462.

No conditions attached to Government Grant, 8503, 8504.

Labour Colonies—Forced Labour Colony System, etc., App., pages 106-110.

Administration by Cantonal Council without Interference of any sort from Federal Government, 8319-8322.

Officers appointed by Cantonal Council, 8319.

Beggars, Liability to be sent to a Forced Labour Colony, 8305.

Class of men sent :

Criminals—Men not usually sent for Crimes of Violence, but practice varies, 8420.

Loafers more or less habitual, many fairly Young Men, 8388-8390.

Workhouse, Cases occasionally sent from, 8393.

Classification recognised as desirable, 8533.

Competition with outside Labour—Question, does not arise, there is plenty of Market for everything, 8433.

Decrease in Vagrancy and Begging due to System, 8372, 8373, 8388.

Diet—More Vegetarian than Diet given in English Institutions, 8353.

Appearance of Colonists Evidence that Diet was good and sufficient, 8505-8507.

Discharge difficulty, 7168-7170.

Hours of Work—Much longer than in English Prisons, 8330, 8334.

Inspection by Local Visiting Committee, 8320, 8321.

Number of Colonies—Nearly every Canton has either a Colony or an Agreement with a Canton which has a Colony, 8317, 8318.

Payments for Colonists—Gemeinde makes a small Payment in all Cases, 8311, 8312.

Prisons, Relief of—Many Colonists must otherwise have been in Prison, 8338, 8339.

Switzerland—cont.Labour Colonies—cont.

Public Opinion undoubtedly in Favour of System, 8432.

Reformation of Character Question :

General Opinion that Reformation is hardly to be hoped for, but that there is some chance for the Younger Men, 8378, 8379, 8385-8387.

No Record kept—General Statements to the effect that many Colonists get work and at any rate do not return, 8408-8412.

REPORT, par. 249-256, 274.

Stimulus to Work—Bonus on discharge, fear of Punishment, etc., No Canteen System, 8508-8514.

Term of Detention :

Magistrates give shorter Terms than District Councils, 8416.

Varying in different Cantons—Six Months practically the Minimum, 8306-8308.

Utilisation of Labour that would otherwise be Wasted, 8395.

Value of System—Worth while to Maintain, since it discouraged Tramping and might Reform some Tramps, 8388.

Voluntary Colonies :

Adjuncts to Forced Labour Colonies, 574, 575.

Number of—Cost, etc., of Herdern Colony, 8434.

(For particular Colonies, see their names—Witzwyl, Gmünden, etc.)

Poor Law Area—Each Canton and each Gemeinde or Commune, 8277, 8278.

Workhouse, Sick-house, and Orphanage—Separate Institutions in many Communes, 8304.

Tame Street, Manchester—Women's Casual Ward, 1297.

Admission—Bully-ragging by Official, 1383-1388, 1419, 1438-1441.

Bathing—Bath Immediately after Meal, etc., 1393, 1453-1456.

Beds—Plank Beds unnecessarily close together, 1395.

Straw Mattress allowed only to Persons lying ill, 1418.

Blankets—Condition, 1394.

Class of Inmates—Very few Regular Tramps, 1421.

Respectable Married Women, 1440, 1441.

Cleanliness of Ward, 1393.

Clothing :

Damage to own Clothing by Task Work, 1406-1409, 1420.

Garments Supplied—Scanty and not Clean, 1393, 1394.

Detention—Time of discharge, 1416-1418.

Detention of Woman who would otherwise have obtained work, 1420, 1421.

Dietary :

Food good and palatable, but unsuitable for working on, water from bath tap, etc., 1393, 1395, 1412-1415, 1458.

Mid-day meal, 1406—Hot water for own tea obtained, 1416.

Disturbance of rest due to late admissions, 1395-1398.

Extra facilities for Casuals, alleged, 1379, 1380.

Officials in Ward, conduct of, 1393, 1420.

Refusals of Admission, 1389-1391, 1450-1452.

Regulations strictly observed inside Ward, 1448-1456.

Tame Street, Manchester, etc.—cont.

Situation—In the heart of the poorest part of Manchester, 1381.

Task—Oakum picking, cleaning, etc., 1401-1404, 1412.

Damage to own clothing by task work, 1406-1409.

Total effect of treatment—Month required to recover, 1444, 1457.

Tannenhof—Voluntary Labour Colony, 2976-2983.

Vagrant hardly known in Colony, 2984.

Task

Act of 1842—Task of four hours first legalised, 36, 39.

Average man, task fixed for—Stronger man gets a good deal of leisure, 1644-1646.

Blistering hands on purpose to avoid task, 429.

Circular of 1848, 46.

Clothing—Damage to own clothing by task work, 1406-1409.

Competition of Workhouse Labour with individual trades.

Difficulty of finding Labour that would not compete with outside industry, 484, 3362, 3365, 3366.

Firewood manufacturers' complaint, 180-183, 3365, 3366.

Dewsbury—Absence of complaint from outside Public, 898-900.

Conditions of Labour making men hate work, 5939, 5940, 5942.

Country Workhouses—Choice confined to stone breaking and digging, 4185-4188.

Deterrent effect, 6975, 6976, 6980.

Decrease of Vagrancy, 1842-1844, attributed to establishment of task, 40.

Difficulties of arranging task work :

Easier to deal with a large number than with two or three Tramps,—Expense Question, 451-453.

Enforcement of Regulations—Tendency towards slackness and leniency, 63-65, 440, 441, 2645, 2646, 4859, App., 80, 83.

Inspectors' Reports to Poor Law Board in 1866, 63-65.

Number of Unions which imposed no task—Inspectors' Reports in 1866, 60.

Pressure on Wards where task light or not enforced, 3258-3260, 3265-3267, 3272-3275, 3285, 3400-3410, 5332-5334, 5339.

Stafford and Lichfield, number of Tramps compared, 11024, 11046-11048.

Fours' Hours Task :

Act of 1842, 36.

Circular of 1868, 96.

Hard Labour in Prison preferred by Tramps, 1618, 10159, 10160, App., page 77.

Historical Review of Legislation, etc., 13, 31-37.

Ideal Task, 333, 334, 447-450.

Irksome and troublesome and not skilled, 2110. Most effective tasks, 429, 3931.

Industrial training, difficulty of, owing to short period of detention, 484.

Kind of Labour given, 325, 429, 433-435, 484, 3245, 3248, 3314-3317, 3361, 3363, App., pages 80, 82.

Better class of Vagrant resenting kind of Labour imposed, 2910, 2957.

Suggestions as to a free hand for the Guardians and Introduction of some Work suited to persons of low physique, 647.

Task—cont.Kind of Labour given—cont.

Touch of skilled Workmen interfered with by Prescribed Task, alleged, 438, 439.

Useless work, Hatred of, 436.

Non-habitual—Employment in household duties in Casual Ward, 9690.

Objections to Task System, 5405.

Order of 1882—Task prescribed, but made variable by Guardians, 146—Text of Order, App., pages 10, 12.

Inspectors' opinions asked in 1903, 193, 194.

Laxity in carrying out—Circular of 1896, 192.

Painter staying two or three weeks doing odd jobs, case of, 484–489.

Permitting Task to be done on Day of Admission—Manchester Regulation, 7818–7820.

Persons of low physique, work suited to, 647.

Profit on Task.

Cost of Maintenance ought to be met by Profit on Task, 5621.

Metropolitan Casual Wards, 3364, 3365.

No Profit at Sheffield, 2446, 2447.

Refusal to Work—Plea of Physical Incapacity, etc.

Medical Examination in Cases of Physical Inability, App., page 83.

Complete Examination in all Cases at King's Norton, 2826–2828, 2853.

Discretion used at Sheffield, 2458–2462.

Exemption of those suffering from any Infirmary—Responsibility of Doctor and Workhouse Master, 430–432, 459–464, 521–523.

Medical Certificate always obtained before Prosecution at Cuckfield, 2343–2346.

Medical Examination only when Physical Inability pleaded—Wycombe Union, 3018, 3019, 3025, 3026.

Metropolitan Casual Wards, 3320, 3331, 3432, 3433, 3495–3498, 3505–3510.

Nature of Examination—Not Strict enough at Sheffield, 2546–2551.

Number of Cases found to be unfit upon Examination at King's Norton, 2854–2856.

Physical Inability of large Proportion of Casuals Committed, Preliminary Medical Examination suggested—Prison Commissioners' Report, 520.

Wasted Arm not mentioned till man was taken before a Magistrate, 2468.

Penalty to be imposed—Suggestion, 516.

Prosecutions—Length of Sentences, etc.:

Birmingham, 2742–2748.

King's Norton, 2742, 2752.

Longer Sentences given by Local Magistrates, 2455–2457.

Norwich, 2740.

Sheffield, 2451, 2454.

Wycombe, 2927–2929, 3027, 3039, 3040.

Return to Workhouse after Prosecution—rare occurrence, 2354, 2355.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS par. 148–150, 429 (7, 12).

Situation of Workhouse—Difficulties at Dewsbury, 854, 905, 906.

Sufficiency of Task in Metropolitan Casual Wards, 3319.

Time-work, substituting for Piece-work, 184, 185, 320–322, 447–450, 647, 707–710.

Task—cont.Time-work, etc.—cont.

Prescribed task existing only as regards Stone breaking and Oakum picking, 429.

Uniformity of Task:

Difficulties in securing under present System, Local Conditions, etc., 306, 313–319, 328, 329, 1859, 1874. 3257–3260, 4944–4948.

Expertness of the old hands, 3310–3313, 3367, 3501.

Material, Difficulty in regard to getting same Material, 2356–2360.

Suggestion that work should be Uniform in Degree of Exertion and Time occupied, 647, 707–710.

Uniformity desirable and possible, 5573, 5574.

Opinion that Uniformity could be secured to a larger extent than at present, 163.

Uniformity impossible:

Order of 1871—Regulations with alternatives which make Uniformity impossible, 104.

Task must change with Locality, 4185.

Way-ticket Holders. Task for, exemption from Task suggested, 2246, 4923.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 179, 180, 429 (12).

Women, Tasks set for:

Amount of Work required out of all proportion to amount of Relief given, 1481, 1482.

Cuckfield, 2320, 2321.

Dewsbury, 1331.

Metropolitan Casual Wards, 3248.

No proper task for Women, 4185, 4188, 4189.

North Bierley, 1365–1368.

North Wales Unions, 5513.

Tame Street, Manchester, 1401–1404, 1412.

Workhouse Master, Labour regulated by, 421–423, 521–523.

see also Names of particular tasks—Corn-grinding, Oakum-picking, Stone-breaking, etc.

Tea

Cost of—Very expensive as compared with most articles of diet, 5877.

Telephonic Communication

Advantages of, in dealing with Vagrants, 1996.

Tents, Vans, Sheds, etc.

Model Bye-laws issued by Local Government Board, App., page 176.

Terms of Reference and Constitution of Committee—REPORT iii.Test Houses, App., page 158.

Cost of—Statistics, etc., 10119–10122.

Distinction between ordinary Workhouse and a Test House, 9997, 9999–10001.

Thavies Inn Casual Ward

Popularity of—Refusals for Want of Room, 10483–10488.

Popularity due to its being an Association Ward, 3400, 3452.

Thompson, Sir Benjamin

Bavarian Labour Colony System invented by, 8939–8945.

Trade Depression

Fluctuations of Vagrancy due to, 133–135, 2383–2386, 7556–7558, 8819–8823.

Trade Unions and Trade Societies

Assistance for Members travelling in search of work, Precautions against fraud, etc., 4196, 4229, 5449–5451.

Trade Unions and Trade Societies—cont.

Increase in Vagrancy among men past their prime due in part to effects of Trade Unionism, 4918.

Piece-Work as Remedy—Suggestion, 5312.

Number of Casuals Members of Trade Unions—King's Norton Wards, 2608.

"Recognised" Trade Societies, Issue of Certificates to Honest Wayfarers by—Suggestion, 2689-2693, 2805-2812, 2872-2885.

"Recognised" defined as registered, 2844-2849.

Trafalgar Square Gatherings of 1887

Nuisance created by so-called Charity—Effect on Neighbouring Casual Wards, 177.

Tread Mills

Abolition, 774-777, 809.

Abolition a mistake—Prison less deterrent, 4315, 10264-10268, 10328-10331, 10335-10337, 10345, 10346.

Inequality of Punishment—Too violent for the novice and no punishment to the old hand, 9145.

Treatment of Vagrants—Systems of Treatment.

Charity Organisation Society Committee of 1891, Recommendations, 8702.

Difficulty of making different Regulations for the different Classes, 678, 681.

Present System, App., pages 5-14.

Alteration in Character of Treatment needed, 852.

Approval of, 2109.

Driving Vagrants from one Place to another, 4747, 4748.

Failure to Repress Vagrancy—Causes of Failure, etc., 2732-2735, 2772, 4222.

Casual Wards too close together, 2668.

Police and Magistrates, Mistaken Sympathy shown to Beggars, 2670-2673.

Not of a Reforming Character—No useful Occupation learned, no good influences of any sort, 541.

Retention of, in Conjunction with Labour Colonies—Poor Law Unions' Association Scheme, 878-881, 976-978.

Relief for Vagrants and Discharged Prisoners, Regulations to be drawn up and Enforced—Recommendation of Poor Law Commissioners, 1834, 23.

REPORT—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 4, 430-435.

Scottish System, see Scotland.

Severity of Treatment:

Desirable, 2909.

Not in the least Deterrent, 9269-9271, 9287-9301.

Possible only when Adequate provision made for genuine Distress, 6808-6810.

Repression a Failure, 4987, 4988.

Tudor Times, Severe Measures taken, 8, 3133, 3134.

Special Treatment Required—Vagrancy a Disease like Drunkenness, 4446, 10297.

Provision of Employment would not solve the Vagrancy Problem—it is a Question of Defective or Criminal Instinct on the part of Offenders, 8742.

Uniformity, Need for, see title Uniformity.

Trespass (Scotland) Act of 1865

Offences Dealt with under the Act, 6624-6626, 6631, 6791, 6793, 6819-6821.

Tvphus

Former Prevalence of—got rid of by Means of Isolation and Provision of Hospital Accommodation, etc., 3047-3051, 3195-3198.

Uckfield Union

Decrease in Number of Casuals due to Stricter Administration, 2053.

Unemployables—Hopeless Class, etc.

Hardships of Present System for Physically Unfit, 4971.

Inclusion of, in Definition of Vagrancy—Suggestion, 7157.

Infirmity Treatment for three months—Suggestion, 5458-5468.

Low Diet of Workhouse, Effect on Physically and Mentally Unfit, 2680, 2681.

Proportion of—In practice very few should be treated as hopeless, 2677-2679, 3029, 6282, 6285-6288, 6329, 6353, 7002-7007.

Provision for Physically Unfit in their own Union with power of Permanent Detention—Suggestion, 4916, 4967, 4974-4978, 4982-4986.

Power of Discharge to rest with Guardians, 4978-4981.

Provision for taking off the Roads—Suggestion, 2129.

REPORT, par. 84.

Segregation of Hopeless Class, proposed:

Deterrent Effect anticipated, 5757-5763, 5824, 5825, 5870.

Inability to earn a decent bed should qualify a man to become the care of the State, 5709-5712, 5750, 5751, 5811, 5869.

Numbers to be dealt with, 5764, 5770, 5771.

State Colony needed for Segregation of, 6280-6282.

see also titles Feeble-minded Vagrants and Old and Infirm Vagrants.

Unemployed Problem

Complication by Vagrancy—Impossible to deal with, until the "won't works" and Unemployables had been cleared away, 5936, 5428, 5936, 7502-7504, 11094.

REPORT, par. 6, 83.

Labour Colonies would clear the ground of Loafers and make the Unemployed Problem possible to handle, 11094.

Lowest Class largely ins and outs, 8804, 8805, 8808.

Men past forty, Difficulty in finding new work—Labour Colonies as Refuge for such men, 11097.

Remedies suggested—Industrial Schools for Adults, 11094.

Women unemployed not heard of because to a large extent the women keep the men, 8815.

Uniformity—Need for Uniformity in Treatment of Casuals, Present Diversity of Treatment, Suggestions, Opinions, etc.

Area of Chargeability, Extension of—Need for Uniformity an argument for Extension, 7637, 7640.

Begging and Sleeping-out Statistics, 1893-1903, Disparity of Treatment shown by, 8563-8565, 8575-8583.

Casual Wards, Provision of—Less difficulty if the requirements were uniform, 729.

Character of Relief to be such as only the really destitute will accept, System to be general—Recommendation of Poor Law Commissioners in 1834, 23.

Circular to Magistrates—Suggestion, 7872, 7873.

Controlling Head needed to lay down a Uniform System, 5406-5410.

Country Unions:

No Uniformity at all, 10447, 10448.

Same uniformity as in London not to be hoped for, 9741, 9742.

Uniformity, etc.—cont.

Difficulties in the way of Uniformity, 4779-4784.

Circumstances of Unions, Difference in Treatment necessitated by, etc., 981, 1859-1862.

Expert Vagrant selects Wards he prefers, 5569.

Failure to suppress Vagrancy due to diversity of Treatment, 2640.

General and Permanent Remedy required, 1018.

Impossibility of achieving absolute Uniformity :

Absolute Uniformity not possible, Opinion in favour of a nearer approach to it, 309-312, 324, 8704,

Local Government Board without power to coerce Boards of Guardians, etc., 4943, 4949-4955.

Inspectors' Reports to the Poor Law Board in 1866, 60, 70.

Legislation, Circulars, etc :

Act and Order of 1871—Provision for Uniform Diet, etc., with alternatives which made Uniformity impossible, 102, 104.

Circular of 1848, 46.

Order of 1882 provided for Uniformity if its Provisions were adopted, 4788, 4837-4843, 4858, 4859, 10445—Exceptions on every possible point, 8523.

Uniformity advocated in all Circulars, but no enforced, 161, 312.

Object of Reform was to get greater Uniformity of Treatment, 10593-10595.

Opinion in favour of Uniformity—Importance of Uniformity, 2889, 2891, 5571, 7567, 8466, 9740.

Boase's, Mr., Opinion, 45.

Workhouse Masters' Association, Stress laid on Need for Uniformity, 2094, 2110, 2118, 2308.

Police Administration of Law in respect of Vagrancy a means of securing Uniformity, 4958-4961, 5573, 5616, 10562-10569, 11053.

REPORT, par. 431—RECOMMENDATION, par. 113-119.

Result anticipated—Decrease in Vagrancy, 8488-8491.

Way-ticket System—Uniformity needed to make System effectual, 2095, 2096, 2422.

Wiltshire Vagrancy Committee, Great Difficulty in the way of, 1904-1906, 1944.

(see also Bathing, Detention, Dietary, Sentences, Task, etc., and for Particular Places, see their Names.)

United States of America

Parole System, 5296.

Promotion System at Elmira, 5289, 5296.

Unskilled Labouring Classes

Large Proportion of Tramps belonging to, 7962.

Vaccination

Anti-Vaccinators to bear the expense of Smallpox—Suggestion, 3190, 3192.

Compensation for working-men—Persuasive Vaccination :

Newcastle Practice, 3212.

One shilling each paid in some cases, 532.

Tramps vaccinated on both arms in order to get another half-crown, 3209-3211.

Compulsory Vaccination of Casuals and Inmates of Common Lodging-houses—Suggestion, 3208.

Conference of 1894, Resolution, 530.

REPORT, par. 376.

Resolutions in favour of, forwarded to the Local Government Board, 531, 534.

Gross Neglect of—If all were properly vaccinated and re-vaccinated, there would be no Smallpox, 3190-3193, 3199.

Insufficient Powers of enforcing, 3123.

Vagrancy, Border-Line Cases—Men drifting into Vagrancy.

Facility of descent, 5311.

Labourers, Navvies, etc., etc., who work two or three days and then drink every farthing they get, Large number of, 7587, 7588.

Drunkenness Convictions, Greater number of Cases are men of this class, 7747.

Large Number of Ayrshire Vagrants really in search of Work, but undesirable Workmen who will not do regular work, 6801, 6802, 6815-6817.

Loss of Strength on Casual Ward Diet and Consequent liability to drift into Vagrancy, 2365, 2366.

"Once on the road, always on the road" Theory, 653-659.

Way-ticket System a means of detecting, 3940-3943, 4022-4025, 4133.

Vagrancy Act, 1824

Cumulative Penalties provided for, 552, 703.

Failure to meet modern conditions—The Act obsolete, 6189.

Remodelling in view of modern needs—Suggestion, 8686.

Gipsies—Application to, 8598.

Majority of Persons committed under, not strictly speaking Vagrants, 1063.

Mode of Life, not specific Act, aimed at—Case of Pointon v. Hill, etc., 1228, 1229.

Quarter Sessions, Limited Powers in regard to Incorrigible Rogues—Whipping or twelve months' imprisonment the only alternatives, 1234-1237.

Relief, Power of, allowed to Magistrates, 1230.

REPORT, par. 20-22, 217.

Repression of Mendicity—Magistrates authorised to grant Passes to Vagrants discharged from Prison, 19-22.

Retention of, as Alternative to Labour Colony Treatment. REPORT—RECOMMENDATION, par. 222.

Scotland—Provisions of the Act applied practically to Scotland within the last ten years, 511.

Vagrancy Act of 1898

Souteneur treated as Rogue and Vagabond, 1229.

Vagrancy Bill of 1904 (Sir J. Gorst's), 513, 514

Inebriate Reformatory System suggested as Model for Labour Colonies, 1206, 1207.

Ordinary Tramp not covered by the Bill—Extension of Bill needed, 1219-1221.

Text and Memorandum, App., pages 141, 142.

Vagrancy Offences

see title Summary Jurisdiction—Offences ^{are} summarily determined, also Begging and Sleeping Out.

Vagrant Children Bill (Sir J. Gorst's)

Provisions of, 5916, 5917.

"Vagrant," Definition of, in Act of 1871, 297.

Vagrants' Children Protection Bill

(1904) 513-515.

Home Office Objection to Bill as creating new Offence, 1153, 1161.

N.S.P.C.C. Attitude in regard to Bill—not within the province of the Society to say that tramping a child habitually should be an offence, 11011-11020.

Opinion in favour of, 2667, 2821.

Provisions of, 11012.

Provision enabling Magistrates to invoke Industrial Schools Act at their discretion, 4619, 4620.

Reference to, 513-515. REPORT, par. 427.

Vagrants wandering to their own hurt

see titles Old and Infirm Vagrants and Feeble-minded Vagrants.

Vans, Tents, Sheds, etc.

Model Bye-laws issued by Local Government Board, App., page 176.

Veenhuizen Labour Colony, 8874.Verminous Persons

Cleansing of Persons Act:

London, Extent of Provision under Cleansing of Persons Act—Act for the most part a dead letter, 5692, 5693.

Optional nature of—Further Legislation needed, 5693, 5694.

Disease, Possibility of Conveyance by Vermin, 5699, 5865-5867.

State Interference, Justification for—a Verminous Person is a serious nuisance, 5696-5698, 5700, 5701.

Victoria Homes, 5843.

Common Lodging-houses—Decision in case of Logsdon v. Trotter, 5790.

Voluntary Entries into Labour Colonies

Inclusion in definition of Vagrancy, Suggestion, 7159.

Waiters

Number of German Waiters unemployed during 1904, 8445.

Wales

North Wales, see that title.

Police employed as Assistant Relieving Officers, 1196, 1197.

Wanderings of Tramps

Extent of, 3132, 3314, 3434.

Wandsworth

Casual Ward—Cost of Construction, 10011-10015.

Charity Organisation Visitation in 1885—Number of cases worthy of inquiry, 8642.

Refusals of Admission to Casual Ward, None in 1904, 8467-8648.

Wantage

Decrease in Vagrancy due to Cell System, 4832-4835.

Wayfarers distinguished from Professional Tramps

see Honest Wayfarer distinguished from Professional Tramp

Way-ticket Systems—Berkshire System, etc.

Abandonment of System:

Causes of breakdown in Berkshire, 1587, 1856, 4663-4666—Resulting Rise in number of Vagrants, 1581.

Worcestershire System—Cause of Abandonment, etc., 2654, 2662, 2666.

Abuse, Possibilities of:

Bread might be exchanged for Liquor under the Dorsetshire System, 1916.

Ease with which tickets obtained in Herefordshire—Supervision needed, etc., 985-997.

Government objection to system, etc., in 1871, 102.

Sale or Transference of Tickets, 1917-1919, 4421-4424.

Tickets not transferred in Gloucestershire, 1616.

Amount of Vagrancy, Effect of Way-ticket Systems on:

Berkshire, 4766.

Gloucestershire, 1562-1564, 1567-1573, 4278, 4331-4334.

Way-ticket Systems, etc.—cont.

Amount of Vagrancy, etc.—cont.

Large number of Tramps in several Counties notwithstanding the various Way-ticket Systems, 516.

Neighbouring Counties, Effect on, of Gloucestershire System, 1565-1567, 1581-1583.

Wiltshire, 1907-1915.

Begging and Almsgiving, Effect of Way-ticket System on.

Almsgiving and Begging not prevented in Gloucestershire, 5351-5354.

Circulars distributed warning people not to give: Gloucestershire, 1575-1578, 1584-1585, 1672, 1815-1818—Text of Circular, App., page 40.

Mid-day Meal, Amount given for, not mentioned on Circular, 1592-1595.

Wiltshire, 1815-1818—Text of Circular, App., page 46.

Effect of—Difficulty in preventing poor people from giving Alms, 1920-1923.

Excuse for, removed by Way-ticket System, 1558, 1559, 2654-2660, 2671-2673, 2774, 4294, 4304, 4305, 4336, 10204.

Reduction of Begging in Wiltshire, 1829, 1849, 1850-1853.

Border-Line Cases, Men drifting into Vagrancy, System a means of detecting, 3940-3943, 4022-4025, 4133.

Certificate issued by recognised Trade Society or by Police, setting forth Description, Destination, Route, etc., requiring Vagrant to obtain—Holder of such Certificate to be entitled to Night's Lodging and Food sufficient to maintain strength, Suggestion, 2689-2693.

Church Army, Experiment on Road from London to Southampton—Work exacted in Return for Food and Lodging, 8080-8093, 8266.

Failure due to Impossibility of getting Lodging-house Keepers to make sure Work was really done, 8080-8083, 8267.

Successful in that where Labour was insisted on Vagrants avoided the Town, 8088-8090.

Circular of 1848—System of Passes for Persons actually in search of Work, 46.

Circular of 1868—Berkshire System recommended, 96.

Circular of 1883—Way-tickets mentioned as having been successful in some places, 168.

Common Lodging-houses not recognised as licensed for Wayfarers, 4403-4405.

Co-operation Difficulty:

Co-operation of all Unions in the County necessary, 1586.

Guardians, Co-operation of, Financial Support of System in Gloucestershire, 1605-1611.

Number of People whose Co-operation would be required—Difficulties in Workhouses with only one Male Officer, etc., 4898, 4899.

Universal System under Local Government Board Order, Difficulties in Working, Success dependent on good will of persons who would be concerned in carrying out Order, 4288-4290.

Cost:

Cheaper than Casual Wards—Church Army Scheme, 8179.

Church Army Experiment, Cost of, 8266.

Contributions by Boards of Guardians:

Gloucestershire—Contributions not on Regular Basis, etc., 1605-1608, 1813.

Way-ticket Systems, etc.—cont.Cost—cont.*Contributions by Boards of Guardians—cont.

Wiltshire—Contributions sanctioned by Local Government Board, Basis taken, Amount contributed, etc., 1808–1813.

Contributions prior to Local Government Board sanction, 1814.

Mid-day Meal, Cost of, see title Mid-day Meal.

Postage and Printing, Cost of, in Wiltshire, 1811.

Rail or Boat would be Cheaper, 6236, 7140–7146.

Union from which Wayfarer started, Charging Cost to—Suggestion, 4222, 4271, 4272.

Objections to Scheme as involving an immense amount of accounting, etc., 4425, 4426.

Counties having a Way-ticket System in force—Summary of Replies from Chief Constables, App., pages 61–66.

Detention, Theory of, 4383–4390—One night only in case of good tickets, Variation from Route designated involving full detention, 1556–1559, 1796, 1797, 1821, 4383–4390.

Sunday, Detention over in Wiltshire, 1826.

Existing Wards, Use of, under System, proposed—Church Army Scheme, 8255–8260, 8264, 8265.

Experimenting in individual Counties—Suggestion, 8780.

Form of Way-ticket:

Form in Board of Trade Report, 2917.

Gloucestershire, App., page 39.

Wiltshire, App., page 45.

German System, 3521, 3522:

Adoption of, in England—Suggestion, 3873–3875.

Herberge idea modified to suit English national characteristics—Church Army Scheme, 8180, 8184.

(for details of System see Germany—Herbergen, Verpflegungs-Stationen, etc.).

Gloucestershire System:

Description of, 1552–1559.

Objected to, 4204, 4262.

Nothing against it, but doubtful if it would do any good, 7593–7600.

Good Tickets, Proportion of:

Gloucestershire, 1635, 4284, App., page 42.

Wiltshire, 1894, 1895, App., page 47.

Hampshire System, Origin and history of, 4876–4882, 4921.

Honest Wayfarer:

Advantages of System for, 1029, 1030, 1822, 1823, 1851, 2095, 5554–5556.

Preferential Treatment in Casual Ward for any one able to produce Credentials, 9832.

Holders of good tickets to be bathed and examined but not offensively searched, 4447–4449.

Ticket would be a Certificate of Honesty, almost a Character, 3937, 3945–3947, 4103.

Ticket holder not certified as honest by Police in Wiltshire, 2008.

Distinguishing between Honest Wayfarer and Habitual Vagrant—System a means of distinguishing, 2418–2421, 4197, 4198, 4263–4265, 4271, 4285–4287, 4292–4294, 10636, 10637.

Distance between stages, 10–14 miles suggested, 4105.

Fifteen Miles' Walk a day not sufficient evidence of bona fides, 4034.

Honest Wayfarer leaving route on hearing of Work, Case of, 4740, 4741, 4883.

Way-ticket Systems, etc.—cont.Honest Wayfarer—cont.

Lodgings—No Accommodation, Honest Wayfarer obliged to go to Casual Ward, 4899–4902, 5020–5023.

Protection from Hardship—Suggestion, 5447.

Small number to be considered, 4885.

System necessitated by existence of Genuine Wayfarer, 1881.

Identification, Way-ticket System as means of, 4026–4030, 4098–4100, 4129–4132, 4668–4671, 4731, 5355–5358, 9417, 9419, 9681.

An old hand might very well make use of the system to have a continuous Walking tour, 8933–8937, 9009.

Production of Ticket, Question of, 9733.

Impracticable System:

Arrears of Vagrancy would choke the machinery for the first ten years, 6197–6201.

Public Opinion not ripe for consequences of the System—A State-issued ticket meant State provision of Work in the long run, 6202–6205, 6233, 6245.

Issue of Tickets, Authority for, etc.—Suggestions, Casual Ward Authorities, 4392–4394.

Workhouse Masters, 4728, 2729.

Labour Information at Casual Wards and Police Stations essential to Way-ticket System, 8079.

Labour Lodging Homes, Replacing Casual Wards by—Church Army Scheme, 8080, 8083, 8251, 8252.

Casual Wards do nothing to help anyone and should therefore be abolished, 8084, 8252–8254, 8257, 8261.

Lambert, Sir John, Views of, 4880.

Leaving Route:

Failure to keep to Route involving Prosecution under Vagrancy Act—Suggestion, 4736–4739, 4743.

Honest Wayfarer leaving Route on hearing of Work off the Route, Case of, 4740, 4741, 4883.

Limit of Time during which Ticket should hold, Question of, 9530–9539.

Recommendation to Local Government Board, 516.

Mid-day Meal, see that title.

New Class of Tramp, Danger of Producing, 4796–4798.

Objections to, if Worked in Connection with Casual Wards—Basis of Identity Papers lacking, 7125–7138.

Opinion in Favour of System, 2915, 2916, 3087–3089, 3927, 4667–4676, 5318, 5319, 5552, 6893–6897, 9676, 9681.

Opinion in Favour of a Man carrying some Credentials, 9734, 9832–9836.

Origin—Statutes of 14th Century, 4886.

Penal Colony for the Sturdy Beggar essential to make System Effective—Church Army Scheme, 8096, 8262.

Penalty in Case of Failure to use Ticket, Difficulty, 516, 4876, 4880–4882, 4894–4897.

Police Co-operation, Advantages of Working System through Police, etc., 516, 1574, 1588, 4290, 4888, 7139, 7143, 7613, 7614, 9010–9012.

Applicants to go to Police for Admission to Casual Ward—Suggestion, 4395.

Church Army Scheme, 8096.

Gloucestershire—Police employed as Assistant Relieving Officers for Vagrants, 1574, 1588–1590, 1614.

Remuneration, 1612, 1613.

Way-ticket Systems, etc.—cont.

Police Co-operation, etc.—cont.

Herefordshire System, 983-996, 1022, 1023, 1029-1035.

Objections to Associating Police and Poor Law, 9833-9836.

Honest Wayfarers, Possible Objections to being sent to Police Station, 4075, 4076.

Police Pass entitling Holder to better Food and Lodging and Exempting from Labour at Unions, 2006.

Ticket would be viséd by Police, Suggestion, 2887-2889.

Proportion of Vagrants likely to come under System, Small Proportion, 4892, 4893, 5019.

Proportion Resorting to Lodging-houses and therefore Unaffected by System, 4450-4454.

Public Opinion:

Liberty of the Subject, Objection to Way-tickets as Prejudicial to, 872-875, 4668, 5025, 5026.

Liberty to do Wrong only Restricted, 984.

Not Ripe for consequences of Way-ticket System—A State-issued Ticket meant State Provision of Work in the long run, 6202-6205, 6233, 6245.

Satisfaction of — Value of Way-ticket System, 10200, 10201, 10203.

Sympathy likely to be attracted for "Marked Men," etc., 5359-5363.

Remedy in Case of Default on the part of the County to provide Facilities, Question of, 4101, 4102.

REPORT, par., 156-176.—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 177-183, 429 (10-13).

Route prescribed:

Confining Tramps to Main Roads where they would be less likely to commit Larceny, 4847.

Tying a Man down to a Particular Route—Draw-back to System, 4740-1, 4883, 8290, 8452.

Summary of Principal Recommendations to the Local Government Board, 516.

Swiss System, see Switzerland—Inter-cantonal Union.

Task, Exemption of Ticket Holders from—Suggestion, 2246, 4923.

Ticket prescribing Four Hours' Task to be Granted on evidence of the Applicant being a Genuine Worker, Precautions against Fraud, etc.—Suggestion, 647-669, 717-725.

Time of day at which Tickets would be asked for, 636-639.

Trade Society issuing Certificate—Reasons for and against, 2805-2812, 2872-2886.

"Recognised" Society, Limiting right of issue to—"Recognised" defined as "Registered," 2844-2849.

Uniform and General Application, Usefulness of System dependent on, 1854, 2093-2096, 2422, 2915, 2916, 4667-4676, 4675, 4745, 4746, 4887, 7794-7805, 10199, 10202.

Unnecessary in a Country full of Facilities for Communication, 6236, 7140-7146.

Usefulness, Question of:

Useless for a man who spends his time going from one Casual Ward to another, 9732, 9831, 9832.

Useless unless in Combination with other Changes, 8777.

Vagrancy Act of 1824—Magistrates authorised to Grant Passes to Vagrants discharged from Prison, 19-22.

Way-ticket Systems, etc.—cont.

Welsh System, 516, 5513-9.

Wiltshire Poor Law Association—Recommendation to Local Government Board, 516.

Wiltshire System:

Adoption of Berkshire System in Wiltshire, in 1881, 1792.

Circulars issued to Boards of Guardians, 1818-21.

Description of, 1792-7.

Gloucestershire System practically identical with, 1794.

Weekly Returns of Casual Paupers

Friday of each week, New System of Collecting Statistics, 227, 231.

Westbury-on-Severn

Begging between Westbury and Chepstow, 1699-1701.

Westminster

Homeless Persons, Number attracted by Free Food Distribution on Night of 17th February, 1905, 5906, 5910.

Westmorland

Police as Relieving Officers—Complaints as regards Poor Law Administration in 1879, 1174-1178.

Proportion of Vagrancy highest in, According to Population, 300.

Westphalia

Relief Stations, Reduction of Vagrancy due to, 5316.

Workhouse—Administration, etc., 3635-3651.

Whitechapel

Adoption of Child Vagrants by Guardians—Large Number adopted, 5926.

Amount of Vagrancy—Vagrants not a considerable Source of Trouble, 9750.

Begging—Not much Begging, a few pence Sufficient, 9621-9625.

Casual Ward:

Admissions—First Admissions, Repeated Admissions, 9875-7.

Associated Ward, 3404, 3452, 6019.

Reasons for not building New Wards, 9751-9754.

Detention, 9746, 9747.

Four Days—Regulation disregarded, 3375.

Not Enforced, owing to Pressure of Numbers, 8644.

Discharge from Casual Ward without Task—Discretion of Superintendent, 9734.

Popularity with Casuals, Causes of—Task light, Ward an Association Ward, 3404, 3452.

Refusals of Admission in 1904—Wards Continually full, 8647.

Influx of Casuals due to Shelters, 8642-8646.

Separate from the Workhouse, 9791-9793.

Task, 9749.

Causes of Resorting to Casual Ward, 9875, 9876.

Census of Vagrants and Inmates of Common Lodging-houses, July, 1905, 9630-9635.

Class of Vagrant typical of Casual Poor Person in London, 9687.

Free Food Distributions, 5714, 9608, 9609.

Number fed on night of 17th February, 1905, 5908.

Shelters—Medland Hall, etc., 9574-9586, 9605-9611, 9705.

Children Admitted to Salvation Army Shelter, 5962.

Whitechapel—cont.

Shelters, etc.—cont.

Evils of—Vagrant life made easier, Loafers attracted from other Districts, etc., 5914, 8642, 9701-9714.

Filthy Condition of Vagrants frequenting Shelters—Source of public danger, Power to Remove such Persons from Streets, 9599-9604, 9645-9648.

Resolution passed by Whitechapel Guardians in 1895, 8646.

Free Meals given, 5908, 9608, 9609.

Sleeping out—Offenders discharged on Promise to go into Workhouse, Promise never kept, 9563-9565.

Whitechapel Division of Metropolitan Police

Area included, 9552.

Sentences Varying in form, 9557.

Wilhelmsdorf Labour Colony at Bielefeld

Area of Land, Nature of Soil, Method of Reclamation, etc., 3754-3756.

Branch Establishment at a Distance necessitated by rise in Price of Land, 3631, 3632, 3752, 3753, 3757.

Origin of Lingfield Colony, 5228.

Wiltshire

Amount of Vagrancy:

Census—Details Included, 1958, 1959, 1998-2003.

Increase since 1900—Statistics, 1824, 1825.

Statistics for 2nd April, 1st May, and 1st June, 1872, 2006.

Statistics, 1893-1905, App., page 47.

Common Lodging-houses, Number of People in less than Number in Casual Wards—Number of Lodging-houses in Wiltshire, etc., 1964-1968.

County Vagrancy Committee, Constitution of, 1784-1790, 4464.

Detention over Sunday, Practice of, 1826-1828.

Overcrowding on Sunday due to Evasion of Regulations by Neighbouring Unions, 1924-1928.

Measures for Repression of Vagrancy, 1872—Authorities had not the Power to Carry out all Suggestions, 2007.

Police, Employment as Assistant Relieving Officers, 1890.

Remuneration from Poor Law Funds, 1892, 1893.

Prosecutions, 1899-1903, App., page 47.

Searching, Effect in reducing Vagrancy, 2006.

Soldiers on Tramp, Proportion of, 1900-1903.

Uniformity in Treatment of Vagrants, Lack of, 1944.

Wiltshire Poor Law Association

Passport System, Removal of Impotent Vagrants, Suggestion of, 516.

Winter of 1904-5

Period of Exceptional Distress—Pressure on Church Army, etc., 8014-8019.

Witzwyl Colony—Labour Farm of the Canton of Berne.

Administration by Committee of Council of the Canton, 8315, 8316.

Bonus given to Colonists on Discharge, 8355.

Buildings—Inexpensive, Practically all built by Colonists, 8325-8328.

Buildings, Stock, Implements, etc., Increase in Value, 8362-8365.

Witzwyl Colony—cont.

Cell Accommodation, 8329.

Classes of Men sent—No Criminals convicted of Gross Offences, 8335-8337.

Classification of Colonists—Administratives Separated from Criminals, 8335.

Diet—Good, but largely Vegetarian, 8349-8352.

Discharged Colonists, Methods of Finding places for, etc., 8356, 8357.

Salvation Army, Arrangement with, 6291.

Discipline—Punishment by Confinement and Deprivation of Food, 8367, 8368.

Distinctive Dress, 8371.

Employment of Colonists:

Industrial Employment, 8347.

Limit of Development Question—No fear of Lack of Employment in the Future, 8342-8346.

Partially able-bodied, Employments Suited to—Straw Cases for Wine Bottles, etc., 8331.

Reclamation of land, 8330, 8331, 8339.

Teaching given, Extent of, 8348.

Value of Colonists' Work—They work hard, 8339-8341.

Escape, Question of:

No Wall or Fence round Colony, 8380.

Very few Escapes—Recapture not difficult, 8370, 8371, 8381-8383.

Extraordinary instance of good Management and Success, 8322, 8413.

Families of Colonists, Maintenance by the Gemeinde, 8358.

Hours of Work—Eleven in Winter, twelve in Summer, 8330, 8332-8334.

Land:

Amount of—2,000 acres, 8324.

Appreciation in Value, 8361, 8363, 8364.

Original Price, 8361.

Live Stock, Quantity of, 8366.

Reformative Influence, Question of—It is very difficult to get any record of ex-Colonists, but there is the fact that they do not return, 8375-8377.

REPORT, par. 251, 253.

Size—2,000 acres, 150 to 200 Colonists, 8324.

Staff—Not so much Warders as Foremen, Effect of Example on Colonists, 8330.

Term of Detention—Remission of one-third may be obtained from the Council at Berne, 8354.

Wodehouse, Mr.

Vagrancy in Kent at Hop-picking time, Report in 1871, 100, 101.

Wolverhampton

Detention—Two Nights, since Erection of New Casual Wards, 2720.

Reduction of Vagrancy by Enforcement of Regulations, 494.

Women Vagrants

Admission to Casual Ward:

Female Officers for Reception of Women:

King's Norton, 2862, 2863.

Sheffield, 2578-2582.

Wycombe—No Female Officer, suitable Woman Pauper employed, 3014, 3015.

Objectionable Conduct, Coarse Conversation, etc., of Persons admitting Women Vagrants, 1300-1303, 1345.

Women Vagrants—cont.Admission to Casual Ward—*cont.*Objectional Conduct, etc.—cont.

Dewsbury Workhouse, Conduct of Pauper admitting Woman—Complaint, 1304-1323.

Bradford Workhouse Officials, 1371.

North Bierley Union—Loose Conversation of Pauper admitting Women, 1345, 1357-1361.

Tame Street, Manchester—Bully-ragging by Official, 1383-1388, 1419, 1438-1441.

Admission into Workhouse proper, Suggestion—Evil of recognising Class of Vagrant Women, 1505.

Difficulty in getting Admission to Workhouse, Question of, 685-687, 1421, 10504, 10505.

Women on tramp with their Husbands, taking into Workhouse and making Husband pay, Suggestion, 1532, 1533.

Ages of, App., pages 26, 27—Old Women wandering to their own hurt, 10503.

Casual Wards :

Destitute Women's Objections to making use of Casual Wards, 1293-1295.

Higgs, Mrs., Experience of Casual Ward Treatment, 1285-1435.

Object of Experiment to discover why destitute Women were not provided with efficient Shelter, 1361.

Omission to complain due to fear of Imprisonment, 1326, 1360, 1445, 1446.

(For details refer to titles Dewsbury, North Bierley and Tame Street, Manchester.)

Preferable to Common Lodging-house for Destitute Women, 1486, 1487.

Class of Women in Casual Wards—Very few regular Tramps, 1421.

Respectable Married Women, 1440, 1441.

Common Lodging-houses for Women.

Gloucestershire—None, 1735.

Higher Scale of Charges for Women, 5660-5663.

Women sent to, while Men went to Casual Ward, 1463-1467.

Detention of all Women Vagrants suggested, 682-684.

Disappearance of Women Vagrants would probably result from taking Men off the Road, 4086.

Employment for Women separated from Tramp Husbands—Employment in Reformatory, 1046-1048.

Enjoyment of Vagrant Life, 1534-1536.

Feeble-minded Women, Compulsory Detention, suggestion, 1529, 1530.

Gloucestershire Way-ticket System, Application to Women, 1688.

Inclusion of Women with Illegitimate Children in definition of Vagrancy—Suggestion, 7156.

Number of Women Vagrants, App., pages 26, 27.

Decrease in, of recent years, 288-296, 854, 2005.

Causes of Decrease at Cuckfield, 2322-2324.

Explanation, 688-690.

Sheffield, 2508.

Gloucestershire Statistics 1904, 1753, 1754.

Large Number of Tramp Women in Scotland, 6413, 6417, 6419.

REPORT, par. 56, 57, 403-410.

Very small percentage, 8172.

Northumberland—Very few Women Vagrants, 7531, 7535.

Unemployed Women not heard of because to a large extent the Women keep the Men, 8515.

Women Vagrants—cont.Number of Women Vagrants—*cont.*Very small percentage—cont.

Women Abandoned by Vagrant Husbands a source of our worst Population, 8813, 8814.

Workhouses, Women in :

Able-bodied women, Number of, very small, 1522.

Proportion of Women to Men, 691.

Officials in Casual Ward, Conduct of :

Dewsbury, 1329, 1330.

North Bierley Union, 1350, 1351.

Tame Street, Manchester, 1393, 1420.

REPORT, par. 56, 57—RECOMMENDATIONS, par. 310, 403-409, 429 (33).

Sleeping out in London, see London—Sleeping out and Walking Streets at night.

Task :

Amount of Work required out of all proportion to Amount of Relief given, 1481, 1482.

Cleaning up Tramp Wards, etc., at Dewsbury, 903, 1331.

No proper Task for Women, 4185, 4188, 4189.

(For particular Unions, see their names.)

Tramp Woman taken in labour, Case of in Scotland—Awkward, but rare, 6434, 6435.

Wood

Building Material, Wood as—Cost and Durability etc., 9973-9984, 10032-10041.

Wood Chopping and Wood Sawing Task, 325.

Average Day's Task at Sheffield, 2444.

Church Army Labour Test—refer to title Church Army.

Hard Labour in Prisons, Physical Exertion involved in Wood chopping, 9317-9319.

Objections to, on the ground of Competition with Outside Labour, 484, 4727.

Firewood Manufacturers' Complaints, Discontinuance of Manufacture of Firewood on a large scale—Circular of 1888, 181-183.

Metropolitan Casual Wards, Task discontinued, 3363-3366.

Profit on Task nil at Sheffield, 2446, 2447.

Unskilled Task, 2443.

Workhouse Inmates, Keeping for, 4187, 4727.

see also Names of Unions.Woolwich Union

Hadleigh Colony, Men sent to—Detailed return of Men sent, 7062-7076.

Worcestershire

Way-ticket System—Cause of Abandonment, etc., 2654, 2662, 2666, REPORT, par. 166.

Work, see titles Labour in Relation to Vagrancy, Task, etc.Workhouses

Able-bodied Inmates :

Drastic Reforms needed, 5472.

Proportion willing to work at Sheffield, 2432-2435.

Able-bodied Vagrant Difficulty in no way met by Workhouses, 6267-6276.

Accommodation and Staff insufficient to carry out existing Regulations, 454-458, 4170-4174.

Difficulties as to smallness of Staff in remote Unions, 454-458, 4170-4174.

Act of 1834, New Workhouses under—No accommodation for Vagrants, 25.

Workhouses—cont.

- Admission of Tramps to—Practice at Sheffield, 2407.
- Child Vagrants in—Workhouse Authorities' Co-operation with N.S.P.C.C., 10996-11002.
- Decrease in number of Tramp Children at Workhouses where Practice was adopted, 11003, 11004.
- Combination of Unions to provide a Workhouse, Power of, 9998, 9999.
- Committal of Vagrants to—Local Acts from Elizabeth to 18th Century, 13.
- Compelling Professional Vagrants to enter Workhouse—Suggestion, 2523-2526.
- Casuals' Contempt for ordinary Paupers, 3459-3465.
- Dawdling Sickness prevalent—"Workhouse" a misnomer, 5222.
- Detention—No Detention for Tramps, 2396.
- Diet of Workhouse proper :
 - Better than either Casual Ward or Prison Diet, 366.
 - Reconsideration desirable in view of Recent discoveries as to Diet, 10869-10872.
- Discharge Question :
 - No Discharge to be allowed without consent of Governing Body, 10510-10515.
 - Old and infirm Vagrants—Guardians would be glad to get rid of them, 5478.
- Escape of Child not a Criminal matter at all, 4626.
- Germany, Workhouses in, see Germany.
- Old, Infirm, and Sick, Good and ample provision for, 6274, 6275.
- Unwillingness of Old People to enter Workhouse in spite of improved Treatment, 5479.
- Penal Workhouses, see that title.
- Physically or mentally Unfit, Reservation for, with Separation of Respectable from Disreputable Incapables—Suggestion, 11094.
- Refusal to work, Procedure in case of, 2397-2399. see also title Refractory Paupers.
- Scotch Poorhouses, see title Poorhouses, Scotland.
- Test Houses, see that title.
- Women Inmates, Proportion of, to Men, 691.
- Working in connection with whatever Farm or Colony System was decided on—Suggestion, 8839.
- Workshops attached to Workhouses where skilled Paupers could be employed—Suggestion, 11094.

Workhouse MastersDiscretionary Powers :

- Absolute discretion needed for Masters—Suggestion, 2110, 2374, 2375.
- Detention, Discretion in regard to—Weakness of System, Danger of Leakage in Case of dishonest Master, 3927, 4071.
- Ex-policemen as—Very desirable, but it would be impossible to limit choice of Local Authorities, 8524-8526.
- Kindness of—Unpopularity of Harshness, 670-672.
- Pension, Conditions of obtaining, 8530, 8531.

Workhouse Masters' Association

- Presidency—Annual Appointment, 2015-2017.
- Representative Character of Association, 2339.
- Suggestions by :

Administration of Poor Law in regard to Vagrants—Withdrawing from Boards of Guardians and transferring to Police or Home Office, 2298-2304.

Expense, Question of, 2305-2306.

Child Vagrant Question—Legislation needed, 2276, 2277, 2282-2286, 2349, 2350.

Labour Colonies, Opinion in favour of, 2126-2128

Medical Inspection of Casuals, 2078, 2308-2312

Mid-day Meal, Giving Meal at centre where it should be eaten, 2092.

Workhouse Masters' Association—cont.Suggestions by—cont.

Summary of Suggestions, 2308.

Uniformity, need for, 2094.

Nature of Uniformity contemplated, 2340-2342.

Work-Seekers, see Honest Wayfarers.Wortel Labour Colony

First Offenders sent to Wortel—Sentence of detention until they earn fifteen francs, 10305.

Teaching of Trades, etc., at, 10207.

Wych Street Salvation Army Shelter—Free Food Distribution, 5714.

Food only given, 9385, 9386.

Number fed on one night, 5768.

Number fed on 7th February, 1905, 5907.

Wycombe Union

Bath—Regulations strictly carried out, 2961-2967, 2999.

Common Lodging-houses, Number of, 3021.

Detention for two nights, 2997.

Farm Colony Experiment, failure of, 2898-2902.

Food given to Decent People to take away, 29 71.

Medical Officer's Visits, 3017.

N.S.P.C.C., Co-operation with, etc., 3008-3011.

Number of Workhouse Inmates, 3016.

Number of Vagrants—Decrease due to stricter Supervision and exaction of Task, 2895, 2896, 2923-2926, 2996, 3000, 3001.

Police visits to Workhouse—No deterrent effect, etc., 3003-3007, 3035-3037.

Searching Vagrants, 2962.

Situation of Workhouse on road frequented by Vagrants, 3041, 3042.

Smallpox—No System of Medical Examination as against Smallpox, 3020.

Task :

Kind of Labour—Nothing but Stone breaking, 2897, 2903.

Refusal to work—Prosecutions :

Medical Examination only if claimed, 3018-3019, 3025, 3026.

Number of Prosecutions, 2927, 3027.

Women Casuals, Admission and reception of, 3014, 3015.

YorkshireNorth Riding :

Beggars—State of terror in North Riding from, 3927, 4035, 4036.

Police co-operation in dealing with Vagrants, 3927, 3972, 3973.

Prison preferred by Vagrants—Extracts from Local Papers, 3982.

Reduction of Vagrancy due to adoption of Regulations, 3927, 4055-4070, 4110-4117.

Cell System, Effect of, 4057-4071.

Police activity, Effect of, 4112, 4113.

Prosecutions and Convictions :

Increase in number of Convictions, 3927.

Statistics for 1903, 1069.

Sentences, Average Length, Lack of Uniformity, 3975-3977.

West Riding :

Begging and Sleeping out Prosecutions—Statistics for 1903, 1069.

Reformatory School System, Satisfactory working of, 964.

Refractory Paupers, Increase in Number of, 10372, 10373, 10377, 10378.

West Riding Quarter Sessions and others—Greater Powers of Detention—Suggestion, 516.

Youthful Offenders' Act

Parents, Special Provisions touching, 4592.

VAGRANCY COMMITTEE.

APPENDIX TO THE REPORT

OF THE

DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE

ON

VAGRANCY.

VOLUME III.

APPENDIX, WITH CHARTS AND MAPS.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of His Majesty.

LONDON:
PRINTED FOR HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE,
By WYMAN & SONS, LIMITED, FETTER LANE, E.C.

And to be purchased, either directly or through any Bookseller, from WYMAN AND SONS, LTD., FETTER LANE, E.C.; and 32, ABINGDON STREET, WESTMINSTER, S.W.; or OLIVER AND BOYD, EDINBURGH; or
E. PONSONBY, 116, GRAFTON STREET, DUBLIN.

1906.

CONTENTS OF VOLUMES ISSUED BY THE COMMITTEE.

VOLUME I.—REPORT.

VOLUME II.—EVIDENCE, DIGEST OF EVIDENCE, AND GENERAL INDEX TO EVIDENCE, APPENDIX AND REPORT.

VOLUME III.—APPENDIX.

DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON VAGRANCY.

VOLUME III.

CONTENTS OF APPENDIX.

	PAGE.
I.—CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF STATUTES RELATING TO VAGRANCY	1
II.—LEGAL PROVISIONS IN FORCE IN ENGLAND AND WALES ON THE SUBJECT OF VAGRANCY (Memorandum prepared by the Local Government Board)	5
III.—MINUTE OF THE POOR LAW BOARD DATED 4TH AUGUST, 1848, ON THE SUBJECT OF VAGRANCY (usually described as Mr. Buller's Minute) -	15
IV.—CIRCULAR LETTER ISSUED BY THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD ON 25TH FEBRUARY, 1896, TO BOARDS OF GUARDIANS IN ENGLAND AND WALES	17
V.—STATISTICS OF CASUAL PAUPERS (Memorandum and Tables received from the Local Govern- ment Board) -	19
MEMORANDUM.
A.—Numbers Relieved
Casual paupers, 1880–1905 :
(i.)—England and Wales	20
(ii.)—London -	21
Casual paupers in 1904 and 1905 -	21
Distribution of casual paupers -	22
Comparative extent in union-counties in relation to
(i.)—(a) Population and general pauperism -	23
(b) Area -	23
(ii.)—Noticeable increases during period 1897–1905 -	24
(iii.)—Highest and lowest numbers relieved in 1904 -	25
(iv.)—Casual paupers in groups of unions -	26
Number of men, women and children -	26
Ages of casual paupers -	26
Army reservists, discharged soldiers and militia men as casual paupers -	28
B.—Cost of Relief to Casual Paupers -	28
TABLES AND MAP APPENDED TO THE MEMORANDUM.
1.—Number of casual paupers in groups of unions in 1904 -	29
2.—Cost of in-maintenance and outdoor relief of casual paupers relieved in each union- county in England and Wales during the half-year ended Lady day, 1905 -	32
Sketch Map of England and Wales, showing the Poor Law unions in which, on a majority of the Friday nights during 1904, there were fifteen or more casual paupers relieved - to face	29
CHARTS ILLUSTRATING THE STATISTICS FURNISHED BY THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD.
Chart No. 1.—Casual pauperism and total pauperism in England and Wales on 1st January, 1880 to 1905 - to face	32
Chart No. 2.—Casual pauperism and total pauperism (exclusive of insane in asylums, &c., and casual paupers) in London from 1880 to 1904 (yearly averages) - to face	32
Chart No. 3.—Casual pauperism and total pauperism (exclusive of insane in asylums, &c., and casual paupers) in England and Wales during 1904 and 1905 (to end of November) - to face	32

	PAGE.
VI.—STATISTICS OF CASUAL PAUPERS— (Handed in by Mr. Preston-Thomas.)
1.—Half-yearly returns of casual paupers, 1858–1905, and proportion of general pauperism per thousand of estimated population - - - - -	33
Chart No. 4.—Casual pauperism and total pauperism on 1st January, 1865–1905 - to face	33
Chart No. 5.—Casual pauperism and total pauperism during 1904 (weekly fluctuations) - - - - - to face	33
2.—Vagrants relieved on 1st January and 1st July, 1897–1904, in each union-county -	34
VII.—LETTER FROM THE PRISON COMMISSIONERS DATED 22ND MARCH, 1905, RESPECTING VAGRANTS IN PRISONS, SHOWING NUMBERS, TASKS, AND LENGTH OF SENTENCES - -	38
VIII.—WAY-TICKET AND MID-DAY MEAL SYSTEMS :
(a)—Gloucestershire :
(Papers handed in by Lieutenant-Colonel Curtis-Hayward and Admiral Christian.)
1.—Form of Way-ticket - - - - -	39
2.—Notice against beggars - - - - -	40
3.—Chief Constable's Return of Vagrants :
No. 1.—Numbers and particulars of persons who slept in casual wards (for a series of years) - - - - -	40
No. 2.—Analysis of trades of persons who slept in casual wards on April 5th, 1904 - - - - -	41
No. 3.—Numbers and particulars of persons who slept in common lodging-houses (for a series of years) - - - - -	41
No. 4.—Analysis of the trades of persons who slept in common lodging-houses on April 5th, 1904. - - - - -	42
No. 5.—Number of persons relieved by the police and the number who brought way-tickets (for a series of years) - - - - -	42
No. 6.—Return of persons arrested for begging (for a series of years) - - -	43
No. 7.—Return of tramps convicted for stealing and other offences, other than begging (for a series of years) - - - - -	43
No. 8.—Number of persons in casual wards and common lodging-houses on the first Tuesday in April (for a series of years) - - - - -	43
No. 9.—Number of vagrants supplied with bread at police stations (for a series of years) - - - - -	44
(Handed in by Sir John Dorington, Bart., M.P.)
4.—Report of Gloucestershire Vagrancy Committee for 1904 - - - - -	44
(b) Wiltshire :
(Papers handed in by Mr. A. C. Mitchell and Captain Sterne.)
1.—Form of Way-ticket - - - - -	45
2.—Notice against beggars - - - - -	46
3.—Circular issued by Wiltshire Vagrancy Committee to Parish Councils and Parish Meetings - - - - -	46
4.—Circular issued by Wiltshire Vagrancy Committee to Boards of Guardians -	46
5.—Number of Prosecutions for begging and sleeping out for the 5 years ended 31st December, 1903 - - - - -	47
6.—Return of number of Vagrants relieved, number and cost of mid-day meals given, and number of Vagrants with good tickets, for the years 1893–1905 - - -	47
(c) Mid-day Meal Systems under Mendicity Societies :
1.—Report of Dorset Mendicity Society for 1904 - - - - -	48
2.—Report of Herefordshire Mendicity Society for 1904 - - - - -	49
IX.—COMMON LODGING-HOUSES AND VAGRANCY IN LONDON— (Memorandum handed in by Sir Shirley Murphy) - - - - -	50
X.—SUMMARY OF REPLIES RECEIVED FROM CHIEF CONSTABLES OF COUNTIES IN ENGLAND AND WALES IN AUGUST, 1904 - - - - -	61
XI.—VAGRANCY IN LONDON— (Papers 1 to 4 handed in by Mr. Simmons.)
1.—Prosecutions for offences in casual wards in 1904 - - - - -	67
2.—Number of refusals of admission to casual wards for want of room in each month of 1904 - - - - -	67
3.—Number of refusals of admission to casual wards for want of room in each year from 1881 to 1904 - - - - -	68
4.—Particulars of convictions of 8 habitual vagrants - - - - -	69
5.—Summary of No. 4 - - - - -	75

	PAGE.
XII.—VAGRANCY IN BERKSHIRE AND NORTHUMBERLAND—
1.—Report of Chief Constable of Berkshire, dated March, 1905. (Handed in by Major A. F. Poulton.)	76
2.—Statistics of offences by vagrants in Northumberland. (Handed in by Captain Fullarton James.)	79
XIII.—SUMMARIES OF RETURNS RECEIVED FROM BOARDS OF GUARDIANS IN OCTOBER, 1904, RESPECTING CASUAL WARDS—
1.—General Summary	80
2.—Accommodation	81
3.—Searching, bathing and detention	82
4.—Tasks of work	83
5.—Dietary	84
XIV.—VAGRANCY IN IRELAND— (Memorandum prepared by the Local Government Board for Ireland, with Circulars.)	85
XV.—CASUAL WARDS IN THE METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT AND IN THE COUNTIES PARTLY COMPRISED IN THAT DISTRICT	90
Map of District and adjoining Counties, showing position of Casual Wards, to face	90
XVI.—VAGRANCY IN SCOTLAND—
(Paper handed in by Mr. R. B. Barclay.)
1.—Number of vagrants relieved by Inspectors of Poor on the 15th May of each year from 1892 to 1904	91
(Papers handed in by Mr. J. R. Motion.)
2.—Houseless and homeless applicants for relief in Glasgow	91
3.—Comparative statement as to vagrancy and begging in Glasgow for the period from 22nd November, 1900, to 15th May, 1905	92
4.—Typical cases of vagrancy and begging in Glasgow	93
(Papers handed in by Mr. D. Dewar.)
5.—Statement as to lodging-houses and vagrancy in Dundee	95
6.—Return of persons convicted of begging, &c., in Dundee during 1904	96
7.—Return of persons convicted of vagrancy and contraventions of the Trespass Act in Dundee during 1904	98
8.—Number of persons proceeded against in Scotland for offences against the Vagrancy and Trespass Acts, 1889–1903	101
(Paper handed in by Captain McHardy.)
9.—Ayrshire Mendicity Society: statement of receipts and expenditure for the period 1885–1905	102
(Paper handed in by Captain Despard.)
10.—Persons dealt with in Lanarkshire under the Trespass Act, 1874, during 1904	103
(Paper handed in by Mr. R. Ross.)
11.—Number of persons apprehended in Edinburgh for offences in connection with vagrancy for the period January to May, 1905	103
(Returns furnished by Mr J. V. E. Stevenson.)
12.—Vagrancy in Glasgow:
(a) Number of persons afforded protection in the various police offices during 1903, 1904, and the first three months of 1905	104
(b) Number of persons, male and female, afforded protection in the various police offices, for the months of November, December, January and February, 1902– 1903, 1903–4, and 1904–5	104
13.—Chart No. 6. Begging, sleeping out and vagrancy in Scotland. (Prepared by Mr. C. S. Loch)	104
XVII.—METHODS OF DEALING WITH VAGRANCY IN SWITZERLAND— (Report by Mr. H. Preston-Thomas)	105
XVIII.—VAGRANCY OFFENCES—
1.—Number of persons convicted of offences against the Poor Law and Vagrancy Acts during the years 1893–1904	111
2.—Sentences of imprisonment for offences against the Poor Law and Vagrancy Acts during the years 1901–4	112

XIX.—VAGRANCY OFFENCES—

(Papers handed in by Mr. H. B. Simpson.)

1.—Number of persons prosecuted for begging and sleeping out in each year from 1857 to 1904 - - - - -	113
2.—Number of persons prosecuted for begging and sleeping out in each County in 1903 -	114
3.—Number of persons prosecuted for the offence of “misbehaviour by paupers” in each year from 1857 to 1904 - - - - -	115

XX.—VAGRANCY OFFENCES—

(Tables and Charts handed in by Mr. W. J. Farrant.)

1.—Number of persons prosecuted for the offence of “misbehaviour by paupers” in each County, from 1893 to 1904 - - - - -	116
2.—Statement of the mean number of adult able-bodied indoor paupers (exclusive of vagrants), of the mean number of vagrants relieved, and of persons received into prison upon summary conviction, in each year, from 1857 to 1904 - - - - -	117
Chart No. 7.—Misbehaviour by paupers, and total pauperism - - - - - to face	118
Chart No. 8.—Misbehaviour by paupers, and pauper vagrancy - - - - - to face	118
Chart No. 9.—Begging and sleeping out, and pauper vagrancy - - - - - to face	118
Chart No. 10.—Imprisonment upon summary conviction - - - - - to face	118
3.—Percentages upon which Charts Nos. 7 to 10 are based - - - - -	118
4.—Number of persons sentenced to pay fines, and number and percentage of persons imprisoned in default of payment, in each year, from 1893 to 1904 - - - - -	119
Chart No. 11.—Percentage of persons fined who were imprisoned in default of payment to face	119

XXI.—BELGIAN LAW OF 27TH NOVEMBER, 1891, FOR THE REPRESSION OF VAGRANCY AND BEGGING - - - - -

120

XXII.—MERXPLAS LABOUR COLONY—

(Particulars furnished by the Director, M. Louis Stroobant.)

1.—Particulars as to earnings, employment and punishment of Colonists, canteen, and population of Colony, - - - - -	122
2.—Time table of Colony - - - - -	123
3.—Estimate of Receipts and Expenditure for 1905 - - - - -	124
4.—Dietary tables.
(a) Able-bodied inmates, and non able-bodied inmates not requiring special care - - - - -	125
(b) Non able-bodied inmates whose state of health necessitates special care - - -	125
(c) Sick inmates - - - - -	126

XXIII.—GERMAN INSTITUTIONS—

(Papers handed in by Mr. W. H. Dawson.)

1.—Dietary in Benninghausen Workhouse - - - - -	127
2.—Life in a German Workhouse - - - - -	127
3.—Life in a German Labour Colony - - - - -	127

XXIV.—SALVATION ARMY INSTITUTIONS—

(Papers handed in by Mr. David C. Lamb.)

1.—Summarised analysis of the records of 880 men received and discharged from the Salvation Army (Main) Colony at Hadleigh during the years 1901 and 1902 - - -	129
2.—Statement respecting Colonists received at Hadleigh Colony during the two years ended 30th September, 1904 - - - - -	130
3.—Return of Discharges of men from Hadleigh Colony in 1903 and 1904, showing percentages of satisfactory and unsatisfactory cases, and re-admissions during the period 1902–4 - - - - -	131
4.—Dietary at Hadleigh Colony, at a City Colony workshop, and at a Women's Home	131
5.—Return of quantities of food consumed at
(1) Dining Hall, Hadleigh Colony - - - - -	132
(2) The Spa Road Elevator - - - - -	132
(3) A Women's Home - - - - -	132
6.—Memorandum of cost of Hadleigh Colony and a City Colony - - - - -	132
7.—Hadleigh Colony Accounts: assets entered in the balance sheet for September 30th, 1904, of the “Darkest England” scheme; working account for the year ended September, 1904 - - - - -	133
8.—Produce of Hadleigh Farm in 1904; disposition of colonists and employes at the Colony - - - - -	134
9.—Particulars as to London and Provincial Refuges and Shelters - - - - -	135
10.—Notes from the Pamphlet “The Vagrant and the Unemployable” - - - - -	135
11.—Statement showing results of enquiry conducted on behalf of Salvation Army as regards inmates of casual wards in London in May, 1905 - - - - -	137

	PAGE.
XXV.—RETURN OF MEN SENT TO HADLEIGH COLONY BY THE WOOLWICH GUARDIANS -	138
XXVI.—LINGFIELD TRAINING COLONY— (Papers handed in by Rev. J. L. Brooks.)
1.—Accounts of Colony for the year ended September 30th, 1904 -	139
2.—Capital cost of establishing Colony -	139
3.—Dietary at Colony -	139
4.—Statement respecting Colonists received at Colony during 1903 and 1904 -	140
XXVII.—VAGRANCY BILL, 1904, AND MEMORANDUM -	141
XXVIII.—DIETARY—Memorandum prepared by Sir Michael Foster, K.C.B., F.R.S. -	143
XXIX.—DIETARY—Memorandum prepared by Dr. A. H. Downes, with Tables -	145
XXX.—DIETARY IN LOCAL PRISONS FOR MEN UNDER SENTENCES NOT EXCEEDING 4 MONTHS' IMPRISONMENT WITH HARD LABOUR—
1.—Dietary in force before April, 1899 -	149
2.—Dietary established in April, 1899 -	150
3.—Dietary now in force -	151
XXXI.—COST, &C., OF CASUAL WARDS, &C.— (Papers handed in by Mr. Brook Kitchin.)
1.—Statement as to accommodation, cost, &c., of casual wards in certain Metropolitan unions -	153
2.—Statement as to accommodation, cost, &c., of casual wards in certain provincial unions -	155
3.—Trades Union prices in 1905, illustrating the variation in cost of building in different localities -	158
4.—Test houses -	158
5.—Sketch plan of labour colony - to face	158
XXXII.—VAGRANCY IN MANCHESTER— (Memorandum handed in by Mr. R. Peacock, Chief Constable.)	159
XXXIII.—SPREAD OF INFECTIOUS DISEASE BY VAGRANTS—
1.—Resolutions adopted by Conference of Local Authorities held in London in November, 1904 -	164
2.—Circulars issued by the Local Government Board to Boards of Guardians with reference to smallpox in casual wards -	166
XXXIV.—GIPSIES— (Memorandum prepared by the Home Office.)	167
XXXV.—BYE-LAWS—
1.—Model Bye-laws issued by the Local Government Board with respect to common lodging-houses, with Memorandum -	168
2.—Bye-laws made by the London County Council in respect of common lodging-houses -	172
3.—Model Bye-laws issued by the Local Government Board with respect to tents, vans, and similar structures, with Memorandum -	176
4.—Model Bye-laws issued by the Local Government Board with respect to hop-pickers and pickers of fruit and vegetables, with Memorandum -	178
XXXVI.—INDUSTRIAL AND REFORMATORY SCHOOLS— (Memorandum and tables prepared by Mr J. G. Legge)	179
XXXVII.—CIRCULAR LETTER ISSUED BY THE HOME OFFICE ON 30TH DECEMBER, 1903, TO COUNTY COUNCILS WITH REGARD TO INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS, enclosing a summary of the main provisions of the Law relating to such Schools -	186
XXXVIII.—PARTICULARS AS TO VAGRANTS RELIEVED AT THE ST. AUSTELL CASUAL WARDS, NOVEMBER, 1904, TO JANUARY, 1905— (Return handed in by Mr. Preston-Thomas.)	188
XXXIX.—CUCKFIELD CASUAL WARDS— (Returns handed in by Mr. J. Howe.)
1.—Casual paupers prosecuted during 1903, with other particulars -	207
2.—Number of casual paupers admitted during the years 1887–1904 -	208

APPENDIX I.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF STATUTES RELATING TO VAGRANCY.

5 Edw. III., ch. 14 (1331).	"Roberdesmen," "wastours*" and "drawlatches" to be arrested.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1856.	Appendix I.
23 Edw. III., st. 1, ch. 7 (1349).	(Statute of labourers.) Forbids upon pain of imprisonment the giving of alms to valiant† beggars who refuse to labour at the fixed rates.	Rep. 21 James I., ch. 28, s. 11.
25 Edw. III., st. 1, ch. 7 (1350-1).	Labourers, servants, and artificers to work at fixed rates. Those fleeing from one county to another to be imprisoned.	Rep. 21 James I., ch. 28, s. 11.
7 Rich. II., ch. 5 (1383).	Confirms 5 Edw. III., ch. 14. Vagabonds to "find surety of their good bearing" or in default of finding surety to be imprisoned.	Rep. 21 James I., ch. 28, s. 11.
12 Rich. II., chs. 3, 7, 8, 9 (1388).	Confirms previous statutes of labourers. Persons going begging and able to serve and labour to be liable to be put in the stocks. Beggars impotent to serve to abide in the cities and towns where they were dwelling at the time of the proclamation of the Statute; but if these places will or cannot "find" them, then they must remove to other towns within the hundred, rape or wapentake, or to the towns where they were born, within 40 days after the proclamation, there to abide during their lives. Chs. 3 and 8 create a system of "letters testimonial" for servants leaving service; for those going on pilgrimage as beggars; for scholars of Universities going begging; and for travellers alleging imprisonment out of the realm.	Rep. 21 James I., ch. 28, s. 11.
11 Hen. VII., ch. 2 (1495)	First General Act (see page 3 of Report).	Rep. 21 James I., ch. 28, s. 11.
19 Hen. VII., ch. 12 (1503-4).	2nd General Act, amending and extending last Act.	Rep. 21 James I., ch. 28, s. 11.
22 Hen. VIII., ch. 12 (1530-1).	3rd General Act, amending and extending the two previous Acts.	Rep. 21 James I., ch. 28, s. 11.
27 Hen. VIII., ch. 25 (1535-6).	4th General Act, amending and extending previous Acts.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
1 Edw. VI., ch. 3 (1547)	5th General Act.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
3 & 4 Edw. VI., ch. 16 (1549-50).	6th General Act.	Rep. 21 James I., ch. 28, s. 11.
5 & 6 Edw. VI., ch. 2 (1551-2).	Confirms 22 Hen. VIII., ch. 12, and 3 & 4 Edw. VI., ch. 16. Poor to be relieved in parishes by voluntary contributions.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
5 & 6 Edw. VI., ch. 21 (1551-2).	Forbids tinkers, pedlars and such like vagrant persons who are "more hurtful than necessary," to travel from place to place without license from the justices under a penalty of 14 days' imprisonment.	Rep. 1 James I., ch. 25, s. 7.
1 Mary, Sess. 2, ch. 13 (1554).	Continues in force 5 & 6 Edw. VI., ch. 2.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
1 & 2 Phil. & Mary, ch. 4 (1554).	Provides for the punishment of gipsies.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1856.
2 & 3 Phil. & Mary, ch. 5 (1555).	Confirms and amends 22 Hen. VIII., ch. 12, and 3 & 4 Edw. VI., ch. 16.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
4 & 5 Phil. & Mary, ch. 9 (1557).	Continues last mentioned Act.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
5 Eliz., ch. 3 (1562-3).	Confirms and amends 22 Hen. VIII., ch. 12, and 3 & 4 Edw. VI., ch. 16.	Rep. 14 Eliz., ch. 5, s. 1.
5 Eliz., ch. 20 (1562-3).	Provides for punishment of gipsies.	Rep. 23 Geo. III. ch. 51.
14 Eliz., ch. 5 (1572).	7th General Act.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.

* Welsh Gwestwr, an unbidden guest. † i.e., strong in body.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF STATUTES RELATING TO VAGRANCY—continued.

Appendix I.	18 Eliz., ch. 3 (1575-6).	Extends 14 Eliz., ch. 5. Houses of correction to be provided for rogues and unsettled poor (see page 69 of Report).	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
	35 Eliz., ch. 7 (1592-3).	8th General Act.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
	39 Eliz., ch. 4 (1597-8).	9th General Act.	Rep. 13 Anne, ch. 26.
	39 Eliz., ch. 17 (1597-8).	Wanderers pretending to be soldiers or mariners to settle themselves in service or to repair to their place of settlement.	Rep. 52 Geo. III., ch. 31.
	43 Eliz., ch. 3 (1601).	Soldiers or mariners taken begging to lose their annuities or pensions and to be punished as common rogues and vagabonds.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act 1863.
	1 James I., ch. 7 (1603-4).	10th General Act.	Rep. 13 Anne, ch. 26.
	7 James I., ch. 4 (1609-10).	Enforces provisions respecting houses of correction and idle and disorderly persons (see page 69 of Report).	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
	14 Chas. II., ch. 12, ss. 16, 17, 18, 23. (1662).	Rogues and vagrants to be set to work or transported. Rewards to be paid to private persons bringing rogues and vagabonds before justices of the peace.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.
	11 & 12 Will. III., ch. 18 (1698-9).	Provides for the passing of vagrants from parish to parish and for the payment from county funds of the expenses incurred by constables.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1867.
	1 Anne st. 2, ch. 13, ss. 4 & 6 (1702).	Continues, with amendments, 11 & 12 Will. III., ch. 18 for 3 years.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1867.
	2 & 3 Anne, ch. 6, s. 16 (1703).	Lewd and disorderly men-servants and rogues and vagabonds to be put into sea service.	Rep. 5 & 6 Will IV., c. 19.
	6 Anne, ch. 32 (1706-7).	Continues 11 & 12 Will. III., ch. 18.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1867.
	13 Anne, ch. 26 (1713).	11th General Act.	Rep. 13 Geo. II., ch. 24.
	6 Geo. I., ch. 19, s. 2 (1719-20).	Enables justices to commit vagrants and others convicted of minor offences to houses of correction as well as to the common gaols.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1867.
	13 Geo. I., ch. 23, s. 8 (1726-7).	End-gatherers to be punished as incorrigible rogues.	Rep. 3 & 4 Will IV., ch. 28.
	10 Geo. II., ch. 19, s. 1 (1736-7).	Stage players acting within 5 miles of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge to be deemed rogues and vagabonds.	Rep. 6 & 7 Vict., ch. 68.
	10 Geo. II., ch. 28 (1736-7).	Amends 13 Anne, ch. 26, as to stage players.	Rep. 6 & 7 Vict., ch. 68.
	13 Geo. II., ch. 24 (1739-40).	12th General Act.	Rep. 17 Geo. II., ch. 5.
	17 Geo. II., ch. 5 (1743-4).	13th General Act.	Rep. in part Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1867.
	26 Geo. II., ch. 34, s. 2 (1753).	Amends 17 Geo. II., ch. 5, as to payment of cost of passing vagrants from one county to another.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1867.
	23 Geo. III., ch. 88 (1782-3).	Extends provisions of 17 Geo. II., ch. 5, to persons apprehended with implements of house breaking.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1861.
	27 Geo. III., ch. 1, s. 3 (1787).	Extends provisions of 17 Geo. II., ch. 5, to persons dealing in lottery tickets without licence.	Rep. 46 Geo. III., ch. 148.
	27 Geo. III., ch. 11 (1787).	Removes doubt as to commitments under 6 Geo. I., ch. 19.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1871.
	32 Geo. III., ch. 45 (1792).	Amends and explains 17 Geo. II., ch. 5.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1861.
	39 & 40 Geo. III., ch. 50 (1800).	Night poachers to the number of two or more to be punished as vagrants.	Rep. 57 Geo. III., ch. 90.
	39 & 40 Geo. III., ch. 87, s. 12 (1800).	Suspected persons frequenting quays, warehouses, &c., of river Thames with felonious intent to be deemed rogues and vagabonds.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1871.
	42 Geo. III., ch. 76, s. 18 (1802).	Suspected persons frequenting public places in London with felonious intent to be treated as rogues and vagabonds.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1872.
	42 Geo. III., ch. 119 (1802).	Persons setting up mischievous games or lotteries to be deemed rogues and vagabonds.
	45 Geo. III., ch. 66, s. 3 (1805).	Spoilers of wood, quicksets, &c., to be punished as vagrants.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1872.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF STATUTES RELATING TO VAGRANCY—continued.

49 Geo. III., ch. 124, s. 5 (1809).	Enables justices to suspend the removal by pass of sick or infirm vagrants.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1872 (No. 2).	Appendix L
51 Geo. III., ch. 119, s. 18 (1811).	Continues provisions of 42 Geo. III., ch. 76, s. 18.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1873.
52 Geo. III., ch. 31 (1812).	Repeals 39 Eliz., ch. 17, as to wandering soldiers or mariners.	Rep. Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1873.
54 Geo. III., ch. 37, s. 18 (1813).	Continues provisions of 51 Geo. III., ch. 119, s. 18.	Rep. 1 & 2 Geo. IV., ch. 118.
3 Geo. IV., ch. 40 (1822).	14th General Act.	Rep. 5 Geo. IV., ch. 83.
5 Geo. IV., ch. 83 (1824).	15th General Act. The Vagrancy Act now in force.
1 & 2 Vict., ch. 38 (1838).	Persons exposing obscene prints in shop windows to be punished as rogues and vagabonds.
5 & 6 Vict., ch. 57, s. 5 (1842).	Persons refusing task of work in workhouses or wilfully destroying their clothes or injuring the property of the guardians to be deemed idle and disorderly persons.
7 & 8 Vict., ch. 101, ss. 6, 41 et seqq. (1844).	Any woman neglecting to maintain her bastard child to be dealt with as an idle and disorderly person. Allows the Poor Law Commissioners to form districts of parishes or unions in London and certain other large towns for the establishment and maintenance of asylums in which the destitute and homeless poor may be temporarily relieved and set to work.
11 & 12 Vict., ch. 110 (1848).	Cost of relieving vagrants to be charged to the common fund of the union. Fraudulent applicants for relief to be dealt with as idle and disorderly persons.
16 & 17 Vict., ch. 41, s. 8 (1852-3).	Common Lodging Houses Act. Sec. 8 empowers local authorities to order reports from keepers of common lodging-houses kept for beggars and vagrants.	Rep. and re-enacted as to England, except as to Met. Police District, 38 & 39 Vict., ch. 55, s. 343; rep. except as to County of London by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1892.
20 & 21 Vict., ch. 48 (1857).	Authorises committal of vagrant children to industrial schools up to age of 15.	Rep. 24 & 25 Vict., ch. 113.
24 & 25 Vict., ch. 113 (1861).	Authorises committal of children under 14 found begging or wandering in a state of destitution to industrial schools.	Rep. 29 & 30 Vict., ch. 118.
27 & 28 Vict., ch. 116 (1864).	Metropolitan Houseless Poor Act, 1864 (see page 12 of Report).	S. 6, rep. 28 & 29 Vict., ch. 34. Ss. 1 & 2 rep., 30 & 31 Vict., ch. 6.
28 & 29 Vict., ch. 34 (1865).	Extends and amends the Metropolitan Houseless Poor Act, 1864.	Rep. in part Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1875.
28 & 29 Vict., ch. 79, s. 7 (1865).	Paupers returning within 12 months after removal to be dealt with as idle and disorderly persons.
29 & 30 Vict., ch. 113, s. 15 (1866).	Persons relieved out of the workhouse and refusing to perform task of work to be punishable as idle and disorderly persons.
29 & 30 Vict., ch. 118 (1866).	Industrial Schools Act, 1866. Sec. 14 repeats the provision in 24 & 25 Vict., ch. 113, as to vagrant children.
30 Vict., ch. 6, s. 69 (1867).	Cost of providing in the Metropolis for reception and relief of casual paupers to be thrown on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.
34 & 35 Vict., ch. 108 (1871).	Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871. Provides for detention, punishment and discharge of casual paupers (see page 13 of Report).	Rep. as to s. 5 relating to discharge and detention by 45 and 46 Vict., ch. 36, s. 4.
34 & 35 Vict., ch. 112, s. 15 (1871).	Extends provisions of 5 Geo. IV., ch. 83, s. 4, with regard to suspected persons or reputed thieves on highways or places adjacent.
36 & 37 Vict., ch. 38, s. 3 (1873).	Amends 3 Geo. IV., ch. 83 as to gaming in public places.
38 & 39 Vict., ch. 55, s. 83 (1875).	Re-enacts s. 8 of 16 & 17 Vict., ch. 41.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF STATUTES RELATING TO VAGRANCY—continued.

Appendix I.	39 & 40 Vict., ch. 61, s. 44 (1876).	Makes persons obtaining relief by giving false names or making false statements punishable as idle and disorderly.
	39 & 40 Vict., ch. 79 ss. 11-13 (1876).	Requires local education authorities to secure the attendance of children at school and allows of orders being made for sending them to industrial schools (see page 115 of Report).
	45 & 46 Vict., ch. 36 (1882).	Casual Poor Act, 1882. Extends periods for detention of casual paupers (see page 14 of Report).
	57 & 58 Vict., ch. 41 (1894).	Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894.	Rep. 4 Edw. VII., ch. 15.
	61 & 62 Vict., ch. 39 (1898).	Male persons living on the earnings of prostitution, or persistently importuning for immoral purposes, to be deemed rogues and vagabonds.
	62 & 63 Vict., ch. 37 (1899).	Enables guardians to adopt children (see page 113 of Report).
	4 Edw. VII., ch. 15 (1904).	Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904.
	5 Edw. VII., ch. 13, s. 7 (1905).	Aliens Act. Aliens committing offences under the Act to be deemed rogues and vagabonds.

APPENDIX II.

LEGAL PROVISIONS IN FORCE IN ENGLAND AND WALES ON THE SUBJECT OF VAGRANCY.

(Memorandum prepared by the Local Government Board.)

A.—VAGRANTS GENERALLY.

The law as to vagrants rests upon the Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. IV., c. 83), as amended and extended by subsequent enactments.

The persons who may be thus dealt with fall into three classes:—

1. Idle and disorderly persons.
2. Rogues and vagabonds.
3. Incurable rogues.

I.—Idle and Disorderly Persons.

These persons are punishable upon summary conviction, if before a single justice, with imprisonment with hard labour for not exceeding fourteen days, or, if before a petty sessional court, with imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for not exceeding one month, or by fine not exceeding £5, with imprisonment without hard labour in default of sufficient distress in accordance with the scale prescribed by section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3; 42 & 43 Vict., c. 49, ss. 4, 5, 20.)

This class of persons comprises:

(1.) Every person who being able wholly or in part to maintain himself and his family wilfully refuses or neglects to do so, and in consequence such person or any of his family whom he is legally bound to maintain becomes chargeable to the poor rate. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3; 12 & 13 Vict., c. 103, s. 3.)

This applies to a woman in respect of her bastard child. (7 & 8 Vict., c. 101, s. 6.)

A woman is made liable while unmarried or a widow to maintain her bastard children up to the age of sixteen, or in the case of female children until marriage. (4 & 5 Will. IV., c. 76, s. 71.)

A man is made liable to maintain the children, whether legitimate or illegitimate, of any woman he marries, up to the age of sixteen, or the death of the mother, as part of his family. (4 & 5 Will. IV., c. 76, s. 57.)

A married woman with separate property is made liable for the maintenance of her husband, and is subject to all such liability for the maintenance of her children and grandchildren as the husband is by law subject to for the maintenance of her children and grandchildren. (45 & 46 Vict., c. 75, ss. 20, 21.)

A soldier of the regular forces is not liable to be punished for the offence of deserting or neglecting to maintain his wife or family, or any member thereof, or of leaving her or them chargeable to the poor rate. (44 & 45 Vict., c. 58, s. 145 (1).)

(2.) Every person returning to and becoming chargeable to any parish from which he has been legally removed under an order of justices, except with a certificate acknowledging settlement elsewhere. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3; 7 & 8 Vict., c. 101, s. 55.)

(3.) Every pauper removed under an order obtained by the guardians who returns within twelve months and becomes chargeable to the union without the guardians' consent. (28 & 29 Vict., c. 79, s. 7.)

(4.) Every person relieved in a workhouse who refuses or neglects to perform the prescribed task of work, or destroys his clothes, or damages property of the guardians. (5 & 6 Vict., c. 57, s. 5.)

(5.) Every person relieved out of the workhouse who refuses or wilfully neglects to perform task of work, or who destroys or damages tools, materials, or other property of the guardians. (29 & 30 Vict., c. 113, s. 15.)

(6.) Every person applying for relief and not disclosing money or property in his possession. (11 & 12 Vict., c. 110, s. 10.)

(7.) Every pauper—

- (i) absconding or escaping from casual wards before being entitled to discharge;
- (ii) refusing to be removed to workhouse or asylum;
- (iii) absconding or escaping from or leaving workhouse or asylum during period for which he may be detained;

(iv) refusing or neglecting while an inmate of a casual ward, workhouse, or asylum, to do work or observe regulations:

(v) wilfully giving false name, or making false statement to obtain relief.

(34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 7; 39 & 40 Vict., c. 61, s. 44; 45 & 46 Vict., c. 36, ss. 4, 5.)

The master or porter of a workhouse, or officer in charge of casual wards, may take a disorderly pauper before a justice without summons or warrant and convey the offender upon conviction to gaol. (34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 8.)

(8.) Every pedlar who wanders and trades without being duly licensed or otherwise authorised by law. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3, and see 34 & 35 Vict., c. 96, s. 13.)

(9.) Every prostitute wandering in a public street, public highway, or place of public resort, and behaving in a riotous or indecent manner. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3.)

(10.) Every person wandering abroad or placing himself in any public place, street, highway, court, or passage, to beg or gather alms, or causing or procuring or encouraging any child to do so. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3.)

Causing or procuring or allowing a boy under fourteen or a girl under sixteen to be in any street, premises or place, for begging, receiving, or inducing the giving of alms, is punishable by fine not exceeding £25, or imprisonment, either in default of payment of, or in addition to fine, not exceeding three months. (4 Edw. VII., c. 15, s. 2.)

II. Rogues and Vagabonds.

Except where otherwise indicated these persons are punishable upon summary conviction, if before a single justice, with imprisonment with hard labour for not exceeding fourteen days, or, if by a petty sessional court, with imprisonment with or without hard labour for not exceeding three months, or by fine not exceeding £25 with imprisonment without hard labour in default of sufficient distress in accordance with the scale prescribed by section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4; 42 & 43 Vict., c. 49, ss. 4, 5, 20.)

This class of persons comprises:

(1.) Every person running away and leaving his wife or children chargeable, or whereby they become chargeable, to the poor rate. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

This is extended to the case of a woman who neglects to maintain her bastard child after having been once before convicted of that offence, or who deserts her bastard child whereby such child becomes chargeable to the poor rate. (7 & 8 Vict., c. 101, s. 6.)

A soldier of the regular forces is not liable to be punished for the offence of deserting or neglecting to maintain his wife or family, or any member thereof, or of leaving her or them chargeable to the poor rate. (44 & 45 Vict., c. 58, s. 145 (1).)

(2.) Every pauper—

(i) committing any of the offences enumerated in paragraph (7) of Part I. of this Memorandum after previous conviction as an idle and disorderly person;

(ii) wilfully destroying his clothes or damaging property of the guardians. (34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 7.)

The master or porter of a workhouse, or officer in charge of casual wards, may take disorderly paupers before a justice without summons or warrant and convey the offenders upon conviction to gaol. (34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 8.)

(3.) Every person professing to tell fortunes or using subtle craft, means, or device by palmistry or otherwise to deceive or impose. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

(4.) Every person wandering abroad and lodging in any barn or outhouse, or in any deserted or unoccupied buildings, or in the open air, or under a tent, or in a cart or waggon without visible means of subsistence, and not giving a good account of himself. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

(5.) Every person wilfully exposing any obscene print, picture or other indecent exhibition in a street, road, highway, or public place, or in a window or other part of

Appendix
II.

a shop or building there situate. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4; 1 & 2 Vict., c. 38, s. 2.)

(6) Every person wilfully, openly, lewdly and obscenely exposing the person in a street, road or public highway, or in view thereof, or in any place of public resort with intent to insult a female. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

(7.) Every person wandering abroad and exposing wounds or deformities to obtain alms. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

(8.) Every person going about as a gatherer or collector of alms, or endeavouring to procure charitable contributions under false pretences. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

(9.) Every person playing or betting by way of wagering or gaming in any street, road, highway, or other open and public place, or in any open place to which the public have access, at or with any table or instrument of gaming, or any coin, token, card or other article used as an instrument or means of such wagering or gaming, at any game or pretended game of chance.

The justice or justices trying the case may alternatively inflict a penalty of 40s. for a first and £5 for a subsequent offence. (36 & 37 Vict., c. 38, s. 3.)

(10.) Every person in possession of any house-breaking implements with intent feloniously to break into a dwelling-house, warehouse, coach-house, stable or outbuilding. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

(11.) Every person armed with a gun or other offensive weapon with intent to commit a felonious act. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

(12.) Every person found in or on a dwelling house, warehouse, coachhouse, stable, or outhouse, or in inclosed premises for any unlawful purpose. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

(13.) Every suspected person or reputed thief frequenting or loitering about or in a river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin, or a quay, wharf or warehouse near or adjoining thereto, or a street, highway, or avenue leading thereto, or a place of public resort or an avenue leading thereto, or a street, or highway, or place adjacent to a street or highway with intent to commit felony. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4; 34 & 35 Vict., c. 112, s. 15; 54 & 55 Vict., c. 69, s. 7.)

(14.) Every person who is convicted of being idle and disorderly after a previous conviction, or who on apprehension as an idle and disorderly person violently resists a constable apprehending him and is subsequently convicted of the offence for which he was so apprehended. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.)

(15.) Every person who knowingly lives on the earnings of prostitution, or in a public place persistently solicits or importunes for immoral purposes. (61 & 62 Vict., c. 39, s. 1.)

(16.) Every person who keeps an office for a lottery not authorised by Parliament or knowingly suffers a lottery to take place in his house, room, or place.

Every person discovered in such house or place on warrant of justice, and knowingly aiding, assisting, or concerned with offenders and transactions respecting lotteries; and Every person who, although not discovered in such house or place, employs or causes to be employed any person in carrying on such transactions, or in aiding or assisting any such person.

Every person who is a lottery insurer, or who sells tickets or chances in a lottery authorised by a foreign potentate or State, or to be drawn in a foreign country, or publishes a proposal or scheme for the sale of tickets; and

Every person who is discovered in a house or place where an offence has been committed and who has knowingly aided, or assisted, or been concerned with any offender in committing any such offence; and

Every person who, although not discovered in a house or place, employs or causes to be employed any person in carrying on any illegal transaction, or acting as agent in any such transaction, or assisting any such person. (42 Geo. III., ss. 2, 4; 4 Geo. IV., c. 60, ss. 19, 37, 41, 59, 60, 61; 5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 21.)

(17.) Every person untruly confessing himself to be a deserter, or improperly absent from one of His Majesty's ships, if not received into His Majesty's Naval service. Conviction may be by two justices near place where offender delivers himself up, confesses, or happens to be. (10 & 11 Vict., c. 62, s. 10.)

(18.) Any person guilty of an offence under the Aliens Act, 1905, if the offence is committed by him as an immigrant or alien. (5 Edw. VII., c. 13, s. 7 (1).)

III. Incurrigible Rogues.

These persons may be committed by a single justice or a petty sessional court to prison with hard labour until the next quarter sessions, and may be sentenced by a court of quarter sessions to further imprisonment for not more than one year with hard labour and, if males, also to be whipped. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, ss. 5, 10.)

This class of persons comprises:—

(1.) Every person convicted as a rogue and vagabond after previous conviction as such. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 5.)

(2.) Every person breaking or escaping out of a place of legal confinement before expiration of term for which he was committed under the Vagrancy Act, 1824. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 5.)

(3.) Every person convicted as a rogue and vagabond who violently resisted the constable apprehending him. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 5.)

Persons of the three classes above mentioned may be apprehended without warrants and may be delivered to a constable by any one. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 6.)

They and any vehicles found in their possession may be searched, and their trunks, bags, bundles, parcels, or packages may be inspected, and any money found with or upon them may be applied towards the expenses of apprehension and conveyance to and maintenance in prison, and, if necessary, the effects found with them may be sold and the proceeds applied towards the same purposes. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 8.)

Houses for the reception, lodging, or entertainment of travellers may be searched for offenders upon warrant by a justice. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 13.)

Idle and disorderly persons, or rogues and vagabonds, may, on conviction, appeal to quarter sessions. (5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 14.)

B. VAGRANT POOR.

There is a large class of persons falling under the Poor Law designation of vagrants or casual paupers, i.e., destitute wayfarers or wanderers applying for or receiving relief, who may not be offenders against the Vagrancy Act, 1824.

For such persons Guardians are required to provide such casual wards with such fittings and furniture as the Local Government Board consider necessary, having regard to the number of casual paupers likely to require relief. (34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 9.)

With regard to vagrants relieved in casual wards a power of detention was given by section 5 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict., c. 57), which enabled the Guardians, subject to the powers of the Poor Law Commissioners (now the Local Government Board), to prescribe a task of work to be done by any person relieved in a workhouse in return for his food and lodging. This section, however, prohibited the detention of a person against his will for the performance of his task of work for more than four hours from the breakfast hour in the morning succeeding the admission to the workhouse. (5 & 6 Vict., c. 57, s. 5.)

And now a casual pauper is not entitled to discharge himself from a casual ward before nine o'clock in the morning of the second day following his admission, nor before he has performed the task of work prescribed for him; and where a casual pauper has been admitted on more than one occasion during one month into a casual ward of the same union, he is not entitled to discharge himself before nine o'clock in the morning of the fourth day after his admission, and during the interval he may be removed to the workhouse and detained there for the remainder of the period of detention.

Sunday is not to be included in computing the number of days during which a casual pauper may be thus detained, and, in the case of the metropolis, in determining the number of admissions of a casual pauper, every casual ward is to be deemed a casual ward of the same union. (45 & 46 Vict., c. 36, s. 4.)

In addition to the general law relating to the relief of the casual poor, special provision is made for the relief of wanderers and destitute persons in the metropolis by the Metropolitan Houseless Poor Act, 1864, which was originally of a temporary character, but which was made perpetual by the Metropolitan Houseless Poor Act, 1865. Under these Acts the Guardians in the metropolis are required to provide within their respective unions such wards or other places of reception for destitute wayfarers and foundlings as the Local Government Board, having regard to the number of persons likely to require relief, shall direct. Any constable of the Metropolitan or City of London Police may personally conduct any destitute wayfarer, wanderer, or foundling, or other destitute person, not having committed or being charged with any offence punishable by law, within the knowledge of the constable, to any ward or other places of reception approved by the Local Government Board under the Acts, and every such wayfarer, wanderer, or foundling is to be relieved therein. The wards or other places of reception are to be open for the admission of such persons as above mentioned between six in the evening and eight in the morning in the months between October and March inclusive, and between eight in the evening and eight in the morning in the months between April and September inclusive. (27 & 28 Vict., c. 116, s. 5; 28 Vict., c. 34, ss. 4, 5.)

The costs of the provision and maintenance of casual wards in London are a charge on the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund. (30 Vict., c. 6, s. 69.)

Casual paupers are to be admitted, dieted and set to work and discharged, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Local Government Board. A task of work so prescribed is to supersede any task of work under 5 & 6 Vict., c. 57, s. 5, above quoted, but in order that such task might in the meantime continue in force that enactment was left unrepealed. (34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 6.)

With a view, however, of precluding any question as to the non-repeal of the section of 5 & 6 Vict., c. 57, above referred to, it is enacted that the provisions of 34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, with respect to the detention of paupers, are to take effect and be enforceable notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 of 5 & 6 Vict., c. 57, limiting the time for which the inmates of a workhouse may be detained for the performance of a task of work. (34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 11.)

Regulations as to the admission and discharge of casual paupers, their dietary, and the tasks of work to be set them, are contained in a General Order of the Local Government Board of the 18th December, 1882, as amended by General Orders of the 3rd November, 1887, the 11th June, 1892, and the 4th May, 1897. Copies of these Orders will be found in the appendix to this Memorandum.

There are also poor law provisions of which the effect in relation to paupers other than casual paupers may be conveniently set out here as supplementing those already referred to.

Thus, under section 4 of the Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871, as amended by section 4 of the Poor Law Act, 1899, the guardians may direct any pauper inmate of a workhouse or the paupers of any class therein to be detained, after giving notice to quit, for times not exceeding the limited periods following, viz. :—

(1) If the pauper has not previously discharged himself from the workhouse within one month before giving the notice, twenty-four hours.

(2) If he has discharged himself once or oftener within such month, forty-eight hours.

(3) If he has discharged himself more than twice within two months before giving the notice, seventy-two hours.

(4) If he has, in the opinion of the Guardians, discharged himself frequently without sufficient reason, 168 hours.

Any such direction of the guardians may be altered or rescinded by them, and the guardians at their meeting, or the visiting committee in the interval between the meetings, may exempt a pauper from the operation of the direction. Moreover, if the guardians are not sitting or the visiting committee in attendance, the master of the workhouse may discharge a pauper before the expiration of his period of detention if there are circumstances which require this to be done.

These provisions do not apply to casual paupers. (34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 4; 62 & 63 Vict., c. 37, s. 4.)

Under section 22 of the Poor Law Act, 1867, a person suffering from bodily disease of an infectious or contagious character may be detained in the workhouse, and is not to be discharged till the medical officer certifies that the discharge may take place. If the person thus detained absconds or escapes he may be apprehended without warrant and taken before a justice, and the justice convicting him of the offence of absconding may suspend the execution of the warrant of conviction and order him back to the workhouse or asylum to remain there until cured or lawfully discharged. (30 & 31 Vict., c. 106, s. 22; 34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 7.)

Further, it may be observed that under the provisions of the Poor Law Act, 1889, as amended by the Poor Law Act, 1899, the Guardians may take the control of children up to eighteen years of age when the child is maintained by them, and (i.) has been deserted by its parent; or

(ii.) the Guardians are of opinion that by reason of vicious habits or mode of life the parent is unfit to have the control of it; or

(iii.) a parent is unable to perform parental duties by reason of being under sentence of penal servitude, or detained under the Inebriates Act, 1898; or

(iv.) a parent has been sentenced to imprisonment for an offence against any of his or her children; or

(v.) a parent is permanently bedridden or disabled and an inmate of a workhouse and consents; or

(vi.) both parents, or in the case of an illegitimate child, the mother, are or is dead. (52 & 53 Vict., c. 56, s. 1; 62 & 63 Vict., c. 37, s. 1.)

C.—COMMON LODGING HOUSES.

Under the provisions of section 83 of the Public Health Act, 1875, which apply outside London, the keeper of a common lodging-house in which beggars or vagrants are received to lodge must from time to time, if so required by the local authority, report to the local authority, or to such person as they direct, every person who resorted to the house during the preceding day or night. For this purpose schedules are to be furnished to the person ordered to report, and he is to fill them up with the required information and to transmit them to the local authority. The local authority for these purposes are the town council, or the urban or rural district council.

Every such local authority are required by section 80 of the Act of 1875 to make byelaws, which must be confirmed by the Local Government Board :

(1) For fixing and varying the number of lodgers who may be received into a common lodging-house, and for the separation of the sexes;

(2) For promoting cleanliness and ventilation in the houses;

(3) For giving notice and taking precautions in the case of any infectious disease; and

(4) Generally for the well ordering of the houses. (38 & 39 Vict., c. 55, ss. 80, 83.)

A copy of the model byelaws with respect to common lodging-houses drafted by the Local Government Board will be found on page 163.

The London County Council are the authority in the metropolis, outside the City, for the execution of the Common Lodging-Houses Acts, 1851 and 1853. Section 8 of the Act of 1853 contains similar provisions in regard to reports to be furnished to the London County Council by keepers or persons in charge of common lodging-houses as are contained in section 83 of the Public Health Act, 1875, above referred to. (16 & 17 Vict., c. 41, s. 8.)

The London County Council are empowered by section 53 of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1902, to make byelaws which must be confirmed by the Local Government Board, in relation to common lodging-houses for the same purposes as those referred to in section 80 of the Public Health Act, 1875, above mentioned. (2 Edw. 7, c. clxxiii., s. 53.)

A copy of the byelaws in relation to common lodging-houses made by the London County Council which are now in force is given at page 172.

Local Government Board

January, 1906.

Appendix II. The subjoined Table indicates succinctly the nature of the offences above referred to, and the statutory enactments applicable.

I. Idle and Disorderly Persons.

Description of offence.	Statutory enactment applicable.
1. Neglect to maintain family.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3. 12 & 13 Vict., c. 103, s. 3; & see 7 & 8 Vict., c. 101, s. 6., and 4 & 5 Will. IV., c. 76, ss. 57, 71. 45 & 46 Vict., c. 75, ss. 20, 21. 44 & 45 Vict., c. 58, s. 145 (1).
2. Paupers returning and becoming chargeable except with certificate of settlement.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3.
3. Paupers returning after removal.	7 & 8 Vict., c. 101, s. 55.
4. Pauper in workhouse refusing to perform task of work, etc.	28 & 29 Vict., c. 79, s. 7.
5. Pauper out of workhouse refusing to perform task of work, etc.	5 & 6 Vict. c. 57, s. 5.
6. Persons applying for poor relief and not disclosing property.	29 & 30 Vict., c. 113, s. 15.
7. Refractory paupers.	11 & 12 Vict., c. 110, s. 10.
8. Pedlars trading without licence.	34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, s. 7. 39 & 40 Vict., c. 61, s. 44. 45 & 46 Vict., c. 36, ss. 4, 5. 5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3; and see 34 & 35 Vict., c. 96, s. 13.
9. Prostitutes behaving indecently.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3.
10. Begging alms.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 3; and see 4 Edw. VII., c. 15, s. 2.

II. Rogues and Vagabonds.

Description of offence.	Statutory enactment applicable.
1. Running away and leaving family destitute.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4. 7 & 8 Vict., c. 101, s. 6.
2. Refractory paupers.	44 & 45 Vict., c. 58, s. 145 (1).
3. Fortune tellers.	34 & 35 Vict., c. 108, ss. 7, 8.
4. Lodging in outhouses, etc.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.
5. Indecent exhibition.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.
6. Exposing person.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.
7. Exposing wounds, etc.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.
8. Collecting alms under false pretences.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.
9. Gaming.	36 & 37 Vict., c. 38, s. 3.
10. Possession of housebreaking implements.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.
11. Being armed with gun, etc., with felonious intent.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.
12. Being on premises for unlawful purposes.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.
13. Reputed thieves frequenting public places with felonious intent.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4. 34 & 35 Vict., c. 112, s. 15. 54 & 55 Vict., c. 69, s. 7.
14. Previous conviction or resisting apprehension.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 4.
15. Persons trading in prostitution.	61 & 62 Vict., c. 39, s. 1.
16. Lottery keepers, etc.	42 Geo. III., c. 119, ss. 2, 4. 4 Geo. IV., c. 60, ss. 19, 37, 41, 59-61. 5 Geo. IV., c. 83, s. 21.
17. Naval deserters.	10 & 11 Vict., c. 62, s. 10.
18. Offence by alien or immigrant under Aliens Act, 1905.	5 Edw. VII., c. 13, s. 7 (1).

III. Incurrible Rogues.

Description of offence.	Statutory enactment applicable.
1. Previous conviction.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, ss. 5, 10.
2. Breaking out of confinement.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, ss. 5, 10.
3. Resisting apprehension.	5 Geo. IV., c. 83, ss. 5, 10.

GENERAL ORDER.

(18th December, 1882.)

REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO CASUAL PAUPERS.

TO THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE SEVERAL UNIONS IN ENGLAND AND WALES FOR THE TIME BEING;—

And to all others whom it may concern.

WHEREAS by a General Order dated the 22nd day of November, 1871, the Local Government Board, in pursuance of Section 6 of the "Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871," prescribed Regulations with reference to casual paupers;

And whereas the said Act has been amended by the "Casual Poor Act, 1882," and it is expedient that the said Order should be rescinded to the extent herein-after specified, and that other Regulations should be substituted for those contained in that Order:

NOW THEREFORE, We, the Local Government Board, in pursuance of the powers given to Us by the several Statutes in that behalf, hereby Order as follows:

Art. 1.—The said Order dated the 22nd day of November, 1871, shall be rescinded on the 31st day of December, 1882, except so far as that Order rescinded other Orders.

Art. 2.—The following Regulations shall take effect on and after the 1st day of January, 1883, with regard to the several unions in England and Wales for the time being.

Admission.

Art. 3.—A casual pauper shall not be admitted into any casual ward except upon an order signed either—

By a relieving officer or an assistant relieving officer:

Or, in cases of sudden and urgent necessity, by an overseer.

Provided as follows:

1. The master of the workhouse (or during his absence or inability to act, the matron,) or the superintendent of the casual ward shall admit any casual pauper without an order, where the case appears to be one of sudden or urgent necessity.

2. The master or matron of any workhouse or the superintendent of any casual ward in the Metropolis shall admit without an order any person brought to the casual ward by a constable, in pursuance of Section 4 of the "Metropolitan Houseless Poor Act, 1865," if there be room for him in such ward.

3. Where a person is refused admission to a casual ward, a record of the name of the applicant and of the circumstances under which he was refused admission shall be entered by the master, matron, or superintendent in a book, and laid before the Guardians at their next meeting.

Art. 4.—The following regulations, subject, however, as regards the Metropolis, to the provisions of Sections 4 and 5 of the "Metropolitan Houseless Poor Act, 1865," shall be observed with respect to orders of admission:—

1. The order shall, in addition to any other particulars which may be required, show the hour and place at which it was given:

2. The order shall be available only on the day on which it was issued:

3. The order shall not be available for admission earlier than four o'clock in the afternoon during the months between October and March, both inclusive, or earlier than six o'clock in the afternoon during the months between April and September, both inclusive, nor unless it is presented within a reasonable time after it has been obtained, except where at the time of the presentation of the order, the master or matron of the workhouse, or the superintendent of the casual ward may consider the case to be one of sudden or urgent necessity.

Art. 5.—Every casual pauper shall immediately upon admission be searched, in the case of a male, by or under the inspection of the master or other male officer, and in the case of a female, by or under the inspection of the matron or other female officer, and all articles which may be found upon the person of such pauper shall be taken away, and (except as regards any money which may be dealt with in the manner prescribed by Section 10 of the "Poor Law Amendment Act, 1848,") shall be restored to him at the time of his discharge.

Art. 6.—Every casual pauper shall as soon as practicable after his admission be cleansed in a bath with water of suitable temperature: provided that this regulation shall not be enforced if, on account of the state of health of the pauper or other circumstances, there is reason to believe that the use of the bath would be injurious.

Art. 7.—The clothing worn by a casual pauper shall, after his admission, be taken from him, and if requisite be dried or disinfected, and such garment or garments as the Guardians may deem necessary shall be supplied to him for the night, his own clothes being returned to him in the morning.

Art. 8.—The master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the casual ward shall duly keep, or cause to be kept, a book containing the particulars set forth in the form in Schedule A annexed hereto, and such other particulars as may be required by the Guardians; and such book shall be laid before the Guardians at such times as they may appoint, and shall be submitted to the district auditor at the usual audits, and at other audits when required by him.

Discharge.

Art. 9.—Whereas by Section 4 of the "Casual Poor Act, 1882," it is enacted that—

"A casual pauper shall not be entitled to discharge himself from a casual ward before nine o'clock in the morning of the second day following his admission, nor before he has performed the work prescribed for him, as in the said Act [The Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871] mentioned; and where a casual pauper has been admitted on more than one occasion during one month into any casual ward of the same union, he shall not be entitled to discharge himself before nine o'clock in the morning of the fourth day after his admission, and he may at any time during that interval be removed by any officer of the Guardians, or by a police constable, to the workhouse of the union, and be required to remain in such workhouse for the remainder of the period of his detention."

"Provided that in computing the number of days during which a casual pauper may be detained under this section, Sunday shall not be included."

"Provided also, with respect to the Metropolis, as follows:

"(1.) In determining the number of admissions of a casual pauper, every casual ward in the Metropolis shall be deemed to be a casual ward of the same union."

"(2.) The expression 'workhouse of the union' in this section shall include any workhouse and any asylum provided under the Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867, for the reception and setting to work of the casual poor, to which the casual poor of the union can be sent."

Now, therefore, the following regulations shall, on and after the First day of January, One thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, be observed with respect to the discharge of casual paupers; that is to say,—

A casual pauper shall not be allowed to discharge himself at an earlier period than that at which he is entitled to discharge himself under the section above-cited.

Provided as follows:—

(1.) The Guardians may give any directions to the master of the workhouse, or to the superintendent of the casual ward, with respect to the discharge of any class or classes of casual paupers before the expiration of the respective periods specified in the

Appendix
II.

Appendix
II.

section above-cited, and such directions shall be followed by the master or superintendent.

(2.) If in the opinion of the master of the workhouse, or the superintendent of the casual ward, any special circumstances shall require that a casual pauper shall be discharged before the expiration of either of the periods mentioned in the section above-cited, he may discharge such pauper accordingly, and shall report the facts of the case to the Guardians at their next meeting.

Dietary.

Art. 10.—The casual paupers received into the casual ward shall be dieted as prescribed in the table in the Schedule B hereto annexed.

Provided as follows:

1. The dietaries may be varied from time to time by a resolution of the Guardians, approved by the Local Government Board.

2. If a casual pauper be sick or infirm, the medical officer of the workhouse or casual ward shall prescribe the dietary for such pauper.

Task of Work.

Art. 11.—The master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the casual ward shall set every casual pauper not suffering under any temporary or permanent infirmity of body to perform one of the tasks of work prescribed in the Schedule C. hereto annexed, according to the class to which he may belong.

Provided as follows:

1. A person shall not be required to perform the whole or any part of such task of work if it shall appear that the same is not suited to his age, strength, or capacity.

2. The tasks of work may be varied from time to time by a resolution of the Guardians, approved by the Local Government Board.

3. Any task of work which, at the date when this Order takes effect, shall have been approved by the Local Government Board in pursuance of the Order hereby rescinded, shall remain in force until the Guardians pass a resolution revoking it, and the master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the casual ward shall until such resolution is passed set every casual pauper within the terms of this Article to perform the task of work so approved, or one of the tasks of work prescribed in the Schedule C, hereto annexed, according to the class to which he may belong.

General Regulations.

Art. 12.—The following regulations shall be observed by every casual pauper; viz.:—

1. He shall not use obscene or profane language, or act or write indecently or obscenely.

2. He shall not by word or deed insult or revile, or threaten to strike or assault the master or matron, the superintendent of the casual ward, or any other officer or assistant officer in the employ of the Guardians.

3. He shall not unlawfully strike or otherwise unlawfully assault any person.

He shall not smoke in the casual ward, or in any part of the premises connected therewith.

Art. 13. In the event of any casual pauper being ill, the master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the casual ward shall, as soon as practicable, obtain the attendance of the medical officer who shall give directions as to the treatment of such pauper, and if, in the opinion of the medical officer, the pauper cannot be properly treated in the casual ward, he shall be transferred to a sick ward of the workhouse, and be deemed to be an ordinary inmate thereof.

Art. 14. Proper sleeping accommodation, consisting of separate cells, beds, or compartments, or other arrangements which have been approved by the Local Government Board, and suitable bed clothing, shall be provided in every casual ward; and, except in the case of a mother and her infant child or children, more than one casual pauper shall not be allowed to sleep in the same cell, bed, or compartment. Suitable means of communication between the inmates of the casual ward and the person having charge of the ward shall be provided.

Art. 15. The master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the casual ward shall cause to be hung up and kept suspended in some conspicuous place in the casual ward and in the yard or room where the casual paupers are set to work, a printed copy of Articles 5, 6, 7, 9, and 12 of this Order, as well as of the Dietary Table and the tasks of work in force for the time being, and of Section 7 of the "Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871" (omitting the provisoes to that Section), of Section 44 of the "Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876," and of Section 5 of the "Casual Poor Act, 1882."

Explanation of Terms.

Art. 16. In this Order—

The term "Union" means a union of parishes under a General or Local Act, with a separate Board of Guardians, and includes a parish or place for which there is a separate Board of Guardians.

The term "Guardians" means Guardians appointed under "The Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834," and the Acts amending the same, and includes Guardians or any other body of persons performing under any Local Act the like functions as Guardians under "The Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834."

The term "Metropolis" means the Metropolis as defined by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and includes any union which is wholly or for the greater part thereof comprised within the Metropolis as so defined.

The term "Casual Pauper" means any destitute wayfarer or wanderer applying for or receiving relief.

The term "Casual Ward" means any ward or wards, building, or premises set apart or provided for the reception and relief of destitute wayfarers and wanderers.

All words importing the masculine gender shall be deemed and taken to include females, and the singular to include the plural and the plural the singular, unless the contrary as to gender or number is expressly provided.

(Schedules A, B, and C to the Order are printed on pages 11 and 12.)

SCHEDULE A.

Admission and Discharge Book for Casual Paupers.

Appendix
II.

UNION.

Master of the Workhouse at or Superintendent of the Casual Ward at ADMITTED.

Year, month, and day of the Month.	Day of the week.	Hour of admission.	Names of casual pauper, wife, and family.	Age.	Calling or occupation.	Where he slept last night.	If any, what money found when searched on admission.*

continued :—

DISCHARGED.

At what hour discharged.					What work done.	If not set to work, why ?	To what place going.	Remarks.
1st day after admission.	2nd day after admission.	3rd day after admission.	4th day after admission.	5th day after admission. **

* See the provision in the Statute 11 & 12 Vict., c. 110., s. 10.

In unions within the Metropolis, columns must be added for the nature and quantity of food given and the cost.

 This column is only intended for cases where the period of detention includes Sunday.

SCHEDULE B.

Dietary Table.

Casual paupers who remain for one night only.

Casual paupers who are detained for more than one night.

SUPPER	Males above 15 years of age - - - -	8 oz. of bread ; or 6 oz. of bread, and 1 pint of gruel or 1 pint of broth.
	Females above 15 years of age - - - -	6 oz. of bread, and 1 pint of gruel or 1 pint of broth.
	Children from 7 to 15 years of age - - - -	4 oz. of bread, and half-a-pint of gruel or half a-pint of broth.
	Children under 7 years of age - - - -

BREAKFAST—Same as Supper.

SUPPER and
BREAKFAST. } The same as above.

DINNER for the first and each subsequent day after admission :

Males above 15 years of age - - - -	8 oz. of bread and 1½ oz. of cheese, or 6 oz. bread and 1 pint of soup.
Females above 15 years of age - - - -	6 oz. of bread and 1½ oz. of cheese, or 5 oz. of bread and 1 pint of soup.
Children from 7 to 15 years of age - - - -	4 oz. of bread and 1 oz. of cheese, or 3 oz. of bread and half-a-pint of soup.
Children under 7 years of age - - - -

The gruel, broth, and soup to be made of the same ingredients and in the same proportions as are used in the Workhouse for those articles of diet.

SCHEDULE C.

*Tasks of Work.*Appendix
II.Casual paupers who remain for one night only.

As regards Males—

The breaking of two cwt. of stones, or such other quantity not less than one and a half cwt. nor more than four cwt. as the Guardians, having regard to the nature of the stone, may prescribe. The stone shall be broken to such a size as the Guardians, having regard to the nature thereof, may prescribe.

or

The picking of one pound of unbeaten or two pounds of beaten oakum ;

or

Three hours' work in digging or pumping, or cutting wood, or grinding corn.

As regards Females—

The picking of half-a-pound of unbeaten or one pound of beaten oakum ;

or

Three hours' work in washing, or scrubbing and cleaning.

Casual paupers who are detained for more than one night.

As regards Males, for each entire day of detention—

The breaking of seven cwt. of stones, or such other quantity not less than five cwt. nor more than thirteen cwt. as the Guardians, having regard to the nature of the stone, may prescribe. The stone shall be broken to such a size as the Guardians, having regard to the nature thereof, may prescribe.

or

The picking of four pounds of unbeaten or eight pounds of beaten oakum ;

or

Nine hours' work in digging or pumping, or cutting wood, or grinding corn.

As regards Females, for each entire day of detention—

The picking of two pounds of unbeaten or four pounds of beaten oakum ;

or

Nine hours' work in washing, scrubbing and cleaning, or needlework.

Given under the Seal of Office of the Local Government Board, this Eighteenth day of December, in the year One thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

L.S.

HUGH OWEN,
Secretary.

J. G. DOBSON,
President.

GENERAL ORDER: METROPOLIS.

AMENDING REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO
DIET OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

(3rd November, 1887.)

TO THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE SEVERAL UNIONS AND SEPARATE PARISHES NAMED IN THE SCHEDULE
TO THIS ORDER—

And to all others whom it may concern.

WHEREAS by a General Order dated the 18th day of December, 1882, We, the Local Government Board, in pursuance of the "Casual Poor Act, 1882," prescribed Regulations with reference to casual paupers; and by Article 10 of that Order We directed that casual paupers received into a casual ward should, subject to certain provisos, be dieted in accordance with the Dietary Table contained in the Schedule B. annexed to the Order.

And whereas the diet prescribed in the said Dietary Table for the supper and breakfast of male casual paupers above the age of fifteen years is (a) 8 oz. of bread, or (b) 6 oz. of bread and one pint of gruel or one pint of Broth.

And whereas it is expedient that the said General Order should be altered as hereinafter mentioned.

NOW THEREFORE, in pursuance of the powers given to Us by the Statutes in that behalf, We hereby Order as follows:—

ARTICLE I.—This Order shall take effect from and after the Tenth day of November, One thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

ARTICLE II.—So far as regards casual paupers received into a casual ward belonging to any of the unions and separate parishes named in the Schedule to this Order, the above-cited General Order shall be altered by substituting in the Dietary Table contained in the Schedule B thereto, "6 oz. of bread, together with one pint either of hot gruel, containing not less than 2 oz. of oatmeal, or of hot broth," for the diet prescribed in such Table for the supper and breakfast of males above fifteen years of age.

SCHEDULE.

UNIONS.

City of London.
Fulham.
Greenwich.
Hackney.
Holborn.
Lewisham.
Poplar.
Saint George's.

Saint Olave's.
Saint Saviour's.
Stepney.
Strand.
Wandsworth and Clapham.
Westminster.
Whitechapel.
Woolwich.

SEPARATE PARISHES.

Mile End Old Town (Hamlet)
Paddington.
Saint George in the East.
Saint Giles, Camberwell.
Saint Giles-in-the-Fields and Saint George, Bloomsbury.
Saint John, Hampstead.
Saint Leonard, Shoreditch.

Saint Luke, Chelsea.
Saint Mary Abbots Kensington.
Saint Mary, Islington.
Saint Mary, Lambeth.
Saint Marylebone.
Saint Matthew, Bethnal Green.
Saint Pancras.

Given under the Seal of Office of the Local Government Board, this Third day of November, in the year One thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven.

L.S.

HUGH OWEN,
Secretary.

CHAS. T. RITCHIE,
President.

GENERAL ORDER.
AMENDING REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO DISCHARGE OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

(11th June, 1892.)

TO THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE SEVERAL UNIONS IN ENGLAND AND WALES FOR THE TIME BEING—

And to all others whom it may concern.

WHEREAS by a General Order dated the 18th day of December, 1882, We, the Local Government Board, prescribed Regulations with reference to casual paupers; And whereas Article 9 of the said General Order, after reciting Section 4 of the Casual Poor Act, 1882, directs as follows, viz., "A casual pauper shall not be allowed to discharge himself at an earlier period than that at which he is entitled to discharge himself under the section above-cited:

"Provided as follows:

"(1.) The Guardians may give any directions to the master of the workhouse, or to the superintendent of the casual ward, with respect to the discharge of any class or classes of casual paupers before the expiration of the respective periods specified in the section above-cited, and such directions shall be followed by the master or superintendent.

"(2.) If in the opinion of the master of the workhouse, or the superintendent of the casual ward, any special circumstances shall require that a casual pauper shall be discharged before the expiration of either of the periods mentioned in the section above-cited, he may discharge such pauper accordingly, and shall report the facts of the case to the Guardians at their next meeting."

And whereas it is expedient that the said General Order should be amended as hereinafter mentioned:

NOW THEREFORE, in pursuance of the powers given to Us by the Statutes in that behalf, We hereby Order as follows:

ARTICLE I.—The above-cited Article 9 of the said General Order of the Eighteenth day of December, One thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, shall be amended by the addition thereto of the following proviso; that is to say,—

(3.) A casual pauper, who has been detained for more than one night, and who represents to the master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the casual ward that he is desirous of seeking work, shall, if he has to the best of his ability performed the prescribed task of work, be allowed to discharge himself at the time hereinafter mentioned on the day upon which he is discharged; that is to say,—

During the period between Lady Day and Michaelmas Day . . . Half-past Five o'clock in the morning.

During the period between Michaelmas Day and Lady Day . . . Half-past Six o'clock in the morning.

The request of such casual pauper shall not be refused except on the ground that he has not performed the prescribed task of work to the best of his ability, and every such refusal shall be reported to the Guardians at their next ordinary meeting by the master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the casual ward, as the case may be.

ARTICLE II.—Nothing in this Order shall be deemed to prevent the Guardians, or the master of the workhouse, or the superintendent of the casual ward, from exercising the powers conferred upon them, respectively, by paragraphs (1) and (2) of the proviso to the above-cited Article of the said General Order with respect to the discharge of casual paupers.

ARTICLE III.—This Order shall take effect from the Seventh day after the date hereof.

Given under the Seal of Office of the Local Government Board, this Eleventh day of June, in the year One thousand eight hundred and ninety two.

L.S.

CHAS. T. RITCHIE,
President.

HUGH OWEN,
Secretary.

GENERAL ORDER.
CASUAL PAUPERS: AMENDING REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO DIET OF CHILDREN UNDER SEVEN YEARS OF AGE.

(4th May, 1897.)

TO THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE SEVERAL POOR LAW UNIONS IN ENGLAND AND WALES FOR THE TIME BEING—

And to all others whom it may concern.

WHEREAS by a General Order dated the 18th day of December, 1882, We, the Local Government Board, prescribed Regulations with reference to casual paupers;

And whereas by Article 10 of the said General Order it was directed that casual paupers received into casual wards should, subject as provided in such Article, be dieted as prescribed in the Table in the Schedule B, annexed to the said Order;

And whereas it is expedient that the said General Order should be amended as hereinafter mentioned;

NOW THEREFORE, in pursuance of the powers given to us by the Statutes in that behalf, We hereby order as follows:—

The Dietary Table contained in Schedule B. annexed to the said General Order dated the Eighteenth day of December, One thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, shall be amended by the omission therefrom of all words relating to the diet of children under seven years of age and by the addition thereto of the following words; that is to say,—

"Children under Seven Years of Age.

"The master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the casual ward, as the case may be, shall supply for each child under the age of seven years in respect of every period, or part of a period, of eight hours that such child

Appendix
II.

shall be resident in the casual ward, an allowance of food as hereinafter specified; that is to say,—

- | | |
|--|---|
| "For each child under the age of seven months | Half a pint of milk and half an ounce of sugar. |
| "For each child between the ages of seven months and two years | Half a pint of milk, half an ounce of sugar, and two ounces of bread. |
| "For each child between the ages of two years and seven years | Half a pint of milk, four ounces of bread, and half an ounce of cheese. |

"Provided as follows:—

"(1.) The allowance may, at the discretion of the matron of the workhouse, or the female superintendent of the casual ward, as the case may be, be given to the suckling mother of a child instead of to the child.

"(2.) The matron or female superintendent, as the case may be, shall cause the food to be prepared in such manner and to be given at such times and in such way as shall be suitable to each child, and shall take care that the milk, or bread and milk, is served warm

"(3.) Unsweetened condensed milk suitably diluted may be substituted for fresh milk in the proportion of four ounces of condensed milk for half a pint of fresh milk."

Given under the Seal of Office of the Local Government Board, this Fourth day of May, in the year One thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven.

L.S.

HENRY CHAPLIN,
President.

HUGH OWEN,
Secretary.

APPENDIX III.

MINUTE OF THE POOR LAW BOARD.

Poor Law Board,
Somerset House.
4th August, 1848.

The Board have received representations from every part of England and Wales respecting the continual and rapid increase of vagrancy. After making due allowance for the influence of circumstances that have created temporary distress, it is impossible to come to any other conclusion than that the system which has of late years been adopted in the relief of casual poor, has been the principal cause of the extension of vagrancy. It is not difficult to see that a regular provision of food and lodging, at the public expense, for every person who chooses to demand them at any place, must diminish the risks and privations of a vagrant life, and tempt a resort to it on the part of many who would otherwise have been deterred from adopting it. Experience has shown that the roughness of the lodging and coarseness of the fare provided, while they inflict undesirable hardship on the really meritorious and destitute wayfarer, do not counterbalance the inducements which the certainty of sustenance and shelter holds out to the dishonest vagrant. The task of work prescribed and found useful where it has been properly applied, has, from its being only occasionally enforced, exercised no general influence as a test; and the laws against vagrancy and disorderly conduct have failed to produce the effect of repression. The Board are unable to suggest any additional test or punishment that shall prevent the abuse of relief indiscriminately extended to every stranger who may represent himself as destitute. A sound and vigilant discrimination in respect of the objects of relief, and the steady refusal of aid to all who are not ascertained to be in a state of destitution, are obviously the most effectual remedies against the continued increase of vagrancy and mendicancy.

The power of exercising this discrimination is vested by law in the boards of guardians and their officers. On them rests the responsibility of exercising it effectually. The boards of guardians, as they represent those who suffer from the evil, must seek the remedy principally in their own vigilance and energy. They can expect little help from Parliament, when no material increase of their present power appears to be requisite; nor can they be supplied by this Board with any rules of action that can relieve them from the obligation, or prescribe to them the precise mode of exercising that discretion, which is and must be left entirely to the local authorities in each case. The guardians must, therefore, encounter the responsibilities of their position, and entrust the business of administering relief to officers, who shall possess sufficient discrimination to distinguish those whose urgent destitution gives them a claim to relief, from those who throw themselves habitually on public charity because it is extended to all who choose to ask it. It is equally the duty of those officers to relieve the destitute and to repel the imposter; and it would appear to require no more than ordinary intelligence and care to avoid erring seriously in either direction. The Poor Law Board cannot by general rules supply the place of that discrimination which will in every individual case be required from those who have to administer relief. But they think that, without prescribing any strict rules to be followed in every case, they can make their general experience serviceable by offering some suggestions as to the principles on which relief should be administered to the wandering.

There is obviously a wide distinction between those who are temporarily and unavoidably in distress and the habitual tramp or vagrant who simulates destitution; and one of the worst results of the present indiscriminating treatment of all who are commonly denominated "casuals" is, that some of the most fitting objects of public charity are subjected to the discomforts that were intended to repel the worthless. Among all the unfortunate there are none whose destitution is more unquestionable, and whose hard lot presents stronger claims to sympathy than the widow and orphan, deprived, at a distance from home, of their natural supporter, and the honest artisan or labourer who is seeking the employment of which accidental circumstances have suddenly deprived him. Yet, under the present system, such persons as these either share the discomforts, the filth, the turbulence, and the demoralising fellowship of the thief, the mendicant and the prostitute, who crowd the vagrant wards of the workhouses, or are compelled to brave the inclemency of the weather and the pains of hunger by reason of their unconquerable aversion to such companionship.

It would not appear to be difficult to establish a system by which this deserving class of persons might be furnished with such evidence of their character and circumstances as might afford a fair presumption of the truth of their plea of destitution. A wayfarer of this class might, at the place where the cause of destitution occurs, be enabled by those who are cognisant of it, to obtain a certificate from some proper authority, setting forth his name, the cause of destitution, and the object and destination of his journey. On his presenting this certificate at any workhouse, the master, on finding that it was satisfactory, that the applicant was on the road to his destination, and that he was without money or other means, might at once admit him, and supply him with the usual accommodation of the inmates. In this way the honest but destitute wayfarer, possessed of such credentials, would obtain the advantage of being admitted into the workhouse without reference to the relieving officer, and also of receiving better accommodation than that at present afforded to him in the vagrant ward.

These certificates would doubtless be open to abuse for forgery and personation; but as they would be granted only for a particular route and a necessarily limited period, the facilities for such abuse would be less than those which existed under a somewhat similar system in former times; and, with the agency of the present improved class of Poor Law officers, additional precautions might readily be devised. At any rate this mode, however defective, would supply far better securities against imposture than the present system of indiscriminate relief.

With such means of distinguishing the class of wayfarers, who would be furnished with presumptive evidence of the truth of their plea of destitution, the Board are of opinion that a different course should be pursued with the other kinds of vagrants. It would be advisable that the masters of workhouses should be directed by the guardians to refuse admission to persons not having such certificate, without an order from the relieving officer or overseer. Of course an exception must also be made in the case of persons labouring under sickness or extreme feebleness from want of food. In such cases, where it might appear that any delay would be attended with serious consequences to life or health, the necessary relief when sought at the workhouse should be at once afforded therein. But with these exceptions all applicants should be referred to the relieving officer, who should inquire and decide as to the necessity of relief, as well in the instance of vagrants as of other poor, and grant or refuse it according to the necessity of each case.

With respect to the applicants that will thus come before him, the relieving officer will have to exercise his judgment as to the truth of their assertions of destitution, and to ascertain, by searching them, whether they possess any means of supplying their own necessities. He will not be likely to err in judging from their appearance whether they are suffering from want of food. He will take care that women and children, the old and infirm, and those who, without absolutely serious disease, present an enfeebled or sickly appearance, are supplied with necessary food and shelter. As a general rule, he would be right in refusing relief to able-bodied and healthy men; though in inclement weather he might afford them

Appendix
III.

Appendix
III.

shelter, if really destitute of the means of procuring it for themselves. His duties would necessarily make him acquainted with the persons of the habitual vagrants, and to these it would be his duty to refuse relief, except in case of evident and urgent necessity.

A plan, which has been adopted with success in some towns in different parts of England, is that of employing a trustworthy officer of the local police as assistant relieving officer for vagrants. As the habitual vagrant has generally rendered himself amenable to the law by criminal acts, he dreads being confronted with the police; and the effect of this arrangement, where it has been adopted, is said to have produced the speedy disappearance of the greater proportion of the usual applicants. In all cases it has greatly diminished the number of vagrants applying for relief; and the presence of an authority capable of enforcing order has checked their usual insolence and turbulence. If Parliament should sanction the provisions contained in a Bill now before it, whereby the relief of vagrants is made an union charge, one of the great practical difficulties that have stood in the way of a general adoption of such an arrangement would be removed. Wherever there exists an efficient county or borough police, the Board would be glad to sanction such an arrangement, as well as to authorise the reception of vagrants in a building altogether apart from the workhouse.

Such are the general suggestions which the Board have to offer for the consideration of the Guardians, and by the adoption of which they hope that the evil now so loudly complained of may be greatly mitigated. It is very desirable that on a subject which may be said to have rather a general than a local bearing, there should be a certain uniformity of action throughout England. At the same time the Board will be happy to co-operate in any sound and practicable plan for attaining the same object, which may be deemed by those who have to administer the law to be best suited to their particular localities.

The Board cannot close this minute without again impressing on boards of guardians the absolute necessity of discriminating by inquiry and investigation between real and simulated destitution. This is no principle of partial applicability or incomplete obligation. It is the undoubted principle of the law, which equally requires the grant of relief to the destitute, and prohibits the misapplication of the public fund to those who are not destitute.

It was found necessary by the late Poor Law Commissioners at one time to remind the various unions and their officers of the responsibility which would be incurred by refusing relief where it was required. The present state of things renders it necessary that this Board should now impress on them the grievous mischiefs that must arise, and the responsibilities that may be incurred, by a too ready distribution of relief to tramps and vagrants not entitled to it. Boards of guardians and their officers may, in their attempts to restore a more wise and just system, be subjected to some obloquy from prejudices that confound poverty with profligacy; they will, however, be supported by the consciousness of discharging their duty to those whose funds they have to administer, as well as to the deserving poor, and of resisting the extension of a most pernicious and formidable abuse. They may confidently reckon on the support of a public opinion, which the present state of things has aroused and enlightened; and those who are responsible to the Poor Law Board may feel assured that, while no instance of neglect or harshness to the poor will be tolerated, they may look to the Board for a candid construction of their acts and motives, and for a hearty and steadfast support of those who shall exert themselves to guard from the grasp of imposture that fund which should be sacred to the necessities of the poor.

CHARLES BULLER,
President.

Geo. NICHOLLS,
Secretary.

APPENDIX IV.

CIRCULAR LETTER ISSUED BY THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD ON 25TH FEBRUARY, 1896.

Local Government Board,
Whitehall, S.W.,
25th February, 1896.

SIR,—The attention of the Local Government Board has been directed for some time past to the large increase in the number of applicants for admission to the casual wards throughout the country. That the matter is one deserving of serious consideration is shown by the fact that whilst the mean number of vagrants relieved on the 1st of January and 1st of July in the parochial year 1884–5 was 4,483, the mean number in the year 1894–5 had risen to 8,539.

From information received by the Board from their inspectors and otherwise, there appeared to be reason for considering that this increase was to a considerable extent not unconnected with a failure on the part of boards of guardians to enforce the provisions of "The Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation Act, 1871," as amended by the "Casual Poor Act, 1882," and of the Regulations of the Board.

The Board therefore applied to the several boards of guardians for specific information as to the extent to which they had exercised the powers conferred upon them and had carried out the regulations which had been prescribed. The replies received showed that in a large proportion of the unions requirements of the regulations had been more or less disregarded.

There are 648 unions and parishes in England and Wales to which the Acts and the regulations apply, and in 635 casual wards are available; but the returns showed that in only 305 of these were the guardians exercising their powers of detaining casual paupers for more than one night. In some counties this power appeared to be entirely, or almost entirely, ignored; e.g., in Cumberland, with nine unions, this was done in one only; in Dorset, with twelve unions, in one only; in Leicester, with eleven unions, in three only; in Nottingham, with eight unions, in two only, and then only "if room"; in Somerset, with seventeen unions, in four only; in Stafford, with sixteen unions, in five only "if room"; in Westmorland and the East Riding of Yorkshire and in Anglesey, Cardigan, Carmarthen, and Glamorgan, not at all.

In other respects and in many instances the prescribed regulations had been entirely disregarded or had been only partially complied with, whilst the divergence of practice throughout the country and often in neighbouring unions was very marked.

Many representations have been made to the Board as to the desirability of increasing the powers of guardians as regards the detention of vagrants and of dealing with them in other ways, but the Board are of opinion that as the first step, boards of guardians throughout the country should avail themselves of the powers they already possess, and endeavour in concert with the guardians of neighbouring unions, to ensure greater uniformity of practice in dealing with this class of applicants for relief.

The existing regulations have been framed with a view of ensuring from the vagrants such a return, by work, for the relief afforded to them by the guardians that they will understand that their lot whilst so relieved will be in no wise better as regards labour than that of the industrious working man, although no penal consequences ensue from an application for relief. But it is manifest that this intention is frustrated when from more than half the casual wards in the country vagrants are discharged the first morning after their admission, generally without any adequate task of work being required from them.

As regards the detention of casual paupers the regulations of the 18th December, 1882, provide that a casual pauper shall not be allowed to discharge himself from a casual ward before nine o'clock in the morning of the second day following his admission, nor before he has performed the prescribed work; and where a casual pauper has been admitted on more than one occasion during one month into any casual ward of the same union, he shall not be allowed to discharge himself before nine o'clock in the morning of the fourth day after his admission.

In computing the number of days during which a casual pauper may be detained, Sunday is not to be included, and with respect to the Metropolis, in determining the number of admissions of a casual pauper, every casual ward in the Metropolis is to be deemed to be a casual ward of the same union.

These provisions are however subject to the following exceptions:—

1. The guardians may give any directions to the master of the workhouse, or to the superintendent of the casual ward, with respect to the discharge of any class or classes of casual paupers before the expiration of the respective periods specified, and such directions shall be followed by the master or superintendent.

2. If, in the opinion of the master of the workhouse or the superintendent of the casual ward, any special circumstances require that a casual pauper shall be discharged before the expiration of either of the periods mentioned, he may discharge such pauper accordingly, and shall report the facts of the case to the guardians at their next meeting.

By a further Order dated the 11th of June, 1892, provision has been made for the discharge of any casual pauper at half-past five o'clock in the morning between Lady Day and Michaelmas and half-past six o'clock in the morning between Michaelmas and Lady Day, when such person has been detained for more than one night and represents to the master of the workhouse or superintendent of the casual ward that he is desirous of seeking work, provided that he has to the best of his ability performed the task of work prescribed.

It has often been urged that the casual ward accommodation at the disposal of the guardians is not sufficient to enable them to keep vagrants for more than one night, having regard to the numbers that seek admission. If, however, there were a due sense of reciprocity of interests in dealing with vagrants, this contention would, to a considerable extent, fail, because, in the case of an habitual vagrant, it may usually be assumed that if he is not sleeping in one workhouse he is doing so in another, and therefore if all guardians detained vagrants of this class, the extra strain on the accommodation which is anticipated would not, under ordinary circumstances, arise. But apart from this, it has been proved again and again that strict administration immediately produces a marked reduction in the number of applicants for admission.

In connection with this point it is important to consider the character of the provision made for the accommodation of vagrants. At some workhouses the cellular system only is adopted; at others, the cellular system in connection with associated wards; and at others, associated wards only. In about half the workhouses in the country, neither the cellular system nor any modification of it is carried out.

The Board recognise the fact that, when adequate associated wards have been provided in a rural union, it may be unreasonable to expect the guardians to incur the expense of building new wards on the cellular system. At the same time the Board have a strong opinion as to the advantages of this system. Whilst the separation for which it provides makes relief in the casual ward more distasteful to the habitual vagrant, it is appreciated

Appendix
IV.

Appendix
IV.

by the bona fide working man, as it saves him from association with the class who ordinarily have recourse to a casual ward, and the relief thus given is more consistent with his self-respect.

In many unions there are both separate compartments and associated wards, the intention being that the latter should only be used by vagrants detained for more than two nights, or on occasions when their use is rendered necessary by the admission of an exceptional number of persons. But it is found that, in some cases, the vagrants have been placed in the associated ward, whilst the separate compartments have been left unoccupied. Very clear instructions should be given by the guardians to the responsible officer that such a practice should be discontinued.

It is unnecessary for the Board to refer in detail to other regulations as to the relief of casual paupers, such as those with regard to searching on admission, bathing, the provision of garments for the night, the drying and disinfection, when necessary, of the clothes of the persons admitted, the task of work, and the dietary. The Board must, however, impress on the guardians the importance of a due compliance with those regulations.

The Board are clearly of opinion that, whilst all due consideration should be given to those who are bona fide travelling in search of work, and who unfortunately are obliged to apply for relief in the casual ward, the arrangements should not be such as to encourage the habitual vagrant to have recourse to the guardians for relief, instead of endeavouring by work to maintain himself.

Where there has been agreement in different parts of the country that neighbouring unions over a given area shall stringently enforce the regulations, a large reduction in the number of vagrants in the district has ensued; and the Board believe that a similar result might be obtained in the country generally if the provisions of the regulations were enforced.

The Board must, therefore, urge on boards of guardians that they should, with this view, duly exercise the powers already vested in them, and the Board trust that they may rely on their co-operation in this matter.

If it should hereafter be found that the existing law, when duly enforced by boards of guardians generally throughout the country, is insufficient to meet the evil, the Board will be quite ready to consider what further action should be taken with a view to dealing with the question either by legislation or otherwise.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

HUGH OWEN,

Secretary.

The Clerk to the Guardians.

APPENDIX V.

Appendix V.

STATISTICS OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Memorandum and Tables received from the Local Government Board.

CONTENTS OF MEMORANDUM.

A.—NUMBERS RELIEVED.	PAGE
1. Casual paupers, 1880–1905:—
i. England and Wales	20
ii. London	21
2. Casual paupers in 1904 and 1905	21
3. Distribution of casual paupers	22
Comparative extent in union-counties in relation to:—
i. (a) Population and general pauperism	23
(b) Area	23
ii. Noticeable increases during period 1897–1905	24
iii. Highest and lowest numbers relieved in 1904	25
iv. Casual paupers in groups of unions	26
4. Number of men, women and children	26
5. Ages of casual paupers	26
6. Army reservists, discharged soldiers and militia men as casual paupers	28
B.—COST OF RELIEF TO CASUAL PAUPERS	28

TABLES AND MAP APPENDED TO THE MEMORANDUM.

(1) Number of Casual Paupers in groups of Unions in 1904	29
(2) Cost of in-maintenance and outdoor relief of casual paupers in each union-county in England and Wales during the half year ended Ladyday, 1905	32
Sketch Map of England and Wales, showing the Poor Law Unions in which, on a majority of the Friday nights during 1904, there were fifteen or more casual paupers relieved	to face 29

STATISTICS OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

A.—NUMBER OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

Statistics of the number of casual paupers have for a considerable number of years been obtained on two days in the year, the 1st January and 1st July, simultaneously with the general census of pauperism.

It should be remarked that the figures quoted throughout this memorandum include, in addition to casual paupers who were relieved in the casual wards of work-houses, a few who received out-relief, in the shape of food or of a night's lodging, for the most part on account of want of room in the wards; but the number of such cases is quite small; on the 1st January, 1905, the total was 293.

Casual
paupers in England and Wales, 1880-
1905.

The following table gives the figures for the 1st January and 1st July in each year since 1880. The figures are ranged in groups in order to indicate approximately the rise and fall in successive periods.

CASUAL PAUPERS RELIEVED IN ENGLAND AND WALES ON 1ST JANUARY AND 1ST JULY FROM 1880 TO 1905.

Year.	1st January.		1st July.		Percentage of numbers relieved on the night of 1st January to number on the night of 1st January, 1904. 5.
	Numbers relieved on the night*.	Numbers relieved at any time on the day.	Numbers relieved on the night*.	Numbers relieved at any time on the day.
	1.	2.	3.	4.
1880		5,914		7,742	69·4
1881		6,215		6,461	73·0
1882		5,767		5,028	67·7
1883		4,552		3,294	53·4
1884		4,899		4,100	57·5
1885		4,866		4,648	57·1
1886		5,540		4,640	65·0
1887		5,026		4,686	59·0
1888		5,844		5,949	68·6
1889		7 058		4,157	82·9
1890		5,701			66·9
1891	4,960*	5,552	5,089*	5,552	58·2
1892	6,319*	6,988	5,452*	6,008	74·2
1893	5,947*	7,139	5,853*	6,636	69·8
1894	8,304*	9,480	7,556*	8,391	97·5
1895	8,810*	10,162	5,865*	6,916	103·4
1896	7,859	13,239	—	8,029	92·3
1897	7,859	13,239	6,668	10,797	81·3
1898	6,922	12,312	5,192	9,028	90·3
1899	7,886	13,563	5,338	9,357	88·0
1900	7,499	13,366	5,361	8,959	65·5
1901	5,579	9,841	4,170	7,779	79·8
1902	6,795	11,658	5,455	8,407	92·0
1903	7,840	13,178	6,609	10,717	97·0
1904	8,266	14,475	5,121	8,634	100·0
1905	8,519	15,634	6,748	10,843	114·7
1905	9,768	17,254	8,556	14,920

* Prior to the 1st January, 1896, the numbers of casual paupers relieved during the day and on the night respectively were not required to be distinguished in the ordinary Returns of pauperism. The numbers shown in columns 1 and 3 for the years from 1st July, 1890, to 1st January, 1895, are taken from a special Parliamentary Return, No. 432, Session 2, 1895. From comparison of the results obtained by this Return with those quoted in columns 2 and 4, for the five years, it seems probable that the numbers shown in the ordinary Returns for the years prior to 1896 represented in the case of many unions a night count only, the numbers in columns 2 and 4 for those years being only about 10 per cent. higher than the numbers in columns 1 and 3, whereas for later years the corresponding percentage is over 50.

Neither of the two sets of numbers quoted for each date for 1890 and subsequent years quite accurately represents the number of individuals who received relief as casual paupers on the particular day. The figures in columns 2 and 4 no doubt include twice some casual paupers who, after their discharge from the wards of one union in the morning, entered the wards of another union in the evening. On the other hand, in many cases a casual pauper discharged from the casual wards in the morning may sleep in a common lodging-house or elsewhere at night, and is therefore not included in the figures in columns 1 and 3. The figures are sufficient to show that in the course of the past twenty-six years there has been an appreciable rise in the number of casual paupers, though there have been wide fluctuations. The numbers in 1905 were higher than in any previous year. Appendix V.

Although for England and Wales the only statistics of Casual the number of casual paupers relating to a series of years paupers in available are those for two days in each year, viz., 1st Janu- London, ary and 1st July, in the case of London weekly returns 1880-1905. have for many years been obtained of the numbers of casual paupers relieved on one night.

The following table shows for each of the years since 1880, the average number of casual paupers relieved in London on the Friday nights during those years.

Average Number of Casual Paupers relieved in London on Friday nights during the Years 1880 to 1904 and the Percentage of such number to the Average for 1904.

Year.	Number.	Percentage.	Year.	Number.	Percentage.
1880	795	70.1	1893	957	84.4
1881	802	70.7	1894	1,086	95.8
1882	814	71.8	1895	1,129	99.6
1883	482	42.5	1896	1,063	93.7
1884	510	45.0	1897	1,045	92.1
1885	580	51.1	1898	1,064	93.8
1886	578	51.0	1899	1,009	89.0
1887	738	65.1	1900	916	80.8
1888	1,136	100.2	1901	969	85.4
1889	960	84.7	1902	985	86.9
1890	858	75.7	1903	1,089	96.1
1891	842	74.2	1904	1,134	100.0
1892	919	81.0

It will be seen that the number of casual paupers in London during the period covered by the table showed a perceptible rise, although the average number relieved in 1904 was about the same as that for 1888 and not much in excess of the averages for the years 1894-1899. The numbers relieved in 1905 were generally about the same as those relieved in 1904.

With the view of obtaining a wider range of figures than that afforded by the two half-yearly Returns of the 1st January and 1st July, a Return has been required weekly of the numbers of casual paupers relieved on each Friday night in 1904 and 1905. The highest number of casual paupers reached in 1904 was on the 11th December, when 12,797 casual paupers were returned, although the numbers fell but slightly short of this figure on the 26th August (12,713) and on the 7th October (12,698). The lowest point was touched in the second week of July with a total of 6,610.

In the first six months of 1905 the highest number returned was 13,552 on the 28th April and in the later months 13,486 and 13,124 on the last two Friday nights in August. The lowest number relieved was 7,274 on 14th July. The periods of high numbers of casual paupers appear to be generally from February to May, and again from August to December.

The following half-monthly averages have been calculated from the numbers of casual paupers returned as relieved on the night of each Friday in 1904, and to the end of November, 1905.

Month.	Half-monthly averages of casual paupers relieved on single nights and the percentages of such numbers to the number of casual paupers relieved on the night of 1st January, 1904 (8,519).
	1904.		1905.
	Half-monthly averages.	Percentages.	Half-monthly averages.	Percentages.
January - - - -	9,745	114.4	11,953	140.3
	10,295	120.8	11,649	136.7
February - - - -	11,166	131.1	11,911	139.8
	11,016	129.3	11,907	139.8
March - - - -	10,555	123.9	12,855	150.9
	10,513	123.4	13,421	157.5
April - - - -	11,040	129.6	13,269	155.8
	11,427	134.1	13,103	153.8
May - - - -	11,076	130.0	12,935	151.8
	11,414	134.0	12,017	141.1
June - - - -	10,777	126.5	12,288	144.2
	9,362	109.9	9,970	117.0
July - - - -	6,679	78.4	8,341	97.9
	9,824	115.3	8,604	101.0
August - - - -	11,597	136.1	12,080	141.8
	12,653	148.5	13,305	156.2
September - - - -	11,076	130.0	10,695	125.5
	11,807	138.6	10,948	128.5
October - - - -	12,561	147.4	12,343	144.9
	11,768	138.1	12,431	145.9
November - - - -	12,387	145.4	12,825	150.5
	12,161	142.8	12,811	150.4
December - - - -	10,941	128.4	—	—
	10,691	125.5	—	—

Casual paupers in first six months, 1882-1884, 1904, and 1905.

The only figures at all comparable with the above which exist for any previous years are those quoted in two Returns* obtained in 1883 and 1884, which show the number of casual paupers who were relieved on the nights of the first Wednesday in each of the first six months of 1882, 1883, and 1884.

The general results of these Returns, together with figures for the corresponding dates in 1904 and the present year may be shown as follows :—

CASUAL PAUPERS IN FIRST SIX MONTHS 1882-1884, 1904, AND 1905.

Year.†	Number of casual paupers relieved on the night of one day in :—
	January.	February.	March.	April.	May.	June.
1882	6,428	6,767	7,331	7,126	7,198	7,393
1883	5,192	5,190	5,390	4,984	5,908	4,968
1884	4,819	5,639	5,571	5,307	6,084	6,064
1904	8,509	10,891	10,469	10,528	11,457	10,712
1905	11,812	11,631	12,242	13,022	13,516	11,886

† The figures for 1882, 1883 and 1884 relate to the first Wednesday night, and those for 1904 and 1905 to the first Friday night, in each month.

DISTRIBUTION OF CASUAL PAUPERS.

In the tables below an attempt is made to illustrate the relative distribution of the number of casual paupers in the several counties of England and Wales, and to indicate (i) the union-counties in which the number is highest in proportion to population, to general pauperism, and to the area of the county; (ii) the counties in which the most noticeable increases have occurred in the number of casual paupers since 1897 ;

* Parliamentary Papers Nos. 86 of 1884 and 24, Sess. 2 of 1884.

and (iii) the highest and lowest numbers of casual paupers relieved in each county during the year 1904. This is supplemented by (iv) an analysis of the statistics for the counties into their component union figures.

(i) The two following tables distinguish the counties in which the number of casual paupers is highest. In the first table the standard of comparison is, primarily, the proportion of casual paupers to population. At the same time, Appendix V. the results of this calculation are corroborated fairly closely by reference to a further standard, viz., the proportion to the total pauperism of the district.

In the second table the number of casual paupers is shown in relation to the area of the county. The basis of comparison in these tables is the night count for the 1st January, 1905.

Comparative numbers of casual paupers in Union-Counties.

(a) Union-Counties* in which the number of Casual Paupers was higher than the average in proportion to population and total pauperism in England and Wales.

Union-Counties.	Casual paupers relieved on the night of 1st Jan., 1905.			Union-Counties.	Casual paupers relieved on the night of 1st Jan., 1905.
	Number.	Rate per 10,000 of population.	Rate per 1,000 of total pauperism.		Number.	Rate per 10,000 of population.	Rate per 1,000 of total pauperism.
Westmorland - -	83	13·0	59·8	Leicester - - -	241	5·2	15·8
Rutland - - -	25	12·3	39·7	Sussex - - -	306	4·9	16·8
Radnor - - -	18	8·4	31·8	Kent - - -	428	4·4	16·4
Brecknock - - -	45	8·3	28·8	Huntingdon - -	19	4·2	13·8
Oxford - - -	152	8·2	22·3	Derby - - -	201	3·9	15·8
Salop - - -	211	8·1	31·6	Warwick - - -	372	3·9	17·8
Berks - - -	221	7·6	29·4	Surrey - - -	292	3·8	17·4
Hereford - - -	82	7·3	17·7	Carmarthen - -	47	3·7	12·6
Cardigan - - -	58	7·1	22·3	Cambridge - -	72	3·6	10·6
Wilts - - -	180	6·7	19·1	Northampton -	128	3·5	10·0
Dorset - - -	117	5·8	14·1	Somerset - - -	158	3·4	10·5
Denbigh - - -	72	5·5	17·4	Bedford - - -	59	3·3	10·1
Worcester - - -	285	5·4	19·5	Montgomery - -	21	3·3	9·9
Buckingham - -	94	5·3	14·5	Southampton -	254	3·2	10·7
Gloucester - - -	352	5·3	16·6	Chester - - -	241	3·0	13·5
Cumberland - -	139	5·2	21·2	Monmouth - - -	100	3·0	9·3

(b) Union-Counties* in which the number of Casual Paupers, in relation to area, was equal to or higher than the average number in England and Wales (1·7 per 10 square miles).

Union-Counties.	Average Number of Casual Paupers relieved on night of 1st January, 1905, per 10 square miles.	Estimated Population (1904) per 10 square miles.†	Union-Counties.	Average Number of Casual Paupers relieved on night of 1st January, 1905, per 10 square miles.	Estimated Population (1904) per 10 square miles.†
London - - -	86·1	397,346	Leicester - - -	2·8	5,377
Lancaster - - -	6·3	22,673	Berks - - -	2·5	3,233
Middlesex - - -	6·1	32,063	Chester - - -	2·5	8,426
Worcester - - -	4·1	7,625	Derby - - -	2·3	5,828
Surrey - - -	4·0	10,595	Sussex - - -	2·1	4,262
Warwick - - -	3·8	9,631	Oxford - - -	2·0	2,424
Gloucester - - -	3·2	5,976	Glamorgan - - -	1·9	10,269
Stafford - - -	3·0	10,804	York, West Riding - -	1·7	10,510
Kent - - -	2·8	6,466

* Each Union-County corresponds with the registration county, as given in the quarterly returns prepared by the Registrar General, and contains a group of entire Poor Law unions. The unions are in many cases situate in more than one geographical or administrative county, and therefore the Union-Counties and the geographical or administrative counties are for the most part not co-extensive.

† The estimated population (1904) of England and Wales per 10 square miles is 5,789.

Appendix V.

Casual paupers on 1st January and 1st July,
1897-1905.

(ii) The following table shows the number of casual paupers relieved on the nights of the 1st January and 1st July, 1905, for the 17 union-counties having over 100 casual paupers on the 1st January, 1905, in which the number of casuals relieved has shown the highest increase in relation to the average of the 8 years 1897 to 1904. The counties are given in the order of their respective increases.

The period chosen will, on comparison with the totals for the same years before quoted, be seen to cover two periods of high numbers of casual paupers and one of lower numbers. The averages calculated on this basis are therefore rather higher than are absolutely correct. It should be further noted that the figures for 1st July, 1905, show, for all counties in England and Wales except four, viz., Rutland, York (North Riding), Flint, and Anglesey, a rise, in many cases very marked, over the average for the eight years 1897-1904.

Union-Counties (in which over 100 Casual Paupers were relieved on the night of 1st January, 1905) showing an increase per cent. in numbers on 1st January, 1905, as compared with the average for the eight years 1897-1904, equal to or higher than the increase in England and Wales (32 per cent.).

Union-Counties.	Number of Casual Paupers relieved on the nights of 1st January and July.				Increase per cent. in 1905 over average for 1897-1904.
	Average for eight years, 1897-1904.		1905.
	1st January.	1st July.	1st January.	1st July.	1st January.	1st July.
Cumberland - - -	58	71	139	174	140	145
Gloucester - - -	160	83	352	275	120	231
Dorset - - - -	55	28	117	49	113	75
Worcester - - -	142	130	285	344	101	165
Sussex - - - -	164	112	306	202	87	80
Glamorgan - - -	94	51	171	252	82	394
Berks - - - -	125	65	221	134	77	106
Northampton - -	73	45	128	91	75	102
Monmouth - - -	61	31	100	115	64	271
Leicester - - -	152	103	241	153	59	49
Salop - - - -	140	116	211	202	51	74
Middlesex - - -	112	81	169	122	51	51
Lancaster - - -	852	803	1,285	1,126	51	40
Oxford - - - -	104	63	152	115	46	83
Southampton - -	180	92	254	155	41	68
Warwick - - - -	271	174	372	232	37	33
Somerset - - - -	120	58	158	94	32	62
England and Wales -	7,413	5,499	9,768	8,556	32	55

The averages for London for the eight years 1897-1904 are 935 (January) and 697 (July), whilst the numbers relieved on the 1st January and 1st July, 1905, were 1,007 and 858 respectively, representing increases of 8 per cent. (January) and 23 per cent. (July).

(iii) The following table is added for the purpose of showing the highest and lowest number of casual paupers relieved in each county during the year 1904. Owing to the great fluctuations in the numbers from week to week, it has been considered preferable to take the monthly average rather than the numbers in the several weeks.

Casual paupers. Highest and lowest points touched in 1904.

Casual Paupers relieved on Friday nights in the Year 1904.

Divisions and Union-Counties.	Average for the year	Monthly Average.		Divisions and Union-Counties.	Average for the year	Monthly Average.
		Months in which the Average was				Months in which the Average was
		Highest.	Lowest.			Highest.	Lowest.
I. LONDON.				VII. NORTH-MIDLAND.
1. London - -	1,134	{ 1,245-Feb. } { 1,238-Oct. }	904-July	29. Leicester - -	242	303-Oct.	167-July
II. SOUTH-EASTERN.				30. Rutland - -	18	25-Oct.	10-July
2. Surrey - -	379	595-April	239-July	31. Lincoln - -	107	148-Sept.	75-July
3. Kent - -	559	1,087-Aug.	389-Sept.	32. Nottingham -	164	217-Sept.	118-July
4. Sussex - -	241	312-May	185-{ Jan. } { July }	33. Derby - -	229	276-Nov.	174-July
5. Southampton -	237	301-Oct.	161-July	VIII. NORTH-WESTERN.
6. Berks - -	197	244-Nov.	123-July	34. Chester - -	351	434-June	286-Jan.
III. SOUTH-MIDLAND.				35. Lancaster - -	1,444	1,668-Nov.	1,185-July
7. Middlesex - -	205	308-Feb.	113-July	IX. YORK.
8. Hertford - -	114	159-Oct.	{ 81-July } { 83-Jan. }	36. West Riding -	690	1,059-Sept.	511-July
9. Buckingham -	102	131-Nov.	57-July	37. East Riding -	82	117-Aug.	49-Mar.
10. Oxford - -	140	202-Nov.	81-July	38. North Riding -	120	{ 147-May } { 145-Aug. }	97-{ Jan. } { Dec }
11. Northampton -	148	204-Nov.	96-July	X. NORTHERN.
12. Huntingdon -	21	29-Oct.	10-July	39. Durham - -	279	330-Nov.	226-July
13. Bedford - -	65	87-Oct.	{ 43-July } { 45-Jan. }	40. Northumberland -	187	{ 220-April } { 219-May }	{ 158-July } { 160-Dec. }
14. Cambridge - -	70	91-Oct.	53-Jan.	41. Cumberland -	128	163-Nov.	94-Jan.
IV. EASTERN.				42. Westmorland -	106	{ 122-Nov. } { 120-April }	90 { Sept. } { July }
15. Essex - -	140	216-June	89-Jan.	XI. WELSH
16. Suffolk - -	77	93-Nov.	46-July	43. Monmouth - -	107	155-Nov.	66 { June } { July }
17. Norfolk - -	76	105-Nov.	43-July	44. South Wales.
V. SOUTH-WESTERN.				Glamorgan - -	137	173-Jan.	109-July
18. Wilts - -	139	206-Nov.	81-July	Carmarthen - -	60	75-Nov.	39-July
19. Dorset - -	80	121-Nov.	{ 43-July } { 45-June }	Pembroke - -	19	{ 23-Sept. } { 22-Oct. } Nov.	11-Jan.
20. Devon - -	127	206-Dec.	71-July	Cardigan - -	45	63-Feb.	22-July
21. Cornwall - -	18	30-Dec.	13-July	Brecknock - -	42	65-May	20-July
22. Somerset - -	146	218-Nov.	91-July	Radnor - -	18	28-Mar.	8-July
VI. WEST-MIDLAND.				45. North Wales.
23. Gloucester - -	251	320-Nov.	157-July	Montgomery -	56	74-April	19-July
24. Hereford - -	128	240-Aug.	79-July	Flint - -	16	{ 27-Nov. } { 26-Oct. }	7-Jan.
25. Salop - -	243	366-Aug.	161-Jan.	Denbigh - -	67	81-Nov.	{ 48-July } { 50-Dec. }
26. Stafford - -	478	{ 529-Nov. } { 522-Apl. }	360-July	Merioneth - -	28	41-Nov.	15-July
27. Worcester - -	292	478-Aug.	228-Jan.	Carnarvon - -	36	{ 52-Nov. } { 51-Sept. }	22-Jan.
28. Warwick - -	398	490-Nov.	274-July	Anglesey - -	1	4-Mar.	0 { Jan. } { July }

Appendix V.
Casual paupers in groups of unions.

The unions in England and Wales may be grouped according to the number of casual paupers relieved in them as :—
Group (a): Unions (77) having 35 or more casual paupers in a majority of weeks during the year 1904.
Group (b): Unions (63) having less than 35, but more than 25 casual paupers.
Group (c): Unions (106) having less than 25, but more than 15 casual paupers.
Group (d): Unions (399) having less than 15 casual paupers.
On the accompanying map the unions included in the first three groups are distinguished. A list of these unions is appended (see page 29). It will be noticed that the unions with the higher numbers of casual paupers are for the most part those with large urban or industrial populations, or unions in the neighbourhood of such areas. Unions with a high number of casual paupers, but not conforming to this description, e.g., in Berks and Oxford, will be seen from the map to be those lying on the routes between the principal centres of industry.
The following figures give all the available information as to the distribution of casual paupers relieved, between men, women, and children. Statistics of men, women, and children.

Year.	Casual Paupers relieved on the nights of :
	1st January.			1st July.
	Men.	Women.	Children.	Men.	Women.	Children.
1890*	No information available.			4,105	697	255
1891*	4,204	553	164	4,384	758	281
1892*	5,253	748	306	4,669	823	344
1893*	5,096	662	182	6,220	887	411
1894*	7,045	918	334	4,640	903	321
1895*	7,631	879	297	—	—	300§
1896	7,546		313§	6,287		381
1897	6,626		296§	4,927		265§
1898	7,530		356§	5,087		251§
1899	No information available.
to 1903
1904	7,618	731	170	5,770	805	173
1905	8,693	887	188	7,554	813	189

* Figures taken from Parliamentary Paper No. 439, Session 2, 1895. It is stated that a few persons could not be classified.
§ Figures taken from Parliamentary Paper No. 322, 1899.

On the 1st January, 1891, men were 85 per cent. of the total, and in January, 1905, nearly 89 per cent. The proportion of women on the other hand shows a slight decline. The proportion of children to the total has varied in the years quoted in the table from nearly 2 to 5 per cent. in January; in 1905 the proportion was less than 2 per cent.
The relative numbers of the three classes vary, however, to some extent between summer and winter. Children in proportion to adult casual paupers appear to be somewhat higher in summer than in winter. Women are also proportionately rather more numerous in summer. In July, 1905, women formed 9·5 per cent. of the total as compared with 9·1 per cent. in January of the same year; in 1894, also a period with a high number of casual paupers, women were 15 per cent. in summer as compared with 11 per cent. in January.
It may be noticed that the proportion of children to the total number of casual paupers relieved is considerably lower in London than in other parts of the country.
From Returns† as to the ages of casual paupers relieved on the night of the 1st January, 1905, the following figures may be quoted.

Statistics of casual paupers.

London.	Casual paupers relieved on the night of 1st January, 1905.
	Between 16 and 35 years of age.	Between 35 and 65 years of age.	65 years of age and upwards.	Total.
Men - - - - -	148	618	34	800
Women - - - - -	14	151	31	196
Children under 16 - - - - -	—	—	—	11
Total - - - - -	162	769	65	1,007
Percentage of total number relieved -	16·1	76·4	6·4	100·0

† Published in the half-yearly Statement of pauperism for 1st January, 1905. Parliamentary Paper No. 81 of 1905.

England and Wales, including London.	Casual paupers relieved on the night of 1st January, 1905.
	Between 16 and 35 years of age.	Between 35 and 65 years of age.	65 years of age and upwards.	Total.
Men - - - - -	2,156	6,143	394	8,693
Women - - - - -	132	660	95	887
Children under 16 - - - - -	—	—	—	188
Total - - - - -	2,288	6,803	489	9,768*
Percentage of total number relieved -	23·4	69·7	5·0	100·0

* Including 293 casual paupers relieved otherwise than in workhouses and casual wards. None were thus relieved in London.

It will be seen from the above figures that more than two-thirds of the casual paupers relieved were between the ages of thirty-five and sixty-five. to one woman, and in the group aged sixty-five years and upwards there were only four men to one woman.

The proportions of men and women of the several ages vary considerably. In the age group of sixteen to thirty-five there were sixteen men to one woman, in the group between thirty-five and sixty-five there were nine men to one woman, and in the group aged sixty-five years and upwards there were only four men to one woman. As regards the numbers of casual paupers over sixty-five years of age some information was obtained in 1899 and 1900 in two Returns (Departmental) as to paupers over sixty-five years of age.

Year.	Number of casual paupers over 65 years of age.
	Men.	Women.	Total.	Percentage of the total number* of casual paupers relieved on the same night.
On night of 1st July, 1899 - - - - -	368	94	462	8·6
On night of 1st January, 1900 - - - - -	224†	59†	283	5·1
On night of 1st January, 1905 - - - - -	394	95	489	5·0

* This total includes children. Deducting an estimated number (250) of children as having been relieved on the 1st July, 1899, and 1st January, 1900, the proportion of casu- als over 65 to the number of adult paupers of this class would be 9·0 and 5·3 per cent. In 1905, after deducting the children relieved (188) the proportion was 5·1 per cent.

† Including 48 men and 19 women who were returned as 70 years of age and over.

The lower proportion of aged casual paupers in the winter as compared with the summer census is noticeable. A similar variation is observable as regards aged paupers of all classes. The proportions of the latter to the total number of adult paupers (exclusive of the insane in both cases) were 59·3 per cent. on the 1st July, 1899, and 58·0 per cent. on the 1st January, 1900. The similar proportion for the 1st January, 1905, cannot be stated, the information not having been ascertained. Some information as to the ages of casual pauper children was obtained by a Parliamentary Return in 1899 (No. 322). The following figures summarise the results:—

Age groups.	Children relieved as casual paupers on the night of :—
	1st July.				1st January.
	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1896.	1897.	1898.
Children under 2 years of age -	59	53	47	43	43	57	60
Children between 2 and 7 years -	109	151	93	98	108	99	140
Children between between 7 and 16 years.	132	175	125	105	162	138	153
Totals - - - - -	300	381*	265	251*	313	296*	356*

* Including a few children whose ages could not be given.

Appendix
V.

The proportion of each group to the total remains fairly constant. Children under two years are invariably by far the smallest group, and those over seven years the highest. Children under two years of age range from 14 to 20 per cent. of the total number of casual pauper children, those between two and seven years from 33 to 40 per cent., and those over seven years from 42 to 52 per cent.

Further particulars as to the classes of persons relieved as casual paupers are contained in two Parliamentary Returns, which were obtained in 1897 and 1898 (No. 89 of 1897 and No. 332 of 1898) relative to, inter alia, the number of casual paupers relieved on the nights of 8th May, 1896, and the 20th December, 1897, who were or represented themselves to be army reserve men, discharged soldiers, or militiamen. The following table summarises the results :—

Casual paupers relieved in Casual Wards or in receipt of Outdoor Relief. (1.)	On the night of 8th May, 1896.*			On the night of 20th December, 1897.
	Army Reservists, Discharged Soldiers, and Militiamen.		Total.	Army Reservists, Discharged Soldiers, and Militiamen.		Total.
	Men substantiating claim. (2.)	Men unable to substantiate claim. (3.)		Men substantiating claim. (5.)	Men unable to substantiate claim. (6.)
I. Men representing themselves to be Army Reserve Men, Discharged Soldiers, or Militiamen.
20 and under 30 years of age - - -	83	167	250	47	145	192
30 " " 40 " - - -	172	505	677	155	479	634
40 " " 50 " - - -	98	449	547	83	364	447
50 " " 60 " - - -	46	215	261	33	166	199
60 years and over - - - -	45	204	249	33	166	199
Total - - - - -	444	1,540	1,984	351	1,320	1,671
II. Total number of men relieved as casual paupers.	—	—	8,209	—	—	7,494
Percentage of I. to II. - - - -	5·4	18·8	24·2	4·7	17·6	22·3

* The numbers included as in receipt of Outdoor Relief relate to the night of the 3rd June, 1896.

B. Cost of Relief to Casual Paupers.

Some figures as to the expenditure on the maintenance of paupers in casual wards were first obtained in respect of the half-year ended Ladyday, 1904. The following are the totals as given in the returns, for that and later half years :—

Half year ended	In London.	Outside London.	Total.
	£	£	£
Ladyday, 1904 - - - - -	4,756	17,152	21,908
Michaelmas, 1904 - - - - -	4,116	17,495	21,611
Ladyday, 1905 - - - - -	4,859	19,367	24,226*

* In addition £838 was expended on outdoor relief to casual paupers otherwise than in workhouses or casual wards. No such relief was given in London.

The figures referred to do not in all cases represent the full cost of maintenance, i.e., the cost of the food, clothing (if any) and necessities supplied, and the cost of "warming, cleansing, and lighting and otherwise keeping the casual wards fit for daily use"; in some cases the figures furnished only covering the cost of food.

A summary containing the particulars for the latest half-year in respect of each union-county is given at page 32.

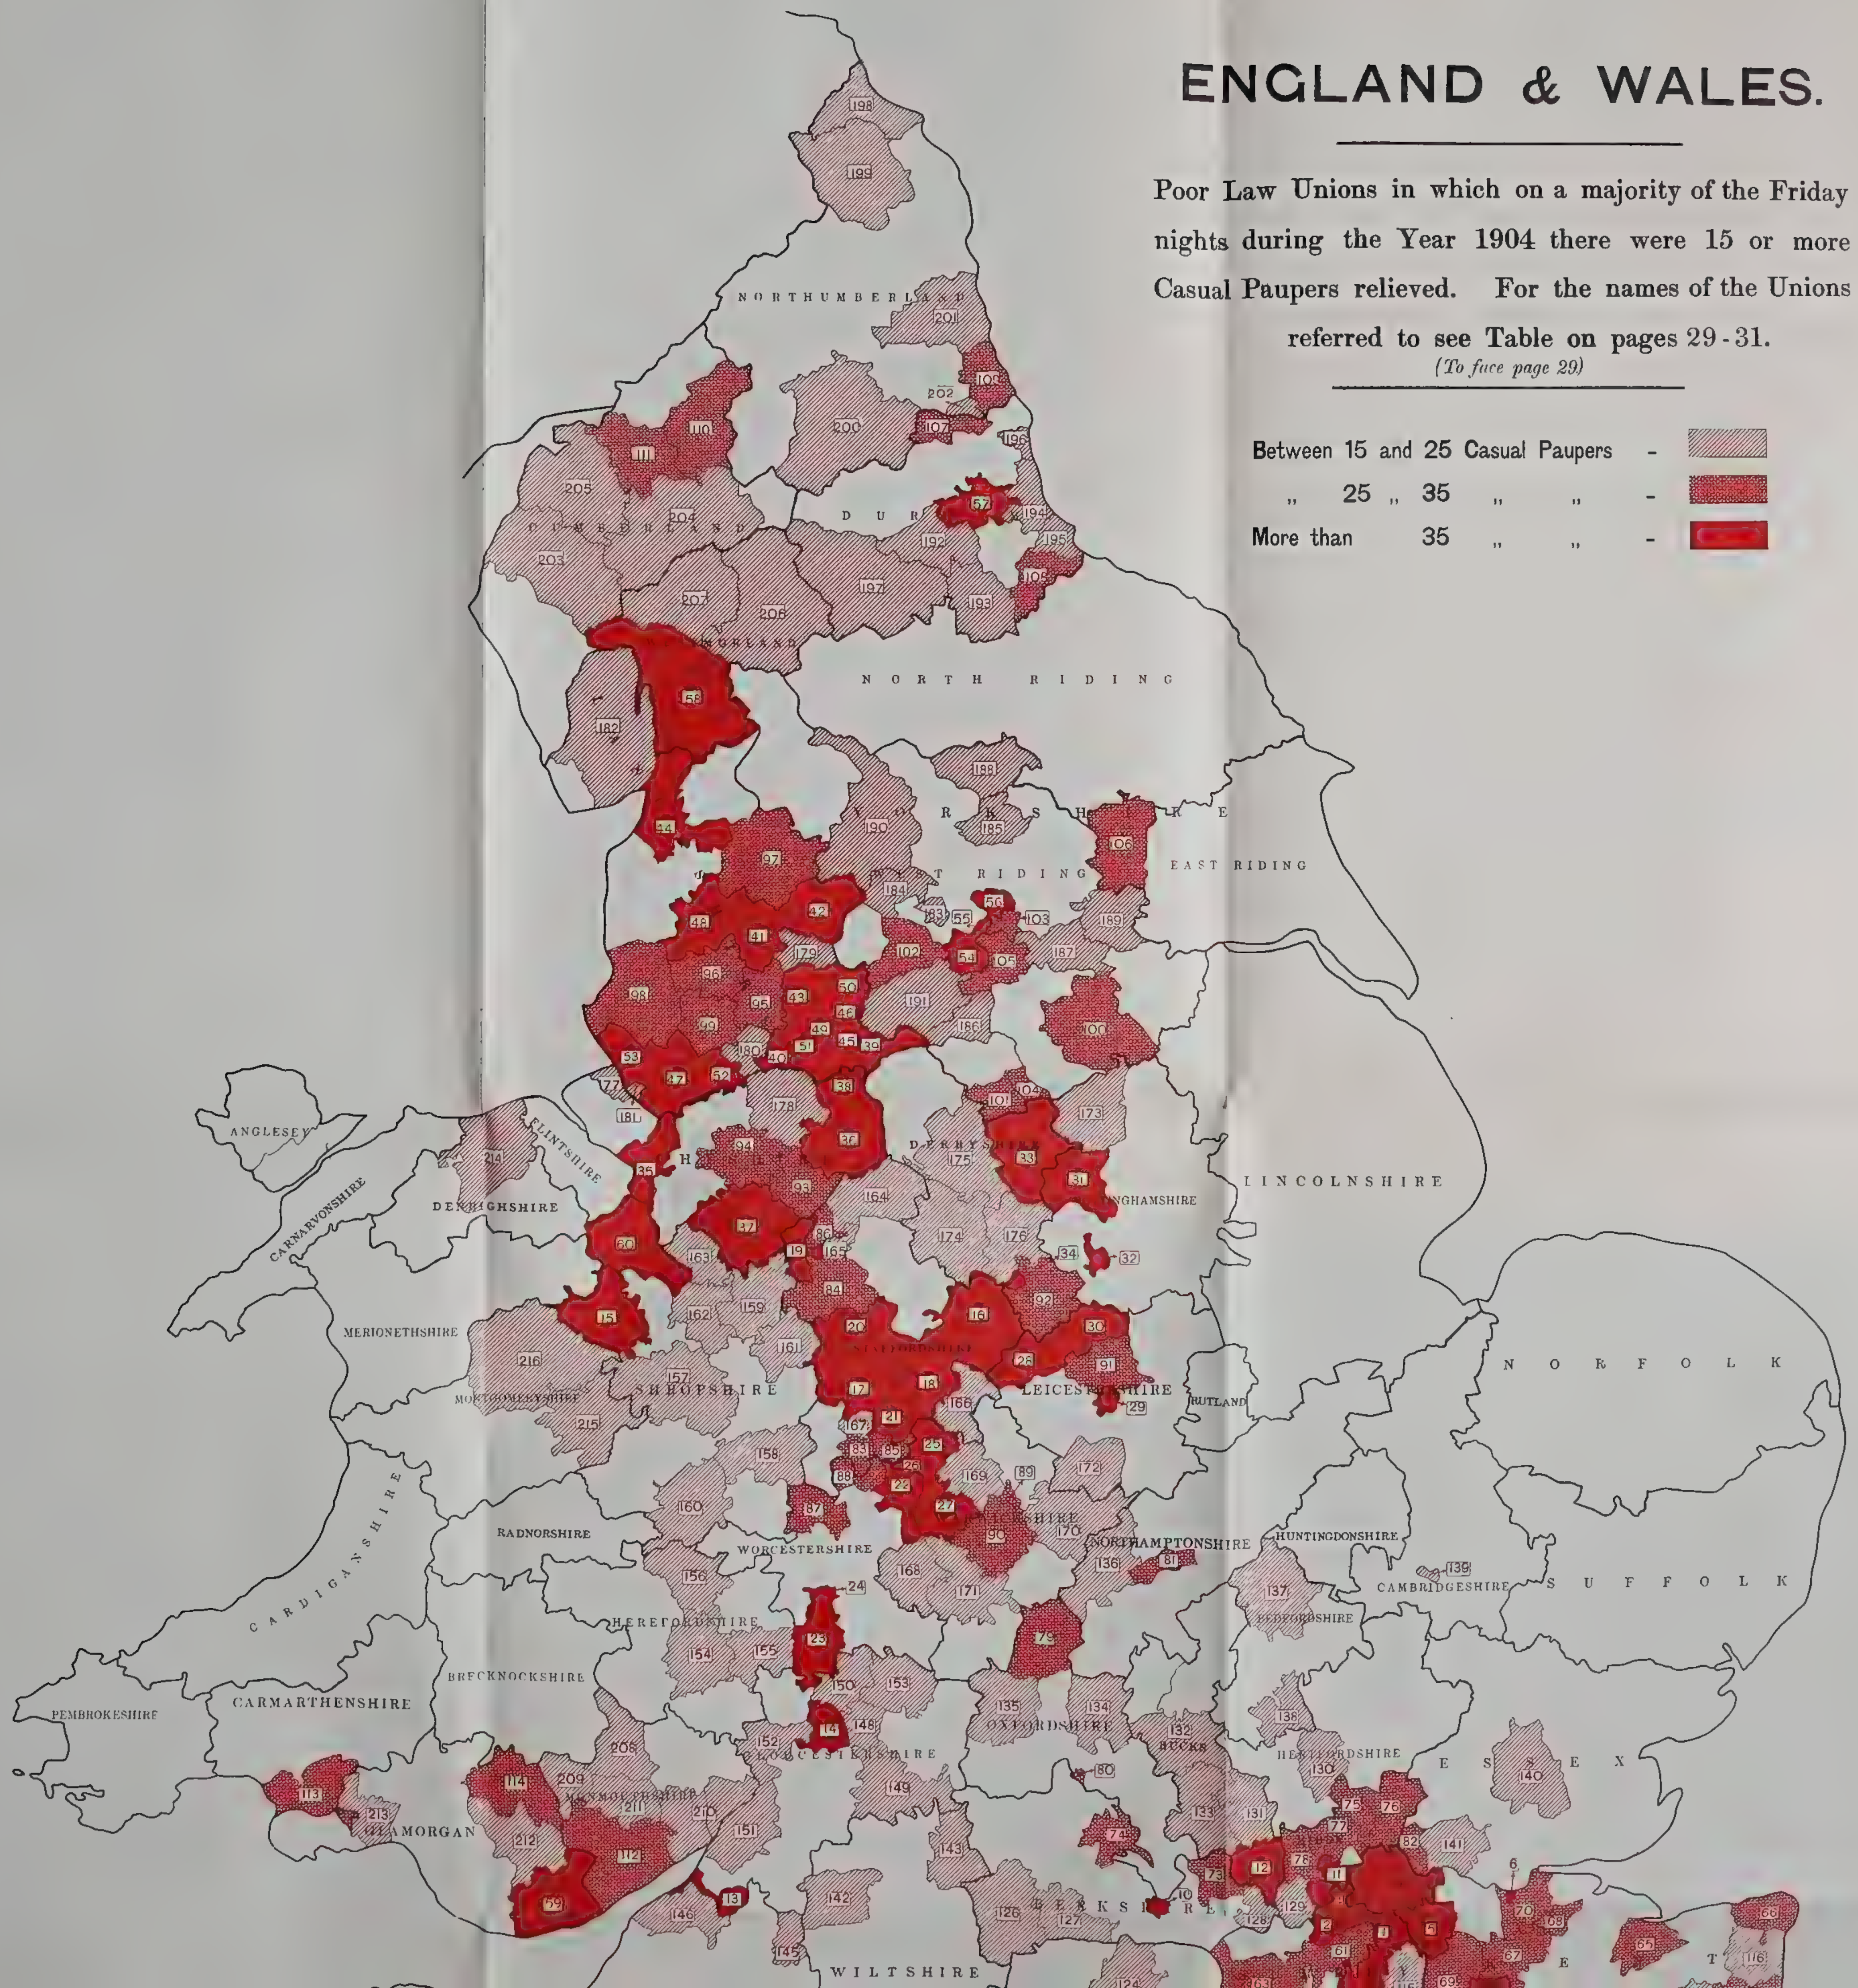

Statistical and Local Taxation Department.
Local Government Board,
November 1905.

ENGLAND & WALES.

Poor Law Unions in which on a majority of the Friday nights during the Year 1904 there were 15 or more Casual Paupers relieved. For the names of the Unions referred to see Table on pages 29-31.

(To face page 29)

Between 15 and 25 Casual Paupers	-
" 25 " 35 "	"
More than 35 "	"

Scale - 20 Miles to 1 Inch

Miles 10 5 0 10 20 30 40 50 Miles

Prepared in the Statistical Department, Local Government Board, and Heliozincographed at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton 1905

TABLE 1.

CASUAL PAUPERS IN GROUPS OF UNIONS IN 1904.

Poor Law Unions in which, on a majority of the Friday nights during the year 1904, there were 15 or more Casual Paupers relieved. (See Map.)

Appendix
V.

Division and Union-County.	A. 35 or more Casual Paupers.		B. Between 25 and 35 Casual Paupers.		C. Between 15 and 25 Casual Paupers.
	Number on Map.*	Union.	Number on Map.*	Union.	Number on Map.*	Union.
LONDON—
London - - -		Paddington Kensington St. George's St. Marylebone Hackney St. Giles and St. George, Bloomsbury Strand Holborn City of London Whitechapel St. George-in-the-East Poplar Camberwell Greenwich Woolwich		Hammersmith and Fulham Shoreditch Stepney Mile End Old Town Bermondsey Lambeth Wandsworth Lewisham		Chelsea St. Pancras Islington Southwark
SOUTH EASTERN—
Surrey - - -	1 2 3 4	Croydon Kingston Reigate Richmond	61 62 63	Epsom Farnham Guildford	115	Godstone
Kent - - -	5 6 7	Bromley Gravesend and Milton Tonbridge	64 65 66 67 68 69 70 71	Dover Faversham Isle of Thanet Malling Medway Sevenoaks Strood Hastings	116 117 118	Eastry Elham Tenterden
Sussex - - -	8	Brighton			119 120 121 122 123	Eastbourne East Grinstead East Preston Newhaven Rye
Southampton -	9	Portsmouth	72	Southampton	124 125	Basingstoke Winchester
Berks - - -	10	Reading	73 74	Maidenhead Wallingford	126 127 128	Hungerford Newbury Windsor
SOUTH MIDLAND—
Middlesex - -	11	Brentford	75 76 77 78	Barnet Edmonton Hendon Uxbridge	129	Staines
Hertford - - Buckingham -	12	Eton —		—	130 131 132 133	St. Albans Amersham Aylesbury Wycombe
Oxford - - -		—	79 80 81	Banbury Oxford Northampton	134 135 136 137 138 139	Bicester Chipping Norton Daventry Bedford Luton Cambridge
Northampton - Bedford - - Cambridge - -		— — —		— — —
EASTERN—
Essex - - -		—	82	West Ham	140 141	Chelmsford Romford

* It was not found possible to indicate the London Unions on the Map on account of the smallness of their area.

CASUAL PAUPERS IN GROUPS OF UNIONS IN 1904—cont.

Appendix

V.

Poor Law Unions in which, on a majority of the Friday nights during the year 1904, there were 15 or more Casual Paupers relieved—cont.

Division and Union-County.	A. 35 or more Casual Paupers.		B. Between 25 and 35 Casual Paupers.		C. Between 15 and 25 Casual Paupers.
	Number on Map.	Union.	Number on Map.	Union.	Number on Map.	Union.
SOUTH WESTERN—
Wilts - - -		—		—	142	Chippenham
					143	Highworth and Swindon
Devon - - -		—		—	144	Exeter
Somerset - - -		—		—	145	Bath
					146	Long Ashton
					147	Wellington
WEST MIDLAND—
Gloucester - -	13	Bristol		—	148	Cheltenham
	14	Gloucester			149	Cirencester
					150	Tewkesbury
					151	Thornbury
					152	Westbury-on-Severn
					153	Winchcomb
Hereford - -		—		—	154	Hereford
					155	Ledbury
					156	Leominster
Salop - - -	15	Oswestry		—	157	Atcham
					158	Bridgnorth
					159	Drayton
					160	Ludlow
					161	Newport
					162	Wem
					163	Whitchurch
Stafford - -	16	Burton-on-Trent	83	Dudley	164	Leek
	17	Cannock	84	Stone	165	Stoke-upon-Trent
	18	Lichfield	85	West Bromwich	166	Tamworth
	19	Newcastle-under-Lyme	86	Wolstanton & Burslem	167	Wolverhampton
	20	Stafford
	21	Walsall
Worcester - -	22	King's Norton	87	Kidderminster		—
	23	Upton-upon-Severn	88	Stourbridge
	24	Worcester
Warwick - -	25	Aston	89	Coventry	168	Alcester
	26	Birmingham	90	Warwick	169	Meriden
	27	Solihull			170	Rugby
					171	Stratford-on-Avon
NORTH MIDLAND—
Leicester - -	28	Ashby-de-la-Zouch	91	Barrow-on-Soar	172	Lutterworth
	29	Leicester
	30	Loughborough
Nottingham -	31	Mansfield		—	173	Worksop
	32	Nottingham
Derby - - -	33	Chesterfield	92	Shardlow	174	Ashbourne
	34	Derby			175	Bakewell
					176	Belper
NORTH WESTERN—
Chester - - -	35	Chester	93	Congleton	177	Birkenhead
	36	Macclesfield	94	Northwich	178	Bucklow
	37	Nantwich
	38	Stockport
Lancaster - -	39	Ashton-under-Lyne	95	Bolton	179	Haslingden
	40	Barton-upon-Irwell	96	Chorley	180	Leigh
	41	Blackburn	97	Clitheroe	181	Toxteth Park
	42	Burnley	98	Ormskirk	182	Ulverston
	43	Bury	99	Wigan

CASUAL PAUPERS IN GROUPS OF UNIONS IN 1904—cont.

Appendix V.

Poor Law Unions in which, on a majority of the Friday nights during the year 1904, there were 15 or more Casual Paupers relieved—cont.

Division and Union-County.	A. 35 or more Casual Paupers.		B. Between 25 and 35 Casual Paupers.		C. Between 15 and 25 Casual Paupers.
	Number on Map.	Union.	Number on Map.	Union.	Number on Map.	Union.
NORTH WESTERN— cont.	44	Lancaster
Lancaster— cont.	45	{ Chorlton
	46	{ Manchester
	47	Oldham
	48	Prescot
	49	Preston
	50	Prestwich
	51	Rochdale
	52	Salford
	53	Warrington
		{ West Derby
		{ Liverpool
YORK—
West Riding -	54	Dewsbury	100	Doncaster	183	Bradford
	55	Holbeck	101	Ecclesall Bierlow	184	Keighley
	56	Leeds	102	Halifax	185	Knarborough
			103	Hunslet	186	Penistone
			104	Sheffield	187	Pontefract
			105	Wakefield	188	Ripon
					189	Selby
					190	Skipton
					191	Wortley
East Riding -		—	106	York		—
NORTHERN—
Durham -	57	Durham	107	Gateshead	192	Auckland
			108	Stockton	193	Darlington
					194	Easington
					195	Hartlepool
					196	Sunderland
					197	Teesdale
Northumberland -		—	109	Tynemouth	198	Berwick-on-Tweed
					199	Glendale
					200	Hexham
					201	Morpeth
					202	Newcastle-on-Tyne
Cumberland -		—	110	Brampton	203	Cockermouth
			111	Carlisle	204	Penrith
					205	Wigton
Westmorland -	58	Kendal		—	206	East Ward
					207	West Ward
WALES—
Monmouth -		—	112	Newport	208	Abergavenny
					209	Bedwellty
					210	Chepstow
					211	Pontypool
South Wales -	59	Cardiff	113	Llanelly	212	Pontypridd
			114	Merthyr Tydfil	213	Swansea
North Wales -	60	Wrexham		—	214	St. Asaph
					215	Forden
					216	Llanfyllin

TABLE 2.

Statement showing for each Union-County in England and Wales the cost of In-maintenance and Outdoor Relief of Casual Paupers for the half-year ended Ladyday, 1905.

Union-Counties.	In-maintenance in Casual Wards.*	Relief otherwise than in Workhouses or Casual Wards.	Union-Counties.	In-maintenance in Casual Wards.*	Relief otherwise than in Workhouses or Casual Wards.
I. LONDON.	£	£		£	£
1. London - - -	4,859	-	VII. NORTH MIDLAND.
I. SOUTH-EASTERN.			29. Leicester - - -	585	1
2. Surrey - - -	751	-	30. Rutland - - -	67	-
3. Kent - - -	941	3	31. Lincoln - - -	135	3
4. Sussex - - -	421	-	32. Nottingham - - -	299	-
5. Southampton - - -	409	-	33. Derby - - -	291	47
6. Berks - - -	764	4	VIII. NORTH-WESTERN.
III. SOUTH MIDLAND.			34. Chester - - -	679	26
7. Middlesex - - -	416	-	35. Lancaster - - -	3,082	46
8. Hertford - - -	235	8	IX. YORK.
9. Buckingham - - -	168	1	36. West Riding - - -	1,138	29
10. Oxford - - -	201	-	37. East Riding - - -	115	6
11. Northampton - - -	220	-	38. North Riding - - -	221	3
12. Huntingdon - - -	60	-	X. NORTHERN.
13. Bedford - - -	137	-	39. Durham - - -	534	66
14. Cambridge - - -	219	1	40. Northumberland - - -	331	6
IV. EASTERN.			41. Cumberland - - -	594	-
15. Essex - - -	286	22	42. Westmorland - - -	184	17
16. Suffolk - - -	229	3	XI. WELSH.
17. Norfolk - - -	182	-	43. Monmouth - - -	272	70
V. SOUTH-WESTERN.			44. South Wales—
18. Wilts - - -	253	1	Glamorgan - - -	252	196
19. Dorset - - -	142	22	Carmarthen - - -	67	41
20. Devon - - -	338	3	Pembroke - - -	93	18
21. Cornwall - - -	77	13	Cardigan - - -	68	26
22. Somerset - - -	347	25	Brecknock - - -	49	20
VI. WEST MIDLAND.			Radnor - - -	10	7
23. Gloucester - - -	464	19	45. North Wales—
24. Hereford - - -	166	3	Montgomery - - -	52	5
25. Salop - - -	498	21	Flint - - -	57	-
26. Stafford - - -	698	42	Denbigh - - -	98	11
27. Worcester - - -	413	-	Merioneth - - -	68	-
28. Warwick - - -	845	3	Carnarvon - - -	142	-
			Anglesey - - -	4	-
			Total for England and Wales	24,226	838
				£25,064

* In the majority of cases the expenditure on the maintenance of persons relieved in casual wards in Poor Law unions outside London is approximate, and in some cases it is also stated that only the cost of provisions supplied is included in the sum entered under this head.

Note.—For the average number of casual paupers relieved in each union-county on the Friday nights in the year 1904, see the table on page 25.

CHART No. 1.

Casual pauperism and total pauperism in ENGLAND & WALES on 1st January 1880 to 1905.
(Numbers on 1st Jan. 1904 = 100; numbers on other dates in percentages of 1904 figures).

CHART N° 2.

Casual pauperism and total pauperism (exclusive of insane in asylums &c. and casual paupers) in LONDON from 1880 to 1904 (yearly averages).
Numbers in 1904 = 100: numbers on other dates in percentages of 1904.

CHART N^o 3.

Casual pauperism and total pauperism (exclusive of insane in asylums &c. and casual paupers) in ENGLAND & WALES during 1904 and 1905 (to end of November).
Number on 1st or 2nd Jan. 1904 = 100; numbers on later dates in percentages of numbers on 1st or 2nd Jan.

CHART N^o 5. CASUAL PAUPERISM AND TOTAL PAUPERISM DURING THE YEAR 1904.

NOTE The figures upon which both diagrams are based are taken from the Monthly Statements of Pauperism published by the Local Government Board. the numbers of paupers upon which the lower diagram is based are exclusive of Casual Paupers and insane in asylums.

APPENDIX VI.

Appendix
VI.(Papers handed in by Mr. Preston-Thomas.)

1. HALF-YEARLY RETURNS OF CASUAL PAUPERS*, 1858-1905.

Year.	Number of Casual Paupers on 1st January.	General pauperism per thousand of estimated population on 1st January.	Number of Casual Paupers on 1st July.	General pauperism per thousand of estimated population on 1st July.
1858	2,416	49	2,069	42
1859	2,153	44	2,267	41
1860	1,542	42	1,737	41
1861	1,941	45	2,705	42
1862	2,830	47	3,606	45
1863	4,234	56	4,128	48
1864	3,138	49	3,369	44
1865	3,339	47	3,811	42
1866	4,469	44	4,075	41
1867	5,027	45	5,248	43
1868	6,129	48	7,946	44
1869	7,020	48	6,692	44
1870	5,430	49	6,630	44
1871	3,755	48	4,293	43
1872	3,378	43	2,372	38
1873	3,027	39	2,485	35
1874	3,089	36	3,299	33
1875	2,235	34	3,202	31
1876	3,294	31	3,367	29
1877	4,173	30	3,323	29
1878	5,108	30	3,632	29
1879	4,654	32	7,665	30
1880	5,914	33	7,742	30
1881	6,215	31	6,461	30
1882	5,767	31	5,028	29
1883	4,552	31	3,294	28
1884	4,899	29	4,100	28
1885	4,866	29	4,648	27
1886	5,540	30	4,640	28
1887	5,026	30	4,686	28
1888	5,844	30	5,949	27
1889	7,058	29	4,157	27
1890	5,701	28	5,089	26
1891	4,960	27	5,452	25
1892	6,319	26	5,853	25
1893	5,947	27	7,556	25
1894	8,304	28	5,865	25
1895	8,810	27	*7,000	26
1896	7,859	28	6,668	26
1897	6,922	27	5,192	25
1898	7,886	27	5,338	27
1899	7,499	26	5,361	24
1900	5,579	25	4,170	24
1901	6,795	25	5,455	24
1902	7,840	25	6,609	24
1903	8,266	26	5,121	24
1904	8,519	26	6,748	25
1905	9,768	28	8,556	25

* Estimated by taking proportion for January, 1895.

NOTE.—The figures for the years before 1891, owing to some vagrants having been reckoned at one union where they breakfasted and at another where they supped on the same day, are somewhat in excess (probably about 10 or 12 per cent.) of the numbers actually relieved on the night of the 1st January and the 1st July. The figures from 1891, inclusive, represent the actual counts on the nights specified, except in the case of the 1st July, 1895, the figures for which are an estimate.

2. NUMBERS OF VAGRANTS RELIEVED ON THE NIGHTS OF 1ST JANUARY

Appendix
VI.

DIVISIONS AND UNION-COUNTIES.	Population (Census 1901).	No. of Unions	1897.		1898.		1899.		1900.
			1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.
1. LONDON :
London - -	4,536,429	31	793	684	997	753	1,033	730	792	593
2. SOUTH-EASTERN :
Surrey - - -	718,661	11	278	123	257	83	254	103	198	95
Kent - - -	935,144	26	452	269	438	346	381	411	348	268
Sussex - - -	605,785	21	196	133	170	89	152	119	140	113
Southampton -	768,608	26	146	64	141	94	141	101	112	82
Berks - - -	283,531	12	121	64	147	70	95	60	54	34
3. SOUTH MIDLAND :
Middlesex - - -	810,306	7	97	104	141	60	99	55	107	56
Hertford - - -	239,760	12	120	55	131	55	149	54	69	40
Buckingham - -	173,061	7	77	42	106	36	123	65	66	4
Oxford - - -	186,698	9	117	71	126	55	82	53	91	58
Northampton - -	348,947	12	54	37	104	50	70	36	48	42
Huntingdon - -	46,750	3	17	11	24	10	7	7	9	8
Bedford - - -	174,972	5	57	16	84	16	56	31	25	19
Cambridge - -	200,680	9	66	37	54	46	33	24	18	33
4. EASTERN :
Essex - - -	1,062,645	16	128	117	185	73	139	106	85	52
Suffolk - - -	361,900	17	106	37	67	48	82	46	54	39
Norfolk - - -	467,754	21	150	52	114	78	86	40	32	22
5. SOUTH WESTERN :
Wilts - - -	263,944	17	129	36	144	69	166	75	97	32
Dorset - - -	199,968	12	41	35	46	31	59	28	36	18
Devon - - -	664,697	20	105	44	131	75	147	53	75	32
Cornwall - - -	318,591	13	2	3	18	3	10	1	10	5
Somerset - - -	466,193	17	160	60	158	92	103	63	79	42
6. WEST MIDLAND :
Gloucester - - -	648,627	17	136	35	164	81	145	70	115	41
Hereford - - -	112,549	8	41	15	59	28	62	32	19	46
Salop - - -	259,088	15	122	90	159	106	135	61	99	59
Stafford - - -	1,251,910	17	329	197	418	241	417	285	307	166
Worcester - - -	500,819	11	130	71	149	105	146	153	105	109
Warwick - - -	906,601	14	264	143	231	177	297	171	217	132
7. NORTH MIDLAND :
Leicester - - -	440,932	11	173	102	193	100	127	118	72	70

AND 1ST JULY, FROM 1897 TO 1904, IN EACH UNION-COUNTY.

Appendix
VI.
—

1901.		1902.		1903.		1904.		Average of 8 half-years (County)		Average Number of Vagrants per Union.
1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.	1st January.	1st July.	1st January.	1st July.
923	707	1,007	706	937	648	999	757	935	697	30	22
300	115	211	190	282	84	301	158	260	119	24	11
403	320	492	333	446	264	446	354	426	321	16	12
152	138	154	92	179	82	169	129	164	112	8	5
186	94	260	97	223	79	231	122	180	92	7	4
100	56	147	74	157	49	177	116	125	65	10	5
100	84	111	89	116	83	124	115	112	81	16	12
83	59	73	76	66	53	51	47	93	55	8	5
75	37	124	52	94	34	66	31	91	43	13	6
93	76	115	67	115	51	90	71	104	63	12	7
73	36	74	51	92	32	73	79	73	45	6	4
9	7	17	6	27	3	9	4	15		5	2
31	21	21	37	37	17	35	30	43	23	9	5
50	20	56	30	64	23	44	29	48	30	5	3
110	74	108	101	124	68	95	108	122	87	8
54	39	43	42	100	36	53	34	70	40	4	2
38	60	45	40	68	29	63	29	74	44	4	2
173	61	178	53	124	53	113	73	140	56	8	3
44	25	72	21	70	29	75	34	55	28	5	2
82	51	84	55	149	35	67	51	105	49	5	2
4	8	12	2	9	7	27	13	11	5	1
105	57	84	49	144	36	124	69	120	58	7	3
136	110	173	91	156	97	259	141	160	83	9	5
57	59	72	32	73	29	69	29	56	34	7	4
120	108	183	152	153	180	146	171	140	116	9	8
325	187	361	256	414	197	403	303	372	229	22	13
155	142	140	195	120	99	193	163	142	130	13	12
262	189	293	219	302	157	298	202	271	174	19	12
155	131	109	99	166	68	219	136	152	1	14	9

NUMBERS OF VAGRANTS RELIEVED ON THE NIGHTS OF 1ST JANUARY

Appendix
VI.

DIVISIONS AND UNION-COUNTIES.	Population (Census 1901).	No. of Unions.	1897.		1898.		1899.		1900.
			1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.
7. NORTH MIDLAND :— contd.
Rutland - - -	20,743	2	24	9	14	18	22	8	9	7
Lincoln - - -	492,994	15	81	30	58	32	70	34	42	22
Nottingham - -	596,705	8	106	90	149	94	116	77	88	68
Derby - - -	491,032	9	152	176	197	136	176	142	188	133
8. NORTH WESTERN :
Chester - - -	774,638	11	139	143	146	146	225	144	144	146
Lancaster - -	4,437,518	30	603	745	792	652	815	684	691	592
9. YORK :
West Riding - -	2,766,471	35	360	407	424	367	356	373	301	225
East Riding - -	453,936	10	77	78	90	67	74	55	40	37
North Riding - -	375,918	17	146	94	108	106	136	111	76	88
10. NORTHERN :
Durham - - -	1,194,590	15	156	251	166	202	190	165	140	174
Northumberland -	603,119	12	96	105	109	121	89	114	91	88
Cumberland - -	266,933	9	51	73	61	69	47	55	34	32
Westmorland - -	64,409	3	65	67	94	72	81	57	70	82
11. WELSH :
Monmouth - - -	316,864	6	65	38	72	20	42	48	23	21
South Wales - -	1,229,143	27	132	83	149	85	188	82	99	49
North Wales - -	487,280	20	62	56	101	81	76	61	64	53
TOTAL OF ENGLAND AND WALES - - - -	32,527,843	646	6,922	5,192	7,886	5,338	7,499	5,361	5,579	4,170

AND 1ST JULY, FROM 1897 TO 1904, IN EACH UNION-COUNTY—*continued.*Appendix
VI.

1901.		1902.		1903.		1904.		Average of 8 half-years (County).		Average Number of Vagrants per Union.
1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st July.	1st Jan.	1st uly.	1st Jan.	1st July.	1st January.	1st July.	1st January.	1st July.
12	6	10	—	8	10	13	3	14	8	7	4
60	46	80	50	137	56	108	54	79	40	5	3
111	78	88	102	109	75	128	86	112	84	14	11
151	179	219	162	198	102	155	141	180	146	20	16
227	174	271	357	267	259	266	329	211	212	19	17
636	838	995	1,115	1,122	852	1,164	945	852	803	28	29
407	338	431	444	432	328	441	461	394	368	11	11
78	56	42	73	49	49	51	58	63	59	6	6
78	81	62	119	83	79	84	110	97	99	6	6
177	205	212	298	149	174	197	215	173	211	12	14
97	97	115	109	143	123	123	173	108	116	9	10
37	54	76	95	74	73	85	119	58	71	6	8
67	68	97	70	103	88	100	90	85	74	28	25
45	23	74	39	69	26	102	34	61	31	10	5
146	115	193	139	201	100	354	192	183	106	7	4
68	26	56	130	115	105	129	140	84	82	4	4
6,795	5,455	7,840	6,609	8,266	5,121	8,519	6,748	7,413	5,499	11	9

APPENDIX VII.

LETTER FROM THE PRISON COMMISSIONERS RESPECTING VAGRANTS IN PRISONS.

Appendix
VII.

Prison Commission,
Home Office,
Whitehall, S.W.
22nd March, 1905.

SIR,—With reference to your letter of the 2nd ultimo, requesting to be furnished with the number of convicted prisoners in prisons in England and Wales on a given day, together with certain particulars relating to such of them as were convicted under the Vagrancy Act, I am desired by the Prison Commissioners to transmit to you the accompanying statement containing the particulars asked for, in respect of prisoners confined in local prisons on the 28th February last.

With regard to your further inquiries, I am to state that—

(1) In the newest prisons, the following dimensions have, for many years, been considered the regulation size of prison cells, viz. :—13 feet × 7 feet × 9 feet high.

(2) The following are the forms of 1st stage hard labour on which prisoners of the vagrant class are employed, and the maximum, medium, and minimum task which is exacted in regard to each kind of employment, viz. :—

Task per week.

		Minimum.	Medium.	Maximum.
Coal sack making - - - - -	No.	5	6½	7½
Coal bag making - - - - -	„	10	12½	15
Oakum picking (without mechanical appliances) -	lbs.	12	15	18
Stone breaking (regard being had to the nature of the stone) - - - - -	cwts.	30 to 60	37½ to 75	45 to 90
Wood chopping (having regard to the nature of the wood) - - - - -	„	5 to 8	6½ to 10	7½ to 12

Such other forms of industrial work as shall from time to time be ordered. At present these consist of mat-making, with 5 lb. beater, and heavy ship fender making.

I am, Sir, Your obedient servant,
(Signed) E. G. CLAYTON, Secretary.

F. L. Turner, Esq.,
Secretary to the Departmental Committee on Vagrancy.
49 and 50, Parliament Street, S.W.

[Enclosure to above Letter.]

RETURN SHOWING THE NUMBER OF CONVICTED PRISONERS IN ENGLISH AND WELSH PRISONS, ON THE 28th FEBRUARY, 1905, AND OF THOSE CONVICTED UNDER THE VAGRANCY ACT, ETC.

		M.	F.
(1). Total Number of convicted prisoners on 28th February, 1905 - - - - -		12,369	2,598
(2). Total Number on 28th February who were convicted under the Vagrancy Act of—	Sleeping Out - - - - -	213	22
	Begging - - - - - (Persons convicted as Rogues and Vagabonds, or Incurrible Rogues, for either of these offences are included.)	783	52
(3). Total Number of casual paupers on February 28th convicted of—	Refusal to perform task of work - - -	241	4
	Tearing up their own clothes - - -	50	—
	Other misbehaviour - - - - -	46	6
	Not more than 3 days - - - - -	—	—
(4). Terms of sentences of those convicted under (2) and (3).	4 days and not more than 7 days - -	246	10
	8 „ „ „ 14 „ - - -	431	25
	15 „ „ „ 1 month - - -	357	26
	Over 1 month and not more than 3 months	198	19
	Over 3 months - - - - -	101	4
(5). In Governor's opinion, what number of prisoners under (1), on 28th February, were persons with no fixed place of abode and no regular means of subsistence? - - - - -		3,736	372
(6). How many prisoners convicted of offences under (2) and (3) were received into prison during the fortnight ended 28th February; and how many of them received, on admission, the dinner prescribed by Rule 4 (Dietaries)? - -		1,285	58
		337	19

WAY TICKET AND MID-DAY MEAL SYSTEMS.

(Papers handed in by Lieut.-Colonel J. Curtis-Hayward and Admiral Christian.)

1. FORM OF WAY-TICKET.

Counterfoil.

Front of Ticket.

COUNTY OF GLOUCESTER.

PASS No.

Name

Occupation

Age

Height

Hair

Eyes

Complexion

Other distinguishing marks

PASS No. _____ CHELTENHAM UNION _____ day of _____ 190__

Name _____ Occupation _____

Age _____ Height _____ Hair _____ Eyes _____ Complexion _____

Other distinguishing marks _____

Came from _____ Final Destination _____

Unions on Road.	Arrival.		Departure.		Signature of Master.
	Date.	Hour.	Date.	Hour.

Date.	Bread Station for the Day.	Bread given.	Hour.	Signature of Constable.

Date of Arrival

Date of Departure

Going from

Final Destination

[illegible]

2. NOTICE AGAINST BEGGARS.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE COUNTY OF GLOUCESTER.

A SYSTEM FOR THE RELIEF OF ALL DESTITUTE WAYFARERS is in force throughout the County of Gloucester.

The Wayfarer receives a ticket from the Assistant Relieving Officer of the Union where he passes the night, and this ticket ensures him a ration of food at a certain place on the road he will travel the next day.

Food, as well as lodging, is also provided for Vagrants, both night and morning, at every Union in the County.

The amount of work given at the Unions to destitute persons whose tickets shew them to be travelling in search of work is very small. A larger task is given to those who bring unsatisfactory tickets, or having torn up their tickets, show that they are idle vagabonds.

The public are therefore earnestly requested not to give either food or money to Beggars, as by so doing they encourage Idle Vagabond habits, and thus cause an increase of Crime as well as of the burdens on the Rates.

All destitute persons passing through the County are provided for by night at the Workhouse, and by day are supplied with food, administered under the direction of the Police, at the Relief Stations as under :—

ALMONDSBURY.	MINCHINHAMPTON.
BECKFORD.	MORETON-IN-MARSH.
BIBURY.	MITCHELDEAN.
BIRDLIPI.	NAILSWORTH.
BOURTON-ON-WATER.	NEWENT.
CHELTENHAM.	NEWPORT.
CHIPPING CAMPDEN.	NORTHLEACH.
CHIPPING SODBURY.	OLDLANDS COMMON.
CINDERFORD.	SAPPERTON.
CIRENCESTER.	STANTON.
COLEFORD.	ST. BRIAVELS.
COOMBE HILL.	STOW-ON-THE-WOLD.
DURSLEY.	STROUD.
FAIRFORD.	TETBURY.
FALFIELD.	TEWKESBURY.
GLOUCESTER.	THORNBURY.
GUITING POWER.	WESTBURY-ON-SEVERN.
HAWKESBURY UPTON.	WHITMINSTER.
LYDNEY.	WINCHCOMB.
MANGOTSFIELD.	WINDRUSH.
MARSHFIELD.	WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE.

Tramps or Beggars should be referred to the nearest Constable.

HENRY CHRISTIAN
(Vice-Admiral) C. C. Gloucestershire.

3. CHIEF CONSTABLE'S RETURN OF VAGRANTS.

No. 1.—Numbers and Particulars of Persons who slept in Casual Wards at the following Unions on Tuesday, April 5th, 1904.

Name of Union.	Number Sleeping in Casual Wards.	Males.	Females.	Under 16 years of age.	16 years of age and above.	Number of Strangers.	Number of known Residents.	Remarks as to the truth of their statement.
								True.	Tramping Class.
CHELTENHAM - - -	11	10	1	—	11	11	—	4	7
TEWKESBURY - - -	10	6	4	1	9	10	—	9	1
WINCHCOMBE - - -	34	30	4	—	34	34	—	34	—
GLOUCESTER - - -	44	38	6	2	42	44	—	44	—
NEWENT - - -	7	7	—	—	7	7	—	4	3
WHITMINSTER - - -	4	4	—	—	4	4	—	2	2
BARTON REGIS - - -	7	7	—	—	7	7	—	6	1
WESTBURY-ON-SEVERN - -	19	16	3	—	19	18	1	2	17
STROUD - - -	14	10	4	1	13	14	—	13	1
DURSLEY - - -	7	5	2	—	7	7	—	4	3
TETBURY - - -	6	6	—	—	6	6	—	4	2
SODBURY - - -	1	1	—	—	1	1	—	—	1
THORNBURY - - -	39	34	5	4	35	39	—	—	39
CIRENCESTER - - -	15	13	2	2	13	15	—	10	5
NORTHLEACH - - -	7	7	—	—	7	7	—	4	3
STOW - - -	1	1	—	—	1	1	—	1	—
TOTALS in 1904 - - -	226	195	31	10	216	225	1	141	85
Do. 1903 - - -	169	159	10	4	165	168	1	71	98
Do. 1902 - - -	117	109	8	1	116	117	—	60	57
Do. 1901 - - -	122	105	17	4	118	122	—	74	48
Do. 1900 - - -	98	78	20	7	91	96	2	45	53
Do. 1899 - - -	87	69	18	10	77	87	—	18	69
Do. 1898 - - -	118	99	19	10	108	116	2	30	88
Do. 1897 - - -	115	86	29	7	108	106	9	32	83
Do. 1896 - - -	92	85	7	1	91	87	5	47	45
Do. 1895 - - -	155	133	22	8	147	145	10	82	73
Do. 1894 - - -	171	150	21	21	150	169	2	123	48
Do. 1893 - - -	86	80	6	2	84	84	2	53	33
Do. 1892 - - -	95	79	16	7	88	89	6	54	41
Do. 1891 - - -	81	65	16	3	78	76	5	44	37
Do. 1890 - - -	74	59	15	6	68	70	4	39	35
Do. 1889 - - -	103	92	11	6	97	102	1	70	33
Do. 1888 - - -	81	67	14	10	71	80	1	37	44
Do. 1887 - - -	98	78	20	15	83	95	3	56	42
Do. 1886 - - -	111	87	24	20	91	106	5	58	53
Do. 1885 - - -	92	76	16	11	81	92	—	62	30

No. 2.—Analysis of Trades of Persons who slept in Casual Wards on Tuesday, April 5th, 1904.

Appendix
VIII.

Trade.	No.	Trade.	No.	Trade.	No.
		Brought forward	25	Brought forward	214
Buckle Maker - - - -	1	Labourers - - - -	157	Sweep - - - -	1
Boot Makers - - - -	2	Laundresses - - - -	5	Seamen - - - -	4
Bakers - - - -	2	Married Women - - - -	17	Stoker - - - -	1
Bricklayer - - - -	1	Moulders - - - -	2	Ship's Cook - - - -	1
Children - - - -	11	Mason - - - -	1	Sawyer - - - -	1
Charwomen - - - -	3	Navy - - - -	1	Slater - - - -	1
Clerks - - - -	2	Pedlar - - - -	1	Tailor - - - -	1
Gardener - - - -	1	Plasterer - - - -	1	Weaver - - - -	1
Groom - - - -	1	Painters - - - -	3	Wood Turner - - - -	1
Iron Worker - - - -	1	Printer - - - -	1
Carried forward - -	25	Carried forward - -	214	TOTAL - -	226

No. 3.—Numbers and Particulars of Persons who slept in the Common Lodging Houses at the following places on Tuesday, April 5th, 1904.

Name of Place.	Number Sleeping in Common Lodging Houses.	Males.	Females.	Under 16 years of age.	16 years of age and above.	Number of Strangers.	Number of known Residents.	Remarks as to the truth of their statement.
								True.	Tramp-ing Class.
CHELTEMHAM - - -	127	113	14	2	125	45	82	84	43
TEWKESBURY - - -	8	6	2	—	8	8	—	6	2
WINCHCOMBE - - -	3	3	—	—	3	3	—	3	—
GLOUCESTER - - -	131	110	21	3	128	76	55	129	2
NEWENT - - - -	6	4	2	—	6	2	4	4	2
WHITMINSTER - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
CORSE - - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
AWRE - - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
COLEFORD - - - -	12	11	1	—	12	7	5	6	6
BLAKENEY - - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
CINDERFORD - - -	9	5	4	—	9	4	5	9	—
LITTLEDEAN - - -	4	3	1	—	4	4	—	3	1
LYDNEY - - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
MITCHELDEAN - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
STROUD - - - -	54	40	14	3	51	41	13	47	7
WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE -	19	13	6	5	14	16	3	17	2
TETBURY - - - -	9	7	2	—	9	7	2	9	—
SODBURY - - - -	15	11	4	3	12	6	9	9	6
THORNBURY - - - -	36	34	2	3	33	26	10	10	26
CIRENCESTER - - -	29	22	7	—	29	20	9	25	4
LECHLADE - - - -	3	2	1	—	3	3	—	—	3
CAMPDEN - - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
NORTHLEACH - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
TOTALS in 1904 - -	465	384	81	19	446	268	137	361	104
Do. 1903 - - -	475	392	83	24	451	313	162	358	117
Do. 1902 - - -	450	365	85	29	421	302	148	283	167
Do. 1901 - - -	526	427	99	31	495	333	193	414	112
Do. 1900 - - -	464	375	89	39	425	305	159	351	113
Do. 1899 - - -	467	368	99	32	435	332	135	332	135
Do. 1898 - - -	479	382	97	41	438	329	150	372	107
Do. 1897 - - -	548	420	128	44	504	380	168	357	191
Do. 1896 - - -	439	344	95	29	410	235	204	334	105
Do. 1895 - - -	485	386	99	39	446	310	175	356	129
Do. 1894 - - -	447	339	108	43	404	329	118	358	89
Do. 1893 - - -	508	384	124	34	474	332	176	400	103
Do. 1892 - - -	472	352	120	42	430	263	209	431	41
Do. 1891 - - -	456	355	101	42	414	307	149	350	106
Do. 1890 - - -	557	428	129	64	493	387	170	428	129
Do. 1889 - - -	512	395	117	57	455	365	147	437	75
Do. 1888 - - -	594	456	138	61	533	467	127	452	142

Appendix
VIII.No. 4.—Analysis of the Trades of the Persons who slept in the Common Lodging Houses on Tuesday, April 5th, 1904.

Trade.	No.	Trade.	No.	Trade.	No.]
		Brought forward	70	Brought forward	408
Artist - - - - -	1	Fitters - - - - -	2	Needlewoman - - - - -	1
Broker - - - - -	1	Flower Sellers - - - - -	3	Organ Grinders - - - - -	2
Bricklayers - - - - -	3	Farriers - - - - -	2	Pedlars - - - - -	10
Billposter - - - - -	1	Flower Maker - - - - -	1	Printers - - - - -	2
Blacksmith - - - - -	1	Fireman - - - - -	1	Plasterer - - - - -	1
Boatman - - - - -	1	Grooms - - - - -	4	Painters - - - - -	8
Basket Maker - - - - -	1	Gardeners - - - - -	8	Potman - - - - -	1
Boots - - - - -	1	Glass and China Rivetter - - - - -	1	Plumbers - - - - -	2
Butcher - - - - -	1	Hawkers - - - - -	40	Rag Gatherers - - - - -	3
Charwomen - - - - -	16	Joiner - - - - -	1	Stoker - - - - -	1
Children - - - - -	20	Jeweller - - - - -	1	Shoemakers - - - - -	3
Clerk - - - - -	1	Labourers - - - - -	210	Shoeblack - - - - -	1
Coachbuilder - - - - -	1	Laundress - - - - -	1	Sawyer - - - - -	1
Colliers - - - - -	2	Locksmith - - - - -	1	Sail Maker - - - - -	1
Carpenters - - - - -	3	Musicians - - - - -	7	Stableman - - - - -	1
Coalseller - - - - -	1	Mat Maker - - - - -	1	Scissors Grinders - - - - -	3
Cutlers - - - - -	2	Married Women - - - - -	45	Seaman - - - - -	1
Cabinet Maker - - - - -	1	Maltster - - - - -	1	Stonemasons - - - - -	2
Dealer - - - - -	1	Miner - - - - -	1	Tailors - - - - -	8
Drovers - - - - -	9	Moulders - - - - -	4	Tinsmiths - - - - -	3
Engineer - - - - -	1	No occupation - - - - -	2	Upholsterers - - - - -	2
Engine Driver - - - - -	1	Nail Maker - - - - -	1
Carried forward - - -	70	Carried forward - - -	408	TOTAL - - -	465

No. 5.—Number of Persons relieved by the Police, acting as Assistant Relieving Officers, during the Quarter ended 31st March in each of the following years, and the Number of those who brought Way-Tickets with them.

Date.	Number of Persons Relieved.	Number who brought way- tickets with them.	Number who did not bring way- tickets with them.
1904	12,813	3,461	9,352
1903	10,029	2,801	7,228
1902	9,713	2,471	7,242
1901	7,003	2,018	4,985
1900	6,055	1,893	4,162
1899	7,826	2,397	5,429
1898	9,982	2,375	7,607
1897	7,897	2,191	5,706
1896	8,976	2,634	6,292
1895	8,059	2,657	5,402
1894	9,477	2,854	6,623
1893	5,878	1,828	4,050
1892	4,929	1,910	3,019
1891	3,718	1,394	2,324
1890	4,911	1,937	2,974
1889	6,962	2,537	4,425

No. 6.—Return of Persons arrested for Begging in each of the following years.

Appendix
VIII.

Year.	Number Arrested.	Number Discharged.	Number Convicted.	How DISPOSED OF.				Average amount of money found on them.	Total amount of money found on them.
				Fined.	7 days and under.	Above 7 and not exceeding 14 days.	Above 14 days.
								£ s. d.	£ s. d.
1903	300	49	251	1	143	91	16	8½	10 13 10½
1902	272	53	219	3	104	87	25	1 10	25 1 4½
1901	174	58	116	1	86	24	5	3¼	2 14 0½
1900	162	57	105	—	64	39	2	3¼	2 12 3¼
1899	178	50	128	5	79	42	2	5½	4 2 9½
1898	210	54	156	2	115	37	2	1 6½	16 5 9¾
1897	244	84	160	2	104	48	6	1 9½	21 18 3¼
1896	267	112	155	8	99	44	4	6	6 14 0
1895	267	118	149	1	108	37	3	4½	4 15 2½
1894	318	152	166	4	129	26	7	8½	10 19 5
1893	252	120	132	4	99	28	1	6¼	6 13 3½
1892	300	115	194	2	118	68	6	5	6 10 1
1891	247	114	133	—	84	43	6	4¾	5 0 3½
1890	231	83	148	1	87	53	7	4¼	4 15 1½
1889	273	110	163	1	86	73	3	3½	3 17 6½
1888	341	150	191	2	108	74	7	4¾	7 0 10½
1887	430	175	255	—	137	114	4	4½	8 0 6½

No. 7.—Return of Tramps convicted for Stealing and other Offences, other than Begging, in each of the following years.

Year.	Number Convicted.	How DISPOSED OF.						Total amount of money found on them.	Average amount of money found on them.
		Fined.	7 days and under.	Above 7 and not exceeding 14 days.	Above 14 days.	Whipping.	Committed for trial.
								£ s. d.	£ s. d.
1903	493	99	100	132	150	—	12	14 18 5½	7½
1902	417	64	125	130	83	—	15	13 19 4	8
1901	316	70	89	119	31	—	7	9 2 3	7
1900	254	56	93	56	41	—	8	9 4 10	8¾
1899	220	56	71	59	24	—	10	6 14 6½	7½
1898	236	59	84	62	22	2	7	8 16 1¾	9
1897	209	57	63	54	25	—	10	10 19 6½	1 0½
1896	182	49	71	35	17	—	10	4 18 10½	6½
1895	194	37	74	43	32	—	8	4 5 1¾	5½
1894	194	59	51	53	18	—	13	13 3 9½	1 4½
1893	193	62	51	51	18	—	11	7 2 10½	9
1892	176	36	63	44	25	—	8	7 4 7	9¾
1891	221	46	68	46	20	—	11	7 9 0½	8
1890	187	46	78	36	22	—	5	6 15 10¾	8½
1889	206	41	57	68	32	—	8	17 1 5¾	1 7¾
1888	231	52	83	58	28	—	10	5 19 6¾	6
1887	274	48	91	82	40	—	13	8 14 4	7½

No. 8.—Return of the Number of Persons in Casual Wards and Common Lodging Houses in the County of Gloucester, on the 1st Tuesday in April, in each of the following years.

Year.	Total Number in Casual Wards.	Total Number in Common Lodging Houses.	Grand Total.	Year.	Total Number in Casual Wards.	Total Number in Common Lodging Houses.	Grand Total.
1904	226	465	691	1893	86	508	594
1903	169	475	644	1892	95	472	567
1902	117	450	567	1891	81	456	537
1901	122	526	643	1890	74	557	631
1900	98	464	562	1889	103	512	615
1899	87	467	554	1888	81	594	675
1898	118	479	597	1887	98	502	600
1897	115	548	663	1886	111	597	708
1896	92	439	531	1885	92	570	662
1895	155	485	640	1884	63	561	624
1894	171	447	618	1883	83	463	546

No. 9.—Number of Vagrants supplied with Bread at the different Police Stations in the County.

Year ending 31st March.	Number supplied with Bread	Cost.
		£	s.	d.
1904	18,559	58	15	3 $\frac{3}{4}$
1903	13,691	44	12	4
1902	10,439	32	10	2
1901	8,327	25	17	2 $\frac{1}{2}$
1900	9,074	27	19	2 $\frac{1}{4}$
1899	12,993	43	0	5 $\frac{3}{4}$
1898	10,570	32	18	5 $\frac{1}{4}$
1897	9,499	29	1	10 $\frac{1}{2}$
1896	11,041	33	8	4 $\frac{3}{4}$
1895	13,381	39	2	1 $\frac{3}{4}$
1894	13,666	40	6	8 $\frac{1}{2}$
1893	9,268	29	0	5 $\frac{3}{4}$
1892	7,637	24	4	9 $\frac{1}{4}$
1891	7,565	23	6	10 $\frac{3}{4}$
1890	9,923	30	8	2

HENRY CHRISTIAN,

*Admiral, Chief Constable of Gloucestershire.*4.—REPORT OF THE GLOUCESTERSHIRE VAGRANCY COMMITTEE AS PRESENTED TO THE STANDING
JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE 3RD JANUARY, 1905.(Paper handed in by the Right Hon. Sir John Dorington, Bart., M.P.)

During the past quarter 22,792 vagrants have been admitted and 25,963 have been maintained, as compared with 17,258 admitted and 22,031 maintained in the corresponding quarter of 1903, an increase respectively of 5,534 and 3,932. The number supplied with a ration of bread has been 7,316, against 5,225 a year ago, at a cost of £23 4s. 3d., against £16 6s. 7d.

During the year 1904, 76,764 tramps have been admitted, against 58,019, in 1903, an increase of 18,745; while 23,802 have been supplied with bread, at a cost of £75 17s. 11d., compared with 17,346 ration of bread, costing £55 13s. 8d., in the previous year.

The returns for the year show that an increasing number of tramps produce good tickets at the union workhouses. The increase in the number of good tickets is 46 per cent., while the increase in the number of tramps admitted is 32 per cent. The total number of tramps who have received a bread ration during the year is 23,802, against 17,346, an increase of 37 per cent.

The Barton Regis Union no longer receive tramps, the Union being done away with.

F. W. B. CRIPPS.

(b) WILTSHIRE.
(Papers handed in by Mr. A. C. Mitchell and Captain Sterne.)

Appendix
VII.

1.—FORM OF WAY-TICKET.

Counterfoil.	Front of Ticket.
PASS No.	COUNTY OF WILTS.
Name	_____
Occupation	PASS No.	Union,	day of	190
Age	NAME	Occupation
Height	Age	Height	Hair	Eyes	Complexion
Hair	Other distinguishing marks
Eyes	Came from		Final Destination
Complexion	Unions on Road.	Arrival. Date. Hour.	Departure. Date. Hour.	Signature of Master.
Other distinguishing marks
Date of Arrival	Received at	Police Station.	Bread.	Signature of Constable.
Date of Departure
Going from
Final Destination

	Back of Ticket.
	Relief Stations for Mid-day Meal.
	CASUAL WARD		ASHTON KEYNES.	MARLBOROUGH.
	ADMISSION TICKET.		BECKHAMPTON.	MELKSHAM.
			BOX.	PEWSEY.
			CHIPPENHAM.	SHERSTON MAGNA.
			CODFORD SAINT MARY.	SHREWTON.
			DEVIZES.	SWINDON.
			DINTON.	TROWBRIDGE.
			DOWNTON.	UPAVON.
		FOVANT.	WARMINSTER.
		HINDON.	WEST LAVINGTON.
		LUDGERSHALL.	WHITEPARISH.
		LYNEHAM.	WILTON.
		MALMESBURY.
No. of Pass_____		ADMIT_____as described on the other side, who has been examined and registered by me.
Unions.	Relieving Officers' Signatures.	Hour of Issue.	Date and Place.
This Ticket must be retained, and be presented to and signed by the respective Relieving Officer of Vagrants for each Union at which shelter is required.

2. NOTICE AGAINST BEGGARS.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE COUNTY OF WILTS.

There is now in force a system for the relief of destitute Wayfarers throughout the County of Wilts.

A Ticket received by the wayfarer from the Assistant Relieving Officer for the Union where he is passing the night ensures him at a certain place on the road he is afterwards travelling a Mid-day Meal of Bread, sufficient to carry him on to the Union where he intends sleeping that night.

The Public are therefore earnestly WARNED against giving to strange beggars, as by so doing they encourage Idle Vagabond habits which increases Crime, and also causes an increased expenditure from the rates.

The Beggars should be referred to the nearest Constable.

Male and Female destitute persons passing through the County are provided for by night at the Union Workhouse, and by day with Bread administered under the direction of the Police at certain relief stations as under :

AMESBURY.	MALMESBURY.
ASHTON KEYNES.	MARLBOROUGH.
BECKHAMPTON.	MELKSHAM.
BOX.	PEWSEY.
CALNE.	SHERSTON MAGNA.
CHIPPENHAM.	SHREWTON.
CODFORD SAINT MARY.	SWINDON.
DEVIZES.	TROWBRIDGE.
DINTON.	UPAVON.
DOWNTON.	WARMINSTER.
FOVANT.	WEST LAVINGTON.
HINDON.	WHITE PARISH.
LUDGERSHALL.	WILTON.
LYNEHAM.

ROBT. STERNE, Capt., R.N.,
(Chief Constable for Wilts.)

Chief Constable's Office,
Devizes, April, 1882.

3. CIRCULAR TO PARISH COUNCILS AND PARISH MEETINGS.

To the Chairman of

The Parish Council of.....

Or Parish Meeting of.....

SIR,

In accordance with a resolution passed at the Wilts County Vagrancy Committee, I am desired to bring to the notice of your Council (or Parish Meeting) the system for the relief of destitute wayfarers, throughout the County of Wilts, which has existed for the past fourteen years ; a like system is in operation in the neighbouring County of Gloucester.

A ticket received by a tramp from the Assistant Relieving Officer of the Union where he passes the night ensures, at a certain place, on the road travelled the next day, a mid-day meal of bread, sufficient to carry him on to the Union where he intends passing that night.

The bread-relief is provided by a fund derived from voluntary subscriptions, and is administered by the police.

A list of the Relief Stations is hung up in all tramp wards of Workhouses.

Thus, male and female destitute persons passing through the county are provided with food and shelter by night at the Union Workhouse, and by day with a meal of bread administered as described above.

The County Vagrancy Committee are most anxious that the public should know this and should be warned, by every means, against giving to strange beggars, which encourages idle vagabond habits, and increases crime and pauperism.

Persons begging should be referred to the Police.

By making these matters known in your parish you will help the endeavours to mitigate and reduce the evils of vagrancy, and the Committee for which I write will greatly appreciate your assistance.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

A. C. MITCHELL,

Chairman. Wilts County Vagrancy Committee.

November 30th, 1896.

4. CIRCULAR TO BOARDS OF GUARDIANS.

TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE .....Board of Guardians.

SIR,

The Wilts County Vagrancy Committee begs to draw the attention of your Board to the following recommendations for the uniform carrying out, throughout the County, of the system for the treatment of Vagrancy, which originated in the Report of a Committee to the Easter Quarter Sessions of the County of Wilts in the year 1881.

- 1.—The Statute passed the following year, 45 and 46 Vict., c. 36 (Casual Poor Act, 1882), gives power to Boards of Guardians to detain the Casual Pauper until 9 a.m. on the second day following admission (i.e. the third day), nor can discharge be claimed until the prescribed labour-task is performed. Should the Casual Pauper be admitted on more than one occasion during one month the power of detention extends to 9 a.m. on the fourth day after admission. Sunday does not count in computing the number of days of detention, so that in all cases he may be detained over Sunday.
- 2.—The County Vagrancy Committee propose to Boards of Guardians that the above Act be put in force, and the full powers of detention exercised in all cases, except the following :—

When the Casual Pauper presents a "way-ticket" in order, showing him to be on the route to a final destination, to which he has declared himself to be travelling, and has done the full day's journey prescribed on the ticket. In this case he shall only be detained until he shall have performed a task of work sufficient to pay for one night's maintenance in the Casual Ward and no longer.

This rule is not to interfere with the practice of detaining over Sunday Vagrants coming in on Saturdays.

A Vagrant appearing a second time within a month should not be discharged until the morning of the fourth day, even supposing his "way-ticket" to be in order.

- 3.—The object the Committee has in view in recommending the above practice for general adoption throughout the County is to endeavour to draw a distinction between the Wayfarer shown by his "way-ticket" to be travelling direct to a final destination, and the Vagrant wandering aimlessly about the country. The former should be forwarded on his journey as quickly as possible, against the latter the deterrent powers of the Act should be strictly enforced.
- 4.—It is earnestly hoped that Boards of Guardians will impress upon their Officers the necessity of carefully questioning Vagrants as to their route and final destination, properly filling in the "way-tickets" and fixing the station for mid-day relief, in all cases according to the printed form, as without this assistance from the Union Officers the system for the regulation and suppression of vagrancy cannot be successfully and uniformly carried out.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

A. C. MITCHELL,

Chairman of County Committee on Vagrancy.

16th July, 1903.

5.—NUMBER OF PROSECUTIONS UNDER THE VAGRANCY ACT FOR BEGGING AND SLEEPING OUT, IN THE COUNTY OF WILTS, FOR THE FIVE YEARS ENDED 31st DECEMBER, 1903.

Appendix
VIII.

Year	Numbers proceeded against.	Discharged.	Convicted.	Sentences.								Convicted and committed to Prison with hard labour to await further sentence at Quarter Sessions.	Remarks.
				Imprisonment.							Fined.
				Total.	Over 6 months.	6 months and over 3.	3 months and over 2.	2 months and over 1.	1 month and over 14 days.	14 days and under.
1899	97	22	75	69	—	—	—	—	2	67	5	1	47 begging, 50 sleeping out.
1900	116	30	86	82	—	—	—	—	4	78	3	1	60 begging, 56 sleeping out.
1901	110	27	83	80	—	—	—	—	2	78	2	1	52 begging, 58 sleeping out.
1902	120	30	90	81	—	—	1	—	6	74	9	—	56 begging, 64 sleeping out.
1903	133	43	90	89	—	—	—	—	5	84	1	—	72 begging, 61 sleeping out.

6.—RETURN OF THE NUMBER OF VAGRANTS RELIEVED IN THE COUNTY OF WILTS FOR THE YEARS 1893 TO 1905 INCLUSIVE.

Year.	Number of vagrants relieved by the police who act as assistant relieving officers.*	Number of nights' relief granted at all the Unions in the County.	Number of vagrants relieved with the mid-day meal.	Cost.	Number of vagrants in possession of good tickets when relieved.
1893 - -	26,896	32,786	12,164	£ 41 s. 8 d. 7	8,414
1894 - -	31,268	38,875	14,363	49 1 10	11,170
1895 - -	30,464	40,999	11,838	40 10 8	8,565
1896 - -	29,271	48,517	10,092	35 2 0	7,957
1897 - -	28,246	46,231	9,173	31 10 8	7,318
1898 - -	29,705	49,686	10,687	40 4 10	7,296
1899 - -	24,724	43,812	8,161	30 17 3	5,331
1900 - -	18,940	35,838	5,874	22 3 4	4,037
1901 - -	24,131	43,037	7,585	29 2 4	4,812
1902 - -	27,537	45,495	11,004	42 5 1	5,295
1903 - -	28,533	44,332	11,430	43 18 9	4,688
1904 - -	36,991	54,353	14,405	56 14 7	5,794
1905 - -	44,038	63,592	16,453	64 8 9	7,745

A member of the police force acts as assistant relieving officer to every Union in the County except Marlborough.

(c) MID-DAY MEAL SYSTEMS UNDER MENDICITY SOCIETIES.

1. DORSET MENDICITY SOCIETY.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SOCIETY FOR 1904.

To the Central Committee Dorset Mendicity Society.

CHIEF CONSTABLE'S OFFICE, DORCHESTER,

5th April, 1905.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN.

I beg to lay before you the 35th Annual Report of the Dorset Mendicity Society.

There has again been a very heavy increase in the number of admissions to casual wards as compared with the preceding year, the numbers being in 1903, 19,301; 1904, 22,654, an increase of 17 per cent.

The increase in the number of admissions to casual wards has in five years amounted to no less than 12,338, as the following figures show, and I fear there is little prospect of any immediate improvement:—Admissions to casual wards in 1900, 10,316; 1901, 14,756; 1902, 18,112; 1903, 19,301; 1904, 22,654.

It is remarkable, however, that the vagrant offences have not increased to any considerable extent. I give below the number of offences under the Vagrant Act for the past five years :—In 1900, 68 ; 1901, 45 ; 1902, 48 ; 1903, 62 ; 1904, 59.

I think, therefore, in consideration of this fact, and the large number of tickets exchanged for bread, which amounted to 35,509, that there is no doubt that the Society has done a good work in ministering to the wants of this large army of tramps, thereby protecting the public against outrages which such a class of men, if left to hunger, would be likely to commit.

As I pointed out in my last Report, the question of the enormous increase in the number of men travelling the roads ostensibly in search of work is a national one, and in my opinion requires legislation to effectively deal with it. Meanwhile the only course open to local bodies is to adopt some such scheme as the Dorset Mendicity Society to render the influx of such a large number of these vagrants into their districts as harmless as possible to peaceable residents.

From inquiries I have made the majority of these wayfarers are simply wandering aimlessly about, without any particular destination in view, which is the result, no doubt, of the depressed state of the labour market, and as a natural consequence these unskilled labourers are the first to suffer from its effect. In former years, when large increases of vagrancy have been experienced, the cause has often been found in the fact that some large public works were in course of construction, and numbers have flocked into the casual wards on their way to obtain employment, but this does not now appear to be the cause; the men are simply wandering about, not knowing where to go.

Although the resources of the Society have been heavily taxed, I am glad to say the public have not failed to answer to the call for increased support; the finances are, therefore, in a satisfactory condition.

The receipts and expenditure are as follow :—

RECEIPTS.		£	s.	d.	EXPENDITURE.		£	s.	d.
Balance in hand 31st December, 1903	-	65	4	11	Amount paid for Bread	- - -	147	19	1
Subscriptions and Sale of Tickets	-	301	19	6	Gratuities to Superintendents	- - -	11	0	0
					Clerk's Salary	- - -	5	0	0
					Collector's Commission	- - -	28	0	0
					Printing and Stationery	- - -	12	11	0
					Postage, Agreement Stamps, &c.	- - -	1	7	2
					Printing Notice Boards	- - -	1	1	0
					Miscellaneous Expenses	- - -	0	18	3
							207	16	6
					Balance in hand 31st December, 1904	-	159	7	11
							£367	4	5

I have the honour to be, my Lords and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient Servant,

D. GRANVILLE, CAPTAIN,

Honorary Secretary.

2. HEREFORDSHIRE MENDICITY SOCIETY.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SOCIETY FOR 1904.

Appendix
VIII.SHIRE HALL, HEREFORD,
January 21st, 1905.

GENTLEMEN,

I beg to lay before you the Twenty-ninth Annual Report of this Society. The receipts and expenditure have been as follows :—

RECEIPTS.	£	s.	d.	EXPENDITURE.	£	s.	d.
By Balance in hand, December 31st, 1903 -	43	13	10	Paid for Bread - - - - -	11	4	0
„ Subscriptions and Donations - -	13	12	6	Postages - - - - -	0	17	2
				Printing and Stationery - - - -	2	8	6
				Gratuity to Clerk for 1903 - - -	5	0	0
				Balance in hand - - - - -	37	16	8
	£57	6	4		£57	6	4

Comparative Return with reference to Wayfarers passing through the County during the last four years :—

Year.	Sleeping in Unions.	Sleeping in Lodging-Houses.	Number of Rations supplied.
1901	18,174	10,798	179
1902	26,246	11,162	2,145
1903	32,436	10,921	2,908
1904	37,055	10,716	2,688

During the year 731 tickets were issued by the police, and 932 by the masters of union workhouses throughout the county.

Of the 2,688 rations supplied, 111 were given for tickets issued by subscribers.

The number of those sleeping in the unions has considerably increased, and is greater than in any year since 1894, and of that number 12,280 were considered by the workhouse masters in the 8 unions of the county to have been persons bona fide in search of work.

In consequence of the expenditure of the Society being in excess of its income, an appeal for further funds was made to the public, and as a result 8 new subscribers have joined the Society.

I have the honour to be,

Gentlemen,

Your obedient Servant,

E. S. STANHOPE,

Honorary Secretary.

To the Central Committee,
Herefordshire Mendicity Society,
Hereford.

APPENDIX IX. COMMON LODGING HOUSES AND VAGRANCY IN LONDON.

(Memorandum handed in by Sir Shirley F. Murphy, Medical Officer of Health of the County of London)

Appendix IX.

The duty of administering the Common Lodging Houses Acts in the county of London was transferred from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to the London County Council on the 1st November, 1894. The information available concerning such houses previously to that date is not large, and, so far as the administration by the police authorities is concerned, is contained in the Reports of the Commissioner of Police for the years 1872 to 1894. In the former year the duty of controlling the common lodging-houses in the extra-metropolitan district was transferred to the local sanitary authorities, thus leaving an area practically coterminous with the administrative county.

The reports of the Commissioner, however, contain little detail as to the working of the Common Lodging Houses Acts of 1851 and 1853, and merely record statistics as to the number of common lodging-houses placed on the register, the authorised accommodation in such houses, the number of summonses issued against the keepers for breaches of the regulations, and so forth.

With regard to the condition of common lodging-houses previously to the passing of the Acts of 1851 and 1853, there are again few sources of information available. Some facts, however, may be gathered from Henry Mayhew's London Labour and the London Poor, based on information obtained in the years antecedent to 1851, and the Constabulary Commissioners' Report, 1839.

In 1839, the Constabulary Commissioners gave the number of "mendicants' lodging houses" as 221, accommodating 2,431 persons. It may be that this number is under-estimated, as the experience of the Council for the last ten years proves that accommodation in common lodging-houses has varied very little, the tendency being to a slight decrease. Mayhew himself, from personal inquiry in 1851, estimated the number of persons living in such houses in London at about 10,000. The average charge was 3d. per night, but the better class houses, such as the Farm House, Harrow Street, Mint, charged 4d. The charge for a double bed was 6d. Mayhew found that both in workhouses and lodging-houses the majority of the inmates were between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five. This differs somewhat from the results obtained from a census of common lodging-houses taken by the Council in November, 1903, when by far the majority of the lodgers were from twenty-five to fifty-five years of age.

In connection with the migration of vagrants, Mayhew notes that at the period of any social commotion they are drawn towards the scene of excitement in large numbers, and he instances the Chartist Riots of 1848. Again the experience of the Council with regard to the frequenters of common lodging-houses differs, for in June, 1897, at the time of the Jubilee celebrations, no special increase in the number of lodgers was noted. This may perhaps be accounted for, however, by the fact that June is a summer month, and no record was taken of the number of persons sleeping out.

With regard to the information contained in the reports of the Commissioner of Police previously referred to, there is only one point to which I need to call attention, and that is the great decrease in the number of registered houses from a maximum of 1,269 in the year 1878, to a minimum of 654 in 1894. This decrease taken in conjunction with the increase in the authorised accommodation for lodgers during the same period, shows that there was a tendency for small houses to be displaced by larger buildings. This increase of large houses has also been noticed since the Council has had the administration of the Common Lodging Houses Acts. The 451 houses at the end of 1904 accommodate over 3,000 more persons than the 1,269 houses of 1878. Lord Rowton's houses too, may be mentioned in this connection; the first house erected in 1893 accommodated only 475 persons. The newest one now in course of construction is estimated to accommodate 1,200 persons.

When in 1894 the London County Council took over the administration of the Common Lodging Houses Acts from the police, there were then 654 houses on the register accommodating 29,827 persons.

The following table (No. I) shows the number of common lodging-houses, and the authorised accommodation from 1st November, 1894, and on 31st December in each succeeding year. Table II. shows the accommodation provided for single men, single women, and married couples for the last three years.

TABLE I.

Year.	Number of houses.	Authorised accommodation.	Year.	Number of houses.	Authorised accommodation.
1894	654	29,827	1900	528	28,311
1895	626	29,574	1901	514	28,037½*
1896	596	29,140	1902	491	28,970½*
1897	581	28,718	1903	470	28,893
1898	560	28,332	1904	451	28,896
1899	544	28,448

*½ = one child. In some instances a cubicle is apportioned for three persons, so that a child may sleep with its parents.

TABLE II.

Year.	Number of houses.	Men.	Women.	Married couples.	Total persons.
31st December, 1902	491	26,001½	1,823	573	28,970½
„ 1903	470	25,718	2,281	447	28,893
„ 1904	451	25,602	2,450	422	28,896

In 1902 the London County Council obtained powers under Part IX. of its General Powers Act of that year for the annual licensing of common lodging-houses. The Act, which came into force on the 1st January, 1903, also conferred somewhat larger powers upon the Council of making bye-laws. New bye-laws made by the Council under that Act have been since approved by the Local Government Board, and came into force on 1st October, 1903. These replace the regulations made under the Act of 1851. Before these additional powers were obtained under the new Act, the Council was unable to enforce the execution of certain structural alterations necessary to ensure the safety of the inmates in case of fire. Moreover, many common lodging-houses were, as judged by the standard applied to tenement houses, overcrowded, and again the separation of the sexes was incomplete. The abatement of such overcrowding and the more complete separation of the sexes have now been effected, and with regard to structural alterations to minimise the risk of fire, in many cases the works have been completed, and in the remainder they are well in hand.

In Table I., submitted above, the reduction in the authorised accommodation, as a result of the new powers gained in 1902, is not apparent, inasmuch as the total reduction is almost exactly balanced by the addition of several large Salvation Army and other shelters accommodating together about 2,500 persons. The improvement in the separation of the sexes is shown more clearly in Table III. below. Up to the end of 1902 accommodation for single men and single women was often provided in houses which also received married couples, and in the case of three houses accommodating together 207 persons, single men and single women were received in each house. Of course the regulations as to provision of separate sleeping rooms for the three classes of lodgers—single men, single women, and married couples, were enforced within each building, but the Council considered it desirable to limit the use of a house, except in the case of houses where married couples are accommodated, to persons of one sex only. The Council's efforts in this direction have been very successful, and in only four instances, where the circumstances are exceptional, are single men and single women received in a house together, or in a house where married couples are accommodated.

TABLE III.

At end of year.	Houses accommodating together
	Men, women and married couples.		Men and married couples.		Women and married couples.		Men and women.
	No. of houses.	No. of beds.	No. of houses.	No. of beds.	No. of houses.	No. of beds.	No. of houses.	No. of beds.
1902	6	160	15	424	27	734	3	207
1904	—	—	2	83	1	9	1	49

In 1896 the Council caused an inquiry to be made into the shelters in London where lodgers were received without payment, or for nominal payment, or in return for work. As a result of this inquiry it was considered desirable that these places should be brought under control. To this end a summons was issued against General Booth of the Salvation Army. The summons was dismissed by the Stipendiary. The case (Logsdon v. Booth) was taken to the High Court, and decided in favour of the Council on the 23rd December, 1899. The Lord Chief Justice, however, in giving his decision expressed the hope "that those who are charged with the enforcement of the law will do all they can consistently with their duty and consistently with their effecting the objects of the law to avoid anything like harshness or unreasonableness in its enforcement."

The Council has made considerable effort to give effect to the recommendation of the Lord Chief Justice. In some instances this forbearance has caused some delay in the carrying out of the necessary requirements, and thus it is that, although the judgment was obtained at the end of 1899, these shelters were not included as common lodging-houses until 1903. The works required by the Council are in all cases now well in hand, if not completed.

A question the Council has had to consider in giving effect to the views of the Lord Chief Justice is the difference in the character of the bedding provided in shelters as distinct from common lodging-houses. In common lodging-houses, the bedding consisted of an iron bedstead furnished in the usual way. In shelters the accommodation consisted, in some instances, of American cloth covered mattresses laid upon the floor; in others, a floor bunk was provided furnished with an American cloth mattress and a coverlet also of American cloth; and again in many instances, multiple bunks were provided consisting of a frame containing two or three bunks one above the other. The Council felt it necessary to require some improvement in the bedding provided in shelters, and in December, 1903, informed the respective keepers that the use of mattresses on the floor and multiple bunks must be discontinued within a year, and proper bedsteads be provided in place of floor bunks, within five years.

With regard to the prices for beds charged in 1899 there were, excluding shelters, 28,448 beds in registered common lodging-houses, and of these 13,075 beds were let at 4d. a night. In 1903, when most of the shelters had been included, there were 28,893 beds, of which 7,608 were let at 4d. or less per night. At the present time, among the 28,896 beds in shelters and common lodging-houses, there are 6,932 beds which are let at 4d. or less per night. The great reduction in the number of cheap beds in London since 1899 is the more remarkable having regard to the number of shelters recently added to the list.

The following table shows the prices charged and the number of beds at each price at the present time.

TABLE IV.

Beds for	Free beds.	For labour.	2d.	3d.	4d.	5d.	6d.	7d.	8d.	9d.	1/—.
Single men - -	921	585	*838	358	3,755	9,921	8,905	19	33	69	39
Single women - -	177	—	276	—	—	127	1,230	168	139	150	91
Married couples -	—	-	—	—	—	—	—	— {	4	16	383
									—	19	at 10d.

* The actual sum paid is 4d., but this includes two meals estimated to cost 2d. There are also 22 beds at 5d. per night, including food.

Appendix
IX.

In addition to the above are two free shelters, one for 140 men and 110 women, and another for twenty men, concerning which the Council is awaiting a decision of the Courts, and a fourpenny shelter for 125 men (this sum including food) which will be open in a few days.*

Several censuses have been taken at various times with the object of showing how far the authorised accommodation is made use of. The results of these censuses are shown in the following table.

TABLE V.

Date of census.	Authorised accommodation.				Number of persons occupying beds.
	Men.	Women.	Married couples.	Total persons.	Men.	Women.	Married couples.	Children.	Total persons.
21st June, 1897 - - -	—	—	—	28,929	19,083	1,770	—	139	20,992
23rd June, 1897 - - -	—	—	—	28,929	18,735	1,693	—	105	20,533
Average for week ending 28th June, 1902 - - -	25,501½	1,862	539	28,441½	20,922	1,635	473	—	23,503
Average for week ending 26th October, 1902 - - -	25,751	1,843	556	28,706	22,031	1,844	463	—	24,801
14th November, 1903 - -	25,718	2,281	447	28,893	22,596	1,655	428	—	25,107
29th January, 1904 - -	25,718	2,281	447	28,893	21,058	1,517	390	87	23,442
17th February, 1905† - -	25,671	2,450	422	28,965	21,055	1,578	357	34	23,381

† These figures include 69 beds for men in houses in the City of London, of which 62 beds were occupied.

These figures show an average of between five and six thousand vacant beds each night in London common lodging-houses.

In November, 1903, an attempt was made to classify the total common lodging-house population, including deputies, their wives and families, according to age and sex. This census gave a total of 25,662 men, women, and children, of which number over 500 persons belonged to the families of deputies. The results are shown below :—

TABLE VI.

CENSUS TAKEN 14TH NOVEMBER 1903.

Age period.	Under 10.	10.—	15.—	20.—	25.—	35.—	45.—	55.—	65.—	75 and upwards.	All ages.
Males - -	55	53	738	2,589	5,215	6,018	4,823	2,822	822	120	23,255
Females - -	76	39	89	261	515	605	455	258	94	15	2,407
Persons - -	131	92	827	2,850	5,730	6,623	5,278	3,080	916	135	25,662

Infectious Disease among the Inmates of Common Lodging Houses.

Since the Council has administered the Common Lodging Houses Acts, the only infectious disease which has manifested any prevalence among the inmates of these houses has been small-pox. It may be observed, however, that during this period London has been almost free from typhus, and there has been absence of opportunity for the common lodging-house population to be affected with that disease.

With respect to small-pox, London suffered from considerable prevalence of this disease in 1901 and 1902. The outbreak, however, did not have its beginning in the common lodging-house population, which indeed was not invaded until a considerable number of cases had occurred in the general population. The outbreak began in the middle of the year 1901, in an area of St. Pancras and St. Marylebone, much in touch with foreigners by whom the disease was probably imported from Paris, and the common lodging-house population of Holborn, St. Pancras and Westminster was subsequently invaded in October and November, 1901. From that time the disease spread to other common lodging-houses in various districts of London.

The number of cases occurring in the total population of London and in the common lodging-houses in the several months of 1901 to 1904 are shown in the following table :—

* This shelter has been opened since this was written.

TABLE VII.

1901-4.

Appendix
IX.COMPARISON OF THE NUMBER OF CASES OF SMALL-POX NOTIFIED IN LONDON, AND THE NUMBER OF CASES ATTRIBUTED TO COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

			Number of cases.
Year.			Jan.	Feb.	Mar.	Apr.	May	June	July	Aug.	Sep.	Oct.	Nov.	Dec.	Totals.
London	-	1901	3	3	1	—	2	5	19	97	156	174	586	654	1,700
G.L.H.	-	"	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2	18	43	71	135
London	-	1902	960	1,512	2,004	1,180	1,147	599	192	131	28	12	19	11	7,795
G.L.H.	-	"	120	144	149	96	96	40	2	2	—	—	—	—	649
London	-	1903	15	11	10	39	65	55	54	46	26	41	33	18	413
G.L.H.	-	"	2	1	—	9	1	3	—	—	—	14	2	1	33
London	-	1904	21	19	106	137	87	51	41	3	5	1	4	18	493
G.L.H.	-	"	—	2	27	10	4	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	45

The Council's administration aimed at the early detection of cases of small-pox in common lodging-houses with a view to their removal to hospital. For this purpose the inmates of all common lodging-houses invaded by small-pox were systematically examined, the houses being visited in the early morning when the lodgers were most likely to be within doors. In November, 1901, the Council rented all the beds in a women's lodging-house which had been invaded, and removed to it the inmates of some other common lodging-houses for women who had been exposed to small-pox infection, the Council thus paying for food and lodging. These people were therefore practically quarantined for some weeks. In all other instances effort was made to retain in the common lodging-houses which were invaded by small-pox the other inmates who had been exposed to infection of small-pox, the price of the bed, and in some instances a small allowance for food being allowed to those of the inmates who would otherwise be removing to another lodging-house. The inspection of these inmates was made in the first instance by the Council's inspectors, who called in whenever necessary medical men who were selected for this purpose by the Council in several sanitary districts.

In districts especially invaded the Council arranged for a medical inspection of all the inmates of some of the houses in the early morning so as to secure the early detection of the disease. Moreover, lodgers who had been especially exposed to infection were, so far as their sleeping arrangements were concerned, placed in particular rooms until the period of incubation of the disease had expired. No difficulty was experienced in making these examinations, but efforts to induce the inmates to be vaccinated were much less successful, although when the public vaccinator visited the common lodging-houses for this purpose the Council's officers exercised such persuasion as they could. In some districts better results were obtained by the local authorities offering as an inducement sums varying from 1s. to 2s. 6d. to the inmates so as to ensure that they should not be at a disadvantage if the vaccination temporarily incapacitated them from working. The best results were thus obtained by the Medical Officer of Health of Southwark, who himself vaccinated large numbers, paying them a small sum as stated above.

As a matter of fact small-pox did not show any great ability to spread in common lodging-houses, the total attacks only being in the proportion of about 2½ per cent. of the common lodging-house population.

¶ Inquiry made by the Council's officers in certain common lodging-houses appeared to point to the conclusion that at the beginning of the outbreak nearly three-quarters of the common lodging-house population had either been vaccinated and re-vaccinated or had previously suffered from small-pox, while about one-fourth had only been vaccinated in infancy, leaving a very small proportion totally unprotected either by vaccination or previous attack of small-pox.

The Cost of Living of the Poorer Inmates of Common Lodging-Houses.

¶ From inquiries made among the poorer frequenters of common lodging-houses I am able to submit a fairly representative table showing the cost of living of such persons. The staple food appears to be bread, or bread and margarine, with occasionally fish or meat and potatoes. Fried fish is occasionally bought, but herrings, either boiled or fried, and bloaters are the favourite articles of food. The meat referred to in the table consists principally of trimmings or waste pieces, technically known as "block ornaments," and may be purchased at 2½d. or less a pound. The principal beverage is tea, and of this large quantities are drunk. Milk is very little used but sugar is an almost indispensable adjunct. It is estimated that a halfpennyworth of tea, and a halfpenny worth of sugar will make from 1½ to 2 pints of tea. After use the tea leaves are not wasted, but are handed over to the less prosperous lodgers, who make a second decoction by the addition of hot water. This operation is known as "bulling the teapot." The large consumption of tea in common lodging-houses is no doubt due to the prohibition of alcoholic liquors in the kitchens.

The cost of living, including bed, as shown in the table is about 1s. a day. Of course, if a lodger is fortunate enough to obtain some fairly lucrative employment, he may raise his standard of living, but, according to the statements made to me, more often spends the additional money in the purchase of beer. It is impossible to state, with any certainty the average earnings of the habitué of the common lodging-house, inasmuch as his employment is at all times precarious, and he may go for long periods without work at all. It might be estimated, however, that from 3s. to 15s. a week represents the usual earnings of the poorest class, which probably constitutes about 30 per cent. of the total common lodging-house population.

Women for the same daily expenditure appear to live somewhat better than men, due to the fact that women club together to a greater extent, and are thus able to spend their money to better advantage. Women, however, as a rule, have to pay 6d. for a bed, whereas men often pay 5d. or even 4d.

Table VIII., (a) (b) and (c) show the actual expenditure on food and lodging, in particular instances on particular days, of inmates of common lodging-houses as ascertained by the Council's inspectors, and are given here only with the object of showing the kind of food on which the inmates of common lodging-houses largely subsist.

TABLE VIII.

(a)—MEN.

Appendix
IX.

Occupation.	Age.	Breakfast.	Dinner.	Tea.	Supper.	Cost of food.	Cost of bed.	Total cost per day.
Dock Labourer -	—	Tea and Sugar $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Milk - $\frac{1}{4}$ d. Bread - 1d. Margarine, $\frac{1}{4}$ d.	2 lbs. Potatoes, 1d. Bloaters - 1d. Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Tea and Sugar, $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Milk - $\frac{1}{4}$ d. Bread $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Margarine $\frac{1}{4}$ d.	None.	-/6	-/4	-/10
Dock Labourer -	—	Tea Bread & Butter } 2d.	Soup & Bread } 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Tea Bread & Butter } 2d.	None.	-/5 $\frac{1}{2}$	-/4	-9 $\frac{1}{2}$
Dock Labourer -	43	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - 1d. Dripping $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	—	—	Meat, $\frac{3}{4}$ lb. 2d. Bread - 1d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	-/5 $\frac{1}{2}$	-/4	-/9 $\frac{1}{2}$
Dock Labourer -	51	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Toasted Bread } 1d.	—	5 Fresh Herrings, 2d. Potatoes 1d. Tea - $\frac{1}{4}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Fried Fish 1d. Potatoes 1d.	-/8	-/4	1/-
Dock Labourer -	54	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Butter - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	—	Bread - 1d. Meat, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. 2d.	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	-/6 $\frac{1}{2}$	-/4	-/10 $\frac{1}{2}$
Dock Labourer For 4 consecutive days—	(1)	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Bloater, 1d. Bread - 1d.	—	—	-/3	-/4	-/7
	(2)	—	Meat - 4d. Bread - 1d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Steak - 4d. Potatoes 1d. Greens 1d. Tea - $\frac{1}{4}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Fish - 2d. Potatoes 1d.	1/4	-/4	1/8
	(3)	—	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	—	Meat - 2d. Bread - 1d.	-/4	-/4	-/8
	(4)	Bacon - 2d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - 1d. Butter - 1d.	—	Meat - 2d. Bread - 1d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Faggots 1d. Pease-Pudding, 1d.	-/11	-/4	1/3
City Porter -	—	Dry toast. Weak tea.	Soup & Bread.	None.	None.	Nil	Nil	Nil	Out of work—no bed.
Coalie -	34	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Butter - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Steak - 4d. Bread - 1d.	—	Toast - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	-/8 $\frac{1}{2}$	-/4	1/0 $\frac{1}{2}$
	35	—	$\frac{1}{3}$ share of Meat - 4d. Potatoes, 1d. Potherbs, 1d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - 1d.	—	-/4 $\frac{1}{2}$	-/4	-/8 $\frac{1}{2}$
Coalie -	40	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Steak - 3d. Potatoes - 1d.	—	Haddock 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	-/8	-/4	1/-
Labourer -	50	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - 1d.	Bacon Bones 2d. Potatoes 1d. Potherbs 1d.	—	Eels - 2d. Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	-/8 $\frac{1}{2}$	-/4	1/0 $\frac{1}{2}$
Labourer -	34	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Dripping $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Bread - 1d. Meat - 2d.	—	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - 1d.	-/7	-/4	-/11
Rag Dealer -	40	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	—	Bloater 1d. Bread - 1d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Fish - 2d. Potatoes 1d.	-/7	-/4	-/11

(b)—WOMEN.

Appendix
IX.

Occupation.	Age.	Breakfast.	Dinner.	Tea.	Supper.	Cost of food.	Cost of bed.	Total cost per day.
Average of four women	—	$\frac{1}{4}$ share of— (Milk - $\frac{1}{4}$ d. Liver - 2d. Bacon - 3d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - 1d.	$\frac{1}{4}$ share of— 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ lbs. Meat 4d. 5 lbs. Potatoes 2d. Bread - 1d.	$\frac{1}{4}$ share of— (Bread - 1d. Butter $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar } 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ d. Tea } Milk }	$\frac{1}{4}$ share of— Fish and Potatoes 4d.	-/5 $\frac{1}{2}$	-/6	-/11 $\frac{1}{2}$
Average of three women	—	$\frac{1}{3}$ share of— 3 Bloaters 2d Bread - 1d. Milk } Tea } 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar } Margarine $\frac{1}{2}$ d	$\frac{1}{3}$ share of— 1 lb. Boiled Bacon 4d. 3 lbs. Potatoes 2d.	$\frac{1}{3}$ share of— (Bread - 1d. Margarine $\frac{1}{2}$ d Milk } Tea } 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar }	—	-/5	-/6	-/11
Single woman	40	Bacon - 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Milk - $\frac{1}{4}$ d.	—	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Steak and Onions 4d. (in shop).	-/10 $\frac{1}{4}$	-/6	1/4 $\frac{1}{4}$
Single woman	34	$\frac{1}{2}$ share of— (Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - 2d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Meat - 3d.	—	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Butter - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Liver and Bacon 3d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	-/9	-/6	1/3
Single woman	40	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	—	—	Fish - 3d. Potatoes $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	-/4 $\frac{1}{2}$	-/6	-/10 $\frac{1}{2}$
Single woman	28	Bread - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Butter - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Bacon - 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	—	Bread - 1d. Butter - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	—	-/6	-/6	1/-

(c)—MARRIED COUPLES.

Occupation.	Age.	Breakfast.	Dinner.	Tea.	Supper.	Cost of food.	Cost of bed.	Total cost per day.
Coalie and Wife	—	Sugar - 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Tea - 2d. Bread - 3d. Butter 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Meat - 3d. Potatoes 1d. Potherbs 1d. Tea & Sugar	—	3 Bloaters 2d Bread Tea - Sugar -	1/3	1/-	2/3
Coalie and Wife	—	Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	Hambone 3d. Bread - 1d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	—	Bread - 1d. Tea - $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Sugar - $\frac{1}{2}$ d.	-/8	1/-	1/8

Inasmuch as the lodgers referred to in the above table were only able to describe the amount of food they purchased in terms of money, I made some inquiries of lodgers in Whitechapel, and weighed food purchased for me by them. The following are the results thus obtained on Friday the 7th April of this year:—

(a) A. R., who helps in the lodging-house and is paid 1s. a day and given his night's lodging, purchased from shop opposite the lodging-house:— $\frac{1}{2}$ d. bread, 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ ozs.; $\frac{1}{2}$ d. tea and sugar mixed, nearly 2 ozs.; $\frac{1}{2}$ d. margarine, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ ozs.; $\frac{1}{2}$ d. dripping, 1 $\frac{1}{4}$ oz.; 1d. cooked meat, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ ozs., no bone, a considerable proportion of fat.

(b) J. C., waterside labourer, was given 3d. to buy a dinner, and he obtained:—

(i.) Twopenn'orth of "pieces," i.e., "block ornaments," from a stall in Brick Lane—Chump chop, 2 pieces of breast of mutton. 12 $\frac{1}{4}$ ozs., very little bone, about half fat.

On whole a better bargain than the 1d. of cooked meat purchased by A. R., not more bulk, but promising to be more savoury and appetising.

(ii.) Penn'orth "potherbs"—3 carrots, 2 onions, 2 turnips, 1 lb. 3 ozs.

This man said he earned 2s. 3d. on Tuesday (April 4th), nothing since.

A butcher gave him a piece of meat on Wednesday.

A friend gave him 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. mutton and $\frac{1}{2}$ d. bread, Thursday.

A newspaper man gave him $\frac{1}{2}$ d. bread this morning (Friday, April 7th), otherwise nothing to eat for three days.

(c) E. B., given 6d. to buy dinner for three women clubbing together, she returned with:—3d. of meat, 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ ozs. (piece of steak, trimmings of loin of mutton); 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. potatoes, 3 lbs.; 1d. potherbs (3 onions and 1 carrot), 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ ozs.

Appendix
IX.

Says she has eaten nothing to-day save a piece of bread a woman gave her.
Has a few ticks to mend and will earn 6d to-day.
Never eats breakfast.
Would sleep on a doorstep to-night if not given money for a bed.

(d) K. H., lodger, had a piece of bread and butter for breakfast, but has no money left, and will have to "rough it to-night" as she cannot pay for a bed. Sent to buy a 3d. dinner "packet," cost 2½d., as it is cold, and comprised: breast of mutton, 5 ozs.; good deal of bone, potatoes and greens—1 lb. 3 ozs. (all cooked).

K. H. also bought penn'orth butter, 1 oz.; ½d. margarine, 1½th oz.; ½d. tea dust, ¾th oz.; ¾d. sugar, 2¼ ozs.; ½d. milk, about 4 ozs.; ½d. bread 7 ozs.; 2d. loaf, 1 lb. 10¾ ozs.—paid another ½d. to bring it up to 2 lb.; 1½d. fish and potatoe chips, plaice (cooked in batter), 4½ ozs.; potatoes, 5½ ozs.

As illustration of the prices paid by lodgers who purchase penny worth's and halfpenny worth's, it may be pointed out that in particular instances mentioned above, the sugar cost a trifle more than 3½d per lb., a twopenny loaf weighed 1 lb. 10¾ ozs., while tea dust cost 1s. 9d. per lb., and butter 1s. 4d. per lb., prices comparable to those paid for articles of the best quality when bought in larger bulk.

The Cost of Clothing of the Poorer Inmates of Common Lodging-Houses.

The cost of clothing to the poorer common lodging-house inmate is small. One man stated that the clothes he then wore cost him 8d., including:—

Coat	-	-	-	-	-	3d.
Trousers	-	-	-	-	-	1d.
Waistcoat	-	-	-	-	-	Nil.
Shirt	-	-	-	-	-	4d.
Boots	-	-	-	-	-	Nil.

A favourite market for clothes is Middlesex Street (Petticoat Lane), on Sunday morning. A sample suit bought for me by one of the lodgers cost 2s. 4½d., apportioned as follows:—

Coat	-	-	-	-	-	8d.
Trousers	-	-	-	-	-	9d.
Shirt	-	-	-	-	-	3d.
Waistcoat	-	-	-	-	-	2d.
Socks	-	-	-	-	-	1d.
Boots	-	-	-	-	-	3d.
Cap	-	-	-	-	-	2½d.

Boots can be obtained at all prices from 8d. or 9d. a pair upwards, but odd boots may be purchased as cheaply as 4d. or 5d. a pair.

Women's clothing is a little more expensive than that required by men, but the following is an average statement of cost:—

Chemise	-	-	-	-	-	2d. to 4d.
Drawers	-	-	-	-	-	2d. to 4d.
Corsets	-	-	-	-	-	2d.
2 Petticoats	-	-	-	-	-	6d. to 8d.
Stockings (new)	-	-	-	-	-	2½d. a pair.
(Odd Stockings, 1d. per pair.)
Skirt	-	-	-	-	-	6d.
Bodice	-	-	-	-	-	3d.
Coat	-	-	-	-	-	6d.
Hat	-	-	-	-	-	6¾d.
Boots	-	-	-	-	-	8d. per pair.
(Odd Boots, 2½d. per pair.)

Total cost from 3s. to 4s. 6d.

Inquiries concerning the number of Homeless Persons in London.

On the night of the 29th of January, 1904, effort was made by the County Council to enumerate the number of people in London who, on that night, were walking the streets, or sleeping on staircases, in doorways, or under arches, with a result that the Council's inspectors counted 1,463 men, 116 women, 46 boys, and 4 girls, who appeared to be under 16 years of age, walking the streets, 100 males and 68 females asleep on staircases, in doorways, or under arches, making a total of 1,797. The figures suggest that an estimate that one person in every 2,000 was homeless would probably approximate to the truth.

On that night 23,442 persons slept in common lodging-houses and shelters, viz., 21,058 single men, 1,517 single women, 390 married couples, and 54 boys and 33 girls below 16 years of age. The number of men in Rowton Houses was 3,530. The same night there was vacant accommodation in the common lodging-houses and shelters for 5,365 men, 603 women, and 53 married couples. In the casual wards there were 1,034 men, 175 women, and 9 children, the available accommodation being for 1,243 men, 410 women, and 114 women and children.

Returns from the keepers of common lodging-houses and shelters showed that 832 men, 118 women, and 7 children were the same night turned away from these places mainly on account of inability to pay for a night's lodging.

In connection with the number of people turned away from common lodging-houses through inability to pay for their bed, an experience of certain keepers of common lodging-houses is interesting. It was a general practice to allow frequenters of common lodging-houses to occupy the kitchens during the day, and indeed until closing time, which is usually at midnight or 1 a.m. The keepers did not know until that time which of these people would pay for a bed and which would not, with the result that a large number of "turn outs," as they are called, resulted.

Early last year, however, a number of keepers resolved to alter this practice, and refused to allow anyone to occupy the kitchen without payment, and as a result there were not only no "turn outs" from these houses, but men who before used to be "turn outs" found work and paid for their night's lodging. I understand, however, that this new practice has not been maintained.

On the night of the 17th February last, effort was again made to count the number of persons in London apparently homeless, the Council's officers and the officers of several of the sanitary authorities engaging in the inquiry. The results were as follows:—1,869 men and 312 women were found in the streets or on staircases or under arches, or, 2,181 in all; of these 827 men and 39 women were in Wych Street, Strand, where food was being given away by the Salvation Army, and 161 men and 60 women in Whitechapel Road, where food was also being given away by the Salvation Army. In a tent of the Church Army in Clare Market, Strand, 300 men were or had been chopping wood, they were given two meals during the night, and were given tickets for beds in common lodging-houses which, however, would not be used until the following night; these should be added to the total. There were also 64 men in premises of the Salvation Army in Wych Street, who subsequently were admitted into the Salvation Army shelter in Millbank Street. These are not therefore regarded as homeless.*

In the common lodging-houses and shelters that night were 23,381 persons, viz., 21,055 single men, 1,578 single women, 357 married couples, and 34 children under ten years of age. All these people were lodgers, and to these might be added 140 men and 110 women in the Providence Row night shelter, as yet unlicensed, and 59 in an unlicensed shelter in Paradise Street, Rotherhithe, both of which are free shelters. Among the inmates of the common lodging-houses were 1,600 men who had been given tickets for their lodging by the Church Army. The number of men in Rowton Houses was 3,589, or an increase of 59, while in Carrington House at Deptford, belonging to the County Council, were 461 men.

The same night there was vacant accommodation in the common lodging-houses for 4,610 men, 856 women, and 62 married couples.*

There was also vacant accommodation in the casual wards for 337 men, 213 women, and 117 women and children.*

* Tables showing the distribution of homeless persons and the extent to which use was made of the accommodation in casual wards, and the vacant accommodation in common lodging-houses, are appended to this statement.

Returns made by the keepers of common lodging-houses and shelters show that the number of people turned away for various causes was as follows:—

TABLE IX.

NUMBER TURNED AWAY ON NIGHT OF 17TH FEBRUARY, 1905, AND CAUSE.

Reason why turned away.	Men.	Women.	Married couples.	Total persons.
No money - - - - -	670	64	4	742
House full - - - - -	198	1	6	211
Drunk - - - - -	7	1	0	8
Too dirty - - - - -	21	0	0	21
Creating disturbance - - - - -	0	1	0	1
Bad characters - - - - -	5	0	0	5
TOTALS - - - - -	961	67	10	988

The number (2,481) of homeless persons found on the night of the 17th February, 1905, is greater by 684 than the number found in the beginning of 1904, and, indeed the fact that the Church Army gave away 1,600 tickets, and the Salvation Army gave free beds to 64 persons, suggests that this difference might be as large as 2,348. In the districts not included in the first census 196 persons were found. It is, of course, impossible to say how many of the persons receiving food, and who were reckoned as homeless, may subsequently have found their way to their own homes; how many who were given free beds would otherwise have provided for themselves, and how many may have been attracted to London by the expectation of receiving assistance. One of the Council's inspectors enquired of 318 persons receiving food whether they were Londoners, and in 277 cases the reply was in the affirmative, 39 persons admitting coming from the provinces, while two were foreigners. The Chief Inspector put a similar question to 100 men in the Church Army tent in the Strand, and 30 stated that they had come to London so recently as from one day to one month previously. Again the Council's inspectors found, among the persons receiving food, many who were known to them as frequenters of common lodging-houses. It is noteworthy that, notwithstanding the fact that the Church Army issued tickets for beds in common lodging-houses to 1,600 men, the actual number of persons who slept in common lodging-houses and shelters that night was some 60 less than on the night of the first census in January of last year.

The Administration of the Cleansing of Persons Act, 1897.
The Departmental Committee may perhaps like to have before them the results of an enquiry recently made by Dr. Wanklyn into the extent of administration in London of the Cleansing of Persons Act, 1897. This Act empowers London Sanitary Authorities to provide, free of cost, the means for persons infested by vermin to have their persons and clothes cleansed. Only three local authorities have as yet made any special provision for this purpose, viz., St. Marylebone, St. Pancras, and more recently, Hackney. The other local authorities have either arranged for applicants to go to the casual wards for cleansing, or the disinfecting station is utilised. In St. Marylebone and St. Pancras the accommodation has been much used. There has not yet been sufficient experience to make any positive statement as to Hackney, but there is, in my opinion, no doubt that many persons would avail themselves of this provision if it were made.

Rates of Mortality among Persons resorting to Common Lodging-houses.

Table D shows the mortality per 1,000 living at certain age periods, among the male inmates of common lodging-houses in the years 1903 and 1904, compared with males at corresponding ages in London in 1903. The mortality figures include deaths of male lodgers occurring either in common lodging-houses or in public institutions to which they have been removed from such houses. Inasmuch as the number of lodgers in common lodging-houses is variable, Table E is supplied, showing the number of deaths from certain causes per 1,000 deaths for all causes. Similar information is given for London as a whole for the purposes of comparison.

TABLE A.

Table showing the distribution of homeless persons in the various sanitary districts in London on the night of the 17th February, 1905.

Borough.	Men.	Women.	Borough.	Men.	Women.
Bermondsey - - -	75	—	Paddington - - -	—	2
Camberwell - - -	8	8	Marylebone - - -	7	11
Chelsea - - - - -	21	11	St. Pancras - - -	1	—
City of London - -	59	2	Shoreditch - - -	8	—
Finsbury - - - - -	30	11	Southwark - - -	74	81
Hammersmith - - -	11	3	*Stepney - - - - -	303	116
Islington - - - - -	12	—	†Westminster - - -	1,212	51
Kensington - - - -	5	7
Lambeth - - - - -	43	9	TOTAL - - - - -	1,869	312

* Including 161 men and 60 women receiving food at the Salvation Army Shelter, Whitechapel Road, E.
† Including 827 men and 39 women receiving food at the Salvation Army Shelter at Wych Street, W.C., and 300 men waiting for work and food outside the Church Army Tent, Clare Market, Strand, W.C. and excluding 300 men actually inside the tent previously mentioned.

TABLE B.

CASUAL WARDS.

Appendix
IX.

Union or Parish.	Accommodation.				No. of vagrants on night of Friday, 17th February, 1905.
	Males.	Females.	Double, i.e., women and children.	Total.	Men.	Women.	Children.	Total.
Bermondsey - - - -	38	8	4	50	35	—	—	35
Camberwell - - - -	39	15	8	62	29	4	—	33
Chelsea - - - -	48	12	6	66	13	2	—	15
Fulham and Hammersmith -	42	20	5	67	28	4	—	32
St. George's - - - -	38	19	2	59	37	13	—	50
St. George, East - - - -	82	15	4	101	23	4	—	27
St. Giles and St. George - -	52	18	5	75	37	10	—	47
Greenwich - - - -	36	10	6	52	36	3	—	39
Hackney - - - -	26	10	6	42	44	12	1	57
Hampstead - - - -	10	10	—	20	5	4	—	9
Holborn - - - -	48	24	4	76	47	17	1	65
Islington - - - -	67	13		80	11	1	—	12
Kensington - - - -	40	12	8	60	40	11	—	51
Lambeth - - - -	40	34	4	78	29	14	—	43
Lewisham - - - -	30	16	8	54	27	6	—	33
London, City - - - -	50	14	2	66	48	11	—	59
St. Marylebone - - - -	65	26	3	94	65	25	—	90
Mile End - - - -	22	4	6	32	22	5	—	27
Paddington - - - -	50	11	4	65	47	9	—	56
St. Pancras - - - -	48	12	6	66	21	2	—	23
Poplar - - - -	49	7	3	59	49	9	—	58
Shoreditch - - - -	30	9	4	43	20	6	—	26
Southwark - - - -	54	26	5	85	10	2	—	12
Stepney - - - -	34	12	4	50	11	5	—	16
Strand - - - -	86	20	3	109	86	18	1	105
Wandsworth - - - -	42	8	5	55	19	4	—	23
Whitechapel - - - -	55	30		85	55	7	—	62
Woolwich - - - -	42	5	5	52	32	2	—	34
TOTALS - - - -	1,263	420	120	1,803	926	210	3	1,139

TABLE C.

VACANT ACCOMMODATION IN COMMON LODGING-HOUSES ON NIGHT OF 17TH FEBRUARY, 1905.

Sanitary District.	Vacant accommodation for				Appendix IX.
	Men.	Women.	Married couples.	Total persons.
Battersea - - - - -	42	52	3	100
Bermondsey - - - - -	246	—	—	246
Bethnal Green - - - - -	154	—	—	154
Camberwell - - - - -	132	—	—	132
Chelsea - - - - -	65	15	—	80
City of London - - - - -	7	—	—	7
Deptford - - - - -	180	—	—	180
Finsbury - - - - -	70	—	—	70
Fulham - - - - -	8	—	—	8
Greenwich - - - - -	48	—	—	48
Hackney - - - - -	96	—	—	96
Hammersmith - - - - -	103	4	1	109
Hampstead - - - - -	—	—	—	—
Holborn - - - - -	183	122	—	305
Islington - - - - -	280	105	5	395
Kensington - - - - -	103	105	19	246
Lambeth - - - - -	183	—	—	183
Lewisham - - - - -	8	—	—	8
Paddington - - - - -	35	11	9	64
Poplar - - - - -	342	—	—	342
St. Marylebone - - - - -	212	1	—	213
St. Pancras - - - - -	61	54	—	115
Shoreditch - - - - -	110	—	—	110
Southwark - - - - -	721	190	2	915
Stepney - - - - -	820	163	1	985
Stoke Newington - - - - -	1	—	—	1
Wandsworth - - - - -	38	—	9	56
Westminster - - - - -	345	24	—	369
Woolwich - - - - -	17	10	13	53
TOTALS - - - - -	4,610	856	62	5,590

SUMMARY OF REPLIES RECEIVED FROM THE CHIEF CONSTABLES OF COUNTIES IN ENGLAND AND WALES IN AUGUST, 1904.

County.	1. Do you make periodical reports dealing with vagrants in your County?	2. Can you state the number of vagrants in the County on any one night during the present year?	3. Can you say whether there has been any increase during the last few years in the number of vagrants in the County? If so, can you assign any cause for such increase?	4. Are any of your officers employed as Assistant Relieving Officers as regards vagrants?	5. Is there in force in the County any system of— (a) way-ticket for wayfarers, or (b) mid-day meal for vagrants?
Anglesey - - -	No.	No.	No.	Yes; two constables.	No.
Bedford - - -	Only return of number of work-house tickets issued by the police to vagrants.	No.	No. (Railway and any large works of a temporary nature cause increase in numbers.)	Yes; two superintendents.	No.
Berks - - -	Only as to crimes committed by tramps.	259 on 23rd July in workhouses and common lodging-houses.	Increase due to end of the war and general depression in trade.	Yes. Is in favour of system.	Not now. In former years both systems were in force.
Brecon - - -	No.	No.	No.	No.	No.
Bucks - - -	No.	No.	Slight increase, due to railway works.	No.	No.
Cambridge - - -	Quarterly report of number of vagrants relieved.	Gives number of vagrants relieved on certain days varying from one to nine.	Decrease in last five years of nearly 50 per cent. in number relieved over the previous five years.	Yes; three.	No.
Cardigan - - -	Quarterly report of number of vagrants relieved.	34 on 18th March.	Large increase in recent years, especially since end of war. Laziness the chief cause. 90 per cent. of the tramps are town-bred.	Yes; in four of the five unions.	No.
Carmarthen - - -	No.	No.	Great increase in last few years due to waterworks and railway works.	Yes; one inspector.	No.
Carnarvon - - -	Quarterly report of number of vagrants relieved.	158 on 6th August in workhouses, common lodging-houses and prison.	Increase in last year or two; due to end of war and railway and other works. Number less now than ten years ago.	Yes.	No.

SUMMARY OF REPLIES RECEIVED FROM THE CHIEF CONSTABLES OF COUNTIES IN ENGLAND AND WALES IN AUGUST, 1904—continued.

County.	Do you make periodical reports dealing with vagrants in your County? 1.	Can you state the number of vagrants in the County on any one night during the present year? 2.	Can you say whether there has been any increase during the last few years in the number of vagrants in the County? If so, can you assign any cause for such increase? 3.	Are any of your officers employed as Assistant Relieving Officers as regards vagrants? 4.	Is there in force in the County any system of— (a) way-ticket for wayfarers, or (b) mid-day meal for vagrants? 5.
Cheshire -	Annual return of vagrants relieved and of vagrants apprehended.	No.	Increase during last three years, bad trade stated as cause.	No; opposed to system. Although it may deter the professional tramp from going to the workhouse, it does not decrease vagrancy. Thinks it better they should go to workhouse and be under observation rather than go elsewhere and become a greater danger by spreading disease.	No.
Cornwall -	Keeps quarterly list of vagrants granted or refused relief by the police.	Only gives number admitted to workhouses.	Increase since the war.	Yes; sixteen.	No.
Cumberland -	No.	No.	Increase in number of vagrants prosecuted.	No.	No.
Denbigh -	Yearly report of tramps relieved.	No.	Increase in tramps relieved during last three years; 1903 about same as 1894.	Yes; three.	No.
Derby -	No.	Average number per night in workhouses and lodging houses during week ended 17th July, was 519.	In 1903 the number corresponding to that in previous column was 586.	No.	No.
Devon -	Yearly return of number of vagrants applying for relief.	No.	Decrease in 1900 and 1901 possibly due to the war, 1898 and 1903 about the same.	Yes; twenty.	No.
Dorset -	Annual report as Secretary of Dorset Mendicity Society.	92 in workhouses and police cells on 1st February.	Large increase (since 1900) of vagrants relieved by the police. 1903 less than 1894.	Yes; all County Superintendents.	The Dorset Mendicity Society provides food for wayfarers by a system of bread tickets.
Durham -	No.	188 vagrants applied for admission to casual wards on 31st July.	Increase during last few years; due to railway and other works and trade depression.	Yes; thirteen.	No.

			43 on 31st July.	Considerable increase since end of war.	Yes.	No.
Isle of Ely	-	Annual report of number of tramps relieved by the police as assistant relieving officers.
Essex	-	Yes; quarterly returns of tramps relieved, refused relief, and apprehended for begging.	73 on 1st July.	Increase during last four years; due to depression in trade and increase in field work, pea-picking, &c. 1903 less than 1898.	Yes.	No.
Flintshire	-	No.	25 on 29th July.	Increase; due to depression in trade.	Yes; two.	No.
Glamorgan	-	No.	Yes.	Increase.	Yes.	No.
Gloucester	-	Yes; and annual return showing numbers in casual wards and common lodging-houses on certain day, with other statistics.	691 in casual wards and common lodging-houses on 5th April.	Increase of late years; due to railway and dock works.	Yes.	Yes; both.
Hants	-	No.	No; only number relieved by the police.	Large increase; partly due to extensive military works.	Yes, in twenty-one unions.	No.
Hereford	-	Annual report, as Secretary of Hereford Mendicity Society, shows number sleeping in work-houses and lodging houses, and number of bread rations supplied per year.	Yes; approximately.	Considerable increase; cannot give cause.	Yes; four.	A system of bread tickets.
Hertford	-	None since 1895, when he made a report on the subject.	No.	Decrease in last ten years as compared with previous decade; decrease in child vagrants, due to vigilance of officers of Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children.	Yes; in six unions, police officers sign tickets of admission to casual ward.	No.
Hunts	-	Quarterly return of vagrants relieved.	7 on 15th March.	Increase in 1901-3; partly due to the war. 1903 less than 1898.	Yes; three.	No.
Kent	-	None since 1898.	1,258 on 3rd August, sleeping in casual wards, common lodging-houses and elsewhere.	Number doubled since 1898.	No.	No.
Lancashire	-	No, but gives number of vagrants prosecuted.	No.	No.	No.	No.
Leicester	-	Annual report of number in casual wards and common lodging-houses.	Information could be given.	Increase; can only give depression of trade as cause.	No.	No.

SUMMARY OF REPLIES RECEIVED FROM THE CHIEF CONSTABLES OF COUNTIES IN ENGLAND AND WALES IN AUGUST, 1904—continued.

County.	1. Do you make periodical reports dealing with vagrants in your County?	2. Can you state the number of vagrants in the County on any one night during the present year?	3. Can you say whether there has been any increase during the last few years in the number of vagrants in the County? If so, can you assign any cause for such increase?	4. Are any of your officers employed as Assistant Relieving Officers as regards vagrants?	5. Is there in force in the County any system of— (a) way-ticket for wayfarers, or (b) mid-day meal for vagrants?
Lincoln	Quarterly report of number of arrests for vagrancy.	114 on 5th April.	Considerable increase; no definite cause.	No.	No.
Merioneth	Quarterly report of vagrants relieved in casual wards and vagrants prosecuted.	79	Great increase during last five years in number of vagrants relieved.	Yes; four.	No.
Monmouth	No.	98 on 5th April.	Increase; due to no task of work at some workhouses and bad trade.	No; discontinued.	No.
Montgomery	Quarterly report of vagrants noted by police at workhouses and common lodging-houses.	85 on 5th April.	Increase; mostly tramps on way to Rhayader waterworks. Decrease as compared with 1894.	Yes; one issues tickets for casual wards.	No.
Norfolk	No.	No.	Decrease.	No.	No.
Northampton	Only annual return of prosecutions under Vagrancy Acts.	57 were relieved in casual wards on 30th June.	Increase in casual paupers; due chiefly to trade depression.	No; discontinued.	No; there was a system of bread tickets many years ago, but this was discontinued as leading to no good result.
Northumberland	No, but made special report in April last.	203 on 19th March (day census taken by police on main highways).	Increase; chiefly due to large public works.	Yes; six.	No.
Nottingham	No.	69 on 22nd July.	Slight increase since war. (Two nights' detention and task of work recently put in force by guardians had reduced number of professional tramps.)	No; undesirable.	No.
Oxford	No.	No.	No increase in number-convicted.	No.	No.
Pembroke	Annual return of number relieved by police as assistant relieving officers.	No.	Increase since 1901; cannot give reason.	Yes; three.	No.
Radnorshire	Quarterly report of vagrants relieved and refused relief by the police.	62 applied to the police on 21st May.	Increase due to waterworks. Decrease in 1900 and 1901 due to war.	Yes.	No.

Rutland - - -	No	No	About the same.	No.	No.
Salop - - -	No.	145 on 26th June	Increase; due to water works and trade depression.	Yes; three.	No.
Somerset - - -	No.	No.	Increase generally; cannot give reason.	Yes; eighteen.	No
Stafford - - -	No.	No.	Increase on the whole; number varies according to treatment by different unions.	Yes; in few places.	No.
Suffolk, East - -	No.	No.	No.	Yes; seven.	No.
" West - - -	No.	No, but could take a census.	No.	Yes; eight.	No.
Surrey - - -	No.	No.	Decreasing for some years.	No; opposed to system.	No; it would attract vagrants.
Sussex, East - -	No.	No.	No.	No.	No.
" West - - -	Quarterly report of vagrants relieved by the police.	Yes, if required.	Increase; no reason.	Yes.	No. Systems have been considered and tried but have not proved effectual.
Warwick - - -	No.	No.	Steady increase since 1900; due to slackness of work.	No.	No.
Westmorland - -	No.	No.	Slight increase in number of vagrants proceeded against; cannot give cause.	No.	No.
Wight, Isle of - -	No.	The Island is free from vagrants.	No.	No.	No.
Wilts - - -	Annual and quarterly reports as to working of system.	89 on 1st June relieved by police, in common lodging-houses and houseless.	Considerable increase; due to military works and end of war.	Yes; seventeen.	Yes.
Worcester - - -	No.	No.	Increase during last five years; principal cause is trade depression.	Yes; one only.	Food-ticket system, administered by Worcestershire Wayfarers' Relief Society.
Yorks, E.R. - - -	No.	No.	No.	Yes; three.	No.
" N.R. - - -	No.	63 on 30th April exclusive of those in lodging-houses.	Very slight increase.	Yes; fourteen.	At one place in County food tickets are issued by police, the cost being paid by charitable persons.
" W.R. - - -	Half-yearly report of number of vagrants.	799 on 20th March in vagrant wards, common lodging-houses and elsewhere.	Number in preceding column less than in any year since 1898 (except 1903).	No.	No.

SUMMARY OF THE PRECEDING TABLE.

Question 1.—In 30 cases no report is made ; reports are made in 27 cases.

Question 2.—In only nine cases is definite information given as to the number of vagrants other than those in the casual wards or relieved by the police. These cases are Berks, Carnarvon, Derby, Dorset, Gloucester, Kent, Northumberland, Wilts, West Riding. Seven of these give the number in common lodging-houses as well as in workhouses and three (Kent, Wilts and West Riding) include, in addition, vagrants elsewhere. Northumberland shows the number according to a day census taken in the highways.

Question 3.—39 report an increase in recent years ; 4 a decrease. Generally there has been an increase since the war : during the war there was a decrease in the number. The causes of the increase of vagrancy are given chiefly as railway and other works in the neighbourhood, trade depression, and the end of the war.

Question 4.—36 reply in the affirmative ; 21 in the negative. Three Chief Constables state they are opposed to the system.

Question 5.—In 5 counties there is a system of food-tickets for wayfarers, and in one other county such tickets are issued at one place only. In 2 counties there is a way-ticket system.

APPENDIX XI.

VAGRANCY IN LONDON.

(Papers 1 to 4 handed in by Mr. Simmons.)

1. PROSECUTIONS FOR OFFENCES IN METROPOLITAN CASUAL WARDS IN 1904.

Casual Ward.	Destroying clothes.	Refusing work.	Neglecting work.	Absconding.	Other offences.	Discharged.	TOTALS.
Bermondsey - - -	—	17	26	—	3	—	46
Camberwell - - -	—	11	—	—	—	—	13
Chelsea - - -	7	82	22	1	—	1	120
City of London - - -	—	2	—	1	2	—	5
Fulham - - -	1	15	—	—	—	1	17
Greenwich - - -	1	4	7	—	3	—	15
Hackney - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Hampstead - - -	1	4	—	—	—	—	5
Holborn - - -	7	15	81	3	8	7	121
Islington - - -	3	63	11	—	—	—	77
Kensington - - -	3	15	—	—	2	1	21
Lambeth - - -	7	80	74	—	18	2	181
Lewisham - - -	7	36	13	—	1	—	57
Marylebone - - -	9	3	—	—	1	—	13
Mile End - - -	1	5	10	—	1	1	18
Paddington - - -	1	21	2	—	1	—	25
Poplar - - -	1	2	—	—	—	—	3
St. George's - - -	—	2	—	—	—	—	2
St. George's East - - -	5	35	6	6	2	—	54
St. Giles - - -	3	10	—	—	—	1	14
St. Pancras - - -	5	46	—	—	—	—	51
Shoreditch - - -	7	23	1	—	—	1	32
Southwark - - -	5	65	24	—	10	2	106
Stepney - - -	2	57	1	2	—	—	62
Strand - - -	4	—	—	1	3	—	8
Wandsworth - - -	5	24	6	—	1	—	36
Whitechapel - - -	3	3	17	—	2	1	26
Woolwich - - -	2	44	29	—	2	—	77
TOTALS - - - - -	90	684	330	14	69	18	1,205

Appendix
XI.

2. NUMBER OF REFUSALS OF ADMISSION TO METROPOLITAN CASUAL WARDS FOR WANT OF ROOM DURING THE YEAR 1904.

Casual Ward.	January.	February.	March.	April.	May.	June.	July.	August.	September.	October.	November.	December.	TOTALS.
Bermondsey - - -	42	40	25	4	—	20	—	14	19	25	26	16	231
Camberwell - - -	42	111	30	19	80	26	10	117	99	71	127	4	736
Chelsea - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
City of London - - -	496	651	395	311	201	33	234	610	576	413	246	181	4,347
Fulham - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	1	16	80	8	107
Greenwich - - -	46	80	81	57	66	13	23	146	126	134	95	76	943
Hackney - - -	239	138	140	170	178	109	142	256	202	247	202	126	2,149
Hampstead - - -	3	5	2	10	7	8	9	5	12	25	34	11	131
Holborn - - -	143	220	55	37	26	2	23	42	55	79	33	33	748
Islington - - -	38	32	9	12	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	91
Kensington - - -	105	144	101	56	53	7	17	46	93	72	82	52	828
Lambeth - - -	72	181	63	49	6	—	10	75	72	35	19	7	589
Lewisham - - -	36	31	30	27	9	10	1	41	9	23	23	1	241
Marylebone - - -	332	310	255	184	176	20	98	191	146	220	141	113	2,186
Mile End - - -	16	6	—	—	3	—	5	24	—	14	30	10	118
Paddington - - -	117	111	164	100	22	—	11	—	—	16	48	34	623
Poplar - - -	184	282	263	282	260	73	82	541	345	207	88	49	2,656
St. George's - - -	117	157	110	64	77	44	79	120	151	109	87	42	1,157
St. George's East - - -	107	209	27	—	—	—	—	—	15	28	—	—	386
St. Giles - - -	34	73	48	18	5	—	—	—	17	12	7	—	214
St. Pancras - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Shoreditch - - -	13	34	18	10	33	5	—	39	23	16	11	2	204
Southwark - - -	—	9	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	9
Stepney - - -	47	78	36	29	—	—	—	28	8	7	7	—	240
Strand - - -	11	10	18	15	22	17	9	12	25	23	21	17	200
Wandsworth - - -	—	—	—	—	3	—	—	4	—	—	—	—	7
Whitechapel - - -	283	373	231	190	78	18	97	276	129	244	180	17	2,116
Woolwich - - -	2	9	9	7	—	5	—	26	30	3	14	5	110
TOTALS - - - - -	2525	3294	2110	1651	1302	413	850	2621	2157	2039	1601	804	21,367

3. NUMBER OF REFUSALS OF ADMISSION TO METROPOLITAN CASUAL WARDS FOR WANT OF ROOM IN EACH YEAR FROM 1881 TO 1904.

Casual Ward.	1881.	1882.	1883.	1884.	1885.	1886.	1887.	1888.	1889.	1890.	1891.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.
Bermondsey -	-	11	5	-	-	-	-	8	17	9	6	84	87	87	10	-	-	17	5	-	-	-	248	231
Camberwell -	-	159	48	15	9	6	38	90	634	475	334	512	701	578	538	461	392	507	426	370	649	604	751	736
Chelsea -	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	14	20	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
City of London -	-	129	109	-	102	99	610	1,020	1,023	1,159	1,246	2,634	5,966	5,462	1,816	1,111	916	113	2	-	53	-	2,516	4,347
Fulham -	-	140	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4	24	106	310	479	350	161	-	-	-	-	107
Greenwich -	-	188	159	369	390	15	40	255	378	26	25	349	416	612	312	335	66	169	113	171	559	547	754	943
Hackney -	-	152	228	814	699	1,064	641	13	523	669	509	561	1,028	1,565	1,630	1,130	1,151	1,550	1,509	2,136	1,734	1,878	2,174	2,149
Hampstead -	-	105	19	8	5	15	9	26	3	32	18	20	30	71	25	28	43	91	-	39	74	64	58	131
Holborn -	-	85	114	-	-	19	491	519	1,464	736	1,387	705	2,841	5,206	5,861	4,138	1,717	1,008	844	536	878	1,216	976	748
Islington -	-	217	124	15	-	3	-	300	437	356	306	215	528	967	253	1	14	6	3	23	11	-	30	91
Kenington -	-	18	11	-	-	-	49	28	129	27	35	48	273	389	274	378	293	467	433	403	600	762	386	828
Lambeth -	-	500	206	-	-	-	203	9	-	85	-	92	47	172	67	5	-	7	-	-	-	15	66	589
Lewisham -	-	1,541	1,029	-	24	6	31	-	69	8	19	124	205	856	294	32	13	83	101	66	893	414	137	241
Maylebone -	-	49	31	590	63	135	785	1,749	1,692	1,972	1,284	927	1,122	1,738	1,079	1,757	2,783	2,982	1,889	1,196	1,940	2,385	2,366	2,186
Mile End -	-	-	285	524	70	58	77	98	55	52	10	848	1,135	328	349	237	476	287	61	9	5	14	100	118
Paddington -	-	795	650	379	97	141	333	1,882	394	261	223	299	410	611	649	381	136	110	33	18	38	103	441	623
Poplar -	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4	100	15	635	2,419	2,994	2,656
St. George's -	-	271	315	534	250	989	1,164	1,314	2,336	1,372	631	1,223	2,121	1,480	1,863	1,361	2,013	2,268	1,538	1,281	1,789	995	1,306	1,157
St. George's, East -	-	723	1,270	119	3	20	16	101	149	60	30	877	1,174	508	175	3	13	36	54	-	14	287	599	386
St. Giles -	-	-	43	-	-	-	60	-	89	31	74	169	76	13	1	10	12	-	-	-	16	110	302	214
St. Pancras -	-	895	563	78	125	179	247	409	180	85	76	99	385	450	247	112	30	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Shoreditch -	-	-	-	-	-	-	13	65	18	26	-	9	66	75	168	174	189	338	134	52	132	58	88	204
Southwark -	-	573	576	242	183	1,253	1,848	2,998	1,746	1,064	1,498	1,148	1,079	538	333	-	20	27	-	-	-	-	4	9
Stepney -	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	126	452	174	158	138	235	378	287	869	690	472	240
Strand -	-	-	-	-	-	-	98	2,969	1,129	624	-	-	295	937	747	405	240	169	156	132	94	93	115	200
Wandsworth -	-	-	-	26	5	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	28	64	23	66	42	-	7
Whitechapel -	-	1,423	1,922	242	49	236	208	-	-	-	-	460	833	568	274	368	470	273	219	143	208	1,850	3,634	2,116
Woolwich -	-	62	32	526	489	64	129	310	680	316	772	719	910	1,221	1,132	25	39	69	34	132	86	25	43	110
TOTAL -	8,036	7,739	2,565	4,379	2,567	4,302	7,090	14,163	13,145	9,445	8,483	12,122	21,858	24,908	18,437	12,034	11,863	11,194	8,257	7,032	11,343	14,471	20,560	21,367

4. PARTICULARS OF CONVICTIONS OF EIGHT HABITUAL VAGRANTS FOR OFFENCES IN METROPOLITAN CASUAL WARDS.

Appendix
XI.

G. J., age 27 (in 1890).

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Whitechapel - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	1 February, 1890	21 days' H. L.
St. George's - -	Refusing work - - - - -	18 June, 1891	7 " "
Bermondsey - -	" " - - - - -	1 June, 1892	7 " "
Hampstead - -	" " - - - - -	11 October, 1892	7 " "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	21 October, 1892	3 " "
" - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	27 May, 1893	3 " "
Bermondsey - -	" " - - - - -	6 July, 1893	7 " "
St. Giles - - -	Wilful damage - - - - -	13 December, 1893	21 " "
Lambeth - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	1 February, 1894	7 " "
" - - -	Destroying clothes - - - - -	19 November, 1894	21 " "
Chelsea - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	15 January, 1895	6 " "
Lambeth - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	21 February, 1895	10 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	25 June, 1895	14 " "
Hampstead - -	" " - - - - -	15 August, 1895	1 month "
Chelsea - - -	" " - - - - -	2 November, 1895	21 days' "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	9 December, 1895	14 " "
Greenwich - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	2 May, 1896	7 " "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	21 April, 1898	14 " "
Stepney - - -	" " - - - - -	31 December, 1898	1 day "
Lambeth - - -	Refractory work - - - - -	20 February, 1899	10 days' "
Chelsea - - -	Destroying clothes - - - - -	1 June, 1899	5 " "
Bermondsey - -	Refusing work - - - - -	27 October, 1899	7 " "
St. George's East -	Absconding - - - - -	8 November, 1899	21 days' "
Southwark - -	" - - - - -	6 July, 1900	10 " "
Chelsea - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	25 July, 1900	7 days' "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	12 September, 1900	6 months' "
St. George's East -	" " - - - - -	4 April, 1901	3 " "
City of London -	Refusing work and wilful damage - - -	31 March, 1902	3 " "
St. George's East -	Refusing work - - - - -	23 September, 1902	9 " "
Kensington - -	" " - - - - -	17 October, 1903	1 " "
Stepney - - -	" " - - - - -	26 November, 1903	14 days' "
Chelsea - - -	Refusing work and destroying clothes - -	9 February, 1904	12 months' "
Bermondsey - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	28 December, 1904	1 " "

W. B., age 26 (in 1897).

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Lambeth - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	9 March, 1897	5 days' H.L.
Southwark - - -	Refusing „ - - - - -	7 April, 1897	7 „ „
Chelsea - - -	„ „ - - - - -	15 June, 1897	7 „ „
St. George's East -	Neglecting „ - - - - -	12 August, 1897	7 „ „
Lambeth - - -	„ „ - - - - -	21 January, 1898	21 „ „
Whitechapel - - -	„ „ - - - - -	29 June, 1898	1 month „
St. Pancras - - -	„ „ - - - - -	21 September, 1898	1 „ „
St. George's East -	Refusing „ - - - - -	2 November, 1898	1 „ „
Kensington - - -	Neglecting „ - - - - -	3 January, 1899	7 days' „
St. George's East -	Refusing „ - - - - -	24 January, 1899	2 months' „
Mile End - - -	„ „ - - - - -	12 September, 1899	2 „ „
„ - - -	„ „ - - - - -	1 March, 1900	3 „ „
Southwark - - -	Refusing „ - - - - -	8 August, 1900	14 days' „
Lambeth - - -	Neglecting „ - - - - -	29 August, 1900	5 „ „
Mile End - - -	„ „ - - - - -	9 October, 1900	1 month „
St. Giles - - -	„ „ - - - - -	4 December, 1900	1 „ „
St. George's East -	„ „ - - - - -	15 January, 1901	3 „ „
Lambeth - - -	„ „ - - - - -	2 July, 1901	21 days' „
St. George's - - -	„ „ - - - - -	19 December, 1901	14 „ „
St. George's East -	„ „ - - - - -	15 January, 1902	6 months' „
Strand - - -	„ „ - - - - -	12 October, 1902	3 „ „
Southwark - - -	„ „ - - - - -	6 February, 1903	3 „ „
Kensington - - -	„ „ - - - - -	12 June, 1903	14 days' „
Strand - - -	Neglecting „ - - - - -	22 September, 1903	3 months' „
Paddington - - -	Refusing „ - - - - -	5 January, 1904	1 „ „
St. George's East -	„ „ - - - - -	23 February, 1904	9 „ „
Holborn - - -	„ „ - - - - -	15 November, 1904	1 „ „
„ - - -	Neglecting „ - - - - -	21 December, 1904	3 „ „

H.A., age 20 (in 1890.)

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Lambeth - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	4 November, 1890	7 days' H.L.
„ - - -	„ „ - - - - -	13 December, 1890	10 „ „
Shoreditch - - -	„ „ - - - - -	3 January, 1891	14 „ „
Lambeth - - -	„ „ - - - - -	11 June, 1891	14 „ „
„ - - -	„ „ - - - - -	22 January, 1892	21 „ „
„ - - -	„ „ - - - - -	12 March, 1892	14 „ „
Wandsworth - - -	Wilful damage - - - - -	26 March, 1892	1 month „
Lambeth - - -	Refusing work and wilful damage - - -	2 May, 1902	2 „ „
„ - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	12 September, 1892	21 days' „
Wandsworth - - -	„ „ - - - - -	3 November, 1892	14 „ „
Lambeth - - -	„ „ - - - - -	21 November, 1892	1 month „

H. A., age 20 (in 1890)—continued.Appendix
XI.

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Bermondsey - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	30 December, 1893	Discharged.
Chelsea - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	30 August, 1894	10 days' H.L.
" - - -	" " - - - - -	17 September, 1894	14 " "
" - - -	Neglecting work and wilful damage - -	4 October, 1894	2 months' H.L.
" - - -	Absconding - - - - -	11 December, 1894	21 days' "
" - - -	Neglecting work and wilful damage - -	1 January, 1895	2 months' "
" - - -	Refusing work and absconding - - -	5 March, 1895	1 month "
" - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	10 May, 1898	14 days' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	23 June, 1898	1 month "
Wandsworth - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	29 December, 1899	7 days' "
Chelsea - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	5 April, 1900	21 " "
Lambeth - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	5 September, 1900	1 month "
Chelsea - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	26 October, 1903*	2 " "
Lambeth - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	17 February, 1904	12 " "
Chelsea - - -	" " - - - - -	7 February, 1905	12 " "

* Between 1900 and 1903 three years' penal servitude.

W.P., age 20 (in 1898).

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Stepney - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	5 May, 1898	5 days' H.L.
Lewisham - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	21 July, 1898	21 " "
Chelsea - - -	" " - - - - -	23 September, 1898	21 " "
Southwark - - -	Absconding - - - - -	17 October, 1898	14 " "
Lewisham - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	1 December, 1898	1 month "
Paddington - - -	" " - - - - -	20 January, 1899	1 " "
Bermondsey - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	4 March, 1899	14 days' "
Camberwell - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	23 March, 1899	7 " "
City of London -	" " - - - - -	20 April, 1899	14 " "
St. Pancras - - -	Refractory conduct - - - - -	17 May, 1899	10 " "
Paddington - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	15 July, 1899	1 month "
Lewisham - - -	" " - - - - -	23 September, 1899	21 days' "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	23 November, 1899	7 " "
Lewisham - - -	" " - - - - -	2 January, 1900	14 " "
Stepney - - -	Neglecting " - - - - -	27 January, 1900	21 " "
Kensington - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	10 August, 1900	21 " "
St. George's - - -	" " - - - - -	28 September, 1900	14 " "
City of London -	" " - - - - -	5 November, 1900	21 " "
Woolwich - - -	" " - - - - -	30 January, 1901	14 " "
St. Pancras - - -	" " - - - - -	26 February, 1901	1 month "
St. George's East -	" " - - - - -	19 April, 1901	3 months "
St. Pancras - - -	" " - - - - -	26 October, 1901	3 " "
St. George's - - -	" " - - - - -	18 February, 1902	6 " "

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Woolwich - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	13 September, 1902	14 days' H.L.
St. Pancras - - -	" " - - - - -	1 November, 1902	1 month "
Kensington - - -	" " - - - - -	6 December, 1902	21 days' "
St. Pancras - - -	" " - - - - -	17 February, 1903	12 months' "
Bermondsey - - -	Neglecting " - - - - -	14 January, 1904	14 days' "
Kensington - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	13 February, 1904	1 month "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	29 March, 1904	5 days' "
Bermondsey - - -	Neglecting " - - - - -	5 May, 1904	12 months' "

W. S., age 18 (in 1893).

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Lambeth - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	25 October, 1893	5 days' H.L.
" - - -	" " - - - - -	16 November, 1893	7 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	9 December, 1893	7 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	29 January, 1894	21 " "
Shoreditch - - -	" " - - - - -	22 February, 1894	18 " "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	29 March, 1894	7 " "
Shoreditch - - -	" " - - - - -	26 September, 1894	14 " "
Lambeth - - -	Destroying clothes - - - - -	11 October, 1894	6 weeks' "
" - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	5 December, 1894	10 days' "
St. George's East -	" " - - - - -	8 February, 1895	14 " "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	26 February, 1895	21 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	18 April, 1895	21 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	16 May, 1895	1 month "
Shoreditch - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	1 July, 1895	1 " "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	12 August, 1895	6 weeks' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	12 November, 1895	21 days' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	31 December, 1895	21 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	5 February, 1896	21 " "
St. George's East -	Neglecting " - - - - -	19 March, 1896	7 " "
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	2 February, 1897	1 month "
" - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	29 March, 1897	1 " "
" - - -	Neglecting " - - - - -	11 June, 1897	1 " "
" - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	15 September, 1897	6 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	14 September, 1898	9 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	13 September, 1899	12 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	14 November, 1900	4 " "
" - - -	Neglecting " - - - - -	21 May, 1902	12 " "
" - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	19 August, 1903	12 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	19 October, 1904	12 " "

J. C. W., Age 30 (in 1882).

Appendix
XI.

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Lewisham - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	8 March, 1888	1 day
" - - -	" " - - - - -	2 November, 1888	14 days H.L.
" - - -	" " - - - - -	22 November, 1888	14 " "
" - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	17 December, 1888	1 month "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	29 January, 1889	1 " "
Bermondsey - -	Refusing work - - - - -	10 April, 1890	1 " "
Lewisham - - -	" " - - - - -	10 October, 1890	14 days' "
Bermondsey - -	" " - - - - -	26 November, 1890	1 month "
Southwark - -	Refractory conduct - - - - -	10 January, 1891	7 days' "
Bermondsey - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	12 March, 1891	1 month "
" - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	18 December, 1891	1 " "
" - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	18 February, 1892	1 " "
" - - -	Smoking - - - - -	13 April, 1894	1 day "
" - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	1 June, 1894	14 days' "
" - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	6 January, 1898	1 month "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	23 November, 1899	1 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	14 June, 1900	1 " "
" - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	5 October, 1901	3 " "
" - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	18 January, 1902	3 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	6 May, 1902	3 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	22 August, 1902	6 " "
Southwark - -	Refusing work - - - - -	12 March, 1903	9 " "
Bermondsey - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	12 December, 1903	21 days' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	7 January, 1904	3 months "
Southwark - -	" " - - - - -	14 April, 1904	21 days' "
Bermondsey - -	" " - - - - -	5 May, 1904	12 months' "

C. E. C., age 30 (in 1895).

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Wandsworth - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	19 April, 1895	1 month H.L.
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	7 November, 1895	21 days "
Chelsea - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	16 January, 1896	1 month
Lambeth - - -	" " - - - - -	5 March, 1896	1 " "
Wandsworth - -	" " - - - - -	9 April, 1896	21 days' "
Lambeth - - -	Neglecting " - - - - -	4 June, 1896	1 month "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	23 July, 1896	21 days' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	20 August, 1896	10 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	17 September, 1896	14 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	17 October, 1896	6 weeks' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	4 January, 1897	21 days' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	8 February, 1897	21 " "

C. E. C., age 30 (in 1895)—continued.

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Lambeth - - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	8 March, 1897	10 days' H.L.
" - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	14 May, 1897	3 months' "
" - - -	Neglecting " - - - - -	13 October, 1897	6 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	9 May, 1900	8 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	12 April, 1901	21 days' "
" - - -	Refusing " - - - - -	12 June, 1901	12 months' "
" - - -	Neglecting " - - - - -	21 May, 1902	10 " "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	15 April, 1903	7 days' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	25 May, 1903	10 days' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	19 August, 1903	6 months' "
" - - -	" " - - - - -	19 September, 1904	21 days' "

J. R., age 25 (in 1894).

Casual Ward.	Offence.	Date of Conviction.	Sentence.
Shoreditch - -	Neglecting work - - - - -	2 August, 1894	7 days' H. L.
" - -	" " - - - - -	25 October, 1894	10 " "
Stepney - - -	Wilful damage - - - - -	1 January, 1895	2 months' "
St. George's East -	Neglecting work - - - - -	4 April, 1895	28 days' "
" " -	Destroying clothes - - - - -	16 May, 1895	6 weeks' "
" " -	" " - - - - -	8 August, 1895	3 months' "
Poplar - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	16 January, 1896	1 " "
St. George's East -	Destroying clothes - - - - -	2 March, 1896	12 " "
Lambeth - - -	Refusing work - - - - -	8 March, 1897	10 days' "
Poplar - - -	Destroying clothes - - - - -	20 March, 1897	3 months' "
St. George's East -	" " - - - - -	7 July, 1897	12 " "
Shoreditch - -	Refusing work - - - - -	16 August, 1898	12 " "
" - -	" " - - - - -	5 September, 1899	12 " "
St. George's East -	Destroying clothes - - - - -	10 August, 1900	3 " "
Shoreditch - -	Refusing work - - - - -	4 December, 1900	12 " "
Southwark - -	" " - - - - -	6 December, 1901	3 " "
St. George's East -	Refusing work and destroying clothes - -	8 April, 1902	12 " "
" " -	" " " " " " - -	21 July, 1903	12 " "
" " -	" " " " " " - -	26 July, 1904	12 " "

5. SUMMARY OF THE CONVICTIONS IN THE PRECEDING LISTS.
(Prepared by the Secretary.)

Appendix
XI.

	Age stated on first conviction.	Date of first Conviction.	Total number of Convictions.	Details of offences committed.									Details of Sentences.
				Neglecting or refusing work.	Wilful damage.	Destroying clothes.	Absconding.	Refractory conduct.	Smoking.	Wilful damage and refusing work.	Destroying clothes and refusing work.	Absconding and refusing work.
G.J.	27	1 Feb., 1890	33	25	1	2	2	1	-	1	1	-	Up to July, 1900, sentences varied from 1 day to 1 month. Since then among other sentences there have been— One of 12 months. One of 9 " One of 6 "
W.B.	26	9 Mar., 1897	28	28	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	Up to Dec., 1901, sentences varied from 5 days to 3 months. Since then, among other sentences, there have been— One of 9 months. One of 6 "
H.A.	20	4 Nov., 1890	26	20	1	-	1	-	-	3	-	1	Up to Oct., 1903, sentences varied from 7 days to 2 months. Once discharged. Since then there have been— Two of 12 months,
W.P.	20	5 May, 1898	31	29	-	-	1	1	-	-	-	-	Up to Oct., 1901, sentences varied from 5 days to 3 months. Since then, among other sentences, there have been— Two of 12 months One of 6 "
W.S.	18	25 Oct., 1893	29	28	-	1	-	-	-	-	-	-	Up to June, 1897, sentences varied from 5 days to 6 weeks. Since then there have been— Four of 12 months One of 9 " One of 6 "
J.C.W.	30	8 Mar., 1888	26	24	-	-	-	1	1	-	-	-	Up to May, 1902, sentences varied from 1 day to 3 months. Since then, among other sentences, there have been— One of 12 months One of 9 " One of 6 "
C.E.C.	30	19 Apr., 1895	23	23	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	Up to May, 1897, sentences varied from 10 days to 3 months. Since then, among other sentences, there have been— One of 12 months One of 10 " One of 8 " Two of 6 "
J.R.	25	2 Aug., 1894	19	9	1	6	-	-	-	-	3	-	Up to Jan., 1896, sentences varied from 7 days to 3 months. Since then, among other sentences, there have been— Eight of 12 months.

Total number of convictions

- - 215.

Of these 71 came from Lambeth.

25 " " Bermondsey.

21 " " St. George in the East.

and 19 " " Chelsea.

APPENDIX XII.

1. VAGRANCY IN BERKSHIRE.

(Paper handed in by Major A. F. Poulton, Chief Constable of Berkshire.)

In my last Annual Report I called attention to this matter, and I trust, now that I have had the opportunity of another year's experience of the question, that it may not be out of place for me to report more fully upon it. As showing that there is some ground for my doing so, I would call attention to the attached return marked A., giving the number of tramps admitted to the unions in this county, exclusive of the Borough of Reading, for the past year and previous seven years.

From this return it will be seen that the number of tramps generally decreased from the year 1897 to 1900, and chiefly from 1898 to 1900, which was no doubt attributable to the outbreak of the South African War in the autumn of 1899, when the reserves were called up and recruiting in all branches of the Army was more active.

In 1901 and 1902 the number of tramps again increased owing to the return of soldiers from South Africa and the termination of the war in 1902, when numbers of men were out of employment again. Further it must also be taken into consideration that many Militia regiments were during the years 1900 and 1901, embodied, and, on their disbandment in 1902, this further increased the number of unemployed. To this also must be added the general depression of trade during the last few years. All this has tended to raise the total number of tramps.

Now this county is one of the great highways for tramps from the western counties through Bath and Swindon ; from the midland counties through Oxford, via Reading ; and to London by the Maidenhead or Windsor and Staines routes.

In regard to the prosecutions, from the criminal statistics return B., it will be seen that the past year, 1904, was one in which most tramps were apprehended, the total number, 427, being over 44 per cent. of the persons apprehended without warrant, viz. : 954.

For this latter reason I feel justified in calling attention to this matter, though there is fortunately, so far, no very large amount of "SERIOUS" crime committed by tramps in this county ; misconduct in workhouse and drunkenness accounting for 293 offences out of 427, or about 68 per cent. of them.

I have endeavoured during the year to ascertain what truth there is in the remark so often made by the tramp that "he prefers the prison to the workhouse," and for this reason I have visited several workhouses in the county, and by the kindness of the masters been shown the general arrangements in the casual wards for tramps.

The two chief points in regard to Casual Wards for Tramps seem to me to be :—Firstly,—The food they receive ; Secondly,—The labour task they are set.

1st. As to the Food :—

WORKHOUSE DIET.

Evening Meal or Supper.	Morning Meal or Breakfast.	Mid-day Meal or Dinner.
Bread, 8 ounces.	Bread, 8 ounces.	Cheese, 1½ ounces Bread, 8 ounces.

Now compare the Prison diet with this :—

PRISON DIET.

MEALS.	DIET A.		DIET B.
	First 7 days.		Remainder of Term of Imprisonment up to 4 months, after this, further improved diet.
Breakfast - - -	Daily—		Daily—
	Bread - - -	8 ozs.	Bread - - -	8 oz.
	Gruel - - -	1 pint.	Gruel - - -	1 pint.
Dinner - - -	Sunday—		Sunday—
	Bread - - -	8 ozs.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Porridge - - -	1 pint.	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Cooked Meat (preserved by heat) - - -	4 "
	Monday—		Monday—
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Potatoes - - -	8 "	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Beans - - -	10 "
			Fat Bacon - - -	2 "
	Tuesday—		Tuesday—
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Porridge - - -	1 pint.	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Soup - - -	1 pint.
	Wednesday—		Wednesday—
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Suet Pudding - - -	8 "	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Suet Pudding - - -	10 "
	Thursday—		Thursday—
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Potatoes - - -	8 "	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Cooked Beef (without bone) - - -	4 "
	Friday—		Friday—
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Porridge - - -	1 pint.	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Soup - - -	1 pint.
	Saturday—		Saturday—
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Suet Pudding - - -	8 "	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Suet Pudding - - -	10 "
Supper - - -	Daily—		Daily—
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	8 oz.
	Gruel - - -	1 pint.	Porridge - - -	1 pint.

ALL PRISONERS ON DAY OF FIRST RECEPTION.

Breakfast.	Dinner.	Supper.
Bread - 8 oz. Cocoa - 1 pint.	Bread - - 12 oz. Cooked Meat (pre- served by heat) 4 oz.	Bread - 8 oz. Porridge 1 pint.

N.B.—Bread and water diet is only given for offences against Prison Discipline, and then only for 3 days at a time, the diet being 1lb bread per day, but no work is exacted when prisoners are on this diet.

2nd. As to the Labour Task :—

WORKHOUSE TASKS.

Daily Task.	Remarks.
The tasks vary, but as a rule are :— Breaking Stone—10 to 13 cwt. ; or Pounding Stone—6 to 8 gallons ; or Picking Oakum—3 to 4 lbs. ; or Pumping, Sawing Wood, or Garden, or Clearing Work, in some cases	If detained for 2 Nights. (If detained for 1 night. (For Old and Infirm Men.
The task is very much less - - -
Ditto - - - - -

PRISON WORK.

Daily Work	Remarks.
Oakum Picking—3 lbs. ; or making Coal Sacks— about 1 Sack a day ; or Wood Chopping—no fixed task ; or Breaking Stones—9 to 10 cwt. -	These are about the maxi- mum tasks, and prisoners are rarely expected to do this for the first day or so ; for instance, 2lbs. of Oakum picking is considered a good day's work at the commencement of Sen- tence, and for this amount of work a prisoner would receive the full amount of marks for a day's work, which is given to prisoners for good conduct.

From this comparison, I cannot help thinking that either our Workhouse treatment is too severe, or the Prison treatment is too lenient. Certain it is that many tramps go to prison in preference to the Workhouse, for in the former they know that they receive better food and do less irksome work. The Workhouse tasks in most cases appear to me to be tasks which require a man to be not only in good bodily health, but also to have a food diet which will enable him to do them.

I therefore consider that the increase in the number of Tramps sent to Prison for Misconduct at the Workhouse is accounted for in the following ways :—

- A. The knowledge that they are much better fed and cared for in the Prison than the Workhouse.
- B. The work is much lighter in the Prison than in the Workhouse.
- C. Many tramps misbehave themselves to go to prison, in order to thereby work their way to London and other big centres. For instance a tramp at Faringdon wishing to get to London commits himself in the workhouse, is sent to Reading prison, and on discharge is 34½ miles nearer London. Further, a tramp sent to prison on Monday for seven days comes out on Saturday, thereby only getting four clear days in prison.

So far as the food is concerned, I do not think that any direct benefit would result from an improved diet, unless the scale of diet was on a uniform scale throughout the country, for tramps would only flock to those counties where the diet was best. I should doubt if the extra cost of giving a man a basin of soup or gruel on some such scale as exists in the prisons, and which is apparently regulated on the lowest diet which a man even when in prison and doing work should receive, would increase the cost very much, and there would then be some good reason for requiring a man to do a fair task of work.

There is no doubt that, at the present time, when trade is so bad and many men are out of work, the number of tramps is on the increase, especially during the winter months, when work is slack in most trades, and that of this number are many young men who it is important should not degenerate, from association with the professional tramp, to that class of life, viz. : an idle and incorrigible rogue, who never did or would work. For the latter class of men there seems to me to be nothing but a prolonged period of detention, either in prison or some other labour colony, such as I understand now prevails in Belgium, and where tramps are not treated as criminals, but as a social danger requiring treatment.

In regard to vagrancy generally the question has been considered for very many years, and in this county more particularly, and no doubt the measures adopted in former years did a good deal to reduce the number of vagrants, but what is really wanted to check this ever growing evil is uniform regulations throughout the country. It is useless for one county to try and do anything without the co-operation of other authorities. We therefore, it seems to me, want this vagrancy question made a State matter, with legislation on the following lines :—

- A. A uniform system of dealing with tramps throughout the country, both as regards food and work.
- B. Some system of identification of professional tramps who are constantly committing crime but who wander from county to county, and their identity is thus lost.

If 70,000 criminals can be identified by the fingerprint system and classified by Scotland Yard, surely some such system could be adopted in regard to tramps by which the professional tramp could be identified and kept in prison or some other similar place of detention for a longer period than he is now subjected to.

For this class of criminal a short sentence is absolutely no good. Men who have been convicted as vagrants three times, and therefore classed by law as incorrigible rogues, should be photographed and circulated in some such way as is now done with regard to notorious criminals by the illustrated circular issued periodically by the convict supervision officer, Scotland Yard.

- C. A better and more constant supervision of common lodging houses. These are the chief haunts of many professional tramps who are too idle to work.
- D. There should be some better measure to prevent children of tramps (except bona-fide out of work families moving from one place to another in search of work) being tramped about the country, uneducated, and growing up into a tramp's life.
- E. The establishment of labour bureaux for the registration of men out of employ and provision of labour for them if possible.

These would I think have some lasting benefit, but the chief remedy of all rests with the members of the public themselves. It is owing to the misplaced charity in gifts of money to tramps, by individual members of the public, that the professional tramp exists at all. Were it not for this, their number would soon decrease. This has been repeatedly brought home to the public generally but unfortunately with little or no avail. It cannot be too strongly impressed on them that their intended charity is no charity at all, but is only encouraging a man to a life of idleness and crime. Let them give their charity to associations whose aim and object is to investigate each case and discriminate between the real case of charity and the impostor.

Appendix
XII.

In conclusion, I should like to say that I know I am dealing with a subject which has for many years been considered by those who have given a great deal of time and consideration to this important matter. It has, however, always been considered a question inseparably connected with police work, and I have therefore thought it right to bring the subject specially to notice, especially as I understand that the Government authorities are now giving this matter careful consideration.

A. F. POULTON, Major,
Chief Constable of Berkshire.

Chief Constable's Office,
County Police Station,
Reading.

March, 1905.

COUNTY OF BERKS.

Return A.

UNION.	TOTAL NUMBER OF TRAMPS RELIEVED IN CASUAL WARDS.
	YEAR.
	1897	1898	1899	1900	1901	1902	1903	1904
Abingdon - - - - -	775	464	311	221	305	400	537	664
Faringdon - - - - -	2374	1461	1156	870	1223	2074	2265	3509
Maidenhead - - - - -	10424	8512	3671	3774	6874	4888	8274	9090
Hungerford - - - - -	2739	2382	1685	1532	2219	2879	3297	3721
Newbury - - - - -	4494	4188	1731	1528	3079	4238	4369	4675
Bradfield - - - - -	118	156	72	74	71	137	160	181
Wantage - - - - -	4994	4755	4709	1358	1862	2968	2393	2376
Wallingford - - - - -	4252	4472	3568	3191	3161	3769	4607	5939
Old Windsor - - - - -	5301	6286	5079	2035	2155	2463	3291	3792
Wokingham - - - - -	818	799	521	424	661	876	724	696
Easthampstead - - - - -	733	426	359	318	356	583	820	937
Total (not including Reading Union)	37,022	33,901	22,862	15,325	21,966	25,275	30,737	35,580

Return B.

Description of Offence.	TRAMPS APPREHENDED.
	For 1897	For 1898	For 1899	For 1900	For 1901	For 1902	For 1903	For 1904
Misconduct in Workhouse - - - - -	75	77	84	74	96	164	139	186
Drunkenness - - - - -	83	62	92	77	72	95	85	107
Begging - - - - -	17	31	14	11	23	22	21	16
Sleeping out - - - - -	22	19	16	13	19	26	10	26
Simple Larceny - - - - -	33	30	42	18	17	32	35	39
Wilful Damage - - - - -	12	13	14	10	10	13	18	23
Burglary - - - - -	1	2	1	—	—	2	—	3
Housebreaking - - - - -	2	5	—	4	1	3	4	2
Found on enclosed Premises - - - - -	3	1	2	1	2	1	—	2
Receiving Stolen Property - - - - -	—	—	1	—	2	1	2	—
Obtaining Goods, &c., by False Pretences	1	2	2	1	—	1	—	—
Arson - - - - -	—	3	—	1	1	5	—	1
Manslaughter - - - - -	—	—	2	—	—	—	—	—
Rape - - - - -	—	—	1	—	—	—	—	—
Indecent Assaults - - - - -	—	2	—	—	2	—	—	—
Indecent Exposure - - - - -	—	—	2	2	—	1	—	—
Indecency - - - - -	—	—	—	1	—	—	—	—
Assaults - - - - -	4	4	10	10	9	9	5	12
Cruelty to Children - - - - -	—	1	1	1	—	4	2	2
Other Offences not included under above Heads	8	18	13	4	—	17	5	8
Total Number of Tramps apprehended -	261	270	297	228	254	396	326	427
Total Number of Persons apprehended without warrant - - - - -	577	578	591	606	642	772	727	954

2. STATISTICS OF OFFENCES BY VAGRANTS IN NORTHUMBERLAND.

Appendix
XII.

NUMBER OF PERSONS APPREHENDED AND DEALT WITH DURING THE 3 YEARS ENDED 30TH SEPTEMBER.

(Statement handed in by Captain Fullarton James, Chief Constable of Northumberland.)

Offence.	Acts and Section.	1902.	1903.	1904.
Burglary - - - - -	24 and 25 Vict., ch. 96, s. 52.	1	—	—
Housebreaking - - - - -	24 and 25 Vict., ch. 96, s. 55 and 56.	1	—	—
Robbery with Violence - - - - -	24 and 25 Vict., ch. 96, s. 43.	—	—	2
Larceny - - - - -	24 and 25 Vict., ch. 96.	9	30	12
Drunkenness - - - - -	35 and 36 Vict., ch. 94, s. 12.	102	92	133
Sleeping Out - - - - -	5 Geo. IV., ch. 83, s. 4.	83	109	86
Begging Alms - - - - -	5 Geo. IV., ch. 83, s. 3.	38	57	43
Poor Law - - - - -	- - - - -	6	22	1
Destroying Workhouse Clothes - -	34 and 35 Vict., ch. 108, s. 7 (2).	—	1	1
Destroying his own Clothes - - -	Do.	1	2	—
Misbehaviour by Paupers - - -	34 and 35 Vict., ch. 108, s. 5.	—	—	5
Refusing to perform prescribed task -	Do.	2	1	2
Absconding from Workhouse - - -	55 Geo. III., ch. 137, s. 2.	—	—	2
Assault on Workhouse Master - -	13 and 14 Vict., ch. 101, s. 9.	—	—	1
Assault (Common) - - - - -	24 and 25 Vict., ch. 100, s. 42.	1	—	—
Assault on Police - - - - -	1 and 2 Wm. IV., ch. 41, s. 11.	3	1	1
Army Act - - - - -	- - - - -	1	—	—
Pedlars' Act - - - - -	5 Geo. IV., ch. 83, s. 3.	1	—	—
Dog Stealing - - - - -	24 and 25 Vict., ch. 96, s. 18.	—	—	2
Stealing Garden Produce - - -	Do. s. 36.	—	—	1
False Pretences - - - - -	Do. s. 88.	—	1	—
Wilful Damage - - - - -	24 and 25 Vict., ch. 97, s. 24.	—	7	3
Railway Offences - - - - -	52 and 53 Vict., ch. 57, s. 5 (3) (a).	—	—	2
Indecent Exposure - - - - -	5 Geo. IV., ch. 83, s. 4.	1	—	—
Cruelty to Children - - - - -	57 and 58 Vict., ch. 41, s. 1.	—	1	—
	TOTALS - - -	250	324	297

	1902.	1903.	1904.
Convicted - - - - -	212	292	258
Discharged - - - - -	38	32	38
Insane (Asylum) - - - - -	—	—	1
TOTALS - - -	250	324	297

The greater number of the discharged were on condition they left the Town.
Punishment is usually 7 or 14 days imprisonment, hard labour, more frequently the former term.

APPENDIX XIII.

PARTICULARS AS TO CASUAL WARDS IN ENGLAND AND WALES.

1. SUMMARY OF RETURNS RECEIVED FROM BOARDS OF GUARDIANS IN OCTOBER, 1904.

Character of Accommodation Provided.	Whether any task of work imposed.
Separate cells - - - - - 434	Yes - - - - - 589
No separate cells - - - - - 204	No - - - - - 14
Associated wards - - - - - 559	For men only - - - - - 28
Both separate and associated wards - - - - - 355	Not always - - - - - 7
Whether Vagrants detained for two nights.	Details of tasks.
Yes - - - - - 116	Stone breaking - - - - - 438
No - - - - - 129	Stone pounding - - - - - 75
Men only detained - - - - - 86	Oakum picking (men) - - - - - 221
Occasionally - - - - - 168	Oakum picking (women) - - - - - 206
Not women with children - - - - - 224	Corn grinding - - - - - 17
	Wood sawing and cutting - - - - - 176
	Gardening, farmwork, digging, etc. - - - - - 199
	Pumping - - - - - 43
	Cleaning and scrubbing (men) - - - - - 78
	Cleaning and scrubbing (women) - - - - - 488
	Needlework - - - - - 58
	No task prescribed (men) - - - - - 10
	No task prescribed (women) - - - - - 67
Whether vagrants bathed on admission.	Dietary—Breakfast and supper.
Yes - - - - - 525
No - - - - - 57
Occasionally - - - - - 33
Men only - - - - - 23
Whether vagrants searched on admission.	Men.
Yes - - - - - 625	Bread only - - - - - 374
No - - - - - 13	Bread with gruel or broth - - - - - 240
	Bread and tea, coffee or milk - - - - - 24
Whether Medical Certificate obtained before proceedings taken for refusal of task.	Women.
Yes - - - - - 257	Bread only - - - - - 33
No - - - - - 53	Bread with gruel or broth - - - - - 522
In some cases only - - - - - 257	Bread with tea, coffee, etc. - - - - - 63
Verbal opinion of medical officer obtained - - - - - 28	Bread with milk - - - - - 5
Medical officer sent for if pauper wishes - - - - - 23	None given - - - - - 15
No refusals - - - - - 17
Not stated - - - - - 3
Disposal of food found on vagrants.	Mid-day meal.
Returned to vagrant on discharge - - - - - 362
Retained by vagrant or eaten - - - - - 176
Taken away from, and not returned to, vagrant - - - - - 69
None found - - - - - 31
	Men.
	Bread and cheese - - - - - 474
	Bread, cheese, soup, or broth - - - - - 115
	Other various diets - - - - - 8
	None given - - - - - 41
	Women.
	Bread and cheese - - - - - 437
	Bread, cheese, soup, or broth - - - - - 134
	None given - - - - - 67

Note.—The figures above refer to the number of casual wards.

ADMISSIONS TO CASUAL WARDS DURING THE YEAR ENDED 29TH SEPTEMBER, 1904.

	Total number of admissions.	Number of cases detained four nights.	Number of cases removed to Workhouse or Infirmary.
Men - - - - -	2,156,975*	19,824	7,864
Women - - - - -	248,106*	4,189	2,009
Children - - - - -	79,597*	727	590
Total - - - - -	2,484,678*	24,740	10,463

* These totals, of course, include the same vagrants many times over. To arrive at the average nightly number of casual paupers the total should be divided by something like 300. On the 1st January, 1904, the number of inmates of casual wards was 8,519.

2. ACCOMMODATION PROVIDED IN CASUAL WARDS.

(From Replies furnished by Boards of Guardians.)

County.	Number of Casual Wards.	Number of Casual Wards with				Accommodation.
		No Separate Cells.	Separate Cells.	Associated Wards.	Both Separate and Associated Wards.	In Separate Cells.				In Associated Wards.			Total Accommodation.
						Men.	Women.	Women with Children.	Total.	Men.	Women and Children.	Total.
Beds - - -	5	-	5	4	4	66	4	4	74	25	19	44	118
Berks - - -	12	5	7	11	6	92	13	1	106	234	94	328	434
Bucks - - -	7	1	6	4	3	66	21	4	91	50	53	103	194
Cambridge - -	9	1	8	8	7	63	5	1	69	68	37	105	174
Chester - - -	12	-	12	10	10	244	34	9	287	135	71	206	493
Cornwall - - -	13	11	2	12	1	4	5	2	11	56	36	92	103
Cumberland - -	9	6	3	9	3	48	-	-	48	167	66	233	281
Derby - - -	9	1	8	9	8	106	12	4	122	162	45	207	329
Devon - - -	20	11	9	19	8	89	8	1	98	188	62	250	348
Dorset - - -	12	5	7	12	7	41	1	-	42	87	36	123	165
Durham - - -	15	3	12	14	11	182	10	8	200	199	102	301	501
Essex - - -	16	7	9	16	9	139	17	4	160	172	85	257	417
Gloucester - -	17	4	13	15	11	167	21	8	196	148	108	256	452
Hereford - - -	8	1	7	7	6	63	4	2	69	64	56	120	189
Hertford - - -	12	4	8	12	8	68	4	-	72	124	81	205	277
Hunts - - -	3	1	2	3	2	12	6	-	18	35	9	44	62
Kent - - -	26	10	16	24	14	155	52	21	228	656	331	987	1,215
Lancashire - -	29	6	23	26	20	554	121	58	733	1,201	224	1,425	2,158
Leicester - - -	11	4	7	10	6	147	10	-	157	172	65	237	394
Lincoln - - -	16	6	10	11	5	74	15	11	100	128	43	171	271
London - - -	28	2	26	8	6	1,007	323	118	1,448	256	99	355	1,803
Middlesex - - -	6	-	6	5	5	88	13	7	108	67	52	119	227
Monmouth - - -	6	-	6	5	5	71	-	-	71	23	36	59	130
Norfolk - - -	21	12	9	19	7	77	11	1	89	188	83	271	360
Northampton -	12	3	9	12	9	96	11	2	109	122	71	193	302
Northumberland-	12	6	6	12	6	111	8	3	122	196	61	257	379
Notts - - -	8	1	7	7	6	113	23	3	139	112	41	153	292
Oxford - - -	9	7	2	9	2	44	-	-	44	175	67	242	286
Rutland - - -	2	2	-	2	-	-	-	-	-	41	11	52	52
Salop - - -	15	3	12	12	9	172	9	12	193	132	106	238	431
Somerset - - -	17	7	10	17	10	100	6	6	112	199	82	281	393
Southampton -	25	9	16	21	12	187	18	18	223	158	124	282	505
Stafford - - -	17	2	15	16	14	276	32	14	322	246	140	386	708
Suffolk - - -	14	2	12	13	11	91	5	1	97	127	61	188	285
Surrey - - -	11	2	9	11	9	123	24	10	157	274	128	402	559
Sussex - - -	20	9	11	16	7	179	25	10	214	283	119	402	616
Warwick - - -	14	6	8	13	7	129	15	13	157	329	154	483	640
Westmorland -	3	3	-	3	-	-	-	-	-	168	24	192	192
Wilts - - -	17	7	10	17	10	92	4	-	96	199	111	310	406
Worcester - - -	12	1	11	12	11	157	15	8	180	152	122	274	454
Yorks (E.R.) -	10	5	5	10	5	44	3	8	55	208	72	280	335
Yorks (N.R.) -	17	8	9	16	8	119	9	1	129	165	88	253	382
Yorks (W.R.) -	35	7	28	30	23	590	89	38	717	480	190	670	1,387
Wales (12 counties)	46	13	33	37	24	311	32	7	350	324	109	433	783
Total - -	638	204	434	559	355	6,557	1,038	418	8,013	8,695	3,774	12,469	20,482

3. SEARCHING, BATHING AND DETENTION IN CASUAL WARDS.

(From Replies furnished by Boards of Guardians.)

County.	Number of Casual Wards.	Whether vagrants are
		Searched on admission.		Bathed on admission.				Detained for two nights.
		Yes.	No.	Yes.	No.	Occasion- ally or if sufficient water.	Men only.	Yes.	No.	Men only.	Not Women with Children	Occasion- ally or if accom- modation permits.
Beds - - - - -	5	5	-	5	-	-	-	1	-	-	1	3
Berks - - - - -	12	12	-	10	1	-	1	5	1	-	3	6
Bucks - - - - -	7	6	1	6	-	1	-	3	1	-	2	3
Cambridge - - - - -	9	9	-	9	-	-	-	1	-	3	3	1
Chester - - - - -	12	12	-	11	-	-	1	4	2	1	7	1
Cornwall - - - - -	13	10	3	5	6	2	-	2	6	2	2	1
Cumberland - - - - -	9	7	2	9	-	-	-	-	5	1	1	3
Derby - - - - -	9	9	-	9	-	-	-	1	2	2	2	3
Devon - - - - -	20	20	-	17	2	1	-	2	3	3	6	3
Dorset - - - - -	12	12	-	6	1	2	3	3	5	3	-	1
Durham - - - - -	15	15	-	15	-	-	-	2	1	3	7	2
Essex - - - - -	16	16	-	12	1	-	3	3	1	1	9	1
Gloucester - - - - -	17	17	-	14	3	-	-	1	8	-	5	6
Hereford - - - - -	8	8	-	5	-	2	1	-	1	1	5	6
Hertford - - - - -	12	12	-	12	-	-	-	2	-	2	2	7
Hunts - - - - -	3	3	-	3	-	-	-	2	-	-	-	1
Kent - - - - -	26	25	1	14	7	4	1	6	5	4	6	8
Lancashire - - - - -	29	29	-	29	-	-	-	6	5	2	9	14
Leicester - - - - -	11	11	-	10	-	1	-	3	3	2	4	2
Lincoln - - - - -	16	16	-	13	2	-	1	1	6	4	3	2
London - - - - -	28	28	-	28	-	-	-	12	1	1	13	3
Middlesex - - - - -	6	6	-	6	-	-	-	2	2	1	-	1
Monmouth - - - - -	6	6	-	5	-	-	1	-	3	2	1	-
Norfolk - - - - -	21	21	-	15	5	-	1	4	2	5	8	5
Northampton - - - - -	12	11	1	11	-	1	-	-	-	6	6	3
Northumberland - - - - -	12	12	-	10	-	2	-	3	1	1	6	3
Notts - - - - -	8	8	-	8	-	-	-	2	2	1	2	1
Oxford - - - - -	9	9	-	7	-	-	2	5	-	1	2	1
Rutland - - - - -	2	2	-	1	1	-	-	-	-	-	2	1
Salop - - - - -	15	14	1	10	2	1	2	2	7	1	4	1
Somerset - - - - -	17	17	-	15	1	1	-	4	2	2	8	3
Southampton - - - - -	25	25	-	19	1	5	-	1	7	5	10	9
Stafford - - - - -	17	17	-	13	2	-	2	3	3	3	6	7
Suffolk - - - - -	14	14	-	11	2	-	1	1	3	4	5	2
Surrey - - - - -	11	11	-	10	-	1	-	4	-	2	5	1
Sussex - - - - -	20	20	-	15	3	2	-	4	1	-	11	5
Warwick - - - - -	14	13	1	10	3	1	-	2	2	-	7	8
Westmorland - - - - -	3	3	-	3	-	-	-	-	1	-	1	1
Wilts - - - - -	17	17	-	15	-	1	1	5	-	1	6	8
Worcester - - - - -	12	12	-	11	1	-	-	1	2	1	7	7
Yorks (E.R.) - - - - -	10	10	-	10	-	-	-	2	3	2	3	-
Yorks (N.R.) - - - - -	17	17	-	17	-	-	-	4	4	1	8	4
Yorks (W.R.) - - - - -	35	35	-	33	-	2	-	5	9	4	18	6
Wales (12 counties) - - -	46	43	3	28	13	3	2	2	19	8	8	14
Total - - - - -	638	625(a)	13	525	57	33	23	116(b)	129	86(c)	224(d)	168(e)

Note.—The figures refer to the number of casual wards.

(a) Including three wards where men only are searched.

(b) In one ward the detention is only in the case of vagrants under 60 years of age, and in one men who have promise of or appear in search of work are not detained.

(c) In four wards vagrants are detained "occasionally," in one habitually only, in one only single men, in one not old men and men having work to go to, in one not aged and decrepit men, in two not men in search of work, and in one not those with wives and families.

(d) In four wards the detention is at the master's discretion, in nine "not always," in one habitually only, in one if with baby in arms, and in one in bad weather.

(e) In one ward married couples are not detained, in two wards able-bodied men only, in one only able-bodied men and husband and wife, in two wards women not often, in four the detention is subject to rules of the way-ticket system, in one subject to master's discretion, in five not during hop-picking, &c., in four not in the case of men if they have work in district or appear in search of it, in two not those admitted on Saturday, in one only half the men, and in six only over Sunday.

4. TASKS OF WORK IN CASUAL WARDS.

Appendix
XIII.

(From Replies furnished by Boards of Guardians.)

County.	Number of Casual Wards.	Whether any Task is required.				Number of Wards with the following tasks.
		Yes.	No.	Not always.	For men only.	Stone breaking.	Stone pounding.	Oakum Picking.		Wood cutting or sawing.	Gardening, Digging, Farmwork, &c.	Pumping.	Cleaning, Scrubbing or Washing.		Needlework.	Corn grinding.
								Men.	Women.				Men.	Women.
Beds - - - - -	5	5	-	-	-	4	2	2	3	1	2	-	2	4	1	-
Berks - - - - -	12	12	-	-	-	5	4	9	1	2	3	1	1	10	-	-
Bucks - - - - -	7	7	-	-	-	3	3	3	3	2	3	2	3	7	2	-
Cambridge - - - - -	9	9	-	-	-	8	-	3	4	2	2	1	-	6	-	-
Chester - - - - -	12	11	-	-	1	8	1	3	5	5	2	-	2	8	-	-
Cornwall - - - - -	13	13	-	-	-	8	1	1	2	5	6	-	2	11	-	-
Cumberland - - - - -	9	9	-	-	-	9	-	-	-	2	4	1	1	9	-	-
Derby - - - - -	9	8	-	1	-	6	-	3	1	5	4	-	1	7	2	-
Devon - - - - -	20	18	1	-	1	16	6	2	2	4	7	1	4	18	1	-
Dorset - - - - -	12	11	-	-	1	5	1	3	1	3	4	3	5	9	1	-
Durham - - - - -	15	14	1	-	-	10	-	4	1	7	7	-	1	14	1	-
Essex - - - - -	16	16	-	-	-	11	-	11	12	1	3	4	-	11	1	-
Gloucester - - - - -	17	16	1	-	-	16	-	3	6	5	3	1	-	11	1	-
Hereford - - - - -	8	8	-	-	-	8	-	1	2	-	1	-	-	7	-	-
Hertford - - - - -	12	10	1	-	1	2	1	8	5	3	2	2	1	5	1	-
Hunts - - - - -	3	3	-	-	-	2	-	2	3	2	2	-	-	1	1	-
Kent - - - - -	26	24	-	2	-	15	13	8	10	3	12	2	2	20	2	-
Lancashire - - - - -	29	27	1	1	-	19	1	7	7	12	7	-	8	26	4	6
Leicester - - - - -	11	10	1	-	-	6	-	1	2	4	2	1	2	9	-	-
Lincoln - - - - -	16	15	-	-	1	8	-	6	2	9	5	-	1	11	-	-
London - - - - -	28	27	1	-	-	21	1	26	24	2	4	-	11	17	14	1
Middlesex - - - - -	6	5	-	-	1	5	1	2	3	3	5	-	-	5	-	-
Monmouth - - - - -	6	6	-	-	-	5	-	3	3	3	2	-	1	5	-	-
Norfolk - - - - -	21	20	1	-	-	10	-	13	13	1	2	2	-	10	1	-
Northampton - - - - -	12	10	-	-	2	9	-	5	5	3	4	-	1	10	3	-
Northumberland - - - - -	12	12	-	-	-	11	-	1	2	4	1	-	-	10	1	-
Notts - - - - -	8	8	-	-	-	8	-	1	1	3	1	-	2	8	-	-
Oxford - - - - -	9	9	-	-	-	5	4	5	7	2	4	1	-	3	-	-
Rutland - - - - -	2	2	-	-	-	1	1	2	1	1	1	-	1	2	-	-
Salop - - - - -	15	14	-	1	-	15	-	4	3	4	4	2	5	14	1	-
Somerset - - - - -	17	16	-	-	1	15	3	-	2	-	4	-	-	15	-	-
Southampton - - - - -	25	21	2	-	2	7	10	4	5	5	12	3	4	20	4	-
Stafford - - - - -	17	14	1	-	2	13	-	7	7	8	5	2	2	13	3	-
Suffolk - - - - -	14	12	-	-	2	8	-	7	2	4	6	2	1	8	2	1
Surrey - - - - -	11	10	-	-	1	7	3	10	8	6	5	1	1	6	2	1
Sussex - - - - -	20	17	-	-	3	5	15	8	9	2	9	3	4	19	2	-
Warwick - - - - -	14	11	-	1	2	12	-	7	7	4	7	-	1	11	-	2
Westmorland - - - - -	3	2	1	-	-	3	-	1	1	-	2	-	-	3	1	1
Wilts - - - - -	17	15	-	-	2	11	1	9	6	5	7	4	2	14	2	1
Worcester - - - - -	12	11	-	-	1	12	-	1	4	8	6	-	-	12	1	-
Yorks (E.R.) - - - - -	10	9	-	-	1	9	1	-	1	3	1	1	1	7	-	-
Yorks (N.R.) - - - - -	17	13	1	-	3	14	-	2	3	6	3	1	-	13	1	-
Yorks (W.R.) - - - - -	35	34	-	1	-	24	-	15	7	13	5	-	3	30	1	3
Wales (12 counties) - - - - -	46	45	1	-	-	39	2	8	4	9	18	2	2	29	1	1
Total - - - - -	638	589	14	7	28	438	75	(a) 221	(b) 206	176	(c) 199	43	78	488	58	17

Note.—The figures refer to the number of casual wards.

(a) In one ward the task is coir-picking.

(b) In one ward the task is teasing cocoa-fibre, in one flock-picking, in three picking bed-fibre, in one re-picking beds, and in one coir-picking.

(c) In one ward the task is carrying coal.

5. DIETARY IN CASUAL WARDS.

(From Replies furnished by Boards of Guardians.)

County.	Number of Casual Wards.	Breakfast and Supper.							Mid-day Meal.
		Men.			*Women.				Men.			Women.
		Bread with Tea, Coffee, or Milk.	Bread only.	Bread with Gruel or Broth.	Bread with Milk.	Bread only.	Bread with Gruel or Broth.	Bread with Tea or Coffee, &c.	Bread and Cheese only.	Bread, Cheese, Soup, or Broth.	None given.	Bread and Cheese only.	Bread, Cheese, Soup or Broth.	None given.
Beds - -	5	-	4	1	-	-	5	-	5	-	-	5	-	-
Berks - -	12	-	12	-	-	2	8	2	12	-	-	11	1	-
Bucks - -	7	1	4	2	-	-	5	2	4	3	-	3	4	-
Cambridge - -	9	-	6	3	-	-	6	3	9	-	-	7	-	2
Chester - -	12	1	3	8	-	-	10	2	9	2	1	9	2	1
Cornwall - -	13	3	1	9	1	1	9	2	4	6	3	4	6	3
Cumberland - -	9	-	2	7	-	-	8	1	6	2	-	5	4	-
Derby - -	9	1	6	2	-	1	8	-	7	1	1	6	1	2
Devon - -	20	3	3	14	-	1	16	3	6	10	4	5	11	4
Dorset - -	12	-	11	1	1	3	6	2	9	2	1	8	2	2
Durham - -	15	-	6	9	-	1	13	1	10	5	-	10	5	-
Essex - -	16	-	13	3	-	1	13	2	15	1	-	15	1	-
Gloucester - -	17	1	11	5	-	1	14	2	10	5	2	9	5	3
Hereford - -	8	-	8	-	-	1	6	1	3	5	-	3	5	-
Hertford - -	12	1	10	1	-	-	11	1	10	1	-	11	1	-
Hunts - -	3	-	3	-	-	1	2	-	3	-	-	3	-	-
Kent - -	26	2	16	8	-	3	16	7	18	5	2	17	6	3
Lancashire - -	29	3	11	15	1	1	25	2	24	3	-	25	4	-
Leicester - -	11	-	9	2	-	-	10	1	9	-	1	10	-	1
Lincoln - -	16	-	4	12	-	2	13	1	10	4	1	10	5	1
London - -	28	-	-	28	-	-	28	-	26	2	-	26	2	-
Middlesex - -	6	-	3	3	-	-	5	1	5	1	-	5	1	-
Monmouth - -	6	-	3	3	-	-	3	2	2	2	2	1	2	3
Norfolk - -	21	-	18	3	-	2	19	-	20	-	1	18	-	3
Northampton - -	12	-	8	4	-	1	10	1	9	3	-	8	4	-
Northumberland - -	12	1	3	8	1	-	9	1	6	6	-	4	7	1
Notts - -	8	-	4	4	-	-	8	-	7	-	1	6	-	2
Oxford - -	9	-	9	-	-	-	9	-	9	-	-	9	-	-
Rutland - -	2	-	2	-	-	-	1	1	2	-	-	1	1	-
Salop - -	15	-	11	4	-	-	13	2	10	2	2	10	3	2
Somerset - -	17	-	11	6	-	4	12	1	17	-	-	17	-	-
Southampton - -	25	3	18	4	-	2	16	7	21	2	2	18	4	3
Stafford - -	17	-	14	3	-	-	17	-	15	-	2	13	1	3
Suffolk - -	14	-	14	-	-	-	12	2	11	2	1	9	3	2
Surrey - -	11	-	10	1	-	-	11	-	10	1	-	10	1	-
Sussex - -	20	-	18	2	-	2	15	3	20	-	-	18	2	-
Warwick - -	14	-	9	5	-	-	14	-	11	3	-	11	3	-
Westmorland - -	3	-	-	3	-	-	3	-	2	1	-	1	2	-
Wilts - -	17	1	12	4	1	-	14	2	15	2	-	15	2	-
Worcester - -	12	-	7	5	-	-	12	-	9	3	-	9	3	-
Yorks (E.R.) - -	10	1	6	3	-	1	8	1	9	1	-	9	1	-
Yorks (N.R.) - -	17	-	13	4	-	1	16	-	10	5	2	9	5	3
Yorks (W.R.) - -	35	1	23	11	-	-	32	3	27	7	1	25	8	2
Wales (12 counties) - -	46	1	15	30	-	1	31	1	18	17	11	9	16	21
Total - -	638	24	374	240(a)	5	33	522(b)	63(c)	474	115(d)	41	437	134(e)	67

Note.—The figures refer to the number of casual wards.

(a) In two wards bread and cheese is given, in one soup, and in one butter with bread.

(b) In three wards soup, and in two cheese is given with bread.

(c) In one ward treacle is given, in two dripping, and in three butter, in addition.

(d) In six wards the ordinary workhouse diet is given, in one bread only, in one bread gruel and buttermilk, in one gruel or milk porridge, and in one bread cheese and suet pudding, and in eight wards various other diets.

(e) In eight wards the ordinary workhouse diet is given, in two coffee, in one bread cheese and buttermilk, in one bread and buttermilk, and in one bread cheese and suet pudding.

* In addition to the wards enumerated no breakfast or supper appears to be given in one ward in Monmouth, one in Northumberland, and thirteen in Wales.

APPENDIX XIV.

Appendix
XIV.

VAGRANCY IN IRELAND.

(Memorandum prepared by the Local Government Board for Ireland.)

The number of "casuals," "tramps," or "night lodgers," as they are variously called, relieved in Irish workhouses during each week of the period from 2nd April, 1904, to 1st April, 1905, inclusive, varied from 3,718 (in the week ended 11th June, 1904) to 6,235 (in that ended 25th March following), the weekly average being 4,788. The daily average was about 745, which represents seventeen in every 100,000 of the population. The number of males was usually from four to five times that of the females.

There are no special enactments dealing with this class of poor in Irish workhouses corresponding to "The Pauper Inmates Discharge and Regulation (England) Act, 1871" or "The Casual Poor (England) Act, 1882," which regulate and control the discharge of paupers from workhouses and wards provided for the casual poor.

The destitute wayfarer who seeks the shelter of a workhouse in Ireland is exactly in the same position as any other person applying for relief, even when his application for admission to the workhouse is avowedly for one night only. These admissions usually take place on an order from a relieving officer, but in the absence of such an order the responsibility of admitting or refusing to admit is cast on the master of the workhouse. The fact of an applicant being able-bodied, or being known to be an offender under the Vagrancy Act would not necessarily involve a refusal of relief, the qualification for which is destitution. The relieving officer (or the master, as the case may be) is required to determine on his own responsibility, whether the case is one of "sudden and urgent" necessity, in which case he is bound to give an order for provisional admission to the workhouse, and to bring the case before the board of guardians at their next meeting, but he has no authority to give an order for admission for "one night only" or for any limited time. If he deems the case not to be one of sudden and urgent necessity, he has no authority to give an order for admission at all, but is nevertheless bound to bring the application before the guardians at their next meeting.

The relieving officer and the master are held responsible for the due exercise of their discretion, so as on the one hand to avoid incurring the risk of severe suffering to any destitute applicant in consequence of a refusal of admission, and on the other, to decline admission in cases which are clearly not of the class which the law has empowered them to relieve without previous reference to the board of guardians.

The workhouse regulations require that every case of admission, without exception, shall be entered in the books, that all persons admitted shall be subject to the provisions of the rules regarding searching, cleansing of clothing, discipline and diet, and that they shall be kept at work according to their ability. Any pauper refusing to perform the task of work allotted to him, or otherwise infringing the workhouse regulations can be prosecuted or otherwise punished as provided in the rules.

These rules are, we regret to say, very often not adhered to. The regulation regarding the giving of baths is evaded in every possible way, on the plea of ill-health, etc., and the porters appointed in many workhouses are often physically unfit to adopt stringent measures with this troublesome class of inmate. The male tramps are generally required to perform a certain task of work, such as stone breaking, before leaving. The female tramps are sometimes required to pick oakum, but generally it has been found impossible to put them to any kind of work beyond cleaning up their ward.

The tramps are admitted to the different workhouses usually late in the evening, and they get a supper consisting generally of six or eight ounces of bread and a pint of milk. They are searched in a more or less perfunctory manner, and are then locked up for the night in the probationary ward. In the morning they receive a breakfast somewhat similar to the supper of the night before. They must give 3 hours' notice before quitting the workhouse.

The amount of work these tramps are called upon to perform depends entirely on the energy and strictness of the master. One of our inspectors reports—

"In about one-third of my workhouses the male tramps have to break about three cwt. of road material, and in the remainder they either do no work at all, or else they are put to carry out and empty receptacles in the closets, or to pump water for a couple of hours. My experience is that the workhouses they dislike the most are those where a fixed task, which takes from two to three hours to perform, is given to them."

The tramps rarely remain more than a night in the same workhouse, and the same tramp seldom repeats a visit to a workhouse where stringent and stern measures are taken to enforce the performance of a regular task.

There are many different types of vagrants, and these in turn vary in different parts of the country.

In the western districts of Ireland, comprising the counties of Galway, Longford, Westmeath, King's County, and portions of Cavan, Roscommon and Clare, the vagrants may be divided into two classes:—

(1). Beggars, i.e. persons who confine their operations to a limited area, frequenting markets and fairs in the vicinity of their place of residence, say within an area of ten or twelve Irish miles, lodging for a night by the fireside of charitably disposed peasants, and in their wanderings, sometimes, especially in summer, sleeping out under hedges and haystacks. These are very often simply unoffending poor persons who have lost their homes and frequent the country and small towns where they were originally known when in better circumstances. This class, although often wearisome by their importunities for alms, are, as a rule, not unpopular with the country people whose charity they seek. Indeed, to some extent the well-known charity of the Irish peasant is calculated to perpetuate begging. These beggars, although coming within the provisions of section 3 of the Vagrancy (Ireland) Act, 10 & 11 Vic. ch. 84, are seldom interfered with by the police or by any other person, and they are allowed to carry on their occupation—for occupation it undoubtedly is—without any effort being made to check them.

(2). The professional tramp.—The professional tramp has very often been reared a tramp, and remains a vagrant all his life. He is often young and able-bodied, but in many instances unfit, and in all cases unwilling, to work, having from his infancy done nothing but tramp from town to town. He frequents fairs, markets, race-meetings, and other places of amusement, begging or singing ballads, and thieving and intimidating when he gets the chance. This class is just as much disliked by the country people as the genuine beggar is tolerated. In the extreme western portion of the country this class of vagrant is practically unknown, owing chiefly to the long distances which have to be traversed from town to town and from workhouse to workhouse, but in the eastern and midland counties the professional tramp abounds. In many places these tramps levy a kind of blackmail, people being only too glad to get rid of them for a trifle either in food or money.

When these tramps are prosecuted by guardians, great trouble is experienced in obtaining convictions, owing to the difficulty of proving that they had left their own union "for the purpose of obtaining relief," as is necessary to secure a conviction under section 3 of the Vagrant Act, 1847, and these persons almost invariably put forward the plea that they are looking for work. This difficulty in obtaining convictions, together with the leniency towards the genuine beggar before referred to, accounts for the comparatively small number of prosecutions of workhouse casuals in Ireland under the Vagrancy Act.

Appendix
XIV.
—

No person can look around a town in which a workhouse is situated without being struck by the fact that the evil of professional vagrancy has an undesirably large existence. Anyone approaching a town about noon will invariably meet some six or eight of the class, whom he cannot mistake, quitting the town. If leaving a town in the evening, the traveller will meet the tramps arriving, especially on the eve of a fair day, when the number of night lodgers is generally doubled. When a race meeting is to be held, or a militia regiment is being mobilised, the casual wards of the workhouses are filled to overflowing; the same thing occurs when the regiment is being disbanded.

The guardians can hardly be blamed for their failure to prosecute tramps who frequent their workhouses. In addition to the difficulty of securing convictions, already alluded to, it is quite impossible for any one union, however willing, to deal effectively with a question which only collective action can remedy, as stringent measures in any one union only diverts the stream of deserving and undeserving poor into another channel.

There is a very general feeling throughout the country that the present laws dealing with vagrants are unsatisfactory, and that effective means should be provided to deal with this class, and that there is a necessity for institutions where suitable work would be provided, and these persons detained for a sufficient time to convince them that tramping from union to union means detention and hard work. It is believed that the majority of these persons tramp the country on a pre-arranged and systematic plan, so as to enable them to attend certain race meetings, fairs and markets. If, however, this type of tramp were aware that he was likely to lose his liberty for a considerable time, and made to work and placed on plain fare, it would undoubtedly be a great deterrent to this idle, thriftless, and to some extent criminal life.

We annex copies of Circular Letters addressed to boards of guardians from time to time regarding tramps in workhouses. We also append a summary of the law of vagrancy in force in this country, together with some figures extracted from the published reports of judicial and criminal statistics, showing the number of persons apprehended by the police, and subsequently summarily convicted for vagrancy for the past five years.

Local Government Board, Ireland,
17th January, 1906.

SUMMARY OF THE LAW IN FORCE IN IRELAND REGARDING VAGRANCY.

MISBEHAVIOUR OF PAUPERS, &c.

Under sec. 58 of the Poor Relief Act, 1838, every person who refuses to be lodged and maintained in the workhouse of any union, or absconds out of such workhouse while his wife or any child whom he may be liable to maintain shall be relieved therein, and every person maintained in a workhouse who refuses to be set to work or is guilty of drunkenness, insubordination to the officers of the union, or disobedience to the rules, is liable, on conviction before any justice of the peace at petty sessions in open court, to be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept at hard labour for any time not exceeding one calendar month.

The third section of the Vagrancy (Ireland) Act, 10 & 11 Vic. ch. 84, renders a person liable to a month's imprisonment with hard labour for any of the following offences :—

- 1. Wandering abroad and begging.
- 2. Placing himself in any public place to beg and gather alms.
- 3. Causing or procuring or encouraging any child or children to do so.
- 4. Going from the union in which he has been resident to some other union for the purpose of obtaining relief.

The fourth section empowers "any person whatsoever" to apprehend any person whom he shall find offending against the Act, and to convey the offender before any justice of the peace to be dealt with as provided by the Act, or to deliver him to any constable or other peace officer of the county or place wherein he shall be apprehended, to be taken as aforesaid. The section further provides that it shall be the duty of every constable or peace officer to take into his custody every offender so delivered to him, and to take and convey such offender before a justice of the peace as soon as may be reasonably practicable, to be dealt with as is directed by the Act.

The fifth section empowers any justice of the peace to issue his warrant for the apprehension of any offender against the provisions of the Act.

No proceeding by or before any justice of the peace, under the provisions of this Act, can be quashed for want of form, or be removable into any of the superior courts by writ of certiorari (sec. 6).

Any justice or justices of the peace may hear and determine cases of vagrancy out of petty sessions (sec. 8 of 14 & 15 Vic. c. 93)

Sec. 15 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vic., ch. 112, amends and extends to Ireland sec. 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, under which justices of the peace are enabled to commit to prison for a period not exceeding three months with hard labour any persons convicted of the offences set forth in that section.

The following figures extracted from the reports of judicial and criminal statistics show the number of persons apprehended by the police, and subsequently convicted, under summary jurisdiction, for vagrancy, for each year from 1900 to 1904—the latest return available:—

Offences.		1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.
Vagrancy Acts—Offences against.	Begging - - - - -	701	749	761	817	817
	Sleeping out - - - - -	508	497	449	397	568
	Gaming, etc. - - - - -	12	8	11	12	6
	Possessing picklocks and other implements	1	1	1	—	1
	Found in enclosed premises - - -	70	65	59	89	95
	Frequenting - - - - -	49	27	47	58	39
	Other offences - - - - -	269	346	247	309	354
Total for each year - - - -		1,610	1,693	1,575	1,682	1,880

Note.—Persons convicted on summons are excluded from above figures.

CIRCULARS.

1.

Poor Law Commission Office, Dublin,
30th May, 1853.

SIR,—Several cases have been recently brought under the notice of the Commissioners for administering the laws for relief of the poor in Ireland, in which it appeared that paupers who had been discharged from the workhouse, and who were desirous of proceeding to distant parts of the country, had been furnished with documents signed by the master, or some other officer of the workhouse, certifying the fact of the pauper's discharge from the workhouse, his desire to proceed to some distant union, and his inability to maintain himself on the road, and recommending the masters of the several workhouses at which he might apply on the journey to afford him food and shelter for the night.

This practice is open to very serious objections, not only on account of its tendency to encourage mendicancy but also as promoting a direct breach of the third section of the Vagrant Act (10 and 11 Vic., c. 84), which renders the going from one union to another for the purpose of obtaining relief, a punishable offence.

In the Commissioners' circular letter of the 3rd February, 1851, they communicated to the board of guardians the opinion of the then Attorney-General, that an indictment would lie against a board of guardians for causing paupers to be removed from their union to another, thereby burdening the latter with the cost of their support, and although the cases now referred to are somewhat different from those on which this opinion was given, the Commissioners think it probable that parties who are proved to have been guilty of promoting the commission of an offence under the Vagrant Law in the way described might be held to be liable to punishment; and the Commissioners will deem it their duty to take very serious notice of the conduct of any union officer who may hereafter be proved to have given documents of the nature above mentioned to paupers on their discharge.

The Commissioners request that the contents of this circular may be made known to all the officers of the union.

By Order of the Commissioners,
W. STANLEY.
Secretary.

To the Clerk of each Union.

2.

Poor Law Commission Office, Dublin,
6th August, 1857.

SIR,—The Commissioners for administering the laws for relief of the poor in Ireland have had their attention drawn to the circumstance, that a practice prevails in many unions of admitting a class of persons to the workhouse who are termed "Night Lodgers," the admission being avowedly for one night only. The mode in which such admissions take place, and the manner in which the persons so admitted are treated, vary in different unions; but, in almost all cases where the practice prevails, the provisions of the workhouse regulations are, more or less, departed from. In some few instances the persons so admitted are not even entered on the workhouse books, and no relief whatever is afforded beyond lodging for the night; while in others, although they are registered and receive diet, they are not subjected to the ordinary discipline of the workhouse, not being searched on admission, and being allowed to remain in the probationary ward or bath room without being cleansed or clothed in the workhouse dress, and being allowed to leave the workhouse in the morning without giving any previous notice as required by Article 24 of the workhouse regulations.

The practice is open to many serious objections:—In the first place, it has a direct and obvious tendency to encourage vagrancy, inasmuch as in a district where it prevails, persons who may adopt a wandering and vagrant mode of life, depending for support upon casual charity, can always calculate with certainty upon obtaining an asylum for the night after the day has been occupied in begging about the country. This objection is equally applicable whether the relief afforded consists of lodging only, or of food as well as lodging, inasmuch as it is the facility of obtaining lodging by night that encourages begging by day, and enables persons to travel from one part of the country to another without legitimate means of support, the workhouse of each union through which they pass being used as a station.

In those cases in which no relief beyond the night's lodging is afforded a further and very serious objection consists in the responsibility incurred in regard to the sufficiency of the relief, inasmuch as every person admitted to the workhouse must be presumed to be destitute and wholly dependent for the necessities of life on the care of the officers in charge. If, under such circumstances, any casualty should occur, through the want of food, fuel, or clothing, to any person admitted to the workhouse, the workhouse officers would be held responsible for not having provided "due relief" as required by the Act of Parliament, there being no legal authority for limiting relief in the workhouse to lodging only.

It is to be observed further that the relieving officers, upon whose authority such admissions usually take place, have no authority whatever to limit the duration of the relief. If, on application, the case appears to be one of the description referred to in the seventh section of the 10th Vic., c. 31, that is, a case of sudden and urgent necessity; and if the case appears to be a fitting one for admission to the workhouse, the relieving officer is bound to give an order for provisional admission, and to bring the case before the board of guardians at their next meeting, but he has no authority to give an order of admission for one night only, or for any limited time; and, if the case is not one of sudden and urgent necessity, he has no authority to give an order of admission at all until he obtains the decision of the board of guardians on the case, which he should bring before them for that purpose at their next meeting after the application. It is manifest that, if this course of proceeding is not adhered to in these cases, the question of the destitution of the applicants, and the propriety of relieving them, is left entirely to the relieving officer, without any control whatever on the part of the board of guardians.

The Commissioners are aware that in the class of cases in which application for admission for a night is generally made, there may often be difficulty in determining whether the case is or is not one of sudden and urgent necessity; but this is a question which must, necessarily, be left to the discretion of the relieving officer, or of the master of the workhouse, should the application be made to him; and those officers must, of course, be held responsible for the due exercise of that discretion, so as, on the one hand, to avoid incurring the risk of severe suffering to any destitute applicant in consequence of a refusal of admission; and on the other, to decline admission in cases which are clearly not of that class which the law has empowered them to relieve without previous reference to the board of guardians.

The Commissioners do not doubt that the officers charged with the exercise of this discretion will be materially aided in the discharge of their duty in this respect if the provisions of the workhouse regulations are strictly enforced, in reference to cases of casual relief, as well as others, as it appears probable that vagrants who are not really destitute will be deterred from applying for admission when it becomes known that all parties, when admitted, will be searched, washed, and clothed in the workhouse dress, and that they will not be allowed to take their discharge without giving three hours' previous notice; and, if able-bodied, without performing a task of work.

Several instances have been brought under the notice of the Commissioners in which the number of applicants of this class was formerly very large, but was reduced to a comparatively small number, on a strict application of the workhouse regulations to all cases; and although complaints have been made, in some cases, that the number of night-lodgers is on the increase, that complaint does not, so far as the Commissioners have been able to ascertain, arise in any union in which the regulations of the workhouse are duly enforced.

The Commissioners recommend, therefore, that the relieving officers and master of the workhouse should be made distinctly aware of the limits of their powers and duties, as above set forth, in regard to admissions to the workhouse; and that every case of admission to the workhouse, without exception, should be entered on the workhouse books; that all persons admitted be subjected to the provisions of the workhouse rules regarding searching, cleansing, and clothing—and, also, as to discipline and diet—and, especially, that no person of the class under consideration be permitted to leave the workhouse without giving three hours' previous notice, as required by Article 24 of the workhouse rules.

Appendix
XIV.

By Order of the Commissioners,

B. BANKS,
Chief Clerk.

3.

Poor Law Commission Office, Dublin,
28th November, 1868.

Vagrancy.

SIR,—The Commissioners for administering the laws for relief of the poor in Ireland have had their attention drawn to the increase of professional vagrancy, and to the inconvenience caused by it, in many unions, where persons of the vagrant class are in the habit of seeking an asylum in the workhouse at night, taking their discharge on the following morning.

The Commissioners, in their circular letter of the 6th August, 1857, which is published in their Eleventh Annual Report, recommended a strict enforcement of the workhouse rules in regard to persons applying for admission to the workhouse avowedly for a night's lodging only, with the view of deterring vagrants who are not really destitute from making such applications; and the Commissioners have reason to believe that the adoption of this course, where constantly and uniformly carried out, has been effective to some extent in checking the abuse complained of.

They think, however, that the evil may be still further and more effectually dealt with by giving effect, in all cases where the circumstances appear to justify it, to the Vagrant Act (10 and 11 Vic., c. 84), and they think it desirable therefore to bring specially under the consideration of boards of guardians the following provisions of that Act.

The 3rd section renders a person liable to a month's imprisonment, with hard labour, for any of the following offences:—

1. Wandering abroad and begging.
2. Placing himself in any public place to beg and gather alms.
3. Causing, or procuring, or encouraging any child or children to do so.
4. Going from the union in which he had been resident to some other union for the purpose of obtaining relief.

The 4th section empowers "any person whatsoever" to apprehend any person whom he shall find offending against the Act, and to convey the offender before "any justice of the peace," to be dealt with as provided by the Act, or to deliver him to any constable or other peace officer of the county or place wherein he shall be apprehended, to be so taken as aforesaid. And the section further provides that "it shall be the duty of every constable or peace officer to take into his custody every offender so delivered to him, and to take and convey such offender before a justice of the peace as soon as may be reasonably practicable, to be dealt with as is directed by this Act."

The 5th section empowers any justice of the peace to issue his warrant for the apprehension of any offender against the provisions of the Act.

The Commissioners recommend the provisions of the Act to be enforced in all cases in which the facts seem sufficient to obtain a conviction.

In reference to the fourth of the offences above mentioned, the Commissioners are informed that in some localities convictions have taken place of persons going without means of subsistence from one union to another, on the presumption that in doing so they go from the one union into the other union for the purpose of obtaining relief in the latter.

It is well to observe that the enforcement of the provisions of the Vagrant Act does not necessarily involve a refusal of relief. On the contrary, the application for, and obtaining of, relief will be material elements in the case of a prosecution for the fourth offence above specified.

If, therefore, a night lodger be known to have offended against the Act, and the offence can be proved, the master of the workhouse or the relieving officer can, on his taking his discharge from the workhouse, apprehend and take him before a justice, or deliver him over to the police, as provided in section 4, if the guardians shall see fit to give directions to that effect.

By Order of the Commissioners,

B. BANKS,
Chief Clerk.

To the Clerk of each Union.

4.

Poor Law Commission Office, Dublin,
19th February, 1869.

Returns of Workhouse Inmates.

SIR,—The Commissioners for administering the laws for relief of the poor in Ireland have had their attention drawn to the fact that in many unions the relative proportions of the number of able-bodied males and females relieved in the workhouse, as shown in the half-yearly abstract, Form 4a, differs very largely from the relative proportions of the same classes as shown by the weekly relief returns; the number of males being greatly in excess of the number of females in the half-yearly abstracts, while the reverse is the case in the weekly returns.

The Commissioners have sought for an explanation of this circumstance from the Clerks of several of the unions in which the discrepancy is the greatest, and they find that in every case it is attributed to the fact that much greater numbers of males than females are admitted as night lodgers, and that six-sevenths of that class who are admitted during the week do not remain in the workhouse until Saturday, the day for which the return is made up, and consequently do not appear in that return, although they are necessarily included in the half-yearly abstract, which shows the number of persons relieved during the half-year.

The Commissioners think it desirable, under these circumstances, that the number of persons who are admitted as night lodgers during the week should be shown, and they request therefore that in the column for observations in the form for the number of persons in the workhouse, which is placed at the head of the Minutes, the number of night lodgers relieved during the week, and the number who remain in the workhouse at the time the return is made up, may be stated, giving the number of each sex, and distinguishing children under fifteen years of age.

A similar statement should also be included in the weekly relief return, for which provision will be made in future prints of the form.

By Order of the Commissioners,

B. BANKS,
Chief Clerk.

To the Clerk of each Union.

5.

Poor Law Commission Office, Dublin,
5th November, 1869.

SIR,—Adverting to their circular letter of the 28th November, 1868, relating to the prosecution of vagrants, which was published at page 46 of their last Annual Report, the Commissioners for administering the laws for relief of the poor in Ireland have had it brought under their notice, by command of His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, that since the issue of that circular some improper convictions have taken place under the provisions of the Vagrant Act, 10 & 11 Vic., cap. 84, sec. 3.

The offence especially alluded to in that circular was defined therein in the terms of the Act of Parliament, and printed in italics, as follows:—

"Going from the union in which he had been resident to some other union for the purpose of obtaining relief."

It is alleged that the guardians have in some cases, caused persons who had received a night's lodging in the workhouse to be prosecuted on the sole ground that they were strangers in the union and had applied for and obtained relief.

That such facts do not by themselves constitute the offence in question is very clear. It should be shown to the satisfaction of the magistrates that the person complained of has come from some other union in which he had been resident, and that he left that other union for the purpose of obtaining relief in the union in which he is prosecuted.

Generally the commission of this offence will be found peculiar to professional tramps and vagrants, whose intention to obtain relief in particular unions will be presumed not only from their coming there and applying for relief and obtaining it, but from other circumstances known regarding them personally, and regarding the places which they have come from and the places which they are going to.

The guardians ought to distinguish, and require their officers to distinguish, between this class of cases and those cases in which the applicant for relief has been overtaken by misfortune or want while passing through the country on lawful business, having had no intention when quitting the union in which he was previously resident of applying for relief in the union in which he subsequently was overtaken by misfortune and received relief.

The Commissioners request that in future prosecutions under the Vagrant Act this distinction will be carefully attended to by the guardians and their officers.

By Order of the Commissioners,

B. BANKS,
Chief Clerk.

To the Clerk of each Union.

6.

Local Government Board, Dublin.
31st March, 1875.

Casuals or Night Lodgers.

SIR,—The attention of the Local Government Board for Ireland has recently been drawn by Her Majesty's Government to the subject of tramps or casuals, or as they are usually called in this country, "night-lodgers," in reference to the existing practice of relieving them in the workhouses.

The guardians are therefore requested to refer to the following Circulars which have from time to time been issued from this Department on the subject, viz., that of the 6th August, 1857, that of 28th November, 1868, and that of 5th November, 1869.

Independently of the prosecution of such of these persons as may have committed an offence against the Vagrant law, and whom therefore it is in the power of the guardians to cause to be prosecuted, it has been suggested that a more systematic supervision of this class of recipients of relief might be exercised with advantage by the constabulary, who, if permitted to inspect them morning and evening, would be thus enabled to take a description of the persons of any of those who might excite suspicion of criminal acts or intentions, and thus prevent crime or facilitate its punishment.

The Local Government Board feel assured that the board of guardians will co-operate with the constabulary in every way they can, so as to carry out these objects, and will allow the police, when applied to for that purpose, to have every facility of inspecting these persons during their stay in the workhouse.

The expediency of the employment of night-lodgers on their admission to the workhouse and previously to their discharge from it, was pointed out in the Circular of the 6th August, 1857, and has been carried out in most workhouses which have been resorted to by tramps, with good effect; but it may be well to point out that in England the able-bodied males who remain one night only, are required to perform a certain task in breaking stones before they leave, and the able-bodied females a corresponding task in picking oakum, and that the maintenance of such discipline has been found, together with other arrangements, to diminish the number of this class of applicants.

The attention of the guardians is therefore now again directed to this subject as one of the means of the repression of Vagrancy in the country.

By Order of the Board,

B. BANKS,
Secretary.

To the Clerk of each Union.

7.

Local Government Board, Dublin,
2nd June, 1887.

SIR,—I am directed by the Local Government Board for Ireland to state for the information of the board of guardians that the great increase which has taken place in the number of night lodgers, or casuals, admitted to workhouses in Ireland during the year 1886 has attracted the Board's attention, and that they have obtained reports from their inspectors respecting the reception and treatment of persons of this class in some workhouses in each province, from which they learn that in many unions the advice given to boards of guardians by the late Poor Law Commissioners, in the year 1857, respecting the cleansing, clothing, and searching of such persons, is not attended to.

The Local Government Board have reason to believe that the increase in the number of night lodgers above referred to is attributable in a great measure to applications for temporary relief in workhouses made by labourers and artisans who, in consequence of want of employment in agricultural districts, and the depression in trade, travel about the country seeking for employment, and the Board have no desire that provisional relief should be denied to persons who are really destitute, but they consider that a strict observance of the workhouse rules in dealing with such cases is a matter of much importance, as if lodgings at night in workhouses may be obtained free of expense, without the enforcement of the rules and ordinary discipline of these institutions, facilities are afforded for the adoption of a wandering life; and vagrancy is thus encouraged.

The Local Government Board therefore desire to bring the matter under the notice of the board of guardians, and would repeat the advice given to them by the late Poor Law Commissioners in 1857, viz.:—that all persons admitted be subjected to the provisions of the workhouse rules regarding searching, cleansing, and clothing, and also as to discipline and diet, and, especially, that no person of the class under consideration be permitted to leave the workhouse without giving three hours previous notice.—I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

THOS. A. MOONEY,
Secretary.

To the Clerk of each Union.

8.

Local Government Board, Dublin,
23rd September, 1904.

SIR,—In view of the fact that cases of smallpox have recently occurred in some of the unions in this country, the Local Government Board for Ireland think it right to inform the guardians that it is believed that the present diffusion of the disease is, in some measure, due to infection conveyed from place to place by persons of the vagrant class.

The Board would point out that casuals are subject to the same rules as regards searching, cleansing, and clothing as the ordinary pauper inmates of the workhouse. These rules require, amongst other things, that as soon as a pauper is admitted his name and address shall be duly entered on the register, and that he shall be placed in the probationary ward, and shall there remain until examined by the medical officer of the workhouse.

If, as the result of such examination, the medical officer is of opinion that the casual is not sufficiently protected by vaccination, the medical officer should at once offer to perform the operation of vaccination.

The Board would point out that, after the operation, the vagrant should be deemed to be under medical care, and dieted accordingly, and he might properly be relieved from work. When a vagrant comes into a casual ward whilst under the effects of vaccination, although the vaccination has not been performed in the workhouse, he should be treated in a similar way.

The Board feel certain that medical officers of workhouses will co-operate with the guardians in endeavouring to prevent the spread of smallpox by means of vagrants, and they think a considerable advantage would result if there were a systematic daily medical inspection of the inmates of the casual wards.—I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

A. R. BARLAS,
Assistant Secretary.

To the Clerk of each Union.

Appendix
XV.

APPENDIX XV.

CASUAL WARDS IN THE METROPOLITAN POLICE DISTRICT AND IN THE COUNTIES
PARTLY COMPRISED IN THAT DISTRICT.(With Map.)

ESSEX.

Billericay
Braintree
Chelmsford
ColchesterDunmow
Epping
Halstead
Lexden and WinstreeMaldon
Ongar
Orsett
RochfordRomford
Saffron Walden
Tendring
West Ham*

HERTS.

St. Albans
Barnet*
BerkhampsteadBishop Stortford
Buntingford
HatfieldHemel Hempstead
Hertford
HitchinRoyston
Ware
Watford
Welwyn

KENT.

East Ashford
West Ashford
Blean
Bridge
Bromley*
Canterbury
CranbrookDartford
Dover
Eastry
Elham
Faversham
Gravesend and Milton
HollingbournHoo
Maidstone
Malling
Medway
Milton
Romney Marsh
SevenoaksSheppey
Strood
Tenterden
Isle of Thanet
Tonbridge

LONDON.

Bermondsey*
Camberwell*
Chelsea*
City of London
Fulham*
Greenwich*
Hackney*Hampstead*
Holborn*
Islington*
Kensington*
Lambeth*
Lewisham*
Marylebone*Mile End*
Paddington*
Poplar*
St. George's*
St. George's East*
St. Giles*
St. Pancras*Shoreditch*
Southwark*
Stepney*
Strand*
Wandsworth*
Whitechapel*
Woolwich*

MIDDLESEX.

Brentford*

Edmonton*

Hendon*

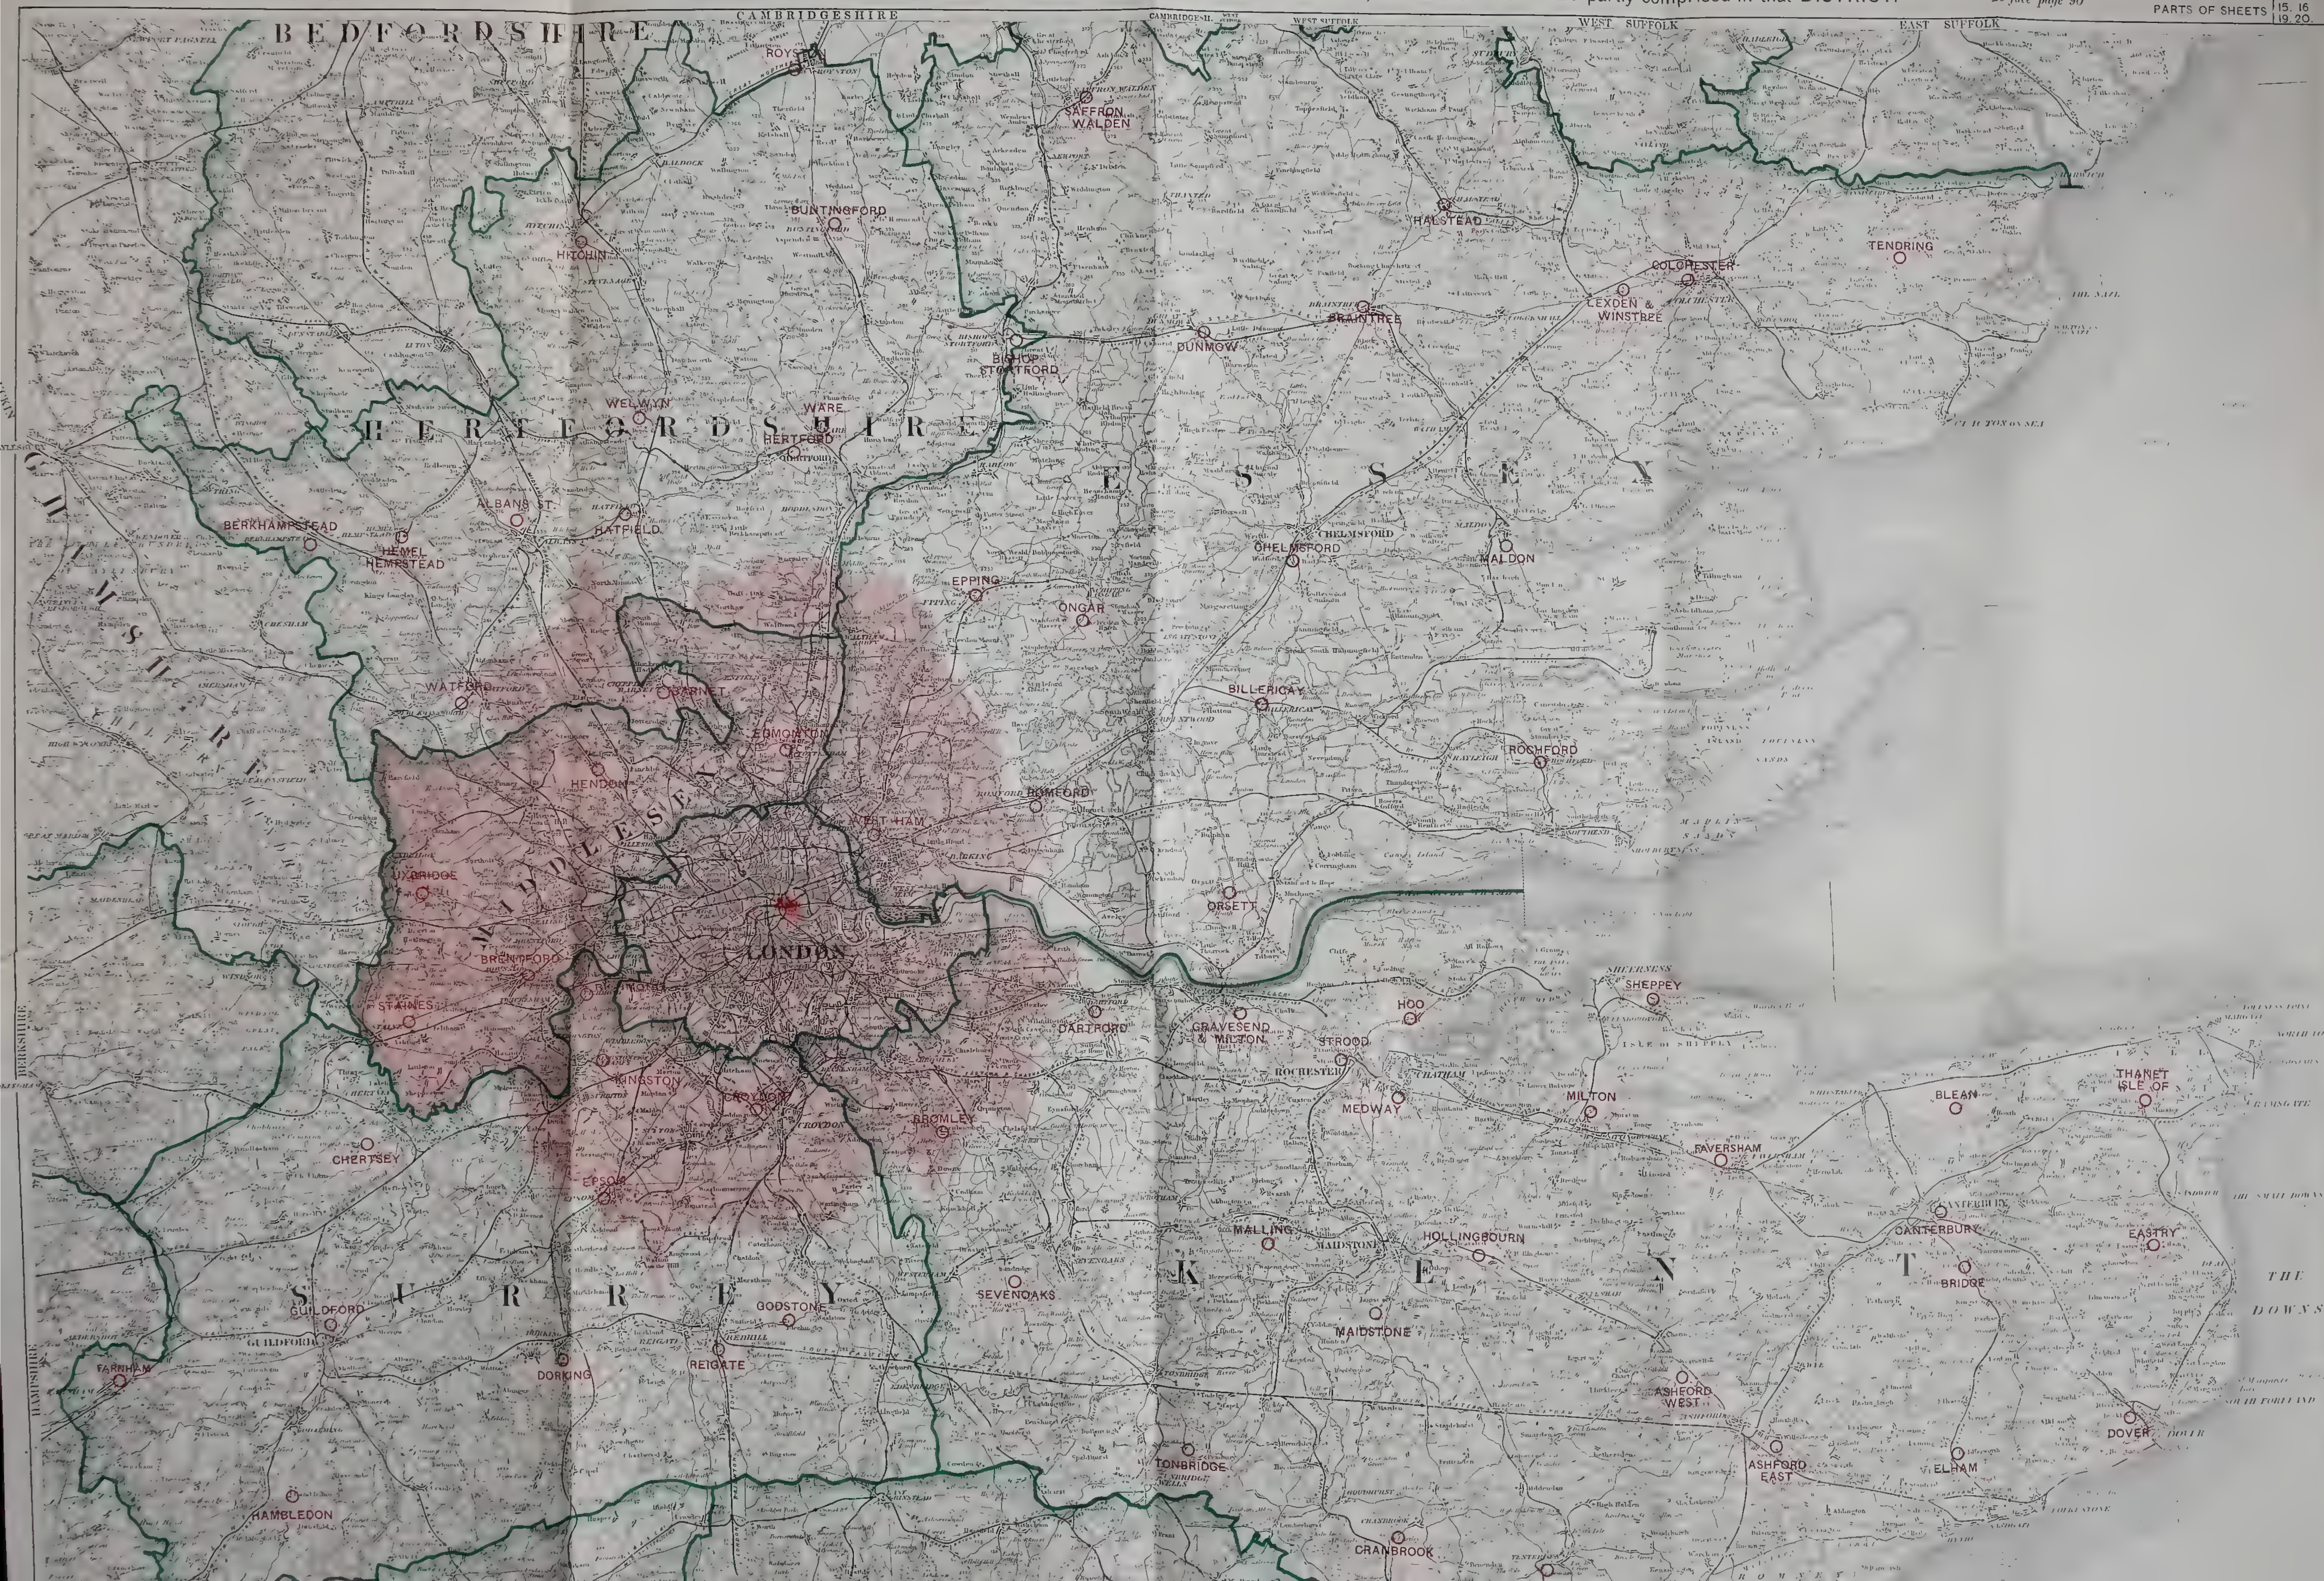

Staines*

Uxbridge*

SURREY.

Chertsey
Croydon*
DorkingEpsom*
Farnham
GodstoneGuildford
Hambleton
Kingston*Reigate
Richmond*

* In the Metropolitan Police District.

All rights of reproduction reserved

Printed by the Ordnance Survey, Southampton

APPENDIX XVI.

VAGRANCY IN SCOTLAND.

1. NUMBER OF VAGRANTS RELIEVED IN SCOTLAND BY INSPECTORS OF POOR ON THE 15TH OF MAY OF EACH YEAR FROM 1892 TO 1904.

(Paper handed in by Mr. R. B. Barclay.)

Year.	Number.	Year.	Number.
1892 - - -	242	1899 - - -	150
1893 - - -	158	1900 - - -	137
1894 - - -	217	1901 - - -	142
1895 - - -	184	1902 - - -	115
1896 - - -	141	1903 - - -	138
1897 - - -	205	1904 - - -	107
1898 - - -	127

VAGRANCY IN GLASGOW.

(Papers handed in by Mr. J. R. Motion.)

2. HOUSELESS AND HOMELESS APPLICANTS FOR RELIEF.

From 16th November, 1900, to 15th May, 1901, there applied, professedly for the first time, of the above class 184 men.

November to December, - - -	39
December to January, - - -	33
January to February, - - -	41
February to March, - - -	32
March to April, - - -	20
April to May, - - -	19

The time they stated they were off work ranged from one day to seven months, and the time "on the road" from two days to a lifetime. 101 took the road for work; 68 unfit for work—3 were born to a nomadic life; 1 took to it because of drink; 2 from bad weather; 1 to get into Glasgow Hospital; 1 wanted to get home to Ireland from America; 2 unsuitable lodgings; 1 wife's death; 1 no room at home; 1 laziness; 1 prison life; 1 wanted a change. Of the sixty-eight unfit for work by far the larger proportion were but a day or two in Glasgow, and had come here without doubt to get into poorhouse.

149 stated their intention to start work again as soon as able; 8 when they could get it, and 27 were uncertain or indifferent. Not one had tried to get work the day they applied to parish.

112 described themselves as labourers, 27 were navvies, 5 miners, 4 hawkers, 3 barbers, 3 moulders (one of whom had become a street singer), 2 hecklers, 2 firemen, 2 millworkers, 2 shoemakers, 2 ironworkers, 2 showmen, and 1 each of following:—holder-on, benchman, storekeeper who also writes comic songs for a music hall, bellows maker, plumber, joiner, compositor, tinplate worker, window-cleaner, scavenger, travelling tinker, bricklayer, seaman, telegraphist, drover, street piper, tailor, city porter.

110 stated their health to be generally good, 14 fair, and 60 bad. 27 were certified to be suffering from bronchitis, 26 injuries (mostly received when worse for drink), 19 rheumatism, 13 ulcers, 11 venereal, 11 muscular pains, 10 skin diseases, 6 effects of vaccination, 4 abrasions of feet, 4 phthisis, 3 cardiac, 3 pleurisy, 3 hernia, 3 dropsy, 2 nervous disorder, 2 sciatica, 2 lumbago, 2 disease of eye, 2 influenza, 2 catarrh, and 1 each asthma, abscess, stomach disorder, epilepsy, privation, palpitation, pulmonary disease, pneumonia, mental weakness, age, debility, and senile debility. 13 left the office without seeing the doctor. 24 had previously had syphilis, and 14 itch. 80 had been previously in some hospital.

165 claimed they obtained their food by their work, 16 admitted by charity and begging, 1 by street singing, 1 street piping, and 1 chiefly in prison.

159, slept chiefly in models and common lodging-houses, 16 chiefly private lodgings, 2 at sea, 5 anywhere, 1 chiefly in prison, and 1 was about 4 days away from his own house.

150 were single, 12 married, and 22 widowers. 1 married man and 1 widower stated they were single, but the truth was found from parish records of their wives' chargeabilities when deserted.

4 were under 20 years of age; 12 between 20 and 25; 20 between 25 and 30; 60 between 30 and 40; 43 between 40 and 50; 23 between 50 and 60; 20 between 60 and 70, 1 was 74, and 1 as old as 82.

101 were born in Ireland, 17 in England, 1 in Wales, 1 in Isle of Man, 1 in Nova Scotia, 1 in Australia, 2 in U.S. America, and 60 were Scotch born, of whom 10 were born in Parish of Glasgow and 2 in Govan Combination.

120 could read and write; 15 could read and write but little; 9 could read, but not write; 1 could not read, but could write enough to sign his name; 39 could neither read nor write.

14 only had voted at elections, ranging from last year back to 1865.

73 claimed to be temperate; 110 admitted being intemperate; and 1 stated he was an abstainer, but was found out in various other matters to be very untruthful, and had been previously chargeable twice as an epileptic.

5 had been convicted of crime, 57 for being drunk, 2 for begging, and 1 for being in a row.

100 were Roman Catholics, and 84 Protestants.

7 had aliases. 5 were, or had been, trade unionists.

14 had been in Army, and 1 in Militia.

10 who stated they had never been in the poorhouse before were found to have been formerly in either City or Barnhill poorhouses.

Another type of the loafer and vagrant is the class which trouble also the Night Asylum authorities. It not infrequently happens that application is made there for a night's shelter by parties under the influence of drink, and when refused admission they apply to the night officer of the parish council; or it may be the circumstances are reversed—application is made for relief to the parish, and a line granted to the Night Asylum, but before its presentation the applicant gets drink and is refused admission. A recent applicant, however, declined the shelter of the institution for a very different reason—because he could not get a feather bed to lie on.

3. COMPARATIVE STATEMENT AS TO VAGRANCY AND BEGGING FOR THE PERIOD FROM 22nd NOVEMBER, 1900, TO 15th MAY, 1905.

Half-Year.	Reported by Police.		Of Whom		Of these latter there were previously convicted.	How Disposed of.							Disposal of those remitted to Poorhouse.							Reported having died.
			Not known to Parish.	Known to Parish.		Sent to Prison.	Committed to Industrial School.	Admonished.	Handed over to Relatives.	Referred to Charity Organisation Society.	Remitted to Poorhouse.	Not Proven.	Allowed to remain in Poorhouse.	Admonished.	Sent to Prison.	Committed to Industrial School.	Handed to Relatives.	Sent to Parish of Settlement.	Referred to Prisoners' Aid Society.
22nd November, 1900, to 15 May, 1901 -	154	60	94	23	69	—	38	—	—	43	4	17	13	10	—	—	1	2	—	—
" 15 November, 1901 -	138	64	74	17	67	—	40	—	—	31	—	12	13	5	—	—	—	1	—	—
" 15 May, 1902 -	88	51	37	19	22	1	32	3	—	30	—	22	6	1	—	—	1	—	—	—
" 15 November, 1902 -	133	65	68	23	42	6	35	1	1	47	1	27	17	3	—	—	—	—	—	—
" 15 May, 1903 -	140	78	62	41	46	—	61	—	—	31	1	21	6	4	—	—	—	—	—	—
" 15 November, 1903 -	100	39	61	37	47	—	28	—	—	25	—	5	9	4	2	—	4	—	1	—
" 15 May, 1904 -	220	132	88	52	80	2	104	—	—	32	2	21	7	3	—	—	1	—	—	—
" 15 November, 1904 -	138	88	50	32	35	—	74	3	—	23	2	16	4	1	—	—	—	—	1	—
" 15 May, 1905 -	154	88	66	33	53	—	69	—	—	31	1	17	2	6	—	—	4	2	—	—

4. TYPICAL CASES OF VAGRANCY AND BEGGING.

J. D. OR A. M.

Date of Conviction.	Court.	Sentence.
26 Dec., 1900-	Central	10 days' imprisonment.
18 May, 1901	"	7 " "
8 Aug., 1901	"	14 " "
3 Sept., 1901	"	30 " "
5 Nov., 1901	"	" " "
15 April, 1902	"	" " "
30 Oct., 1902	"	" " "

First chargeability to parish 3rd December 1888, then aged forty-three, single, shoemaker; since then frequently in poorhouse for short periods, sometimes only three days. Last chargeability, 6th January, 1905, till 8th May, 1905.

J. B. OR L.

Date of Conviction.	Court.	Sentence.
18 Dec., 1900	St. Rollox	21 days' imprisonment (had then a previous conviction in 1898).
10 Feb., 1902	Central	Admonished.
4 July, 1902	Maryhill	"
11 Dec., 1903	Eastern	14 days' imprisonment.
20 Oct., 1904	Western	" " "
5 Jan., 1905	"	30 " "
17 March, 1905	Maryhill	7 " "

First chargeability to parish 23rd February, 1888, aged forty-six, and several times since. Has a bad record for lying.

J. M. OR S.

Date of Conviction.	Court.	Sentence.
26 Aug., 1902	Western	Remitted to poorhouse for 7 days, at end of which time he was admonished.
14 Nov., 1902	Central	14 days' imprisonment.
2 Dec., 1902	"	" " "
24 Dec., 1902	"	" " "
4 June, 1903	Northern	7 " "
8 April, 1904	Central	" " "
26 Sept., 1904	"	14 " "
6 Jan., 1905	Western	30 " "
15 Feb., 1905	Central	21 " "

This man is a confirmed beggar. He is well connected, and has had every chance. He never applied voluntarily to parish, and was only the once in poorhouse when he was remitted from the Police Court.

P. F.

Date of Conviction.	Court.	Sentence.
8 Nov., 1900	Central	14 days' imprisonment.
3 Dec., 1900	Southern	21 " "
9 Jan., 1901	Central	" " "
20 May, 1901	"	14 " "
10 Feb. 1902	"	7 " "
15 April, 1902	"	30 " "
15 Oct., 1904	"	7 " "

First application to parish, 19th October, 1894. Then aged sixty-eight; often since. Last chargeability was to Stobhill on 16th November, 1904, when on 21st December, 1904, he was certified insane, and removed to Woodilee Asylum. He was discharged, recovered on 26th April, 1905, and admitted to Barnhill, but left on 10th May, 1905.

P. F. JR.

Date of Conviction.	Court.	Sentence.
10 Feb., 1902	Central	Admonished. On 7 Feb., 1902, he applied for admission to poorhouse but did not enter, and repeated this on 11 Feb., 1902.
15 Apl., 1902	"	14 days' imprisonment. On 14th he applied to parish, was apprehended same night.
25 Feb., 1905	"	7 days' imprisonment. The day before he got an order to poorhouse, but did not enter.
23 Mar., 1905	"	Admonished and referred to parish. He entered poorhouse and is still chargeable.

First chargeability to parish was on 22nd December, 1897, then aged thirty-six, and has been repeatedly chargeable since. He is the son of the above-named.

C. McG.

Date of Conviction.	Court.	Sentence.
10 Aug., 1901	Western	Remitted to poorhouse till 13 July, 1901, and then admonished.
6 June, 1902	Northern	Admonished.
29 Aug., 1902	Central	Remitted to poorhouse till 5 Sept., 1902, and then admonished.
12 Dec., 1902	"	15 days' imprisonment.
16 May, 1903	"	14 " "
30 Sept., 1903	Northern	" " "
23 Dec., 1903	"	21 " "

First chargeability to parish was on 10th April, 1893, then aged sixty. He again applied on 5th January 1899, and again on 6th March, 1905. He got a pass-out on 14th May, 1905, and did not return.

Appendix
XVI.

H. W. OR J W.

Date of Conviction.	Court.	Sentence.
14 Apl., 1903 - -	Central	Admonished.
29 Sept., 1903 - -	"	Remitted to poorhouse till 6 Oct., 1903, then admonished.
21 Jan., 1904 - -	"	7 days' imprisonment.
24 June, 1904 - -	"	21 days' imprisonment.
22 May, 1905 - -	"	60 days' imprisonment.

First chargeability to parish was 19th February, 1895, then aged twenty-seven, and repeatedly chargeable since. A particularly bad record. His children had to be boarded out to prevent them growing up like the father. He encouraged them to go begging.

VAGRANCY IN DUNDEE.

(Papers handed in by Mr. D. Dewar.)

Appendix
XVI.

5. STATEMENT AS TO LODGING-HOUSES AND VAGRANCY.

LODGING-HOUSES, &C.

In 1901, the population of Dundee was 161,173, composed of 71,048 males and 90,125 females, there being 19,077 more females than males. The population was then housed as follows:—

In houses of 1 apartment	-	-	18,252
" 2 apartments	-	-	83,363
" 3 apartments	-	-	32,463
" 4 apartments and upwards	-	-	27,095

Total -161,173

At present Dundee contains an estimated population of 164,269.

It has 11 common lodging-houses, with accommodation for 705 persons, and there are 642 houses registered in terms of section 72 of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897, to keep 3,177 lodgers. Besides, there is a Sailor's Home, with accommodation for 100 males, and a Salvation Army Metropole, which can accommodate about 195 females.

The death rate for the city, the area of which is 4,201 acres, was for 1904, 20·22.

The chief industries of Dundee are jute factories, engineering and shipbuilding, confectionery and preserve factories, etc.

The state of the staple industries has during the last twelve months been somewhat depressed, but the building trades have been specially dull.

LAW AS TO BEGGARS AND VAGRANCY.

The statutory provisions in force in the burghs of Scotland regarding begging and vagrancy, with the exception of those applicable to Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, and Greenock, which have local Police Acts, will be found in the following Acts:—

1. The Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892, sections 408, 409, 410, and 411.
2. The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, section 15, incorporates section 4 of the Act 5 Geo. IV., ch. 83, viz. :—
"An Act for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons, and rogues and vagabonds in that part of Great Britain called England," and makes it applicable to Scotland and Ireland.
3. The Trespass (Scotland) Act, 1865.
4. The Industrial Schools Act, 1866, section 14 (begging by children).
5. The Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, section 2 (sending children out to beg).

The local Police Acts for the cities and towns above mentioned contain provisions as to begging and vagrancy very similar to those which exist in the said Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892.

The sections mentioned under 1 can be adopted at pleasure by the cities and town named or by any of them.

The other Acts referred to under numbers 2, 3, 4, and 5, being Public General Statutes, apply to all counties and burghs throughout Scotland.

NIGHT REFUGES FOR VAGRANTS, &C.

In 1882, a Night Asylum for the houseless was established in Dundee under the title of the Curr Night Refuge. It can accommodate sixty persons, consisting of forty males and twenty females. It has now been in active operation for twenty-two years, and has during that time accommodated on an average twenty-five persons per night. The inmates are for the most part of the vagrant class, and dwellers in Dundee, who from dissipation or misfortune are houseless, and discouraged. The inmates are seldom there more than one or two nights at a time, and are not usually allowed to exceed three. The institution is under a superintendent, who is in attendance for the admission of inmates along with, as a rule, two members of committee from 7 to 9 p.m., but in urgent cases inmates are admitted up to 11 p.m. No one is admitted while in a state of intoxication. The inmates who lie on the floor are provided with a wooden pillow, and a rug to cover them, get supper consisting of porridge and milk at 9 p.m., and are discharged at 7 a.m. after getting breakfast, also of porridge and milk. They do not require to perform any task of work in return for the benefits received. The superintendent, who is also Prison Aid Society agent, tries to get work for his visitors and to aid them in other directions, such as putting them in communication with their relatives, clergymen, or others likely to take an interest in them. The superintendent states that about one-third of his adult customers are of the dissipated and vagrant classes, many of them are not robust physically and far from strong mentally, while about two-thirds are healthy, sober, and apparently legitimately looking for work. The institution was erected with funds left by a wealthy citizen to trustees, who were empowered to use the same for philanthropic purposes. It is maintained by public and private subscriptions.

The Curr Night Refuge is the only place in Dundee where people of the vagrant class can get free quarters for a night, and to get that they do not, as has already been stated, require to do any work, but must be sober when admitted. Much is left to the discretion of the superintendent in regard to admissions and the length of the stay of the inmates.

Similar night asylums exist in Edinburgh and Glasgow.

VAGRANTS AND PARISH COUNCILS.

By the law of Scotland persons who are able-bodied are not entitled to receive parochial or Parish Council relief. Vagrants are not therefore admitted to poor-houses unless certified by one of the Parish Council medical officers not to be able-bodied. It is estimated by the Inspector of Poor for the Parish of Dundee that there are annually accommodated in the Dundee poor-houses for longer or shorter periods from 160 to 180 individuals of the vagrant class. The number of such persons increases considerably during the winter months. During summer many of them, although much debilitated, demand their liberty, and as poorhouses are voluntary institutions they are allowed to go.

The total number of inmates on an average in the two Dundee poorhouses daily in 1904 was about 1040, and the proportion of these, who were of the vagrant class, about fifty-five.

The applications made to the Parish Council for relief during each of the last five years were as follows, viz. :—

1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.
3415	3921	3573	3638	3913

THE OUTS AND INS.

The poorhouses of Dundee are frequented by a class of what has come to be called the outs and ins. These are persons of the vagrant and dissipated classes who spend their time between poorhouses, prisons, and the outside world. While at large their means of livelihood consists mainly of begging. In not a few instances they act as pedlars, but for the most part the peddling is carried on for the purpose of affording a cloak for begging.

When they get money by begging, peddling, or thieving, it is as a rule spent chiefly on strong drink, resulting in drunkenness and disorder, for which some have been scores of times sent to prison.

When at large they are a source of much trouble and tend to the degradation of others.

While such persons are in the poorhouse they are capable of doing very little work, but attempts are made to keep them employed to the extent of their ability. The work provided for males in the Dundee poorhouses consists chiefly of working on the land connected with the poorhouses, preparing firewood, etc., and for females mainly laundry work, scrubbing, cleaning, and sewing.

It appears to be the general opinion that such persons should not be allowed to gravitate between the prison and the poorhouse, and when at large to sorn on the public, and that legislative powers should be got to compulsorily detain them in poorhouses or similar institutions until they can be certified to be able-bodied, or until some relative or reliable person gives a proper undertaking to be responsible for their future good behaviour.

What is stated above in regard to the class of outs and ins in Dundee is true of other large cities throughout Scotland. The Inspector of Poor of Glasgow has long publicly urged the great necessity of something being done with the said class in the direction which I have indicated.

6. RETURN OF PERSONS CONVICTED OF BEGGING, &c., IN DUNDEE DURING THE YEAR 1904.

No.	Name	Age.	Sex.	Occupation, if any.	Nativity.	Date of sentence.	Sentence.	Whether or not able-bodied.	Remarks.
1	J. B.	23	M	Labourer	Dundee	5 Jan., 1904	Admonished	Able-bodied	8 convictions for theft, 6 for breach of peace, 3 for assault, 2 for drunkenness, and 1 for begging : A lazy character.
2	A. K.	18	M	"	Glasgow	25 "	10s. 6d. or 7 days	"	Stranger.
3	J. M.	18	M	"	"	25 "	"	"	"
4	A. G.	54	M	No occupation	Ireland	28 "	7s. 6d. or 5 days	Wants right leg	"
5	J. N.	35	M	Labourer	London	8 Feb., 1904	5 days	Able-bodied	"
6	W. V.	49	M	Baker	Glasgow	"	"	"	"
7	M. McM. McK.	23	F	No occupation	Montrose	22 "	Admonished	"	"
8	M. F.	34	M	Labourer	Dundee	25 "	10 days	"	19 convictions for breach of peace, 6 for theft, 3 for assault, 5 for drunkenness, 2 for begging, 1 for malicious mischief : total 36.
9	P. McN.	45	M	"	"	1 March, 1904	7 days	"	1 conviction for breach of peace, and 1 for drunkenness : tramps the country.
10	W. McD.	22	M	"	Govan	7 "	5 days	Paralyzed	Stranger.
11	P. D.	10	M	Schoolboy	Dundee	18 "	Sent to Tranent Industrial School until 16 years of age	Boy	1st appearance.
12	P. McL.	38	M	Labourer	"	22 "	5 days	Able-bodied	5 convictions for theft, 17 for assault : total 22. A lazy character.
13	H. C.	32	M	Riveter	Govan	28 "	Admonished	"	1st appearance.
14	H. S.	19	M	Labourer	Forfar	21 April, 1904	"	"	"
15	R. C.	30	M	"	Liverpool	27 "	"	"	"
16	W. A.	39	M	"	Newcastle	27 "	"	"	"
17	G. S.	16	M	Millworker	Dundee	28 "	Sentence delayed for 6 weeks : then admonished.	"	"
18	M. A. G.	13	F	Schoolgirl	"	28 "	Admonished	Girl	"
19	G. H.	15	F	Millworker	"	28 "	"	Able-bodied	"

20	T. M.	48	M	Bill deliverer	"	30	"	40 days	"	9 convictions for begging, 9 for drunkenness : total 18. Weak minded.
21	M. W. M.	67	F	No occupation	"	4 May, 1904		Admonished	Not able-bodied	52 convictions for drunkenness, theft, &c. : a worthless creature.
22	J. H.	12	M	Schoolboy	"	6	"	"	Boy	1st appearance.
23	A. B.	42	M	Clerk	Arbroath	20	"	"	Able-bodied	6 convictions for begging, and 1 for drunk and disorderly : a lazy drunken character.
24	L. L. S.	67	F	No occupation	Ayr	20	"	5s. or 24 hours	"	1 conviction for drunkenness, and 1 for begging.
25	M. B.	69	M	Labourer	Ireland	23	"	Admonished	"	1st appearance.
26	P. W.	30	M	"	Glasgow	25	"	"	"	"
27	P. McC.G.	38	M	"	Fraserburgh	22 July, 1904		7s. 6d. or 5 days	"	Stranger.
28	J. B. S.	17	M	"	Dundee	27 Aug., 1904		Admonished	"	8 convictions for begging and theft : now doing well.
29	W. S.	59	M	"	Lossiemouth	22 Sept., 1904		"	"	1st appearance.
30	T. M.	48	M	Bill deliverer	Dundee	1 Oct., 1904		30 days	"	See No. 20.
31	J. T.	32	M	Labourer	Hamilton	4	"	7s. 6d. or 5 days	"	1st appearance.
32	J. T. C.	28	M	"	Motherwell	4	"	15s. or 10 days	"	"
33	J. M.	39	M	"	Glasgow	14	"	10 days	"	24 convictions for theft, assault, &c. : a lazy character.
34	G. T.	60	M	Pedlar	Blairstown	15	"	Admonished but pedlar's certificate withdrawn	"	1st appearance.
35	J. W.	26	M	Labourer	Edinburgh	28	"	Admonished	"	"
36	J. McD.	34	M	"	Glasgow	31	"	5 days	"	See No. 33.
37	W. H.	64	M	Miner	Campsie	5 Nov., 1904		Admonished	"	1st appearance. Son aged 6 years was with him and was returned to him.
38	J. C. T. D.	37	M	Labourer	Dundee	9	"	10 days	"	13 convictions for drunkenness, assault, &c. : a worthless character.
39	D. H.	17	M	Millworker	Glasgow	12	"	Admonished	"	1st appearance : a lazy fellow.
40	J. D.	27	M	Slater	Ireland	29	"	30 days	"	"
41	J. M.	28	M	Labourer	Perth	5 Dec., 1904		7 days	"	1 conviction for disorderly conduct.
42	J. J.	39	M	Carter	Dundee	23	"	5 days	Deaf	1st appearance : able-bodied.
43	T. F.	25	M	Tinsmith	Glasgow	24	"	Admonished	Able-bodied	"

7. RETURN OF PERSONS CONVICTED OF VAGRANCY AND CONTRAVENTIONS OF THE TRESPASS ACT IN DUNDEE DURING 1904.

No.	Name.	Age.	Sex.	Occupation, if any.	Nativity	Offence.	Date of sentence.	Sentence.	Whether or not able-bodied.	Remarks.
1	D. D.	18	M	Millworker	Dundee	Trespass	25 Jan., 1904	5s. or 24 hours.	Able-bodied	3rd appearance : 1 for breach of peace and theft by housebreaking.
2	J. H.	18	M	"	Aberdeen	"	"	"	"	4th appearance : 1 for breach of peace, 1 for begging, and one for using boat.
3	J. H.	16	M	"	"	"	"	"	"	4th appearance : 1 for begging and theft, 1 for acting as porter.
4	M. B.	17	F	"	Dundee	"	"	"	"	1st appearance.
5	C. F.	16	F	"	Dalkeith	"	"	"	"	2nd appearance : 1 for drunkenness.
6	R. A. C.	14	F	"	Dundee	"	"	Admonished	"	1st appearance.
7	W. McL.	19	M	Labourer	Aberdeen	Rogue and vagabond	10 Feb., 1904	3 Months	"	Previous convictions for theft.
8	J. B.	22	M	Millworker	Dundee	Vagrancy	11 "	Sentence delayed for 6 weeks, then in prison on similar charge	Weak-minded, but responsible	2 for vagrancy, 1 for theft, 1 for obstruction in street : total, 4 appearances.
9	P. S.	30	M	Labourer	"	Trespass	12 "	Admonished	Able-bodied	Loafer : 2nd appearance.
10	J. B.	22	M	Millworker	"	Vagrancy	4 March, 1904	30 days	Somewhat weak-minded, but responsible	See No. 8.
11	N. B.	54	M	Gardener	Forfar	"	9 "	Admonished	Able-bodied	Stranger.
12	D. H.	33	M	Labourer	Kingussie	"	9 "	"	"	19th appearance for breach of peace, 6 for theft, 3 for assault, 5 for drunkenness, 2 for begging, 1 for malicious mischief : 36 in all.
13	J. M.	36	M	Millworker	Dundee	"	18 "	"	"	1 for drunkenness and 1 for begging.
14	A. W.	45	M	Painter	Aberdeen	Trespass	7 April, 1904	"	"	5th appearance : 2 for cruelty to children, 1 for assault, and 1 for drunkenness.
15	A. R.	20	M	Millworker	Dundee	"	20 "	10s. or 7 days	"	15th appearance : thief and loafer.
16	J. M.	36	M	"	"	Vagrancy	20 "	Admonished	"	See No. 13.
17	J. B.	23	M	"	"	"	30 "	30 days	Weak-minded, but responsible	See No. 10.

18	J. C.	42	M	Labourer	Arran	"	30	15s. or 10 days	Able-bodied	1st appearance.
19	A. R.	20	M	Millworker	Dundee	Trespass	3 May, 1904	15s. or 10 days	"	See No. 15.
20	J. M.	36	M	"	"	Vagrancy	3	Admonished	"	See No. 16.
21	J. C.	35	M	Labourer	"	Trespass	23	7s. 6d. or 3 days	"	5th appearance : thefts and drunkenness.
22	A. McL. or A.	45	F	No occupation	Edinburgh	"	23	"	"	62nd appearance : drunk, disorderly, and prostitution.
23	J. McC.	26	M	Labourer	Dundee	"	27	"	"	9th appearance : thief.
24	J. S.	21	M	"	Glasgow	"	27	5s. or 3 days	"	1st appearance.
25	J. D.	21	M	Driller	Dundee	"	3 June, 1904	Admonished	"	"
26	J. F.	26	F	Millworker	"	"	9	7s. 6d. or 3 days	"	13th appearance : drunk and disorderly conduct.
27	M. T. or B.	33	F	No occupation	Toronto	"	9	"	"	11th appearance : 1 for theft, disorderly and drunkenness.
28	J. S.	46	M	Quarrier	Glasgow	"	10	5s. or 24 hours	"	3rd appearance : 2 for assaults.
29	H. McK.	32	F	Prostitute	Dundee	"	13	7s. 6d. or 3 days	"	110th appearance : prostitution, drunkenness, &c.
30	G. W.	34	M	Militiaman	Edinburgh	"	13	"	"	1st appearance.
31	J. C.	42	M	Labourer	Lochee	"	13	"	"	47th appearance : theft.
32	L. McL. S.	72	F	—	Dundee	Vagrancy	21 July, 1904	Admonished	Not able-bodied	4th appearance : drunkenness.
33	S. W. or M.	58	F	No occupation	Wick	"	16 Aug., 1904	20 days	"	16th appearance : previous convictions for theft.
34	J. B. S.	17	M	Carter	Dundee	Trespass	24	5s. or 24 hours	Able-bodied	7th appearance : thief.
35	W. B.	17	M	Millworker	"	"	16 Sept., 1904	2s. 6d. or 24 hours	"	2nd appearance.
36	J. McL.	17	M	"	Hamilton	"	16	"	"	1st appearance.
37	A. McH.	31	M	"	Dundee	Vagrancy	20	Admonished	"	11th appearance : theft, &c.
38	J. L.	22	M	Labourer	"	"	29	"	"	1st appearance.
39	J. M.	29	M	"	"	"	29	"	"	"
40	J. B. or F.	37	F	No occupation	"	Trespass	4 Oct., 1904	7s. 6d. or 3 days	"	5th appearance : drunkenness, &c.

Return of Persons convicted of Vagrancy and Contraventions of the Trespass Act in Dundee during 1904—continued.

No.	Name.	Age.	Sex.	Occupation, if any.	Nativity.	Offence.	Date of sentence.	Sentence.	Whether or not able-bodied.	Remarks.
41	T. W.	37	M	Cal. worker	Leven	Trespass	4 Oct. 1904	7s. 6d. or 3 days	Able-bodied	1st appearance.
42	D. H.	25	M	Millworker	Dundee	"	6 "	5s. or 24 hours	"	23rd appearance : thief and loafer.
43	J. F.	24	M	Labourer	"	"	6 "	"	"	1st appearance.
44	J. B.	49	M	"	"	"	6 "	"	"	"
45	W. C.	30	M	"	"	Vagrancy	10 "	10s. or 7 days	"	"
46	A. McH.	31	M	Millworker	"	Trespass	12 "	7s. 6d. or 5 days.	"	10th appearance : loafer.
47	J. P.	18	M	Cal. worker	"	Vagrancy	25 "	Admonished	"	6th appearance : loafer.
48	A. R.	25	M	Shoemaker	Forfar	Trespass	29 "	2s. 6d. or 24 hours	"	4th appearance : fraud, &c.
49	W. G.	28	M	Labourer	Dundee	"	29 "	"	"	1st appearance.
50	J. McW.	54	M	Fireman	"	"	9 Nov., 1904	15s. or 10 days.	"	"
51	E. M. or C.	25	F	Millworker	"	"	9 "	10s. 6d. or 7 days	"	6th appearance : theft, &c.
52	J. C. or T. D.	37	M	Labourer	"	Vagrancy	30 "	20 days	"	13th appearance : assault. Very bad character.
53	E. C.	33	M	"	"	"	30 "	Admonished	"	5th appearance : drunkenness, &c.
54	J. H.	16	M	Millworker	Lochee	"	3 Dec., 1904	"	"	Youth : loafer.
55	J. S.	24	M	"	Dundee	Trespass	3 "	"	"	2nd appearance : 1 for breach of peace.
56	J. C.	25	M	Labourer	Perth	"	3 "	"	"	1st appearance.
57	D. J.	15	M	Millworker	Arbroath	Vagrancy	5 "	"	"	"
58	D. W.	18	M	"	Dundee	"	5 "	40s. or 30 days	"	6th appearance : thief.
59	G. F.	25	M	Labourer	Arbroath	"	16 "	Admonished	"	2nd appearance : 1 previous conviction for theft.
60	D. S.	15	M	"	Fochabers	"	22 "	7 days	"	1st appearance : theft in Northern Counties.
61	J. W.	26	M	"	Dundee	Trespass	23 "	Admonished	"	2nd appearance : 1 for breach of peace.
62	R. I.	19	M	Millworker	"	"	23 "	"	"	2 previous convictions.

8. NUMBER OF PERSONS PROCEEDED AGAINST IN SCOTLAND FOR OFFENCES AGAINST THE VAGRANCY AND TRESPASS ACTS.

Appendix
XVI.

The figures are given in full for the years 1897-1903. In the Reports for the years prior to 1897, two heads only are given, viz: "Begging," "Trespass Act, 1865."

Year.	Begging, &c.			Lighting fires without consent of owner, &c.			Lodging without consent of owner, &c.
	M.	F.	Total.	M.	F.	Total.	M.	F.	Total.
1889 - - - -			1,346			*			* 571
1890 - - - -			1,029						551
1891 - - - -			1,086						657
1892 - - - -			1,124						882
1893 - - - -			1,328						1,050
1894 - - - -			1,465						1,149
1895 - - - -			1,158						1,100
1896 - - - -			1,106						1,313
1897 - - - -	1,103	253	1,356	57	16	73	1,225	166	1,391
1898 - - - -	883	197	1,080	81	21	102	1,122	181	1,303
1899 - - - -	717	163	880	85	34	119	1,304	202	1,506
1900 - - - -	647	171	818	31	43	74	1,634	182	1,816
1901 - - - -	842	250	1,092	57	24	81	1,963	235	2,198
1902 - - - -	894	249	1,143	102	26	128	2,191	271	2,462
1903 - - - -	996	210	1,206	60	21	81	2,512	238	2,750

* There are no means of separating "Lighting fires" from "Lodging without consent of owner," and total numbers only (i.e., including males and females) are given.

9. AYRSHIRE MENDICITY SOCIETY.

(Paper handed in by Captain McHardy.)

Comparative Statement of the Receipts and Expenditure of the Society for the Twenty Years ended 31st March, 1905, shewing I. the Amounts received and paid annually on Relief Account and the Surplus or Deficit thereon ; II. the Subscriptions received ; III. the Expenses of Promoting and Working the Society ; and IV. the Gross Surplus or Deficit arising on each year's intrmissions.

I. RELIEF ACCOUNT.													GRAND TOTAL.
Total of 10 Years 1885-6 to 1894-5.		1895-6.		1896-7.		1897-8.		1898-9.		1899 1900.		1900-1.		1901-2.		1902-3.		1903-4.		1904-5.		Total of 10 years 1895-6 to 1904-5.
£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.
(1) Receipts—
Tickets sold :—
Superior Food - - - - -
Bread - - - - -
Lodgings - - - - -
TOTALS - - - - -
(2) Payments—
Tickets exchanged :—
Superior Food - - - - -
Bread - - - - -
Lodgings - - - - -
TOTALS - - - - -
Surplus - - - - -
Deficit - - - - -
													Net Deficit on Relief Account
													£132 11 0½
III. SUBSCRIPTIONS received, including Interest on Sum on Deposit Re- ceipts - - - - -
Add Surplus from Relief A/c. - - - - -
TOTALS - - - - -
III. EXPENSES Promoting and Working the Society - - - - -
Add Deficit from Relief A/c. - - - - -
TOTALS - - - - -
IV. GROSS SURPLUS - - - - -
" DEFICIT - - - - -
Balance at Credit of Society as at 31st March, 1905
£104 10 9

10. PERSONS DEALT WITH IN LANARKSHIRE UNDER THE TRESPASS ACT, 1874, DURING THE YEAR ENDED
31ST DECEMBER, 1904.

(Paper handed in by Captain Despard.)

No. of Persons dealt with:—380 Males and 13 Females.				Fines paid or imprisonment undergone in default.				Fines paid before imprisonment - - - - - 13 Fines paid during imprisonment - - - - - 1 Underwent imprisonment - 237 Neither paid nor underwent imprisonment - - - - - 4 Total - - - 255
How disposed of.	Proceedings dropped - - - 7			Ages of those dealt with before Courts.	14 and under 16 years 5 1			Males. Females. 16 " " 21 " 28 5 21 " " 30 " 117 2 30 " " 40 " 114 1 40 " " 50 " 61 2 50 " " 60 " 32 - 60 and upwards - 13 - Total - 370 11	Proceedings dropped, acquitted and pledges forfeited not shown here,
	Acquitted - - - 1
	Forfeited pledges - - - 4
	Sent to prison - - - 77
	Fined - - - 255
	Admonished - - - 49
Total - - - 393
Courts of trial.	Sheriff Courts 50			Proceedings dropped and forfeited pledges not shown here.	Total - 370 11
	Police Courts 13
J. P. Courts - 319
Total - 382
Imprisonment imposed.	1 day and under - - - 3			Number apprehended in each month during the year.	Total - £7 8 9
	3 days " " - - - 67
	7 days " " - - - 6
	14 days " " - - - 1
	Total - - - 77
Fines imposed.	5s. and under - - - 68			January - 69 males - females February - 27 " 1 " March - 28 " 1 " April - 42 " 1 " May - 32 " 1 " June - 26 " 1 " July - 16 " 2 " August - 13 " 4 " September - 31 " 2 " October - 35 " - " November - 35 " - " December - 26 " - " Total - 380 " 13 "
	10s. and over 5s. - - - 172
	20s. " " 10s. - - - 14
	40s. " " 20s. - - - 1
	Total - - - 255

11. NUMBER OF PERSONS APPREHENDED IN EDINBURGH FOR OFFENCES IN CONNECTION WITH VAGRANCY FOR THE PERIOD FROM JANUARY TO MAY, 1905.

(Paper handed in by Mr. R. Ross.)

Charge.	Ad-monished.	Fined.	Im-prisoned.	Sent to Parish.	Total.	English.	Seotch.	Irish.
Sec. 273 Edinburgh Police Act 1879. (Found wandering) - - -	—	—	—	13	13	—	13	—
Begging - - - - -	112	21	13	6	152	24	98	30
Pedlars Act - - - - -	13	—	—	—	13	4	8	1
Trespass Act - - - - -	16	59	—	—	75	11	62	2
	141	80	13	19	253 *	39	181	33

* Of this number 10 were females.

12. VAGRANCY IN GLASGOW.

(Returns furnished by Mr. J. V. E. Stevenson, Chief Constable.)

(a) Number of persons afforded protection in the various police offices throughout the City of Glasgow during 1903, 1904, and the first three months of 1905.

1903.	1904.	First Quarter, 1905.
8,717	20,490	16,862

(b) Number of persons, male and female, afforded protection in the various police offices throughout the City of Glasgow, for the months of November, December, January and February, in the years 1902-3, 1903-4, and 1904-5.

	1902-3.			1903-4.			1904-5.
	Male.	Female.	Total.	Male.	Female.	Total.	Male.	Female.	Total.
November	139	77	216	267	122	389	2,087	231	2,318
December	157	95	252	392	102	494	4,556	218	4,774
January	1,301	119	1,420	1,851	161	2,012	5,733	275	6,008
February	1,755	92	1,847	2,733	194	2,927	5,517	357	5,874
Totals	3,352	383	3,735	5,243	579	5,822	17,893	1,081	18,974

VAGRANCY IN SCOTLAND

Chart showing the number of Vagrants (15 Years to 1903) and persons proceeded against (1) for Begging and (2) for Sleeping out, Lighting Fires without the consent of Owners, &c. (7 Years to 1903.)

Thick Curve. = Number of Vagrants

Thin Curve = Persons proceeded against for Sleeping out &c

Dotted Curve = " " " " Begging

APPENDIX XVII.

METHODS OF DEALING WITH VAGRANCY IN SWITZERLAND.

REPORT to the Right Hon. WALTER H. LONG, M.P., President of the Local Government Board, by H. PRESTON-THOMAS, ESQ., Local Government Board Inspector.

EXETER, 25 June, 1904.

Sir,—In accordance with the letter from the Local Government Board of the 16th April last, I have the honour to submit the following Report on the methods adopted in Switzerland for suppressing mendicity and vagabondage:—

I devoted a fortnight to an enquiry on the subject, beginning with the canton of Ticino, on the 20th of April last, and ending with that of Basel on the 3rd May. During that period I conferred with many federal and cantonal officials and other experts, and visited some fifteen institutions of various kinds, including forced labour farms maintained by Berne, Appenzell, and other cantons; also a labour colony established by voluntary effort near Frauenfeld in Thurgau.

The fact that mendicity in Switzerland has of late years diminished to an extraordinary extent cannot be shown from statistics, for they do not exist; but it is generally admitted. My own personal experience stands for little; yet I am able to say that in the course of more than twenty holidays spent in the Alps in different years, since 1861, it has been obvious to me, as to everybody else, that whereas beggars used to abound, they have been steadily decreasing in number up to the present time. It is true that in particular resorts of tourists they are still by no means rare, and this is partly to be accounted for by the consideration that many common devices, such as blowing horns, or jödeling, or awaking echoes, or opening gates, or showing paths, in order to extract a gratuity from the traveller, are merely embroidered forms of begging; and their existence makes it difficult to repress undisguised mendicity. It happens too, that in one much visited district, the cantonal authorities are less active than in most others in enforcing the police regulations in this matter. On the other hand, in canton Ticino, although its population is of Italian race, very little begging is to be seen, and whereas during six weeks' stay in Italy I had found it impossible to take a walk without being pestered for alms at every turn, this sort of importunity entirely ceased as soon as I crossed the Swiss frontier. Indeed, I was a week at Locarno without meeting with more than one beggar; and that one, as I was afterwards told by the Commissary of Police, was a man who had been sent to prison more than twenty times for the offence, but who, being over seventy, had at last been given up as irreclaimable. The unanimous opinion, moreover, of well-informed persons in various parts of the country, seems to be that, although begging has not been extinguished, it is now rarely so prevalent as to be a serious nuisance, and that in most cantons it is effectually dealt with.

By the Federal Statute of 1850, beggars and tramps are to be treated in accordance with the laws of the canton in which they are arrested, and those of foreign nationality are to be expelled from the country.

The cantonal laws on the subject differ widely from each other. It may be said generally, however, that if an able-bodied* man is without means, is genuinely in search of work, and his papers are in order, he will, on application, be supplied by the police (or by the Inter-cantonal Union to be presently described) with food and lodging, and will, if possible, have employment indicated to him. If he cannot obtain any he will be passed on to the next town, to a relief station to his own† district,

* Destitute persons who are not able-bodied are sent to the district responsible for maintaining them, where they are either allowed out-relief or are placed in one of the three public establishments (poor-house, hospital, orphanage) belonging to the district. The duty of relations to maintain destitute members of their family extends in some cantons even to collaterals, and is always rigidly enforced.

† I use this word as perhaps the nearest English equivalent to the "Commune" or "Gemeinde," which is the area of what we call settlement.

or to the cantonal frontier. If he refuses work when offered he is sent to his own district to be dealt with by its council, and if the council (who are responsible for the maintenance of their indigent citizens) decide that (to use the expressive term officially employed) he is work-shy (Arbeits-scheu), he may be sent for a term, varying from three months to two years, to a forced labour institution (Zwang-Arbeits-Anstalt), which is, in effect, a house of correction for persons guilty of the less serious kinds of offences.

But the police are empowered to‡ arrest beggars without special warrant, and to bring them before a competent court, which may commit them to prison for a short term, or, in case of repeated offences and of refusal to work, may sentence them to from two to six months' imprisonment in gaol, or from six months to two years in a forced labour institution.§

It has to be remembered that the system of requiring certificates of origin and of discharge from work is in force in Switzerland, and facilitates the identification of professional tramps by the police.

This system also aids the operations of the Inter-cantonal Union for the relief of poor travellers, which extends to more than half the area and population of Switzerland. From small beginnings this Union has spread over fourteen (out of twenty-two) cantons, whose governments, in effect, delegate to it part of the administration of relief, while the Federal Administration recognises its official character by giving it certain rights of free postage, etc.

The conditions on which it grants assistance are specified in the book which it supplies to suitable applicants, and of which the title page is as follows:—

"Traveller's relief book of the Swiss Inter-cantonal Union for providing maintenance in kind. This book is issued to _____, of _____, born A.D. _____, a _____ by occupation, by the relief station at _____, on his production of the following papers, viz., _____. At the bottom of the page the bearer must sign his name."

The rules are as follows:—

(1.) Relief in kind is given at fixed stations to such needy travellers only as fulfil the following conditions:—

(a.) They must produce valid papers of legitimation.

(b.) They must furnish proof that they have worked for an employer within the three preceding months, and that at least five days have elapsed since their employment ceased.

(2.) Help is withheld (a) from drunken persons; (b) from those who refuse work offered to them.

(3.) Relief (breakfast, dinner, supper, and lodging) will be given only once during six months to the same traveller at the same station.

‡ In some cantons the police receive special rewards for the apprehension of beggars.

§ The usual practice is for the police to bring before the court only persons with no fixed domicile, and to send others to their own districts to be dealt with. The police regulation as to tramps in the canton of Berne is as follows:— "Vagrancy, namely, the wandering from place to place of persons without means and without the object of obtaining honest employment, is punishable with imprisonment and hard labour not exceeding sixty days, or with committal to a labour institution for a term between six months and two years. On the repetition of the offence the vagrant is always to be committed to a labour institution."

Appendix
XVII.

(4.) All relief given will be noted in the traveller's book issued by the Union, with an entry of the place and the date.

The delivery of this traveller's book will be noted in the papers of legitimization. Any person unable to present his book receives no relief.

(5.) In case of any abuse of relief, or of infringement of the regulation concerning lodging, or of failure to produce valid papers, the applicant will be handed over to the police.

(6.) Every person carrying a traveller's book must have a certificate from his employer stating the period of his employment. The signature of the employer must be authenticated by the local police or certified by the stamp of the relief station.

(7.) The confiscation of a traveller's book which has been delivered to a workman is to be enforced only in the case of crimes or offences punishable under the penal law. Such confiscation is to be noted on the papers of legitimization.

(8.) Any clothes given by the Union are to be specified in the traveller's book.

(9.) Defines papers of legitimization.

(10.) This book contains 36 numbered pages.

These pages are devoted, first, to forms of certificate of employment to be filled up by employers.

Then there are 342 numbered squares for the stamps of the relief stations visited. Each station impresses its stamp in succession, and the book thus constitutes a record of the places at which its owner has been maintained at the expense of the Union.

Furnished with this book the workman may wander over most of Switzerland if in genuine search of work, and will be sufficiently fed (with three meals daily) and suitably lodged on application at any of the stations which the Union has established.

As an example of the working of the system it may be mentioned that the Canton of Zürich (having a population of about 440,000 persons) is divided, for the purposes of the Union, into eleven districts, each with a committee of administration. Under the management of the committees there are fifty-one relief offices, of which all but ten are at police stations. In many of the villages the lodging provided is at inns, although the Union prefers other accommodation when obtainable. In the year 1902 these fifty-one relief offices dealt with a nightly average of 138 travellers, this number, as compared with those for previous years, showing a considerable increase, which is ascribed by the Union to the general depression of trade.

It is noticeable that no work whatever is exacted from the person thus relieved. The first principle of the Union is to limit its operations to persons really in search of employment, and in this way it makes a sharp division between the administration of relief and the repression of mendicity. The beggars, the drunkards, the work-shy, are referred to the police for correctional treatment, but the man who really desires employment is aided and speeded on his way; and, in Victor Hugo's phrase, the endeavour is to give the help which strengthens instead of the alms which debase.* While the value of the system is appreciated both by the working classes and by employers of labour, the stringent measures adopted with regard to men who refuse employment when offered, repress the class whose object in tramping is not to find work, but to evade the necessity for doing it. It has been already said that the Union occupies a quasi-official character, and its funds are derived partly from private and partly from public sources. While it has a large body of voluntary subscribers, including charitable societies and contributors to congregational collections, it also receives considerable subsidies from the Cantonal Governments as well as grants from the districts with whose co-operation it works and with whose cases it deals.

The city authorities of Zürich issue notices calling attention to the fact that food and shelter are provided for the destitute, and appeal to the public not to encourage begging by indiscriminate gifts to strangers.

The Union is also associated with charitable societies in particular towns, such, for example, as the Zürich Voluntary Relief Society, which, in its annual report for 1890, stated in the following terms some of the cause of the migration of labour and its effect on mendicity:—

One does not need to have studied the subject with open eyes very long without arriving at the opinion that the wandering of workmen in great part is not voluntary but compulsory—a necessary result of the fitful production of our industries.

In consequence of favourable combinations arising in the national, or possibly the world's, market for some entire branch of industry, or even for one or several large establishments belonging to such industry, production in that branch is largely increased for a proportionally short period—say for a few months, a half-year, or even a year—and during such period the required labour is attracted from all sides to certain given points. Let one reflect, for instance, on the work of furnishing an army with new guns, building a fleet, constructing and equipping a railway line, and so on. As soon as the emergency has passed the greater part of the labour which has been attracted thither is of no further use. The contractor is obliged to discharge men. In individual industries—for instance, the clothiers—this irregular production is the rule. The clothing manufacturers, large and small, and even the retail establishments, have their stock of regular working people, and twice a year—in “the season,” as it is called—their number is largely increased by the employment of a number of hands, who afterwards can no longer, or only to a very small extent, be retained. Thus constantly, year in year out, a large number of discharged workers are obliged to wander and look for work elsewhere.

Now, such people as these, who, without any fault of their own, have become superfluous, we meet in this wise: They receive fair maintenance not merely for one day, but, if necessary, for several days; also, in case of need, clothing; and where they can show that they are sure of obtaining work at some other place, and can begin at once, we send them thither by rail.

But, of course, it is not to guard against this class that the society has been obliged to protect itself by introducing the system of maintenance in kind. Such protective measures are rather directed against those who, without need, join the stream of compulsory wanderers, and then make no further earnest efforts to obtain work, but abandon themselves to idle loafing and professional begging. The number of these and their degeneracy are a serious matter. They no longer desire work. It daily happens in our employment bureau that people of this class simply refuse employment, and openly avow that no other means of prolonging their existence now lies open to them save begging.

Many small tradesmen in this country request us to send them workmen, but it is a hard matter to send them anyone. Begging in the city is more agreeable than work in a dull village.

Such are the tramps who, with all sorts of possible and impossible stories, go from house to house, and whose lives are constantly made easy and pleasant by the thoughtlessness and folly of mankind.

The well-meaning but unthinking giver should know that he not only gives the money away to no purpose in bestowing it on such people—be the amount what it may—but that he is assisting a social cancer, and is simply supplying the rod by which he and others are chastised.

It should be noticed, however, that the report from from which the above extract is taken was written before the system now in vogue had exercised its full effect. Thus, while the habitual migration of persons in search of work has since increased, that of professional mendicants has much diminished, notwithstanding the considerations stated in the report.

It cannot be said that Switzerland as a whole has adopted any uniform system for so dealing with tramps, whatever their place of origin, as to convert them into workers. This is not only because each canton has its own laws and practice, but also because, although each individual district is responsible for the persons belonging to it, provides for them at the public expense in sickness or in old age, and even pays for their journey home if they become destitute when away, it is unwilling to spend money on the reformation of undesirable strangers who may happen to be within its borders. It naturally prefers to get them removed. But the disciplinary powers of each local council over the persons belonging to its district are very considerable, and if one of them is a habitual drunkard or unquestionably work-shy, and will not support himself or his family, there is usually no hesitation in sending him to a forced labour institution.

Nearly every canton has one or more of these, either belonging to it or under special arrangement admitting persons sent from it. All are to a certain extent prisons, but persons convicted of ordinary offences are usually kept more or less apart from those who are called “administrative” prisoners, as having been committed by the council of a district, but not sentenced by a criminal court.

* “Substituer à l'aumône qui dégrade l'assistance qui fortifie.”

Two of such institutions which I visited belong to the Canton of Berne and are situated between the lakes of Neuchâtel and Bienne.

The Forced Labour Farm, at Witzwyl, was established in 1895, and in various respects appears to be admirably successful. It occupies an area of about 2,000 acres in the plain lying at the foot of the Jura mountains at the north-east end of the Lake of Neuchâtel. It used to consist mainly of water-logged soil subject to inundations, but extensive works of reclamation have been carried out, and at the present time at least two-thirds of it is under cultivation, and produces considerable crops. It is under the control of the police committee of the Canton of Berne, and receives persons sentenced by criminal courts for terms of imprisonment up to three years, including some forty or fifty convicted of habitual tramping with refusal to work. There is accommodation at present for about 200 men (picked as able-bodied, and otherwise suitable to be sent here), but the number seldom exceeds 150. The violent and insubordinate, and those who make attempts to escape are transferred to ordinary prisons, but such cases are rare.

About three or four abscond annually, but are generally brought back by the police. The staff of officers numbers forty-five; and two (unarmed) are placed in charge of each group of ten or twelve inmates employed in field work. Great stress is laid on the importance of their not merely supervising the men, but taking active part in the work, so as to stimulate them by example, and also to get acquainted with them. All inmates on their first entry are set to labour on the farm, and after some experience has been gained of their conduct and their capacity, they are either retained there or are employed in other occupations.

Most of them sleep and eat in cells, where they also spend their free time. Work begins at 5.30 in the summer, and at 6 a.m. in the winter. On winter mornings it takes place in the barns or workshops until daylight. At 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. there are intervals of twenty minutes. Dinner is at half-past eleven, and each man takes his ration from the kitchen to his cell, where he remains till 12.30. Men working at a distance from the main building have their dinners sent to them. At 7 p.m. in summer, and at dusk in winter they come back, have their supper, prepare vegetables, and do some housework for the following day, and then go to bed.

Breakfast consists of bread, coffee, and potatoes; dinner of bread and soup, with meat twice a week; for supper there is soup, with the occasional addition of fruit. The daily ration of bread is from 1 to 1½ lbs. The quantity of soup, vegetables, &c., is unlimited. Men engaged in hard work have extra bread at 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. with either coffee or lemonade.

There are various workshops where tailoring, shoe-making, smiths' work, and carpentering are carried on. Only men brought up in these trades work at them.

The Chaplain makes weekly visits and endeavours to influence individual inmates, while the Cantonal Inspector of Prisons has an interview with any prisoner shortly to be discharged.

A school has been established especially for the young men who volunteer to attend. Instruction, particularly in languages, is daily given on winter evenings. On Sunday singing takes its place.

By satisfactory conduct a remission of one-third of the term of detention may be obtained. For good work a small bonus is placed to the credit of the prisoner, who receives it on discharge. The establishment also pays the fares of inmates on discharge as far as the frontier, and in case of necessity makes a grant to their families.

The guiding principle of the management is to "improve the land by man and man by the land." The first of these objects, at any rate, is secured in a conspicuous degree. A huge marsh has been converted into a fertile farm, traversed by newly-constructed roads, and supplied with sufficient buildings. More and more ground has been reclaimed each year, and while the peat extracted has been sold at satisfactory prices, the soil, by scientific treatment and the abundant use of chemical manures, has been made to produce abundant crops. The original price paid for the land by the canton was £29,710. No trustworthy estimate of the present value can be given, but it is noticeable that the sales of farm produce in the three years 1901-2-3 are about double what they were in 1896-7-8*; and it is not unreasonable to suppose that the worth of the estate has been raised in a corresponding degree. Without reckoning interest on the first capital outlay, the establishment is really self-supporting. It is true that the canton makes an annual grant, which in 1902 amounted to about £1,200, but this was more than counterbalanced by the increased value of buildings (all erected by home labour) and stock in the course of the year. When the land was originally taken over, in 1896, the valuation amounted to £200; it has now risen to £17,385.

In the course of five or six years more the work of reclamation, on which a large number of men are now employed, will be finished, and all the land at present covered by peat (about one-third of the whole) will have been brought under cultivation. The amount of labour then required will depend upon the crops grown, and if, as is proposed, vegetables are produced in considerable quantities on land now employed for stock-raising, the additional work involved will take the place of that which has been devoted to drainage. There is, therefore, no reason to anticipate that, even in the altered circumstances, the establishment will require any substantial contribution from public funds for its continued maintenance.

Thus, at Witzwyl, the land has been enormously improved by man, but the more important question is whether the improvement of man by the land is also secured.

This question is discussed at some length in a report by Mr. Otto Kellerhals, the exceedingly able and resourceful director. He urges that the worst possible work for prisoners is that which is mainly mechanical, and has in it nothing to engage their interest, or to teach them anything that will enable them to maintain themselves when discharged. He admits that in the case of hardened and violent prisoners, and those sentenced for considerable terms, punishment rather than reform has to take the first place. But he believes that most offences are the result of a disinclination to work, and he has found that this has the best chance of being cured by such varied agricultural operations as are carried on at Witzwyl. When a man sees the products of his labour, which have grown up before his eyes, he is induced to exert himself, and is stimulated in a fashion which contrasts with the leaden monotony of such occupations as stone-breaking and corn-grinding. Besides, he is encouraged by the officers, who invariably work with the men, and whose example has an excellent effect upon them.

It is pointed out that many prisoners are not hardened criminals, and only relapse into crime because they have not been brought into habits of regular work. Others are physically weak or are suffering from the effects of alcohol, and for both these classes regular work in the open air is the best possible treatment. Many of the older ones have little strength of will, and the best plan seems to be to endeavour to employ them after their discharge in order that, although free men, they may still be subject to the influences of the Institution. Some young men, too, whose offences have been mainly due to idleness and irregular habits, are under short sentences. They are ignorant of any trade, a few months' teaching would only make them bunglers, while on the farm they may become useful labourers, and can pick up knowledge sufficient to enable them to earn fair wages thereafter. Some of them are occupied in draining and road-making; some learn to milk and are taught the management of horses, pigs, and so on. Others take part in the various operations of building; some work in the timber yard and become familiar with steam saws and planes.

But it is farm work that affords the best opportunity for dealing with those in whom laziness has become ingrained. They are placed in the middle of a gang of labourers, and have to exert themselves whether they like it or not. The Institution is the terror of tramps and of persons who are habitually work-shy, while industrious men get on well.

A place where so many different kinds of occupation are available, where there is plenty of land still to be brought under cultivation, where the erection of fresh

* The amount was £1,495 in 1896, £2,063 in 1897, £3,184 in 1902, and £3,865 in 1903. These sums do not include the value of such produce (potatoes, corn, etc.) as is consumed in the institution.

Appendix
XVII.

buildings has constantly to be undertaken, and where for some years the necessity for labour will be increasingly great, is considered to be specially suitable for the purpose to which it has been devoted.

It is impossible to procure any precise statistics showing the proportion of men who, after serving their term, may be regarded as permanently reformed and as supporting themselves by honest industry. Various efforts are made to give them a fair start on discharge. An officer has been specially appointed with the object of obtaining situations for men who can be recommended, and he is in relation with the Society for the Aid of Discharged Prisoners at Berne. Some are engaged for wages on the farm, and it is in contemplation to extend this system, as employers are often unwilling to take a prisoner immediately on discharge, whereas, after occupying a paid situation, he gains a character which rehabilitates him. Some also go to the neighbouring Free Labour Colony at Tannenholz which is somewhat like those established in England, and where there is no compulsory detention. It is believed, however, that with the amount of labour that will in future be necessary at Witzwyl there will be no difficulty in employing a considerable number of ex-prisoners at fair wages, and in making arrangements that none shall be obliged to go out into the world after discharge without having passed through this half-way stage of voluntary work.

The forced labour farm of St. Johannsen, near the Lake of Bienne, was established in 1884 for "the improvement of disorderly and work-shy adults," and is under the management of the Cantonal Police. It has accommodation for about 180 persons, the average actually received being 120. They have not been committed by criminal courts, but have been sent here by their district councils for terms varying from six months to two years. The offence of most of them has been begging or "work-shyness," while others have been inmates of district poor-houses from which they have been expelled for misconduct.

They are for the most part between the ages of forty and sixty, there being, however, about a dozen young men between twenty and thirty.

The buildings which they occupy are those of an old monastery. The land (about 400 acres) was originally waterlogged, but in the last twenty years has been drained and reclaimed and is now all under cultivation.

Most of the men are engaged in farm labour, and many in dairy-work, there being over 200 cows. There are also fourteen shoemakers, eight carpenters, six basket-makers, and four smiths who are employed in their own trades, but all who have no previously acquired knowledge of any special handicraft are sent to labour on the farm. Some are fairly industrious, and show that if they had sufficient resolution to resist drink they could easily earn their living outside. But many are incurably lazy and only do the minimum amount of work necessary to escape punishment (usually confinement in a cell on bread and water for twenty-four hours). By good behaviour and industry the term of detention may be shortened. A considerable proportion are sent here repeatedly, but no exact statistics are available. Periodical reports are not published. It was stated that even after payment of £400 a year as interest on capital, the total cost of the Institution (including salaries, &c., of staff) is reduced by sales to fourpence per head per diem.

The inmates wear a distinctive but not conspicuous dress. In 1903, twelve absconded, but all but one were brought back by the police.

They receive no money for their work or on discharge, but their fare is paid to their own district.

They sleep in dormitories of which the largest has eighteen beds.

The dietary consists mostly of soup and bread; they have meat only twice a week.

The hours of work are from 6 to 11.30 and from 12.30 to 7.

Their wives and families, if any, are usually supported partly or wholly by their district council.

The staff numbers about twenty, and each officer carries a revolver. But insubordination is said to be almost unknown, and assaults never take place.

No special means are taken to secure places for the inmates on their discharge; and apparently the manager does not believe that their stay in the institution often effects any thorough reformation. He considers that most of them (see above) are too old to be amenable to good influences; and "work-shyness" is engrained in them. They have to work hard during their stay at St. Johannsen, and some of the younger men get broken of their idle habits, but the older ones come again and again.

The forced labour establishment of Canton Appenzell was founded in 1884 "for the reception of able-bodied men who from irregular or dissolute life or work-shyness become a charge on the district, or who require special supervision, or who neglect their families, or who are guilty of disorderly conduct in the poor houses," and they are sent here by the district council for terms ranging from six months to three years "in order to accustom them to hard work and regular life." Other inmates are those committed by the magistrates for minor offences, and in default of payment of fines imposed on them.

The farm is situated at Gmünden in the neighbourhood of St. Gallen, and consists of about 100 acres of land, for which the Canton paid £5,200, while about £7,000 more was spent on the buildings. It is managed by a Committee appointed by the Cantonal Government. It contains accommodation for fifty inmates, but the average number is only about thirty-five, for whose supervision there are, besides the director, four officers.

About half the inmates work on the farm, part of which is devoted to the growth of trees and shrubs from seed. Thousands of young pines are annually sold for planting in the neighbouring forests, and this nursery-garden work is found to interest the men. Thirty cows are kept, and dairy products find a profitable sale. About eight men are employed in weaving, while others are occupied in shoemaking, carpentering, &c.

They wear a conspicuously striped dress; that of the convicted men being different from that of the "administrative" prisoners (i.e., those committed by a district council). The two classes are said to be kept apart as far as possible, but as a matter of fact they were mixed together in work at the time of my visit.

There are sixteen single cells; the other sleeping rooms contain four to six beds each.

The hours of work are eleven in winter, twelve or more in summer. The intervals and the dietary are much the same as at Witzwyl.

The average term of detention in the case of the "administratives" is about a year; that of prisoners committed by magistrates is about three months. The term is shortened by good conduct if the governor is able to report that the object of the punishment has been attained.

There are very few attempts at escape (only one—which was successful—in 1902); but I saw one (convicted) man who had run away and been brought back three times, and was required to wear heavy irons in consequence. The officers are unarmed, but are said to be never assaulted.

A payment at the rate of £4 per annum is made by a district council for each person detained by its orders. Including such receipts the establishment was able, by the sale of agricultural produce and of manufactured articles, to show a net profit of about £140 for the year 1902 after payment of all expenses.

Most of the men from the district councils have been sent as drinkers or work-shy tramps, but here their labour is fairly steady.

They are credited with a small bonus for good work, and this is given to them on leaving.

An association for the aid of discharged prisoners helps them to find work, which is generally pretty plentiful.

No precise information is obtainable about their subsequent careers, but it is believed that many of them do well, and the proportion who are again sent here is only about 10 per cent.

The Forced Labour Institution for the Canton of Basel-Land is at Liethal, on the railway line between Basel and Olten. It receives short-term offenders convicted by the Courts, and also "administratives" committed for a term by the district councils for begging, habitual drunkenness, refusal to work, and neglect of their families. The inmates, who number about 70, are about equally divided between the two classes, which are kept separate. Both have the same dietary, but the convicted prisoners wear a distinctive dress. The "administratives" can get their term shortened by good conduct, and receive a bonus for efficient work, which may amount to as much as £3 or £4 on discharge, after a year's labour. The younger men are mostly employed in industrial work (such as basket-making and shoemaking, in which careful instruction is given), while the old are engaged in the cultivation of the land, of which, however, there is less than 25 acres. Not many are sent here, for begging, as this is generally dealt with by the town authorities, and punished by confinement in the town prisons. The district councils usually contribute from £2 to £3 per annum for each person committed by them. But in the case of a man known to be a good workman (and many who are incorrigibly lazy under outside conditions are found here to work excellently) this payment may be excused altogether, and he is maintained in consideration of the value of his labour. The entire cost of the establishment, after deducting profits on sales, is about £1,000 a year, or £14 10s. per head.

Steps are taken to help inmates to obtain employment on discharge, and a committee has been formed with this object, but considerable difficulty arises, especially when trade is slack, from the reluctance of masters to take men from a penal establishment.

The poor-house for the city of Berne is situated at Kühlewyl, and is devoted to the reception of persons who have come under the charge of the ratepayers owing to physical or mental defects, as well as to those who have become destitute, on account of begging, refusal to work, or drinking habits. It is, in fact, much like an English workhouse with the addition of a farm of about 250 acres, and with the enforcement of compulsory detention. There are, altogether, 350 inmates (190 men and 160 women), about half of whom are over 60 years of age, and less than one-eighth are under 40. Some are actually imbeciles; others are more or less weak-minded; 25 are deaf and dumb; and a few are blind.

Tramps and habitual drunkards are usually sent there for either one or two years, but are allowed to shorten the term by good conduct.

They are mostly employed on farm work.

No distinctive dress is worn. There are a good many temporary escapes, two or three inmates being generally away, but they are nearly always brought back by the police.

Complaints are made that some of the inmates, either when out on leave or surreptitiously, now and then obtain alcoholic liquors and manage to get drunk.*

Some of the younger men appear to benefit by their detention, but no precise estimate can be given of the proportion of cases in which permanent reformation has been secured. After middle age, habits of drinking and of idleness are said to be rarely abandoned.

When inmates have behaved well, they are helped to find work, and tools are supplied to them on discharge.

There are workshops for carpentering, tailoring, shoemaking, and smiths' work; also for making baskets, paper bags, and straw covers for bottles. The net profits from farming, in 1902, amounted to £907, and those from the manufactured goods sold, to £396; the net cost per inmate, after deduction of these amounts, is £12 7s. a year.

There is a much greater mixture of different classes of inmates than in a well-ordered English workhouse of the same size. Separation of idiots from the sane, even of men from women, is not rigidly maintained, and inconvenience and irregularity are stated to result. But the farm provides excellent kinds of work, and is remunerative. And the system of detaining inveterate loafers and habitual drinkers, who would otherwise do no profitable work and would be pests to the public, is regarded as a distinct gain to the community, while it is not unjust to the individuals, who can always secure their release by showing themselves, during a reasonable period, fit to be trusted.

Of voluntary labour colonies there are only two in Switzerland. That of Herdern was founded in 1895 by a philanthropic society formed mainly in Zürich. It occupies the buildings of an old monastery near Frauenfeld in Canton Thurgau, and lies on the slopes of the vine-clad hills to the south-west of the Lake of Constance. Its object is to furnish employment for men temporarily out of work, for those who have begun tramping, and for discharged prisoners. Entry and discharge are purely voluntary; a preference is given to those recommended by district councils or by subscribers. Each person must agree to remain at least four weeks, but may at any time be discharged for misconduct.

After the first fortnight the labourer is credited with a sum ranging from 3d. to 6d. a day, according to his work. He is paid the total sum on leaving, less the amount of any new clothes supplied to him; meantime he receives board, lodging, mending, washing, and tobacco.

At the time of my visit on April 30th, the number of colonists was only 50, but 75 can be accommodated, and the establishment is occasionally full in winter. In 1902, 209 persons were admitted, and the average stay of each was 108 days; 175 applications had to be refused for want of room, and 35 on other grounds. Of the 209, only 21 were agricultural labourers; 50 were factory hands; 25 were connected with the building trade; and 20 were clerks. But the number of applicants has somewhat fallen off since the meat dinners were reduced to two per week. The farm consists of about 300 acres, mostly devoted to dairying, with a large vineyard which is particularly useful owing to the varied work required for the culture of vines. But here, as in other labour colonies, a difficulty arises from the fact that the number of applications for admission is greatest during the winter just at the time when least farm labour is required.

It is not supposed that anything substantial is done to reclaim the men employed, though some religious instruction is given, and they are kept from liquor. All that is claimed for the institution is that it provides them with labour, and gets them into the habit of working, while it takes away from them the excuse for begging.

They are required to do an ordinary day's work; they have either porridge or coffee and bread for breakfast at seven; tea at nine; dinner (soup and vegetables, with meat twice a week) at twelve; and soup with bread in the evening.

Some aid is given to colonists in finding work when they leave. Of the 222 who went out in the course of 1902, the administration obtained places for thirty-one, while fifty-five secured situations for themselves; ninety-three departed professedly in search for work. Of the remainder, ten left without notice; seventeen were discharged for bad conduct, and sixteen for incapacity or infirmity.

No exact particulars can be given with regard to the subsequent careers of men who have passed through the colony. It is stated, however, that many for whom places have been obtained, have turned out so well that employers have again made applications to the administration for men. On the other hand, some are known to have lost their situations, generally on account of drunkenness. And many come to the colony again and again.

The expenses for the year 1902 amounted to £3,087 (including £1,690 for maintenance, £300 for salaries, and £264 for allowances to colonists), while the receipts were only £1,822 (including £348 from subscriptions, £456 from cantonal grants, and £1,000 from sales). It will be seen that the cost of maintenance per head (the average number of inmates being sixty-two) is much greater at Herdern than at the forced labour colonies. And the object of providing labour for the unemployed is only attained by working at a considerable loss.

The only other free labour colony in Switzerland is at Tannenhof, in the Canton of Berne, where the average of men employed is between forty and fifty. I did not visit it, but I am informed that the conditions are much the same as at Herdern, except that each man on admission contracts to stay at least two months. It was founded in 1889, with the special object of affording to men discharged from prison and from forced labour institutions a half-way house where they could obtain employment before trying to place themselves in the ordinary labour market.

In cantons where there are no voluntary societies for dealing with vagrants, the arrangements for the purpose are generally in the hands of the police. Thus, in Canton Ticino, if a person becomes destitute when away from home, he may make application at the police station, and if his papers are found in order, he is fed amply, and lodged tolerably for, say, a couple of nights, provided that he is seeking employment. This can generally be obtained without much difficulty, as the large amount of building in progress provides plenty of labour. If unsuccessful in his search, he is sent back to his own district, or to the frontier of the canton, if he belongs elsewhere. The ward where vagrants are lodged at Locarno (Canton Ticino), is a huge apartment, in a fourteenth-century

* In some cantons an innkeeper is liable to a penalty for supplying alcoholic drink to any person in receipt of public relief.

Appendix
XVII.

castle, but the number of persons received there rarely reaches a dozen in the course of the week. Begging is promptly dealt with, and is no longer practised to any considerable extent. Now, and then, a persistent mendicant who refuses to work, is committed for a term to the Forced Labour Farm at Realta, belonging to the Canton of Graubünden, but such cases are very rare.

Some, too, are detained by their district council in the poorhouses, of which there is one belonging to nearly every district. Several which I visited seemed to me to compare badly, except in one respect, with English workhouses. The want of classification was conspicuous, most of the rooms were ill-ventilated, the sanitary arrangements and those for washing were very unsatisfactory. On the other hand, pains were evidently taken to provide useful employment for the inmates; everybody appeared to be kept busy, in some intelligent fashion; and such monotonous occupations as stone-breaking, corn-grinding and oakum picking were apparently unknown. These institutions, however, scarcely come within the range of the present Report, as tramps are lodged there only exceptionally when they have been sent by the police to their own district to be dealt with.

On the whole, after having discussed the question with a large number of persons qualified to speak with authority, I am inclined to ascribe the diminution of mendicity in Switzerland, first, to the very stringent measures adopted by the police for repressing it; secondly, to the steps taken against the work-shy; and, thirdly, to the special facilities afforded to those travelling in genuine search of employment. As the public at large recognise the fact that every industrious man can obtain board and lodging gratuitously they are unwilling* to give money for the purpose, and when there are no givers there are soon no beggars. No doubt, too, the fact that, as a rule, labour is in much demand in Switzerland, at any rate during most of the year, tends in the same direction, and public opinion has been aroused to indignation at the notion of able-bodied men being allowed to beg instead of working. There is a well-known proverb, "Muszigang ist aller Laster Anfang," which may be rendered "Loafing is the beginning of all vices" (or, more tersely, "Tramp means scamp"), and both courts and councils set themselves to repress this sort of work-shyness.

Then, again, the connection of the Swiss with his own district is much more close than that of the English labourer. He possesses burgher rights and privileges, and the council not only exercise control over his actions—a control which might be called arbitrary if it were not rather paternal—but, as they undertake to provide for him in his old age, so they also adopt means to prevent his being a burden to them owing to laziness or misconduct. Thus, if he is a persistent drinker or habitually work-shy, they send him for a lengthened term to an institution where he is cut off from drink and is compelled to work. For one thing, they know all about him, and therefore there is the less chance of injustice being done. The difficulty of identification, which is so prominent in England, does not exist under a system which in Switzerland, as elsewhere on the continent, requires both papers of origin and certificates of discharge from employment. For another thing, he can again become a free citizen when he has given proof of reform by doing good work.

Undoubtedly the plan of forced labour farms has various advantages. At Witzwyl, for instance, the value of the labour is claimed to be equivalent to a sum of four francs per day for each man employed; whereas, if the men were allowed to rove about the country, they would do nothing useful. Certainly, it was impossible to help contrasting the active work at most of the institutions which I visited with the slackness of the average tramp ward in England. And some good results were obvious. Considerable tracts of land had been converted from almost worthless marsh to a high state of cultivation; men, who would have been not only unproductive but both troublesome and costly members of the community, were at any rate being brought into habits of regular work; and at some of the farms their labour supported not only themselves but the whole establishment. Doubtless the system requires both an efficient police (who must be zealous in suppressing mendicity and clever in catching fugitives from forced labour farms) and also councils and courts of justice which are not sentimentally indulgent.

The plan of requiring an inveterate tramp to do profitable work for a year or so seems superior, both economically and educationally, to that of giving him a general unremunerative task for a day at a time and making it necessary for him to beg his way from workhouse to workhouse. But it is found requisite that, side by side with any such method of dealing with the work-shy, means should be taken, whether by local authorities or by voluntary associations, for helping the industrious man who is travelling in genuine search of employment. As a condition of this assistance it does not seem unreasonable to require proof, in the shape of a discharge-note or other evidence, of his being a labourer and not a loafer.

I am,

Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

H. PRESTON-THOMAS.

To The Right Honourable

Walter H. Long, M.P.,

President of the Local Government Board.

* In the Canton of Schwyz there is actually a law of 1889 (recalling the provision against "private doles," in 27 Henry VIII., cap. 25) which imposes a penalty not exceeding 10 francs on "persons who, by giving alms, favour begging from house to house or in the street."

VAGRANCY OFFENCES.

1.—NUMBER OF PERSONS CONVICTED OF CERTAIN OFFENCES AGAINST THE POOR LAW AND VAGRANCY ACTS DURING THE TWELVE YEARS 1893-1904.

Offences.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.
Poor Law, Offences against :—
Neglecting to maintain family, &c. - - - - -	2,010	1,910	1,667	1,725	1,785	2,065	2,060	1,943	2,074	2,137	2,453	2,408
Misbehaviour by paupers - -	2,585	2,996	3,158	3,051	3,098	3,417	3,309	3,407	4,749	5,620	6,117	7,079
Stealing or destroying work- house clothes - - -	505	756	718	551	493	511	531	402	517	656	784	870
Other offences - - - -	327	276	204	227	210	199	263	208	246	307	326	448
Vagrancy Acts, Offences against :—
Begging - - - - -	11,487	13,059	10,523	11,866	10,754	11,066	9,317	8,416	10,771	12,107	14,638	17,718
Sleeping out - - - - -	4,490	4,454	4,463	4,584	4,795	5,255	4,809	4,215	5,303	5,659	6,091	7,248
Gaming, &c. - - - - -	12,561	18,149	16,521	18,343	20,071	22,616	21,933	21,930	23,679	20,898	22,116	21,100
Possessing picklocks and other implements - - - - -	19	21	15	18	15	24	20	11	24	16	18	1,173
Found in enclosed premises -	989	1,051	866	848	826	1,007	866	907	983	1,105	1,035
Frequenting - - - - -	1,991	2,241	2,087	2,153	1,927	1,898	1,607	1,682	1,920	1,748	1,687	1,734
Living on prostitutes' earnings*	—	—	—	—	—	93	319	175	229	244	295	296
Number of incorrigible rogues dealt with at Quarter Sessions	104	122	105	111	127	141	143	182	209	214	240	314

* Offence created by the Vagrancy Act, 1898.

2.—SENTENCES OF IMPRISONMENT FOR CERTAIN OFFENCES AGAINST THE POOR LAW AND VAGRANCY ACTS DURING THE FOUR YEARS, 1901-4.

Offences	Number imprisoned				Over 3 months.				3 months and over 2 months.				2 months and over 1 month.				1 month and over 14 days.				14 days and under.
	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.
Against Poor Law :—
Neglecting to maintain family - - -	1,905	1,980	2,272	2,243	1	2	3	4	314	354	430	459	297	331	368	313	1,057	1,042	1,199	1,194	236	251	272	273
Misbehaviour by paupers	4,654	5,510	6,038	6,972	—	—	—	1	30	39	52	46	71	74	82	117	832	1,014	1,256	1,600	3,721	4,383	4,648	5,208
Stealing or destroying workhouse clothes -	503	630	760	855	—	—	—	—	23	24	19	39	46	58	54	78	163	192	242	244	271	356	445	494
Other offences - - -	224	264	291	407	1	—	—	—	8	5	3	4	10	19	2	26	46	63	92	146	159	177	194	231
Against Vagrancy Acts :—
Begging - - -	10,000	11,223	13,744	16,626	—	—	1	1	212	207	219	289	97	130	148	148	1,376	1,593	1,938	2,357	8,315	9,293	11,438	13,831
Sleeping out - - -	4,283	4,655	5,198	6,219	—	—	—	—	59	78	86	98	79	71	93	117	464	593	673	806	3,681	3,913	4,346	5,198
Gaming, &c. - - -	162	156	176	198	—	—	—	—	11	21	8	22	7	14	12	17	52	51	84	68	92	70	72	91
Possessing picklocks and other implements -	24	16	18	928	—	—	—	—	10	10	13	248	3	2	2	136	8	4	3	287	3	—	—	25
Found in enclosed premises	724	820	794	—	—	—	—	—	188	200	245	—	93	115	102	—	220	259	242	—	223	246	205	—
Frequenting - - -	1,744	1,599	1,506	1,557	—	2	1	1	810	788	691	726	326	231	230	237	415	398	419	380	193	180	164	213
Living on prostitutes' earnings - - -	218	233	278	285	12	—	3	1	140	176	198	208	49	30	57	60	15	26	19	14	2	1	1	2

APPENDIX XIX.

VAGRANCY OFFENCES
(Papers handed in by Mr. Simpson.)

1. NUMBER OF PERSONS PROSECUTED FOR BEGGING AND SLEEPING OUT IN EACH YEAR FROM 1857 TO 1904.

Appendix
XIX.

Year.	Begging.	Sleeping Out.	Total.	Year.	Begging.	Sleeping Out.	Total.
1857	9,306	3,676	12,982	1879	17,783	6,173	23,956
1858	9,776	3,678	13,454	1880	21,230	6,215	27,445
				1881	19,874	6,044	25,918
1859	7,716	3,125	10,841	1882	20,493	6,576	27,069
1860	7,545	3,030	10,575	1883	18,672	6,339	25,011
1861	8,298	3,557	11,855	Annual Average (1879-1883) }	19,610	6,269	25,880
1862	11,267	4,077	15,344
1863	10,869	3,819	14,688
Annual Average (1859-1863) }	9,139	3,522	12,661
				1885	20,045	6,243	26,288
				1886	20,978	6,603	27,581
				1887	22,702	6,922	29,624
				1888	23,487	6,881	30,368
1864	9,545	3,738	13,283	Annual Average (1884-1888) }	21,055	6,711	27,765
1865	9,194	4,034	13,228
1866	8,424	4,293	12,717
1867	11,343	4,700	16,043
1868	13,536	5,835	19,371	1889	20,032	6,620	26,652
Annual Average (1864-1868) }	10,408	4,520	14,928	1890	16,068	6,313	22,381
				1891	13,812	6,793	20,605
				1892	14,772	7,336	22,108
				1893	16,826	9,032	25,858
				Annual Average (1889-1893) }	16,302	7,219	23,521
1869	17,541	5,323	22,864
1870	15,954	5,433	21,387
1871	13,603	5,149	18,752
1872	11,279	4,886	16,165	1894	19,155	8,243	27,398
1873	10,225	4,843	15,068	1895	15,678	8,159	23,837
Annual Average (1869-1873) }	13,720	5,127	18,847	1896	16,916	8,356	25,272
				1897	14,958	8,817	23,775
				1898	15,474	9,582	25,056
				Annual Average (1894-1898) }	16,436	8,631	25,068
1899	12,659	8,515	21,174
1900	11,339	7,452	18,791
1901	14,492	9,101	23,593
1874	9,328	5,365	14,693	1902	16,184	9,598	25,782
1875	8,972	5,507	14,479	1903	19,283	10,349	29,632
1876	9,753	5,619	15,372	Annual Average (1899-1903) }	14,791	9,003	23,794
1877	11,213	6,141	17,354
1878	14,247	6,307	20,554
Annual Average (1874-1878) }	10,703	5,788	16,490

2. NUMBER OF PERSONS PROSECUTED FOR BEGGING AND SLEEPING OUT IN EACH COUNTY IN 1903.

(The Counties are arranged in order of size).

County.	Acreage.	Population in 1901.	Persons Prosecuted for Beggings.	Persons Prosecuted for Sleeping Out.	Total.
York (West Riding) -	1,771,562	2,750,493	2,317	1,219	3,536
Lincoln - - - -	1,696,332	500,022	2,307	242	2,549
Devon - - - -	1,671,168	662,196	186	110	296
York (North Riding) -	1,366,108	455,252	554	149	703
Norfolk - - - -	1,314,612	476,553	132	55	187
Northumberland - -	1,291,515	603,119	297	328	625
Lancashire - - - -	1,196,753	4,387,043	2,819	2,628	5,447
Southampton - - -	1,052,810	799,582	1,228	525	1,753
Somerset - - - -	1,037,484	434,950	105	93	198
Essex - - - -	979,532	1,083,998	104	110	214
Kent - - - -	976,881	961,139	280	133	413
Cumberland - - - -	973,086	266,933	101	134	235
Suffolk - - - -	948,768	373,353	45	102	147
Sussex - - - -	932,409	602,255	273	102	375
Cornwall - - - -	868,220	322,334	252	34	286
Wiltshire - - - -	864,105	271,394	74	61	135
Salop - - - -	861,802	239,783	169	60	229
Gloucester - - - -	805,482	708,439	592	305	897
York (East Riding) -	750,039	385,007	269	38	307
Stafford - - - -	744,984	1,236,919	204	355	559
Cheshire - - - -	654,825	827,191	1,032	346	1,378
Derby - - - -	652,272	610,522	322	333	655
Durham - - - -	649,244	1,187,474	306	672	978
Northampton - - -	638,612	335,628	154	47	201
Dorset - - - -	625,578	202,063	35	30	65
Carmarthen - - - -	587,816	135,328	29	16	45
Warwick - - - -	579,885	939,904	389	513	902
Cambridge - - - -	553,219	184,759	19	14	33
Nottingham - - - -	540,123	514,459	79	85	164
Hereford - - - -	538,921	114,125	65	21	86
Leicester - - - -	532,788	437,490	52	18	70
Glamorgan - - - -	518,863	859,931	149	276	425
Montgomery - - - -	510,111	54,901	25	20	45
Westmorland - - -	505,330	64,409	122	64	186
Oxford - - - -	480,687	186,460	73	41	114
Worcester - - - -	480,059	453,734	249	147	396
Buckingham - - - -	479,358	197,046	19	35	54
Brecon - - - -	469,301	54,213	13	23	36
Berkshire - - - -	462,367	252,571	46	26	72
Surrey - - - -	461,807	653,549	117	83	200
Cardigan - - - -	443,071	61,078	15	5	20
Denbigh - - - -	426,084	131,582	51	48	99
Merioneth - - - -	422,018	48,852	184	12	196
Hertford - - - -	404,518	258,423	52	22	74
Pembroke - - - -	392,710	87,894	6	37	43
Carnarvon - - - -	365,986	125,649	41	27	68
Monmouth - - - -	349,712	298,076	45	216	261
Bedford - - - -	302,947	171,707	42	5	47
Radnor - - - -	301,164	23,281	6	—	6
Huntingdon - - - -	233,984	54,125	3	3	6
Anglesey - - - -	176,630	50,606	5	1	6
Flint - - - -	163,025	81,485	14	5	19
Middlesex - - - -	148,700	792,314	127	71	198
Rutland - - - -	97,273	19,709	10	1	11
London - - - -	74,839	4,536,541	3,079	303	3,382
Total - - - -	37,327,479	32,527,843	19,283	10,349	29,632

3. NUMBER OF PERSONS PROSECUTED FOR THE OFFENCE OF "MISBEHAVIOUR BY PAUPERS" IN EACH YEAR
FROM 1857 TO 1904.

Appendix
XIX.

Year.	Number of Persons prosecuted.	Year.	Number of Persons prosecuted.	Year.	Number of Persons prosecuted.
1857	1,540	1874	3,037	1891	2,608
1858	1,788	1875	2,716	1892	2,730
1859	1,180	1876	2,825	1893	2,918
1860	1,117	1877	3,547	1894	3,363
1861	1,348	1878	3,450	1895	3,501
1862	2,056	1879	2,894	1896	3,397
1863	2,116	1880	3,125	1897	3,470
1864	1,828	1881	3,122	1898	3,769
1865	2,005	1882	2,841	1899	3,632
1866	2,216	1883	4,262	1900	3,717
1867	2,985	1884	3,483	1901	5,118
1868	4,428	1885	3,439	1902	5,959
1869	4,507	1886	2,782	1903	6,496
1870	4,173	1887	3,039	1904	7,436
1871	4,289	1888	3,677	Total - -	156,952
1872	3,213	1889	3,617
1873	3,201	1890	2,992	Annual Average (1857-1904)	3,270

APPENDIX XX.
VAGRANCY OFFENCES.

(Tables handed in by Mr. Farrant.)

Appendix XX. 1. NUMBER OF PERSONS PROSECUTED FOR THE OFFENCE OF "MISBEHAVIOUR BY PAUPERS," IN EACH COUNTY, FROM 1893 TO 1904.

County.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.	1903.	1904.
Bedford - - - - -	5	5	16	23	16	12	23	20	26	42	44	57
Berks - - - - -	91	85	91	117	79	97	102	94	134	166	134	176
Bucks - - - - -	25	36	52	36	28	38	57	40	24	56	62	170
Cambridge - - - - -	32	19	16	17	12	22	16	11	17	18	8	33
Cheshire - - - - -	57	76	72	57	70	62	34	32	65	57	123	120
Cornwall - - - - -	9	10	2	6	5	8	8	12	9	18	27	32
Cumberland - - - - -	8	5	13	8	12	12	13	8	17	20	23	31
Derby - - - - -	19	27	22	22	12	8	16	22	35	104	60	79
Devon - - - - -	53	40	60	46	59	70	49	40	88	70	110	108
Dorset - - - - -	9	8	27	15	21	11	15	22	56	43	44	51
Durham - - - - -	52	60	41	51	47	51	36	23	25	50	62	69
Essex - - - - -	62	92	51	77	130	100	115	69	122	108	157	145
Gloucester - - - - -	76	95	95	52	82	94	84	106	174	205	256	262
Hereford - - - - -	12	17	52	60	48	41	22	21	34	40	32	41
Hertford - - - - -	60	86	55	74	55	50	39	58	108	118	132	166
Huntingdon - - - - -	14	14	5	7	8	23	26	11	28	29	60	33
Kent - - - - -	115	145	126	113	135	210	259	288	270	193	221	215
Lancashire - - - - -	168	199	206	221	181	321	226	207	302	329	260	216
Leicester - - - - -	26	25	23	29	16	33	36	35	68	74	60	49
Lincoln - - - - -	45	33	43	36	36	24	33	44	48	47	120	160
London - - - - -	866	1,083	1,140	968	963	1,032	918	899	1,081	1,204	1,354	1,478
Middlesex - - - - -	39	40	57	61	65	57	73	68	99	93	87	110
Monmouth - - - - -	27	9	29	34	23	13	19	17	18	75	76	81
Norfolk - - - - -	37	47	64	56	69	78	92	76	66	60	101	99
Northampton - - - - -	69	64	54	53	76	86	71	56	57	88	101	75
Northumberland - - - - -	16	26	25	30	15	12	12	21	16	21	39	38
Nottingham - - - - -	12	31	42	77	65	48	97	60	105	110	95	121
Oxford - - - - -	43	59	57	57	71	46	63	37	80	132	124	125
Rutland - - - - -	—	5	—	2	4	—	3	3	25	42	35	35
Salop - - - - -	32	64	49	38	37	43	50	38	64	67	76	79
Somerset - - - - -	38	47	73	83	67	69	71	74	96	101	161	134
Southampton - - - - -	79	75	72	100	108	132	160	130	175	229	336	260
Stafford - - - - -	72	106	103	111	113	85	60	132	191	314	252	215
Suffolk - - - - -	30	52	41	21	26	26	27	29	32	21	63	63
Surrey - - - - -	93	76	74	76	112	89	79	118	229	225	169	242
Sussex - - - - -	120	86	106	114	124	103	106	171	254	315	282	256
Warwick - - - - -	57	79	72	81	54	90	71	86	132	160	177	196
Westmorland - - - - -	1	5	2	1	9	11	14	10	16	32	17	4
Wilts - - - - -	30	25	18	46	39	55	44	37	66	107	55	51
Worcester - - - - -	26	22	55	36	26	46	47	65	96	104	110	94
York (East Riding) - - - - -	22	35	29	22	67	56	66	43	57	73	78	84
„ (North Riding) - - - - -	26	24	29	25	53	64	13	43	71	76	51	84
„ (West Riding) - - - - -	135	159	166	166	154	175	217	262	342	412	564	1,077*
Anglesey - - - - -	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	—
Brecon - - - - -	7	8	12	16	15	6	10	8	20	10	5	10
Cardigan - - - - -	28	13	16	17	17	16	18	8	18	26	21	68
Carmarthen - - - - -	3	4	2	—	2	1	5	5	6	9	11	23
Carnarvon - - - - -	9	11	6	3	10	4	2	6	8	6	5	19
Denbigh - - - - -	5	5	14	5	7	12	9	17	12	5	12	19
Flint - - - - -	1	3	3	2	1	1	2	4	2	4	3	4
Glamorgan - - - - -	22	10	14	22	16	16	4	28	29	39	27	35
Merioneth - - - - -	5	—	2	1	1	—	—	—	1	7	10	20
Montgomery - - - - -	26	10	3	—	2	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Pembroke - - - - -	4	2	4	4	7	10	—	3	2	4	3	4
Radnor - - - - -	—	1	—	2	—	—	—	—	2	1	—	—
TOTAL - - - - -	2,918	3,363	3,501	3,397	3,470	3,769	3,632	3,717	5,118	5,959	6,496	7,436

* The figures for the West Riding County Police District increased from 203 to 493, Sheffield City from 226 to 420, and Wakefield City from 43 to 86.

2. STATEMENT OF THE MEAN NUMBER OF ADULT ABLE-BODIED IN-DOOR PAUPERS (EXCLUSIVE OF VAGRANTS), OF THE MEAN NUMBER OF VAGRANTS RELIEVED, AND OF PERSONS RECEIVED INTO PRISON UPON SUMMARY CONVICTION, IN EACH YEAR FROM 1857 TO 1904. Appendix XX.

[The statistics of Pauperism and Vagrants are extracted from Tables 83 and 87 of the Report of the Local Government Board for 1903-4.]

Year.	Mean Number of Adult Able-bodied In-door Paupers (exclusive of Vagrants.)	Mean Number of Vagrants relieved.	Number of Persons received into Prison on Summary Conviction.	Year.	Mean Number of Adult Able-bodied In-door Paupers (exclusive of Vagrants.)	Mean Number of Vagrants relieved.	Number of Persons received into Prison on Summary Conviction.
1857	19,931	2,706	86,795	1881	22,251	6,114	150,888
1858	18,209	2,111	83,128	1882	21,558	4,790	153,645
1859	16,268	1,905	74,769	1883	20,558	4,097	151,056
1860	20,396	1,839	70,151	1884	20,685	4,483	150,096
1861	22,136	2,768	78,871	1885	21,927	5,094	138,015
1862	22,431	3,920	92,895	1886	23,002	4,833	144,989
1863	21,026	3,633	94,952	1887	24,005	5,265	138,755
1864	19,819	3,354	94,611	1888	23,597	6,504	144,765
1865	19,363	4,140	92,665	1889	22,313	4,929	137,088
1866	19,740	4,551	92,263	1890	22,956	5,552	132,789
1867	23,680	5,689	98,636	1891	26,392	6,498	128,958
1868	24,960	7,483	110,828	1892	30,202	6,888	136,996
1869	25,200	6,061	123,552	1893	32,992	8,936	143,178
1870	24,700	5,183	125,730	1894	34,675	8,539	146,497
1871	22,000	3,836	119,368	1895	35,678	10,634	135,377
1872	19,331	2,700	118,261	1896	35,221	11,555	141,418
1873	18,222	2,787	126,437	1897	35,884	11,296	141,102
1874	18,487	2,767	128,724	1898	35,596	11,362	150,214
1875	16,059	3,248	132,594	1899	34,387	9,400	147,249
1876	16,446	3,770	136,783	1900	33,580	9,719	139,179
1877	18,025	4,216	144,562	1901	35,095	10,793	155,100
1878	19,109	4,143	143,325	1902	37,561	12,596	162,969
1879	22,584	6,790	149,646	1903	39,991	12,134	179,979
1880	22,515	6,979	139,546	1904	43,987	14,184	189,445

Note.—By the mean number is meant the mean of the numbers relieved in the middle of the year (1 July) and at its termination (1 January).

3. STATEMENT OF THE PERCENTAGES UPON WHICH CHARTS NOS. 7 TO 10 ARE BASED.

Year.	Mean Number of Adult Able-bodied Indoor Paupers (exclusive of Vagrants).	Mean Number of Vagrants relieved.	Persons prosecuted for				Persons received into Prison on Summary Conviction.
			Misbehaviour by paupers.	Begging.	Sleeping out.	Totals of Begging and Sleeping-out.
1857	100	100	100	100	100	100	100
1858	91'36	78'01	116'10	105'05	100'06	103'64	95'78
1859	81'62	70'40	76'62	82'91	85'01	83'51	86'14
1860	102'33	67'96	72'53	81'07	82'43	81'46	80'82
1861	111'06	102'29	87'53	89'17	96'76	91'32	90'87
1862	112'54	144'86	133'51	121'07	110'91	118'19	107'03
1863	105'49	134'26	137'40	116'80	103'08	113'14	109'40
1864	99'44	123'95	118'70	102'57	101'68	102'32	109'01
1865	97'15	152'99	130'19	98'80	109'74	101'89	106'76
1866	99'04	168'18	143'90	90'52	116'78	97'96	106'30
1867	118'81	210'24	193'83	121'89	127'86	123'58	113'64
1868	125'23	276'53	287'53	145'45	158'73	149'21	127'69
1869	126'44	223'98	292'66	188'49	144'80	176'12	142'35
1870	123'93	191'54	270'97	171'44	147'79	164'74	144'86
1871	110'38	141'76	278'51	146'17	140'07	144'45	137'53
1872	96'99	99'78	208'64	121'20	132'91	124'52	136'25
1873	91'43	102'99	207'86	109'88	131'75	116'07	145'67
1874	92'76	102'25	197'21	100'24	145'95	113'18	148'31
1875	80'57	120'03	176'36	96'41	149'81	111'53	152'77
1876	82'51	139'32	183'44	104'80	152'86	118'41	157'59
1877	90'44	155'80	230'32	120'49	167'06	133'68	166'56
1878	95'88	153'10	224'03	153'09	171'57	158'33	165'13
1879	113'31	250'92	187'92	191'09	167'93	184'53	172'41
1880	112'96	257'91	202'92	228'13	169'07	211'41	160'78
1881	111'64	225'94	202'73	213'56	164'69	199'65	173'84
1882	108'16	177'01	184'48	220'21	178'89	208'51	177'02
1883	103'15	151'40	276'75	200'64	172'44	192'66	174'04
1884	103'78	165'67	226'17	194'08	187'81	192'30	172'93
1885	110'01	188'25	223'31	215'40	169'83	202'50	159'01
1886	115'41	178'60	180'65	225'42	179'63	212'46	167'05
1887	120'44	194'57	197'34	243'95	188'30	228'19	159'87
1888	118'39	240'35	238'77	252'39	187'19	233'92	166'79
1889	111'95	182'15	234'87	215'26	180'08	205'30	157'94
1890	115'18	205'17	194'29	172'66	171'74	172'40	152'99
1891	132'42	240'13	169'35	148'42	184'79	158'72	148'58
1892	151'53	254'55	177'27	158'74	199'56	170'30	157'84
1893	165'53	330'23	189'48	180'81	245'70	199'18	164'96
1894	173'98	315'56	218'38	205'83	224'24	211'05	168'79
1895	179'01	392'98	227'34	168'47	221'95	183'62	155'97
1896	176'71	427'01	220'58	181'78	227'31	194'67	162'93
1897	180'04	417'44	225'32	160'74	239'88	183'14	162'57
1898	178'60	419'85	244'74	166'28	260'66	193'01	173'07
1899	172'53	347'38	235'84	136'03	231'63	163'10	169'65
1900	168'48	359'16	241'36	121'85	202'72	144'75	160'35
1901	176'08	398'85	332'34	155'73	247'58	181'74	178'70
1902	188'46	465'48	386'95	173'91	261'10	198'60	187'76
1903	200'65	448'41	421'82	207'21	281'53	228'25	207'36
1904	220'69	524'17	482'86	247'54	320'59	268'23	218'27

CHART N° 7.

MISBEHAVIOUR BY PAUPERS, AND TOTAL PAUPERISM.

Progress since 1857, taking 100 as the equivalent, in each case, of the figures for 1857.

— MISBEHAVIOUR BY PAUPERS (Persons Prosecuted) — PAUPERISM (Mean number of Able bodied Paupers, exclusive of Vagrants)

CHART N° 8.

MISBEHAVIOUR BY PAUPERS, AND PAUPER VAGRANCY.

Progress since 1857, taking 100 as the equivalent, in each case, of the figures for 1857

CHART N° 9.

BEGGING & SLEEPING OUT, AND PAUPER VAGRANCY.

Progress since 1857, taking 100 as the equivalent of the figures for 1857.

The red line shows the progress since 1865 of the figures for vagrants relieved on the 1st January in each Year. Since 1890 the figures of the night count are taken (see pages 20 & 21.)

CHART N° 10.

IMPRISONMENT UPON SUMMARY CONVICTION.

Progress since 1857, taking 100 as the equivalent of the figures for 1857.

— PERSONS RECEIVED INTO PRISON UPON SUMMARY CONVICTION.

NOTE. Out of a total of 189,180 persons received into prison upon summary conviction during the year ended 31st March 1905, no less than 70,665 were imprisoned for drunkenness.

PERCENTAGE OF PERSONS FINED WHO WERE IMPRISONED IN DEFAULT OF PAYMENT.

(The figures for years prior to 1893 are not available)

NOTE. The dotted line shows the percentage of persons imprisoned in default of payment of fines exclusive of persons released from prison on payment of part of the fine (Prison Act, 1898, section 9)

4. NUMBER OF PERSONS SENTENCED TO PAY FINES, AND NUMBER AND PERCENTAGE OF PERSONS IMPRISONED IN DEFAULT OF PAYMENT, IN EACH YEAR FROM 1893 TO 1904.

Appendix
XX.

(The figures for Persons imprisoned in default of fines for years prior to 1893 are not available.)

Year.	Persons sentenced to pay Fines.	Persons imprisoned in default of payment of Fines.	Percentage imprisoned in default of payment.
1893	422,369	79,836	18·90
1894	444,459	81,349	18·30
1895	443,595	74,703	16·84
1896	475,962	78,743	16·54
1897	501,520	78,521	15·68
1898	545,283	84,031	15·41
1899	563,378	83,855	14·88
1900	531,843	78,345	14·73
1901	548,292	86,536	15·78
1902	540,108	91,638	16·97
1903	551,232	103,412	18·76
1904	507,330	107,625	21·21

The numbers and percentages of Persons imprisoned in default of payment of Fines, exclusive of Persons who were released on payment of part of the Fine (Prison Act, 1898, section 9), were as follows :—

Year.	Number.	Percentage.
1900	72,673	13·66
1901	79,436	14·49
1902	83,884	15·53
1903	94,189	17·09
1904	98,156	19·35

APPENDIX XXI.

BELGIAN LAW OF 27TH NOVEMBER, 1891, FOR THE REPRESSION OF VAGRANCY AND BEGGING.

Art. 1. For the repression of vagrancy and begging, the Government shall organise institutions of correction under the name of "dépôts de mendicité," "maisons de refuge" and charity schools (écoles de bienfaisance).

Art. 2. The institutions of correction mentioned in the preceding Article shall be exclusively devoted to the confinement of persons whom the judicial authority shall place at the disposal of the Government to be shut up in a "dépôt."

The "maisons de refuge" mentioned in the same Article shall be exclusively devoted to the confinement of persons whom the judicial authority shall place at the disposal of the Government to be confined there, and persons whose confinement is requested by the authority of the commune.

The charity schools shall be devoted to persons who are under eighteen years of age and have been placed by the judicial authority at the disposal of the Government, or whose admission has been applied for by the authority of the commune.

Art. 3. Persons over eighteen years of age, whose confinement in a "maison de refuge" has been applied for by the authority of the commune, shall be admitted when they present themselves voluntarily, provided with the copy of the order of the burgomaster and aldermen authorising their admission.

Art. 4. When confinement in a "maison de refuge" has been requested by a communal authority, the costs of maintenance shall be charged to the commune.

Art. 5. Persons under twenty-one years of age confined in the "dépôts" shall be entirely separated from inmates above this age.

Art. 6. Able-bodied persons confined in a "dépôt" or "maison de refuge" shall be kept to the work prescribed in the institution.

They shall receive daily wages, except when withdrawn as a measure of discipline, on which a reserve shall be made in order to form their leaving fund.

The Minister of Justice will fix for the several classes in which the inmates are placed, and according to the labour on which they are employed, the rate of the wages and the amount of the reserve.

The leaving fund shall be paid partly in cash, partly in clothes and tools.

Art. 7. The routine and discipline of the institutions shall be regulated by royal decree.

The inmates may be subjected to solitary confinement.

Art. 8. Every person found in a state of vagrancy shall be arrested and brought before the police tribunal. Souteneurs shall be treated as vagrants.

The decision of the magistrate concerning souteneurs may be appealed against during the period provided for by the code of criminal instruction.

Art. 9. Any person found begging may be arrested and brought before the police tribunal.

Art. 10. Adult and able-bodied foreigners not residing in Belgium, who are found begging or in a state of vagrancy may be at once conducted to the frontier.

Art. 11. Persons arrested under the present law may be provisionally liberated by the Minister of Justice or by the tribunals.

Art. 12. The magistrates shall verify the identity, age, physical and mental condition, and the mode of life of individuals brought before the police tribunal for vagrancy or begging.

Art. 13. They shall place at the disposal of the Government, to be confined in a "dépôt" for at least two years and not more than seven years, able-bodied persons who, instead of working for their living, depend upon charity as professional beggars, and persons who from idleness, drunkenness, or immorality live in a state of vagrancy, and souteneurs.

Art. 14. The correctional courts may put at the disposal of the Government, to be confined in a "dépôt" for not less than a year or more than seven years, after the completion of their punishment, vagrants and beggars whom they sentence to imprisonment of less than a year for a breach of the penal law.

Art. 15. The Minister of Justice may liberate persons confined in a "dépôt" where he considers it useless to prolong their detention for the term fixed by the tribunal.

Art. 16. The magistrates may put at the disposal of the Government, to be confined in a "maison de refuge" persons found in a state of vagrancy or begging, without any of the circumstances mentioned in Article 13.

Art. 17. Persons confined in the "maisons de refuge" shall be set free when their leaving fund reaches the amount fixed by the Minister of Justice for the several classes in which the inmates are placed, and according to the trade they follow.

Art. 18. Persons confined in a "maison de refuge" shall not in any case be kept there above a year against their will. The Minister of Justice shall set free any person confined in a "maison de refuge" whose detention he considers to be no longer necessary.

Art. 19. The Government may at any time conduct to the frontier persons of foreign nationality who have been put at its disposal for detention in a "dépôt" or "maison de refuge."

Art. 20. The managers of the "maisons de refuge" shall give to the inmates, upon their leaving the institution, a certificate of their detention, with attestation of good behaviour, if necessary.

Art. 21. The cost of maintenance of persons confined in a "dépôt" under a decision of the judicial authority, shall be borne up to a third part by the commune of their settlement. The remainder shall be divided equally between the State and the province.

The same rule shall apply to the cost of maintenance of able-bodied persons confined in the "maisons de refuge."

When a person confined in a "dépôt" or "maison de refuge" under a decision of the judicial authority, has no settlement in Belgium, and his settlement cannot be ascertained, the cost of maintenance to be borne by the commune of settlement under the preceding paragraph, shall be borne by the province in which he has been arrested or brought before the court.

In the case of souteneurs the cost shall be borne by the commune in which they were pursuing their practices.

Art. 22. The share falling on the commune of the cost of maintenance of persons confined in the "dépôts" shall be charged to the communal budget.

The share falling on the commune of the cost of maintenance of persons confined in the "maisons de refuge" shall be borne by the almshouses and boards of charity, without prejudice to subsidies by the commune in case of the resources of these institutions being inadequate.

Art. 23. When a person placed at the disposal of the Government to be confined in a "maison de refuge" is declared by the managers to be non-able-bodied, the cost of maintenance, except in the case of injury or sickness occurring during the confinement, shall be borne, as long as the incapacity for work remains, by the commune of his settlement. The managers must give immediate notice of any such case to the commune of settlement.

Art. 24. When the person brought before the police tribunal under Article 8 or Article 9 of the present law is under eighteen years of age, the magistrate, if habitual begging or vagrancy is proved, shall order that he be placed at the disposal of the Government to be confined in a State charity school until he attains his majority.

Art. 25. When a person under the age of sixteen is convicted of having wilfully committed an offence punishable with a police penalty, the court, even in the case of a second offence, shall not sentence him to imprisonment or a fine, but shall record the offence and reprimand the child, or, if the nature and gravity of the offence or the circumstances of the case require it, shall place the child at the disposal of the Government until he comes of age.

Art. 26. The courts and tribunals may, when they sentence to imprisonment a person under the age of eighteen, direct that he shall remain at the disposal of the Government from the expiration of the sentence until he comes of age.

Art. 27. Persons placed at the disposal of the Government under Articles 25 and 26 of the present law shall be confined in a State charity school.

Art. 29. Persons under the age of thirteen at the date of entering a State charity school shall remain, during the whole term of their confinement, entirely separated from persons who enter at a more advanced age.

Similarly, persons entering a State charity school at an age of more than thirteen and less than sixteen years shall remain during the whole term of their confinement, separated from persons who enter at a more advanced age.

Art. 30. Persons placed at the disposal of the Government under Articles 24, 25 and 26 of the present law, or Article 72 of the Penal Code, may, after confinement in a State charity school, be placed in apprenticeship with a farmer or artisan; they may also with the assent of their parents or guardian be placed in a public or private institution for instruction.

Art. 31. Persons confined in State charity schools may be returned conditionally to their parents or guardian by direction of the Minister of Justice, if the parents or guardian afford sufficient guarantees of good character and are in a position to take care of the child.

Art. 32. Persons returned conditionally to their parents or guardian, as provided in the preceding Article, may until coming of age, be re-instated in a State charity school, by direction of the Minister of Justice, if it is considered that their residence with their parents or guardian has become dangerous to their morals. For the purposes of the rule established by Article 29 of the present law, they shall be deemed to have been placed at the disposal of the Government at the date on which they were re-instated. Appendix XXI.

Art. 34. The cost of maintenance and education of persons placed in State charity schools shall be charged to the State as regards one-half; and, as regards the other half, to the commune of settlement if they have been placed at the disposal of the Government by a decision of the judicial authority, or to the commune which has applied for their admission.

When a person confined in a State charity school under a decision of the judicial authority has no place of settlement in Belgium and when his place of settlement cannot be ascertained, the cost of maintenance and education charged to the commune of settlement by the preceding paragraph, shall be borne by the province in which he has been arrested or brought before the magistrate.

Art. 35. The cost of maintenance and education of children placed at the disposal of the Government under Articles 25 and 26 shall be borne by the State.

Art. 37. The King will fix annually the price per day of maintenance in the State charity schools, in the "maisons de refuge" and the "dépôts."

Art. 38. The cost of relief given in execution of the present law may be recovered from the persons relieved or from those liable for their maintenance. It may also be recovered from those who are responsible for the injury or illness which necessitates the relief.

Art. 39. The following are liable to imprisonment from eight days to three months:—

(1) A person who habitually causes a child under sixteen years of age to beg; and

(2) A person who procures a child under sixteen years of age or a cripple for the purpose of being used to excite public pity.

In the case of a second offence the penalty may be doubled.

Art. 42. The present law shall come into force on the 1st January, 1892.

APPENDIX XXII.

DÉPÔT DE MENDICITÉ AT MERXPLAS.

1. PARTICULARS AS TO EARNINGS, EMPLOYMENT, AND PUNISHMENT OF COLONISTS, CANTEEN, AND POPULATION OF COLONY.

(Translated from documents furnished by the Director of the Colony.)

EARNINGS OF COLONISTS.

1.—The earnings of the colonists depend upon the nature of their occupation.

The following scale of payments per day was approved by the Minister of Justice in 1903:—

(A) Able-bodied Inmates.

	Centimes.
Industrial work - - -	15	to 25
Farm work - - -	12	" 21
Domestic garden and other work - - -	12	" 18
Offices of trust or requiring special qualifications, such as writers, designers, telephonists, assistant overseers, hall-porters, store assistants, school assistants, hospital assistants, shepherds, stablemen, dairymen, butchers, porters, monitors, sacristans, etc. - - -	20	" 30
In the punishment or disciplinary sections - - -	10	" 15

As a general rule, the colonists in each class receive the minimum payment at first. The rate of payment can be increased by a monthly supplement under special circumstances, but the supplement must not exceed half the earnings nor a maximum of 4 francs. The amount of it is fixed by the Director. In addition a gratuity of 4 to 6 centimes daily can be granted to colonists who act as firemen and of 3 centimes to readers and choristers.

The inmates employed on industrial work are, as far as practicable, paid according to their work. In the case of piece work no supplement is paid.

(B.) Non-able bodied Inmates.

Canteen money, 3 centimes per day.

2.—The colonists are paid monthly one-half of their earnings and of any supplement, to spend as they like. The other half is retained by the management to form the "masse de sortie" (leaving fund), which is paid to the colonist on leaving the colony.

The greater portion of the sums paid to the colonists is expended by them in purchasing supplementary food stuffs at the canteen. Some of them, however, spend nothing, or hardly anything, and bring the money they have received to the pay-clerk, to be added to their "masse de sortie."

THE CANTEEN.

3.—During the year 1904, articles to the total value of 95,661 frs. 36 centimes were purchased by colonists at the canteen. Of this sum 92,742 frs. 32 centimes was spent as follows:—

	frs. centimes.
Tobacco - - -	33,012	60
Lard and bacon - - -	33,981	02
Herrings - - -	4,018	43
Cheese - - -	1,519	60
Coffee - - -	3,050	64
Eggs - - -	2,991	96
Bread - - -	8,818	62
Beer - - -	3,225	30
Butter - - -	104	00
Liquorice - - -	834	40
Flannel vests - - -	1,185	75

It will be seen that the favourite articles were tobacco, lard, and bacon.

EXPENSES.

4.—The Dépôt pays its own expense (buildings, food clothing, payments to staff and colonists, etc.) out of the following sources of revenue:—

(i) The sum of 66 centimes (6½d.) per day for each able-bodied colonist, paid by the State, the Province, and the Commune in equal shares (i.e., 22 centimes each).

(ii) The sum of 1 franc 50 centimes (1s. 2½d.) per day for each non-able bodied colonist whose state of health necessitates special care. This sum is contributed in the same manner.

(iii) The profits from the labour of the colonists. These three sources of revenue are sufficient for the expenses of the colony. The estimate of the receipts and expenditure for 1905 will be found at page 124.

POPULATION OF COLONY.

5.—On the 31st December, 1904, the number of colonists was 5,110, distributed as follows:—

Industrial - - -	1,751
Agricultural - - -	2,132
Domestic, etc. - - -	837
Unemployed - - -	390
	<hr/> 5,110

The official division of these 5,110 colonists was:—

1st Section - Souteneurs, incendiaries, and "immoraux" - - -	131
2nd " - Insubordinates, dangerous characters, and those who attempt to escape - - -	181
3rd " - Able-bodied, over 21 - - -	3,212
4th " - Inmates from 18 to 21 - - -	74
5th " - Infirm inmates who from their state of health require special care, but who can be useful in certain kinds of work - - -	1,043
6th " - Inmates detained for the first time, having no serious antecedents - - -	37
7th " - Incurables with no employment - - -	256
8th " - Sick under treatment in hospital - - -	90
9th " - Inmates in the punishment section - - -	86

TOTAL - 5,110

The following table shows the population of the colony on the 1st January in each year since 1889:—

1890 - - -	2,924	1898 - - -	3,918
1891 - - -	3,281	1899 - - -	4,035
1892 - - -	3,706	1900 - - -	3,907
1893 - - -	3,990	1901 - - -	4,115
1894 - - -	3,929	1902 - - -	4,702
1895 - - -	4,053	1903 - - -	4,869
1896 - - -	4,504	1904 - - -	5,025
1897 - - -	3,902	1905 - - -	5,110

The number of entries in each year since 1892 has risen as follows:—

1893 - - -	3,444	1899 - - -	3,018
1894 - - -	4,140	1900 - - -	3,547
1895 - - -	3,708	1901 - - -	4,348
1896 - - -	3,219	1902 - - -	4,515
1897 - - -	3,104	1903 - - -	4,649
1898 - - -	3,334	1904 - - -	4,615

EMPLOYMENT.

6.—Stoppage of work on account of bad weather is rare. In rainy weather gangs who are at work at a distance from the buildings have shelters where they can wait till they are able to resume work; otherwise they spend the day indoors. It is impracticable to arrange for other work on these few occasions.

On an average about fifty-seven colonists work in the fields under one overseer but the number in each brigade varies considerably according to the work they are engaged upon.

PUNISHMENTS.

7.—Colonists refusing to work are the exception. Cases occur, however, and these are punished by the Director according to the gravity of the offence. The punishments are as follows :—

- 3 to 60 days' ordinary cells with ordinary diet.
- 3 days' punishment cells with ordinary diet.
- 3 days' ordinary cells with bread and water diet.
- 3 days' punishment cells with bread and water diet.
- Confinement in the punishment quarter is given for serious insubordination.

As a rule the colonists return to their work as soon as their punishment is over.

DETENTION IN COLONY.

8.—The term of detention varies in each particular case, but on an average it is 16 months.

PRODUCE.

9.—The colony does not produce sufficient foodstuffs for its needs. In particular large quantities of potatoes and cereals have to be bought.

2. TIME-TABLE OF COLONY.

(a) Summer.
WEEK DAYS.	April 1st to Sept. 15th.	Sept. 16th to Oct. 31st.
Rise - - - - -	4.30 a.m.	5.0 a.m.
Distribution of Bread - - - - -	5.0 "	5.30 "
Work - - - - -	5.45 "	6.15 "
First Meal and Rest - - - - -	8.0 "	8.0 "
Resume Work - - - - -	8.30 "	8.30 "
Director's Report - - - - -	10.0 "	10.0 "
Second Meal - - - - -	10.40 "	10.40 " }
	11.40 "	11.40 " }
Work - - - - -	1.15 p.m.	1.15 p.m.
Rest - - - - -	4.0 "	4.0 "
Resume Work - - - - -	4.30 "	4.30 "
Third Meal - - - - -	6.45 "	6.45 " "
Bed - - - - -	7.0 "	7.0 "
Doctor's Visit - - - - -	7.0 a.m.	7.0 a.m.
SUNDAY.
General Medical Inspection - - - - -	After Mass	After Mass
Mass - - - - -	7.0 and 8.0 a.m.	7.0 and 8.0 a.m.
Vespers - - - - -	2.30 p.m.	2.30 p.m.
(b) Winter.
WEEK DAYS.	Nov. 1st to Feb. 15th.	Feb. 16th to Mar. 31st.
Rise - - - - -	6.0 a.m.	5.30 a.m.
Distribution of Bread ; Coffee - - - - -	6.30 "	6.0 "
Work - - - - -	7.15 "	6.45 "
Director's Report - - - - -	10.0 "	10.0 "
Second Meal - - - - -	10.40 "	10.40 " }
	11.40 "	11.40 " }
Resume Work - - - - -	1.15 p.m.	1.15 p.m.
Third Meal - - - - -	4.0 "	5.0 "
Bed - - - - -	4.30 "	5.30 "
Third Meal (Artisans) - - - - -	6.45 "	6.45 "
Bed " - - - - -	Directly afterwards	Directly afterwards
Doctor's Visit - - - - -	8.0 a.m.	8.0 a.m.
SUNDAY.
General Medical Inspection - - - - -	After Mass	After Mass
Mass - - - - -	8.0 and 9.0 a.m.	8.0 and 9.0 a.m.
Vespers - - - - -	2.0 p.m.	2.0 p.m.

3. ESTIMATE FOR THE YEAR 1905.

EXPENDITURE.

RECEIPTS.

	Francs.	English Equivalent £.	Francs.	Cen- times.	Centimes.	Francs.	English Equivalent £.
I.
Maintenance Grants— Able-bodied inmates, 3,500 at 66 centimes per day - - - 843,150 fcs. Non able-bodied, 1,000 at 1 fc. 50 centimes per day - - - 547,500 fcs.
II.
Sales of Farm Produce— Milk, vegetables, butter, sheep, pigs, etc., sold to private persons - - -
III.
Produce of Workshops— Sold to private persons, prisons, charitable institutions, and discharged colonists - - - - -
IV.
Various Receipts— From canteen - - - - - From sales of deceased inmates' effects, etc. - - - - - Monies earned and left behind by absconding colonists - - - - - Rent of sporting rights - - - - - Sundries - - - - -
Total Receipts - - - - -
V.
Salaries and Allowances to permanent staff, etc. - - - - - Office, Library, and School Expenses— Printing, paper, books, etc. - - - - - Buildings and Furniture— Repairs and upkeep of buildings - - - - - Ditto of furniture - - - - - New furniture - - - - - Maintenance and Clothing— Food for colonists and auxiliary staff - - - - - Clothing and bedding for overseers - - - - - Ditto for auxiliary staff - - - - - Ditto for colonists - - - - - Heating and lighting - - - - - Domestic utensils - - - - - Grants to Colonists (Earnings)— Artisans - - - - - Employed on farm and land - - - - - Employed on light work (including grants to infirm) - - - - - Canteen— Cost of articles for sale - - - - - Workshops— Cost of tools, raw material, &c. - - - - - Farm and Estate— Plants, seeds, etc. - - - - - Manures - - - - - Live stock - - - - - Straw and fodder - - - - - Veterinary services - - - - - Tax for watch dogs - - - - - Miscellaneous— Travelling expenses of officials - - - - - Postal expenses - - - - - Carriage of goods - - - - - Sundries - - - - - Total Expenditure - - - - -
VI.
Francs.
Cen- times.
Francs.
English Equivalent £.
IX.
Total Receipts - - - - -
" Expenditure - - - - -
Excess of Receipts over Expenditure - - - - -

4. DIETARY SCALES IN FORCE AT MERXPLAS.

Appendix XXII.

(a) Able-bodied Inmates, and Non-able bodied Inmates not requiring Special Care.

Articles composing the Food Preparations.		Measure of Quantity.	Quantity allowed per 100 Rations.
FIRST MEAL (daily):—
Rye Bread	- - - - -	lb.	148'50
Drink	{ Chicory - - - - -	"	5'50
	{ Skim Milk - - - - -	pint	7'04
SECOND MEAL :—
(a) (Sunday and Thursday.)
Meat Soup	{ Meat - - - - -	lb.	15'40
	{ Rice - - - - -	"	22'00
	{ Peas - - - - -	"	15'40
	{ Salt - - - - -	"	4'40
	{ Pepper - - - - -	"	0'05
	{ Vegetables - - - - -	"	4'40
(b) (Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday.)
Rice and Vegetable Soup	{ Lard - - - - -	"	1'65
	{ Rice - - - - -	"	22'00
	{ Peas - - - - -	"	15'40
	{ Salt - - - - -	"	4'40
	{ Pepper - - - - -	"	0'05
	{ Vegetables - - - - -	"	4'40
THIRD MEAL :—
(a) (Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.)
Vegetable Soup	{ Haricot beans - - - - -	"	55'00
	{ Lard - - - - -	"	1'65
	{ Salt - - - - -	"	3'30
	{ Pepper - - - - -	"	0'05
	{ Vegetables - - - - -	"	8'80
	{ Vinegar - - - - -	pint	1'76
(b) (Sunday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.)
Potato Soup	{ Potatoes - - - - -	lb.	286'00
	{ Vegetables - - - - -	"	17'60
	{ Bacon - - - - -	"	6'60
	{ Salt - - - - -	"	3'30
	{ Pepper - - - - -	"	0'05
	{ Onions - - - - -	"	2'20
	{ Vinegar - - - - -	pint	1'76

(b) Non-Able bodied Inmates whose State of Health necessitates Special Care.

Articles composing the Food Preparations.										Measure of Quantity.	Quantity per 100 Rations.
FIRST MEAL :—
Whole meal bread		-	-	-	-	-	-	-	lb.	110'00
Drink	{	Chicory	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	4'40
		Coffee	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	'44
		Skim milk	-	-	-	-	-	-	pint	7'04
SECOND MEAL :—
(a)	{	Meat	-	-	-	-	-	-	lb.	44'00
		Rice	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	6'60
		Vegetables	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	22'00
		Potatoes	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	114'40
		Salt	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	4'40
		Pepper	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	0'06
Beer	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	gallon	11'00
or
(b)	{	Pork	-	-	-	-	-	-	lb.	44'00
		Peas	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	44'00
		Vegetables	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	22'00
		Salt	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	4'40
		Pepper	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	0'06
Beer	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	gallon	11'00
THIRD MEAL :—
Potato Soup	{	Potatoes	-	-	-	-	-	-	lb.	275'00
		Lard	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	1'65
		Vegetables	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	11'00
		Salt	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	4'40
		Pepper	-	-	-	-	-	-	"	0'06
Beer	{	Vinegar	-	-	-	-	-	-	pint	1'76
			-	-	-	-	-	-	gallon	11'00

(c) Sick Inmates.

Articles composing the Food Preparations.		Measure of Quantity.	Quantities per 100 Rations per day.										Special Dietary.
			Ordinary Dietary.						Portion.
			Low Diet.		Half Portion.			Portion.
			White Bread.	Broth.	White Bread.	Broth.	Milk.	White Bread.	Broth.	Milk or Beer.	Soup.	Milk.	White Bread.	Eggs.	Wine.	Lard.
White Bread	-	lb.	33	-	55	-	-	-	55	-	-	-	55	-	-	-
Milk	-	pint	-	-	-	-	-	176	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Beer	-	"	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Meat	-	lb.	-	55	-	55	-	-	55	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Vegetables	-	"	-	6·6	-	6·6	-	-	6·6	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Salt	-	"	-	2·2	-	2·2	-	-	2·2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Potatoes	-	"	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Onions	-	"	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Pepper	-	"	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Vinegar	-	pint	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Lard	-	lb.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	4·4
Eggs	-	number	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	200	-	-
Wine	-	pint	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	35·20	-

The allowance of these articles is at the Doctor's discretion. They are only given with the Low Diet or the Half Portion.

According to Medical Order.

APPENDIX XXIII.

GERMAN INSTITUTIONS.

(Papers handed in by Mr Dawson.)

1. DIETARY IN BENNINGHAUSEN WORKHOUSE.

Morning.—Coffee with milk and bread.

Noon.—Peas, beans, or lentils with potatoes; vegetable soup with potatoes; cabbage or turnips, with potatoes (the portion of potatoes allowed is 750 grammes for men and 660 grammes for women); or fresh fish and potatoes.

Evening.—Soup—made with rye or wheaten flour, bread, oats, buckwheat, rice or potatoes.

Of bread 550 grammes are allowed to each man and 400 grammes to each woman daily.

EXTRAS.

At Easter, Whitsuntide, Christmas, and on the Emperor's birthday, beef or pork, with beer, is given.

Twice a week 100 grammes of meat may be served to men and 80 grammes to women instead of the fat which enters into the noon meal.

Once a week cheese (100 grammes) is served to men and women, and once also a salted herring.

Appendix
XXIII.

2. LIFE IN A GERMAN WORKHOUSE.

The workhouse which serves for the reception of the tramps, mendicants, and loafers of the Province of Westphalia in Prussia, and which may be regarded as representative of German Houses of Correction of this type in general, is situated at Benninghausen, a village eight or ten miles from Soest. The entire area of the estate is about twelve English acres, which, however, excludes a farm formerly attached to the workhouse, and now worked as a separate provincial undertaking. In the books of the workhouse the value of the land is placed at £1,022, while the buildings are insured for £19,950, and the furniture, equipment, and material for £5,329. The whole of the prisoners are kept to work of a kind suited to their strength, capacity and sex, their employment being determined by the director and the resident doctor together. The principal methods of employment are the following:—

(1.) Farm work on the provincial estate at Eichelborn, for which purpose men are farmed out as required.

(2.) Building and earthworks in connection with provincial institutions and undertakings.

(3.) A series of industries carried on within the walls of the workhouse.

(4.) Works on the buildings, both within and without.

(5.) Domestic and culinary work such as baking (for the workhouse and two other provincial institutions), washing, cleaning, sewing, etc.

The various employments detailed in the last Report under Nos. 3 and 4 were:—Locksmithry, joinery and carpentry, basket and chair making, tinning, mason's work, roofing, painting and plastering, weaving and spooling, tailoring, boot and shoe making, saddlery, book-binding, cigar making, machine turning, and repairs to tools and implements. The weaving department produced 45,547 metres of stuff, the tailoring department produced 158 complete suits and 2,890 single garments, the sewing department 5,099 bed coverlets, towels, shirts, aprons, handkerchiefs, neckerchiefs, etc.; the shoemaking department 748 pairs of shoes, the carpentry department 1,319 articles of furniture, and so forth. The total value of the goods produced and of the labour farmed during the year was £6,164, which more than covered the cost of food and clothing.

The prisoner's day begins during the summer months (April 1 to September 30) at 4.30 and during winter and on Sundays and festivals at 5.30. The hours are divided as follows—

4.30 a.m. At the sound of the bell every prisoner has to rise, dress, and wash, and in a quarter of an hour must have arranged his bedclothes and be ready to leave the dormitory.

4.45 a.m.—Assembling in the corridors the prisoners are numbered, after which (so runs the "Order of the Day") "they shall offer up at word of command (auf Commando) a silent prayer." Then the field labourers, the implement room workers, and the bakers go to the dining rooms, and the weavers, tailors, shoemakers, cigar makers, and the female inmates to the workrooms, there to begin at once their work.

4.50 a.m.—The bell sounds for the morning meal (soup and bread), the inmates going to the same in bands in charge of the overseers.

9.0 a.m.—Work is then continued without interruption until 9.0, when there is a pause for a quarter of an hour for bread and beer.

11.40 a.m.—A pause for dinner, which is partaken like breakfast in bands. (For the outside labourers a different order is followed.)

12.0 to 1.0 p.m.—A pause, during which the prisoners have at least half an hour in the open air.

4.0 p.m.—A pause of a quarter of an hour for bread and beer.

7.15 p.m. (in winter and on Sundays and festivals, 6.15).—The bell rings for supper, and work ends for the day.

7.50 p.m.—The prisoners are examined for the possession of forbidden articles, and at 7.55 they are marched off to bed.

The work-day thus runs to about twelve hours in summer, though in the Berlin Workhouse (Rummelsburg) it is only ten hours. But while, as a rule, the hours are the same for all, work is not altogether measured by time, but according to the capacity of the individual inmate, and where the tasks imposed are unfulfilled at the close of the day, owing to evident sloth or insubordination, some sort of punishment follows. On the other hand a reward is offered as an encouragement to diligence, the money so earned being given to the owner on his discharge.

3. LIFE IN A GERMAN LABOUR COLONY.

The German Labour Colonies are of two kinds—the agricultural and industrial colonies, the latter represented as yet by two institutions only, those at Berlin and Magdeburg. In the employment of the Berlin colonists three methods are followed:—(1) They are set to trades and occupations on the premises, under the general oversight of the master, assisted by foremen chosen from their own number by the test of capacity and steadiness. (2) Their labour is farmed to outside employers, who provide raw materials and in some cases tools, and pay a fixed rate per head and hour or per output, the work being here also done on the premises. (3) There is also employment outside the colony, either on the farming principle or at the direct instance of the institution itself. This is a plan for which every season of the year in turn affords abundant scope, though a serious disadvantage is the absence of proper control. The outside occupations for which the colonists are most commonly told off are those of agriculture, horticulture, forest and street work, and domestic and house work, such as coal carrying, wood-cutting, carpet-beating, snow-clearing, furniture removing, etc.

Appendix
XXIII.

The principal source of work and also of revenue, however, is the first of these classes. The handicrafts followed are naturally such as require as small an investment of capital as possible, together with a minimum amount of training and skill in the workman, though in the interest of variety these conditions have to some degree to be departed from. The productive department of the Berlin colony trades largely in brushes and besoms, which are sold to dealers, manufactories, breweries, inns, hospitals and other wholesale consumers ; in simple carpentry, including, besides furniture packing, boxes for cheese, chocolate, wine, and other bulky goods ; in straw cases for bottles, and other straw work ; and firewood of all sorts and sizes, which is retailed at the house doors in the city. In addition, there is a department for letter and circular writing and envelope addressing, and for the delivery in all parts of Berlin of prospectuses, trade addresses, and private letters. A colonist's bare keep costs the association from 4d. to 5d. per day, and this he is expected to earn. As a rule he earns more, and the surplus is put to his credit in a savings bank, from which he may draw for extras, in the form of clothes, etc.

The week-day routine is fixed by the " House Order " and is carefully enforced. Between the times of rising, 4.30 a.m., and of retiring to bed, 9.30 p.m., the colonists work eleven hours, six days a week, during the greater part of the year, for in winter the order is somewhat relaxed. There are four regular meals, at 6.0 a.m., 9.30 a.m., 12.0 a.m., and 7.0 p.m., besides an interval for coffee at 4.0. p.m. The work day ends at 7.0, and before bedtime is called an hour and a half is allowed for recreation and reading and for games. Books and periodicals are supplied in sufficiency. Singing, too, is cultivated. The day is begun and ended with common worship, and on Sundays and church festivals, which are observed as holidays, there is regular divine service, with celebrations of Holy Communion at intervals during the year.

Of the admissions during one year one hundred and one were agricultural labourers, eighty-one factory operatives, seventy-one artisans, sixty joiners, thirty-six locksmiths, twenty-eight painters, twenty-four clerks, twenty-six cabinet-makers, twenty-one shoemakers, twenty-one masons, seventeen tailors, eleven bakers, eleven barbers, eleven waiters, eleven smiths, ten gardeners, and ten paperhangers, and seventy-one other trades and occupations were represented by the remainder who included three schoolmasters, four farmers, a clergyman, and a lawyer. If possible, work is found for the colonists before they are discharged, for a labour registry is carried on in connection with every labour colony, though this is not practicable in a large percentage of cases.

WILLIAM HARBUTT DAWSON.

APPENDIX XXIV.

SALVATION ARMY INSTITUTIONS. •

(Papers handed in by Mr. David C. Lamb.)

1. SUMMARISED ANALYSIS OF THE PARTICULARS RECORDED OF 880 MEN RECEIVED AND DISCHARGED FROM THE SALVATION ARMY (MAIN) COLONY AT HADLEIGH, IN ESSEX, DURING THE YEARS 1901 AND 1902.

(CASUALS STAYING LESS THAN ONE MONTH WERE RECEIVED AT A SEPARATE BRANCH OF THE COLONY, AND TREATED APART FROM THE MAIN COLONY. THEY ARE NOT INCLUDED IN THIS RETURN.)

Age.

	Per cent.
There were under 25 years of age - - -	20
There were over 25 and under 30 years of age	12
There were over 30 and under 40 years of age	28
There were over 40 and under 50 years of age	28
There were over 50 years of age - - -	12

Locality of Birth.

	Per cent.
London (Greater) - - - - -	50
East Counties - - - - -	12
West Counties - - - - -	5
South Counties - - - - -	7
Midland Counties - - - - -	14
North Counties - - - - -	4
Scotland and Ireland - - - - -	6
Abroad - - - - -	2

Social Status and Occupations.

3 per cent. could not read or write.
15 per cent. were from the professional and commercial classes.
12 per cent. were skilled mechanics.
35 per cent. were skilled labourers.
40 per cent. were unskilled labourers.

Over eighty different occupations were recorded. Eight per cent. of the men had been at one time connected with the land industry; while the fact that sailors and tailors, printers and carpenters, clerks and musicians, shoemakers and barbers, barmen and butchers, schoolmasters and miners, teachers and travellers, doctors and solicitors, etc., are amongst the men received, would show that all walks of life are represented, and how easily an interesting and largely self-contained colony could be established.

Reasons for destitute condition (given by the men themselves).

22 per cent. ascribe it directly to intemperate habits.

20 per cent. ascribe it directly to misfortune, loss of tools, weather, crime, illness, accident, etc.

58 per cent. simply could not get work.

A more particular classification would probably result in two-thirds of these (58 per cent.) being classed as destitute, because of their more or less intemperate habits.

The General Results of their stay (averaging about eight months), during which period every man gained in weight and improved physically very much, is shown by the following table of discharges:—

Unsatisfactory.

	Per cent.
Dismissed for misconduct, laziness, repeated drunkenness, insubordination - - -	6
Left without notice, general conduct "bad," indifferent, shiftless character - - -	12
Total - - -	18

Unfortunate.

	Per cent.
Continued incapable, and transferred to other Salvation Army institutions, where easier or more suitable conditions prevail, sent to infirmary, etc. - - - - -	5

Satisfactory.

	Per cent.
Emigrated, joined H.M. Army or Navy -	4
Restored to friends - - - - -	6
To situations found for them before leaving the colony - - - - -	10
To look for work with fair prospects after satisfactory conduct, and giving notice etc. - - - - -	18
Total - - -	38
Left without giving notice after a prolonged stay and uniform good conduct - - -	39
Grand Total - - -	100

2. STATEMENT RESPECTING COLONISTS RECEIVED AT HADLEIGH COLONY DURING THE TWO YEARS ENDED 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1904.

Year.	Total Number of Colonists received.	Whence coming.					Duration of stay.							Previous admissions.					Cause of leaving Colony.
		Sent by Boards of Guardians.	From Salvation Army Shelters in London.	On their own application or sent by their friends.	From Police Courts.	Not included in 4 preceding Columns.	14 days or under.	1 month or under.	2 months or under.	3 months or under.	4 months or under.	6 months or under.	More than 6 months.	Previously admitted.	One previous admission.	Two previous admissions.	Three previous admissions.	Four or more previous admissions.	To go to situations found by themselves.	To go to situations found by Colony.	Dismissed for bad behaviour or incapacity.	Ill-health.	Left of own accord.	Other reasons.
1902-3	-	-	51	20	166	2	—	61	43	22	24	20	6	63	52	47	5	—	40	22	35	5	127	2
1903-4	-	-	91	117	70	6	—	60	45	33	22	12	17	95	40	33	5	2	—	49	32	49	11	112	—

NOTE.—The actual number of Colonists received during these periods is considerably smaller than that usually dealt with in a year's work at Hadleigh, by reason of special arrangements made for the reception during the winter of men not regarded as Colonists from the Mansion House Fund and other public bodies.

3. RETURN OF DISCHARGES OF MEN FROM HADLEIGH COLONY FOR THE YEARS 1903 AND 1904, SHOWING PERCENTAGES OF SATISFACTORY AND UNSATISFACTORY CASES OF THE 231 AND 253 MEN DISCHARGED IN THOSE YEARS.

Appendix XXIV.

Unsatisfactory.	1903.	1904.	Satisfactory.	1903.	1904.
	Per cent.	Per cent.		Per cent.	Per cent.
Dismissed for misconduct, laziness, repeated drunkenness, insubordination. Left without notice, general conduct "bad," indifferent, shiftless character - - - - -	15	19	Emigrated, joined His Majesty's Army or Navy - - - - -	5	7
			Restored to friends - - - - -	5	3
			To situations found for them before leaving the Colony - - - - -	10	13
			To look for work with fair prospects after satisfactory conduct, and giving notice, etc. - - - - -	20	18
			Left without giving notice, after a prolonged stay and uniform good conduct - - - - -	42	36
Unfortunate.
Continued incapable, and transferred to other Salvation Army institutions where easier or more suitable conditions prevail, sent to infirmary, etc. - - - - -	3	4	READMISSIONS TO HADLEIGH COLONY. The number of "readmittances" during 1902 and 1903 was 52, of which number 33 had been previously discharged as satisfactory and 19 as unsatisfactory. During 1903 and 1904 the number of readmittances was 40, of which number 27 had been previously discharged as satisfactory and 13 as unsatisfactory.

4.—DIETARY.

(a) Hadleigh Farm Colony.

—	Breakfast.	Dinner.	Tea.
Monday - - -	Tea, bread and butter, corned beef, porridge.	Roast and stew, potatoes, haricot beans, tart.	Tea, bread and butter, salmon.
Tuesday - - -	Tea, bread and butter, cold bacon.	Roast and stew, potatoes, cabbage, plain pudding and jam.	Tea, bread and butter, brawn.
Wednesday - - -	Tea, bread and butter, fish, porridge.	Roast and stew, potatoes and peas, currant roll.	Tea, bread and butter, corned beef.
Thursday - - -	Tea, bread and butter, cold meat.	Boiled bacon and stew, potatoes, cabbage, tart.	Tea, bread and butter, salmon.
Friday - - -	Tea, bread and butter, bacon, porridge.	Roast and stew, potatoes and peas, plain pudding and marmalade.	Tea, bread and butter, brawn.
Saturday - - -	Tea, bread and butter, corned beef.	Roast and stew, potatoes, haricot beans, college pudding.	Tea, bread and butter, cheese and cake.
Sunday - - -	As per usual.

(b) City Colony Workshop—A Superior "Elevator."

—	Breakfast.	Dinner.	Tea.	Supper.
Monday - -	Cold flank, tea, bread and butter.	Hot roast beef, two vegetables, pudding, and half-pint tea.	Bread and butter, eggs, tea.	Soup and bread.
Tuesday - -	Corned beef, tea, bread and butter.	Cold roast beef, savoy, mashed potatoes, pudding, and half-pint tea.	Bloaters, tea, bread and butter.	Cheese and bread.
Wednesday -	Brawn, tea, bread and butter.	Mutton, haricots, two vegetables, puddings, and half-pint tea.	Kippers, tea, bread and butter.	Cheese and bread.
Thursday - -	Kippers, tea, bread and butter.	Hot roast mutton, two vegetables, pudding, and half-pint tea.	Brawn, tea, bread and butter.	Soup and bread.
Friday - -	Cold flank, tea, bread and butter.	Mutton, haricots, two vegetables, pudding, and half-pint tea.	Bloaters, tea, bread and butter.	Cheese and bread.
Saturday - -	Kippers, tea, bread and butter.	Hot roast mutton, savoys, mashed potatoes, pudding, and half-pint tea.	Cold flank, tea, bread and butter.	Soup and bread.
Sunday - -	Eggs, tea, bread and butter.	Steak pie, two vegetables, pudding, and half-pint tea.	Bread and butter, haddocks, tea.	Cheese and bread.

—	Breakfast.	Dinner.	Tea.	Supper.
Monday - -	Porridge twice a week ; tea, bread and butter, or marmalade.	Cold meat, baked rice puddings with fruit in them.	Bread and butter, dripping, or jam.	Bread and butter, cocoa and soup.
Tuesday - -	Do.	Meat and potato pies, peas or beans as second vegetables.	Do.	Do.
Wednesday -	Do.	Joint, roast mutton, two vegetables, boiled bread puddings and sauce.	Do.	Do.
Thursday - -	Do.	Boiled beef, potatoes and pease pudding, fruit pudding or rolled jam or treacle pudding.	Do.	Do.
Friday - -	Do.	Soup, boiled fig pudding.	Do.	Do.
Saturday - -	Do.	Joint, two vegetables, suet pudding, plenty of gravy.	Do.	Do.
Sunday - -	Cold ham or stewed fruit, tea, bread and butter.	Cold meat, steamed potatoes, green peas or beans, fruit tarts or boiled fruit puddings and sauce.	Bread and butter, cake, jam and tea.	Do.

5. (1) RETURN OF QUANTITIES OF FOOD CONSUMED AT THE DINING HALL, HADLEIGH COLONY, DURING THE MONTH OF MAY, 1905.

Average number of men fed daily—156½.

Tea - - - -	170½ lbs.
Sugar - - - -	1,220½ "
Flour - - - -	537 "
Baking powder - -	26 "
Butter - - - -	485 "
Fresh meat - - -	2,957 "
Ham and bacon - -	201½ "
Jam - - - -	334 "
Marmalade - - -	280 "
Currants and sultanas	62 "
Lemon peel - - -	1 "
Tinned milk - - -	43 tins
Cheese - - - -	40 lbs.
Bread - - - -	6,040 "
Potatoes - - - -	3,472 "
Eggs - - - -	1,121 "
Pickles - - - -	98 "
Oatmeal - - - -	152 "
Rice - - - -	75 "
Haricot beans - -	74 "
Sausages - - - -	192 "
Cabbages - - - -	9 (Tally of 60)
Tinned salmon - -	53 tins
Fresh milk - - -	108½ gallons
German sausage -	122¼ lbs.
Brawn - - - -	201 "
Corned beef - - -	124 "
Peas - - - -	30 "
Spinach - - - -	4 bushels

Also salt, pepper, mustard, spice, etc.

(2) RETURN OF QUANTITIES OF FOOD USED AT THE SPA ROAD ELEVATOR.

Article of food.	Quantities used for three months.	Quantities used for six months.
Bread - - -	15,980 lbs.	32,101 lbs.
Flour - - -	1,856 "	3,617 "
Tea - - -	394 "	795 "
Sugar - - -	2,918 "	5,089 "
Peas - - -	451 "	897 "
Beans - - -	439 "	1,025 "
Tinned meat -	98 "	224 "
Oatmeal - - -	575 "	1,234 "
Bacon - - -	396 "	2,067 "
Rice - - -	504 "	988 "
Potatoes - -	6 tons 11 cwt.	12 tons 16 cwt.
Fresh meat -	905 stone (8 lbs)	1,800 stone
Fish - - -	144 boxes	271 boxes.

The daily average number of men for the three months was 153½ with an additional eighteen for dinner only five days per week.

The daily average number of men for the six months was 154½, with an additional twenty-one for dinner only, five days per week.

(3) CONSUMPTION OF FOOD IN A WOMEN'S HOME.

Total quantity of all food consumed in a women's home containing 45 women and 10 officers for six months (26 weeks) was as follows:—

Meat - - - -	1,560 lbs.
Vegetables - - -	3,380 "
Bread and flour -	9,022 "
Tea - - - -	169 "
Cocoa - - - -	156 "
Sugar - - - -	1,066 "
Oatmeal - - - -	728 "
Cereals - - - -	1,300 "
Dried fruits - - -	312 "
Butter - - - -	520 "
Jam - - - -	208 "
Milk - - - -	2,236 qts.

6. MEMORANDUM OF COST.

(a) Hadleigh.

Capital outlay roughly £140,000, including buildings, working stock, &c. Accommodation provided under this for 400 colonists and thirty families including employees: say a total of 500 people, equal to £300 per head.

This includes the hospital and also educational facilities. It might reasonably be expected that a new colony could be fitted up at a cost of £250 per head—a little more or less according to the character and size of the buildings.

Land has cost from £20 to £200 per acre. Average, including buildings, about £40—this for 2,000 acres of land and 1,000 acres of foreshore.

The number of colonists dealt with during the last three years has been less than usual, because of provision having been made for the reception of men from the Mansion House Committee, these men not being regarded as colonists; the average number of colonists has been 250.

Maintenance.

The cost of maintenance for 250 colonists works out as follows:—

For food, lodging, laundry and medical s. d.
attendance per week per man - - -	11 0
For home supervision, management, &c. -	2 0
Total - - -	13 0

In this figure provision is made for interest and depreciation on such part of the establishment that would be used for the purposes of housing and feeding the men.

No provision, however, is made in the above for gratuities or for clothing.

Absolutely no value is attached to the men's labour, which probably is worth nothing to begin with—in fact the cost of maintenance will be more than the above figure at the commencement—the men will be in poor health, badly clad, &c.

In helpable cases, at the end of six months, a man would probably be earning something towards his clothing, &c., and perhaps something towards the cost of this 13s. Overtime could be given to the man and provision made—by the reserving of certain monies which he may earn—for the man's emigration or his restoration to civil life, or piece work might be given to him where he would be paid exactly what he did earn. It is here where practical illustration could be given to the men as to spending money as well as earning it.

This is the lesson of Hadleigh, and under fair average conditions might reasonably be reproduced in any part of the country.

Dormitory accommodation could be erected if required at £7 to £11 per head according to the class of the building.

(b) City Colony.

While we have had certain serious disadvantages at Hadleigh, such as the lack of water, loss amongst the cattle, adverse markets, &c., in the City Colony by reason of the favourable situation, choice of industry, and the other advantages peculiar to the City, we have at present a condition that we could not reproduce.

An average condition might be set forth with 200 men as follows:—

	s.	d.
Cost of food, raw material - - -	4	6
Lighting, cooking, heating, &c. - - -	2	6
Rent, rates, taxes, and cost of administration	3	3
Total cost, per week, per man - - -	10	3

This is, if anything, a favourable estimate, and the man's earnings—at present about 8s. per week—might be affected any day by a fall in the market or by other circumstances.

The loss on above equals 2s. 3d. per week per man, and does not include interest on capital or depreciation. Capital charges.

It could not be safely estimated to provide lodging for the man and a place in which to work, with tools, stock in trade, &c., at a less cost than £100 per head.

7. HADLEIGH FARM COLONY ACCOUNTS.

In the balance sheet for September 30th, 1904, of the "Darkest England" scheme, the following items are entered as in respect of the Farm Colony:—

ASSETS.

	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
By Freehold and Leasehold Property—							Brought forward				114,116	14	3
Freehold Land situate at Hadleigh in Essex, and Buildings thereon, as on Sept. 30th, 1903 ...	83,130	4	10				By Machinery and Plant
Additions during the year	2,488	19	8				Farmimplements, Machinery, Waggons and Tools as on Sept. 30th, 1903 ...	10,874	19	2
	85,619	4	6				Additions during the year	414	8	10
Less Depreciation on Buildings ...	963	2	1					11,289	8	0
				84,656	2	5	Less Depreciation ...	1,161	0	3
" Wharf, Tramway and Railway, as on Sept. 30th, 1903	12,750	10	9								10,128	7	9
Less Depreciation ...	270	10	9				" Furniture and Fittings—
				12,480	0	0	Furniture and Fittings as on Sept. 30th, 1903 ...	907	2	6½
" Brickworks :							Less transfer to City Colony	62	13	8
Cost of Kilns, Sheds, &c., and Initial Expenses of Opening up Brickfields, as on Sept. 30th, 1903 ...	18,286	9	4					844	8	10½
Additions during the year	215	7	3				Less Depreciation ...	138	15	9½
	18,501	16	7								705	13	1
Less Depreciation ...	1,521	4	9				" Stock—
				16,980	11	10	As valued by independent professional Valuers and sectional Managers ...	14,542	16	7
											14,542	16	7
											£139,493	11	8

7. HADLEIGH FARM COLONY ACCOUNTS.—continued.
Working Account for the Year ended September 30th, 1904.

Appendix
XXIV.

Dr.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	Cr.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
The Farm and Dairy Section—							The Farm and Dairy Section
To Stock, Sept. 30th, 1903	5,138	15	0				By Sales (including supplies
„ Purchases, Wages, and							to other Sections) ...	4,907	12	4½
Expenses	5,343	0	6½				„ Stock, as per valuation,
							Sept. 30th, 1904 ...	4,951	17	8
				10,481	15	6½					9,859	10	0½
The Market Garden and							The Market Garden and
Nursery Section—							Nursery Section—
To Stock, Sept. 30th, 1903	4,042	12	3				By Sales (including sup-
„ Purchases, Wages, and							plies to other Sections)	3,490	0	11
Expenses	4,753	2	6				„ Stock, as per valuation,
							Sept. 30th, 1904 ...	4,288	16	0
				8,795	14	9					7,778	16	11
The Poultry Section—							The Poultry Section—
To Stock, Sept. 30th, 1903	828	13	0				By Sales (including sup-
„ Purchases, Wages, and							plies to other Sections)	956	7	1
Expenses	1,534	19	10				„ Stock, as per valuation,
							Sept. 30th, 1904 ...	1,028	10	9
				2,363	12	10					1,984	17	10
The Colony Market—							The Colony Market—
To Stock, Sept. 30th, 1903	111	12	0				By Sales	9,714	19	4
„ Purchases, Wages, and							„ Stock, as per valuation,
Expenses	9,599	9	5				Sept. 30th, 1904 ...	160	18	11
				9,711	1	5					9,875	18	3
The Industrial Section—							The Industrial Section—
To Stock, Sept. 30th, 1903	3,091	6	11½				By Sales (including supplies
„ Purchases, Wages, and							to other Sections) :—
Expenses :—							Brickmaking	3,728	19	11½
Brickmaking	4,714	12	4				Traffic and Works
Traffic and Works							Department	122	12	10
Department	11	8	4				Dining Room and Home
Dining Room and Home							Section	4,750	3	6½
Section	4,326	1	7				Colonial Stores and
Colonial Stores and							Bakery	3,785	17	6
Bakery	3,702	4	9				Stock, as on Sept. 30th,
							1904	3,937	12	2
				15,845	13	11½					16,325	6	0
The Inebriates' Home—							The Inebriates' Home—
To Stock, Sept. 30th, 1903	175	16	2½				By Receipts	1,564	9	5
Maintenance and Ex-							„ Stock as on Sept. 30th,
penses	1,563	0	11				1904	175	1	1
				1,738	17	1½					1,739	10	6
To Administration and Man-							By Rent of Barracks and agement Expenses:							Cottages (sub-let) ...	296	0	0
Printing, Stationery, Post-							„ Receipts from Poor
age, Telegrams, Travelling,							Law Guardians for
Carriage, Repairs and							Special Cases	419	0	2½
Expenses of Colony							„ Grant from Central
Stables	568	4	3				Fund	2,000	0	0
Salaries and Wages (7							„ Balance carried to the persons)	548	11	2				Central Fund In-
„ Legal Charges and							come and Expendi-
Auditors' Fee	123	3	7				ture Account	2,886	6	4
„ Tithes, Rates, Taxes,											5,601	6	6½
and Insurance	1,072	19	7
„ Amount written off Preliminary Expenses a/c,
Improvements a/c and
Bad Debts	1,915	11	10½
				4,228	10	5½
				£53,165	6	1					£53,165	6	1

8. HADLEIGH FARM—PRODUCE IN 1904.

The value of the produce at Hadleigh was :—

Agricultural - - - - £9,354
Industrial (mostly bricks) - - - £3,852

£13,206

Estimated value of labour in dining-room, laundry, bakery, stores, &c. - - - -

£4,268

Total - - - - £17,474

The produce from the market garden included :—

Strawberries - - - - 13,500 lbs.
Gooseberries - - - - 46,480 „
Apples - - - - 76,640 „
Plums - - - - 33,000 „
Celery - - - - 45,000 heads
Lettuce - - - - 111,740 „
Rhubarb - - - - 28,000 bundles
Onions - - - - 130 tons

DISPOSITION OF COLONISTS AND EMPLOYEES
AT HADLEIGH COLONY.

250 Colonists, 50 employees. Hours of work :—

Summer, 6 a.m. to 6 p.m.; winter, 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., when possible.

(Women and children are employed by the hour and on piece-work during the fruit season in gathering and packing fruit and vegetables for the market, and are not included in this calculation.)

Five of the employees are engaged in work not incidental to the colony.

Fifteen of the fifty are ex-colonists retained for special ability, &c.

Thirty are engaged because of their general qualifications to meet the requirements of the colony's work.

The total is distributed as follows :—

Farm and dairy - - - - -	42
Poultry farm - - - - -	7
Market garden and orchards - - - - -	98
Brickfields - - - - -	54
Special work - - - - -	15
Stores bakery - - - - -	8
Carpentry, laundry, shoemaker, blacksmith, &c. - - - - -	27
Dining-room and house department - - - - -	12
Head office - - - - -	7
	300

9. LONDON REFUGES AND SHELTERS FOR MEN.

Accommodation.

Number in shelters (London only) - - -	2,417
Number in Workshops „ „ - - -	544

Charges for Accommodation in Shelters.

834 at 2d. per head.
190 „ 3d. „ „
389 „ 4d. „ „
793 „ 5d. „ „
78 „ 6d. „ „
133 staff.

Total 2,417.

The charge of 4d. in some instances covers supper, bed, and breakfast.

Nature of Work in Workshops.

Paper and rag sorting, wood-chopping, carpentry work, mattress-making, clerking, scrubbing, cleaning, cooking, tin-working, canvassing.

Number of Hours of Work.

Fifty-three hours per week.

Scales of remuneration; board and lodgings; cash grants in addition vary from 6d. to 7s. per week.

Average Number of Men in:

Shelters, 2,417; workshops, 468.

WOMEN'S REFUGES AND HOMES IN AND AROUND LONDON. Appendix XXIV.

Accommodation.

Number in shelters, 270; Number in homes, workshops, &c., 340.

Charges for Accommodation in Shelters.

Number at 2d. per head, 270.

Nature of Work.

Housework, laundry, knitting and needlework.

Number of Hours of Work.

8 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Scales of Remuneration.

Board and lodging, clothing, and small sums as conduct money.

Average Number of Women in:

Shelters, 270; homes, 340.

Note.—Similar accommodation is provided in Provincial towns of England and other parts of the British Isles for 450 women and children.

PROVINCIAL REFUGES AND SHELTERS.

Accommodation.

Bradford - - - - -	244
Bristol - - - - -	157
Leeds - - - - -	244
Manchester - - - - -	200
Total - - - - -	845

Average number sheltered per night, 760.

The prices charged being 2d., 3d., 4d., and 6d. per night.

Average number employed in elevators and workshops per day, 124.

Nature of work:

Paper and rag sorting, wood-chopping, clerking, scrubbing, cleaning, cooking.

10. NOTES FOR GUIDANCE AND CONSIDERATION IN THE ESTABLISHING OF LAND AND INDUSTRIAL COLONIES FOR PROFESSIONAL VAGRANTS AND "UNEMPLOYABLES."

(From the Pamphlet "The Vagrant and the Unemployable.")

1. PARLIAMENTARY powers will be required to give effect to some of these suggestions—particularly the power of detention, and it is urged that the necessary legislation be promoted at once.

2. Colonies might be established and conducted by county councils, boards of guardians (singly or grouped), or they might be founded and controlled by religious and philanthropic societies—public authorities having power to contribute to the establishment and maintenance of such (as under the Inebriates Acts).

3. We would strongly favour the colony managed by a religious society, on account of the elements of self-sacrifice in the workers thereby secured, and the greater freedom of appeal to the religious sentiment of the colonist; but we consider that public authorities also should have power to establish and manage colonies.

4. The classes to be provided for might be described as beggars, vagrants, inebriates, inefficient, undesirables—the "unemployable" and the "won't works" who may not have committed any specific crime.

5. Admission to the colony would be on conviction before a magistrate or at petty sessions; or a person on his or her own application before a magistrate might, if the magistrate is satisfied that the applicant is a suitable person for colony treatment, be committed to a colony.

6. When committal to a colony has taken place the borough or the county would contribute a proportion of the cost. When such committal was secured at the instance of the Poor Law authorities the contribution to the colony would be paid by such authority.

7. Should any person be admitted on his own application, and be able to contribute towards his maintenance, the colony authorities should have powers of recovery as under the present Poor Law and Lunacy Acts.

8. The Colony should provide for a simple and effectual classification of Colonists. The underlying and governing principle would be the encouragement of the willing, industrious, and well-behaved, and the compulsion of the lazy and indifferent; variety in food and other amenities being regarded as the chief agents of encouragement.

9. FOOD AND WORK.—As the colony system aims at reclamation, the treatment must be characterised by common sense and humanity. A simple receiving-house is the first requirement. Here the food would have no relation to the amount of work done, but each individual would be treated according to his need. When fit he would pass to another division, where the food given would have a very definite relation to the amount and quality of work done, and where the active rebuilding process would seriously commence.

It has been noticed in hoeing in the market garden at Hadleigh and clay-getting in the brickfields that frequently two new-comers in a gang of ten would set the pace. It might be supposed that the eight would have carried the two, but observation led to the conclusion that, unconsciously, the eight slackened pace so as not to discourage the two, and the more readily when the two happened to be decent fellows anxious to keep up with the eight.

Appendix
XXIV.

The net result was, that the eight men had not done as much as they had on the previous day, while the two, although doing a little more than they would otherwise have accomplished, were reasonably too tired and discouraged in consequence.

10. Colonies should be on a scale sufficiently large to secure a population which will save the undertaking from the monotony and other disadvantages peculiar to small hamlets, and at the same time economise to the greatest extent the cost of administration.

11. The social life of the colonists ought to be carefully nursed, and the whole atmosphere and surroundings of the colony should tend to natural and healthy conditions. For this reason provision ought to be made for the reception of the wives and families of well-conducted colonists who shall have proved themselves worthy of encouragement, and for whom there is a prospect of independence and return to ordinary civil life.

In the "staffing" of the colony women would, where possible, be employed, for the influence of good women in such an effort cannot be over-estimated.

12. The period of detention should be, for voluntary applicants, not more than one year, and for the others not less than two nor more than three years. Voluntary cases might be discharged when they had earned 20s.—say, sufficient to maintain them for a fortnight; and the period of the others could be modified by the Home Secretary, or the President of the Local Government Board, on the representation of the colony governor or director that the colonist is not likely to derive further benefit from colony treatment. The governor of a colony should have power to grant leave of absence in the same way as the licensee of an inebriates' retreat. Provision should be made for the recommittal of apparently hopeless cases.

13. The establishment of labour colonies would enable the authorities to regard vagrancy and begging not as a crime, but as a social danger requiring treatment. The idea of voluntary entry would be to remove the inducement to commit an offence (such as the breaking of windows) for the purpose of obtaining incarceration.

14. The careful classification would give the partially unfit such conveniences as they are able to appreciate, while the general comforts would not be such as would induce a man to leave civil life, and under capable management he would not prolong his stay longer than was necessary.

15. The staple industries at the colonies would probably be of two kinds—one where the work undertaken would be of the nature of a national improvement, such as the reclamation of waste lands, and the planting of trees, in which no immediate financial return would be looked for; the other, according to the industries followed, would yield certain income. The nature of the work would be largely determined by the locality.

16. Provision in some instances would have to be made for receiving homes in towns, as well as centres, for distributing colonists when fit to return to civil life.

17. With careful thought at the inception of a colony, no local industry need be interfered with. Under any circumstances it must not be forgotten that the product of the colonist must in the national total leave the honest ratepayer better off—for the man has previously been living on charity, or stealing, and contributing nothing towards the national wealth.

18. As the tramp evil is a national one, the incidence of taxation for the proposed colonies should, to some extent at any rate, be national.

The contribution by, or cost to, a local authority ought not, under any circumstances, to exceed the cost of a man in the workhouse or in prison. It will probably in actual practice be much less; and it is not inconceivable that in some instances it may reach the vanishing point; and it is not unreasonable to expect that the Treasury contribution would be at least at the same rate as to inebriate reformatories.

19. SELECTION OF A SITE.—The best result in increased efficiency, &c., may be expected where, in the selection of a site, some consideration has been given to natural beauty and moderate proximity to a town. The natural beauty will be a continual source of moral elevation, while the knowledge of the vicinity of a town, and at night perchance the reflection thereon, will give the colonist the feeling that he is not banished.

The town may afford a market for colony produce, and certainly will provide sources of entertainment such as concert parties, lectures, and lantern exhibitions, &c.

20. Colonies other than those managed by public authorities would be licensed for the reception of colonists in the same way as inebriate retreats and reformatories; and the bye-laws governing the same, as to hours of labour, and other details, should have the approval of the Home Secretary or President of the Local Government Board.

21. Provision should be made for the transfer of colonists from one colony to another on the advice of an inspector, with the consent of the respective managers, for such reasons as special aptitude for certain classes of work, and perhaps incompatibility of temper of colonists and officials.

22. Suitable cases might be transferred from prisons, criminal lunatic asylums, &c., the managers of these establishments being empowered to contribute to the cost of cases so transferred. We have had excellent results with men and women so received, but at present the authorities have no power to contribute for their maintenance.

23. It is not intended that the colonies here recommended should supersede the Hadleigh land colony or any kindred effort. The beneficent results of that "Great Endeavour" can best be secured by maintaining the complete voluntary spirit which is its present chief characteristic. It might be a powerful aid to the proposed new colonies to have the voluntary colonies alongside—especially as these might be used as stepping-stones on which colonists could come back to civil life, as well as being an inducement to good conduct.

24. In any well-considered effort proposed to be carried out on a large scale by a religious or philanthropic society the powers of the Board of Agriculture with respect to loans from the Lands Improvement Company might be utilised, extended to the Local Government Board, or Home Office, to meet industrial needs if necessary.

February, 1904.

DAVID C. LAMB.

11. STATEMENT SHOWING RESULTS OF ENQUIRY CONDUCTED ON BEHALF OF SALVATION ARMY AS REGARDS INMATES OF CASUAL WARDS IN LONDON IN MAY, 1905.

Appendix
XXIV.

Number of persons interviewed :—

Men, 846 ; Women, 206 ; Children reported, 38 ; making a grand total of 1090.

Note.—Children are not included in any of the following figures :—

The ages of the above were as follows :—

Under 20 years of age	9 men	=	85 %
Over 20 and under 30 years of age	- 86 „ 7 women	=	8.84 „
Over 30 and under 40 years of age	- 213 „ 37 „	=	23.77 „
Over 40 and under 60 years of age	- 367 „ 100 „	=	44.39 „
Over 60 years of age	151 „ 59 „	=	19.96 „
Refused information	12 „ 11 „	=	2.19 „

Places of birth :—

Provincial Towns	- - -	274 = 26.05 %
Country	- - -	176 = 16.73 „
London	- - -	382 = 36.31 „
Greater London	- - -	99 = 9.41 „
Scotland	- - -	29 = 2.76 „
Ireland	- - -	43 = 4.09 „
Foreign	- - -	36 = 3.42 „
Refused information	- - -	13 = 1.23 „

Trades :—

Skilled mechanics	- - -	185 = 17.59 %
Traders	- - -	39 = 3.70 „
Clerks	- - -	23 = 2.19 „
Professional	- - -	17 = 1.62 „
General labourers	- - -	465 = 44.20 „
Agricultural labourers	- - -	35 = 3.32 „
Skilled „	- - -	150 = 14.26 „
Refused information	- - -	138 = 13.12 „

109 out of the 206 women interviewed, or over 50%,
refused information.

29 out of the 846 men interviewed also refused information, being 3.43% of the total number of men.

How long out of work :—

Less than 1 month	- - -	100 = 9.50 %
Over 1 month and under 3 months	- - -	165 = 15.68 „
Over 3 months and under 12 months	- - -	409 = 38.88 „
Over 1 year	- - -	319 = 30.33 „
Refused information	- - -	59 = 5.61 „
Married	- - -	120 = 11.40 „
Single	- - -	728 = 70.15 „
Widows and widowers	- - -	194 = 18.45 „

Causes of destitution :—

Drink	- - -	175 = 16.64 %
Bad trade	- - -	501 = 47.62 „
Accident	- - -	38 = 3.61 „
Gambling	- - -	4 = .38 „
Other causes	- - -	280 = 26.62 „
Refused information	- - -	54 = 5.13 „

How long in London :—

Less than 6 months	- - -	190 = 18.06 %
Over 6 and under 12 months	- - -	56 = 5.32 „
Over 1 year	- - -	767 = 72.91 „
Refused information	- - -	39 = 3.71 „

From the Inmates' point of view.

Number who have hopes of re- turning to civil life	- - -	637 = 60.55 „
Number who have no hopes of re- turning to civil life	- - -	277 = 26.33 „
Number who have little hopes of returning to civil life	- - -	95 = 9.03 „
Refused information	- - -	43 = 4.09 „
Number willing to enter labour colony	- - -	789 = 75 „

From the Salvation Army point of view.

Number regarded as mentally fit	- 866 = 82.3 „
Number regarded as physically fit	- 740 = 70.34 „
Number hopeful	- - - 667 = 63.40 „
Number almost hopeless	- - - 119 = 11.31 „
Number doubtful	- - - 266 = 25.29 „

APPENDIX XXV.

RETURN OF MEN SENT TO HADLEIGH FARM COLONY BY THE WOOLWICH GUARDIANS.

(This Statement is taken from the Report of a Special Committee of the Charity Organisation Society on the Relief of Distress due to want of Employment, November, 1904.)

Name.	Address.	How long in Union.	How long in workhouse first.*	General character of man.	Under what contract sent.	Time spent there.	How employed.	Whether emigrated.	Reasons for leaving Colony.	Remarks.
W.W. (54)	Salvation Army Colony, Hadleigh.	From January 1st to March, 1902.	About 3 weeks.	Fair.	Contract with Salvation Army to pay at the rate of 5s. per week for each case.	From March 24th, 1902, to June 27th, 1902.	Market Garden.	No.	Left without notice.	—
J.J. (44)	—	From March, 1902.	Do.	In and out case.		From March 24th, 1902, to April 23rd, 1903.	Poultry Farm.	No.	Discharged to a situation.	—
C.F. (52)	—	From March, 1900, in and out ever since.	1 week.	Do.		From April 15th, 1902, to April 30th, 1902.	Market Garden.	No.	Left for situation in Hadleigh.	Now in Prison for absconding from Colony.
D.J. (46)	—	From December, 1900, in and out since.	4 days.	Do.		From April 15th, 1902, to April 17th, 1902.	Do.	No.	Left without notice.	Now in Workhouse.
D.J. (34)	—	From May, 1899, in and out since.	3 days.	Do.		From May 13th, 1902, to May 16th, 1902.	Dining Hall.	No.	Do.	Do.
F.J. (53)	—	Years.	Do.	Do.		From May 13th, 1902, to May 26th, 1902.	Brickfield.	No.	Do.	—
C.H. (33)	—	Do.	10 days.	Do.		From May 13th, 1902, to July 7th, 1902.	Do.	No.	Drinking, and left without notice.	(Since dead).
M.W. (42)	—	From April, 1902, to May, 1902.	1 month.	Do.		From May 13th, 1902, to May 26th, 1902.	Do.	No.	Left without notice.	—
P.E. (56)	—	From May, 1902, to July, 1902.	About 3 weeks.	Fair.		From July 2nd, 1902, to August 25th, 1902.	Market Garden.	No.	Left for situation.	—
C.F. (52)	—	(See above).	(See above).	In and out case.		From August 6th, 1902, to August 21st, 1902.	Do.	No.	Left without notice.	—
W.R. (53)	—	Years.	About 2 weeks.	Do.	Contract with Salvation Army to pay at the rate of 5s. per week for each case.	From August 6th, 1902, to August 21st, 1902.	Traffic.	No.	Sent to London Hospital.	Now in Infirmary.
F.F. (17)	—	Do.	3 months.	Do.		From August 21st, 1902, to August 30th, 1902.	Nursery.	No.	Left for situation at Southend.	Now in Workhouse.
W.W. (48)	—	Do.	3 weeks.	Do.		From August 30th, 1902, to May 13th, 1903.	Traffic.	No.	Left without notice.	Do.
L.E. (30)	—	Do.	Do.	Do.		From August 28th, 1902, to November 28th, 1902.	Dining Hall.	No.	Sent back to Union.	Do.
B.T. (49)	—	From November, 1901, to October, 1902.	10 days.	Fair.		From October 28th, 1902, to October 29th, 1902.	Market (Garden).	No.	Left without notice.	—
T.J. (40)	—	From September, 1902, in and out since.	2 weeks.	Good.		From October 28th, 1902, to September 10th, 1903.	At Dunmow.	No.	Got work at Dunmow.	Now in Workhouse.
L.A. (35)	—	From October 24th, 1902, to October 28th, 1902.	4 days.	Do.		From October 28th, 1902, to April 16th, 1903.	Sea Wall and Dunmow.	Yes.	Emigrated to Canada.	—
F.F. (17)	—	Years.	(See above).	(See above).		From December 14th, 1902, to March 2nd, 1903.	Market Garden.	No.	Sent back to Infirmary.	—
J.J. (44)	—	(See above).	(See above).	Good.		From December 31st, 1903, to March 26th, 1904.	Brickfield.	No.	Refused to do his work.	—
W.W. (49)	—	Years.	7 months.	Do.		From February 17th, 1904, to July 8th, 1904.	Do.	No.	Dismissed for drinking.	—

* This refers to the period the men were in the House immediately prior to being sent to the Colony.

APPENDIX XXVI.
LINGFIELD TRAINING COLONY.
(Papers handed in by Rev. J. L. Brooks.)

Appendix
XXVI.

1. ACCOUNTS FOR THE YEAR ENDED SEPTEMBER 30TH, 1904.

FARM ACCOUNT.

4. STATEMENT RESPECTING COLONISTS RECEIVED AT THE LINGFIELD FARM COLONY DURING 1903 AND 1904.

Colonists received during	Total number.	Whence coming.				Duration of stay.					Previous admissions.			Cause of leaving Colony.
		Sent by Boards of Guardians.	On their own application or sent by their friends.	From Police Courts.	From Charity Organisation Society.	14 days or under.	1 month.	2 months.	3 months.	More than 6 months.	Total number previously admitted.	One previous admission.	Two previous admissions.	To go to situations found by themselves.	To go to situations found by Colony.	Dismissed for bad behaviour or incapacity.	Absconded.	Left on own accord in search of work.	Became insane.	Incapable of training. Returned to friends.
1903	55	33	21	0	1	2	8	3	5	37	2	2	0	—	24	2	12	6	2	8
1904	66	43	20	2	1	0	3	0	9	54	6	5	1	—	23*	13	5	4	2	9

55 received in 1903 ; 54 left. 66 received in 1904 ; 56 left.

* 1 promoted to the rank of Attendant.

APPENDIX XXVII.

VAGRANCY BILL, 1904.

A Bill to Amend the Vagrancy Act, 1824, and to facilitate the Establishment of Labour Colonies.

Appendix
XXVII.

Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :—

Detention of vagrants in certified labour colonies and expenses of prosecutions.

1. (1) Any person found by a court of summary jurisdiction to be an idle and disorderly person, or a rogue or vagabond, or an incorrigible rogue within the meaning of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, may be committed for trial and shall be liable upon conviction on indictment, or if he consent to be dealt with summarily on summary conviction, to be detained for a term not exceeding three years in any certified labour colony, the managers of which are willing to receive him. Such detention may be in addition to or in substitution for any other sentence.

(2) The expenses of any prosecution on indictment under this section shall be payable as in cases of indictment for felony, and the expenses of any case dealt with summarily under this section shall be payable in manner provided by section twenty-eight of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879.

(3) The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, shall apply to proceedings under this section as if the offence charged were specified in the second column of the First Schedule to the said Act.

Persons may be sent to certified labour colonies on their own
application.

2. (1) On the application of any person desirous of being admitted into a certified labour colony, a justice of the peace, if satisfied that the applicant is a suitable person for detention therein, may make an order for his detention for a period not exceeding twelve months in any certified labour colony, the managers of which are willing to receive him. Provided that no justice of the peace shall make such order until he has explained its effect to the person affected thereby.

(2) The managers of a certified labour colony shall, within two clear days after the reception of any person received therein under this section, send a copy of the order for the detention of such person to the Secretary of State.

Establishment of certified labour
colonies.

3. (1) The Secretary of State, on the application of any person desirous of establishing a labour colony, may, if satisfied as to the fitness of the colony and of the persons proposing to maintain it, certify it as a labour colony, and thereupon while the certificate is in force the colony shall be a certified labour colony within the meaning of this Act.

(2) The Secretary of State may make regulations prescribing the conditions on which certificates under this section are to be granted and held, and the circumstances in which they may be withdrawn or resigned.

Regulations
as to certified labour
colonies.

4. The Secretary of State may make, cancel, or alter regulations as to :—

- (a) The establishment, management, maintenance, and inspection of certified labour colonies.
- (b) The classification, treatment, employment, and control of the inmates of certified labour colonies and the application of their earnings; and
- (c) The transfer of such inmates from one certified labour colony to another, their absence under licence, and their discharge; and may thereby impose a fine not exceeding twenty pounds or imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months with or without hard labour for the breach of any such regulations.

In reckoning the period of detention of any person detained in a certified labour colony, the time during which he is imprisoned under this section or absent without leave, shall not be computed.

5. Where by any regulations made under the foregoing section of this Act a breach of the regulations is made punishable by fine or imprisonment, the breach shall be an offence which may be prosecuted summarily.

Power to to deal summarily with offences against regulations.
Inspectors.

6. The Secretary of State may, with the consent of the Treasury as to number, appoint inspectors of certified labour colonies and assign them such remuneration out of money provided by Parliament as the Treasury may determine.

7. The Treasury may contribute out of money provided by Parliament such sums and on such conditions as the Secretary of State recommends towards the expenses of the detention of persons in certified labour colonies. Contribution by Treasury.

8. (1) The council of any county or borough and the board of guardians of any union may contribute such sums and on such conditions as they think fit towards the establishment or maintenance of a labour colony, certified or intended to be certified under this Act, and may defray the whole or any part of the expenses of detention of any person in any certified labour colony, and any such council and board, or two or more councils or boards, or councils and boards, may combine for any such purpose.

Contributions by councils of counties and boroughs and by boards of guardians.

(2) The council of a borough may borrow for any such purpose in like manner as if it were a purpose for which they are authorised by section one hundred and six of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, to borrow.

9. (1) A person convicted under section one of this Act shall be conveyed to a certified labour colony at the expense of the police authority by whom or at whose instance he is conveyed, and the cost of such conveyance shall be deemed part of the current expenses of that police authority. Expenses of conveyance

(2) A person entering a certified labour colony under section two of this Act shall be conveyed to such colony at the expense of the managers thereof.

10. (1) Every officer of a certified labour colony authorised in writing by the managers of the colony to take charge of any person ordered to be detained under this Act for the purpose of conveying him to or from the colony, or of apprehending him and bringing him back to the colony in case of his escape or refusal to return, shall for that purpose and while engaged in that duty have all the powers, protections, and privileges of a constable. Powers of officers and arrest.

(2) If any person received into a certified labour colony escapes therefrom or from the charge of any person in whose charge he is placed under licence, or if any such person while absent from such colony under licence forfeits the same through any breach of the conditions thereof before the expiration of his period of detention, he may be apprehended without warrant and brought back to the colony.

(3) The time between the escape of such person and his return to the colony shall not be treated as part of the term of his detention therein.

11. In case of the death of any person detained in a certified labour colony a statement of the cause of the death of such person with the name of any person present at his death shall be drawn up and signed by a medical attendant of such colony, and copies thereof duly certified in writing by the person in charge of such colony shall be by him transmitted to the coroner and to the registrar of deaths for the district. Every medical attendant who shall neglect or omit to draw up and sign such statement as aforesaid, and every person in charge of a certified labour colony who shall neglect or omit to certify and transmit such statement as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this Act. Death of person in certified labour colony.

12. In case of the death of a person absent from a certified labour colony under licence, a statement of the cause of his death, with the name of any person present at his death, shall be drawn up and signed by a duly qualified medical practitioner and copies thereof duly certified in writing by the person in whose charge the deceased had been placed shall be by him transmitted to the coroner, to the registrar of deaths for the district, and to the person in charge of the certified labour colony from which deceased had been licensed. Death of person absent on licence.

13. (1) Any person other than a person detained in a certified labour colony who is guilty of an offence against this Act or against any regulations made under section four hereof, for which no other penalty is prescribed, shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, or at the discretion of the court to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three months with or without hard labour. Penalty for offence against Act.

(2) Any person detained in a certified labour colony who shall escape or shall attempt to escape therefrom.

Appendix
XXVII.
A.D. 1904.

and any person who shall wilfully permit, or who shall assist or attempt to assist any such person detained as aforesaid shall be deemed to be guilty of an offence against this Act.

(3) Any person who while detained in a certified labour colony wilfully neglects or refuses to conform to the rules thereof shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this Act and shall be liable upon summary conviction to be imprisoned for any period not exceeding seven days with or without hard labour, and any such person who has been three times so convicted shall be liable upon a fourth conviction to be imprisoned for any period not exceeding three months with or without hard labour. At the expiration of the imprisonment for such offence such person shall be brought back to such labour colony there to be detained until the expiration of his prescribed period of detention, and in reckoning such period the time during which such person was imprisoned shall be excluded from the computation.

14. (1) A regulation made under this Act shall not come into effect until it has lain four weeks on the Table of each House of Parliament whilst that House is sitting.

(2) The making of such regulations and the date at which they come into effect shall be notified in the "London Gazette."

15. Section one of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, shall apply to a person detained in or absent under licence from a certified labour colony as if he were a prisoner in a prison within the meaning of that section.

16. In this Act unless the context otherwise requires :—

The expression "managers" in relation to a certified labour colony shall mean any person having the management or control of the colony.

The expression "expenses" in relation to the detention of a person in a certified labour colony shall include the expenses of his custody and maintenance whether in the colony or when absent therefrom under licence and other expenses directed by this Act or by any order made thereunder to be defrayed by the managers, and also any expenses incurred by the managers in aiding his emigration or colonisation and in assisting him to return to his home or place of settlement on the expiration of his term of detention.

17. This Act shall come into operation on the first day of October one thousand nine hundred and four.

18. This Act may be cited as the Vagrancy Act Amendment Act, 1904.

The Bill was presented by Sir John Gorst, supported by Mr. Herbert Gladstone, Mr. Haldane, Sir Albert Rollit, Sir Frederick Carne Rasch, Sir John Leng, Colonel Williams, Captain Balfour, Mr. Cohen, Mr. Shackleton, and Mr. Crooks.

The following memorandum was prefixed to the Bill :—

Under the Act of 1824 persons therein described as idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds and incorrigible rogues may be apprehended, and, if found upon examination to be offenders against the Act, may be sentenced to imprisonment. The three classes enumerated comprise the majority of those vagrants who will not work. It has been defined by statute that a "rogue and vagabond" is a person who, after being convicted of being "an idle and disorderly person" within the meaning of section 3 of the Act, or in other words a habitual vagrant, commits any of the offences set forth in section 4 of the Act.

The principle followed throughout the Bill has been to adopt established precedents as far as possible, and there is no compulsion upon the local authorities to adopt the provisions thereof unless they choose, all the provisions being permissive. And assuming that the case in favour of the establishment of labour colonies and the detention of vagrants therein instead of dealing with them in workhouses and prisons, or leaving them to wander over the country to prey upon the community, is made out, the Bill contains practically no provision that has not already met with the approval of Parliament.

The Bill provides that any person found by a court of summary jurisdiction to belong to any of the three classes described may be committed for trial and empowers the court (of assize or quarter sessions) to order the detention of such person in a labour colony for a period not exceeding three years. Or, if he consents to be dealt with summarily, the court of summary jurisdiction is empowered to deal with him in the same manner.

The Bill also empowers a justice of the peace on the application of a person whom he finds to be a suitable person for detention in a labour colony to order his detention in such a colony for a period not exceeding twelve months.

Regulations
to be laid before Parliament.

Application to labour colonies of provisions of 9 & 10 Vict.
c. 66.

Definitions

Commence ment of Act

Short title

APPENDIX XXVIII.

DIETARY.

(Memorandum prepared by Sir Michael Foster, K.C.B., F.R.S.)

In dealing with diet, that is to say, the amount and nature of the food which a man ought to consume in a given time, twenty-four hours being the time usually chosen, one must undoubtedly consider in the first instance the diet which has been arrived at by the statistical method. A very large number of observations shewing what man, under very varied circumstances, does eat in twenty-four hours have been collected; and the value of the very various articles of food which he eats being set down in terms of food stuffs, namely, proteids, fats and carbo-hydrates, an average diet has thus been arrived at from a very large number of individual diets.

In the observations so used the data of what may be called "natural" diets, where the choice of food is determined merely by the appetite and circumstances of the individual, have, in many cases, been mixed with the data of compulsory diets, such as those of soldiers, sailors, inmates of prisons and workhouses, and so on. The latter have much less value than the former, since they were themselves planned on theoretical grounds, and experience has only intervened to the extent of correcting the original plan.

However, whether the latter data be employed or not, the statistical method brings us to the diet, quoted by Dr. Hopkins in his evidence, and often spoken of as Voit's diet. That gives, in round numbers, about 100 grammes proteid, 50 grammes fat and 500 grammes carbo-hydrates, the available energy being about (rather less than) 3,000 calories.

The distinction between fat and carbo-hydrates, though not unimportant, is of secondary importance, and may be left on one side in the first instance. We may consider as the essential character of Voit's diet that it provides about 100 grammes of proteid a day, with a supply of non-proteid material sufficient to bring the available energy up to 3,000 calories, or to near that.

Now a "natural" diet is determined in the first instance by appetite and by the ability to obtain the food needed to satisfy that appetite, but is corrected by experience. When a man has the means to satisfy his appetite, that appetite leads him to eat more than he really wants, since the appetite does not fail until more than is needed has been eaten. Hence the "natural" diet tends to be in excess of what is really needed. In the normal diet, determined by the statistical method, this error of excess is corrected to a certain extent by the fact that many of the individual diets used to obtain the average were the diets of persons whose circumstances did not allow them to satisfy their appetites fully. It is further corrected by the fact that even persons of easy circumstances are led to adopt a diet below that suggested by mere appetite since they find by experience that if they followed their appetite alone this would lead them to eat more than is good for them.

But the correction which crude personal experience can thus introduce into an individual diet is a very limited one. So far as energy is concerned, the body can readily take in more energy than it needs without feeling the excess. By far the greater part of the energy set free from the food leaves the body as heat; and the mechanisms of the body for getting rid of superfluous heat are so potent that a very large amount indeed of unneeded energy may be set free in the body and got rid of, without the body being made aware of the excess by a rise of bodily temperature.

Again, the products of the combustion of carbo-hydrates and fats are so readily brought to the stage of carbonic anhydride and water, and, in this form, so readily got rid of, that an excess of them in the food is not readily appreciated. It is only in the case of the proteids, that the products of the excess make themselves distinctly felt. But the effects of the retention within the body of an excess of nitrogenous products are so obscure, so complex, and often so tardy in making their appearance, that they are not available as warnings for uninstructed experience. A man may eat too much proteid and be the worse for it, and yet not know it.

The "statistical" diet, the diet determined by the statistical method, is not a diet scientifically determined; it is merely a statement in scientific terms of the rough experience of a very large number of persons. The considerations just given lead one to believe that it is in excess of the real wants of man. And many men have found by common rough experience that they could live in apparent health and strength, on a diet lower than the "normal" diet laid down by the statistical method, the lower diet so used differing from the normal diet, especially in the feature that the amount of proteid was much less.

The great merit of Chittenden's observations referred to by Dr. Hopkins in his evidence is that these furnish the needed scientific data of such an experience concerning the satisfactory results of a lower diet.

These observations show that men of very varied bodily nature (weight, etc.), occupation and previous history, may be maintained for several months in a condition, determined to be satisfactory by exact tests, on a diet which was in one instance as low as 35.5 grammes of proteid, with 1,600 calories, and in the highest case was 59 grammes proteid, with 2,800 calories.

The period of observation was limited to months, whereas the data of the larger statistical diet were furnished by the experience of years; and it may be urged that the defects of such a lower diet might not appear until after a period longer than the one actually used in the observations.

This must be admitted, since, as urged above, errors of diet are often long in making themselves felt. But on the other hand it may be urged that the cases of common experience of the benefits of a lower diet referred to, though not tested by exact determinations, were cases of the experience of many years.

Chittenden's observations at least confirm the suspicion that the "statistical" diet is one unnecessarily high, and that health and strength might be effectively maintained on a distinctly lower diet. They seem to me to justify the decision that the diet for a labour colony should be based on them rather than on the higher diet of Voit.

I do not think it necessary to discuss the so-called "experimental" diet referred to by Dr. Hopkins and based on the earlier observations of Ranke and the later ones of Atwater. These experimental observations do not really serve to determine a diet; they rather illustrate the details of the effects of a somewhat rich diet.

In attempting to draw up such a lower diet based on Chittenden's observations as might be safely used, several considerations must be kept in mind.

It is not enough to determine the number of grammes of proteid, and the available calories in the daily food as it is eaten. It is not the food which is placed in the mouth, but that which is absorbed from the alimentary canal which is effective.

The proportion of the food which is thus absorbed, which is really effective, varies with different articles of food, even when eaten under the same conditions.

Further, we have reason to think that the amount absorbed, the amount really effective, of the same article of food, varies under different psychical and other conditions.

Again, the several proteids vary much in their nature and we may fairly assume, in their physiological action,

Appendix
XXVIII.

XXVIII.

so that the same weight of proteid will have a different nutritive effect according to its nature, whether it comes from meat, milk, bread, beans or cheese. The same may be said of fats and carbo-hydrates.

We may, perhaps, go a step further and say, though this is a matter of which we have no great amount of exact knowledge, that probably the same weight of the very same proteid absorbed in the same condition from the alimentary canal may have different nutritive effects under different conditions of the body, psychical and other.

Thus, because Chittenden himself thrived for several months, and possibly, or even probably, would thrive for years on 35.5 grammes of proteid and 1,600 calories presented in the form of a varied and attractive diet, made all the more attractive by the fact that in living on it, he was making an interesting scientific experiment, it does not follow that he would thrive on a monotonous diet in which the same weight of proteid and the same number of calories were supplied mainly by one substance, for instance, by bread. We may safely say that he would undoubtedly starve on it.

On the other hand, of course, a tramp who was accustomed to a monotonous and often insufficient diet would benefit in a way Chittenden could not, by 35.5 grammes proteid and 1,600 calories presented mainly as bread.

In fixing a diet we must attend to many other things than the mere amount of proteid, fats and carbo-hydrates.

Another point deserves consideration. Although the body weight must have an influence, the bigger man needing, ceteris paribus, the larger amount of food, this may be more or less neutralised by other influences. One man differs from another man in what may be called the rate of his metabolism, that is to say, the rapidity with which the food absorbed, whether built up into tissue or not, is broken down into its ultimate products, and so got rid of. Of two men of the same weight, fed on exactly the same food, one man may grow lean and lose flesh, while the other may grow fat and gain in weight. The first dissipates much of the energy of his food into heat, and he can do this without getting hot, thanks to the mechanisms of his body; the latter does this to a much less extent.

A diet fixed for a group of persons must cover the needs not only of the biggest, but also of him who is the most active in his metabolism. And, in respect to this, it must be borne in mind that the harm done by too little food is much more serious and far-reaching than that done by too much food in corresponding amount. The evil of the latter is soon remedied; not so that of the former.

Still other matters have to be considered. The food of man consists not only of proteids, fats and carbo-hydrates, but also of salts and water. These latter are absolutely as necessary as the former. Some of the salts occurring in various foods are mineral salts, simple salts of sodium, calcium, iron, etc. But besides these there are numerous crystalline organic bodies of varied composition, some occurring in vegetable, other in animal, foods. These, even if not absolutely necessary, are highly advantageous. Dr. Hopkins in his evidence calls attention to the use of meat extract, which consists mainly of the substances in question, as promoting digestion. And it is very probable, though our exact knowledge on this point is limited, that these substances also play an important part in promoting and regulating the subsequent nutritive processes, the changes of the absorbed food during its conversion into tissue and the breaking down of the tissue into waste products. They contribute to the effectiveness of food, using the word food in its narrower sense, and ought to be adequately present in a normal diet.

There remains for consideration the question in what way, if any, the diet of labour should differ from the diet of a man doing relatively little external work.

We may assume, as the result of modern inquiries, that the energy of external work is energy derived mainly from the combustion of carbon, whatever be the exact mechanism through which it is set free. We have to look not to the amount of proteid in food as the measure of work, but to the total calorie value of the diet. And this is supported by the reflection that in work, as contrasted with rest, we have to consider not the muscles alone, but the whole body. In labour it is not the muscles alone which are stirred to activity; breathing, circulation, and indeed all the processes of the body are at the same time quickened.

This conclusion as to the actual source of the energy does not, however, preclude the view that the setting free of carbon energy from the nitrogenous muscles may be facilitated and benefited by an increase of proteid in the food; the changes in the muscle which set free the carbon energy may be assisted by an ampler proteid supply.

We may also assume that an increase of labour calls for an increase in the total calorie value of the food, though it is by no means clear that the increase needed is simply the addition of the energy of the work done, to the energy previously set free during rest. Chittenden's observations (see Dr. Hopkins' evidence) are instructive on this point. The calorie value of the diet of the soldiers and athletes did not differ materially from that of Mendel, doing less mechanical work, though the comparison is vitiated by Mendel's somewhat heavy body weight.

Putting all considerations together, we may provisionally conclude as follows:

A diet, containing about 55 grammes proteid and 2,500 calories may be taken as the minimum daily diet for a man doing a fair day's work.

But such a diet, to be safely used, must be made as appetising, and therefore as varied as circumstances will allow. Cereals, supplemented by leguminous vegetables, may be used to supply at least the main part of the proteid needed; but, bearing in mind what was urged above, the addition of some animal proteid in the form of cheese, and of animal extracts in the form of broth or soup, would be at least desirable, even if not necessary. An occasional supply of actual meat would probably be of great benefit, but this might be advantageously supplied by the canteen system. Though our knowledge of the relative values of fats and carbo-hydrates is at present imperfect, we may probably assume that, not only on the ground of appetite, but in view of the different physiological functions of the two sources of carbon, the non-proteid part of the diet should contain, besides carbo-hydrates, some amount (probably something like 50 grammes) of fat.

Such a diet of 55 grammes proteid and 2,500 calories must, however, be regarded as the minimum which could be safely imposed on a group of men of very varied bodily requirements.

It would, probably, in the present state of our knowledge be much safer, and therefore politic, to increase the diet, to raise the proteids to say 70 grammes or even more, and the calories to 3,000. The diet suggested by the late Dr. Edward Smith giving 85 grammes proteid and about 3,000 calories,* was a statistical diet like Voit's, being based on the diets of a large number of labouring men; but it was probably a truer diet than Voit's because it was the expression of the labouring man's (or of the labouring man's wife's) effort to obtain an effective diet, with least waste and so at the least cost. And there is much to be said in favour of taking this diet, which does not differ much from the one just suggested, as at least the initial standard diet.

In conclusion, I should like to insist once more that the diet should be made as varied and as appetising as possible; and this may be urged even on the score of true economy.

Further, seeing how imperfect our knowledge as yet is concerning the matter in hand, the effects of the diet should be most closely and carefully watched, and provision should be made for introducing such amendments as may seem necessary. And this seems all the more necessary since none of the subjects of Chittenden's observations (on which the above recommendations are so largely based), varied as were their occupations, corresponded to the English labourer.

Lastly, I cannot resist the opportunity of pointing out what an admirable opportunity such a labour colony presents for extending and rendering exact our present imperfect knowledge. Were such a colony, living on a fixed known diet, made, as might easily be done, the subject of close scientific study, after the manner, with additions, of Chittenden's research, we might fairly expect such an increase of exact knowledge as would enable us to see clearly where we now see dimly.

Dec. 22nd, 1905.

M. FOSTER.

* Dr. Hopkins has since ascertained on re-calculation, that this figure should be 2,800 calories (see note on page 365 of Evidence).

APPENDIX XXIX.

MEMORANDUM ON THE DIETARY OF CASUAL WARDS AND LABOUR COLONIES.

(By Dr. A. H. Downes.)

As the Committee have had the advantage of the evidence of Dr. Hopkins and of the advice of Sir Michael Foster (Appendix XXVIII.), it may be convenient that I should submit a statement of my views on the practical application of the principles which have been laid down.

A public dietary must, for its justification, be based on those dictates of science which the time approves. Whether the conclusions of one generation of physiologists are likely to be confirmed by the next is, in a sense, immaterial to the administrator.

The accepted standards have hitherto been mainly derived from observation of the actual consumption of food by persons under various conditions of life, but while they clearly indicate the dietetic habits of mankind there is no evidence to show that they represent the real needs of the body. With the general rise in the standard of comfort they have tended to increase, and an illustration of this is afforded by a comparison of the older German standards with those more recently laid down in America :—

	German (Voit).		American (Atwater).
	Calories.	Proteids (gmms).	Calories.	Proteids (gmms).
Man on moderately hard work - -	3,055	118	3,500	125
Man on hard labour	3,370	145	4,500	150

It has been assumed that high feeding was an essential to energy and productive capacity, and philanthropic economists have classed as “underfed” all whose “proteid” food fell short of the American scale.

It is noteworthy that the most effective work that has been done to lift the problem from this vicious circle of reasoning has been carried out in America itself. Dr. Hopkins has clearly and concisely narrated the history of Professor Chittenden’s experiments (Q. 10,798, &c.).* The following short table shows at a glance how great was the reduction from the accepted standards in the amount of food which sufficed to maintain the subjects in health and efficiency :—

Subject of Experiment.	Calories.	Proteids (gmms).
Professor Chittenden - -	1,600	36 to 40
„ Mendel - -	2,400	40
Group of Soldiers - -	2,500 to 2,800	53 to 59
„ „ Athletes - -	2,500	55

The subjects of these experiments were supplied with food of rather rich and varied kind, and the menu was peculiarly American. The following is an example taken at hazard from the soldiers’ diet of March 31, 1904 :—

Breakfast.—Fried Indian meal : syrup : baked potato : coffee : butter.

Dinner.—Tomato soup, with potatoes and onions : mashed potato : scrambled egg : bread : butter : coffee.

Supper.—Bread pudding : sliced banana : fried bacon : boiled potato : butter : tea.

Thinking it well to test to some extent the effect of a plain and monotonous diet I placed myself for twenty-eight consecutive days (September 20th to October 18th, 1905) on the following scale :—

Breakfast.—Bread, eight ounces : cocoa (made with cocoa husk, one-eighth ounce to one pint of water).

Dinner.—Bread, eight ounces : cheese, two ounces.

Supper.—Bread, six ounces : potatoes (cooked weight), six ounces : cocoa husk drink, one pint.

Beyond one-eighth ounce of salt daily nothing else was taken.†

The food value of the total daily allowance was 2,082 calories and 64 grammes of proteid, but only during the last few days was the full quantity consumed.

The average calorie-value of the food actually eaten was approximately as follows :—First week, 1,760 C. : second week, 1,816 C. : third week, 1,958 C. : fourth week, 2,029 C. The maximum loss of body weight was four and half pounds (the initial weight being 135½ pounds), but there was a tendency to recovery of weight at the close, notwithstanding very cold weather, during the last week. I found that I soon became accustomed to this diet and suffered no inconvenience. With the mid-day meal I took at the most a sip of water, and often not even that, for I had no difficulty in eating my bread “dry,” and was singularly free from thirst throughout. I led an active life, both mentally and physically, but my chief regret was that I had no time for more physical work than is represented by an average of eight miles walking daily. I not only felt fit for active exercise but I found it an assistance to me. On some days, however, I did with complete ease some very heavy walking—16 miles on one occasion—over broken ground in a rough hill country ; in fact I found myself able to do more on this plain fare than on my ordinary food.

I do not put this experience forward as of scientific value, but I learned much by it, especially that so long as a healthy appetite is engendered by exercise and constant occupation under normal conditions, it is possible to set less store on variety of food than has been supposed. In fact I can quite understand that variety may be more essential to the man who lives richly than to the plain feeder, and to the meat-eater as compared with one who relies mainly on cereals.

It may be observed also that the proportion of fat in my food—about half an ounce daily—was far below the “standard” (two ounces, according to Voit ; more than four ounces according to Atwater). But I felt no ill effect from this deprivation, and my only trouble was that I grudged the time necessary to consume the bulky ration of bread.‡ My experience, indeed, has taught me that there may be a greater risk of “nitrogen-starvation” if fats and sugar are too freely allowed in a limited dietary : for, if by the temptation of taking the easiest road in eating, I had made up my “calories” from these instead of from bread, my proteid allowance would have seriously suffered. The same consideration would apply to the mineral constituents of a diet, and the need of “ballast” in food should be also borne in mind.

The following extract from a memorandum, prepared by me at the outset of our Inquiry, indicates the general principles on which the Committee’s recommendations may possibly be based :—

“The details of the actual dietaries (in places of prolonged detention or ‘labour-colonies’) should, of

*An eminent authority, writing in Nature (February 1st, 1906), says of Chittenden, “He is no crank or faddist, and his conclusions have been arrived at by the true scientific method. . . . The experiments lasted in all cases for months, and in some for more than a year. The proteid intake was reduced to half, and in some cases to less than half, the amount hitherto regarded as normal. After a variable initial drop in body weight the deprivation was apparently followed by no untoward results. Physiological equilibrium was maintained : the health remained perfect, or improved : the muscular power of athletes was increased : mental acuity was undiminished : and desire for richer food disappeared.” It may be added that the experiments were carried out in a trying winter, more severe than ordinarily occurs in any part of this country.

† A little oatmeal was substituted for an equivalent of bread on one or two days in the first fortnight.

‡ But this was a leading feature of the diet, and those who lay stress on the importance of mastication are certainly entitled to claim a share of such merit as may attach to it.

course, be eventually settled by the authority immediately responsible, in accordance with regulations approved by the department of Government concerned. The regular meals should ordinarily be served in one or more common dining-halls, and this would permit of the introduction of economies, together with an elasticity in the food allowance, which would be difficult or impossible under the cellular system of an ordinary (English) prison. It is assumed, too, that the well-conducted men would, within the 'colony,' be allowed a considerable amount of freedom and association, that they would be actively employed on productive labour—in the open air as much as possible—and that each man should have direct and tangible advantage in proportion to his industry: and further that healthy recreation is provided and opportunity for loafing not allowed. Briefly, my meaning is that if by such arrangements the depressing influences of loss of liberty can be minimised or avoided, the dietary may be considered from a different stand-point to that of ordinary prisons. I should accordingly recommend a system by which rations of sufficient but very plain food are allowed to each man, and that there should be provided a canteen where additions, such as bacon, dry fish, dripping, jam, tea, tobacco, &c., might be purchased out of earnings obtained by good work and conduct. Such earnings should, of course, be subject to strict regulation and limitation; the amount available for canteen expenditure need be very small. I consider some arrangement of this kind indispensable, as an inducement and stimulus to good work.

"As an auxiliary of dietary the canteen would be of great importance in its benefit to the real worker. On the other hand exclusion from the canteen as a punishment would be an effective instrument of discipline.

"It would be very desirable to arrange the service of bread, issued for the ordinary rations, on the plan now adopted in English workhouses. This enables the consumption to be regulated according to varying appetite or requirement: it should avoid waste, and at the same time afford an automatic adjustment of food-allowance, which is a security to inmates and to officers.

"The dietary of the sick should be left to the discretion of the medical officer, and he should also have a discretionary power—as in workhouses—in exceptional cases or circumstances."

As I have said, the Committee would probably not propose to enter into detail in this matter further than may concern the question of the probable cost of maintenance. This would be especially of importance in relation to grants or repayments to certain classes of "colonies" from public funds. It would be an essential stimulus to productive industry that any payments to such "colonies" should not cover the whole cost; that is to say there should be a margin to be met by careful management and the proceeds of the work done: a stimulus not merely to the inmate but to the people over him.

Any repayment for food, therefore, should be a bare minimum. The cost of my own diet at contract prices is about 1s. 3½d. per week—it was rather less than 3d. a day at retail cost, the cost of cooking being negligible.

For the inmate of a labour colony I should recommend some scale of dietary as the following:—

Breakfast and supper.—Bread, 8 oz.; cocoa (made with cocoa husk) 1 pint.

Dinners for a week.—Two days—Bread, 8 oz.; pea (or lentil) soup, 1 pint.

Two days—Bread, 6 oz.; cheese ('Cheddar' quality), 2 oz.; potatoes (cooked), 6 oz.

Two days—Bread, 2 oz.; broth, 1 pint; suet pudding, 12 oz.

One day—Bread, 8 oz.; stew, 1 pint.

This would furnish a daily average allowance of about 2,286 calories with 66 grammes of proteid per man.* This, provided that bread is served to appetite, should afford a sufficient subsistence for an idle "loafer."

A schedule of ingredients is appended together with a statement of the cost. It is estimated that the total cost of this dietary per man per week, at average contract prices, would amount to about 1s. 4½d. The working cost, however, would probably be rather higher than this.

The amount of meat allowed is small, but the scale has been designed to meet, as far as possible, at small cost, Sir Michael Foster's suggestion of "cereals supplemented by leguminous vegetables—with the addition of cheese and of animal extracts in the form of broth or soup." The amount of fat is about 34 grammes (rather more than 1 oz.) daily.†

The worker by purchasing at the canteen, say, 2 oz. of cheese and 2 oz. of dripping could for the very moderate outlay of 1½d. per day bring this scale up to a food value of 3,000 calories with 83 grammes of proteid. And it is an indispensable condition of the system which I advocate that there should be every inducement for the man to supplement the subsistence scale by his own exertion, and that he should be taught to do this thriftily. It is for this reason, for example, that neither sugar nor milk are allowed in the scale for cocoa, nor any "relish" with the bread for breakfast or supper: but the man who wishes for these little luxuries should have no difficulty in earning them.

What I have said so far relates to "labour-colonies." The case of the tramp in the ordinary casual ward is rather more difficult, inasmuch, as it would probably be impracticable to apply any system of supplement by earnings, or to provide much variety of food even if this be desirable. The problem here is to give a dietary sufficient and complete in itself—hence the inclusion of potatoes as anti-scorbutic in my own test—but unattractive. It must require very little cooking and that of the simplest, and must consist of foods which can be readily stored and quickly issued for fluctuating numbers. It is found necessary, moreover, that it should be strictly uniform throughout the country. The mid-day meal should be portable in order that men may carry it with them when discharged in the morning.

My own experience gives me confidence in suggesting a modification of the diet which I tried on myself as fulfilling the requisite conditions. To bring it up to the 2,500 calorie standard the bread allowance should be slightly increased and an addition of 1½ oz. margarine and ½ oz. sugar allowed daily. This would bring the cost up to about 1s. 7½d. per head weekly. The proteid would amount to about 63 grammes daily. By giving porridge it would be possible to supply the nutritive value at a lower initial cost, but the cost of and difficulty of preparation of the food would be greater.

The scale allowance would be as follows:—

Breakfast.—Bread, 8 oz.; margarine, ¾ oz.; cocoa (made with cocoa husk, ⅓th oz., sugar ½ oz.), 1 pint.

Dinner.—Bread, 8 oz.; cheese ('Cheddar' or similar quality), 1½ oz.

Supper.—Bread, 8 oz.; margarine, ¾ oz.; potatoes (cooked), 6 oz.

Salt, 1 oz. per 5 men daily.

This represents an increase on my diet of about 25 per cent. in the calorie value, and the allowance of fat is trebled.

To meet the varying requirements of different men arrangements should be made as far as possible for the service of a portion of bread according to appetite. I see no reason why there should not be a discretionary power for the superintendent of the ward to issue extra bread if he considers it necessary.

I am inclined to rely on bread rather than oatmeal as the main constituent of this dietary, partly because it better meets the requirements which I have enumerated, and partly because oatmeal being no longer a customary food of the people is not well taken by them, and is often wasted. One reason why oatmeal has hitherto entered so largely into our public dietaries has been on account of its nitrogenous value. It has always been difficult to meet Voit's proteid requirement at a moderate cost. In view of Chittenden's work this reason has lost its force, and setting aside the question of nitrogen, I find that at contract prices flour is now in some cases the cheaper food.

I trust that it will be understood that I offer these suggestions merely in illustration of the principles on which such dietaries might, in my judgment, be framed. The policy to be eventually adopted and the settlement of details would, of course, rest with the department of Government hereafter concerned.

In conclusion, it is not to be expected that physiologists will at once accept, in their full extent, all Chittenden's conclusions as to the reduction of the hitherto accepted standards of dietary: they will desire, for example, further evidence as to the effect of the minimal proteid allowances over longer periods of time. But, as Sir Michael Foster points out, there is an accumulation of common experience of the benefits of a lower diet which, though not tested by exact determinations, is an experience of many years, and there can be no doubt that a great advance has already been made towards

* In paragraph 314 of the Report the number of calories is wrongly printed as 2,236.

†The substitution of oatmeal gruel for the cocoa would for an extra 1d. per week raise the value to 2,530 calories and 73 grammes proteid.

bringing the demands of science into accord with such experience.* With the safeguards of the canteen system and of the service of bread in accordance with appetite I am convinced that there need be no hesitation in giving effect to a scheme of dietary on the lines which I have endeavoured to indicate.

* In this connection the Reports of Dr. Edward Smith to the Privy Council (Reports 1862-3) may be usefully studied. Probably no one has more completely investigated the food of the labouring classes of this country. The dietary recommended by Dr. Smith for able-bodied men in workhouses (2,800 calories) is accepted by Sir Michael Foster and Dr. Hopkins as a standard, and is closely accordant with the values obtained in Professor Chittenden's experiments.

It is not too much to hope that in due course the national importance of economy in food will become recognised. "The question of the daily diet is one of the most important for the family of small means. . . . The saving to the community, to the family, might well amount to enough to constitute the difference between pauperism and affluence. The resources of a community, as well as the resources of a family, are not to be lightly thrown away." †

Appendix
XXIX.

ARTHUR DOWNES.

† Physiological Economy in Nutrition, by Russell H. Chittenden, Professor in Yale University, &c., &c. pp. 471-3. (London, 1905.)

TABLES SHOWING THE NUTRITIVE VALUES OF DIETARIES.

(Prepared by Dr. Downes.)

I.—EXISTING DIETARY FOR CASUAL WARDS.

CASUAL PAUPERS WHO REMAIN FOR ONE NIGHT ONLY.	Nutritive Values in Ounces.				Calories.
	Dry weight of food.	Carbo-hydrates.	Fats.	Proteids.
(a) SUPPER—
Males above 15 years of age.
Bread 8 ozs. - - - - - (Grammes)	5·15 (146)	4·53 (128)	·04 (1)	·56 (16)	600·
or Bread 6 oz., gruel 1 pint - - - - - (Grammes)	6·00 (170)	5·06 (143)	·15 (4)	·69 (20)	706·
or Bread 6 oz., broth 1 pint - - - - - (Grammes)	4·10 (116)	3·41 (97)	·17 (5)	·45 (13)	501·
Females above 15 years of age.
Bread 6 ozs., gruel 1 pint - - - - - (Grammes)	6·00 (170)	5·06 (143)	·15 (4)	·69 (20)	706·
or Bread 6 ozs., broth 1 pint - - - - - (Grammes)	4·10 (116)	3·41 (97)	·17 (5)	·45 (13)	501·
(b) BREAKFAST FOR THE ABOVE, SAME AS SUPPER.
CASUAL PAUPERS WHO ARE DETAINED FOR MORE THAN ONE NIGHT.
(a) SUPPER AND BREAKFAST AS ABOVE.
(b) DINNER—
Males above 15 years of age.
Bread 8 ozs., cheese 1½ ozs. - - - - - (Grammes)	6·05 (172)	4·56 (129)	·40 (11)	1·00 (28)	748·
or Bread 6 ozs., soup 1 pint - - - - - (Grammes)	7·44 (211)	4·87 (138)	·46 (13)	1·63 (46)	818·
Females above 15 years of age.
Bread 6 oz., cheese 1½ ozs. - - - - - (Grammes)	4·76 (135)	3·42 (97)	·39 (11)	·86 (24)	598·
or Bread 5 ozs., soup 1 pint - - - - - (Grammes)	6·80 (193)	4·31 (122)	·45 (13)	1·56 (44)	743·

The Order of 1882 provides that the gruel, broth, and soup, are to be made of the same ingredients and in the same proportions as are used in the workhouse for those articles of diet. Under the Workhouse Regulation (Dietaries and Accounts) Order of 1900 the ingredients are prescribed as follows :—

Gruel.		Broth.		Pea soup.*
Name and description of ingredient.	Quantity of each ingredient to one pint.	Name and description of ingredient.	Quantity of each ingredient to one pint.	Name and description of ingredient.	Quantity of each ingredient to one pint.
Oatmeal - - - - -	2 oz.	Bones - - - - -	1½ oz.	Raw beef (free from bone) - - - - -	3 oz.
Treacle - - - - -	½ "	Fresh vegetables - - - - -	½ "	Bones - - - - -	2 "
Water and salt (a sufficiency).		Salt, pepper, herbs (to taste).		Split peas - - - - -	2 "
Allspice (to be used occasionally).		Meat liquor or water (a sufficiency).		Oatmeal - - - - -	½ "
				Vegetables - - - - -	1 "
				Salt, pepper, and herbs (to taste).
				Water (a sufficiency).

* Similar formulæ are prescribed for haricot, lentil, or barley soup.

Appendix
XXIX.

2. SUGGESTED DIETARY FOR CASUAL WARDS.

Adult Males (daily).	Nutritive Values in Ounces.				Calories.
	Dry weight of food.	Carbo-hydrates.	Fats.	Proteids.
BREAKFAST— Bread, 8 ozs. ; margarine, $\frac{3}{4}$ oz. ; cocoa, 1 pint* - - - - - (Grammes)	6.43 (182)	5.06 (143)	.73 (21)	.57 (16)	847
DINNER†— Bread, 8 ozs. ; cheese, 1½ ozs. - - - - - (Grammes)	6.05 (172)	4.56 (129)	.40 (11)	1.00 (28)	748
SUPPER— Bread, 8 ozs. ; margarine, $\frac{3}{4}$ oz. ; potatoes (cooked), 6 ozs. - - - - - (Grammes)	7.33 (208)	5.79 (164)	.74 (21)	.68 (19)	947
Daily Total - - - - - (Grammes)	19.81 (562)	15.41 (436)	1.87 (53)	2.25 (63)	2,542

Salt, 1 oz. per 5 men daily.
* Ingredients for cocoa—Cocoa husk, 1 oz. ; sugar, 4 ozs. ; water, 8 pints.
† It is proposed that on the day of discharge this meal should be given to the vagrant either on his leaving the wards or on application at some specified place (see Chapter VIII. of Report).

3. SUGGESTED DIETARY FOR LABOUR COLONIES.

Males (weekly).	Number of days.	Nutritive Values in Ounces.				Calories.
		Dry weight of food.	Carbo-hydrates.	Fats.	Proteids.
BREAKFAST— Bread, 8 ozs. ; cocoa (made with cocoa husk), 1 pint - - - - -	7	129.60	(Total for the week.) 102.89	8.23	16.22	16014
DINNER— Bread, 8 ozs. ; pea (or lentil) soup, 1 pint - - - - -	2
Bread, 6 ozs. ; cheese, 2 ozs. ; potatoes (cooked), 6 ozs. - - - - -	2
Bread, 2 ozs. ; broth, 1 pint ; suet pudding, 12 ozs. - - - - -	2
Bread, 8 ozs. ; stew, 1 pint - - - - -	1
SUPPER— Bread, 8 ozs. ; cocoa (made with cocoa husk), 1 pint - - - - -	7	18.51 (525)	14.70 (417)	1.18 (33)	2.32 (66)	2288
Daily average - - - - - (Grammes)

Salt for table : 1 oz. per 5 men daily.

INGREDIENT TABLE FOR ABOVE DIETARY.

SOUP.		BROTH.
Name and description of ingredient.	Quantity of each ingredient to a pint.	Name and description of ingredient.	Quantity of each ingredient to a pint.
Raw beef, free from bone - - - - -	1 oz.	Raw meat, free from bone - - - - -	1 oz.
Bones - - - - -	2 "	Bones - - - - -	1½ "
Split peas or lentils - - - - -	2 "	Fresh vegetables - - - - -	½ "
Oatmeal - - - - -	½ "	Salt, pepper and herbs to taste
Vegetables - - - - -	2 "	Meat liquor or water (a sufficiency)
Dripping - - - - -	1 "	(Approximate Cost, $\frac{1}{10}$ d.)*
Salt, pepper and herbs to taste
Water (a sufficiency)
(Approximate Cost, 1 $\frac{1}{10}$ d.)*
STEW.		COCOA.
Raw beef, free from bone - - - - -	1 oz.	Cocoa husk - - - - -	½ oz.
Flour - - - - -	¼ "	Water - - - - -	1 pint.
Peas, split - - - - -	¼ "	(Approximate Cost, $\frac{1}{10}$ d.)*
Scotch barley - - - - -	½ "
Carrots or turnips - - - - -	4 "
Cabbage - - - - -	4 "
Onions - - - - -	1 "
Dripping - - - - -	1 "
Salt, pepper and herbs to taste
Stock or water (a sufficiency)
(Approximate Cost, 1 $\frac{1}{10}$ d.)*
		SUET PUDDING (one pound)
		Flour - - - - -	8 oz.
		Suet (beef) - - - - -	2 "
		Salt to taste
		Water (a sufficiency)
		(Approximate Cost, 1 $\frac{1}{10}$ d.)*

* For provisions only. This estimate is based on the average prices in Metropolitan Workhouses in 1899.

APPENDIX XXX.

Appendix
XXX.

DIETARY IN LOCAL PRISONS FOR MEN UNDER SENTENCES NOT EXCEEDING FOUR MONTHS IMPRISONMENT WITH HARD LABOUR.

1. DIETARY IN FORCE BEFORE 21 APRIL, 1899.

Meals.	Class I. Diet.		Class II. Diet.		Class III. Diet.
Breakfast.	Daily : Bread.	8 oz.	Daily : Bread. Gruel.	6 oz. 1 pt.	Daily : Bread. Gruel.	8 oz. 1 pt.
Dinner.	Daily : Stirabout.	1½ pts.	Sunday : Bread. Suet Pudding.	6 oz. 8 "	Sunday : Bread. Potatoes. Suet Pudding.	4 oz. 8 " 8 "
			Monday : Bread. Potatoes.	6 oz. 8 "	Monday : Bread. Potatoes. Cooked Beef, without bone.	8 oz. 8 " 3 "
			Tuesday : Bread. Soup.	6 oz. pt.	Tuesday : Bread. Potatoes. Soup.	8 oz. 8 " ¾ pt.
			Wednesday : Bread. Suet Pudding.	6 oz. 8 "	Wednesday : Bread. Potatoes. Suet Pudding.	4 oz. 8 " 8 "
			Thursday : Bread. Soup.	6 oz. ½ pt.	Thursday : Bread. Potatoes. Soup.	8 oz. 8 " ¾ pt.
			Friday : Bread. Potatoes.	6 oz. 8 "	Friday : Bread. Potatoes. Cooked Beef, without bone.	8 oz. 8 " 3 "
			Saturday : Bread. Soup.	6 oz. ½ pt.	Saturday : Bread. Potatoes. Soup.	8 oz. 8 " ¾ pt.
Supper.	Daily : Bread.	8 oz.	Daily : Bread. Gruel.	6 oz. 1 pt.	Daily : Bread. Gruel.	6 oz. 1 pt.

Application of above Dietary.

Term.	Class I.	Class II.	Class III.
Seven days and under	Whole term	—	—
More than 7 days and not more than } 1 month.	Seven days.	Remainder of term	—
More than 1 month and not more } than 4 months.	—	One month	Remainder of term

2. DIETARY ESTABLISHED IN APRIL, 1899.

(Rule made by the Secretary of State on 21st April, 1899.)

Appendix
XXX.

(1.) The diets of Class I, and Class II, set out in the rules made by the Secretary of State on the 18th March, 1878, are hereby cancelled, and the following diet, Class A, is substituted:—

Meals.	Class A.
	—	Men.	Women and Juveniles under 16 years of age.
Breakfast - - -	Daily : Bread - - - - - Gruel - - - - -	8 oz. 1 pt.	6 oz. 1 pt.
Dinner - - -	Sunday : Bread - - - - - Suet pudding - - -	8 oz. 8 oz.	6 oz. 6 oz.
	Monday : Bread - - - - - Potatoes - - - - -	8 oz. 8 oz.	6 oz. 8 oz.
	Tuesday : Bread - - - - - Porridge - - - - -	8 oz. 1 pt.	6 oz. 1 pt.
	Wednesday : Bread - - - - - Suet pudding - - -	8 oz. 8 oz.	6 oz. 6 oz.
	Thursday : Bread - - - - - Porridge - - - - -	8 oz. 1 pt.	6 oz. 1 pt.
	Friday : Bread - - - - - Potatoes - - - - -	8 oz. 8 oz.	6 oz. 8 oz.
	Saturday : Bread - - - - - Porridge - - - - -	8 oz. 1 pt.	6 oz. 1 pt.
	Daily : Bread - - - - - Gruel - - - - -	8 oz. 1 pt.	6 oz. 1 pt.
Supper - - - -	Daily : Bread - - - - - Gruel - - - - -	8 oz. 1 pt.	6 oz. 1 pt.

(2.) Juvenile offenders, under 16 years of age, may, in addition to any of the diets to which they are entitled under the rules, be allowed milk, not exceeding one pint per diem, at the discretion of the Medical Officer

(3.) The diets of all male prisoners after the first seven days shall be those laid down in Class III, and Class IV, of the dietaries set out in the rules made by the Secretary of State on the 18th March, 1878, for prisoners sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour, according to length of sentence or imprisonment ; provided that the allowance of bread for supper in Class III diet shall be 8 ounces instead of 6 ounces. During the first seven days, prisoners awaiting trial, offenders of the first division who do not maintain themselves, offenders of the second division, debtors and surety prisoners, shall receive Class III diet for prisoners sentenced to hard labour ; provided that during the whole of their imprisonment they shall be allowed half-a-pint of cocoa for breakfast and half-a-pint for supper in lieu of gruel.

(4.) The subjoined table shall be substituted for that contained in the rules made by the Secretary of State on the 18th March, 1878, setting out the terms to which the prison diets shall be severally applied :—

Term.	Class A.	Class III.	Class IV.
Seven days and under - - - - -	Whole term.	—	—
More than 7 days and not more than 4 months	Seven days.	Remainder of term.	—
More than 4 months - - - - -	—	Four months.	Remainder of term.

3. DIETARY NOW IN FORCE.

(Established in September, 1901.)

Appendix
XXX.

Meals.	Diet A.		Diet B.
Break-fast.	Daily :		Daily :
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	8 oz.
	Gruel - - -	1 pint	Gruel - - -	1 pint
Dinner	Sunday :		Sunday :
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Porridge - - -	1 pint	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Cooked Meat, pre- served by heat -	4 "
	Monday :		Monday :
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Potatoes - - -	8 "	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Beans - - -	10 "
			Fat Bacon - - -	2 "
	Tuesday :		Tuesday :
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Porridge - - -	1 pint	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Soup - - -	1 pint
	Wednesday :		Wednesday :
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Suet Pudding - -	8 "	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Suet Pudding - -	10 "
	Thursday :		Thursday :
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Potatoes - - -	8 "	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Cooked Beef, without bone - - -	4 "
	Friday :		Friday :
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Porridge - - -	1 pint	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Soup - - -	1 pint
	Saturday :		Saturday :
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	6 oz.
	Suet Pudding - -	8 "	Potatoes - - -	8 "
			Suet Pudding - -	10 "
Supper	Daily :—		Daily :—
	Bread - - -	8 oz.	Bread - - -	8 oz.
	Gruel - - -	1 pint	Porridge - - -	1 pint

Application of above Dietary.

Term.	Diet A.	Diet B.
Seven days and under- - - - -	Whole term.	—
More than seven days and not more than four months.	Seven days.	Remainder of term.

Appendix
XXX.

Diet for Day of First Reception in Prison.

Breakfast.	Dinner.	Supper.
Bread - - - - 8 oz.	Bread - - - - - 12 oz.	Bread - - - - 8 oz.
Cocoa - - - - 1 pint	Cooked meat preserved by heat - 4 „	Porridge - - - - 1 pint

This diet applies to all prisoners on first reception, whether convicted or unconvicted. It was prescribed by the Rule of 2nd September, 1901, and is practically identical with the admission diet prescribed by the Rule of 17th March, 1892.

COST OF CASUAL WARDS.

(Statements handed in by Mr. Brook Kitchen.)

1. METROPOLITAN UNIONS.

Date of Approval by Local Government Board.	Union.	Accommodation provided.			Cost.*	Cost per head.	Price per foot cube.	Whether disinfecter provided.	Description.
		Cells.	Associated wards.	Total.
1886 - -	Wandsworth	42 Men 9 Women 4 Women with children*	No Associated ward Day rooms only	42 17 — 59 —	£ 6,361	£ 108	s. d. 0 8½	Fumigating chamber in basement.	Male attendant's room, female attendant's room, and assistant's room, kitchen, and 2 stores. Basement includes heating chamber and laundry. Mainly 2 stories high ; back cells 1 storey
1893 - -	Poplar	48 Men 8 Women 3 Women with children*	No Associated ward or Day rooms	48 14 — 62 —	13,615	219	1 8½	Yes, in heating chamber	Includes oakum store, drying room, attendants' rooms, office, and kitchen. Laundry, heating chamber in basement. Building 2 stories in height.
1894 - -	S. George-in-the-East	84 Men 14 Women 4 Women with children*	No Associated ward Day rooms only	84 22 — 106 —	18,036	170	1 5½	Yes	Self-contained. Superintendent's sitting room and bedrooms. Heating and laundry in basement.
1895 - -	S. Pancras	48 Men 12 Women 6 Women with children*	No Associated ward Day rooms only	48 24 — 72 —	11,500	160	1 0½	Yes	Self-contained, separate shelter or waiting space for men and women tramps. Superintendent's quarters include sitting room and 2 bedrooms, assistant superintendent's office, sitting room, bedroom. Heating chamber and laundry in basement. Mainly 2 stories. Separate building providing 23 corn grinding cubicles.
1896 - -	Paddington	50 Men 11 Women 4 Women with children*	No Associated ward One Day room for men Two dayrooms for women.	50 19 — 69 —	13,442	195	1 3	Yes, in basement	Self-contained, includes office, attendant's room, kitchen, scullery, store, day rooms for men and women. Ground and first floor—men's cells and attendant's quarters ; second floor—women's cells. Basement—heating chamber, separate wash house for men and women. Cells in 3 stories.

* Cells for women with children are reckoned as accommodating 2 persons.

METROPOLITAN UNIONS—continued.

Date of Approval by Local Government Board.	Union.	Accommodation provided.			Cost.	Cost per head.	Price per foot cube.	Whether disinfector provided.	Description.
		Cells.	Associated wards.	Total
1899	Hackney	62 Men 32 Women 6 Women with children*	No Associated ward Day rooms only	62 44 — 106 —	£ 36,710 1,000* — 35,710	£ 346	s. d. 2 1½ above founda- tions.	Yes, in laundry	Self-contained; two attendants' rooms and office, attendant's bedroom and sitting room, kitchen and bath room on first floor. Building 3 stories, no basement. Boiler house, disinfectant and laundry in detached building. Extra cost in respect of work in connection with able-bodied inmates test house (not carried out). *For foundations 14 feet deep. Water supply in large tanks for whole estate. Includes walling round whole estate about 12 feet high.
1901	Holborn	48 Men 24 Women 4 Women with children*	No Associated ward Day rooms only	48 32 — 80 —	13,031	163	1 4½	Yes	Self-contained; includes accommodation for superintendent, matron, night porter and porter's day room. Boiler house, laundry, disinfectant in basement and lower ground floor. Building 3 stories in height.
1901	Stepney	34 Men 4 Women with children*	Day room for men. Waiting room and Associated ward for 14 women	34 22 — 56	8,700	156	1 6	Yes	Self-contained; includes superintendent's office and kitchen, scullery, assistant's sitting room, bedroom, inmates' kitchen on women's side. First floor—women's cells, waiting room, superintendent's bedroom, and associated ward. Heating chamber in basement. Building 2 stories in height.

* Cells for women with children are reckoned as accommodating 2 persons.

	£	s.	d.
Note.—Average cost per head including Hackney	-	-	-
" " excluding "	-	-	-
" " "	189	10	0
" " "	167	0	0

2.—PROVINCIAL UNIONS.

Date of Approval by Local Government Board.	Union.	Accommodation provided.			Cost.	Cost per head.		Price per foot cube.	Whether disinfectant provided.	Remarks.
		Cells.	Associated wards.	Total.		£	s. d.
1895 - -	Halifax -	45 Men 12 Women 4 Women with children	1 Day room 2 Associated wards for 26 Men, 9 Women	96	£ 6,350	66	0 0	d. —	Yes	Cells in one storey, separate building for women. Attendant's house, 3 bedrooms, &c. Vagrants' waiting room, clothes-drying room, attendant's room, rug store. Two Association wards for men in addition to day room. Heating in basement.
1895 - -	Rugby -	16 Men 3 Women	4 Men 4 Women	27	2,156	80	0 0	—	Yes : single room	Includes attendant's office, living room and bedroom. Heating chamber.
1896 - -	Farnham -	8 Men	22 Men	30	1,650	55	0 0	—	Drying room	Single storey, includes porter's room, waiting room. Heating chamber in basement.
1896 - -	Prestwich -	35 Men 5 Women 2 Women with children	26 Men 13 Women	81	12,000	148	0 0	11½	Large drying room and stove space	Cells in 3 distinct buildings connected by short lobbies to administrative portion of building. Two receiving rooms for men and women. Search rooms, waiting rooms, general kitchen, and private apartments for attendants, including parlour, kitchen, scullery, and 4 bedrooms on first floor. Heating chamber in basement.
1897 - -	Bedwelty -	6 Men	6 Men	12	1,000	83	0 0	—	Fumigating chamber	Single storey, includes attendant's room and bedroom. Store. Heating chamber in basement.
1897 - -	Howden -	6 Men 5 Women	10 Men	21	1,250	60	0 0	—	No	Two Attendants' bedrooms. Heating chamber.
1897 - -	Easingwold -	12 Men	6 Men in day room	18 Men	1,700	94	0 0	—	Yes : single room	Attendant's room. Boiler house in basement.
1897 - -	Hendon -	26 Men	Very small day room	26 Men	2,500	92	0 0	—	Yes : double chamber	One storey, including waiting room, small day room, office. Heating chamber in basement.
1897 - -	Merthyr Tydvil -	11 Men	7 Men	18 Men	1,200	66	10 0	—	Yes	No attendant's room.
1897 - -	Warwick -	12 Men	2 wards, 14 in each for men 2 wards for women, 9 in each	58	3,000	52	0 0	10	Fumigating room in detached building	Includes one room for attendant with scullery, two drying rooms. Boiler house in basement.
1897 - -	Tavistock -	15 Men	—	15 Men	500	33	0 0	6½	Fumigating room	Heating chamber not shown.
1897 - -	Williton -	6 Men	—	6 Men	363 13 0	60	12 0	—	Fumigating room in old building	Heating chamber. No attendant's room.

COST OF CASUAL WARDS—continued.
PROVINCIAL UNIONS—continued.

Date of Approval by Local Government Board.	Union.	Accommodation provided.			Cost.	Cost per head.		Price per foot cube.	Whether disinfect provided.	Remarks.
		Cells.	Associated wards.	Total.		£	s. d.
1897 - -	Shepton Mallet -	9 Men		9 Men	£ 400	44	10 0	d. 3 ³ / ₄	Single chamber	No attendant's room. Heating chamber in basement.
1898 - -	Drayton - -	14 Men	8 Men 11 Women	33	1,700	51	10 0	6	Yes : double chamber in detached block	Includes office, male attendant's room, female attendant's room, 1 day room for men and 1 for women. Drying room and heating chamber in basement.
1898 - -	Pewsey - -	10 Men	8 Men 5 Women	23	900	39	0 0	—	Fumigating room	Mainly one storey ; includes waiting rooms for men and women. Heating chamber and two waiting rooms.
1899 - -	King's Norton -	25 Men 8 Women 2 Women with children	14 Men	49	5,500	112	0 0	—	Yes : double room in basement	2 storied building ; includes, on ground floor, office, attendant's sitting room, kitchen, &c., and inmates washhouse. On first floor, women's cells, waiting room, stores, 2 bedrooms and bath room for offices. Heating chamber and disinfecting rooms in basement.
1899 - -	Horncastle - -	6 Men	9 Men 8 Women	23	760	33	0 0	—	Fumigating room	1 storey building ; includes attendant's room, waiting room for men, 2 drying chambers, 2 stores, Heating chambers.
1899 - -	Stratford-on-Avon	8 Men	16 Men	24	1,500	62	10 0	—	Drying room	Attendant's room and heating chamber.
1899 - -	Yeovil - -	6 Men	—	6 Men	325	54	0 0	—	No	No attendant's room. Boiler room and drying room.
1899 - -	Lichfield - -	38 Men	8 Men	46	4,500	98	0 0	—	Two chambers (steam apparatus)	2 stories ; includes waiting room, office, day room : on first floor, 2 stores and attendant's bedroom.
1900 - -	Plympton - -	8 Men	8 Men 4 Women	20	935	96	15 0	—	Yes : single room	Includes attendant's room, padded room, men's day room, in addition to Associated ward. Heating chamber.
1900 - -	Kettering - -	11 Men 2 Women	12 Women	25	1,200	48	0 0	6	Fumigating room	One storey ; includes office, waiting lobby, store, drying room. Heating chamber in basement.
1901 - -	Leeds - -	40 Men 10 Women	6 Men, 2 in observa- tion ward. 8 Women, 1 Sick cell	67	10,342	154	0 0	5 ³ / ₄	Yes	20 separate stone breaking cells, kitchen, laundry, disinfectant and attendant's house.
1901 - -	Wells - -	8 Men	Small day room 3 Men	11 Men	937	85	0 0	—	Yes : single room	Includes attendant's room, drying room. No heating chamber shown.

Date of Approval by Local Government Board.	Union.	Accommodation provided.			Cost.	Cost per head.		Price per foot cube.	Whether disinfectant provided.	Remarks.
		Cells.	Associated wards.	Total.		£	s. d.
1901 - -	Newcastle - -	32 Men 10 Women	14 Men	56	8,096	145	0 0	s. d. 1 3½	2 fumigating rooms	Includes porter's accommodation, living room, scullery and 2 bedrooms. Heating chamber in basement under porter's house. Includes a mortuary.
1901 - -	Stockton - -	12 Men	—	12 Men	1,953	163	0 0	—	Fumigating room	Includes 2 rooms for attendants, heating room, and drying room.
1902 - -	Brentford - -	23 Men 7 Women	10 Men 10 Women	50	5,828	116	10 0	—	Yes	Includes disinfecting rooms, drying room, master and matron's accommodation, 3 bedrooms, and sitting room. Separately heated.
1902 - -	Evesham - -	12 Men 3 Women 3 Women with children	12 Men 12 Women	42	3,750	89	10 0	—	Yes	One storey; includes office, 2 attendants' rooms, drying room, washhouse, 2 rug stores, detached wood shed and sanitary accommodation. Heating chamber in basement.
1902 - -	Newton Abbot - -	12 Men 2 Women	10 Men 10 Women	34	3,000	88	0 0	—	Yes	Includes disinfectant house and accommodation for caretaker, kitchen, living room, 2 bedrooms, and bath-room. Separate heating.
1902 - -	Ware - -	10 Men 4 Women	12 Men	26	3,360	129	0 0	11½	Yes	Includes porter's accommodation, living-room, office and bedroom. Boilerhouse and washhouse in basement.
1902 - -	Haltwhistle - -	12 Men	16 Men	28 Men	1,400	50	0 0	—	Drying closet	1 storey; includes attendant's room, small store. Boilerhouse.
1903 - -	Biggleswade - -	12 Men 3 Women	4 Men	19	1,900	100	0 0	—	Yes	One storey; includes attendant's rooms. Drying room.
1903 - -	Luton - -	16 Men	10 Men	26 Men	1,500	57	10 0	7	Yes: single chamber	Mainly one storey; includes on ground floor attendant's room, store; on first floor, 2 bedrooms and store. Heating in basement.
1904 - -	Stone - -	12 Men	10 Men	22 Men	1,272	58	0 0	—	Yes: 2 chambers (steam apparatus)	One storey; includes attendant's room, bedroom reception room, store. Boilerhouse and coal stores in basement.

NOTE.—Average cost per head, £92 10s.

3. TRADES UNION PRICES IN 1905,
ILLUSTRATING THE VARIATION IN COST OF BUILDING IN DIFFERENT LOCALITIES.

	Masons.	Bricklayers.	Carpenters.	Plasterers.	Plumbers.	Painters.
	d.	d.	d.	d.	d.	d.
London - - -	10½	10½	10½	11	11	No fixed scale
Croydon - - - -	10½	10	9½-10	10½-11	10½-11	7
Rochester - - - -	9	9	8½	9	8½	7
Romford - - - -	10	9	9	10	10	7
Manchester - - -	9½	10	9	10	9½	8½
Birmingham - -	10	9½	9	10	9½	8½
Sheffield - - -	9½	9½	9	9	9	7
Liverpool - - - -	9½	9½	9	9½	9½	8½
Derby - - - -	9	9	8½	9	8½	7½
Cardiff - - - -	9	9	9	9	9	8
Reading - - - -	8½	8½	8½	9	8½	6½-7
Newcastle - - - -	10	10	10	10	9	9
Gloucester - - -	7½	8	8	7½	8	7½
Yarmouth - - - -	7½	7½	7½	Done by bricklayers.	7½	6
Exeter - - - -	8	8	7½	7½	7	6
Plymouth - - - -	8	8	8	8	8	7
Keswick - - - -	7	7	7	7	7	7
Cirencester - - -	6-6½	7-7½	6	6	6½	5½
Stroud - - - -	6	6½	6	6	7	6
Abergavenny - - -	7½	7½	7	6½	7	6 & 6½
Wisbech - - - -	6	6½	6½	Done by bricklayers.	7	5½
Crediton - - - -	5-7	5-7	5-6½	5-7½	5-6½	5-6
Bridgwater - - -	6½	6½	6	6½	6	6
St. Austell - - -	5½	5½	5	6½	5	5
Lyme Regis - - -	6-7	6-7	5½-6	6-7	6	5-6
Pontypool - - - -	8½	8½		8	Not given.	Not given.

4. TEST HOUSES.

	Date of Approval by Local Government Board.		Accommodation	Total cost.	Cost per head.
Chorlton and Man- chester	1900		686	£41,233	£60
Sheffield	1896		240	£9,990	£41 13s. 4d.
West Derby (Classi- fication House)	Old Workhouse	1889	676	Up to 1904 - £91,527
	Additions	1904	324	Additions £21,700
			1,000	£113,227	£113
West Derby (Vag- rant Wards)	1904		480	£38,050	£80

SKETCH PLAN OF LABOUR COLONY
119 BEDS.

TOTAL COST BUILDINGS ONLY
£ 6396 OR £53 PER BED.

APPENDIX XXXII.

Appendix
XXXII.

VAGRANCY IN MANCHESTER.

(Memorandum prepared by Mr. R. Peacock, Chief Constable.)

Vagrancy is divided broadly by the Statutes into three classes, viz., idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues.

These three classes are again sub-divided under many heads and the different offences are enumerated in the Vagrant Act of 1824. The administration of the law of vagrancy is divided between the poor law authorities and the police, although the latter have, in practice, to assist in the enforcement of the whole of the law respecting vagrants.

The portion of the vagrant laws allocated for administration to the poor law authorities is that dealing with neglect of wife and family, and such kindred offences as render the persons concerned or their dependents to become chargeable to the Local Union.

The offences which come direct and solely within the province of the police jurisdiction are :—

- (a) Peddling without a licence.
- (b) Prostitutes behaving indecently.
- (c) Begging.
- (d) Fortune telling.
- (e) Exhibiting obscene pictures.
- (f) Indecently exposing person.
- (g) Exposing wounds.
- (h) Fraudulently collecting alms.
- (i) Gaming in public places.
- (j) Being in possession of burgling instruments, or being armed for the purpose of committing felony.
- (k) Being found in enclosed premises.
- (l) Being a convicted thief and frequenting for the purpose of committing a felony.
- (m) Wandering abroad without any visible means of subsistence.

So far as I am aware, speaking generally, no difficulty has been experienced by the police in dealing with any of the offences enumerated above, with the exception of "Wandering abroad without any visible means of subsistence."

This offence is more commonly known as "sleeping out," and is principally committed by what are known as tramps.

There are always a large number of tramps passing through Manchester, either on their way north or working southwards through the Midlands. During the cold months of the year the tramps generally frequent the numerous brick fields on the outskirts of the city, and not only sleep there within the warmth of the brick kilns but do a considerable amount of damage to the brick making plant, and to the bricks, etc., in process of manufacture. As a result of such damage and the consequent complaints made to the police by the brick manufacturers, the police periodically raid the brick crofts, as they are called locally, and large numbers of tramps are taken before the city justices. As a rule the men found sleeping on the brick crofts are of the undoubted tramp class, but towards the latter portion of 1902 the police noticed there was a larger proportion than hitherto of men, whom the police had reason to believe were working men out of employment, willing and anxious to work if they could obtain employment, and it was recognised that their position as sleepers out was due to circumstances over which they had no control and for which they were not responsible.

At this period, the beginning of winter, 1902, the arrest of persons in Manchester for sleeping out averaged the alarming total of 200 per month.

The result of enquiries from :—

Newcastle-upon-Tyne,
Sheffield,
Birmingham,
Liverpool,
Bradford (Yorkshire),
Edinburgh,
Nottingham,
Bristol, and
Leeds,

showed that the number of vagrants was exceptionally large in Manchester, and that in no other large town had the average arrests of persons for sleeping out been more than thirty per month.

There are in the city of Manchester 155 common lodging-houses with accommodation for 6,205 lodgers, and the average number of persons lodged each night in these common lodging-houses is 4,964. The number of common lodging-houses and the accommodation for the above sexes is as follows :—

	For men only.	For women only.	For men and women.
Number of Lodging-houses - -	114	16	25
Number of Beds - - - -	5341	379	485

A charge is made varying from 3d. to 6d. per night per bed, and these common lodging houses are frequented principally by the tramp class.

In addition to the common lodging-houses, registered by the local authority and inspected by the police, homes or shelters are provided by various philanthropic institutions and societies as follows :—

Name and Address.	Number of Beds.	Male or Female.	Number of Free Beds.	Number of other Beds.	Average nightly number of Lodgers.
The Church Army Home, 3, Moulton Street, Strange-ways.	75	Men	75	—	72
The Church Army, Smedley Lane, Cheetham - -	28	Men	28	—	28
The Church Army, 122, Upper Brook Street - -	45	Men	25	20	45
The Jewish Strangers' Home, 21, North Street, Cheetham.	8	Men	8	—	6
Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, Great Ducie Street	12	Women	12	—	8
The Central Hall Home, Hood Street - - - -	330	Men	200	130	260
Home for Needy Jews, 280, Cheetham Hill Road -	26	Both sexes	26	—	12
Wood Street Mission, Deansgate - - - - -	24	Women and homeless boys	24	—	20
The Night Asylum, Byrom Street, kept by the Society of Friends.	34	Women and men	34	—	34
The Salvation Army Home, Chepstow Street - -	202	Men	52	150	202
The Church Rescue Home, 54, Upper Brook Street -	7	Women	7	—	7
The St. Vincent Catholic Shelter, St. Vincent Street, New Islington.	8	Women	8	—	6
Walton House, kept by the Sanitary Committee, Harrison Street.	363	Men	None	363	330

Appendix
XXXII.

To meet the exceptional distress which existed in the town, one charitable organisation opened a special shelter with accommodation of upwards of 300 persons per night, and also provided a substantial meal. The effect was somewhat surprising. The accommodation provided was taken advantage of to the fullest extent, but the applicants were almost entirely of the tramp class and not of the genuine out-of-workers. The existence of this free shelter became speedily known amongst the tramp fraternity generally, with the result that tramps flocked into the city in greater numbers than ever previously. Further, the common lodging-houses which had previously been patronised by some of the tramps as long as they had sufficient money to pay for a bed were now almost empty, and the proprietors of the common lodging-houses affected protested to the lodging house inspector against the establishment of this free shelter. An inspection of the common lodging-houses by the police proved the statements of the proprietors that in some instances they had considerably less than their usual number of beds occupied, and an inspection of the free shelter convinced the police that a large number of applicants for the free shelter were men whom they knew to habitually stay in the common lodging-houses.

SUMMARY OF REPLIES AS TO NUMBER AND TREATMENT OF TRAMPS IN THE PRINCIPAL TOWNS.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, eight per month. No shelters provided for adults, but accommodation provided for 100 juveniles per night.

Sheffield.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, thirty per month. No shelter provided.

Glasgow.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, sixteen per month. A shelter is provided by a charitable association in which homeless persons are received from 7 to 10 p.m. Free supper and breakfast are provided ; no task is imposed ; and the shelter is under the supervision of the Corporation.

Birmingham.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, twenty-five per month. No shelters provided.

Liverpool.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, thirty per month. A shelter to accommodate fifty is provided by the Food and Betterment Association ; also a perambulating coffee cart.

Bradford.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, two per month. The Salvation Army provide a shelter, and there is a women's home and shelter to which destitute women are admitted free.

Edinburgh.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, twelve per month. Two night shelters are provided by charitable associations. One shelter will accommodate sixty men and thirty women, and the other twelve men and thirty women. Only one night's shelter per month is given to the same person, with the exception that persons admitted on Saturday night are allowed to remain until Monday morning. A meal of porridge and milk is provided night and morning. There are no beds, but each person is supplied with two rugs.

Nottingham.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, four per month. No shelter provided.

Bristol.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, twelve per month. No shelter provided.

Leeds.—Average number of persons charged with sleeping out, seven per month, but this number is stated not to represent the actual state of vagrancy and sleeping out in the city, which is much greater than is indicated by the number of arrests. No special provision is made by the Corporation or other body for the accommodation of vagrants and persons sleeping out.

ADMISSIONS TO CASUAL WARDS.

The number of tramps admitted to the casual wards in each of the four weeks in December last and in each of the four weeks in the month of May last was as follows :—

Week-ended.	Males.	Females.	Children.	Total.
Dec. 3, 1904 - - - -	1,471	31	6	1,508
„ 10, „ - - - -	1,440	52	9	1,501
„ 17, „ - - - -	1,402	34	5	1,441
„ 24, „ - - - -	1,645	44	5	1,694
May 6, 1905 - - - -	1,193	55	8	1,256
„ 13, „ - - - -	959	59	19	1,037
„ 20, „ - - - -	907	52	5	964
„ 27, „ - - - -	1,001	45	14	1,060

Number and Ages of Persons arrested for Begging in Manchester during the Five Years ended 31st December, 1904 ; and the Sentences imposed on such persons by the Magistrates.

Year.	Arrests.			Discharged.		Convicted.		Age and Sex of Persons Arrested.												Sentences.
	Total.	Males.	Females.	Males.		Females.		12 to 16.	16 to 21.		21 to 30.		30 to 40.		40 to 50.		50 to 60.		60 and over.		3 months and over 2.	2 months and over 1.	1 month and over 14 days.	14 days and under.	To Reformatory School.	Fined.
				Males.	Females.	M.	F.		M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.
1900 - -	376	283	93	103	37	56	3	0	4	0	31	0	67	13	55	32	56	10	67	38	11	4	94	114	3	10
1901 - -	528	431	97	167	37	60	4	0	17	0	28	12	95	16	98	21	52	8	137	38	10	2	125	174	1	12
1902 - -	486	406	80	173	35	45	1	0	14	1	44	8	69	13	55	22	57	17	166	19	7	2	84	168	1	16
1903 - -	678	565	113	277	58	55	3	0	15	0	20	2	143	17	152	28	101	31	131	35	7	6	100	216	0	14
1904 - -	785	672	113	234	47	66	3	0	22	0	81	10	130	16	117	19	101	33	218	35	16	5	144	315	4	20

Number and Ages of Persons arrested for Sleeping Out in Manchester during the Five Years ended 31st December, 1904 ; and the Sentences imposed on such Persons by the Magistrates.

Year.	Arrests.			Discharged.		Convicted.		Ages and Sex of Persons arrested.												Sentences.
	Total.	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.	Males.	Females.	12 to 16.	16 to 21.		21 to 30.		30 to 40.		40 to 50.		50 to 60.	60 and over.		3 months and over 2.	2 months and over 1.	1 month and over 14 days.	14 days and under.	To Reformatory School.	Fined.
									M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.	M.	F.		M.	F.
1900 - -	237	209	28	63	10	18	2	0	32	0	53	7	48	7	30	4	24	5	20	5	1	5	16	135	4	3
1901 - -	546	516	30	113	10	20	6	0	54	3	122	6	143	3	100	4	56	10	35	4	1	1	53	361	3	4
1902 - -	965	914	51	200	11	40	10	0	94	4	216	12	270	8	178	14	91	10	55	3	12	1	87	644	7	3
1903 - -	1,147	1,079	68	347	27	41	4	0	112	5	360	5	332	20	138	18	93	14	40	6	7	16	125	618	2	5
1904 - -	890	855	35	383	17	18	4	0	78	1	268	11	264	7	123	1	53	13	65	2	2	24	118	339	2	5

Appendix
XXXII.

These Returns show that the great majority of the tramps dealt with were persons of thirty years of age and upwards, and an intimate knowledge of them proves that for the most part they were able, but unwilling, to earn an honest livelihood by work.

A close scrutiny of the tramps locked up in the city of Manchester during the period named above shows that over 50 per cent. were known to have been previously convicted under the Vagrancy Act, and there were strong reasons to believe that at least another 30 per cent. had been convicted elsewhere. There has been a very small proportion indeed of persons amongst them who could be regarded as working men out of employment and anxious to work.

The only gratifying feature about the Returns is that whereas nearly 30 per cent. of the persons arrested for begging were females, there were hardly 6 per cent. of females amongst the persons arrested for sleeping out. Another feature in connection with the tramps that pass through the hands of the police is that, with very few exceptions, they belong to the unskilled labouring class.

An examination of the figures in the Returns show that the arrests are most numerous in the winter months. This is due to the fact that in the winter season the tramps flock to large towns such as Manchester, where they can obtain warm sleeping quarters in the various brick-yards, boiler houses, and different buildings connected with factories and workshops; also they can generally obtain free meals, which are provided by the various philanthropic societies in Manchester during the cold season. In the summer months they migrate to the country and spend the summer months in tramping in country districts, doing an occasional day's work on the farms and sleeping out in the open when the weather is good.

Bad trade no doubt affects the number of tramps on the road, but whether trade is good or bad the genuine tramp remains and continues a tramp.

Reference has already been made to the system in Manchester of making frequent raids upon sleepers out, but it should be explained that the number arrested practically represent the tramp class, because the police who make the raids exercise discretion and refrain from locking up persons who, from their general appearance, the police believe to be genuine working men seeking employment, and compelled to sleep out from no inclination or fault of their own.

The principal difficulty the police have to contend with in dealing with the tramp question is the inconsistent policy pursued by the magistrates, not only in adjacent and different towns, but by the magistrates sitting on different days in the same town, in their treatment of the tramps brought before them.

Even in Manchester there is a want of consistency in dealing with the tramps. Some benches will rigidly enforce the Vagrancy Act in regard to every batch of tramps brought before them; other benches, with what can only be regarded as mistaken leniency and sympathy, will discharge all tramps brought before them, usually upon the tramps promising to leave the town. This inconsistency in the magisterial treatment of tramps increases the difficulties of the police, and the evils of the tramp system.

I am of opinion that if some means could be adopted by which the present Vagrancy Laws could be consistently and uniformly enforced, preferably by the magistrates throughout the country committing to prison all tramps who are proved to be such, the tramp question would be largely solved so far as the police are concerned. I venture to think that if this suggestion were adopted there would soon be comparatively few genuine tramps in the country, as they would then either take casual employment and have a more or less fixed abode at some common lodging-house, or they would render themselves chargeable to the poor law guardians, who are best fitted under the present circumstances to deal with them.

With regard to the establishment of labour colonies it has been suggested that a solution of the difficulty lies in that direction. I do not, however, know of any scheme in existence in England that would quite meet the difficulty. Following the investigation of the Special Committee upon sleeping out by the Manchester Corporation, another Special Committee was appointed to deal with the question of the establishment of a Labour Registry.

I was associated with both Committees in their investigations, and have myself visited one or two labour colonies in England, and also obtained information as to the method and result of working the principal labour colonies on the continent. The labour colonies as at present constituted, and with their very limited disciplinary powers, do not seem to me to meet the case of tramps. The labour colonies seem more suitable, and certainly have achieved more satisfactory results, as a means of reforming those who have fallen, that is to say, their best results have been obtained in the reclaiming of men who have once been workers, but who have fallen very low, and may perhaps have degenerated into little better than tramps, but nevertheless are not the genuine tramps. I regard as a genuine tramp the man who has no fixed abode, who tramps the country, sleeps where he can, feeds where he can, and does not want and will not have regular work, or even casual work of any description if he can help it. The labour colonies as established in this country, are not suitable for this class of men; nothing less than strong repressive disciplinary and even penal measures will make the tramp work, and in the absence of statutory powers, I do not see how you can work labour colonies on those lines. In a labour colony to have successful results the persons detained therein must have some inclination to work, and in the genuine tramp not only the inclination, but the firm determination of the man, is not to work. As I have remarked, to benefit the genuine tramp by a course of confinement in a labour colony you must grant very strong disciplinary measures to the authorities in charge of the colony. The present system may be adequate to deal with persons who have a desire to reform and raise themselves, but it is not endowed with sufficient powers to deal with lazy and more or less refractory persons who will only work under compulsion. I am certainly strongly in favour of labour colonies for the redemption of persons who have fallen, and think they would prove a very satisfactory solution of the tramp difficulty, if sufficiently strong powers could be given the management to enforce the necessary discipline any successful scheme would require.

Another suggestion, is that the way ticket or travelling ticket contains the solution of the tramp difficulty. I am not fully acquainted with the details of the proposed system, but I understand that the suggestion is that a travelling pass or ticket should be issued by the police to every tramp; that the tramp should report himself to the police authorities of each district wherein he stays the night; and that each local authority should establish a labour bureau and endeavour to find employment for the travelling tramps. There is also, I understand, a system that free meals should be provided in connection with the travelling ticket.

I have had some experience in the conduct of a Municipal Labour Bureau or Registry. The corporation of the city of Manchester established a labour registry in December, 1903, and the control was placed under my supervision. A condition of registration was a twelve months' residence in the city. Notwithstanding this somewhat stringent regulation during the first period that registry was in operation, viz., from the 28th December, 1903, to the 7th of May, 1904, no less than 6,337 persons registered themselves as out-of-work and desirous of employment. Of that number 503 were found permanent employment and 329 temporary employment. A female branch of the registry was opened on the 25th of March, 1904, and was closed on the 7th of May, 1904. During that period 633 females registered their names, and 102 were found employment, much of which was of a temporary nature. The Male Labour Bureau was re-opened on the 21st November, 1904, and from that date to the 27th May last 7,424 males registered their names. Relief work was provided by the corporation for 833 men for three days per week, at 5d. per hour, which averaged about 11s. 3d. per week. Apart from the relief work 133 men and boys were found permanent situations and 757 temporary employment. I quote these figures to show that in a large city like Manchester, where a bureau was established by the municipality and was supported by many of the large employers, work could only be found for a very small percentage of the persons registered, and the persons registered were, without exception, ratepayers and citizens. This being so, I do not see what beneficial results could be expected from a bureau established for tramps. In my opinion the difficulty could be met only by the establishment of relief works; there is, as shown in the above quoted statistics, not sufficient employment in the large centres of industry for men willing and anxious to work. Employers would not, therefore, accept tramps, and to carry to its logical conclusion the establishment of a labour bureau for tramps it would be necessary for relief works to be created by either the State or local authorities.

It would further be necessary to provide for some penal punishment for disobedience of the conditions and regulations under which the ticket was issued, otherwise the system would soon fail; and even with such provisions it is more than probable that the police would be met with the same difficulty as they are now, viz., a disinclination on the part of the magistrates to enforce penal punishment against men who are homeless, foodless, and moneyless.

A further suggestion has been made that the police and not the poor law authorities are the best fitted authority to deal with the tramp question. I have not seriously considered that aspect of the tramp question, because to render it operative would entail such a great change in the existing vagrant and poor law that I hardly think it comes at present within the purview of practical politics. With the general principle of the suggestion I certainly agree, but difficulties would arise in the administration of any such scheme unless the magistrates would support the police by strictly enforcing any penal provisions made in respect to breaches of the conditions, and offences against the law.

I do not know that I can make any suggestion in regard to the amendment of the existing vagrancy laws so far as concerns that portion administered by the police. I am of opinion that as existing at present the vagrancy laws would considerably reduce the tramp evils, if the police could only be supported by the magistrates enforcing the provisions of the law, without allowing sentiment to interfere with their judgment. A difficulty has frequently arisen as to when a man is without visible means of subsistence. Some benches of magistrates interpret that rather liberally towards the prisoner whilst others take an opposite course. Many benches refuse to convict a man who has in his possession the price of a bed in the lowest of common lodging-houses, although it is apparent that the man is a tramp and that he invariably sleeps out.

A reference has been made to child vagrancy by which I presume is meant the sleeping out, begging, &c., of children. I can say that there is almost an entire absence of this class of vagrancy in Manchester. In 1901 the Corporation obtained powers to license all juvenile street traders. These powers were put into operation on the 25th March, 1902. Under these powers no child under twelve years is allowed to trade at all in the streets, and children between the ages of twelve and sixteen must be licensed, and they must not trade in the streets after eight o'clock on nights in the six winter months or after nine o'clock on nights in the summer months. A special staff of officers is entrusted with the administration of the regulations and they visit all portions of the city by day and by night at frequent but irregular intervals. At the present time there are some 1,300 children licensed every one of whom resides at a permanent residence within the city. When the licensing system was first inaugurated many of these children were little above the tramp class and resided with their parents at common lodging-houses. There was also a tendency to use the license to trade, as a cloak for begging. Both these evils have been removed, and none of the tramp class now hold licences. The officers report that it is very seldom indeed that a child is seen begging, even with its tramp parents, and undoubtedly the street trading regulations have had a great deal to do with the suppression of begging by children. In my opinion the most advisable and beneficial plan of dealing with children vagrants is to commit them to an industrial school where they will have proper care and attention and be fitted to follow some honest employment upon their discharge.

I am not able to speak authoritatively as to the spread of diseases by vagrants, but I can certainly say that in many instances, the state of their persons and clothing is highly conducive to the spread of all kinds of infectious and contagious diseases. They are invariably filthy, dirty and verminous, and only have a bath when compelled either by the poor law or the prison authorities.

In considering the tramp question the difficulty will always arise as to where the differentiation shall be made between the tramp and the unemployed. In large towns such as Manchester there is always a large number of genuine unemployed; also a large number of tramps. The Manchester authorities have made an attempt to deal with the unemployed by the establishment of a labour registry, as previously explained, and the experience there gained convinces me that State or municipal labour registries are of little practical use unless work can be created to meet the demand.

APPENDIX XXXIII.

SPREAD OF INFECTIOUS DISEASE BY VAGRANTS.

1. RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE CONFERENCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE COUNTY COUNCILS OF ENGLAND AND WALES, THE CORPORATION OF THE CITY OF LONDON AND THE COUNCILS OF COUNTY BOROUGH AND METROPOLITAN BOROUGH AND OF THE METROPOLITAN ASYLUMS BOARD, HELD AT THE COUNTY HALL, SPRING GARDENS, CHARING CROSS, ON THURSDAY 10th November, 1904.

Appendix
XXXIII.

- (1) (a) That this Conference of urban and sanitary authorities of England and Wales recognises the increasing amount of habitual vagrancy as the cause of wide-spread and disastrous consequences to the public health, and is of opinion that much more effective measures than are at present adopted should be taken for preventing the spread of infectious disease by vagrants, and for effectually dealing with this great and growing danger.
- (b) That the evil can only be met by conferring further powers upon the local authorities, viz: the sanitary authority, the board of guardians, and the magistracy.
- (2) That means should be provided for the detention and isolation of any vagrant found wandering in a public place, if reasonably suspected of being liable to convey infectious disease.
- (3) That this Conference is of opinion that it is desirable that
- (a) Parliamentary powers should be sought for the compulsory vaccination and re-vaccination of all vagrants unable to produce proof of being sufficiently protected against smallpox on entering casual wards or common lodging-houses, who, in the opinion of the sanitary authority, have been exposed to the infection of smallpox, and also that sanitary authorities should have power to grant such compensation as they think necessary to persons vaccinated or re-vaccinated at their request who may be prevented on that account from work.
- (b) It should be an offence to withhold information or make false statements to the sanitary authority in carrying out its powers with respect to the disease.
- (4) That in order to deal effectually with the transmission of notifiable infectious disease by tramps, power should be given to county councils to enforce the existing laws in all cases where sanitary authorities in the county refuse or neglect to do so.
- (5) That the Local Government Board should obtain powers to secure weekly returns of all cases of infectious disease from all central authorities throughout the country, and circulate the same.
- (6) That it is desirable that in districts comprising groups of counties and county boroughs, intelligence bureaux should be established, to which information should be sent from sanitary authorities and workhouses in the district, of persons of the wandering class who have been exposed to the infection of smallpox; and that a printed copy of such information should be distributed from the bureau to every sanitary authority and board of guardians in the district, and that the expense of working the bureau should be met by contributions from the county councils and county boroughs forming the district.
- (7) That this Conference is of opinion that the port sanitary authorities should be authorised to take more stringent precautions to prevent the importation of disease by persons arriving by vessel at the ports who are suffering from smallpox, or who have been exposed to infection by that disease.
- (a) to medically examine the inmates;
- (b) to detain and isolate persons exposed to infection and to disinfect them and their clothes;
- (c) to temporarily close a common lodging-house in whole or in part, compensation to be given to the keeper of the house.
- (9) That the local authority should have power to order the keeper of a common lodging-house in which there has been infectious disease to refuse fresh admissions for such time as may be required by the authority.
- (10) That the local authority should be empowered to require medical examination and disinfection of all persons entering casual wards.
- (11) That the local sanitary authority should have power to require the removal and isolation of any inmate of a casual ward who may reasonably be suspected of being liable to convey infectious disease.
- (12) That the local authority should have full power to require the cleansing of the person and the disinfection of the clothes of any person in a casual ward, whether infected or exposed to infection.

Labour Bureaux.

- (13) (a) That the time has arrived when the Local Government Board should promote legislation for the establishment of labour bureaux in the areas of every county council and every county borough council.

(b) That this Conference is also of opinion that it is desirable that a national voluntary agency should be formed for assisting bona fide working men while travelling through the country in search of work, and that such agency should be worked on the same lines as the Inter-Cantonal Union of Switzerland for the relief of poor travellers.

- (14) That the unemployed travelling bona fide in search of work, not being habitual vagrants, should not be treated as vagrants, but as far as possible be assisted to obtain employment.

Labour Colonies.

- (15) That the time has arrived when the Local Government Board should promote legislation for the establishment of labour colonies for the compulsory detention of habitual vagrants until they have acquired power to work and self restraint.

- (16) That this Conference approves and affirms the resolutions passed by the executive council of the Association of Poor Law Unions in England and Wales at their meeting in September, 1903, as follows:—

(a) That boards of guardians should be grouped in suitable areas to provide labour colonies for vagrants.

(b) That such colonies should be established and governed by the joint committees of the boards of guardians of the unions in the said areas.

(c) That habitual vagrants should be sent to such labour colonies by magistrates.

(d) That the expenses of each colony should be spread over the unions in the areas served by such colonies.

Children of Vagrants.

- (17) That the powers of the Poor Law guardians under the Poor Law Acts of 1889 and 1899 to assume and Common Lodging-houses and Casual Wards.

- (8) That the local authority should have increased control over common lodging-houses, their keepers and occupants. Thus the local authority should have power—exercise, in certain circumstances, parental rights over the children of pauper parents, should be extended so as to confer similar rights over the children of habitual vagrants.

Generally.

(18) That, in order to give practical effect to the foregoing resolutions, this Conference is in favour of uniting with the County Councils Association, the Association of Municipal Corporations, the Association of Metropolitan Borough Councils, the Magistracy, and the Association of Poor Law Unions of England and Wales for the following purposes, viz:—(a) To enlist the sympathy and co-operation of Members of Parliament; (b) to appoint representatives to wait on the Local Government Board; (c) to give evidence before the Inter-Departmental Committee of the Government on the Vagrancy question; (d) to take such other measures as may be thought desirable in support of the resolutions arrived at by the Conference.

That a Committee be appointed to give effect to this resolution.

That the Committee do consist of the under-mentioned members:—

For the County Councils:—

Mr. Henry Jephson (London County Council).

Mr. Thomas Carrick (Northumberland County Council).

Dr. Barwise (Medical Officer of Health, Derbyshire County Council).

Mr. Willis Bund (Worcestershire County Council).

For the County Borough Councils:—

Alderman Newton (Newcastle-on-Tyne).

Dr. Armstrong (Medical Officer of Health, Newcastle-on-Tyne).

Mr. William Roberts (Liverpool).

Alderman McDougall (Manchester).

Dr. Cameron (Medical Officer of Health, Leeds).

Mr. H. Robinson (Hull).

Dr. Davies (Medical Officer of Health, Bristol).

For the City Corporation and the Metropolitan Borough Councils:—

Dr. Collingridge (Medical Officer of Health, City of London).

The Rev. J. H. Anderson (Wandsworth).

Mr. R. M. Beaton (Member of the London County Council and of the St. Pancras Metropolitan Borough Council).

Dr. Dudfield (Medical Officer of Health, Paddington).

And that they have power to add to their number.

(19) That the best thanks of the Conference be accorded to the Chairman for his conduct in the Chair to-day.

2. CIRCULARS TO BOARDS OF GUARDIANS OUTSIDE LONDON WITH REFERENCE TO SMALL-POX IN
CASUAL WARDS.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD,
WHITEHALL, S.W.,
22nd January, 1902.

SIR,—I am directed by the Local Government Board to state that, in view of the outbreak of small-pox, they think it desirable to draw the attention of the guardians to the circular letters addressed to them by the Board on the 13th of February, 1893, and the 30th July, 1895.

In those letters the Board stated as follows:—

“There is no doubt that there is considerable risk of small-pox being spread by means of casual paupers, and the Board trust that the guardians and their officers will take such measures as will tend as far as possible to diminish this danger.

“The regulations of the Board relative to the relief of casual paupers, which were issued on the 18th December, 1882, by Article 13, provide that in the event of any casual pauper being ill, the master of the workhouse, or the superintendent of the casual wards, shall, as soon as practicable, obtain the attendance of the medical officer, who shall give directions as to the treatment of such pauper. The Board consider it a matter of great importance that the attention of the medical officer should be at once called to any casual pauper who may complain of illness, or who, in the absence of complaint, may present any suspicious symptoms; and they request that the guardians will be so good as to give such instructions to the master of the workhouse or superintendent of the casual wards as will ensure that this shall be done, and that the greatest vigilance may be exercised to check the discharge of persons who are likely to be suffering from small-pox, or, being convalescent, may still be a source of danger to others.

“The regulations of the Board contemplate that under ordinary circumstances a casual pauper when ill shall be removed to the workhouse; but the guardians will realize that, as a general rule, patients suffering from small-pox cannot be retained on the workhouse premises without very serious risk of the spread of the disease.

“The sanitary authorities are expressly empowered by section 131 of the Public Health Act to provide hospital accommodation for the isolation of persons suffering from dangerous infectious disease, and when the sanitary authority have provided a hospital suitable for the reception of small-pox cases, the Board consider that the guardians should, if possible, arrange beforehand with the sanitary authority for the reception into such hospital, when necessary, of any persons suffering from small-pox for whom relief is required.

“The Board are advised that, as a general rule, only circumstances of grave urgency justify the admission or retention of a small-pox case in a workhouse. The guardians, when there is no hospital already provided by the sanitary authority affording suitable accommodation, should immediately consider, in concert with the medical officer of health, what other provision for the due isolation of patients is practicable.

“The Board must, at the same time, observe that when a case of small-pox occurs, whether in the casual wards or in the workhouse, and indeed in times of small-pox prevalence generally, it is, in the opinion of the Board, of the greatest importance that measures should at once be taken to secure, as far as practicable, vaccination or re-vaccination of the other inmates, so far as the medical officer may consider needful. Care should especially be taken that the nurses and other persons employed to attend upon the patients or brought into personal contact with them, should be such as have, within a sufficiently recent period, been either successfully re-vaccinated or had small-pox; or, when there is a difficulty in securing this, that such persons should at once be re-vaccinated as a protection against the disease.

“The Board request that, whenever there is an occurrence of small-pox or any other dangerous infectious disease in a workhouse, including any case occurring in the casual wards, the fact may be immediately reported to them by the medical officer, with a statement showing for each case the date of attack and source of infection, as far as may be known. The medical officer should also state what provision has been made for preventing the spread of the disease among the inmates, and for the isolation and nursing of the patients, and whether he is satisfied of the sufficiency of such provision. In the case of small-pox occurring the medical officer should fully inform the Board of such measures as may be taken in regard to vaccination and re-vaccination.” This Report should be made in addition to the immediate notification of the case to the Medical Officer of Health.

I am directed to request that the guardians will be good enough to place a copy of this circular in the hands of the medical officer and the master of the workhouse, and also of the superintendent of the casual wards where they are separate.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant.
S. B. PROVIS.
Secretary.

The Clerk to the Guardians.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD,
WHITEHALL, S.W.,
9th February, 1903.

SIR,—I am directed by the Local Government Board to state that representations have been made to them on the subject of the spread of small-pox by tramps. It is urged on the Board that the present diffusion of the disease is largely due to infection conveyed from place to place by persons of the vagrant class.

The danger to the public health arising from this cause appears to the Board to be a matter of serious importance, and they think it very desirable that there should be uniformity on the part of Boards of Guardians in dealing with it. In this connection the Board may refer to their circular letter of the 22nd January, 1902, a copy of which is enclosed, and they would impress upon the guardians the urgent necessity of securing, as far as possible, the vaccination and re-vaccination of all vagrants relieved.

The Board understand that in some cases guardians have been in doubt as to whether they could pay for the vaccination of vagrants who failed to present themselves for subsequent inspection, and the Board direct me to state that it seems to them that in such cases payment can be made under Section 28 of the Vaccination Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict., c. 84), although it may not be practicable that the result of the operation should be ascertained. When the public vaccinator vaccinates or re-vaccinates any casual pauper, he should enter in his vaccination register the name of such pauper and, where he has not ascertained the result, he should make a note in Column 16 explaining the circumstances of the case.

The Board would also point out that, after the operation, the vagrant should be deemed under medical care and dieted accordingly, and he might properly be relieved from work. If necessary, he should be dealt with under Article 13 of the General Order of 18th December, 1882, as to casual paupers.

When a vagrant comes into a casual ward whilst under the effects of vaccination, although the operation has not been performed in the ward, he should be treated in the same way.

It appears to the Board that there would be considerable advantage if there were a systematic daily medical inspection of the inmates of casual wards.

The Board request that this matter may receive the immediate consideration of the guardians, and that they will be good enough to place a copy of this circular in the hands of the medical officer and the master of the workhouse, and also of the superintendent of the casual wards. Copies are enclosed for this purpose.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
S. B. PROVIS.
Secretary.

The Clerk to the Guardians.

Note.—On 19th October, 1901, a circular was addressed to boards of guardians in the Metropolis to the effect of the above circular of 22nd January, 1902.

APPENDIX XXXIV.

Appendix
XXXIV.

GIPSIES.

(Memorandum prepared by the Home Office.)

The present law contains no trace of the severe provisions which were enacted to deal with gipsies soon after their immigration into this country in the sixteenth century. Three Acts were passed in the reigns of Henry VIII., Philip and Mary, and Elizabeth. The effect of the first two Acts (22 Henry VIII., c.10; 1-2 Philip and Mary, c.4) was briefly this:—Gipsies were forbidden to enter the country and the person who imported them was liable to a heavy fine. If a gipsy remained in the country for more than a month he became liable to be adjudged and suffer death as a felon. The effect of the third Act (5 Eliz., c. 20) was to extend the penalties of the previous Acts to "all persons who are of the company of such vagabonds" or "counterfeit their speech and behaviour." These statutes, however, appear to have fallen speedily into disuse, although they were not formally repealed until a comparatively late date (23 Geo. III., c. 51; 1 Geo IV., c. 116; 19 & 20 Vict., c. 64). The provisions of the Vagrancy Acts under which until 1824 "all persons pretending to be gipsies or wandering in the habit or form of Egyptians" were classed as rogues and vagabonds, probably offered a sufficient means of dealing with them.

At the present time the statutory provisions affecting gipsies or van-dwellers specifically are but few in number:—

The Vagrancy Act, 1824, provides that "every person wandering abroad and lodging..... in the open air or under a tent, or in any cart or waggon, not having any visible means of subsistence and not giving a good account of himself" and "every person pretending or professing to tell fortunes....." shall be deemed to be a rogue and a vagabond; and such person can be dealt with in the manner prescribed by that Act.

The Highways Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. IV., c. 50, s. 72), imposes a penalty on any gipsy who pitches any booth, tent, stall, or stand, or encamps upon any part of the highway; and also provides (s. 76) that any waggon used on the highway shall bear the name and place of abode of the owner in letters, white upon black or black upon white, not less than one inch in height. This latter provision, of course, applies alike to waggons of any description.

In 1885 gipsy vans and tents were first brought within the sanitary laws by the Housing of the Working Classes Act of that year (48 & 49 Vict., c. 72). Section 9 (1) of that Act provides that a tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation, which is in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health or overcrowded, shall be deemed to be a nuisance within section 91 of the Public Health Act, 1875. This enables a local authority on information given to serve a notice on the occupier of the van to abate the nuisance, and if such notice is not complied with to make application to the court for an Order. Section 9 (2) further enables a sanitary authority to make bye-laws for "promoting cleanliness in and the habitable condition of tents, vans, sheds and similar structures used for human habitation, and for preventing the spread of infectious disease by the persons inhabiting the same, and generally for the prevention of nuisances in connection with the same." The bye-laws made for districts within the Metropolis were to be confirmed by the Secretary of State, but since the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, the Local Government Board is the confirming authority for the whole of England and Wales. Model bye-laws have been issued by the Local Government Board (see page 176).

In addition to the powers given by the Act of 1885, a local authority can apply for an injunction to restrain the letting of land for the purposes of a gipsy encampment if it can be shown that such occupation is dangerous to the health of the neighbourhood (see Attorney General v. Stone, 1895, 60 J.P. 168).

It may also be noted that the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, applies to vans as to other buildings (s.13).

Complaints have from time to time been received by the Home Office as to the nuisance caused by the presence of gipsies in particular localities and the need for further restrictive provisions. These complaints have come chiefly from Metropolitan and neighbouring districts. Representations as to the nuisance and danger to health caused by gipsy encampments on pieces of vacant ground in crowded areas have come from certain thickly-populated districts, especially in the East of London; while from the semi-urban districts lying further out complaints of numerous acts of damage, theft, intimidation, indecency, etc., have been received. In 1889 bye-laws were proposed by the town council of West Ham under the power to make bye-laws "for good rule and government and for the prevention of nuisances," to deal with the nuisance caused by the occupation of a piece of vacant land in a crowded area, and were allowed to come into force; and similar bye-laws were shortly after allowed in some other thickly-populated districts of the Metropolitan area.

The following was the latest form of the byelaws allowed:—

"1. An owner of land shall not cause or suffer any such land within two hundred yards of any highway or street or of any dwelling-house to be occupied so as to cause annoyance, injury, or disturbance to residents in the neighbourhood, by any tent-dweller, squatter, gipsy, or any other person dwelling in a tent or van or other similar structure.

2. A tent-dweller, squatter, gipsy or other person shall not use as a dwelling-place, so as to cause annoyance, injury, or disturbance to residents in the neighbourhood, any tent or van or other similar structure placed on any land situated within two hundred yards of any highway or street or of any dwelling-place.

Provided that nothing in these bye-laws shall apply to tents, vans, and similar structures, used for the accommodation of preachers, lecturers, and persons holding public meetings."

Subsequently, however, (from 1894 onwards) proposals for the further extension of these bye-laws were refused. It was felt that on the grounds of their undue restriction of the use of private property and of the vague and uncertain character of some of their provisions, the validity of the bye-laws was very questionable, and that in their working they were open to objection. The effect of such bye-laws, if enforced, would extend far beyond the mere prohibition of a nuisance and would prevent gipsies from encamping anywhere in the areas to which they applied; and, further, instead of remedying the nuisance which was caused, would simply transfer it to other districts. So far as any nuisance caused was of a sanitary character, the proper course appeared to be for the local authority to put in force its powers under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885; and as the case of Attorney General v. Stone already referred to shows, the court will in proper cases grant an injunction restraining the owner of the land altogether from allowing it to be used by gipsies for the purpose of encampment. So far as acts of theft, damage, intimidation, etc., form the subject of complaint, these are already offences summarily punishable under the existing law. It is true that the offences may be harder to detect and punish in the case of a vagrant population, but there is no reason to suppose that they cannot be met by a vigorous enforcement of the provisions of the law.

It may be noted here that in some cases in recent years local authorities have applied to Parliament in Private Bills for special powers of dealing with gipsies. These proposals have in each case (e.g. in the East Ham Corporation Bill, 1903, the Acton Improvement Bill, 1904, etc.) been rejected by the Police and Sanitary Committee to whom they were referred, on the ground that the local authorities had not used their existing powers, and of the insufficiency of the evidence of nuisances caused.

Legislation with regard to van-dwellers on the lines of the Canal Boats Acts was proposed by a private member in the Temporary Dwellings Bill of 1887, which provided for the registration of vans, etc., and for the education of the children of van-dwellers. The Bill passed through a Select Committee of the House of Commons, but it met with opposition and was finally withdrawn.

APPENDIX XXXV.

BYELAWS.

1. MODEL BYELAWS ISSUED BY THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD WITH RESPECT TO COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Memorandum.

By Section 80 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), it is enacted that "Every Local Authority shall, from time to time, make byelaws:—

"(1.) For fixing and, from time to time, varying the number of lodgers who may be received into a common lodging-house, and for the separation of the sexes therein; and

"(2.) For promoting cleanliness and ventilation in such houses; and

"(3.) For the giving of notices and the taking precautions in the case of any infectious disease; and

"(4.) Generally, for the well-ordering of such houses."

The terms of the above-quoted enactment indicate, with sufficient clearness, the scope of the byelaws which the Local Authority are empowered to make for the regulation of common lodging-houses.

Independently of the byelaws authorised by Section 80, the Public Health Act, 1875, confers upon the Local Authority powers which, if duly exercised, will enable them to secure compliance with various requirements of essential importance in relation to the public health.

In illustration of the nature and extent of the control which, either by means of byelaws or by the operation of the express provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, the Local Authority may exercise over common lodging-houses, and in anticipation of questions which may arise in connection with this branch of sanitary administration, it may here be convenient to append a few observations.

By Section 89 it is provided that for the purposes of the Act "the expression 'common lodging-house' includes in any case in which only part of a house is used as a common lodging-house the part so used of such house." The Act, however, contains no exact definition of a "common lodging-house"; and in cases where doubts may be suggested as to whether any particular house or part of a house is or is not comprehended in that designation, it will probably be found useful to refer to the opinion of the law officers of the Crown which was communicated to the several Local Boards by the circular of the General Board of Health, dated the 17th of October, 1853.

From that circular it appears that the law officers, when consulted as to the meaning of the expression "common lodging-house" in the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 28, advised as follows:—

"It may be difficult to give a precise definition of the term 'common lodging-house,' but looking to the preamble and general provisions of the Act, it appears to us to have reference to that class of lodging-houses in which persons of the poorer class are received for short periods, and though strangers to one another are allowed to inhabit one common room. We are of opinion that it does not include hotels, inns, public houses or lodgings let to the upper and middle classes."

By that part of the above definition which refers to the persons inhabiting a common lodging-house being "strangers to one another," the law officers in a second opinion explained that their "obvious intention was to distinguish lodgers promiscuously brought together from members of one family or household."

In reply to the question, whether lodging-houses, otherwise coming within the definition but let for a week or longer period, would, from the latter circumstance, be excluded from the operation of the Act, the law officers observed:—"We are of opinion that the period of letting is unimportant in determining whether a lodging-house comes under the Act now in question"

So far as the foregoing definition of a common lodging-house rests upon the basis of the habitation of a common room by lodgers who are strangers to one another in the sense of not being members of one family or household, it may be inferred that this characteristic equally distinguishes the common lodging-houses to which the Public Health Act, 1875, applies. Such an inference receives support from the terms of Section 87 which enacts that "in any proceedings under the provisions of this Act relating to common lodging-houses, if the inmates of any house or part of a house allege that they are members of the same family the burden of proving such allegation shall lie on the persons making it."

In connection with these remarks reference may be made to the case of Logsdon v. Booth (81 L.T.R. 602, Q.B.D.).

With regard to the registration of common lodging-houses, in referring generally to the provisions of Sections 76-79 and to so much of Section 86 as renders liable to penalty any keeper of a common lodging-house who receives any lodger in such house without the same being registered under the Act, the Board would direct especial attention to an enactment in Section 78. By that section it is provided that "a house shall not be registered as a "common lodging-house until it has been inspected and approved for the purpose by some officer of the local authority."

To the thoroughness of this inspection much importance should be attached. It is essential that in all structural details the fitness of the premises should be carefully ascertained before the house is placed upon the register.

The rules which should guide the inspecting officer in his examination of the premises may be thus briefly indicated:—

The house should (1) possess the conditions of wholesomeness needed for dwelling houses in general; and (2) it should further have arrangements fitting it for its special purpose of receiving a given number of lodgers.

(1.) The house should be dry in its foundations and have proper drainage, guttering, and spouting, with properly laid and substantial paving to any area or yard abutting on it. Its drains should have their connections properly made, and they should be trapped, where necessary, and adequately ventilated. Except the soil pipe from a properly trapped water-closet, there should be no direct communication of the drains with the interior of the house. All waste pipes from sinks, basins, and cisterns should discharge in the open air over gullies outside the house. The soil pipe should always be efficiently ventilated. The closets or privies and the refuse receptacles of the house should be in proper situations, of proper construction and adapted to any scavenging arrangements that may be in force in the district. The house should have a water supply of good quality, and if the water be stored in cisterns they should be conveniently placed and of proper construction to prevent any fouling of water. The walls, roof, and floors of the house should be in good repair. Inside walls should not be papered. The rooms and staircases should possess the means of complete ventilation; windows being of adequate size, able to be opened to their full extent, or if, sash windows, both at top and bottom. Any room proposed for registration that has not a chimney should be furnished with a special ventilating opening or shaft, but a room not having a window to the outer air, even if it have special means of ventilation, can seldom be proper for registration.

(2.) The numbers for which the house and each sleeping room may be registered will depend, partly upon the dimensions of the rooms and their facilities for ventilation and partly upon the amount of accommodation of other kinds. In rooms of ordinary construction to be used for sleeping, where there are the usual means of ventilation by windows and chimneys, about 300 cubic feet will be a proper standard of space to secure to each person; but in many rooms it will be right to appoint a larger space, and this can only be determined on inspection of the particular room. The house should possess kitchen and dayroom accommodation apart from its bedrooms, and the sufficiency of this will have to be attended to. Rooms that are partially underground may not be improper for dayrooms, but should not be registered for use as bedrooms. The amount of water supply, closet or privy accommodation, and the provision of refuse receptacles should be proportionate to the numbers for which the house is to be registered. If the water is not supplied from works with constant service, a quantity should be secured for daily use on a scale, per registered inmate, of not less than ten gallons a day where there are water-closets, or five gallons a day where there are dry-closets. For every twenty registered lodgers a separate closet or privy should be required. The washing accommodation should, wherever practicable, be in a special place and not be in the bedrooms; and the basins for personal washing should be fixed and have water-taps and discharge pipes connected with them.

Arrangements for the supply by the local authority of placards such as are mentioned in the byelaws numbered 24 and 25 in the model series may be suggested as conducive to the well-ordering of common lodging-houses.

S. B. PROVIS (Secretary).

Local Government Board,
20th November, 1901.

MODEL BYELAWS.

BYELAWS made by the*
with respect to COMMON LODGING-HOUSES in the†

- For fixing and from time to time varying the number of lodgers who may be received into a common lodging house, and for the separation of the sexes therein; and
- For promoting cleanliness and ventilation in such houses; and
- For the giving of notices and the taking precautions in the case of any infectious disease; and
- Generally for the well ordering of such houses.

- 1. Throughout these byelaws the expression "the Council" means the*
- 2. A keeper of a common lodging-house shall not, at any one time, receive, or cause or suffer to be received into such house, or into any room therein, a greater number of lodgers than shall be fixed by the Council as the maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received into such house, or into such room, and shall be specified in a notice in writing, according to the form hereinafter prescribed, which shall be duly served upon or delivered to such keeper, and shall continue in force until in pursuance of the provisions of the byelaw in that behalf, the number so fixed and specified shall be varied by the Council.

Form of Notice.

To
WHEREAS, in pursuance of the statutory provision in that behalf, you have been duly registered by the‡
as the keeper of a common lodging-house, situated at , in the§ :
Now I, , clerk to the said Council, do hereby give you notice that, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon them in that behalf, the said Council have fixed as the maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received at any one time into such house, and into the several rooms therein, the number specified in respect of such house and of each of such rooms in the Schedule hereunto appended.

SCHEDULE.

Borough [or Urban (or Rural) District] of :
Common lodging-house situated at :
Name of keeper :
The maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received at any one time into this house is
The maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received at any one time into each of the several rooms in this house is the number specified in respect of such room in the appropriate column of the following table :—

-----	Description or number of room.	Dimensions or cubical contents of room.	Maximum number of lodgers.
Ground storey.
First storey.
Second storey.
Topmost storey.

For the purposes of this notice every two children under the age of ten years may be counted as one lodger.

Witness my hand this day of 190 .

Town Clerk (or Clerk to the Council).

3. A keeper of a common lodging-house, in any case where the Council may, from time to time, determine that it is expedient to vary the number fixed by them as the maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received into such house, or into any room therein, and may, from time to time, for the purpose of such variation cause to be duly served upon or delivered to such keeper a notice in writing according to the form hereinafter prescribed, shall not, at any one time, after any such notice shall have been duly served upon or delivered to him, and after the date specified in such notice, and until, in pursuance of the provisions of this byelaw, the number specified in such notice shall be further varied, receive, or cause or suffer to be received into such house, or into any room therein, a greater number of lodgers than shall be specified in such notice as the maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received into such house, or into such room.

Form of Notice.

To of
WHEREAS, in pursuance of the statutory provision in that behalf, you have been duly registered by the‡
, as the keeper of a common lodging-house, situated at , in the†
And whereas the said Council have determined that it is expedient to vary the number heretofore fixed by them as the maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received at any one time into such house and into the several rooms therein :

Now I, , clerk of the said Council, do hereby give you notice that from and after the day of , the maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received at any one time into such house and into the several rooms therein shall be the number specified in respect of such house and of each of such rooms in the Schedule hereunto appended.

SCHEDULE.

Borough [or Urban (or Rural) District] of Common lodging-house situated at
Name of keeper
The maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received at any one time into this house is

* "Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of (or Rural) District Council of " ; as the case may be.
† Insert name of borough or urban or rural district, as the case may be.
‡ "Town Council of the Borough of " ; or "Urban (or Rural) District Council of " ; as the case may be.
§ Insert name of borough or urban or rural district, as the case may be.
|| "Town Council of the Borough of " ; or "Urban (or Rural) District Council of " ; as the case may be.

Appendix
XXXV.

The maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received at any one time into each of the several rooms in this house is the number specified in respect of such room in the appropriate column of the following table :

	Description or number of room.	Dimensions or cubical contents of room.	Maximum number of lodgers.
Ground storey.
First storey.
Second storey.
Topmost storey.

For the purposes of this notice every two children under the age of ten years may be counted as one lodger.

Witness my hand this day of 190 .

Town Clerk (or Clerk to the Council).

4. A keeper of a common lodging-house shall not, except in such cases as are herein-after specified, cause or suffer any person of the male sex above the age of ten years to use or occupy any room which may be used or occupied as a sleeping apartment by persons of the female sex.

Such keeper shall not, except in such cases as are hereinafter specified, cause or suffer any person of the female sex to use or occupy any room which may be used or occupied as a sleeping apartment by persons of the male sex above the age of ten years :

Provided that this byelaw shall not be taken to prohibit the use and occupation by a husband and wife of any room which may not be used or occupied by any other person of either sex above the age of ten years, or which may be used, in accordance with the provisions of the byelaw in that behalf, as a sleeping apartment for two or more married couples.

5. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause every room therein which may be appointed for use and occupation as a sleeping apartment by two or more married couples to be so furnished or fitted that every bed, when in use and occupation, shall be effectually screened from the view of any occupant of any other bed, by means of a partition of wood or other solid material which shall be constructed and fixed or placed so as to allow adequate means of access to the bed which such partition is intended to screen, and so as to extend upwards throughout the whole length and breadth of such bed to a sufficient height above such bed, and downwards to a distance of not more than six inches above the level of the floor.

6. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause every yard, area, forecourt, or other open space within the curtilage of the premises to be maintained at all times in good order, and to be thoroughly cleansed, from time to time, as often as may be reasonably necessary for the purpose of keeping such yard, area, forecourt, or other open space in a clean and wholesome condition.

7. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause the floor of every room or passage and every stair in such house to be thoroughly swept once at least in every day, before the hour of ten in the forenoon, and to be thoroughly washed once at least in every week.

8. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause every window, every fixture or fitting of wood, stone, or metal, and every painted surface in such house to be thoroughly cleansed, from time to time, as often as shall be requisite.

9. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause all bed-clothes and bedding, and every bedstead used in such house, to be thoroughly cleansed, from time to time, as often as shall be requisite for the purpose of keeping such bed-clothes, bedding, and bedstead in a clean and wholesome condition.

10. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall for the use of the lodgers received into such house, cause to be provided a sufficient number of basins or other receptacles for water, of adequate capacity and suitably placed, and a sufficient supply of water and a sufficient number of towels for use in connexion with such basins or other receptacles. He shall cause such basins or receptacles to be kept clean and in good order and the supply of towels to be renewed, from time to time, as often as may be requisite.

11. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause all solid or liquid filth or refuse to be removed once at least in every day before the hour of ten in the forenoon from every room in such house, and shall once at least in every day cause every vessel, utensil, or other receptacle for such filth or refuse to be thoroughly cleansed.

12. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause the seat, floor, and walls of every watercloset, earthcloset, or privy belonging to such house to be thoroughly cleansed, from time to time, as often as may be necessary for the purpose of keeping such seat, floor, and walls in a clean and wholesome condition.

13. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause every part of the structure of every watercloset belonging to such house to be maintained at all times in good order, and every part of the apparatus of such water-closet and every drain or means of drainage with which such watercloset may communicate, to be maintained at all times in good order and efficient action.

14. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause every earthcloset or privy belonging to such house, and every receptacle for filth provided or used in or in connection with such earth closet or privy, to be maintained at all times in good order and in a wholesome condition.

He shall cause all such means or apparatus as may be provided or used in or in connection with such earthcloset or privy and such receptacle, for the frequent and effectual application of dry earth or other deodorising substance to any filth deposited in such receptacle, to be maintained at all times in good order and efficient action.

He shall cause a sufficient supply of such dry earth or other deodorising substance to be from time to time provided for use in such earth closet, privy or receptacle for filth, and shall cause such dry earth or other deodorising substance to be frequently and effectually applied to such filth, or he shall cause such dry earth or other deodorising substance as may, from time to time, be supplied to such house, in pursuance of the statutory provision in that behalf, by the Council or by any person with whom they may contract for the purpose to be frequently and effectually applied to such filth.

15. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause every ashpit belonging to such house to be maintained at all times in good order and in a wholesome condition.

He shall not cause or suffer any filth or wet refuse to be thrown into any ashpit constructed and adapted for use only as a receptacle for ashes, dust, and dry refuse.

16. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause all such means of ventilation as may be provided in or in connection with any room or passage in such house and in or in connection with any water closet, earthcloset, or privy belonging to such house, to be maintained at all times in good order and efficient action.

17. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall, except in such cases as are hereinafter specified, cause every window in every room in such house which may be appointed for use and occupation as a sleeping apartment to be opened and to be kept fully open for one hour at least in the forenoon, and for one hour at least in the afternoon of every day :

Provided that such keeper shall not be required, in pursuance of this byelaw, to cause any such window to be opened or to be kept open at any time when the state of the weather is such as to render it necessary that the window should be closed, or when any bed in such room may be occupied by any lodger in consequence of sickness or of other sufficient cause.

18. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause the bed-clothes of every bed in such house to be removed from such bed as soon as conveniently may be after such bed shall have been vacated by any lodger, and shall cause all such bed-clothes and the bed from which such bed-clothes may have been removed to be freely exposed to the air for one hour at least in the forenoon or for one hour at least in the afternoon of every day.

19. Every keeper of a common lodging-house, immediately after he shall have been informed or shall have ascertained that any lodger in such house is ill of any infectious disease, shall adopt all such precautions as may be necessary to prevent the spread of such infectious disease.

Such keeper shall not, at any time while such lodger is suffering from such infectious disease, cause or allow any other person except the wife or any other relative of such lodger, or except a person voluntarily in attendance on such lodger, to use or occupy the same room as such lodger.

Where in pursuance of the statutory provision in that behalf, the Council may order the removal of such lodger to a hospital or other place for the reception of the sick, such keeper, on being informed of such order, shall forthwith take all such steps as may be requisite on his part to secure the safe and prompt removal of such lodger in compliance with the order of the Council, and shall, in and about such removal, adopt all such precautions as, in accordance with any instructions which he may receive from the medical officer of health, may be most suitable for the circumstances of the case.

Where, in consequence of the illness of such lodger, there may be reasonable grounds for apprehending the spread of infection through the admission of lodgers to any room or rooms in such house or through the admission to such room or rooms of the maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received therein, such keeper, after being furnished with the necessary instructions from the medical officer of health, and until the grounds for apprehending the spread of infection shall have been removed, shall cease to receive any lodger in such room or rooms or shall receive therein such number of lodgers, being less than the maximum number, as the exigencies of the case may require.

Such keeper shall, immediately after the death, removal or recovery of any lodger who may have been ill of any infectious disease, give written notice thereof to the medical officer of health, and shall, as soon as conveniently may be, cause every part of the room which may have been occupied by such lodger to be thoroughly cleansed and disinfected, and shall also cause every article in such room which may be liable to retain infection to be in like manner cleansed and disinfected unless the Council shall have ordered the same to be destroyed.

He shall comply with all instructions of the medical officer of health as to the proper cleansing and disinfection of the room and articles.

When the same shall have been thoroughly cleansed and disinfected in accordance with such instructions, he shall give written notice thereof to the medical officer of health; and, until two days from the giving of such notice shall have elapsed, and unless and until by such cleansing and disinfection the necessary precautions for preventing the spread of disease shall have been duly taken, such keeper shall not cause or suffer any other lodger to be received into the room which, in the case hereinbefore specified, may have been exposed to infection.

20. A keeper of a common lodging-house shall not, at any time, cause or suffer any room which may be appointed for use as a kitchen or scullery to be used or occupied as a sleeping apartment.

21. A keeper of a common lodging-house shall not cause or suffer any bed in any room which may be used as a sleeping apartment by persons of the male sex above the age of ten years, to be occupied at any one time by more than one such person.

22. A keeper of a common lodging-house shall not cause or suffer any lodger to occupy any bed in such house at any time within the period of eight hours after such bed shall have been vacated by the last preceding occupant thereof.

23. Every keeper of a common lodging-house shall cause every room in such house, which may be appointed for use and occupation as a sleeping apartment, to be furnished with such number of beds and bedsteads, and with such a supply of bedclothes and of necessary utensils as may be sufficient for the requirements of the number of lodgers received into such room.

24. Every keeper of a common lodging-house, on receiving from the council a notice or placard wherein shall be stated the description or number of the room to which such notice or placard may apply, and the maximum number of lodgers authorised to be received at any one time in such room, shall put up or affix and continue such notice or placard in a suitable and conspicuous position in such room, and in such a manner that the words and figures in such notice or placard may be clearly and distinctly visible and legible.

He shall not, at any time, wilfully conceal, deface, alter, or obliterate any letter or figure in such notice or placard, or wilfully or carelessly injure or destroy such notice or placard.

25. Every keeper of a common lodging-house, on receiving from the Council, for the purpose of exhibition in such house or in any room therein, a copy or copies of any byelaw or byelaws for the time being in force with respect to common lodging-houses, shall put up or affix and continue such copy or copies in a suitable and conspicuous position in such house, or in such room, and in such a manner that the contents of such copies or copy may be clearly and distinctly visible and legible.

He shall not, at any time, wilfully conceal, deface, alter, or obliterate any part of the contents of such copy or copies, or wilfully or carelessly injure or destroy such copy or copies.

26. Every keeper of a common lodging-house who shall offend against any of the foregoing byelaws shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty of Five Pounds, and in the case of a continuing offence to a further penalty of Forty Shillings for each day after written notice of the offence from the Council:

Provided nevertheless, that the justices or court before whom any complaint may be made or any proceedings may be taken in respect of any such offence may, if they think fit, adjudge the payment, as a penalty, of any sum less than the full amount of the penalty imposed by this byelaw.

2. BYELAWS MADE BY THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL IN RESPECT OF COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

Appendix
XXXV.

The London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1902, provides—

Section 53 (2)—The Council may make by-laws—

(a) For fixing and from time to time varying the number of lodgers who may be received into a common lodging-house, and for the separation of the sexes therein; and

(b) For promoting cleanliness and ventilation in such houses; and

(c) For the giving of notices and the taking precautions in the case of any infectious disease; and

(d) Generally for the well-ordering of such houses.

*BYELAWS

Made by the London County Council under Sec. 53 (2) of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1902, in respect of Common Lodging-Houses within the County of London.

1. In these byelaws, unless the context otherwise requires—

The expression "keeper" means, until the first application for a licence in respect of a registered common lodging-house shall have been granted, the person registered as keeper thereof, and save as aforesaid means the person for the time being licensed to keep a common lodging-house.

The expression "Council" means the London County Council.

2. A keeper shall not at any one time receive or cause or suffer to be received into a common lodging-house, or into any room therein, a greater number of lodgers than shall be fixed by the Council and be specified in a notice according to the form in Schedule I. to these by-laws, which shall be duly served upon or delivered to such keeper, and shall continue in force until in pursuance of the provisions of the byelaw in that behalf the number so fixed and specified shall be varied by the Council.

3. The Council may in any case where they determine that it is expedient to vary the number of lodgers fixed by them to be received into a common lodging-house or into any room therein, from time to time cause to be duly served upon or delivered to the keeper of such house a notice according to the form in Schedule II. to these by-laws, and such keeper shall not at any one time after the date specified in such notice receive or cause or suffer to be received into such house or into any room therein a greater number of lodgers than shall be specified in such notice, and such notice shall continue in force until in pursuance of the provisions of this byelaw the number of lodgers so fixed and specified shall be further varied.

4. The keeper shall not permit any room in a common lodging-house not appointed for use as a sleeping apartment to be occupied or used as a sleeping apartment.

5. The keeper shall fix and keep in a conspicuous place and in such a manner that the contents may be clearly and distinctly visible and legible in each room appointed for use as a sleeping room in a common lodging-house a ticket to be supplied by the Council in the form prescribed in Schedule III. to these by-laws, and the keeper shall not at any time wilfully conceal, deface, alter, or obliterate any letters or figures on such ticket, or wilfully or carelessly injure or destroy such ticket.

6. Every keeper on receiving from the Council, for the purpose of exhibition in a common lodging-house or in any room therein, a copy or copies of any by-law or by-laws for the time being in force with respect to common lodging-houses, shall put up or affix and continue such copy or copies in a suitable and conspicuous place in such house, or in such room, and in such a manner that the contents of such copy or copies may be clearly and distinctly visible and legible, and the keeper shall not wilfully conceal, deface, alter or obliterate any part of the contents of such copy or copies of any by-law, or wilfully or carelessly injure or destroy such copy or copies.

7. For the purpose of determining the number of lodgers who may be received into any common lodging-house, or into any room therein, two children under six years of age shall be counted as one person.

8. The keeper shall not permit any room in a common lodging-house to be used as a sleeping apartment if the floor of such room is more than three feet below the surface of the footway of the adjoining street or of the ground adjoining or nearest to the room. Provided that this byelaw shall not preclude the keeper from continuing to use as a sleeping apartment any room so used with the sanction of the Council at the date when these by-laws came into operation in cases where—

(a) The room is in every part thereof at least seven feet high measured from the floor to the ceiling, and has at least three feet of its height above the surface of the street or ground adjoining or nearest to the room;

(b) Every wall of the room is constructed with a proper damp course, and, if in contact with the soil, is effectually secured against dampness from that soil;

(c) There is outside of and adjoining the room and extending along the entire frontage thereof and upwards from six inches below the level of the floor thereof an open area properly paved at least four feet wide in every part thereof;

(d) The said area and the soil immediately below the room are effectually drained;

(e) If the room has a hollow floor, the space beneath it is sufficiently ventilated to the outer air;

(f) Any drain passing under the room is properly constructed of a gas-tight pipe;

(g) The room is effectually secured against the rising of any effluvia or exhalation;

(h) The room is effectually ventilated;

(i) The room has a fireplace with a proper chimney or flue;

(j) The room has one or more windows opening directly into the external air with a total area clear of the sash frames equal to at least one-tenth of the floor area of the room, and so constructed that one-half at least of each window of the room can be opened, and the opening in each case extends to the top of the window.

9. The keeper shall not, except as hereinafter provided, receive as a lodger or lodgers any single man, except in such part of the common lodging-house as shall be appropriated exclusively to the use of men, or any single woman, except in such part of the house as shall be appropriated exclusively to the use of women, or any married couple, or parents with their children under ten years of age, except in such part of the house as shall be appropriated exclusively to the use of married couples, or parents with their children under ten years of age.

10. The keeper shall not, except in such cases as are hereinafter specified, cause or suffer any person of the male sex above the age of ten years to use or occupy any room which may be used or occupied as a sleeping apartment by persons of the female sex.

The keeper shall not, except in such cases as are hereinafter specified, cause or suffer any person of the female sex to use or occupy any room which may be used or occupied as a sleeping apartment by persons of the male sex above the age of ten years.

Provided that this by-law shall not be taken to prohibit the use and occupation by a husband and wife of any room which may not be used or occupied by any other person of either sex above the age of ten years, or which may be used in accordance with the provisions of the by-law in that behalf, as a sleeping apartment for two or more married couples.

11. The keeper shall, except as hereinafter provided, cause every room in a common lodging-house, which may be appointed for use and occupation as a sleeping apartment by two or more married couples, to be so furnished or fitted that every bed, when in use and occupation, shall be effectually screened from the view of any occupant of any other bed, by means of a partition of wood or other solid material, which shall be constructed and fixed or placed so as to allow adequate means of access to the bed which such partition is intended to screen, and so as to extend upwards throughout the whole length and breadth of such bed to a sufficient height above such bed and downwards to a distance of not more than six inches above the level of the floor, and each part thus partitioned off to

* The marginal notes do not form part of the byelaws.

Interpretation.Fixing of
number of lodgers.Variation of
number of lodgers.Sleeping rooms.Tickets as to
number of lodgers to be exhibited.Byelaws to be exhibited and kept undefaced.Two children under six years of age to be counted as one person.Use of underground rooms as sleeping rooms.Separation of the sexes.

contain a bed shall have on one of its sides the whole or part of a window opening directly into the external air; provided that if a common lodging-house lawfully used as such at the date of the confirmation of these byelaws cannot reasonably be made to comply forthwith with the foregoing provision as to windows, the said provision shall not apply to such house until the expiration of a period of five years from such date.

Cleansing common lodging-houses.

12. A keeper shall, in the first week in the month of April and in the first week in the month of October, in every year, cause every part of a common lodging-house to be cleansed, and shall, at the same time, except in such cases as are hereinafter specified, cause every area, the interior surface of every ceiling and wall of every water-closet belonging to the premises, and the interior surface of every ceiling and wall of every room, staircase and passage in the house, to be thoroughly stopped, cleansed, and lime-washed or distempered. Provided that if any such interior surface is painted or covered with material which is such as to render the lime-washing thereof unsuitable or inexpedient, this byelaw shall be deemed to be satisfied, so long as such surface is thoroughly cleansed and the paint or other covering thereon is renewed, if such cleansing or renewal be necessary for the purpose of keeping the house in a cleanly and wholesome condition.

13. The keeper shall, as often as may be necessary to keep the same in a clean and wholesome state, cause all the rooms, passages, stairs, floors, windows, doors and walls of a common lodging-house to be thoroughly cleansed and freed from vermin, and shall also cause the floors of every room, passage and staircase, to be thoroughly swept daily before the hour of three in the afternoon, and to be well and sufficiently washed once in each week.

14. The keeper shall cause all the beds, bed-clothes, bedding, and bedsteads, used in a common lodging-house to be thoroughly cleansed as often as shall be requisite for the purpose of keeping such beds, bed-clothes, bedding, and bedsteads in a clean and wholesome condition and free from vermin.

15. The keeper shall cause all solid or liquid filth or refuse to be removed once at least in every day before the hour of eleven in the forenoon from every room in a common lodging-house and shall once at least in every day cause every vessel, utensil or other receptacle for such filth or refuse to be thoroughly cleansed.

16. The keeper shall cause every urinal, and the floors, walls, door, ceiling, seat and apparatus of every water closet belonging to a common lodging-house to be kept free from filth, and clean in all other respects.

Maintenance of urinals, water-closets and drains in proper condition of repair.

17. The keeper shall cause every part of the structure of every water-closet and urinal belonging to a common lodging-house to be maintained at all times in good order, and every part of the apparatus of such water-closet and urinal and every drain or means of drainage with which such water-closet or urinal may communicate to be maintained at all times in good order and efficient action.

Condition and use of dust receptacles.

18. The keeper shall cause every receptacle for dust, ashes and other house refuse, belonging to a common lodging-house to be maintained at all times in good order and in a wholesome condition, and shall not cause or suffer any filth or liquid refuse to be thrown into any such receptacle.

Yards, etc., to be kept in good order and clean.

19. The keeper shall cause every yard, area, forecourt or other open space within the curtilage of the premises of a common lodging-house to be kept at all times in good order and thoroughly clean and free from any accumulation of filth or refuse, and shall, as often as shall be requisite, wash all paved surfaces in such yard, area, forecourt or other open space.

Ventilation.

20. The keeper shall cause all such means of ventilation as may be provided in or in connection with any room, passage, or staircase in a common lodging-house, or in connection with any water closet or urinal belonging to such house, to be maintained at all times in good order and efficient action.

21. The keeper shall cause the window of every room in, and of every passage, staircase and water-closet of a common lodging-house to be kept fully open for such time every day as may be necessary for the purposes of ventilation, and shall cause the windows of every room which may be appointed for use and occupation as a sleeping apartment to be kept fully open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

each day during the months of October, November, December, January, February, March and April, and from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day during the months of May, June, July, August, and September. Provided that such keeper shall not be required in pursuance of this byelaw to cause any window to be opened, or to be kept open, when the state of the weather is such as to render it necessary that the window shall be closed, or to cause any window in any room to be opened or kept open when any bed in such room is occupied by any lodger in consequence of sickness or of other sufficient cause.

22. The keeper shall cause every room in a common lodging-house which may be appointed for use and occupation as a sleeping apartment to be furnished with such number of beds and bedsteads and with such a supply of bed-clothes and of necessary utensils as may be sufficient for the requirements of the number of lodgers authorised to be received into such room, and he shall cause every sleeping apartment, other than a room occupied by married couples, to be furnished with bedsteads and bedding of a size adapted for one person only.

23. A keeper of a common lodging-house shall not cause or suffer any bed in any room which may be used as a sleeping apartment by persons of the male sex above the age of ten years, to be occupied at any one time by more than one such person.

24. The keeper shall cause the bed-clothes of every bed in a common lodging-house to be removed from such bed as soon as conveniently may be after such bed shall have been vacated by any lodger, and shall cause all such bed-clothes and the bed from which such bed-clothes may have been removed to be freely exposed to the air for a sufficient time to ensure that the beds and bed-clothes are properly aired.

25. The keeper shall, for the use of the lodgers received into a common lodging-house, cause to be provided a sufficient number of basins or other receptacles for water, of adequate capacity and suitably placed, and a sufficient supply of water and a sufficient number of towels for use in connection with such basins or other receptacles, and shall cause such basins or receptacles to be kept clean and in good order and the supply of towels to be renewed from time to time as often as may be requisite.

26. Every keeper shall keep and maintain in good condition and repair and in efficient working order all means provided for the escape of the inmates of the common lodging-house in case of fire. The keeper shall cause fire-extinguishing appliances, which shall be reasonably sufficient, to be kept constantly charged, and available for use on each floor of the common lodging-house.

The keeper shall not use or suffer or permit to be used in any part of a common lodging-house into which lodgers are received any lighted candle or any lamp supplied with paraffin, mineral or other oil or spirit for lighting, heating or cooking purposes, unless such candle is properly protected or such lamp is so constructed, protected and secured as not to involve risk of fire to the house or its contents.

Every keeper shall cause all gas burners in a common lodging-house to be protected, where necessary, by glass or wire globes, and shall also cause all gas burners within three feet of an inflammable ceiling in any such house to be fitted with consumers to distribute the heat.

The keeper shall not store or keep or allow to be stored or kept any paraffin, mineral or other oil, or spirit, or matches, or any explosive substance in any cupboard or other space situate under any staircase in a common lodging-house.

27. The keeper of a common lodging-house shall, immediately after he shall have been informed or shall have ascertained that any lodger in such house is ill of any infectious or contagious disease, give immediate notice in writing thereof to the medical officer of health of the county, and adopt all such precautions as may be necessary to prevent the spread of such disease. Such keeper shall not, at any time while such person is suffering from such disease, cause or allow any other person, except a person voluntarily in attendance on the person so suffering, to use or occupy the same room as such person.

Where in pursuance of any statutory provision in that behalf, the removal of any person to a hospital or other

Appendix
XXXV.

place for the reception of the sick is ordered, the keeper, on being informed of such order, shall forthwith take all such steps as may be requisite on his part to secure the safe and prompt removal of such person in compliance with the order, and shall, in and about such removal, adopt all such precautions as, in accordance with any instructions which he may receive from either the medical officer of health of the county or of the metropolitan borough in which the common lodging-house is situated, may be most suitable for the circumstances of the case.

Where, in consequence of the illness of such person, there may be reasonable grounds for apprehending the spread of infection through the admission of a lodger to any room or rooms in a common lodging-house, or through the admission to such rooms or rooms of the maximum number of lodgers who may be received therein, such keeper, after receiving instructions from the medical officer of health of the county or of the metropolitan borough as aforesaid, and until the grounds for apprehending the spread of infection shall have been removed, shall cease to receive any lodger into such room or rooms, or shall receive therein such lodgers only as the exigencies of the case may require.

Penalties.

28. Any person offending against any of the foregoing byelaws shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty of £5, and to a further penalty of 40s. for each day on which the offence continues after written notice from the Council. Provided nevertheless that the justices or court before whom any complaint may be made or any proceedings may be taken in respect of any such offence may, if they think fit, adjudge the payment as a penalty of any sum less than the full amount of the penalty imposed by this by-law.

Commencement of byelaws.

29. These byelaws shall come into force on the 1st day of October, 1903.

The seal of the London County Council was hereunto affixed on the second day of July, 1903.

L.S.

G. L. GOMME,
Clerk of the London County Council.

Allowed by the Local Government Board this fourteenth day of August, 1903.

L. S.

S. B. PROVIS,
Secretary,
Acting on behalf of the said Board under the authority of their General Order, dated the twenty-sixth day of May,
1877.

SCHEDULE I.

To _____ of _____

WHEREAS, in pursuance of the statutory provision in that behalf you have been duly licensed by the London County Council to use the premises situated at _____ in the County of London, for the purpose of a common lodging-house, and to receive lodgers therein :

Now, I, _____, Clerk to the said Council, do hereby give you notice that, in exercise of the powers conferred upon them in that behalf, the said Council have fixed as the number of lodgers who may be received at any one time into such house and into the several rooms therein, the number specified in respect of such house and of each of such rooms in the form hereunto appended.

FORM.

"Common lodging-house."

Licence No. _____

Common lodging-house situated at _____

Name of keeper _____

The number of lodgers who may be received at any one time into this house is _____

The number of lodgers who may be received at any one time into each of the several rooms in this house is the number specified in respect of such room in the appropriate column of the following table—

In Room No. 1	In Room No. 2	In Room No. 3	In Room No. 4	In Room No. 5	TOTAL.
In Room No. 6	In Room No. 7	In Room No. 8	In Room No. 9	In Room No. 10
In Room No. 11	In Room No. 12	In Room No. 13	In Room No. 14	In Room No. 15
In Room No. 16	In Room No. 17	In Room No. 18	In Room No. 19	In Room No. 20
In Room No. 21	In Room No. 22	In Room No. 23	In Room No. 24	In Room No. 25

Clerk of the London County Council.

SCHEDULE II.

To _____ of _____

WHEREAS in pursuance of the statutory provision in that behalf, you have been duly licensed by the London County Council to use the premises situated at in the County of London for the purpose of a common lodging-house and to receive lodgers therein ;

AND WHEREAS the said Council have determined that it is expedient to vary the number of lodgers heretofore fixed to be received at any one time into such house and into the several rooms therein ;

Now, I, _____, Clerk to the said Council, do hereby give you notice that from and after the day of _____, the number of lodgers who may be received at any one time into such house and into the several rooms therein shall be the number specified in respect of such house and of each of such rooms in the form hereunto appended.

Appendix
XXXV.

FORM.

" Common lodging-house."

Licence No.

Common lodging-house, situated at
Name of keeper

The number of lodgers who may be received at any one time into this house is

The number of lodgers who may be received at any one time into each of the several rooms in this house is the number specified in respect of such room in the appropriate column of the following table—

In Room No. 1	In Room No. 2	In Room No. 3	In Room No. 4	In Room No. 5	TOTAL.
In Room No. 6	In Room No. 7	In Room No. 8	In Room No. 9	In Room No. 10
In Room No. 11	In Room No. 12	In Room No. 13	In Room No. 14	In Room No. 15
In Room No. 16	In Room No. 17	In Room No. 18	In Room No. 19	In Room No. 20
In Room No. 21	In Room No. 22	In Room No. 23	In Room No. 24	In Room No. 25

Clerk of the London County Council.

_____ day of _____ 190—.

SCHEDULE

" Common lodging-house."

Licence No. _____

Street or Place _____

R O O M

No.

Number of Lodgers authorised to be received in this Room

Clerk of the London County Council

_____ day of _____ 190—.

3. MODEL BYELAWS ISSUED BY THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD WITH RESPECT TO TENTS, VANS, SHEDS, AND SIMILAR STRUCTURES.

MEMORANDUM.

Appendix
XXXV.

Section 9 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 72), provides that :—

“(2.) A sanitary authority may make byelaws for promoting cleanliness in, and the habitable condition of tents, vans, sheds, and similar structures used for human habitation, and for preventing the spread of infectious disease by the persons inhabiting the same, and generally for the prevention of nuisances in connection with the same.”

“(7.) Nothing in this section shall apply to any tent, van, shed, or structure, erected or used by any portion of Her Majesty’s military or naval forces.”

Similar provisions are contained in sub-sections (2) and (4) of Section 95 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76).

The local authorities authorised by the above-mentioned enactments to make byelaws are, elsewhere than in London, the council of any borough or urban or rural district, and in London, any sanitary authority as defined by Section 99 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891.

Byelaws made under either of the Acts referred to require confirmation by the Local Government Board, (48 & 49 Vict. c. 72, s. 10 (1) ; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 76, s. 114.)

With a view to the better enforcement of the provisions of the former Act, and of any byelaws made by a local authority thereunder, Sub-section 9 (3) enacts that :—

“Where any person duly authorised by a sanitary authority or by a justice of the peace has reasonable cause to suppose either that there is any contravention of the provisions of this Act, or any byelaw made under this Act, in any tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation, or that there is in any such tent, van, shed, or structure, any person suffering from a dangerous infectious disorder, he may, on producing (if demanded) either a copy of his authorisation purporting to be certified by the clerk or a member of the sanitary authority or some other sufficient evidence of his being authorised as aforesaid, enter by day such tent, van, shed, or structure, and examine the same and every part thereof in order to ascertain whether in such tent, van, shed, or structure there is any contravention of any such byelaw or a person suffering from a dangerous infectious disorder.”

Corresponding provisions applicable to London are contained in Section 95 (3) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891.

Local Government Board,
May, 1899.

MODEL BYELAWS.

(Revised and Reprinted, January, 1906.)

BYELAWS made by the *

with respect to TENTS, VANS, SHEDS, and similar STRUCTURES used for human habitation in the †

Interpretation of Terms.

1. Throughout these byelaws the expression “the Council” means the * the expression “the District” means the †

the expression “infectious disease” means smallpox, cholera, diphtheria, membranous croup, erysipelas, the disease known as scarlatina or scarlet fever, measles,

* Insert “Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of acting by the Council”; or “Urban [or Rural] District Council of”; as the case may be.

† Insert “Borough of”; or “Urban [or Rural] District of”; as the case may be.

and the fevers known by any of the following names : typus, typhoid, enteric, relapsing, continued, or puerperal, the expression “the Medical Officer of Health” means the medical officer of health for the district, or any legally qualified medical practitioner lawfully authorised to act on behalf of such officer; and the expression “the occupier,” when used in relation to any tent, van, shed, or similar structure, means the person who for the time being has the charge, management, or control of such tent, van, shed or structure.

For promoting cleanliness in, and the habitable condition of tents, vans, sheds, and similar structures used for human habitation.

2. The occupier of a van used for human habitation shall cause the internal surface and the floor thereof to be thoroughly cleansed from time to time as often as may be requisite for keeping the same in a cleanly condition.

3. The occupier of a van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation, shall for the purpose of securing the habitable condition thereof, provide for such van, shed, or structure, adequate means of permanent ventilation.

4. The occupier of a tent, van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation, shall cause the same to be maintained so that it may be reasonably weather-proof at all times when so used.

5. The occupier of a tent, shed or similar structure used for human habitation, shall cause the same to be at all times provided with a suitable dry flooring, or other dry covering for the ground.

6. The occupier of a tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation shall provide therefor a sufficient receptacle or receptacles for the storage of water, with proper coverings, so placed as to be easily accessible, and shall cause the same to be maintained at all times in good order, and shall provide a sufficient supply of wholesome water for the use of the inmates of the tent, van, shed or structure, and shall also cause every part of the interior of any such receptacle to be kept thoroughly clean.

7. Notwithstanding anything in the foregoing byelaw, the person by agreement with or by license from whom any tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation shall be erected, brought or used on any land shall provide on such land a sufficient supply of wholesome water for the use of the occupants of the tent, van, shed or structure.

For preventing the spread of infectious disease by the persons inhabiting tents, vans, sheds, or similar structures used for human habitation.

8. The occupier of a tent, van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation who shall have been informed, or shall have ascertained, that any inmate thereof is ill of an infectious disease, shall thereupon immediately give notice to the medical officer of health.

Provided that this bye-law shall not apply in respect of any infectious disease of which any such notice is required to be given by any statutory provision in force in the district.

9. The occupier of a tent, van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation who shall have been informed, or shall have ascertained, that any inmate thereof is ill of an infectious disease, shall adopt all reasonable precautions that may be ordered by the medical officer of health for preventing the spread of the disease.

He shall not, at any time while any such inmate is suffering from an infectious disease, cause or allow any other person, except a person in attendance on the inmate, to occupy the tent, van, shed, or similar structure.

10. The occupier of a tent or van used for human habitation, in which any person may within the preceding six weeks have been suffering from an infectious disease, and which has not since been properly disinfected, or in which any person is at the time suffering from an infectious disease, shall comply with the following regulations :—

(1.) He shall, before causing or allowing the tent or van to be removed from the site on which it may be, give to the medical officer of health twenty-four hours' notice of the intention to remove the same, and of the place to which the same is proposed to be removed.

(2.) He shall not cause or allow the tent or van to be brought into any market, fair, raceground or place which may for the time being be devoted to purposes of public amusement, recreation or resort, or to be removed to any site where, in the opinion of the medical officer of health, there would be danger of spreading infection.

(3.) He shall, where the medical officer of health may, for the purpose of preventing the spread of infection, order the removal of the tent or van from any site, remove the same, in compliance with the order of the medical officer of health, to another site within the district to which it may lawfully be removed.

(4.) He shall, when removing the tent or van comply with such reasonable conditions as the medical officer of health may impose for the purpose of preventing the spread of infection.

(5.) He shall not remove the tent or van out of the district until the same has been properly disinfected.

11. In every case where, in pursuance of any statutory provision in that behalf, an order of a justice has been obtained for the removal from a tent, van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation to a hospital, or other place for the reception of the sick, of a person who is suffering from any dangerous infectious disorder, the occupier of the tent, van, shed or structure shall, on being informed of the order, forthwith take all such steps as may be requisite to secure the safe and prompt removal of the said person in compliance with the order, and shall, in and about the removal, adopt all such precautions as, in accordance with any instructions which he may receive from the medical officer of health, may be most suitable for the circumstances of the case.

12. The occupier of a tent, van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation shall, immediately after a person suffering from an infectious disease has been removed therefrom, or has died therein, or has recovered from such disease whilst being therein, give notice of the removal, death, or recovery to the medical officer of health, and shall, as soon as conveniently may be, cause every part of the tent, van, shed or structure to be thoroughly cleansed and disinfected, and shall also cause all bedding, clothing, or other articles therein which may be liable to retain infection to be in like manner cleansed and disinfected, unless the Council shall have ordered the same to be destroyed, or unless the Council or the medical officer of health shall, in pursuance of any statutory provision in that behalf, have required the owner of the same to cause the same to be delivered to an officer of the council for removal for the purpose of disinfection.

He shall comply with all proper instructions of the Medical Officer of Health as to cleansing and disinfection.

When the tent, van, shed or similar structure, and every such article as aforesaid, shall have been thoroughly cleansed and disinfected in accordance with those instructions, he shall give notice thereof to the medical officer of health.

13. The occupier of a tent, van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation, in which any person has within six weeks previously been suffering from an infectious disease, shall not without having the tent, van, shed or similar structure, and all articles therein liable to retain infection, disinfected to the satisfaction of a registered medical practitioner as testified by a certificate signed by him, cause or suffer any person newly to occupy or become an inmate of the tent, van, shed, or similar structure.

Generally for preventing nuisances in connection with tents, vans, sheds, and similar structures used for human habitation.

14. Notwithstanding any other provision of these byelaws the occupier of a tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation shall provide for the same a sufficient receptacle for refuse.

15. An occupier of a tent, van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation shall not cause or suffer any solid or liquid filth to be retained therein.

He shall not deposit or cause any solid or liquid filth to be deposited within thirty feet from such tent, van, shed or structure, except in a proper receptacle.

He shall not deposit or cause any solid or liquid filth to be deposited in any place so as to cause a nuisance.

He shall cause every vessel, utensil or other receptacle provided or used for the purpose of containing or removing any solid or liquid filth to be sufficiently cleansed immediately after it shall have been used for that purpose.

16. The person by agreement with or by license from whom any tent, van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation shall be erected, brought or used on any land, shall, in any case in which nuisance is likely to arise from the want of privy accommodation and of a receptacle for refuse for the use of the occupants of the tent, van, shed or structure, provide for their use on such land in a suitable situation sufficient privy accommodation, and a sufficient covered ashpit, dustbin, or other receptacle for refuse, and shall maintain the same in good repair and order and in a reasonably clean and wholesome condition.

17. The occupier of a tent, van, shed or similar structure used for human habitation shall not keep any animal, or deposit any filth or the dung of any animal, within the distance of forty feet from any well, spring, or stream, or other water used or likely to be used by man for drinking or domestic purposes, or for manufacturing drink for the use of man, or any water used or likely to be used in any dairy, or otherwise in such a position or in such a manner as to render any such water liable to pollu-

Penalties.

18. Every person who shall offend against any of the foregoing byelaws shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty of five pounds, and in the case of a continuing offence to a further penalty of forty shillings for each day after written notice of the offence from the Council.

Provided, nevertheless, that the justices or court before whom any complaint may be made, or any proceedings may be taken in respect of any such offence, may, if they think fit, adjudge the payment as a penalty of any sum less than the full amount of the penalty imposed by this byelaw.

4. MODEL BYELAWS ISSUED BY THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD WITH RESPECT TO HOP PICKERS AND PICKERS OF FRUIT AND VEGETABLES.

MEMORANDUM.

Section 314 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), provides that any local authority (i.e., the council of any borough or urban or rural district) "may, if they think fit, make byelaws for securing the decent lodging and accommodation of persons engaged in hop-picking within the district of such authority." The scope of this enactment was extended by the Public Health (Fruit Pickers' Lodgings) Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 23), section 2 of which provides that—

"Section 314 of the Public Health Act, 1875, . . . shall be deemed to extend to and authorise the making of byelaws for securing the decent lodging and accommodation of persons engaged in the picking of fruit and vegetables."

The Act of 1882 is to be construed as one with the Public Health Act, 1875, and by operation of section 184 of the latter Act any byelaws which may be made by a local authority under section 314 of that Act, or under section 2 of the Public Health (Fruit Pickers' Lodgings) Act, 1882, require confirmation by the Local Government Board.

In connection with the question of the housing of persons engaged in hop-picking and in the picking of fruit and vegetables, the powers conferred upon the local authority by section 9 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 72), may be mentioned. By this enactment the local authority are empowered, among other things, to make byelaws "for promoting cleanliness in and the habitable condition of tents, vans, sheds, and similar structures used for human habitation, and for preventing the spread of infectious disease by the persons inhabiting the same, and generally for the prevention of nuisances in connection with the same."

A separate series of model clauses has been prepared by the Board for the guidance of local authorities making byelaws under the enactment last cited, and local authorities whose districts are visited by hop or fruit pickers should consider the propriety of making byelaws under this enactment, as well as under section 314 of the Public Health Act, 1875; for some at least of the persons who at certain seasons of the year may move into the district in order to obtain employment in the picking of hops, fruit, or vegetables, may possess their own tents or vans, and the sanitary regulation of such dwellings would seem to be a matter for byelaws under the Act of 1885.

S. B. PROVIS,
Secretary.

Local Government Board,
August, 1902.

MODEL BYELAWS.

BYELAWS made by the *

for securing the DECENT LODGING AND ACCOMMODATION OF PERSONS engaged in HOP-PICKING or in the PICKING OF FRUIT AND VEGETABLES in the †

1. Throughout these byelaws the expression "the Council" means the *

2. Every person providing any tent, shed, barn, hopper-house, building, or other habitation for the lodging of persons engaged in hop-picking or in the picking of fruit and vegetables, and not being a building ordinarily occupied as a dwelling-house, or for human habitation, shall comply with the following conditions:—

* "Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of , acting by the Council"; or, "Urban (or Rural) District Council of "; as the case may be.

† Insert name of borough or urban or rural district, or, if the byelaws are to apply to part only of a rural district, "that portion of the Rural District of " which comprises the contributory places of "; as the case may be.

(i.) He shall cause such habitation to be so constructed and maintained that it may be clean, dry, and weather-proof at all times when used for the lodging of such persons.

(ii.) He shall cause such habitation in every case to be properly ventilated and sufficiently lighted.

(iii.) He shall not cause or allow a greater number of adult persons to be received into any such habitation, or any room therein, at any one time, for the purpose of sleeping therein, than may be compatible with the allowance of sixteen square feet at the least of available floor space in respect of each adult person.

For the purpose of the foregoing provision two children under ten years of age shall be counted as one adult person.

(iv.) He shall cause every room or part of such habitation, which may be appropriated for the reception of adult persons of different sexes, to be so furnished or provided that every bed shall be properly separated from any other bed by a suitable screen or partition of such material, construction, and size as to secure adequate privacy to the occupant or occupants of such bed.

(v.) He shall provide in a safe and suitable position in, or in connection with, or adjacent to such habitation, a suitable cooking-house, or other place, properly covered or sheltered, in which fires may be safely and readily lighted, and food may be properly cooked, and clothes and other articles may be properly dried.

He shall cause such cooking-house or place to be so constructed that for every fifteen persons authorised to be received in such habitation a separate fireplace or separate accommodation for the cooking of food and the drying of clothes and other articles, may be provided.

(vi.) He shall (where the same is not otherwise readily available) provide in or upon or in connection with such habitation, or in some suitable place readily accessible therefrom, such a supply of good and wholesome water as will, at all times, suffice for the reasonable requirements, whether for drinking, cooking, or washing, of the several persons received and lodged in such habitation.

(vii.) He shall provide for every person received and lodged in such habitation a sufficient supply of clean, dry straw, or other clean, dry, and suitable bedding.

He shall cause such straw or other bedding to be changed or properly cleansed, from time to time, as often as occasion may require.

(viii.) He shall cause every part of the interior of such habitation, and of any cooking-house, privy, or other premises in connection therewith, to be thoroughly cleansed immediately before any person shall be received to lodge therein, and from time to time, as occasion may require, while the lodgers are retained therein.

He shall cause the walls and ceilings of every room constructed of brick, stone, iron, concrete, wood, earth, or plaster to be well and sufficiently lime-washed at least once in every year, and he shall from time to time cause all accumulations or deposits of filth or any offensive or noxious matter to be removed from such habitation or premises, and from the land immediately surrounding such habitation or premises, or adjoining thereto.

(ix.) He shall provide, in a suitable position in connection with such habitation, a sufficient number of water-closets, earth-closets or privies, properly constructed, for the separate use of each sex.

Penalties.

3. Every person who shall offend against any of the foregoing byelaws shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty of five pounds, and in the case of a continuing offence to a further penalty of forty shillings for each day after written notice of the offence from the council. Provided, nevertheless, that the justices or court before whom any complaint may be made or any proceedings may be taken in respect of any such offence may, if they think fit, adjudge the payment as a penalty of any sum less than the full amount of the penalty imposed by this bye-law.

APPENDIX XXXVI.

Appendix
XXXVI.

INDUSTRIAL AND REFORMATORY SCHOOLS.

(Memorandum and Tables prepared by Mr. J. G. Legge, H.M. Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools, Great Britain.)

The Reformatory and Industrial Schools of Great Britain are administered by the Home Secretary. Between the two classes of schools there is a good deal of confusion in the public mind, and this is natural enough, for there is little difference between them in outward characteristics, and the system of management in the one is very much the same as that in the other. Indeed, the Departmental Committee of 1895 on these schools, stated in their Report that they proposed to treat Reformatory and Industrial Schools together; first because as regards their management, their discipline and the life led within their walls, there is really no practical difference between them; secondly, because there is no more difference between the inmates of the schools than in the life they lead, the difference between them being not so much one of criminality as of age. There is, however, a clear technical distinction to be drawn, which may briefly be set out as follows:—

The senior schools, or Reformatories, are schools to which are sent juveniles, up to the age of 16, who have been convicted of an offence punishable with penal servitude or imprisonment, and such children must not, by the Act of 1899, serve a previous term in prison. The junior or Industrial Schools, on the other hand, are designed, broadly speaking, for children up to the age of 14 who may not actually have committed an offence, but whose circumstances are such that if left in their surroundings they are likely to join the delinquent population. Thus the senior schools are for actual, the junior schools for potential, delinquents, and the former contain children some three years older on an average than the latter. The two overlap to some extent in that an actual delinquent if under 12 and not previously convicted may be sent to an industrial school.

EXTENT TO WHICH REFORMATORY SCHOOLS ARE AVAILABLE FOR VAGRANTS.

The Reformatory Schools Acts 1866 and 1893 enable a youthful offender under 16, who is convicted of an offence punishable with penal servitude or imprisonment, to be committed to a certified Reformatory School. Thus a young person under 16 guilty of an offence under the Vagrancy Act can be so committed. As a matter of fact, during the five years 1894 to 1898, 127 were committed under the Vagrancy Act for begging and 268 for sleeping out. In the subsequent quinquennium 1899 to 1903, 101 were committed for begging and 254 for sleeping out. The great majority of these cases may be taken to have been between 14 and 16 years of age, for had they been under 14 the probability is that they would have been committed under the Industrial Schools Acts to industrial schools.

A circular was recently sent round among the managers of Reformatory Schools asking how young persons, who had been originally committed to a reformatory school under the Vagrancy Act for begging or sleeping out, but had been discharged within the past five years, have done in after life. Managers were asked to give some idea as to the number of such cases whom it had been possible to separate from their old associations on disposal, keep separate, and get to settle down at some regular employment. The gist of the replies will be found on Exhibit No. 1. The impression to be gained from the replies is on the whole favourable. Committal to a Reformatory School has generally had the effect hoped for.

EXTENT TO WHICH INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS ARE AVAILABLE FOR VAGRANTS.

Section XIV. of the Industrial Schools Act 1866 enables a child found wandering and not under proper guardianship to be committed to an Industrial School. It is contended that under this enactment the children of gipsies, tinkers, tramps and vagrants can, within the discretion of justices, be committed to an industrial school, but doubt has arisen in some minds as to the interpretation of "wandering" and of the expression "not under proper guardianship." The two main difficulties appear to have been:—

(a) Does "not under proper guardianship" mean only "not having any guardian at all," or does it mean in addition "having an improper guardian?"

(b) Can a child be considered as "wandering" when it is not wandering alone, but hand in hand with, or side by side with, one of its parents?

The Parliamentary history of the clause will be found in Exhibit No. 2.

It seems clear from the history of the enactment that the provision was expressly inserted for the benefit of two classes of children:—

1. Those living in the slums of big cities caught wandering about the streets and found to have no settled home at all or bad homes.

2. Children in rural districts caught tramping the country side—a class migratory in a sense that the former class is not.

The first class has been largely dealt with under the Industrial Schools Acts; the latter class not nearly so much. Question arose early as to the interpretation of the enactment "found wandering and not under proper guardianship." In 1869 the following letter was addressed by the Home Secretary to a gentleman who raised the point—

"Letter addressed to the Honorary Secretary of the Wellesley Industrial School Ship.

"Whitehall.

"20th October, 1869.

"Sir,—I am directed by Mr. Secretary Bruce to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, calling attention, by desire of the Committee of the 'Wellesley' Industrial School Ship, to the manner in which the magistrates for the borough of Newcastle-on-Tyne interpret the 14th clause of the Industrial Schools Act, 1866, under which children found wandering may be sent to an Industrial School.

"In reply, I am to acquaint you, for the information of the Committee, that such children may be sent for detention in an Industrial School, if homeless and without a settled place of abode, if without visible means of subsistence, or if without proper guardianship.

"But according to your representation, the magistrates appear to be satisfied that a child found wandering in the streets ought not to be sent to an industrial school if it has parents who can maintain it, and are naturally its legal guardians. This, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, is not a correct interpretation of this clause of the Act.

"The point left to the judgment of the magistrates in the sub-section of the 14th clause is not whether the child is or is not under any guardianship, but whether it is under proper guardianship.

Appendix
XXXVI.

"If the child's parents are habitual drunkards, or of known vicious or criminal character, or tramps, or if they continually ill-use or neglect the child, and are thus the cause of its wandering and destitution, and are leaving it to grow up in the habits of vice and beggary, they cannot be said to be proper guardians to it, and it would be in full accordance with the intention and object of the Act, and for the advantage of the public, that the child should be withdrawn from their control and placed under the corrective training of an industrial school, the parents being ordered to contribute, in proportion to their means, towards the expenses of its maintenance.

"I am to authorise the Committee to make known to the bench of magistrates of Newcastle-on-Tyne the views of the Secretary of State upon the question at issue. I am, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"E. H. KNATCHBULL-HUGESSEN."

That letter still gives, so far as I know, the Home Office point of view, though of course it cannot be asserted that the precise form of words used in that letter would at all times have been employed to express the Departmental mind.

Attention may be called to two comparatively recent pronouncements from the legal point of view. Sir John Bridge, late Chief Magistrate for the Metropolis, was examined before the Departmental Committee on Reformatory and Industrial Schools in 1895. The following extracts from the evidence given by him are conclusive as to his opinion :—

"19,396. Now as to the words to which you have just called attention. Looking at the context of the entire paragraph, would you say that the words 'not having any proper guardianship' mean having an improper guardian or not having any guardian at all?—Both.

"19,397. You mean either?—Both; because if it has no guardian at all, no person to take care of it, or if it is an improper person, they would both come within 'not having proper guardianship'—it means none or an improper one.

"19,409. Do you hold that the law can stop a tramp on the road, who has his children with him, and that it can take those children away from him, and send them all to an Industrial School?—Not simply because he is walking along the road, but if you found a tramp whose profession was a beggar.

"19,410. If he was a professional beggar?—Yes and doing nothing else, then I should certainly say, if that child was wandering with him, and made use of by him, I think it could be properly sent to an industrial school. I do not know of anything worse for a child than that."

Sir John Bridge held that "not under proper guardianship" meant either having no guardian at all or an improper guardian, and also, as it would appear from the last quotation, he held that a child might be committed for wandering whether it was wandering with its parent or not. (Sir John's opinion as to the interpretation of "not under proper guardianship" was upheld by Mr. W. J. Stewart, the stipendiary magistrate at Liverpool, who has had probably more experience of Industrial School Acts than any other two magistrates in the country.)

Then Professor Dove Wilson, professor of law at the Aberdeen University, and before that a sheriff for the county, was a member of the Scottish Departmental Committee on Habitual Offenders, etc., 1895. He drew up a legal memorandum for the guidance of his Committee, in the course of which he touches on the interpretation of Section XIV. of the Industrial Schools Act 1866, and gives his opinion as follows :—

"I have heard it suggested, that if the wandering child had any kind of parents, it could not be said to be without 'proper guardianship,' but I do not think it can be so interpreted, and I have always held that if the parents were drunken, or ill-treated their children, those children, if found wandering through the country, whether with or without the parents, came under the Act."

There seems no doubt, therefore, that any magistrate holding Sir John Bridge's or Professor Dove Wilson's view of the law, would commit a tramp child caught wandering in the country to an Industrial School, if he thought the case in favour of the child and against the parent strong enough, but no expression of the Home Office view nor of another magistrate's opinion would avail against a magistrate who conscientiously differed, and it is extremely doubtful whether a proposal to take away a magistrate's discretion and make it compulsory to commit every child found wandering would meet with much, if any, support.

EXTENT TO WHICH THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS HAVE, AS A MATTER OF FACT, BEEN UTILISED FOR THE CHILDREN OF TRAMPS IN RURAL DISTRICTS.

It has already been hinted above that while the Acts have been used for slum children in towns, they have not been so much used for tramp children in the rural districts.

A circular was recently sent out to a number of Industrial Schools in situations and of a sort likely to receive tramp children, if committed from the rural districts. The school authorities were asked :—

1. The number of children now in the schools who are the offspring of persons who may be described as tinkers, gipsies, tramps or habitual vagrants.

2. Whether such children are found quicker or slower at (a) schoolroom work, (b) industrial work.

3. Looking back on the children discharged during the past five years, what proportion of such children of tramps, etc., has it been possible to separate from their parents on disposal, keep separate and get to settle down at some regular employment.

The results will be found in Exhibit No. 3, but it will be seen at a glance that the mere fact that no larger a proportion of the children in schools so situated and circumstanced as to be specially available for them are the children of tinkers, gipsies, tramps, or habitual vagrants, shows that the enactment is not being too largely used for the benefit of tramp children, though such use is probably more extensive in Scotland than in England.

SUGGESTED CAUSES FOR THE COMPARATIVELY SMALL USE FOR THE ENACTMENT FOR TRAMP CHILDREN.

1. The principal engine for the committal of children under the Industrial Schools Acts has been the law enforcing compulsory attendance at school. It is mainly the machinery of the Education Acts that has brought to light children who are fit subjects for an industrial school. It is probably admitted that the administration of the Education Acts has not been in the past anything like as active in rural districts as in towns.

2. The local authority for a district has in almost every instance supplemented the Government grant for the maintenance of a child in an industrial school by a local subvention; thus there has probably been a reluctance to saddle a locality with the charge for children who have no settlement in that locality, but are simply passing through. Once they are out of a district that district's responsibility is at an end.

ADVANTAGES OF UTILISING THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS ACTS.

The information given as to disposal in exhibit No. 3 indicates that the schools have been more successful in dealing with a very difficult class than might have been expected. (See in particular the valuable reply received from the Leicester industrial school at Desford in the county of Leicester, Exhibit No. 4). There is little doubt that a rigorous committal of tramp children to industrial schools would, in five years, reduce substantially the number of children taken on the tramp.

In 1880 an Act was passed to bring children found in disorderly houses within the purview of the Industrial Schools Act. In the five years, 1894 to 1899, 966 children of this sort were committed; in the five years 1899 to 1903 only 711, and the decrease during the whole ten years has been fairly steady. The population of our big towns is higher for the second quinquennium than for the first, and it is doubtful whether either local authorities, police or school attendance officers, have been less active in relation to disorderly houses in the second period than in the first, or that the total number of disorderly houses has decreased. The probable explanation is that fewer children are being kept hanging about a disorderly house now than formerly, for the simple reason that they bring, in addition to the police, school attendance officers "nosing" in at the door.

At present the Industrial Schools throughout the country—at any rate the boys' schools—are far from full. The explanation probably is that the new education authorities have not yet found their feet, and are not enforcing the Industrial Schools Acts as rigorously as did the old School Boards. There are a number of well-equipped buildings all over England not working at full pressure, and there is ample accommodation at the moment, without incurring any fresh capital expenditure, for an experiment in the direction of a more rigorous application of the Industrial Schools Acts to the very class for which they were ostensibly passed some fifty years ago.

PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

This is enforced by a charge on the parent for the maintenance of his child. As a matter of fact this is being worked with a good deal more effect than is sometimes supposed. Thirty thousand pounds was collected from the parents of Reformatory and Industrial School children last year, and no small number of cases were imprisoned in default of payment. But it may be contended that the parents of tramp children are just the parents who will escape. This must be admitted; the tramp parent belongs to the class from whom it is most difficult of all to collect payment. And further, it must be admitted that committal to prison is not a very satisfactory way of dealing with such defaulters as can be caught. The salutary effect of the power to commit to prison lies in the fact that a considerable proportion of parents, who do dread the breaking up of their homes or losing employment, is influenced by the fear of it to make a special effort to keep up payment. The effect on parents who either have no home or do not care if their homes are broken up is small enough. But a second and most effectual means of enforcing parental responsibility is the final separation of the child from the parent. I am convinced it is a mistake to suppose that there is a large number of parents who are only too glad to get their children into industrial schools. At the outset most of them resent it very much, though later on, when some see their children well fed, clothed, taught and trained at other people's expense, they acquiesce for the time. Almost all of them are clamorous to have their children back when they are approaching 15 years of age. Every child who is finally separated from its parent on disposal from an Industrial School is an effective object lesson of the necessity of looking after one's children. If committal to a labour colony were substituted for prison and a tramp forced to remain in the colony and work for his own support, or until he could give reasonable security for his settling down to work outside, and not only keep himself, but contribute to the support of his children in Industrial Schools, the difficulty of making him realise through financial pressure his parental responsibility would be to a large extent overcome.

LABOUR COLONIES.

I do not believe that if labour colonies for vagrants were run on a sufficiently large scale to make their labour profitable, the expense would be anything like so serious as is feared by some.

I would add, with regard to the question of management of special schools or colonies by the central Government, local authorities or voluntary associations, that I am strongly of opinion, based upon my experience with Reformatory and Industrial Schools, that the best results (a) as regards economy of money, (b) economy of labour, (c) efficiency, are achieved by a combination of the three. A danger with rating authorities is spending too much; with voluntary committees spending too little. It is difficult to say too much for the value, on the one hand, of the energising and at the same time steadying and regularising influence introduced into voluntary work by the co-operation and supervision of a keen official, whether attached to local or central government, and, on the other, of the stirring by a breath of human, personal voluntary interest of the dry bones of an official system. The problem is how to bring the official of to-day into the right relationship with the enthusiastic voluntary worker. I have been struck by the enormously greater expenditure by the London School Board and the London County Council in the management of special institutions than by school boards and county councils in the country generally. An undoubted reason for this is the closer scrutiny over the expenditure of the rates exercised by ratepayers outside the Metropolis than inside; but the immense power and prestige of the Metropolis are such that its influence is extending over the country. Observers used to say that in France only Paris counted; the same is not true nor nearly true of the relations of London and England or Great Britain; but the influence of London on the country generally in social matters is very much greater now than it was twenty or even ten years ago. The result on the whole is probably good, but there are drawbacks, one of which is the danger (and no small one) of extravagance.

J. G. L.

EXHIBIT I.

DISPOSAL OF YOUNG PERSONS COMMITTED TO REFORMATORIES UNDER THE VAGRANCY ACT FOR BEGGING OR SLEEPING OUT.

Returns have been obtained from thirty-one out of thirty-nine reformatory schools in England.

The number of Vagrancy Act cases disposed of from those schools during the years 1899–1904 came to 343, viz: 308 boys and thirty-five girls. Of the 308 boys 228 are stated to be leading a settled life, of whom seventy-two are in the army (a good proportion musicians) and four in the Royal Navy. Of the thirty-five girls twenty-four are leading a settled life. Not all the remainder have gone under: some have, others are temporarily under a cloud, trace of others has been lost, a few are dead.

Not many schools express an opinion as to whether these cases are more difficult than others to get to settle down after they go out into the world. But among those that do, the opinion is almost unanimous that they are more difficult of disposal.

Two specimen returns are appended.

FARM SCHOOL, REDHILL,

BOYS DISCHARGED FROM 1900 TO 1904 WHO WERE COMMITTED FOR VAGRANCY.

No. on Register.	Name.	Admitted.	Discharged.	Age on leaving.	Subsequent circumstances, etc.
62	C.W.	March 16, 1895	March 13 1900	19	Weak-minded, though much improved, taken to relatives—since in workhouse.
87	J.R.	Aug. 1, 1895	April 3, 1900	19	Discharged to workhouse, half-imbecile, since hawking in streets.
154	E.R.M.	June 25, 1896	Aug. 14, 1900	19	Went home, soon enlisted in army, and is still in Buffs.
155	C.M.	June 25, 1896	Oct. 16, 1900	18½	Enlisted from school in Hants Regiment and still there.
232	C.J.	July 16, 1897	Oct. 26, 1900	19	Emigrated; still there and done well (except convicted of drunkenness once).
246	A.E.H.	Sept. 4, 1897	Jan. 13, 1902	19	Went to employment at home (modeller) lately enlisted in army.
249	C.R.	Sept. 8, 1897	Sept. 7, 1901	18¼	" " " (shoemaker) now in army (S. Lanes).
260	W.H.	Nov. 2, 1897	Sept. 28, 1901	19	" " " (fruit factory) " " (E. Surrey).
293	F.M.	Feb. 15, 1898	May 8, 1901	19	Emigrated. Joined army in Colony, then returned to England, enlisted in Buffs, still there.
336	F.G.	Sept. 8, 1898	Sept. 6, 1902	17¾	Went to employment at home (oil and colour shop) irregular work since. (Had 7 days for damage.)
337	A.L.	Sept. 8, 1898	Aug. 6, 1902	16¾	Emigrated, still there, doing well, farming.
355	W.M.	Nov. 25, 1898	March 19, 1902	19	" " moving about a good deal.
356	C.C.	Nov. 25, 1898	Aug. 21, 1902	19	Went home, worked at Pickle Factory, latterly work very slack.
357	C.M.	Nov. 25, 1898	Feb. 12, 1902	18¾	Enlisted from school into Grenadier Guards, where he is now Corporal.
358	A.B.	Nov. 26, 1898	July 8, 1903	19	Went to employment at home (carpenter) since then labourer at 5d. per hour.
365	J.W.	Dec. 30, 1898	Dec. 28, 1901	18¼	" " " (ropewalk) " " carman.
411	H.P.	Dec. 1, 1899	Feb. 10, 1904	19	" " " (painter) still working at it.
515	C.G.	March 14, 1901	Sept. 2, 1904	19	" " " (Railway Engine Works).
575	F.B.	Oct. 1, 1901	Feb. 23, 1903	19	" " " (Arsenal) since turned baker. (Transfer from Wandsworth.)
578	J.H.S.	Oct. 1, 1901	March 2, 1904	19	Emigrated. Was doing well, but this year convicted of stealing. Was formerly emigrated by a charitable agency and returned to England. Waited in school from 19th December, 1903 to 2nd March, 1904, for emigration. Had no home and knew of no relatives. (Visited by Secretary, August, 1904).
590	R.S.	Oct. 30, 1901	Oct. 29, 1904	18¾	Went to employment at home (builder's).

"Akbar" Reformatory Ship, Rock Ferry,
Birkenhead, 13th March, 1905.

Appendix
XXXVI.

RETURN OF "VAGRANT" CASES SINCE 1898, SHOWING DISPOSAL AND PRESENT OCCUPATION.

No.	Name.	Discharged.	Disposal.	Present occupation so far as ascertained.
2401	W.D.	Aug. 18, 1899	To sea	At sea.
2420	A.B.	Nov. 1, 1899	Do.	Do.
2426	G.N.	Feb. 24, 1900	To employment	Last heard of at sea 12 months ago.
2433	F.L.	April 19, 1900	To sea	Soldier, 30th Battery, R.F.A., Rawal Pindi.
2436	W.C.M.	March 27, 1900	Do.	Soldier, 36th Battery, R.F.A., Athlone.
2445	W.F.	May 1, 1902	Do.	Vagrant habits. At present at sea.
2452	E.G.R.	April 16, 1900	Do.	Stoker, R.N. ; a deserter.
2455	F.H.	March 1, 1900	Do.	In employ of London County Council Tramways.
2473	H.G.	April 1, 1901	Do.	Dead ; killed at sea.
2503	R.S.	Sept. 27, 1900	To employment	Soldier, Garrison Artillery.
2513	D.B.	Jan. 28, 1901	Do.	Rubber moulder.
2514	J.S.	Feb. 1, 1901	To sea	Spirit merchant's porter ; married.
2527	C.D.	April 8, 1901	Do.	At sea.
2549	C.T.	Sept. 28, 1901	To employment	Corporal in Dublin Fusiliers.
2615	T.P.	July 7, 1902	To sea	Stoker, R.N.
2617	D.O.	July 28, 1902	Do.	Newsvendor.
2620	C.S.	Aug. 9, 1902	Do.	Soldier, 4th King's Lancashire Regiment.
2651	B.H.	Feb. 6, 1903	To employment	Soldier, Gloucester Regiment, India.
2653	S.W.	Jan. 26, 1903	To sea	Horseman, Bibby's Cattle Food Manufacturers.
2656	W.R.	Feb. 26, 1903	Do.	At sea.
2678	J.F.	May 25, 1903	Do.	Scaling for P.S.N. Company.
2681	H.H.V.T.	July 16, 1903	Do.	Out of work.
2694	W.G.	Oct. 1, 1903	Do.	Vagrant habits ; very unsatisfactory ; following the sea until recently.
2698	P.C.	July 22, 1903	Do.	At sea.
2696	H.T.	July 22, 1903	Do.	Confectioner.
2703	T.G.	July 22, 1903	Do.	Works with father.
2716	A.F.	May 31, 1901	By Home Secretary's Warrant	Shop boy ; lives with employer ; same place since leaving ship.
2741	J.H.	March 15, 1904	To sea	At sea.
2744	A.S.	„ 18, 1904	Do.	Do.
2754	A.T.	May 12, 1904	Do.	Do.
2756	A.B.	„ 27, 1904	Do.	Do.
2845	R.H.	„ 11, 1904	To friends	Cabinetmaking.

G. W. BENNET, Cap. Sup.

EXHIBIT 2.

PARLIAMENTARY HISTORY OF THE ENACTMENT IN SECTION XIV. OF THE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS ACT 1866, ENABLING CHILDREN FOUND WANDERING AND NOT UNDER PROPER GUARDIANSHIP TO BE COMMITTED TO INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

There is no doubt that the Industrial Schools Acts were originally designed mainly in the interests of vagrant or tramp children. So far as I can trace the Parliamentary history of the question the first enactment on the subject was that of 1854 entitled "An Act to render Reformatory and Industrial Schools in Scotland more available for the benefit of vagrant children." This is known as the Dunlop Act, for it was introduced by Mr. Dunlop, then member for Greenock, and it may be noted that Colonel Blair, member for Ayrshire, speaking in favour of the Bill said: "Its real and its only object was to reclaim destitute and helpless vagrants." The preamble and section 1 of that Act run as follows:—

"Whereas it is expedient that Reformatory and Industrial Schools in Scotland should be made more available for the education and training of vagrant children.....

Appendix
XXXVI.

"1. When any young person apparently under the age of fourteen years shall, from and after the passing of this Act, be found begging, or, not having any home or settled place of abode or proper guardianship, and having no lawful or visible means of subsistence, shall be found wandering, and though not charged with any actual offence, shall be brought by any constable or police officer before any sheriff or magistrate, it shall be lawful for the said sheriff or magistrate, after due enquiry and due intimation to the parents, guardians, or others interested in such young person, if the same can be found, and unless the parents, guardians or other persons. shall appear and find security if he shall see cause, to order by a writing under his hand such young person forthwith to be transmitted to and received at any Reformatory School, Industrial School, or other similar institution within Scotland."

The first English Industrial Schools Act was introduced by Mr. Adderley, afterwards known as Lord Norton, and was passed in 1857 (20 and 21 Vict. Cap. 48). On the Second Reading of that Bill, Mr. Adderley emphasised the fact that the Bill was intended for the benefit of vagrant children, as witness the following quotations :—

"The object of the Bill was to render available such private institutions, in the nature of industrial schools, in England and Wales, as might be adapted for the care and education of vagrant children, and to enforce, as far as possible, parental care.—Hans. [145] 181."

"He wished to call attention to the circumstance that this Bill would carry out the measure which had been introduced by Mr. Speaker three years ago and assented to by Parliament, empowering the guardians of the poor to make provision for educating the children of out-door paupers. The present measure would supplement that Act, by enabling the guardians to educate all vagrant children in Industrial Schools.—Hans. [145] 182."

Section 5 of the English Act of 1857 ran as follows :—

"When any child is taken into custody on a charge of vagrancy under any local or general Act, the justices on receiving satisfactory proof in support of such charge, may, if the parent, or in case of an orphan, if the guardian or nearest adult relative of the child cannot at once be found, and provided there be any certified Industrial School, the managers of which are willing to receive him, order the child to be sent to such Industrial School for any period not exceeding one week, and shall direct due inquiries to be made, and notice (Form A.) to be given to the parent or guardian or nearest adult relative of the child, if any can be found, or to the persons with whom the child is or was last known to have been residing, of the circumstances under which the child has been taken into custody, and that the matter will be inquired into at the time and place mentioned in the notice."

The following section, 6, enabled the justice, when the child was brought up after remand in accordance with Section 5., either to order the child to be discharged on receiving an assurance in writing that the parent or guardian etc., will be responsible for the good behaviour of the child for any period not exceeding twelve months, or, in default of such assurance, order the child to be sent to a certified Industrial School.

In 1861 both the English and Scottish Acts relating to Industrial Schools were consolidated and amended.

The first part of Section 9 of the English Act (24 and 25 Vict. Cap. 113) ran as follows :—

"Children of the descriptions hereinafter mentioned may be sent to certified Industrial Schools in pursuance of the provisions of this Act; that is to say,"

- "1. Any child apparently under the age of fourteen years found begging or receiving alms, or being in any street or public place for the purpose of begging or receiving alms.
- "2. Any child apparently under the age of fourteen years that is found wandering, and not having any home or settled place of abode, or any visible means of subsistence, or frequents the company of reputed thieves."

The first part of Section 9 of the Scottish Act (24 and 25 Vict. Cap. 132) ran as follows :—

"Children of the descriptions hereinafter mentioned may be sent to certified Industrial Schools in pursuance of the provisions of this Act; that is to say,"

- "1. Any child apparently under the age of fourteen years found begging or receiving alms, or being in any street or public place for the purpose of begging or receiving alms.
- "2. Any child apparently under the age of fourteen years that is found wandering and not having any home or settled place of abode, or proper guardianship, or any visible means of subsistence, or that frequents the company of reputed thieves."

Then came the great consolidating measure of 1866 which combined in one enactment governing Great Britain the hitherto separate enactments dealing with England and Scotland apart. It would appear from a collation of the various enactments quoted above, that the words in Section 14 of the Industrial Schools Act 1866, "proper guardianship," were introduced from the terminology of the Scottish Acts. The aim of both sets of enactments had been to cover the case of the vagrant children, but the form of words used to attain this end had varied.

EXHIBIT 3.

NUMBER OF CHILDREN OF VAGRANTS AND TRAMPS AT PRESENT IN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

Returns have been obtained from 32 likely schools in England and Scotland, having a population for the moment of about 3,000 boys and 600 girls.

The number of actual inmates who are known to be the children of persons who may be described as tinkers, gipsies, tramps, or habitual vagrants, is 191, viz : 139 boys and fifty-two girls.

The varying opinions of the authorities of the schools on the capacity of these children as compared with others in the schools are illustrated by the following table :

Kind of Work.	No. of schools where tramp children are described as below the average.	No. where they are described as up to the average.	No. where they are described as above the average.
In Schoolroom - - -	18	7	5
At Industrial Training -	15	10	5

As to the proportion of such children discharged during the past five years whom it has been possible to separate from their parents on disposal, to keep separate and to get to settle down at some regular employment, the schools report as follows :—In the case of sixteen schools it is claimed that two-thirds or more have been so disposed of; in the case of four from one-half to two-thirds; in the case of three, less than one-half; others have had experience of but one or two, though one school, drawing a distinction between tinkers or gipsies (Romany) and tramps or vagrants, states that the former cannot be weaned from their traditional mode of life, while much may be done with the latter: with the former, as one might say, a change of nature is called for, with the latter merely a change of habit.

Most schools regard tramp or vagrant children as more difficult cases altogether than other children received by them.

EXHIBIT 4.

Industrial School.
Desford,
Nr. Leicester,
10th March, 1905

Dear Sir,—In reply to your circular of enquiry re children of real tinkers, gipsies, tramps, or vagrants, I herewith forward the figures and information applying to this school :—

- 1. No. of such children in the school, seventeen.
- 2. Proportion of such to total number in the school 8·5 per cent.

3. Educational Capacity :—

- 3 or 17·6 per cent. above the average.
- 6 or 35·3 per cent. average.
- 8 or 47·1 per cent. below the average.

—
17
—

Industrial Capacity :—

- 3 or 17·6 per cent. above the average.
- 8 or 47·1 per cent. average.
- 6 or 35·3 per cent. below the average.

—
17
—

J. G. Legge, Esq.,
Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools,
London.

4. During the last five years fourteen such boys were licensed or discharged. Appendix XXXV.

Separated from parents on disposal 14
Since dead - - - - - 1
Kept separate and settled down to regular employment - - - 11 or 85 per cent.

Army	-	-	-	4
Farm service	-	-	-	3
Emigrated	-	-	-	2
Apprenticed blacksmith	-	-	-	1
Bricklayer	-	-	-	1
				—
				11
				—

Of the two returned to parents :
One deserted from the Army at parents' instigation.
One returned to parent after being separated three years, and now desires to be replaced apart.
On admission these cases are specially noted, and throughout their detention are prepared for disposal apart from friends. I am, dear Sir,

Yours faithfully,
C. OXLEY,
Superintendent.

APPENDIX XXXVII.

COUNTY COUNCILS AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

CIRCULAR ISSUED BY THE HOME OFFICE.

Home Office,
London, S.W.,
30th December, 1903.

SIR,—I am directed by the Secretary of State to ask you to be good enough to draw the attention of your Council to the effect of the Education Act, 1902, on the powers and duties of county councils in relation to industrial schools. A county council (as heir to the old prison authority) is already, by the Local Government Act of 1888, a local authority for the purposes of the Industrial Schools Acts. The transfer to the Council by the Education Act, 1902, of a school board's powers does, however, something more than duplicate its existing powers. It is now the duty of the Council to enforce school attendance under sections 11, 12 and 13 of the Elementary Education Act, 1876, and the sanction on which rests its power to enforce attendance is either a fine on the parents not exceeding 20s., or committal of the child to a day industrial school or a truant industrial school or an ordinary industrial school. It appears to the Secretary of State that it is within the option of a county council to exercise its industrial school powers as successor to the old prison authority independently of its powers as the new education authority, save of course in the matter of school attendance; but the Secretary of State is strongly of opinion that the Council will be well advised to resolve to discharge those duties in its latter capacity only, and for the following reasons :—

(1) There seems to be a general agreement that the education committee will be the committee best qualified to deal with these matters.

(2) Accounting will be simplified. The expenditure from the rates on industrial schools will most reasonably and conveniently be exhibited in connection with the accounts of expenditure on other classes of schools maintained or subsidised by the Council.

(3) If the county council does not elect to exercise its powers in the capacity of education authority only, a good deal of confusion may arise, seeing that in that event there will be in certain districts of the county concurrent jurisdiction between the county council and new education authorities representing urban district councils with a population of over 20,000 and councils of boroughs with a population of over 10,000 which are not quarter sessions boroughs. So far as county councils elect to proceed under the enactments relating to industrial schools in their capacity of local education authorities rather than as prison authorities, the concurrent jurisdiction of those bodies and of the councils of non-county boroughs and urban districts, who will be local education authorities under Part III. of the Education Act, 1902, will not arise.

A question has been raised whether it will be practicable for the county council, as local education authority, legally to accept and deal with the liabilities assumed by it up to the present as prison authority in respect of schools already existing, whether schools provided by the council as prison authority or voluntary schools with the managers of which the council as prison authority has made agreements. There appears to the Secretary of State to be a simple way out of these difficulties :—

(a) Where the county council (as prison authority) or any school board in its area has made agreements with existing schools under voluntary committees, the "county council" might formally terminate them and the "education authority" might make fresh ones.

(b) Where a county council (as prison authority) has established and maintained an industrial school of its own, the "county council" might resign its certificate and the "education authority" might apply for the issue of a new one.

Another point occurs in connection with the duty of the enforcement of school attendance which will devolve upon county councils as a new duty. It has already been stated that the sanction on which rests the power to enforce school attendance is either a fine on the parent not exceeding 20s., or committal of the child to a day industrial school, a truant industrial school, or an ordinary industrial school. It appears to the Secretary of State to be highly desirable that mere truants, e.g., children dealt with under sub-section (2) of section 11 of the Education Act, 1876, should, if committed to industrial schools, be committed either to day industrial schools or to the short detention schools known as truant schools. It may be observed that the raising, by section 6 (2) of the Elementary Education Act, 1900, of the maximum fine on parents to 20s. has had a marked effect in reducing truancy in the large centres of population; consequently there will probably be found in existing schools accommodation for truants from districts where truant schools have not been established; enquiry is all that will be necessary. A list of schools certified by the Secretary of State is published in which truant schools are clearly set out, and a copy of this can be supplied on application. On the other hand, it is equally desirable that children should not be dealt with as mere truants who are more suitable for detention in an ordinary industrial school.

Finally, I am to forward to you, in the hope that it will be of service to your Council, the enclosed brief statement of its principal powers and duties in relation to the enforcement of the Industrial Schools Acts and of school attendance. The Secretary of State has no doubt that local education authorities will be fully alive to the importance of their functions in these regards, amounting as they do to the watching and the checking of the causes which make for juvenile delinquency.—I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

M. D. CHALMERS.

The Clerk to the County Council.

(Enclosure to Circular.)

BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE MAIN PROVISIONS OF THE LAW RELATING TO INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

Industrial schools are of three kinds :—

(i.) Ordinary industrial schools, where children are detained for a term of years and then placed out in the world. Industrial Schools.

(ii.) Short detention or truant industrial schools.

(iii.) Day industrial schools.

The children who can be sent to industrial schools may be thus classified :— Children who may be sent.

(1) Destitute children, if orphans; if found wandering; if surviving parent is in prison; if mother in prison having been twice convicted of crime. (2) Mendicants. (3) Vagrants, if destitute; if not having proper guardianship. (4) Paupers from workhouses, if refractory; if either of the parents has been convicted of crime punishable with imprisonment. (5) Truants from public elementary schools, if education neglected; if found habitually wandering; if found not under proper control; if found in company of rogues; also truants from day industrial schools. (6) Incipient criminals, viz. :—those charged with offences or found associating with thieves. (7) Children of bad parents, viz. :—children taken from disorderly houses; children not having proper guardianship if found wandering; children not under proper control; children having a surviving parent in prison, if destitute; children whose mother, having been twice convicted of "crime," is in prison, if they are destitute; workhouse children either of whose parents has been convicted of crime punishable with imprisonment.

The principal enactments governing the committal of these children are :— Chief enactments governing committal.

(i.) The Industrial Schools Act, 1866, sections 14

(as amended by Industrial Schools Acts Amendment Act 1880), 15, 16 and 17.

(ii.) The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1876, section 14.

(iii.) The Elementary Education Act, 1876, sections 11, 12 and 13.

(iv.) The Youthful Offenders Act, 1901, sections 1, 5, 6, 8, 9.

As the enforcement of school attendance will be one of the main concerns of the local education authority, special attention may be directed to the provisions of the last named Act (as amended by sections 6 (2) of the Elementary Education Act, 1900) with regard to the committal of children to industrial schools for breach of attendance order.

The liability of a child to have an attendance order made against it is thus fixed by the Statute ;—

(a.) If the parent of any child above the age of five years (s. 48) who is under the Act prohibited from being taken into full-time employment (s. 5) habitually, and without reasonable excuse (s. 11), neglects to provide efficient elementary instruction for his child ; or,

(b.) If any child be found habitually wandering, or not under proper control, or in the company of rogues, vagabonds, disorderly persons, or reputed criminals, it shall be the duty of the local (school) authority, after due warning to the parent, to complain to a Court of Summary Jurisdiction, &c., which may order the child to attend some certified efficient school. Then by section 12, if without reasonable excuse (s. 11) any child neglects to attend school in pursuance of the attendance order, the Court may, on the complaint of the local (school) authority, in the first case of non-compliance impose a penalty not exceeding with the costs 20s., or if the parent satisfies the Court that he has used all reasonable efforts, may send the child to a certified industrial school ; only, however, to a certified boarding industrial school, if it appears to the Court that there is no certified day industrial school suitable to the child. In the second case of non-compliance, the Court may impose a like penalty, or (as above) send the child to an industrial school, or do both (Elementary Education Acts, 1876 and 1900).

A local education authority may either (a) establish and maintain an industrial school of its own (section 28 of the Education Act, 1870, as amended by section 15 of the Education Act, 1876), or (b) contribute on such terms as it thinks fit towards the maintenance of children sent from its district to an industrial school managed by another local education authority or by a voluntary association, and towards the building or upkeep, &c., of such school (section 27 of the Education Act, 1870, as amended by section 14 of the Education Act, 1873 ; and the Elementary Education (Industrial Schools) Act, 1879).

Appendix
XXXVII.

Power of Education Authority either to establish schools of their own
or use others.

APPENDIX XXXVIII.

STATEMENT GIVING PARTICULARS AS TO VAGRANTS RELIEVED AT THE ST. AUSTELL CASUAL WARDS—NOVEMBER, 1904, TO JANUARY, 1905.

(Handed in by Mr. Preston-Thomas.)

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, married, or widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving.	Why on tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
1904. Nov. 1	W. R.	43	Bricklayer -	Truro -	Liskeard -	M. ; wife and children in Sheffield	Wales for 8 weeks ; stopped 3 weeks ago	Slackness of work -	Well-built working man, not too clean	Already, if story be true, showing effects of tramping.
, 2	W. S.	55	Steamboat fitter	Falmouth -	Liskeard -	W. -	With John Lard's 9 years, and 7 years previously with one firm ; odd jobs since leaving John Lard's ; sickness	Depression in building, owing to war	Clean, intelligent man	Got careless after wife's death, and too fond of drink.
, 6	T. K.	48	Labourer -	Liskeard -	Did not know ; either to Bodmin or Truro	S. -	22 years in New Zealand, came home 6 years ago ; steady there last 6 years and saved money. Worked five weeks in the Teign Valley railroad ; finished three weeks since	Through drink -	Ragged and dirty.
, 6	R. U.	58	Engine driver -	Bodmin -	Truro, and then to Penzance workhouse	S. -	Worked in Wales ; tramping 3 months ; works finished and sickness	Cannot get work ; thousands out	Fairly clean -	Showing effects of tramping.
, 6	J. R.	36	Shoemaker -	,	Truro -	S. -	Worked in Southampton 9 months ; stopped 5 weeks ago ; wages averaged 16/- per week	Depression in trade	Clean ; tramping 5 weeks ; first spell	Should judge him to be somewhat of an indifferent tradesman

Nov. 6	F. W.	32	Painter	-	Bodmin	-	Truro	-	S.	-	Worked at Swindon 5 weeks; finished 4 weeks since	Work short; stopped with the rest	Clean; tramping 4 weeks; first time	Should judge him to be somewhat of an indifferent tradesman
" 8	W. F.	32	Moulder	-	Redruth	-	Liskeard	-	S.	-	Worked as a labourer at Hayle powder works 6 months; stopped with 20 others on Saturday	Slackness in trade	Clean; without a waistcoat	Fond of his liquor.
" 12	W. W.	68	Monumenta Mason	-	S. Columb	-	Plymouth	-	W.; no children	-	Wales 1 year; building finished 6 months ago; tramping since; first spell	No work	Fairly clean	Broke up home on wife's death; lodgings since.
" 12	T. J.	76	Miner	-	Truro	-	Liskeard	-	W.; two sons in S. Africa	-	Jobbing labouring; too old to work; going back to Liskeard Workhouse; been there 3 times	No work; hundreds out of work	Two-thirds drunk; a friend gave him a pint of beer. Has worked in all the mines in the St. Austell and Liskeard district	An old bird; story correct.
" 13	H. R.	48	"	-	Liskeard	-	Camborne	-	S.	-	Worked in Exeter 2 weeks; tramping 2 months; has been in S. Africa	Depression in trade; dying industry	Clean and decently dressed	Careless; drink.
14	J. B.	47	Saddler	-	St. Columb	-	Liskeard	-	S.	-	Worked 6 weeks ago; jobbing on the roads nigh 12 months; many years in previous situation	Machinery. Compositors wanted	Tramping effects showing; takes his beer.	An old broken down man.
" 16	J. S.	68	Printer	-	"	-	"	-	S.	-	No steady work for 2 years; been tramping that period; does not drink much	A complete specimen of the genus tramp.	Fairly clean but going down at heel
" 17	E. B.	61	Labourer-	-	Bodmin	-	Anywhere	-	S.	-	Tramping 6 years

Statement giving particulars as to Vagrants relieved at the St. Austell Casual Wards—November, 1904, to January, 1905—continued.

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, married, or widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving.	Why on tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
1904. Nov. 17	J. W.	40	Moulder -	Truro -	Liskeard -	W. -	1 year with G.W.R. Coy. ; 8 years in the Army ; re-engaged for S. Africa and invalided home after Lady-smith	No work ; 6 weeks on tramp, went for a day or two seeking work	Clean, not healthy	From appearance and story a case deserving pity and help.
" 18	J. W.	63	Painter -	" -	" -	S. -	Six months in Whitechapel for Salvation Army. Tramping five weeks ; first period ? " Booze if I tell the truth "	Getting old and lack of work	Clean, clothing much worn ; down at heel	An old broken down man.
" 18	W. S.	48	Seaman -	Liskeard -	Falmouth -	W. ; n o - family	Got on the booze at Plymouth and missed ship ; first time on tramp		Well educated man ; lost his certificate after an accident off Ceylon	Decent looking sailor.
" 18	G. R.	34	" -	" -	" -	S. -	First experience, never again		Respectable looking sailor, an American
" 19	J. L.	51	Bricklayer -	Truro -	Liskeard -	S. -	Worked at Tedworth 4 months ; tramping 6 weeks ; often has to tramp ; does not booze much	Nothing to do
" 20	F. R.	38	Labourer -	Bodmin -	Truro -	S. -	Devonport dockyard 2 months ; finished 3 weeks ago ; first spell tramping	" No good to tell a lie ; a drop of beer, that is all "	Clean and tidy	Native of Fowey.
" 20	E. T.	35	" -	" -	" -	S. -	Worked in Wales 3 months ago ; never tramped before	No work	Ragged, dirty	Low type.
" 20	W. B.	62	Mason -	Falmouth -	Bodmin -	S. -		Depression of trade	Tramping on and off for 14 years	Well known in all the Workhouses.

Nov. 21	T. S.	32	Seaman -	Truro	"	S.	Six weeks ago on a ship ; there 6 months ; tramping since. "Drink I guess that's what brought me here"	Shipping slack	Clean, intelligent American sailor ; tramped there ; only 6 weeks in this county	Showing effects of drink and tramping.
" 21	J. S.	68	Labourer ; has been a hawker	Bodmin	Truro	W. ; no family	Worked in Exeter 4 days, 6 weeks ago ; been tramping several years	No work	Dirty	An old tramp
" 22	E. S.	25	Labourer ; left the Army 2 years	"	Redruth	S.	Worked in Sussex 5 weeks, Devonshire, 2 weeks, 2 weeks ago ; no constant job since leaving the Army ; says he had a good character and two medals on leaving the Army ; served with the Foot Guards in South Africa	Without a trade	Clean, well-built man	Looks fit to do a day's work easily
" 22	G. M.	32	Labourer -	"	"	S.	Left the Royal Field Artillery 15 months since ; nothing constant ; tramping since ; worked 18 days in Exeter ; 13 years in the Army, Bombadier ; says he had a very good character ; wanted to re-join ; refused ; bitterly complains as to Army promises not fulfilled as to getting work or a job on return to civilian life	No work	Clean, very intelligent
" 23	W. L.	66	Labourer ; hawker previously.	Liskeard	Truro	W. ; 1 daughter married to a railway porter	Worked harvesting last summer in Devonshire ; last long job in St. Austell 4 years ago, 10 months ; always on the move ; when wife was living had a horse and cart and did hawking	Getting old	Person clean, clothes well worn and ragged	Says he was never in a casual ward before this.

Statement giving particulars as to Vagrants relieved at the St. Austell Casual Wards—November, 1904, to January, 1905—continued.

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, married, or widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving.	Why on tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
1904. Nov. 24	T. J.	42	Iron ore worker	Bodmin	Truro	S.	Worked in Swansea 9 months ago for 15 months, shortened hands ; tramping since ; never tramped before	Drink a great deal to do with it	Showing effects of the road
" 24	J. M.	59	Sawyer	Liskeard	Falmouth	S.	Worked in Staffordshire for 4 months ; 3 months since quarrelled and left ; 9 months on previous job. "Things are very bad in my line of business"	"Should not have been here if not for the drink"	Clean, but showing effects of drink and the road	An old man before his time.
" 25	W. D.	65	Labourer on public works	Bodmin	Truro	S.	Worked in Somerset for a short time	Rheumatism	Clothes shiny	Seems to be fond of a roving life.
" 25	H. B.	36	Cycle maker	"	"	S.	Worked at the Phoenix Works, Coventry, for 3 years ; stopped 9 weeks ago with 500 others ; tramping since ; first spell. Entered casual wards short time back ; trained from town to town seeking work until money exhausted	No work	Hands show that this man has worked at iron-smithing very recently ; clothes ragged	Unless off the roads shortly will develop into a tramp.
" 25	J. W.	46	Public works labourer	"	"	S.	Left Leeds 9 weeks since ; worked there ; next place Langport, Som. ; there 2 weeks. 6 years as maltster in Wakefield ; got on the booze at Christmas and off the job ; nothing steady since	"Because I can't get work"	Says he is breaking down under it	Intelligent man.
" 25	W. C.	24	Labourer	"	"	S.	Worked in London on a sewer 3 years ago	No work	Ragged and dirty	A young but a complete specimen of a tramp. Work-shy.

Nov. 25	J. S	42	Public works labourer	"	"	"	S.	Worked at Paignton 2 weeks; at Castle Carey railway 6 weeks; at Swansea waterworks 3 months; 10 years tramping on and off; "been in hundreds of spikes"	"Drink with me has a lot to do with it"	Ragged and dirty; "see more dinner times than dinners"	Careless and drunken tramp.
" 26	W D.	40	Fitter	-	Liskeard	-	-	Tramped first 8 years ago but has worked in one place 5 years in that period; 8 years in Artillery, 4 years in Reserve	Worked the job out and lack of work; came into Cornwall seeking work; nothing to eat between Bodmin breakfast and St. Austell supper	Fit to do a day's work.
" 27	J. B.	50	Stable labourer	-	Bodmin	-	S
" 27	W. D. E. "	62 47	Engine driver - Factory hand	"	"	-	M., 3 children by previous wife in Manchester with friends	14 years with Mathers and Black, Manchester; finished there in July last; rheumatism, home 8 months on part pay; tramping since	Seeking work; no benefit to be on the roads; nothing to eat from breakfast at Bodmin to supper at St. Austell
" 29	G. N.	42	Farm labourer	Truro	-	-	S.	7 years in Cambridgeshire, 2 years in Norfolk, 3 months in Derbyshire; finished in August; tramping since; first spell	Subject to fits. "Had 1s. given me and did not go in Truro casual ward; piece of seed cake for dinner"	Ragged and dirty.
" 29	C. J.	42	Labourer	-	Bodmin	-	S.	Last 4 months selling water-cress in Plymouth	Frost has killed the watercress.	Says he has work awaiting him at Helston
" 29	J. C.	29	"	"	"	-	S.	In the Garrison Artillery 8 years; came out 20 months since; has worked 1½ years in one place during that period; tramping 10 days; first spell	Stopped at Paignton waterworks; no dinner previous day; "what I had at Bodmin did for me until I had your supper here. Left army with a good character; thought I would have a change; much regret it now; it is too late; I never thought it would be like this"	Well built, respectable looking, feels his condition acutely.

Statement giving particulars as to Vagrants relieved at the St. Austell Casual Wards—November, 1904, to January, 1905—continued.

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, married, or widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving.	Why on tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
1904. Nov. 30	H. P. wife E. T. { F. { M. { F. { children	30 27 10 8 6 10 m'ths.	Labourer	St. Germans	St. Austell	M.	Left St. Stephen's (St. Austell union) 2 years ago for Devonport; expected work there, but did very little; came out of Devonport workhouse on Tuesday	-	Children very tired. A few cases like this seen by those in authority and it would soon be penal for parents to take children on tramp.
Dec. 2	J. C.	43	Sailor	Looe	Falmouth	S.	Never in a casual ward or on tramp before; "got on the booze at Plymouth and ship went on without me; a gentleman allowed me to sleep in his stable at Looe and gave me breakfast—nothing to eat between that and S. Austell"	-	-	A boozing sailor.
" 3	S. P.	63	Clerk and Inventor	Liskeard	Falmouth	W.; no family	Last permanent employment 15 years since; there 5 years	Age, and inventions not coming off	Nice looking but broken down old man	Evidently was an educated gentleman; now a crank; poor fellow, what a contrast!
" 4	J. K.	52	Labourer	Bodmin	St. Austell clay works	S.	Worked on Salisbury Plain 4 months; stopped on Thursday last with 160 others; on previous job 3 months; discharged from the Royal Scots 16 years ago	Stagnation in trade	Intelligent man, clothes well worn	Says he does not drink (?) What became of wages—unanswered.
" 6	S. E.	50	"	"	Truro	S.	Worked at Bristol 6 months on a sewer; sewer finished 4 weeks since; stopped at Bristol until money all spent; on the roads 2½ years; worked for 10 years previously at the Stanton Iron Works, Notts,	No work	Well built man, clothes showing signs of tramping.

Dec. 6	P. R.	26	"	"	"	"	"	"	Worked for a farmer near Exeter 4 days; tramping for 10 years	Can't get work	Ragged, dirty	Low intellect.
"	R. S.	40	"	"	"	"	"	"	7 years in the Army; discharged in 1891. 4 years in one job, 3½ years on another, worked in Bristol 6 weeks; stopped 3 weeks since; nothing to eat from breakfast until supper	Can't get a regular job; would work	An old man at 40	Feels his position acutely.
"	J. S.	37	"	"	"	"	"	"	7 years with the colours, 5 years in the Reserve. Discharged 1898. Worked in Tavistock one year	"Booze; can't keep from the drink"	Clean, tidy, healthy man	Happy-go-lucky style.
"	W. B.	29	"	"	Bodmin	Penzance	"	"	9 years in the Army; invalided out 2 years ago; worked on Paignton water works 2 months. At Wat-chett 8 months, until all labourers' work finished	Work scarce everywhere	Respectable.
"	H. T.	35	"	"	"	Truro	"	"	Worked on Salisbury Plain 10 weeks; stopped with 150 others. Previously for 1½ years as casual porter on the Midland Railway at Sheffield, part time only	Lack of work	Showing signs of tramping; came on the roads 6 months ago for the first time	Thoughtless.
"	H. L.	20	"	"	"	Camelford	"	"	Worked with Hancock, the round-about-man, during the Summer; tramping on and off 12 months; in prison twice, begging and robbery	No work (Note in the News-paper since that a Henry Laxton sent to prison for 7 days for begging, and on Dec. 28th a Henry Laxton aged 19 was sent to prison for three months for an assault on a female in N. Cornwall)	Dirty, ragged; sores	A likely recruit for the tramp army.

Statement giving particulars as to Vagrants relieved at the St. Austell Casual Wards—November, 1904, to January, 1905—continued.

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, married, or widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving.	Why on tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
1904. Dec. 7	C. M.	63	Donkey-man, 4th Engineer	Bodmin -	Fowey -	S. -	"Ship, the 'Beamish,' wrecked off Holland last August ; in her from the previous Nov. ; landed at Harwich ; paid my fare to London and then to Cardiff, where I generally shipped from, and then back to London. Spent all my money and commenced to tramp 5 weeks ago"	"Lack of Shipping. A Clergyman's son. Father paid premium for 3 years as an engineer pupil; he died and I was left without a profession. I have a good knowledge of Spanish, German and French; was never drunk in my life, but gambled in S. America ; gentleman for one night and a beggar all the rest of the week"	Clean - - -	Impossible to understand why this man should be a tramp.
" 10	R. S.	56	Labourer, Public Works	Liskeard -	Truro -	S. -	Tramping 4 weeks ; worked at Devonport Water Works for 4 months ; Liskeard first casual ward for 10 years	Out of employment	"Drink greatest part of it—that's my downfall."
" 10	W. T.	68	Mason	Liskeard -	Truro -	S. -	Here 4 months ago ; not a day's work since previous visit	No work - - -	Clean - - -	Not fond of work.
" 10	J. A.	32	Gardener -	" -	Redruth -	S. -	Worked at gardening in Plymouth 6 weeks ; tramping 9 weeks. Discharged from the 65th R.F.A. after 34 years' service, and received 1½ years' imprisonment for sleeping whilst on sentry duty at Magersfontein	Nothing to do -	Ragged and dirty -	Every indication of becoming a habitual tramp.
" 10	W. J.	29	Plumber -	" -	Truro -	- -	Did a fair day's work, but omitted to question him.

Dec. 10	W. S.	30	Labourer	"	"	"	"	Omitted to question him.	—	A decent-looking tramp.
" 10	J. H.	50	"	Bodmin	"	"	"	Do.	—
" 10	J. W.	30	"	"	Falmouth	"	S	On tramp 8 or 9 years ; worked at many places in that period for spells of 3, 5, and 6 months	No home.
" 10	W. T.	55	"	"	Truro	"	Wife in hospital	Worked at Bodmin 1½ years on asylum extension ; finished 6 months ago ; tramping since. Commenced on the roads 20 years ago	Work scarce - -	A confirmed wanderer.
" 12	J. S.	42	"	Truro	"	Bodmin	"	Here on Nov. 25th	—	See remarks : if possible more disreputable.
" 13	E. B.	61	"	"	"	"	"	Here on Nov. 17th	—	Ragged, dirty ; a disgraceful specimen of humanity.
" 14	H. H.	41	Labourer	"	Liskeard	"	"	"Worked on the Barrow water works, Bristol, over 12 months shortened hands ; tramping since ; spend my money freely when working ; have tramped a week before, but never so long as this"	"Can't get work. I got nothing to eat between Truro and St. Austell—afraid to ask"	Clean, tidy.
" 14	F. P.	54	Labourer	Liskeard	"	Truro	"	Worked at Pembroke docks ; discharged on Nov. 5th on reduction of hands ; 4 weeks' tramping ; carries a notice to workmen of discharge on reduction from the C. Engineer of the Pembrokeyard, served 12 years in R. Artillery	No work. Bitterly complains of the lack of facilities to wash his shirt. "I ask for food and intend to ; would rather go to prison on a full than an empty stomach"	Clean, respectable looking labouring man.
" 14	C. C.	48	Bricklayer	Liskeard	"	"	"	Worked all the summer in South Wales ; "put it down in big letters ; drink—nothing else whatever. 6 years on and off the roads ; work a few months and have a bust up"	"Cornish folks are good for a bit of food, I had a nice warm pasty at — and I enjoyed it"	A fair good specimen of a man.

Statement giving particulars as to Vagrants relieved at the St. Austell Casual Wards—November, 1904, to January, 1905—continued.

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, married, or widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving.	Why on tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
1904. Dec. 14	J. G.	45	Labourer -	Liskeard -	Truro -	S. -	Worked at Chepstow 2 years. "I played the fool (drink) once too often and was stopped on the 2nd week in Nov. ; tramping since"		Inclined to run down -	Will make a tramp if he does not pull himself together.
" 14	W. E.	53	Fitter -	Redruth -	Liskeard -	S. -	Worked in Bristol 1½ years ; stopped 6 weeks ago ; on the roads 4 weeks. "I lost many a job through drink"	Shortness of work. "I got my dinner on the road"	The same remarks to the previous case will apply here.
" 14	F. S.	35	Fitter -	" -	Bodmin -	S. -	Worked on the Midland Railway at St. Albans 5½ years ; stopped last Sept. hands reduced ; the casual wards now on and off for 5 weeks ; stayed at home, "spent my money and pawned my things before going on the road"	Lack of work "I asked for something to eat on the road"	Clean but running down at heel	An intelligent man, with, I should say before going on the roads, a most presentable appearance.
" 17	J. L.	50	Labourer - Sailor previously	Liskeard -	Truro -	W. 11 years, 2 children with relatives	Worked in Weymouth dock from April to October ; previously in Hull 15 months ; on the roads one month ; on the roads 3 years ago for 11 months	Work fell short "Got my dinner on the road"	Clean	A discontented, talkative man : will quote from Shakespeare by the yard. Will eventually degenerate into a confirmed tramp.
" 18	H. S.	66	Labourer -	S. Columb -	Liskeard -	S. -	Last permanent place Low Moor ; there 18 years ; discharged on account of drinking habit ; tramping on and off since. "Pinched at Plympton and Bodmin for begging"	"No sense to keep my money"	Ragged and dirty	A confirmed tramp.
" 19	H. S.	36	" -	Truro -	" -	S. -	Worked at Salisbury Plain 7 weeks, at High Wycombe 4 weeks, at Lincoln 8 weeks, 3 weeks tramping this spell ; first started on tramp 14 or 15 years ago ; longest spell of work in that period 3½ years for the L.C.C. ; got drunk and was sacked	Can get nothing to do	Clean but ragged "I mouched my dinner and shall have to do the same thing to-morrow."

Dec 19	F. T.	65	Mason	-	Liskeard	-	Truro	-	W.; 2 sons in Africa	Worked at Bovisand for 16 weeks, and at Paignton water-works 6 weeks; tramping this spell 4 weeks; went on tramp first 10 or 12 years ago	"I got my dinner given to me"	Ragged and dirty	Well known in all the casual wards.
"	20	R. S. ?	Labourer ? Confectioner	-	" Lodging House	-	Penzance	-	S.	"Worked 6 months on my last job; finished 3 weeks ago; never in but 2 casual wards"	"Quarrelled with my sister"	Clean, respectable looking young man	Persuaded him to write to his mother, which he did.
"	22	J. F.	Public works labourer	-	Liskeard	-	Truro	-	S.	Worked 4 days for a farmer 4 days ago; on Salisbury Plain 3 months; previously on the Birmingham water-works on the Elan Valley 12 months	"Drink some of the cause. Dinner—went without it"	Clean	Respectable, tidy looking man.
"	22	A. W.	Labourer	-	Bodmin	-	St. Ives	-	S.	Worked on the Avonmouth docks 6 weeks; Gloucester 2 months; wanted a change—in the 19th (West Riding) Regiment, 7 years; discharge in 1895; rolling stone ever since; working 6 to 8 months on a job	"Dinner—begged it"	Dirty, ragged	A ne'er-do-well.
"	22	J. T.	Farm labourer	-	Liskeard	-	Truro	-	S.	Worked in Norwich on a farm for 3 months; 14 years in the Army; discharged in 1894; tramping on and off for two years	No work	Gathered finger; clean	Delicate, unhealthy man.
"	23	J. T.	Puddler and labourer	-	Laid rough 4 miles out of Cameford	-	Hayle	-	S.	Worked on the Avonmouth docks 7 months; stopped 4 weeks last. Wednesday with 400 others; on the Rhayader water-works 4 months; first tramped 4 years ago; on and off each winter since. Wages as a puddler 25s. to 30s. per week; spent 12s. per week in drink and amusements	Bad trade in the iron works. Break-fast and dinner—"a gentleman lost his stick and gave two of us 4d., and we bought a bit of food"	Ragged	A wasted, thoughtless life, so far

Statement giving particulars as to Vagrants relieved at the St. Austell Casual Wards—November, 1904, to January, 1905—continued.

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, married, or widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving.	Why on tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
24 1904. Dec. 23	F. S.	36	Labourer -	Laid rough 4 miles out of Camelford	Hayle	S.	Worked on Coventry tramway 6 weeks ; stopped 5 weeks ago ; previously at Wincombe 3 weeks and Basingstoke 5 months ; first commenced to tramp last winter. In the 67th Foot 12 years ; discharged in 1902. A horrible life	No work. Dinner, "I get hungry and must ask for food"	Showing effects of the life	Will turn out bad if not got off the roads.
"	W. M.	37	Miner	Liskeard	Camborne	S.	Worked at Exeter 3 weeks ; men paid off. In Dolcoath and Camborne 12 months ; first commenced to tramp 12 months since ; "drink caused my losing the job." In the R.G.A. 8 years ; discharged 1902 ; now in D.C.L.I.	Lack of Work. "Dinner—Didn't get none at all ; if you beg you go to prison"	Neat, clean	Thoughtless man.
"	T. W.	30	Moulding works machinist	"	Truro	S.	Worked in Newport, Mon., 2 years ; finished in July ; been in hospital 10 weeks, 5 weeks tramping.	Slackness of trade. "Dinner—I had no dinner ; beg—can't face it"	Clean, but running down	Delicate.
"	G. M.	42	Labourer -	Truro	Bodmin	S.	Worked on Avonmouth docks, Bristol ; stopped with 270 others 4 weeks ago ; previously at Castle Carey 4 months. Served in the 49th 12 years ; discharged May, 1902. Joined the Bodmin Militia with V.G. character ; first casual ward 3 weeks ago.	Nothing to do. "Dinner—Had nothing ; don't like to beg"	Clothes well worn.
"	J. F.	43	"	"	"	S.	Worked on the Avonmouth docks 3 weeks ; previously Spalding sewage works 4 months. In the 10th Lincoln's 4 years ; invalided out. Followed public works previous to "fisting" and since ; born in a hut ; first tramped 16 to 17 years ago and every winter since —from public work to public work	No work. Dinner—"I had none ; don't like prison" No casual wards in Scotland ; sleep in contractors' huts ; much better than casual wards ; can get away early in the morning and secure a job	Clothes ragged.	Intelligent fellow.

Dec. 27.	W. A.	57	Chimney sweep	Liskeard -	-	Truro	-	M. -	Has a wife at Falmouth ; going to join her there. Has his chimney-sweeping apparatus with him.	Drink and carelessness	Well built able-bodied man, fit to do a good day's work at any time
"	28	42	Labourer	Bodmin -	-	Falmouth	-	W. 5 years, no family	Worked on Exeter tram 3 weeks ; previously on the Avonmouth dock for 2 years ; tramping 2 weeks. Served in the King's Royal Rifles 12 years ; Discharged in 1890 ; "first tramped when I lost the Missis"
"	28	62	"	Truro -	-	Plymouth	-	S. -	Worked on the Avonmouth docks 3 weeks ; first tramped 36 years ago, and on and off since, though "I have worked most of the time except the last 6 months. Contractors will sack 'em now if you only begin to look old"	Drink and getting old	Ragged and dirty -	An old broken down man, fit only for a workhouse ward.
"	30	50	"	S. Columb -	-	Liskeard -	-	S. -	Worked in Southampton dock on and off for several years, tramping during the off period ; stopped work last summer ; tramped first 5 years ago. Early in life was an assistant butler and groom ; got out of it by sleeping in the mornings	Slackness of work	Ragged and dirty - Dinner—"Oh! I had to beg it, of course"	Thoughtless and indolent.
"	30	45	"	" -	-	"	-	S. -	Worked on the Castle Cary railway 2 months' stopped 3 weeks ago ; tramping since. Previously on the Uxbridge line 3 months ; tramped 3 years ago ; served in the Devons 8 years, discharged in 1889. "After leaving the Army I was in Ilfracombe 11 years as a mason's labourer"	Nowork	Clothes ragged, clean - Dinner—"Had to go without it ; not safe to beg down here unless you want to go to Bodmin ; and I don't want that"	Hungry, frightened look.

Statement giving particulars as to Vagrants relieved at the St. Austell Casual Wards—November, 1904, to January, 1905—continued.

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, married, or widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving.	Why on tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
1904. Dec. 30	W. B.	60	Labourer	Falmouth	Bodmin	S	Worked in Sussex 6 months; finished 6 weeks before Xmas; on a railway near Sheffield for 6 months; tramped first 6 to 7 years ago and not again until now; "pawed my waistcoat and coat to keep me out of these places." Served 8 years in the Royal West Surrey Regiment; discharged in 1889	Lack of work—"my fault (drink) many times before, not this time though." Dinner—nothing to eat between Falmouth ward and this ward	Not too sweet.
" 30	G. L.	35	Collier and labourer	Truro, lodging-house	Liskeard	S	Worked in Mount Ash 3 months; off 6 weeks ago; in Pembroke 6 months; left New Tredegar Colliery 1½ years; there 20 years; "got drunk and left the pits. Wages there averaged 35/- per week; paid my mother 15/- per week for board and spend the rest on myself"	Dinner—bought 1½d. worth of bread at Truro	Ragged, bad hand	Careless.
" 31	T. H. B.	21	Shoemaker	Bodmin	Truro	S	Discharged from the navy after 3 years service as unsuitable; knocking about in Plymouth 2 months	No work. Dinner—"I begged it"	Very seedy	A youngster going to the bad.
1905. Jan. 1	B. B.	40	Bricklayer	Liskeard	Penzance	S	Worked at Kingston one week; previously jobbing about in London for 10 months; tramped first 12 months ago; this spell 9 days; Liskeard first casual ward; "paid my lodgings until then"	Scarcity of work. Dinner—"I am having it now"	Looking rough for 9 days tramping only.
" 1	J. S.	53	Charwoman	Truro	Plymouth	S	Well known character at Truro workhouse and Bodmin prison.

Jan.	E. M.	35	Labourer; formerly a grocer's assistant	Liskeard -	Redruth -	S. -	Was with the Imperial Bushmen in South Africa; discharged 1902; came to England and "spent my money in a business (hawking) that was not a success;" worked on the Castle Carey line 8 weeks; on the Rhayader water works 1 year	No work; dinner—"went without it"	Showing effects of tramping.
"	C. K.	60	Labourer; originally a game-keeper	Bodmin -	Truro -	W., no family	Worked last in Essex on the Kelvedon line 2 years until job complete 5 weeks before Xmas; on the roads since; "paid my lodgings at first; never in 6 casual wards before this spell. Was with one firm in London for 13 years until my wife's death; got careless and took too much drink; and went as a public works laborer"	Slackness of work; dinner—"I had none except a cup of tea and a piece of cake a woman gave me. I can't mouch. Drink has prevented me saving money, but I never got out of a job through it; it is a habit amongst many on public works, when paid off, to spend all they have before tramping to the next job."	Clean, clothes well worn and not sufficient	Intelligent man.
"	J. Y.	40	Labourer	Truro -	Bodmin -	S. -	Worked near Exeter 2 weeks, and odd times during the Summer with the farmers in part	Drink—"something to do with it; dinner—I had it given to me"	Ragged, dirty, unhealthy, low intellect	Not fit to be at large.
"	W. T.	69	Mason	Liskeard -	Truro -	S. -	Admitted on Dec. 10th	A talkative tramp.
"	G. D.	50	Labourer	Truro -	Liskeard -	S. -	Worked at the Avonmouth 18 months; stopped 10 weeks ago with 150 others; tramped first 4 years ago; wages averaged at Avonmouth 12s. per week, take wet and dry	"Can't get any work; dinner—I did without to-day; I do not want to be boxed up"	Running down; but has the appearance of a man willing to work.

Statement giving particulars as to Vagrants relieved at the St. Austell Casual Wards—November, 1904, to January, 1905—continued.

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, married, or widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving.	Why on tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
1905. Jan. 6	J. S.	30	Labourer	Truro	Liskeard	S.	Worked in South Wales 6 months ; work came to a finish 5 weeks ago ; tramping since ; " my first spell ; " worked 4 years in the Portland quarries ; " sacked last April on account of losing two quarters (coming late)"	No work ; dinner—" I did without it the same as I do every day "	Down at heel ; an ordinary working man, somewhat careless.
"	T. S.	60	"	"	"	S.	Worked in Swansea 3 weeks ; before that at Colne Bay 6 months ; stopped in Sept. ; no more work there ; tramped from Swansea. Served in the 67th (Hampshire) Regiment near 13 years ; discharged in 1883	No work. Dinner—" I had none ; " and he looked it	Respectable looking working man. " I have gone through (tramped off) a good pair of boots."
"	W. S.	18	Billiard marker and ostler	Liskeard	Truro	S.	Worked as an ostler near Epping 6 months with a Mr. Cook—season job only ; left in Aug. ; hopping, potato picking, and mangold pulling since ; tramping 6 weeks ; first spell ; parents dead	" Can't get a job." Dinner—" I had no dinner "	Almost bare-footed ; delicate, full of black heads	Sharp lad, but a likely recruit for the tramp army.
"	H. A.	30	Labourer, originally die-cutter	Liskeard	"	S.	Worked as a navvy the past 2 years in Newcastle ; 4 months' job, finished in Sept. ; before for 13 months in Churchfenton ; tramped from Newcastle to London ; slept out most of the time, " from London am doing the workhouses." As a die cutter was in one job at Coventry 3½ years ; " wages averaged £3 per week, spent my money as fast as I got it on drink and other foolishness "	Dinner—" I got a bit off a lady at a door." Friends and relatives are well to do	Manner good, person clean, clothes well worn	No one to blame but himself.

Jan. 9	G. R.	36	Saddle Maker	Bodmin	Truro	S.	Worked at Batgers—Ratcliffe Highway, St. George's-in-the-East, 2 years; stopped 8 months ago—shortening up. Several odd jobs since, labouring and farm work	Drink; "if it was not for the drink I should have had money to carry me through. What is a single man to do in lodgings, working only 2 or 3 days a week: naturally he drinks. Dinner—I had none until I got here"	Thin, unkempt	Could not get employment in his present state.
"	J. B.	41	Joiner in the furniture trade	"	"	S.	Worked in Gloucester on a few odd jobs coming through; nothing permanent for ever so long. Worked in London 2 years back; tramping on and off since. "We had the whole monopoly of the furniture trade in the Transvaal and Orange Free States before the war; now the States are English colonies other countries step in, especially Germany and America, and we have nothing to do"	Lack of work Dinner—"I had nothing yesterday. I don't cadge on the roads"	Clean clothes, well worn, intelligent	Don't understand why a man of this condition should be on tramp.
"	W. B.	44	Labourer	"	"	W., 3 children with a sister in Chester	Worked on the Avonmouth dock 2½ years; stopped 6 weeks—tramping 5 weeks—"I maintain my children"	No work Dinner—"I had nothing to eat until I got here. I can't mouch it"	Clean, tidy	Well-spoken, respectable working man.
"	H. G.	45	Fitter	Liskeard	"	W., 9 years; no family	Worked at Bellgrove Gate, Leicester, 2 years; slackened with 150 hands 17 years ago; walking 15 weeks; "do not go into many casual wards; get helped by the fitters"	Slackness in the trade Dinner—"I had a couple of coppers given me and bought some bread to eat"	Thin, hollow-eyed.
"	T. B.	45	Bricklayer	Truro	Liskeard	S.	Worked on Salisbury Plain 4 months; previously in Wales 6 months; tramped first 8 years ago and every winter with one exception—"Booze? Yes, I got sacked through that"	Slackness of employment—Drink Dinner—"I had nothing to eat. I can't mouch it. Never was locked up and don't want to be."	Prematurely old, clean	Intelligent active man.

Statement giving particulars as to Vagrants relieved at the St. Austell Casual Wards—November, 1904, to January, 1905—continued.

Date of admission	Name.	Age.	Occupation.	Previous night slept at	Going to	Single, Married, or Widower.	Last place of work ; duration and cause of leaving	Why on Tramp.	Appearance.	Workhouse Master's remarks.
1905.
Jan. 12	J. C.	62	Farm labourer	Bodmin -	Bodmin -	S. -	Worked on a farm near Bristol pretty well all the summer ; tramped first 10 to 11 years ago	Could get nothing to do Dinner—"I had none yesterday"	Greasy, dirty -	A confirmed tramp.
" 12	F. D.	36	Painter -	Liskeard -	Truro -	S. -	Last jobs Newcastle-on-Tyne 3 months ; Bishopston near Bristol 2 months, finished 8 weeks ago ; tramping since. First tramped 3 years ago ; almost continually for 2 years, and is likely to continue it	Depression in trade Dinner—"I went without. I have not had a dinner for the past 3 months"	Clean - - -	Might make a good labourer, but never a painter.
" 12	D. O'C.	30	Tin Smith	Bodmin -	" -	S. -	In England from Ireland 4 months ; worked at Ebbw Vale, Wales, 3 months ; tramped from there here. Served in the R. A. 8 years and 4 years with the Reserves ; discharged in 1898	"Had a drinking spree and lost my employment" Dinner—"I had nothing at all"	Decently clad, clean and very respectable looking.

APPENDIX XXXIX.
CUCKFIELD CASUAL WARD.

(Papers handed in by Mr. Howe.)

1. CASUAL PAUPERS PROSECUTED DURING 1903.

Date.	Name.	Age.	Offence.	Punishment.
January 2 -	Gibson, William - - - -	36	Destroying clothes - -	7 days
„ 14 -	Anderson, John - - - -	54	Refusing to work - -	28 days
	Bunn, John - - - -	39	„ - -	„
	Donovan, David - - - -	21	„ - -	„
„ 17 -	Greener, Henry - - - -	32	„ - -	14 days
„ 20 -	Williams, Arthur - - - -	60	Destroying clothes - -	„
February 2 -	Spencer, Frederick - - - -	29	Refusing to work - -	28 days
26 -	Turner, Richard - - - -	43	„ - -	Discharged
	Bennett, John - - - -	52	„ - -	14 days
	Bennett, George - - - -	40	„ - -	„
March 12 -	Sands, Thomas - - - -	61	„ - -	28 days
	Roberts, John - - - -	43	„ - -	„
	Smith, George - - - -	38	„ - -	„
„ 18 -	Collins, James - - - -	33	„ - -	14 days
„ 20 -	Marshall, George - - - -	54	Refusing to work and break- ing window	28 days
April 12 -	Watson, James - - - -	30	Refusing to work - -	„
„ 13 -	Smith, Thomas - - - -	38	„ - -	„
	Baldwin, Charles - - - -	35	„ - -	„
„ 24 -	Harrigan, Christopher - - - -	28	„ - -	„
„ 25 -	Brown, William - - - -	32	„ - -	„
	Mounter, George - - - -	30	„ - -	„
„ 30 -	Morris, Edward - - - -	51	„ - -	„
	Lacey, John - - - -	45	„ - -	„
May 13 -	Hammond, Thomas - - - -	62	„ - -	„
„ 14 -	Fullerton, Alfred - - - -	47	„ - -	„
	Rose, William - - - -	29	„ - -	„
„ 17 -	Gibbs, William - - - -	28	„ - -	„
„ 29 -	Thorpe, Isaac - - - -	28	„ - -	„
June 3 -	Smith, James - - - -	43	„ - -	„
„ 10 -	Field, William - - - -	32	„ - -	„
„ 21 -	Morris, George - - - -	38	„ - -	„
	Edwards, Charles - - - -	32	„ - -	„
„ 21 -	Barnes, Thomas - - - -	55	„ - -	6 weeks
	Pratt, Edward - - - -	23	„ - -	28 days
July 17 -	Nye, William - - - -	40	„ - -	„
August 18 -	Daly, John - - - -	40	„ - -	14 days
	Shepherd, John - - - -	64	„ - -	„

Appendix
XXXIX.

Date.	Name.	Age.	Offence.	Punishment.
September 23	Brettle, Edward	32	Refusing to work	28 days
	Hasling, Edward	41	"	"
	Vittlestone, Joseph	30	"	"
	Blackwell, Charles	29	"	"
November 20	Ward, James	32	"	"
December 11	Lynch, Albert	37	"	"
	Fry, James	21	"	"
	Sands, George	22	"	"
	Sneyd, William	29	"	"
	Palmer William	38	"	"
	White, Thomas	49	"	"

Number of casuals admitted during 1903—2,216, of which there were 1,635 men. Percentage of men, 73·78.
Percentage of men prosecuted, 2·93, viz. :—for refusing to pound stones, 45 ; destroying own clothes, 2 ; wilful damage, 1.

Cost of prosecuting 48 men :—court fees, £9 12s. ; other expenses, £3 2s. 3d. = £12 14s. 3d.

Number of men detained two nights, 917 ; discharged next day after admission, 718.

Ages of men prosecuted.		Particulars as to men not put to work.
20 to 25	3	Prosecuted	48
25 " 30	8	Certified unfit by medical officer	65
30 " 35	10	Having been recently vaccinated	12
35 " 40	8	Allowed to go to get work	21
40 " 45	7	Absconded	1
45 " 50	3	Suffering from scabies	3
50 " 55	4	Ruptured	35
55 " 60	1	Cripples	38
Over 60	4	Wanted by police	1
	48	Discharged during vacancy of labour master	105
Put to stone pounding	518 = 31·68 per cent.	From age, infirmity or other causes	231
Other work	557 = 34·07 "
No work given	560 = 34·25 "
	1,635		560

N.B.—During the year 1894 there were admitted	12,988	1890 to 1894 (5 years)	51,722
" 1903 "	2,216	1899 " 1903 "	12,188
Decrease	10,772		39,534

2. NUMBER OF CASUAL PAUPERS ADMITTED DURING THE YEARS ENDED LADY-DAY.

Year.	Men.	Women.	Children.	Total.
1887	7,779	1,097	523	9,399
1888	7,642	1,118	528	9,288
1889	7,743	1,283	655	9,681
1890	7,505	1,323	638	9,466
1891	7,485	1,259	540	9,284
1892	8,046	1,136	540	9,722
1893	8,385	1,248	629	10,262
1894	10,603	1,534	851	12,988
1895	9,616	1,506	993	12,115
1896	4,375	712	489	5,576
1897	2,615	535	255	3,405
1898	2,438	519	262	3,219
1899	2,285	453	158	2,896
1900	2,223	406	106	2,735
1901	2,183	328	46	2,557
1902	2,184	366	71	2,621
1903	1,638	367	73	2,078
1904	1,764	358	72	2,194

29.10.29
bmc

